To the Reader.

This Figure, that thou here ſeeſt put,
It was for gentle Shakeſpeare cut;
Wherein the Graver had a ſtrife
VVith Nature, to out-doo the life:
O, could he but have drawne his VVit
As well in Braſſe, as he hath hit
His Face; the Print vvould then ſurpaſſe
All, that was ever vvrit in Braſſe.
But, ſince he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his Booke.

Vpon the Effigies of my worthy Friend, the Author Maſter VVilliam Shakeſpeare, and his VVorkes.

Spectator, this Lifes Shaddow is; To ſee
The truer image and a livelier he
Turne Reader. But, obſerve his Comicke vaine,
Laugh, and proceed next to a Tragicke ſtraine,
Then weepe; So when thou find'ſt two contraries,
Two different paſſions from thy rapt ſoule riſe,
Say, (who alone effect ſuch wonders could)
Rare Shake-ſpeare to the life thou doſt behold.

An Epitaph on the admirable Dramaticke Poet, VV. SHAKESPEARE.

What neede my Shakeſpeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an Age, in piled ſtones
Or that his hallow'd Reliques ſhould be hid
Vnder a ſtarre-ypointing Pyramid?
Deare Sonne of Memory, great Heire of Fame,
What needſt thou ſuch dull witneſſe of thy Name?
Thou in our wonder and aſtoniſhment
Haſt built thy ſelfe a laſting Monument:
For whil'ſt to th'ſhame of ſlow-endevouring Art
Thy eaſie numbers flow, and that each part,
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued Booke,
Thoſe Delphicke Lines with deepe Impreſſion tooke
Then thou our fancy of her ſelfe bereaving,
Doſt make us Marble with too much conceiving,
And ſo Sepulcher'd in ſuch pompe doſt lie
That Kings for ſuch a Tombe would wiſh to die.

TO THE MEMORIE
of the deceaſed Author, Maſter
VV. SHAKESPEARE.

Shake-ſpeare, at length thy pious Fellowes give
The World thy Workes: thy Workes, by which, out-live
Thy Tombe, thy name muſt: when that ſtone is rent,
And Time diſſolves thy Stratford Monument,
Here we alive ſhall view thee ſtill. This Booke,
When Braſſe and Marble fade, ſhall make thee looke
Freſh to all Ages: when Poſteritie
Shall loath what's new, thinke all is prodigie
That is not Shakeſpeares; ev'ry Line, each Verſe
Here ſhall revive, redeeme thee from thy Herſe.
Nor Fire, nor cankring Age, as Naſo ſaid,
Of his, thy wit-fraught Booke ſhall once invade.
Nor ſhall I e're beleeve, or thinke thee dead
(Though miſt) untill our bankrout Stage be ſped
(Impoſſible) with ſome new ſtraine t'out-doe
Paſſions of Iuliet, and her Romeo;
Or till I heare a Scene more nobly take,
Than when thy halfe-ſword parlying Romans ſpake.
Till theſe, till any of thy Volumes reſt
Shall with more fire, more feeling be expreſt,
Be ſure, our Shake-ſpeare, thou canſt never dye,
But crown'd with Lawrell, live eternally.

L. Digges.

To the Memory of M. W. Shake-ſpeare.

WE wondred (Shake-ſpeare) that thou went'ſt ſo ſoone
From the Worlds-Stage, to the Graves-Tyring-roome.
We thought thee dead, but this thy Printed worth,
Tels thy Spectators, that thou went'ſt but forth
To enter with applauſe. An Actors Art,
Can dye, and live, to act a ſecond Part.
That's but an Exit of Mortality;
This, a Re-entrance to a Plaudite.

TO THE MOST NOBLE
AND INCOMPARABLE PAIRE OF BRETHREN,

WILLIAM
Earle of Pembroke, &c. Lord Chamberlaine to the Kings moſt Excellent Majeſtie.

AND

PHILIP
Earle of Montgomery, &c. Gentleman of his Majeſties
Bed-Chamber. Both Knights of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, and our ſingular good LORDS.

Right Honourable,

WHilſt we ſtudy to be thankfull in our particular, for the many favors we have received from your L. L we are falne upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the moſt divers things that can be, feare, and raſhneſſe; raſhneſſe in the enterprize, and feare of the ſucceſſe. For, when wee value the places your H. H. ſuſtaine, wee cannot but know their dignity greater, than to deſcend to the reading of theſe trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have depriv'd our ſelves of the defence of our Dedication. But ſince your L. L. have beene pleas'd to thinke theſe trifles ſomething, heretofore; and have proſequuted both them, & their Author living, with ſo much favour: we hope, (that they out-living him, and he not having the fate, common with ſome, to be Exequutor to his owne writings) you will uſe the ſame indulgence toward them, you have done unto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any Booke choose his Patrones, or finde them: This hath done both. For, ſo much were your L.L. likings of the ſeverall parts, when they were acted, as before they were publiſhed, the Volumne ask'd to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians; without ambition either of ſelfe-profit, or fame: onely to keepe the memory of ſo worthy a Friend, and Fellow alive, as was our SHAKESPEARE, by humble offer of his Playes, to your moſt Noble Patronage. Wherein, as we have juſtly obſerved, no man to come neere your L.L. but with a kind of religious addreſſe; it hath been the height of our care, who are the Preſenters, to make the Preſent worthy of your H.H. by the Perfection. But, there we muſt alſo crave our abilities to be conſidered, my Lords. We cannot goe beyond our owne powers. Countrey hands, reach forth Milke, Creame, Fruits, or what they have: and many Nations (we have heard) that had not Gummes and Incenſe, obtained their requeſts with a leavened Cake. It was no fault to approach their gods, by what meanes they could: And the moſt, though meaneſt, of things, are made more precious, when they are dedicated to Temples. In that name therefore, we moſt humbly conſecrate to your H.H. theſe remaines of your ſervant Shakeſpeare, that what delight is in them, may be ever your L.L. the reputation his, and the faults ours, if any be committed, by a paire ſo carefull to ſhew their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

Your Lordſhips moſt bounden

FRom the moſt able, to him that can but ſpell: There you are number'd. We had rather you were weighd. Eſpecially, when the fate of all Bookes depends upon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your Purſes Well, it is now publike, and you will ſtand for your priviledges, we know: to reade, and cenſure. Doe ſo, but buy it firſt. That doth beſt commend a Booke, the Stationer ſayes. Then, how odde ſoever your braines be, or your wiſedomes, make your licence the ſame, and ſpare not. Iudge your ſixe-penny'orth, your ſhillings worth, your five ſhillings worth at a time, or higher, ſo you riſe to the juſt rates, and welcome. But, whatever you doe, buy. Cenſure will not drive a Trade, or make the Iacke goe. And though you be a Magiſtrate of wit, and ſit, on the Stage at Black-Fryers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes dayly, know, theſe Playes have had their triall already, and ſtood out all Appeales; and doe now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation.

It had beene a thing, we confeſſe, worthy to have beene wiſhed, that the Author himſelfe had liv'd to have ſet forth, and overſeene his owne writings; But ſince it hath been ordain'd otherwiſe, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you doe not envy his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to have collected and publiſh'd them; and ſo to have publiſht them, as where (before) you were abus'd with divers ſtolne, and ſurreptitious Copies, maimed and deformed by the frauds and ſtealths of injurious Impoſtors, that expos'd them: even thoſe, are now offer'd to your view cured, and perfect of their limbes; and all the reſt, abſolute in their numbers as he conceived them. But it is not our Province, who onely gather his workes, and give them you to praiſe him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be loſt. To the memory of my beloved,
The AVTHOR
MR. VVILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
what he hath left us.

TO draw no envy (Shakeſpeare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy Booke, and Fame:
While I confeſſe thy writings to be ſuch,
As neither Man, nor Muſe, can praiſe too much.
Tis true, and all mens ſuffrage. But theſe wayes
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praiſe:
For ſeelieſt Ignorance on theſe may light,
Which, when it ſounds at beſt, but eccho's right;
Or blinde Affection, which doth ne're advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
Or crafty Malice, might pretend this praiſe,
And thinke to ruine, where it ſeem'd to raiſe.
Theſe are, as ſome infamous Baud, or Whore,
Should praiſe a Matron. What could hurt her more?
But thou art proofe againſt them, and indeed
Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.
I therefore will begin. Soule of the Age!
The applauſe! delight! the wonder of our Stage!
My Shakeſpeare riſe; I will not lodge thee by
Chaucer, or Spenſer, or bid Beaumont lye
A little further, to make thee a roome:
Thou art a Monument, without a tombe,
And art alive ſtill, while thy Booke doth live,
And we have wits to read, and prayſe to give.
That I not mixe thee ſo, my braine excuſes;
I meane with great, but diſproportion'd Muſes:
For, if I thought my judgement were of yeeres,
I ſhould commit thee ſurely with thy peeres,
And tell, how farre thou didſt our Lily out-ſhine,
Or ſporting Kid, or Marlowes mighty line.
And though thou hadſt ſmall Latine and leſſe Greeke,
From thence to honour thee, I would not ſeeke
For names; but call forth thund'ring Æſchilus,
Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
Paccuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,
To live againe, to heare thy Buskin tread,
And ſhake a Stage: Or, when thy Sockes were on,
Leave thee alone for the compariſon

Of all, that inſolent Greece, or haughty Rome
ſent forth, or ſince did from their aſhes come.
Triumph, my Britaine, thou haſt one to ſhowe,
To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muſes ſtill were in their prime,
When like Apollo he came forth to warme
Our eares, or like a Mercury to charme!
Nature her ſelfe was proud of his deſignes,
And joy'd to weare the dreſsing of his lines!
Which were ſo richly ſpun, and woven ſo fit,
As, ſince, ſhe will vouchſafe no other Wit.
The merry Greeke, tart Ariſtophanes,
Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not pleaſe;
But antiquated, and deſerted lye
As they were not of Natures family.
Yet muſt I not give Nature all: Thy Art,
My gentle Shakeſpeare, muſt enjoy a part.
For though the Poets matter, Nature be,
His Art doth give the faſhion. And, that he,
Who caſts to write a living line, muſt ſweat,
(ſuch as thine are) and ſtrike the ſecond heat
Vpon the Muſes anvile: turne the ſame,
(And himſelfe with it) that he thinkes to frame;
Or for the lawrell, he may gaine a ſcorne,
For a good Poet's made, as well as borne.
And ſuch wert thou. Looke how the fathers face
Lives in his iſſue, even ſo, the race
Of Shakeſpeares minde, and manners brightly ſhines
In his well torned, and true filed lines:
In each of which, he ſeemes to ſhake a Lance,
As brandiſh't at the eyes of Ignorance.
Sweet Swan of Avon! what a ſight it were
To ſee thee in our water yet appeare,
And make thoſe flights upon the bankes of Thames,
That ſo did take Eliza, and our Iames!
But ſtay, I ſee thee in the Hemiſphere
Advanc'd, and made a Conſtellation there!
Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheere the drooping Stage;
Which, ſince thy flight from hence, hath mourn'd like night,
And deſpaires day, but for thy Volumes light.

BEN. IONSON.

On Worthy Maſter Shakeſpeare and his Poems.

A Mind reflecting ages paſt, whoſe cleere
And equall ſurface can make things appeare
Diſtant a Thouſand yeares, and repreſent
Them in their lively colours juſt extent.
To out run haſty time, retrive the fates,
Rowle backe the heavens, blow ope the iron gates
Of death and Lethe, where (confuſed) lye
Great heapes of ruinous mortalitie.
In that deepe duskie dungeon to diſcerne
A royall Ghoſt from Churles; By art to learne
The Phyſiognomie of ſhades, and give Them ſuddaine birth, wondring how oft they live.
What ſtory coldly tells, what Poets faine
At ſecond hand, and picture without braine
Senſeleſſe and ſouleleſſe ſhowes. To give a Stage
(Ample and true with life) voyce, action, age,
As Plato's yeare and new Scene of the world
Them unto us, or us to them had hurld.
To raiſe our auncient Soveraignes from their herſe
Make Kings his ſubjects, by exchanging verſe
Enlive their pale trunkes, that the preſent age
Ioyes in their joy, and trembles at their rage:
Yet ſo to temper paſſion, that our eares
Take pleaſure in their paine; And eyes in teares
Both weepe and ſmile; fearefull at plots ſo ſad,
Then laughing at our feare; abus'd, and glad
To be abus'd, affected with that truth
Which we perceive is falſe; pleas'd in that ruth
At which we ſtart; and by elaborate play
Tortur'd and tickled; by a crablike way
Time paſt made paſtime, and in ugly ſort
Diſgorging up his ravaine for our ſport——
——while the Plebeian Impe from lofty throne,
Creates and rules a world, and workes upon
Mankind by ſecret engines; Now to move
A chilling pitty, then a rigorous love:
To ſtrike up and ſtroake downe, both joy and ire;
To ſteere th'affections; and by heavenly fire
Mould us anew. Stolne from our ſelves——
This and much more which cannot bee expreſt,
But by himſelfe, his tongue and his owne breſt,
Was Shakeſpeares freehold, which his cunning braine
Improv'd by favour of the nine fold traine.

The buskind Muſe, the Commicke Queene, the grand
And lowder tone of Clio; nimble hand,
And nimbler foote of the melodious paire,
The Silver voyced Lady; the moſt faire
Calliope, whoſe ſpeaking ſilence daunts:
And ſhe whoſe prayſe the heavenly body chants.
Theſe joyntly woo'd him, envying one another
(Obey'd by all as Spouſe, but lov'd as brother)
And wrought a curious robe of ſable grave
Freſh greene, and pleaſant yellow, red moſt brave,
And conſtant blew, rich purple, guiltleſſe white
The lowly Ruſſet, and the Scarlet bright:
Branch't and embroydred like the painted Spring
Each leafe match't with a flower, and each ſtring
Of golden wire, each line of ſilke; there run
Italian workes whoſe thred the Siſters ſpun;
And there did ſing, or ſeeme to ſing, the choyſe
Birdes of a forraine note and various voyce.
Here hangs a moſſey rocke; there playes a faire
But chiding fountaine purled: Not the ayre
Nor cloudes nor thunder, but were living drawne
Not out of common Tiffany or Lawne.
But fine materialls, which the Muſes know
And onely know the countries where they grow.
Now when they could no longer him enjoy
In mortall garments pent; death may deſtroy
They ſay his body, but his verſe ſhall live
And more then nature takes, our hands ſhall give.
In a leſſe volumne, but more ſtrongly bound
Shakespeare ſhall breath and ſpeake, with Laurell crown'd
Which never fades. Fed with Ambroſian meate
In a well-lyned veſture rich and neate.
So with this robe they cloath him, bid him weare it
For time ſhall never ſtaine, nor envy teare it.

The friendly admirer of his Endowments.

THE TEMPEST.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

A tempeſtuous noiſe of Thunder and Lightning heard: Enter a Ship-maſter, and a Boteſwaine.

Maſter.

BOte-ſwaine.

Boteſ. Heere Maſter: What cheere?

Maſt. Good: Speake to th'Mariners: fall too't, yarely, or we run our ſelves a ground, beſtirre, beſtirre. Exit.

Enter Mariners.

Boteſ. Heigh my hearts, cheerely, cheerly my hearts: yare, yare: Take in the toppe-ſale: Tend to th'Maſters whiſtle: Blow till thou burſt thy winde, if roome enough.

Enter Alonſo, Sebaſtian, Anthonio, Ferdinando, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good Bote-ſwaine have care: wher's the Maſter? Play the men.

Boteſ. I pray now keepe below.

Anth. Where is the Maſter, Boſon?

Boteſ. Do you not heare him? you marre our labour, Keepe your Cabins: you do aſſiſt the ſtorme.

Gonz. Nay, good be patient.

Boteſ. When the Sea is: hence, what cares theſe roarers for the name of King? to Cabine; ſilence: trouble us not.

Gon. Good yet remember whom thou haſt aboord.

Boteſ. None that I more love then my ſelfe. You are a Counſellor, if you can com nand theſe Elements to ſilence, and worke the peace of the preſent, wee will not hand a rope more, uſe your authoritie: If you cannot, give thankes you have liv'd ſo long, and make your ſelfe readie in your Cabine for the miſchance of the houre, if it ſo hap. Cheerely good hearts: out of our way I ſay. Exit.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow: me thinkes he hath no drowning marke upon him, his complexion is perfect Gallowes: ſtand faſt good Fate to his hanging, make the rope of his deſtiny our Cable, for our owne doth little advantage: If he be not borne to bee hang'd, our caſe is miſerable. Exit.

Enter Boteſwaine.

Boteſ. Downe with the top-Maſt: yare, lower, lower, bring her to Try with Maine-courſe. A plague—— upon this howling: they are lowder then the weather, or our office: yet againe? What do you heere? Shall we give ore and drowne, have you a minde to ſinke?

A cry within. Enter Sebaſtian, Anthonio & Gonzalo.

Sebaſ. A poxe o'your throat, you bawling, blaſphemous incharitable Dog.

Boteſ. Worke you then.

Anth. Hang cur, hang, you whoreſon inſolent Noyſemaker; we are leſſe afraid to be drownde, then thou art.

Gonz. I'le warrant him for drowning, though the Ship were no ſtonger then a Nutt-ſhell, and as leaky as an unſtanched wench.

Boteſ. Lay her a hold, a hold, ſet her two courſes off to Sea againe, lay her off.

Enter Mariners wet.

Mari. All loſt, to prayers, to prayers, all loſt.

Boteſ. What muſt our mouths be cold?

Gon. The King, and Prince, at prayers, let's aſſiſt them, for our caſe is as theirs.

Sebaſ. I'am out of patience.

An. We are meerly cheated of our lives by drunkards, This wide-chopt-raſcall, would thou mightſt lye drowning the waſhing of ten Tides.

Gonz. Hee'l be hang'd yet,
Though every drop of water ſweare againſt it,
And gape at widſt to glut him. A confuſed noyſe within.
Mercy on us.
We ſplit, we ſplit, Farewell my wife, and children,
Farewell brother: we ſplit, we ſplit, we ſplit.

Anth. Lets all ſinke with' King

Seb. Let's take leave of him. Exit.

Gonſ. Now would I give a thouſand furlongs of Sea, for an Acre of barren ground: Long heath, Browne firrs, any thing; the wills above be done, but I would faine dye a dry death.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Proſpero and Miranda.

Mira. If by your Art (my deereſt father) you have Put the wilde waters in this Rore; alay them:
The skye it ſeemes would powre downe ſtinking pitch,
But that the Sea, mounting to th' welkins cheeke,
Daſhes the fire out. Oh! I have ſuffered
With thoſe that I ſaw ſuffer: A brave veſſell

(Who ha[illegible]bt ſome noble creature in her)
Daſh'd all [illegible]es : O the cry did knocke
Againſt [illegible]y heart : poore ſoules, they periſh'd.
Had I [illegible] God of power, I would
Have ſuncke the Sea within the Earth, or ere
It ſhould the good Ship ſo have ſwallow'd, and
The fraughting Soules within her.
Proſ. Be collected,
No more amazement : Tell your pitteous heart ;
there's no harme done.
Mira. O woe, the day.
Proſ. No harme.
I have done nothing, but in care of thee
(Of thee my deere one ; thee my daughter) who
Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am : nor that I am more better
Then Proſpero, Maſter of a full poore cell,
And thy no greater Father.
Mira. More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.
Proſ. 'Tis time
I ſhould informe thee farther : Lend thy hand
And plucke my Magick garment from me : So,
Lye there my Art : wipe thou thine eyes, have comfort,
The direfull ſpectacle of the wracke which touch'd
The very vertue of compaſſion in thee :
I have with ſuch compaſſion in mine Art
So ſafely ordered, that there is no ſoule
No not ſo much perdition as an hayre
Betide to any creature in the veſſell
Which thou heardſt cry, which thou ſaw'ſt ſinke: Sit
For thou muſt now know farther. (downe,
Mira. You have often
Begun to tell me what I am, but ſtopt
And left me to the bootelesſe Inquiſition,
Concluding, ſtay : not yet.
Proſ. The houre's now come,
The very minute byds thee ope thine eare,
Obey, and be attentive. Canſt thou remember
A time before we came unto this Cell?
I doe not thinke thou canſt, for then thou was't not
Out three yeares old.
Mira. Certainely Sir, I can.
Proſ. By what ? by any other houſe; or perſon ?
Of any thing the Image, tell me, that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.
Mira. 'Tis farre off.
And rather like a dreame, then an aſſurance
That my remembrance warrants : Had I not
Fowre, or five women once, that tended me ?
Proſ. Thou hadſt ; and more Miranda : But how is it
That this lives in thy mind ? What ſeeſt thou els
In the dark-backward and Abiſme of Time ?
Yf thou remembreſt ought ere thou cam'ſt here,
How thou cam'ſt here thou mayſt.
Mira. But that I doe not.
Proſ. Twelve yere ſince (Miranda) twelve yere ſince,
Thy Father was the Duke of Millaine, and
A Prince of power :
Mira. Sir, are not you my Father ?
Proſ. Thy Mother was a peece of vertue, and
She ſayd thou waſt my daughter ; and thy father
Was Duke of Millaine, and his onely heire:
And Princeſſe ; no worſe Iſſued,
Mira. O the heavens,
What fowle play had we, that we came from thence?
Or bleſſed was't we did ?
Proſ. Both, both my Girle.
By fowleplay (as thou ſayeſt) were we heaved thence,
But bleſſedly holpe hither.
Mira. O my heart bleedes
To thinke oth' teene that I have turnd you to,
Which is from my remembrance, pleaſe you, farther;
Proſ. My brother and thy vncle, call'd Anthonio:
I pray thee marke me, that a brother ſhould
Be ſo perfidious : he, whom next thy ſelfe
Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put
The mannage of my ſtate, as at that time
Though all the ſignories it was the firſt,
And Proſpero, the prime Duke, being ſo reputed
In dignity; and for the Liberall Artes,
Without a paralell ; thoſe being all my ſtudie,
The Government I caſt upon my brother,
And to my ſtate grew ſtranger, being tranſported
And rapt in ſecret ſtudies, thy falſe vncle
(Doeſt thou attend me?)
Mira. Sir, moſt heedefully.
Proſ. Being once perfected how to grant ſuites,
How to deny them : whom t'aduauce, and whom
To traſh for over-toppinng; new created
The creatures that were mine, I ſay, or chang'd 'em,
Or elſe new form'd 'em ; having both the key,
Of Officer, and office, ſet all hearts e'th ſtate
To what tune pleas'd his eare, that now he was
The Ivy which had hid my princely Trunck,
And ſuckt my verdure out on't : Thou attend'ſt not?
Mira. O good Sir, I doe.
Proſ. I pray thee marke me :
I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To cloſenes, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which but by being retired
Ore-priz'd all popular rate : in my falſe brother
Awak'd an evill nature, and my truſt
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falſehood in it's contrary, as great
As my truſt was, which had indeede no limit,
A confidence ſans bound. He being thus Lorded,
Not onely with what my revenew yeelded,
But what my power might elſe exact. Like one
Who having into truth, by telling of it,
Made ſuch a ſynner of his memorie
To credite his owne lie, he did beleeve
He was indeed the Duke, out o'th' Subſtitution
And executing th' outward face of Roialtie
With all prerogative : hence is Ambition growing:
Do'ſt thou heare?
Mira. Your tale, Sir, would cure deafeneſſe.
Proſ. To have no Schreene between this part he plaid
And him he plaid it for, he needes will be
Abſolute Millaine, Me (poore man) my Librarie
Was Dukedome large enough : of temporall roialties
He thinkes me now incapable. Confederates
(So drie he was for Sway) with King of Naples
To give him annuall tribute, doe him homage
Subject his Coronet, to his Crowne, and bend
The Dukedome yet unbowed (alas poore Millaine)
To much ignoble ſtooping.
Mira. Oh the heavens :
Proſ. Marke his condition, and th'event, then tell me
If this might be a brother.
Mira. I ſhould ſinne
To thinke but Noblie of my Grand-mother,

Good wombes have borne bad ſonnes.
Pro. Now the condition.
This King of Naples being an Enemy
To me inveterate, hearkens my brothers ſuit,
Which was, That he in lieu o'th' premiſes,
Of homage, and I know not how much Tribute,
Should preſently extirpate me and mine
Out of the Dukedome, and confer faire Millaine
With all the honors, on my brother: Whereon
A treacherous Armie levied, one mid-night
Fated to th' purpoſe, did Anthonio open
The gates of Millaine, and ith' dead of darkeneſſe
The Miniſters for th' purpoſe hurried thence
Me, and thy crying ſelfe.
Mir. Alack, for pitty:
I not remembring how I cride out then
Will cry it ore againe: it is a hint
That wrings mine eyes too't.
Pro. Heare a little further,
And then I'le bring thee to the preſent buſineſſe
Which now's upon's: without the which, this ſtory
Were moſt impertinent.
Mir. Wherefore did they not
That houre deſtroy us?
Pro. Well demanded, wench:
My Tale provokes that queſtion: Deare, they durſt not,
So deare the love my people bore me: nor ſet
A marke ſo bloudy on the buſineſſe; but
With colours fairer, painted their foule ends.
In few, they hurried us a-boord a Barke,
Bore us ſome Leagues to Sea, where they prepared
A rotten carkaſſe of a Butt, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, nor ſayle, nor maſt; the very rats
Inſtinctiuely have quit it: There they hoyſt us
To cry to th' Sea, that roard to us; to ſigh
To th' windes, whoſe pitty ſighing backe againe
Did us but loving wrong.
Mir. Alack, what trouble
Was I then to you?
Pro. O, a Cherubin
Thou was't that did preſerve me; Thou didſt ſmile,
Infuſed with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deck'd the ſea with drops full ſalt,
Vnder my burthen groan'd, which rais'd in me
An undergoing ſtomacke, to beare up
Againſt what ſhould enſue.
Mir. How came we aſhore?
Pro. By providence divine,
Some food, we had, and ſome freſh water, that
A noble Neopolitan Gonzalo
Out of his Charity, (who being then appointed Maſter of this deſigne) did give us, with Rich garments, linnens, ſtuffs, and neceſſaries
Which ſince have ſteeded much, ſo of his gentleneſſe
Knowing I lov'd my bookes he furniſhd me
From mine owne Library, with volumes, that
I prize above my Dukedome.
Mir. Would I might
But ever ſee that man.
Pro. Now I ariſe,
Sit ſtill, and heare the laſt of our ſea-ſorrow:
Heere in this Iland we arriu'd, and heere
Have I, thy Schoolemaſter, made thee more profit
Then other Princeſſe can, that have more time
For vainer howres; and Tutors, not ſo carefull.
Mir. Heavens thanke you for't. And now I pray you Sir,
For ſtill 'tis beating in my mind; your reaſon
For rayſing this Sea-ſtorme?
Pro. Know thus far forth,
By accident moſt ſtrange, bountifull Fortune
(Now my deere Lady) hath mine enemies
Brought to this ſhore: And by my preſcience
I finde my Zenith doth depend upon
A moſt auſpitious ſtarre, whoſe influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droope: Heare ceaſe more queſtions,
Thou art inclinde to ſleepe: 'tis a good dulneſſe,
And give it way: I know thou canſt not chuſe;
Come away, Servant, come; I am ready now,
Approach my Ariel. Come. Enter Ariel.
Ari. All haile, great Maſter, grave Sir, haile I come
To anſwer thy beſt pleaſure; be it to fly,
To ſwim, to dive into the fire: to ride
On the curld clowdes: to thy ſtrong bidding, taske
Ariel, and all his Qualitie.
Pro. Haſt thou, Spirit,
Performd to point, the Tempeſt that I bad thee.
Ar. To every Article.
I boorded the Kings ſhip: now on the Beake,
Now in the Waſte, the Decke, in every Cabyn,
I flam'd amazement, ſometimes I'ld divide
And burne in many places; on the top-maſt,
The Yards and Bore-ſprit, would I flame diſtinctly,
Then meete, and joyne. Ioves Lightning, the precurſers
O'th dreadfull Thunder-claps more momentarie
And ſight out-running were not; the fire and cracks
Of ſulphurous roaring, the moſt mighty Neptune
Seeme to beſiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dead Trident ſhake.
Pro. My brave Spirit,
Who was ſo firme, ſo conſtant, that this coyle
Would not infect his reaſon?
Ar. Not a ſoule
But felt a Feaver of the madde, and plaid
Some trickes of diſperation; all but Mariners
Plung'd in the foaming bryne, and quit the veſſell;
Then all a fire with me the Kings ſonne Ferdinand
With haire up-ſtaring (then like reeds, not haire)
Was the firſt man that leapt; cride hell is empty,
And all the Divells are heere.
Pro. Why that's my ſpirit:
But was not this nigh ſhore?
Ar. Cloſe by, my Maſter.
Pro. But are they (Ariell) ſafe?
Ar. Not a haire periſhd:
On their ſuſtaining garments not a blemiſh,
But freſher then before: and as thou badſt me,
In troops I have diſperſd them 'bout the Iſle:
The Kings ſonne have I landed by himſelfe,
Whom I left cooling of the Ayre with ſighes,
In an odde Angle of the Iſle, and ſitting,
His armes in this ſad knot.
Pro. Of the Kings ſhip,
The Marriners, ſay how thou haſt diſpoſd,
And all the reſt o'th' Fleete?
Ar. Safely in harbour
Is the Kings ſhippe, in the deepe Nooke, where once
Thou calldſt me up at midnight to fetch dewe
From the ſtill-vext Bermoothes, there ſhe's hid;
The Marriners all under hatches ſtowed,
Who, with a Charme joynd to their ſuffered labour
I have left aſleepe: and for the reſt o'th' Fleet

(Which I diſpers'd) they all have met againe,
And are upon the Mediterranean Flote
Bound ſadly home for Naples,
Suppoſing that they ſaw the Kings ſhip wrackt,
And his great perſon periſh.
Pro. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more worke :
What is the time o'th' day?
Ar. Paſt the mid ſeaſon.
Fro. At leaſt two Glaſſes : the time 'twixt ſix & now
Muſt by us both be ſpent moſt preciouſly.
Ar. Is there more toyle? Since yͧ doſt give me paines,
Let me remember thee what thou haſt promis'd,
Which is not yet perform'd me.
Pro. How now ? moodie ?
Which is't thou canſt demand ?
Ar. My Libertie.
Pro. Before the time be out? no more :
Ar, I preethee,
Remember I have done thee worthy ſervice,
Told thee no lyes , made thee no miſtakings, ſerv'd
Without or grudge, or grumblings; thou did promiſe
To bate me a full yeare.
Pro. Do'ſt thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee ? Ar. No.
Pro. Thou do'ſt : & thinkeſt it much to tread the Ooze
Of the ſalt deepe ;
To run upon the ſharpe winde of the North,
To doe me buſineſſe in the veines o'th' earth
When it is bak'd with froſt.
Ar. I doe not Sir.
Pro. Thou lieſt, malignant Thing : haſt thou forgot
The fowle Witch Sycorax, who with Age and Envy
Was gowne into a hoope? haſt thou forgot her?
Ar. No Sir.
Fro. Thou haſt : where was ſhe born? ſpeak: tell me:
Ar. Sir, in Argier.
Pro. Oh, was ſhe ſo : I muſt
Once in a moneth recount what thou haſt bin,
Which thou forgetſt. This damn'd Witch Sycorax
For miſchiefes manifold, aud ſorceries terrible
To enter humane hearing, from Argier
Thou know'ſt was baniſh'd : for one thing ſhe did
They would not take her life : Is not this true? Ar. I Sir.
Fro. This blew ey'd hag, was hither brought with
And here was left by th' Saylors ;thou my ſlave, (child,
As thou reportſt thy ſelfe, was then her ſervant,
And for thou waſt a Spirit too delicate
To Act her earthy, and abhord commands,
Refuſing her grand heſts, ſhe did confine thee
By helpe of her more potent miniſters,
And in her moſt unmittigable rage,
Into a cloven Pyne; within which rift
Impriſon'd, thou didſt painefully remaine
A dozen yeares : within which ſpace ſhe di'd,
And left thee there : where thou didſt vent thy groanes
As faſt as Mill-wheeles ſtrike : Then was this Iſland
(Save for the Sunne that he did littour heere,
A frekelld whelpe, hag-borne) not honour'd with
A humane ſhape.
Ar. Yes : Caliban her ſonne.
Por. Dull thing, I ſay ſo : he, that Caliban
Whom now I keepe in ſervice, thou beſt know'ſt
What torment I did finde thee in; thy grones
Did make wolues howle, and penetrate the breſts
Of ever-angry Beares; it was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not againe undoe : it was mine Art,
When I arriu'd, and heard thee, that made gape
The Pyne, and let thee out.
Ar. I thanke thee Maſter.
Fro. If thou more murmur'ſt, I will rend an Oake
And peg-thee in his knotty entrailes, till
Thou haſt howl'd away twelve winters.
Ar. Pardon, Maſter.
I will be correſpondent to command
And doe my ſpryting, gently.
Pro. Doe ſo : and after two dayes
I will diſcharge thee.
Ar. That's my noble maſter :
What ſhall I doe? ſay what? what ſhall I doe?
Pro. Goe make thy ſelfe like to a Nymph o'th' Sea,
Be ſubject to no ſight but thine, and mine : inviſible
To every eye-ball elſe : goe take this ſhape
And hither come in't : goe : hence
With diligence. Exit.
Pro. Awake, deere heart awake, thou haſt ſlept well,
Awake.
Mir. The ſtrangenes of your ſtory, put
Heavineſſe in me.
Pro. Shake it off : Come on,
Wee'll viſit Caliban, my ſlave, who never
Yeelds us kinde anſwere.
Mir. 'Tis a villaine Sir, I doe not love to looke on.
Pro. But as 'tis.
We cannot miſſe him : he do's make our fire,
Fetch in our wood, and ſerves Offices
That profit us : What hoa : ſlave : Caliban :
Thou Earth thou : ſpeake.
Cal. within. There's wood enough within.
Pro. Come forth I ſay, there's other buſineſſe for thee:
Come thou Tortoys, when? Enter Ariel like a water-
Fine apparition : my quaint Ariel, Nymph.
Hearke in thine eare.
Ar, My Lord, it ſhall be done. Exit.
Fro. Thou poiſonous ſlave, got by the divell himſelfe
Vpon thy wicked Dam; come forth. Enter Caliban.
Cal. As wicked dewe, as ere my mother bruſh'd
With Ravens feather from unwholeſome Fen,
Drop on you both : A Southweſt blow on yee,
And bliſter you all ore.
Pro. For this be ſure, to night thou ſhalt have cramps,
Side-ſtitches, that ſhall pen thy breath up, Vrchins
Shall for that vaſt of night, that they may worke
All exerciſe on thee : thou ſhalt be pinch'd
As thicke as hony-combe, each pinch more ſtinging
Then Bees that made 'em.
Cal. I muſt eate my dinner :
This Iſland's mine by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'ſt from me : when thou cam'ſt firſt
Thou ſtroakſt me, & made much of me : wouldſt give me
Water with berries in't : and teach me how
To name the bigger Light, and how the leſſe
That burne by day, and night : and then I loved thee
And ſhewed thee all the qualities o'th' Iſle,
The freſh Springs, Brine-pits; barren place and fertill,
Curs'd be I that I did ſo : All the Charmes
Of Sycorax : Toades, Beetles, Batts light on you :
For I am all the Subjects that you have,
Which firſt was mine owne King : and here you ſty-me
In this hard Rocke, whiles you doe keepe from me
The reſt o'th' Iſland.

Pro. Thou moſt lying ſlave,
Whom ſtripes may move, nor kindnes: I have us'd thee
(Filth as thou art) with humane care, and lodg'd thee
In mine owne Cell, till thou didſt ſeeke to violate
The honour of my childe.
Cal. Oh ho, oh ho, would't had bene done :
Thou didſt prevent me, I had peopel'd elſe
This Iſle with Calibans.
Mir. Abhorred Slave,
Which any print of goodneſſe will not take,
Being capable of all ill : I pittyed thee,
Took paines to make thee ſpeake, taught thee each houre
One thing or other : when thou didſt not (Sauage)
Know thine owne meaning; but wouldſt gabble, like
A thing moſt brutiſh, I endow'd thy purpoſes
With words that made them knowne: But thy vild race
(Tho thou didſt learn) had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore waſt thou
Deſervedly confin'd into this Rocke, who hadſt
Deſeru'd more then a priſon.
Cal. You taught me Language, and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curſe : the red-plague rid you
For learning me your language.
Pro. Hag-ſeed hence :
Fetch us in Fewell, and be quicke thou'rt beſt
To anſwer other buſineſſe: ſhrug'ſt thou (Malice)
If thou neglectſt, or doſt unwillingly
What I command, Ile racke thee with old crampes,
Fill all thy bones with Aches, make thee rore,
That beaſts ſhall tremble at thy dyn.
Cal. No, 'pray thee.
I muſt obey, his Art is of ſuch pow'r,
It would controll my Dams god Setebos,
And make a vaſſaile of him.
Pro. So ſlave, hence. Exit Cal.

Enter Ferdinand & Ariel, inviſible playing & ſinging.

Ariel Song. Come unto theſe yellow ſands,
and then take hands :
Curtſied when you have, and kiſt
the wilde waves whiſt :
Foote it featly heere, and there, and ſweete Sprights beare
the burthen. Burthen diſperſedly.
Harke, harke, bowgh wawgh: the watch-Dogges barke,
bowgh-wawgh.
Ar. Hark, hark, I heare the ſtraine of ſtrutting Chanticlere
cry cockadidle-dowe.

Fer. Where ſhold this Muſicke be? I'th aire, or th'earth?
It ſounds no more: and ſure it waytes upon
Some god 'oth' Iland, ſitting on a banke,
Weeping againe the King my Fathers wracke.
This Muſicke crept by me upon the Waters,
Allaying both their fury, and my paſſion
With it's ſweet ayre : thence I have follow'd it
(Or it hath drawne me rather) but 'tis gone.
No, it begin: againe.

Ariell Song. Full fadom five thy Father lies,
Of his bones are Corrall made:
Thoſe are pearles that were his eyes,
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth ſuffer a Sea-change
Into ſomething rich, & ſtrange :
Sea-Nimphs hourly ring his knell.
Burthen: ding dong.
Harke now I heare them; ding-dong bell.

Fer. The Ditty do's remember my drown'd father,
This is no mortall buſines, nor no ſound
That the earth owes : I heare it now above me.
Pro. The fringed Curtaines of thine eye advance,
And ſay what thou ſee'ſt yond.
Mira. What is't a ſpirit ?
Lord, how it lookes about : Beleeve me ſir,
It carries a brave forme. But 'tis a ſpirit.
Pro. No wench, it eats, and ſleepes, & hath ſuch ſenſes
As we have; ſuch. This Gallant which thou ſeeſt
Was in the wracke : and but hee's ſomething ſtain'd
With griefe (that's beauties canker) yͧ might'ſt call him
A goodly perſon : he hath loſt his fellowes,
And ſtrayes about to finde 'em.
Mir. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing naturall
I ever ſaw ſo Noble.
Pro. It goes on I ſee
As my ſoule prompts it : Spirit, fine ſpirit, Ile free thee
Within two dayes for this.
Fer. Moſt ſure the goddeſſe
On whom theſe ayres attend : Vouchſafe my pray'r
May know if you remaine upon this Iſland,
And that you will ſome good inſtruction give
How I may beare me heere : my prime requeſt
(Which I do laſt pronounce) is (O you wonder)
If you be Mayd, or no?
Mir. No wonder ſir,
But certainely a Mayd.
Fer. My Language? Heavens :
I am the beſt of them that ſpeake this ſpeech,
Were I but where 'tis ſpoken.
Pro. How? the beſt?
What wer't thou if the King of Naples heard thee?
Fer. A ſingle thing, as I am now, that wonders
To heare thee ſpeake of Naples : he do's heare me,
And that he do's, I weepe : my ſelfe am Naples,
Who, with mine eyes (never ſince at ebbe) beheld
The King my Father wrack't.
Mir. Alacke, for mercy.
Fer. Yes faith, and all his Lords, the Duke of Millaine
And his brave ſonne, being twaine.
Pro. The Duke of Millaine
And his more braver daughter, could controll thee
If now 'twere fit to do't : At the firſt ſight
They have chang'd eyes : Delicate Ariel,
Ile ſet thee free for this. A word good Sir,
I feare you have done your ſelfe ſome wrong : A word.
Mir. Why ſpeakes my father ſo urgently? This
Is the third man that ere I ſaw : the firſt
That ere I ſigh'd for : pitty move my father
To be enclin'd my way.
Fer. O, if a Virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, Ile make you
The Queene of Naples.
Pro. Soft Sir, one word more.
They are both in eythers pow'rs : But this ſwift buſines
I muſt uneaſie make, leaſt too light winning
Make the prize light. One word more : I charge thee
That thou attend me : Thou do'ſt heere uſurpe
The name thou ow'ſt not, and haſt put thy ſelfe
Vpon this Iſland, as a ſpy, to win it
From me, the Lord on't
Fer. No, as I am a man.
Mir. Ther's nothing ill, can dwell in ſuch a Temple,
If the ill-ſpirit have ſo faire a houſe,
Good things will ſtrive to dwell with't.
Pro. Follow me.

Prof. Speake not you for him: hee's a Traitor: come,
Ile manacle thy necke and feete together:
Sea water ſhalt thou drinke: thy food ſhall be
The freſh-brooke Muſſels, wither'd roots, and huskes
Wherein the Acorne cradled. Follow.
Fer. No,
I will reſiſt ſuch entertainement, till
Mine enemy ha's more pow'r.
He drawes, and is charmed from moving.
Mira. O deere Father,
Make not too raſh a triall of him, for
Hee's gentle, and not fearefull.
Prof. What I ſay,
My foote my Tutor? Put thy ſword up Traytor,
Who makes a ſhew, but dar'ſt not ſtrike: thy conſcience
Is poſſeſt with guilt: Come from thy ward,
For I can heere diſarme thee with this ſticke,
And make thy weapon drop.
Mir. Beſeech you Father.
Pro. Hence: hang not on my garments.
Mir. Sir have pity,
Ile be his ſurety.
Pro. Silence: One word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee: What,
An advocate for an Impoſtor? Huſh:
Thou think'ſt there is no more ſuch ſhapes as he,
(Having ſeene but him and Caliban:) Fooliſh wench,
To th' moſt of men, this is a Caliban,
And they to him are Angels.
Mir. My affections
Are then moſt humble: I have no ambition
To ſee a goodlier man.
Pro. Come on, obey:
Thy Nerves are in their infancy againe.
And have no vigour in them.
Fer. So they are:
My ſpirits, as in a dreame, are all bound up:
My Fathers loſſe, the weakneſſe which I feele,
The wracke of all my friends, nor this mans threats,
To whome I am ſubdude: are but light to me,
Might I but through my priſon once a day
Behold this Mayd: all corners elſe o'th' Earth
Let liberty make uſe of: ſpace enough
Have I in ſuch a priſon.
Pro. It workes: Come on.
Thou haſt done well, fine Ariell: follow me.
Harke what thou elſe ſhalt do me.
Mir. Be of comfort,
My Father's of a better nature (Sir)
Then he appeares by ſpeech: this is unwonted
Which now came from him.
Pro. Thou ſhalt be as free
As mountaine windes, but then exactly do
All points of my command.
Ar. To th' ſyllable.
Pro. Come follow: ſpeake not for him. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Alonſo, Sebaſtian, Anthonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Franciſco, and others.

Gonz. Beſeech you Sir, be merry: you have cauſe,
(So have we all) of joy; for our eſcape
Is much beyond our loſſe; our hint of woe
Is common, every day, ſome Saylors wife,
The Maſters of ſome Merchant, and the Merchant
Have juſt our Theame of woe: But for the miracle,
(I meane our preſervation) few in millions
Can ſpeake like us: then wiſely (good Sir) weigh
Our ſorrow, with our comfort.
Alon. Prethee peace.
Seb. He receives comfort like cold porredge.
Ant. The Viſitor will not give him ore ſo.
Seb. Looke, hee's winding up the watch of his wit,
By and by it will ſtrike.
Gon. Sir.
Seb. On: Tell.
Gon. When every greefe is entertaind,
That's offer'd comes to th' entertainer.
Seb. A dollor.
Gon. Dolour comes to him indeed, you have ſpoken truer then you purpos'd.
Seb. You have taken it wiſelier then I meant you ſhould.
Gon. Therefore my Lord.
Ant. Fie, what a ſpend-thrift is he of his tongue.
Alon. I pre-thee ſpare.
Gon. Well, I have done: But yet
Seb. He will be talking.
Ant. Which, of he, or Adrian, for a good wager,
Firſt begins to crow?
Seb. The old Cocke.
Ant. The Cockrell.
Seb. Done: The wager?
Ant. A laughter.
Seb. A match.
Adr. Though this Iſland ſeeme to be deſert.
Seb. Ha, ha, ha.
Ant. So: you'r paid.
Adr. Vninhabitable, and almoſt inacceſſible.
Seb. Yet.
Adr. Yet.
Ant. He could not miſſe't.
Adr. It muſt needs be of ſubtle, tender, and delicate temperance.
Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench.
Seb. I, and a ſubtle, as he moſt learnedly deliver'd.
Adr. The ayre breathes upon us here moſt ſweetly.
Seb. As if it had Lungs, and rotten ones.
Ant. Or, as 'twere perfum'd by a Fen.
Gon. Heere is every thing advantageous to life.
Ant. True, ſave meanes to live.
Seb. Of that there's none, or little.
Gon. How luſh and luſty the graſſe lookes?
How greene?
Ant. The ground indeed is tawny.
Seb. With an eye of greene in't.
Ant. He miſſes not much.
Seb. No: he doth but miſtake the truth totally.
Gon. But the rariety of it is, which is indeed almoſt beyond credit.
Seb. As many voucht rarieties are.
Gon. That our Garments being (as they were) drencht in the Sea, hold notwithſtanding their freſhneſſe and gloſſes, being rather new dy'de then ſtain'd with ſalte water.
Ant. If but one of his pockets could ſpeake, would it not ſay he lyes?
Seb. I, or very falſely pocket up his report.

Gon. Me thinkes our garments are now as freſh as when wee put them on firſt in Affricke, at the marriage of the kings faire daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

Seb. 'Twas a ſweet marriage, and we proſper well in our returne.

Adri. Tunis was never grac'd before with ſuch a Paragon to their Queene.

Gon. Not ſince widdow Dido's time.

Ant. Widow? A pox o'that: how came that Widdow in? Widdow Dido!

Seb. What if he had ſayd Widdower Æneas too? Good Lord, how you take it?

Adri. Widdow Dido ſaid you? You make me ſtudy of that: She was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis Sir was Carthage.

Adri. Carthage? Gon. I aſſure you Carthage.

Ant. His word is more then the miraculous Harpe.

Seb. He hath rais'd the wall, and houſes too.

Ant. What impoſſible matter will he make eaſy next?

Seb. I thinke hee will carry this Iſland home in his pocket, and give it his ſonne for an Apple.

Ant. And ſowing the kernels of it in the Sea, bring forth more Iſlands.

Gon. I. Ant. Why in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking, that our garments ſeeme now as freſh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now Queene.

Ant. And the rareſt that ere came there.

Seb. Bate (I beſeech you) widdow Dido.

Ant. O widdow Dido? I, Widdow Dido.

Gon. Is not my doublet Sir as freſh as the firſt day I wore it? I meane in a ſort.

Ant. That ſort was well fiſh'd for.

Gon. When I wore it at your daughters marriage.

Alon. You cram theſe words into mine eares, againſt the ſtomacke of my ſenſe: would I had never Married my daughter there: For comming thence
My ſonne is loſt, and (in my rate) ſhe too,
Who is ſo farre from Italy removed,
I ne're againe ſhall ſee her: O thou mine heire
Of Naples and of Millaine, what ſtrange fiſh
Hath made his meale on thee?

Fran. Sir he may live,
I ſaw him beate the ſurges under him,
And ride upon their backes; he trod the water
Whoſe enmity he flung aſide: and breſted
The ſurge moſt ſwolne that met him: his bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept and oared
Himſelfe with his good armes in luſty ſtroke
To th'ſhore; that ore his wave-worne baſis bowed
As ſtooping to releeve him: I not doubt
He came alive to Land.

Alon. No, no, hee's gone.

Seb. Sir you may thanke your ſelfe for this great loſſe,
That would not bleſſe our Europe with your daughter,
But rather loſe her to an Affrican,
Where ſhe at leaſt, is baniſh'd from your eye,
Who hath cauſe to wet the greefe on't.

Alon. Pre-thee peace.

Seb. You were kneel'd too, & importun'd otherwiſe
By all of us: and the faire ſoule her ſelfe
Waigh'd betweene loathneſſe, and obedience, at
Which end o'th'beame ſhould bow: we have loſt your (ſon,
I feare for ever: Millaine and Naples have
Mo widdowes in them of this buſineſſe making,
Then we bring men to comfort them:
The fault's your owne.

Alon. So is the deer'ſt oth' loſſe.

Gon. My Lord Sebaſtian,
The truth you ſpeake doth lacke ſome gentleneſſe,
And time to ſpeake it in: you rub the ſore,
When you ſhould bring the plaiſter.

Seb. Very well. Ant. And moſt Chirurgeonly.

Gon. It is foule weather in us all, good Sir,
When you are cloudy.

Seb. Fowle weather? Ant. Very foule.

Gon. Had I plantation of this Iſle my Lord.

Ant. Hee'd ſow't with Nettle-ſeed.

Seb. Or Dockes, or Mallowes.

Gon. And were the King on't, what would I do?

Seb. Scape being drunke, for want of Wine.

Gon. I'th' Commonwealth I would (by contraries)
Execute all things: For no kinde of Trafficke
Would I admit: No name of Magiſtrate:
Letters ſhould not be knowne: Riches, poverty,
And uſe of ſervice, none: Contract, Succeſſion,
Borne, bound of Land, Tilth, Vineyard none:
No uſe of Mettall, Corne, or Wine, or Oyle:
No occupation, all men idle, all:
And women too, but innocent and pure:
No Soveraignty.

Seb. Yet he would be King on't.

Ant. The latter end of his Common-wealth forgets the beginning.

Gon. All things in common Nature ſhould produce
Without ſweat or endeuour: Treaſon, fellony,
Sword, Pike, Knife, Gun, or neede of any Engine
Would I not have: but Nature ſhould bring forth
Of it owne kinde, all foyzon, all abundance
To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marrying 'mong his ſubjects?

Ant. None (man) all idle; Whores and Knaves,

Gon. I would with ſuch perfection governe Sir:
T'Excell the Golden Age.

Seb. 'Save his Majeſty. Ant. Long live Gonzalo.

Gon. And do you marke me, Sir?

Alon. Pre-thee no more: thou doſt talke nothing to (me

Gon. I do well beleeve your Highneſſe, and did it to miniſter occaſion to theſe Gentlemen, who are of ſuch ſenſible and nimble Lungs, that they alwayes uſe to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kinde of merry fooling am nothing to you: ſo you may continue, and laugh at nothing ſtill.

Ant. What a blow was there given?

Seb. And it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are Gentlemen of brave mettal: you would lift the Moone out of her ſpheare, if ſhe would continue in it five weekes without changing.

Enter Ariell playing ſolemne Muſicke.

Seb. We would ſo, and then go a Bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay good my Lord, be not angry.

Gon. No I warrant you, I will not adventure my diſcretion ſo weakly: Will you laugh me a ſleepe, for I am very heavie.

Ant. Go ſleepe and heare us.

Alon. What, all ſo ſoone aſleepe? I wiſh mine eyes
Would (with themſelves) ſhut up my thoughts,
I finde they are inclin'd to do ſo.

Seb. Pleaſe you Sir,
Do not omit the heavy offer of it:
It ſeldome viſits ſorrow, when it doth, it is a Comforter

Ant. We two my Lord, will guard your perſon,
While you take your reſt, and watch your ſafety.
Alon. Thanke you: Wondrous heavy.
Seb. What a ſtrange dowſineſſe poſſeſſes them?
Ant. It is the quality o'th' Clymate.
Seb. Why.
Doth it not then our eye-lids ſinke? I finde
Not my ſelfe diſpos'd to ſleepe:
Ant. Nor I, my ſpirits are nimble:
They fell together all, as by conſent
They dropt, as by a Thunder-ſtroke: what might Worthy Sebaſtian? O, what might? no more:
And yet, me thinkes I ſee it in thy face,
What thou ſhould'ſt be: th' occaſion ſpeakes thee, and
My ſtrong imagination ſee's a Crowne
Dropping upon thy head.
Seb. What? art thou waking?
Ant. Do you not heare me ſpeake?
Seb. I do, and ſurely
It is a ſleepy Language; and thou ſpeak'ſt
Out of thy ſleepe: What is it thou didſt ſay?
This is a ſtrange repoſe, to be aſleepe
With eyes wide open: ſtanding, ſpeaking, moving:
And yet ſo faſt a ſleepe.
Ant. Noble Sebaſtian,
Thou let'ſt thy fortune ſleepe: die rather: wink'ſt
Whiles thou art waking.
Seb. Thou do'ſt ſnore diſtinctly,
There's meaning in thy ſnores.
Ant. I am more ſerious then my cuſtome: you
Muſt be ſo too, if heed me: which to do,
Trebbles thee o're.
Seb. Well: I am ſtanding water.
Ant. Ile teach you how to flow.
Seb. Do ſo: to ebbe,
Hereditary Sloth inſtructs me.
Ant. O!
If you but knew how you the purpoſe cheriſh
Whiles thus you mocke it: how in ſtripping it
You more inveſt it: ebbing men, indeed
(Moſt often) do ſo neere the bottome run
By their owne feare, or ſloth.
Seb. 'Pre-thee ſay on,
The ſetting of thine eye, and cheeke proclaime
A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed,
Which throwes thee much to yeeld.
Ant. Thus Sir:
Although this Lord of weake remembrance; this
Who ſhall be of as little memory
When he is earth'd, hath here almoſt perſwaded
(For hee's a Spirit of perſwaſion, onely Profeſſes to perſwade) the King his ſonne's alive,
'Tis as impoſſible that hee's undrown'd,
As he that ſleepes heere, ſwims.
Seb. I have no hope
That hee's undrown'd.
Ant. O, out of that no hope,
What great hope have you? No hope that way, Is Another way ſo high a hope, that even
Ambition cannot pierce a winke beyond
But doubt diſcovery there. Will you grant with me
That Ferdinand is drown'd?
Seb. Hee's gone.
Ant. Then tell me who's the next heire of Naples?
Seb. Claribell.
Ant. She that is Queene of Tunis: ſhe that dwels
Ten leagues beyond mans life: ſhe that from Naples
Can have no note, unleſſe the Sun were poſt:
The Man i'th Moone's too ſlow, till new-borne chinnes
Be rough, and Razor-able: She that from whom
We all were ſea-ſwallow'd, though ſome caſt againe,
(And by that deſtiny to performe an act,
Whereof, what's paſt in prologue; what to come
In yours, and my diſcharge.
Seb. What ſtuffe is this? How ſay you?
'Tis true, my brothers daughter's Queene of Tunis,
So is ſhe heyre of Naples, 'twixt which Regions
There is ſome ſpace.
Ant. A ſpace, whoſe ev'ry cubit
Seemes to cry out, how ſhall that Claribell
Meaſure us backe by Naples? keepe in Tunis,
And let Sebaſtian wake. Say, this were death
That now hath ſeiz'd them, why they were no worſe
Then now they are: There be that can rule Naples
As well as he that ſleepes: Lords, that can prate
As amply, and unneceſſarily
As this Gonzalo: I my ſelfe could make
A Chough of as deepe chat: O, that you bore
The minde that I do; what a ſleepe were this
For your advancement! Do you underſtand me?
Seb. Me thinkes I do.
Ant. And how do's your content
Tender your owne good fortune?
Seb. I remember
You did ſupplant your Brother Proſpero.
Ant. True:
And looke how well my Garments ſit upon me,
Much feater then before: My Brothers ſervants
Were then my fellowes, now they are my men.
Seb. But for your conſcience.
Ant. I Sir: where lies that? If 'twere a kybe
'Twould put me to my ſlipper: But I feele not
This Deity in my boſome: 'Twentie conſciences
That ſtand 'twixt me, and Millaine, candied be they,
And melt ere they molleſt: Heere lies your Brother,
No better then the earth he lyes upon,
If he were that which now hee's like (that's dead)
Whom I with this obedient ſteele (three inches of it)
Can lay to bed for ever: whiles you doing thus,
To the perpetuall winke for aye might put
This ancient morſell: this Sir Prudence, who
Should not upbraid our courſe: for all the reſt
They'l take ſuggeſtion, as a Cat laps milke,
They'l tell the clocke, to any buſineſſe that
We ſay befits the houre.
Seb. Thy caſe, deere Friend
Shall be my preſident: As thou got'ſt Millaine,
I'le come by Naples: Draw thy ſword, one ſtroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou paieſt,
And I the King ſhall love thee.
Ant. Draw together:
And when I reare my hand, do you the like
To fall it on Gonzalo.
Seb. O, but one word.

Enter Ariell with Muſicke and Song.

Ariel. My Maſter through his Art foreſees the danger
That you (his friend) are in, and ſends me forth
(For elſe his project dies) to keepe them living.

Sing in Gonzaloes eare.

While you here do ſnoaring lie,
Open-ey'd Conſpiracie
His time doth take:

If of Life you keepe a care,
Shake off ſlumber and beware.
Awake, awake.

Ant. Then let us both be ſodaine.

Gon. Now, good Angels preſerve the King.

Alo. Why how now hoa; awake? why are you drawn?
Wherefore this ghaſtly looking?

Gon. What's the matter?

Seb. Whiles we ſtood here ſecuring your repoſe,
(Even now) we heard a hollow burſt of bellowing
Like Buls, or rather Lyons, did't not wake you?
It ſtrooke mime eare moſt terribly.

Alo. I heard nothing.

Ant. O, 'twas a din to fright a Monſters eare;
To make an earthquake: ſure it was the roare
Of a whole heard of Lyons.

Alo. Heard you this Gonzalo?

Gon. Vpon mine honour, Sir, I heard a humming,
(And that a ſtrange one too) which did awake me:
I ſhak'd you Sir, and cride: as mine eyes opend,
I ſaw their weapous drawne: there was a noyſe,
That's verily: 'tis beſt we ſtand upon our guard;
Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Alo. Lead off this ground and let's make further ſearch
For my poore ſonne.

Gon. Heavens keepe him from theſe Beaſts:
For he is ſure i'th Iſland.

Alo. Lead away.

Ariell. Proſpero my Lord, ſhall know what I have (done.
So (King) goe ſafely on to ſeeke thy Son. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Caliban, with a burthen of Wood (a noyſe of Thunder heard.)

Cal. All the infections that the Sunne ſuckes up
From Bogs, Fens, Flats, on Proſper fall, and make him
By ynch-meale a diſeaſe: his Spirits heare me,
And yet I needes muſt curſe. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with Vrchyn-ſhewes, pitch me i'th mire,
Nor lead me like a fire-brand, in the darke
Out of my way, unleſſe he bid'em; but
For every trifle, are they ſet upon me,
Sometime like Apes, that moe and chatter at me,
And after bite me: then like Hedg-hogs, which
Lye tumbling in my barefoote way, and mount
Their pricks at my foote-fall: ſometime am I
All wound with Adders who with cloven tongues
Doe hiſſe me into madneſſe: Lo, now Lo,
Here comes a Spirit of his, and to torment me, Enter Trinculo.
For bringing wood in ſlowly: Ile fall flat,
Perchance he will not minde me.

Tri. Here's neither buſh, nor ſhrub to beare off any weather at all: and another ſtorme brewing, I heare it ſing 'ith winde: yond ſame blacke cloud, yond huge one, lookes like a foule bumbard that would ſhed his licquor: if it ſhould thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head: yond ſame cloud cannot chuſe but fall by paile-fuls. What have we here, a man, or a fiſh? dead or alive? a fiſh, he ſmels like a fiſh: a very ancient and fiſh-like ſmell: a kinde of, not of the neweſt poore-Iohn: a ſtrange fiſh: were I in England now (as once I was) and had but his fiſh painted; not a holyday-foole there but would give a peece of ſilver: there, would this monſter, make a man: any ſtrang e beaſt there, makes a man: when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame Begger; they will lay out ten to ſee a dead Indian: Leg'd like a man; and his Finnes like Armes; warme o' my troth: I doe now let looſe my opinion; hold it no longer; this is no fiſh, but an Iſlander, that hath lately ſuffered by a Thundebolt: Alas, the ſtorme is come againe: my beſt way is to creepe under his Gaberdine: there is no other ſhelter hereabout: Miſery acquaints a man with ſtrange bedfellowes: I will here ſhrowd till the dregges of the ſtorme be paſt.

Enter Stephano ſinging.

Ste. I ſhall no more to ſea to ſea, here ſhall I dye aſhore.
This is a very ſcurvy tune to ſing at a mans
Funerall: well, here's my comfort. Drinkes.

Sings. The Maſter, the Swabber, the Boate-ſwaine & I;
The Gunner, and his Mate
Lou'd Mall, Meg, and Marrian, and Margerie,
But none of us car'd for Kate.
For ſhe had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a Sayler goe hang:
She lov'd not the ſavour of Tar nor of Pitch,
Yet a Tailor might ſcratch her where ere ſhe did itch.
Then to Sea Boyes, and let her goe hang.
This is a ſcurvy tune too:
But here's my comfort. drinkes.

Cal. Doe not torment me: oh.

Ste. What's the matter?
Have we divels here?
Doe you put trickes upon's with Salvages, and Men of Inde? ha? I have not ſcap'd drowning, to bee afeard now of your foure legges: for it hath bin ſaid; as proper a man as ever went on foure leges, cannot make him give ground: and it ſhall be ſayd ſo againe, while Stephano breathes at noſtrils.

Cal. The Spirit torments me: oh.

Ste. This is ſome monſter of the Iſle, with foure legs; who hath got (as I take it) an ague: where the divell ſhould he learne our language? I will give him ſome reliefe if it be but for that: if I can recover him, and keepe him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a Preſent for any Emperour that ever trod on Neates-leather.

Cal. Doe not torment me 'prethee: I'le bring my wood home faſter.

Ste. He's in his fit now; and doe's not talke after the wiſeſt; hee ſhall taſte of my Bottle: if hee have never drunke wine afore, it will goe neere to remove his Fit: if I can recover him, and keepe him tame, I will not take too much for him; he ſhall pay for him that hath him, and that ſoundly.

Cal. Thou do'ſt me yet but little hurt; thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: Now Proſper workes upon thee.

Ste. Come on your wayes: open your mouth: here is that which will give language to you Cat; open your mouth; this will ſhake your ſhaking, I can tell you, and that ſoundly: you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps againe.

Tri. I ſhould know that voyce:
It ſhould be, ——

But he is dround; and theſe are divels; O defend me.

Ste. Foure legges and two voyces; a moſt delicate Monſter: his forward voyce now is to ſpeake of his friend; his backward voyce, is to utter foule ſpeeches, and to detract: if all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will helpe his Ague: Come: Amen, I will poure ſome in thy other mouth.

Tri. Stephano.

Ste. Doth thy other mouth call me? Mercy, mercy: This is a Divell and no Monſter: I will leave him, I have no long Spoone.

Tri. Stephano: if thou beeſt Stephano, touch me, and ſpeake to me: for I am Trinculo; be not afeard, thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beeſt Trinculo: come forth: I'le pull thee by the leſſer legges: if any be Trinculo's legges theſe are they: Thou art very Trinculo indeede: how cam'ſt thou to be the ſiege of this Moone-calfe? Can hee vent Trinculo's?

Tri. I tooke him to be kild with a thunder-ſtroke; but art thou not dround Stephano: I hope now thou art not dround: Is the ſtorme over-blowne? I hid me under the dead Moone-Calfes Gaberdine, for feare of the Storme: And art thou living Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitanes ſcap'd?

Ste. 'Prethee doe not turne mee about, my ſtomacke is not conſtant.

Cal. Theſe be fine things, and if they be not ſprights: that's a brave god, and beares Celeſtiall liquor: I will kneele to him.

Ste. How did'ſt thou ſcape?
How cam'ſt thou hither?
Sweare by this Bottle how thou cam'ſt hither: I eſcap'd upon a But of Sacke, which the Saylors heaved o're-boord, by this Bottle which I made of the barke of a Tree, with mine owne hands, ſince I was caſt a'-ſhore.

Cal. I'le ſweare upon that Bottle, to be thy true ſubject, for the liquor is not earthly:

Ste. Heere: ſweare then how thou eſcap'dſt.

Tri. Swom aſhore (man) like a Ducke; I can ſwim like a Ducke i'le be ſworne.

Ste. Here, kiſſe the booke.
Though thou canſt ſwim like a Ducke, thou art made life a Gooſe.

Tri. O Seephano, ha'ſt any more of this?

Ste. The whole But (man) my Cellar is in a rocke by th'ſea-ſide, where my wine is hid:
How now Moone-Calfe, how do's thine Ague?

Cal. Ha'ſt thou not dropt from heaven?

Ste. Out o'th Moone I doe aſſure thee. I was the Man ith' Moone when time was.

Cal. I have ſeene thee in her: and I doe adore thee:
My Miſtris ſhew'd me thee, and thy Dog, and thy Buſh.

Ste. Come ſweare to that: kiſſe the Booke: I will furniſh it anon with the new contents: Sweare.

Tri. By this good light, this is a very ſhallow Monſter: I afeard of him? a very ſhallow Monſter:
The Man ith' Moone?
A moſt poore credulous Monſter:
Well drawne Monſter, in good ſooth.

Cal. Ile ſhew thee every fertill ynch 'oth Iſle: and I will kiſſe thy foote: I prethee be my god.

Tri. By this light, a moſt perfidious, and drunken Monſter, when's god's aſleepe he'll rob his Bottle.

Cal. Ile kiſſe thy foot. Ile ſweare my ſelfe thy Subject.

Ste. Come on then: downe and ſweare.

Tri. I ſhall laugh my ſelfe to death at this puppi-headed Monſter: a moſt ſcurvie monſter: I could finde in my heart to beate him.

Ste. Come, kiſſe.

Tri. But that the poore Monſter's in drinke:
An abhominable Monſter.

Cal. I'le ſhew thee the beſt Springs: I'le plucke thee Berries: I'le fiſh for thee; and get thee wood enough.
A plague upon the Tyrant that I ſerve;
I'le beare him no more Stickes, but follow thee, thou wondrons man.

Tri. A moſt ridiculous Monſter, to make a wonder of a proore drunkard.

Cal. I prethee let me bring thee where Crabs grow; and I with my long nayles will digge thee pig-nuts; ſhow thee a Iayes neſt, and inſtruct thee how to ſnare the nimble Marmazet: Il'e bring thee to cluſtring Philbirts, and ſometimes Il'e get thee young Scamels from the Rocke: Wilt thou goe with me?

Cal. I pre'thee now lead the way without any more talking. Trinculo, the King, and all our company elſe being dround, wee will inherit here: Here; beare my Bottle: Felow Trinculo; we'll fill him by and by againe:

Caliban Sings drunkenly.

Farewell Maſter; farewell, farewell.

Tri. A howling Monſter: a drunken Monſter.

Cal. No more dams I'le make for fiſh,
Nor fetch in firing, at requiring,
Nor ſcrape trenchering, nor waſh diſh,
Ban' ban', Cacalyban
Has a new Maſter, get a new Man.

Freedome, high-day, high-day freedome, freedome high-day freedome.

Ste. O brave Monſter; lead the way. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Ferdinand (bearing a Log.)

Fer. There be ſome ſports are painfull; and their labour
Delight in them ſet off: Some kinds of baſeneſſe
Are nobly undergon; and moſt poore matters
Point to rich ends: this my meane Taske
Would be as heavie to me, as odious, but
The miſtris which I ſerue, quickens what's dead,
And makes my labours pleaſures: O ſhe is
Ten times more gentle, then her Father's crabbed;
And he's compos'd of harſhneſſe. I muſt remove
Some thouſands of theeſe Logs; and pile them up,
Vpon a ſore injunction; my ſweet Miſtris
Weepes when ſhe ſees me worke, and ſayes, ſuch baſenes
Had never like Executor: I forget:
But theſe ſweete thoughts, doe even refreſh my labours,
Moſt buſie leaſt, when I doe it. Enter Miranda and Proſpero.

Mir. Alas, now pray you
Worke not ſo hard: I would the lightening had
Burnt up thoſe Logs that thou art enjoyned to pile:
Pray ſet it downe, and reſt you: when this burnes
'Twill weepe for having wearied you: my Father
Is hard at ſtudy, pray now reſt your ſelfe,

He's

Hee's ſafe for theſe three houres.
Fer. O moſt deere miſtris,
The Sun will ſet before I ſhall diſcharge
What I muſt ſtrive to do.
Mir. If you'l ſit downe
Ile beare your Logges the while: pray give me that,
Ile carry it to the pile.
Fer. No precious Creature,
I had rather cracke my ſinewes, breake my backe,
Then you ſhould ſuch diſhonor undergoe,
While I ſit lazy by.
Mir. It would become me
As well as it do's you; and I ſhould do it
With much more eaſe: for my good will is to it,
And yours it is againſt.
Pro. Poore worme thou art infected,
This viſitation ſhewes it.
Mir. You looke wearily.
Fer. No, noble Miſtris, 'tis freſh morning with me
When you are by at night: I do beſeech you
Cheefely, that I might ſet it in my prayers,
What is your name?
Mir. Miranda, O my Father,
I have broke your heſt to ſay ſo.
Fer. Admir'd Miranda,
Indeede the top of Admiration, worth
What's deereſt to the world: full many a Lady
I have ey'd with beſt regard, and many a time
Th'harmony of their tongues, hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent eare: for ſeverall vertues
Have I like'd ſeverall women, never any
With ſo full ſoule, but ſome defect in her
Did quarrell with the nobleſt grace ſhe ow'd,
And put it to the foyle. But you, O you,
So perfect, and ſo peerleſſe, are created
Of everie Creatures beſt.
Mir. I do not know
One of my ſexe; no womans face remember,
Save from my glaſſe, mine owne: Nor have I ſeene
More that I may call men, then you good friend,
And my deere Father: how features are abroad
I am skilleſſe of; but by my modeſtie
(The jewell in my dower) I would not wiſh
Any Companion in the world but you:
Nor can imagination forme a ſhape
Beſides your ſelfe, to like of: but I prattle
Someting too wildely, and my Fathers precepts
I therein do forget.
Fer. I am, in my condition
A Prince (Miranda) I do thinke a King
(I would not ſo) and would no more endure
This woodden ſlaverie, then to ſuffer
The fleſh-flie blow my mouth: heare my ſoule ſpeake.
The verie inſtant that I ſaw you did
My heart flie to your ſervice, there reſides
To make me ſlave to it, and for your ſake
Am I this patient Logge-man.
Mir. Do you love me?
Far. O heaven; O earth, beare witneſſe to this ſound,
And crowne what I profeſſe with kinde event
If I ſpeake true: if hollowly, invert
What beſt is boaded me, to miſchiefe: I,
Beyond all limit of what elſe i'th world
Do love, prize, honor you.
Mir. I am a foole
To weepe at what I am glad of.
Pro. Faire encounter
Of two moſt rare affections: heavens raine grace
On that which breeds betweene 'em.
Fer. Wherefore weepe you?
Mir. At mine unworthyneſſe that dare not offer
What I deſire to give; and much leſſe take
What I ſhall die to want: But this is trifling,
And all the more it ſeekes to hide it ſelfe,
The bigger bulke it ſhewes. Hence baſhfull cunning,
And prompt me plaine and holy innocence.
I am your wife, if you will marrie me;
If not, Ile die your maid: to be your fellow
You may denie me; but Ile be your ſervant
Whether you will or no.
Fer. My Miſtris (deereſt)
And I thus humble ever.
Mir. My husband then?
Fer. I, with a heart ſo willing
As bondage ere of freedome: heere's my hand.
Mir. And mine, with my heart in't; and now farewell
Till halfe an houre hence.
Fer. A thouſand, thouſand. Exeunt.
Pro. So glad of this as they I cannot be;
Who are ſurpriz'd with all; but my rejoying
At nothing can be more: Ile to my booke,
For yet ere ſupper time, muſt I performe
Much buſineſſe appertaining. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo.

Ste. Tell not me, when the But is out we will drinke water, not a drop, before; therefore beare up, and boord em' Servant Monſter, drinke to me.

Trin. Servant Monſter? the folly of this Iland, they ſay there's but five upon this Iſle; we are three of them, if th' other two be brain'd like us, the State totters.

Ste. Drinke ſervant Monſter when I bid thee, thy eyes are almoſt ſet in thy heart.

Trin. Where ſhould they bee ſet elſe? hee were a brave Monſter indeede if they were ſet in his taile.

Ste. My man-Monſter hath drown'd his tongue in Sacke: for my part the Sea cannot drowne mee, I ſwam ere I could recover the ſhore, five and thirtie Leagues off and on, by this light thou ſhalt bee my Lieutenant Monſter, or my Standard.

Trin. Your Lieutenant if you liſt, hee's no ſtandard.

Ste. Wee'l not run Monſieur Monſter.

Trin. Nor go neither: but you'l lie like dogs, and yet ſay nothing neither.

Ste. Moone-calfe, ſpeake once in thy life, if thou beeſt a good Moone-calfe.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me licke thy ſhooe: Ile not ſerve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou lieſt moſt ignorant Monſter, I am in caſe to juſtle a Conſtable: why, thou deboſh'd Fiſh thou, was there ever man a Coward, that hath drunk ſo much Sacke as I to day? wilt thou tell me a monſtrous lie, being but halfe a Fiſh and halfe a Monſter?

Cal. Loe, how he mockes me, wilt thou let him my Lord?

Trin. Lord, quoth he? that a monſter ſhould be ſuch a Naturall?

Cal. Loe, loe againe: bite him to death I prethee.

Ste. Trinculo, keepe a good tongue in your head: If you prove a mutineere, the next Tree: the poore Monſter's my ſubject, and he ſhall not ſuffer indignity.

Cal. I thanke my noble Lord. Wilt thou be pleas'd to hearken once againe to the ſuite I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I: kneele and repeate it,
I will ſtand, and ſo ſhall Trinculo.

Enter Ariell inviſible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am ſubject to a Tirant,
A Sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me
Of the Iſland.

Ariell. Thou lyeſt.

Cal. Thou lyeſt, thou jeſting Monkey thou:
I would my valiant Maſter would deſtroy thee.
I do not lye.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in's tale,
By this hand, I will ſupplant ſome of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I ſaid nothing.

Ste. Mum then, and no more: proceed.

Cal. I ſay by Sorcery he got this Iſle
From me, he got it. If thy Greatneſſe will Revenge it on him, (for I know thou dar'ſt)
But this thing dare not.

Ste. That's moſt certaine.

Cal. Thou ſhalt be Lord of it, and Ile ſerve thee.

Ste. How now ſhall this be compaſt?
Canſt thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea my Lord, Ile yeeld him thee aſleepe,
Where thou maiſt knocke a naile into his head.

Ariell. Thou lieſt, thou canſt not.

Cal. What a py'de Ninnie's this? Thou ſcurvie patch:
I do beſeech thy Greatneſſe give him blowes,
And take his bottle from him: When that's gone,
He ſhall drinke nought but brine, for Ile not ſhew him
Where the quicke Freſhes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: Interrupt the Monſter one word further, and by this hand, Ile turne my mercie out o'doores, and make a Stockfiſh of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing:
Ile goe no further off.

Ste. Didſt thou not ſay he lyed?

Ariell. Thou lieſt.

Ste. Do I ſo? Take thou that,
As you like this, give me the lye another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie: Out o'your wittes, and hearing too?
A pox o'your bottle, this can Sacke and drinking doo:
A murren on your Monſter, and the divell take your fingers.

Cal. Ha, ha, ha.

Ste. Now forward with your Tale: prethee ſtand further off.

Cal. Beate him enough: after a little time
Ile beate him too.

Ste. Stand further: Come proceede.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a cuſtome with him
I'th afternoone to ſleepe: there thou mayſt braine him,
Having firſt ſeiz'd his bookes: Or with a logge
Batter his skull, or paunch him with a ſtake,
Or cut his wezand with thy knife. Remember
Firſt to poſſeſſe his Bookes; for without them
Hee's but a Sot, as I am; nor hath not
One Spirit to command: they all do hate him
As rootedly as I. Burne but his Bookes,
He ha's brave Vtenſils (for ſo he calles them)
Which when he ha's a houſe, hee'l decke withall.
And that moſt deepely to conſider, is
The beautie of his daughter: he himſelfe
Cals her a non-pareill: I never ſaw a woman
But onely Sycorax my Dam, and ſhe;
But ſhe as farre ſurpaſſeth Sycorax,
As great'ſt do's leaſt.

Ste. Is it ſo brave a Laſſe?

Cal. I Lord, ſhe will become thy bed, I warrant,
And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monſter, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be King and Queene, ſave our Graces: and Trinculo and thy ſelfe ſhall be Vice-royes:
Doſt thou like the plot Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand, I am ſorry I beate thee:
But while thou liv'ſt keepe a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this halfe houre will he be aſleepe,
Wilt thou deſtroy him then?

Ste. I on mine honour.

Ariell. This will I tell my Maſter.

Cal. Thou mak'ſt me merry: I am full of pleaſure,
Let us be jocond. Will you troule the Catch
You taught me but whileare?

Ste. At thy requeſt Monſter, I will do reaſon,
And reaſon: Come on Trinculo, let us ſing.

Sings.

Flout'em, and cout'em: and skowt'em, and flout'em,
Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

Ariell plaies the tune on a Tabor and Pipe.

Ste. What is this ſame?

Trin. This is the tune of our Catch, plaid by the picture of No-body.

Ste. If thou beeſt a man, ſhew thy ſelfe in thy likenes:
If thou beeſt a divell, take't as thou liſt.

Trin. O forgive me my ſinnes.

Ste. He that dyes payes all debts: I defie thee;
Mercy upon us.

Cal. Art thou affeard?

Ste. No Monſter, not I.

Cal. Be not affeard, the Iſle is full of noyſes,
Sounds, and ſweet aires, that give delight and hurt not:
Sometimes a thouſand twangling Inſtruments
Will hum about mine eares; and ſometimes voyces,
That if I then had wak'd after long ſleepe.
Will make me ſleepe againe; and then in dreaming,
The cloudes me thought would open, and ſhew riches
Ready to drop upon me, that when I wak'd
I cride to dreame againe.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdome to me,
Where I ſhall have my muſicke for nothing.

Cal. When Proſpero is deſtroy'd.

Ste. That ſhall be by and by:
I remember the ſtory.

Trin. The ſound is going away.
Lets follow it, and after do our worke.

Ste. Leade Monſter,
Wee'l follow: I would I could ſee this Taborer,
He layes it on.

Trin. Wilt come?
Ile follow Stephano. Exeunt.

Scena

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Alonſo, Sebaſtian, Anthonio, Gonzalo,
Adrian, Franciſco, &c.

Gon. By'r lakin, I can goe no further, Sir,
My old bones ake: here's a maze trod indeed
Through forth rights and Meanders: by your patience,
I needs muſt reſt me.

Alo. Old lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who, am my ſelfe attach'd with wearineſſe
To th' dulling of my ſpirits: ſit downe, and reſt:
Even here I will put off my hope, and keepe it
No longer for my flatterers: he is dround
Whom thus we ſtray to find, and the Sea mockes
Our fruſtrate ſearch on land: well: let him goe.

Ant. I am right glad, that he's ſo out of hope:
Doe not for one repulſe forgoe the purpoſe
That you reſolv'd t'effect.

Seb. The next advantage will we take throughly.

Ant. Let it be to night,
For now they are oppreſſ'd with travaile, they
Will not, nor cannot uſe ſuch viligance
As when they are freſh.

Solemne and ſtrange Muſicke: and Proſper on the top (inviſible.) Enter ſeverall ſtrange ſhapes, bringing in a Banket; and dance about it with gentle actions of ſalutations, and inviting the King, &c. to eate, they depart.

Seb. I ſay to night: no more.

Al. What harmony is this? my good friends, harke.

Gon. Marvellous ſweet Muſicke.

Alo. Give us kind keepers, heavens: what were theſe?

Seb. A living Drollery: now I will beleeve
That there are Vnicornes: that in Arabia
There is one Tree, the Phœnix throne, one Phœnix
At this houre reigning there.

Ant. Ile beleeve both:
And what do's elſe want credit, come to me
And Ile be ſworne 'tis true: Travellers nere did lye,
Though fooles at home condemne 'em.

Gon. If in Naples
I ſhould report this now, would they beleeve me?
If I ſhould ſay I ſaw ſuch Iſlanders.
(For certes, theſe are people of the Iſland)
Who though they are of monſtrous ſhape, yet note
Their manners are more gentle, kind then of
Our humane generation you ſhall find
Many, nay almoſt any.

Pro. Honeſt lord,
Thou haſt ſaid well: for ſome of you there preſent,
Are worſe then divels.

Alo. I cannot too much muſe
Such ſhapes, ſuch geſture, and ſuch ſound expreſſing
(Although they want the uſe of tongue) a kind
Of excellent dumbe diſcourſe.

Pro. Praiſe in departing.

Fre. They vaniſh'd ſtrangely.

Seb. No matter, ſince
They have left their Viands behind; for we have ſto- (mackes.
Wilt pleaſe you taſte of what is here?

Alo. Not I.

Gon. Faith Sir, you need not feare: when we were (Boyes
Who would beleeve that there were Mountayneeres,
Dew-lapt, like Buls, whoſe throats had hanging at'em
Wallets of fleſh? or that there were ſuch men
Whoſe heads ſtood in their breſts? which now we find
Each putter out of five for one, will bring us
Good warrant of.

Alo. I will ſtand to, and feede,
Although my laſt, no matter, ſince I feele
The beſt is paſt: brother: my lord, the Duke,
Stand too, and doe as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariell (like a Harpey) claps his wings upon the Table, and with a queint device the Banquet vaniſhes.

Ar. You are three men of ſinne, whom deſtiny
That hath to inſtrument this lower world,
And what is in't: the never ſurfeited Sea,
Hath cauſ'd to belch up you; and on this Iſland,
Where man doth not inhabit, you 'mongſt men,
Being moſt unfit to live: I have made you mad;
And even with ſuch like valour, men hang, and drowne
Their proper ſelves: you fooles, I and my fellowes
Are miniſters of Fate, the Elements
Of whom your ſwords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt-at-Stabs
Kill the ſtill cloſing waters, as diminiſh
One dowle that's in my plumbe: My fellow miniſters
Are like-invulnerable: if you could hurt,
Your ſwords are now too maſſie for your ſtrengths,
And will not be uplifted: but remember
(For that's my buſineſſe to you) that you three
From Millaine did ſupplant good Proſpero,
Expos'd unto the Sea (which hath requit it)
Him, and his innocent child: for which foule deed,
The Powers, delaying (not forgetting) have
Incens'd the Seas, and Shores; yea, all the Creatures
Againſt your peace: Thee of thy Sonne, Alonſo.
They have bereft; and doe pronounce by me
Lingring perdition (worſe then any death
Can be at once) ſhall ſtep, by ſtep attend
You, and your wayes, whoſe wraths to guard you from,
Which here, in this moſt deſolate Iſle, elſe fals
Vpon your heads, is nothing but hearts-ſorrow,
And a cleare life enſuing.

He vaniſhes in Thunder: then (to ſoft Muſicke.) Enter the ſhapes againe, and daunce (with mockes and mowes) and carrying out the Table.

Pro. Bravely the figure of this Harpy, haſt thou
Perform'd (my Ariel) a grace it had deuouring:
Of my Inſtruction, haſt thou nothing bated
In what thou had'ſt to ſay: ſo with good life
And obſervation ſtrange, my meaner miniſters
Their ſeverall kinds have done: my high charmes worke
And theſe (mine enemies) are all knit up
In their diſtractions: they now are in my powre;
And in theſe fits, I leave them, while I viſit
Yong Ferdinand (whom they ſuppoſe is droun'd)
And his, and mine lo'vd darling.

Gon. I'th name of ſomething holy, Sir, why ſtand you
In this ſtrange ſtare?

Alo. O, it is monſtrous: monſtrous:
Me thought the billowes ſpoke, and told me of it,
The windes did ſing it to me: and the Thunder
(That deepe and dreadfull Organ-Pipe) pronounc'd
The name of Proſper: it did baſe my Treſpaſſe,
Therefore my Sonne i'th Ooze is bedded; and
I'le ſeeke him deeper then ere plummet ſounded,
And with him there lye mudded. Exit.

Seb. But one feend at a time,
Ile fight their Legions ore.

Ant. Ile be thy ſecond. Exeunt.
Gont. All three of them are deſperate: their great guilt
(Like poyſon given to worke a great time after)
Now gins to bite the ſpirits; I doe beſeech you
(That are of ſuppler joynts) follow them ſwiftly,
And hinder them from what this extaſie
May now provoke them to.
Ad. Follow, I pray you. Exeunt omnes

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Proſpero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I have too auſterely puniſh'd you,
Your compenſation makes amends, for I
Have given you here, a third of mine owne life,
Or that for which I live: who, once againe
I tender to thy hand: All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy loue, and thou
Haſt ſtrangely ſtood the reſt: here, afore heaven
I ratifie this my rich gift: O Ferdinand,
Doe not ſmile at me, that I boaſt her off,
For thou ſhalt find ſhe will out-ſtrip all praiſe
And make it halt, behind her.
Fer. I doe beleeve it
Againſt an Oracle.
Pro. Then, as my gueſt, and thine owne acquiſition
Worthily purchaſ'd, take my daughter:
If thou do'ſt breake her Virgin-knot, before
All ſanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy right, be miniſtred,
No ſweet aſperſion ſhall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barraine hate,
Sower-ey'd diſdaine, and diſcord ſhall beſtrew
The union of your bed, with weeds ſo loathly
That you ſhall hate it both: Therefore take heed,
As Hymens Lampes ſhall light you.
Fer. As I hope
For quiet dayes, faire Iſſue, and long life,
With ſuch love, as 'tis now the murkieſt den,
The moſt opportune place, the ſtrongſt ſuggeſtion,
Our worſer Genius can, ſhall never melt
Mine honor into luſt, to take away
The edge of that dayes celebration,
When I ſhall thinke, or Phœbus ſteeds are founderd,
Or Night kept chain'd below.
Pro. Fairely ſpoke;
Sit then, and talke with her, ſhe is thine owne;
What Ariell; my induſtrious ſervant Ariel. Enter Ariel.
Ari. What would my potent maſter? here I am.
Pro. Thou, and thy meaner fellowes, your laſt ſervice
Did worthily performe: and I muſt uſe you
In ſuch another tricke: goe bring the rabble
(Ore whom I give thee powre) here, to this place:
Incite them to quicke motion, for I muſt
Beſtow upon the eyes of this yong couple
Some vanity of mine Art: it is my promiſe,
And they expect it from me.
Ari. Preſently?
Pro. I: with a twincke.
Ari. Before you can ſay come, and goe,
And breathe twice; and cry, ſo, ſo:
Each one tripping on his Toe,
Will be here with mop, and mowe.
Doe you love me Maſter? no?
Pro. Dearely, my delicate Ariell: doe not approach
Till thou do'ſt heare me call.
Ari. Well: I conceive. Exit.
Pro. Looke thou be true: doe not give dalliance
Too much the raigne: the ſtrongeſt oathes, are ſtraw
To th'fire ith' blood: be more abſtemious,
Or elſe good night your vow.
Fer. I warrant you, Sir,
The white cold virgin Snow, upon my heart
Abates the ardour of my Liver.
Pro. Well.
Now come my Ariell, bring a Corolary,
Rather then want a ſpirit; appeare, and pertly. Soft muſick.
No tongue: all eyes: be ſilent. Enter Iris.
Ir. Ceres, moſt bounteous Lady, the rich Leas
Of Wheate, Rye, Barley, Fetches, Oates, and Peaſe;
Thy Turphy Mountaines, where live nibling Sheepe,
And flat Medes thetchd with Stover, them to keepe:
Thy bankes with pioned, and twilled brims,
Which ſpungy Aprill, at thy heſt betrims;
To make cold Nimphes chaſt crownes; and thy broome-
Whoſe ſhadow the diſmiſſed Batchelor loves, (groves;
Being laſſe-lorne: thy pole-clipt vineyard:
And thy Sea-marge ſterile, and rockey-hard,
Where thou thy ſelfe do'ſt ayre, the Queene o'th Skie,
Whoſe watry Arch, and meſſenger, am I,
Bids thee leave theſe, and with her ſoveraigne grace, Iuno
Here on this graſſe-plot, in this very place (deſcends.
To come, and ſport: here Peacockes flye amaine:
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertaine. Enter Ceres.
Cer. Haile, many coloured Meſſenger, that nere
Do'ſt diſobey the wife of Iupiter:
Who, with thy ſaffron wings, upon my flowres
Diffuſeſt hony drops, refreſhing ſhowres,
And with each end of thy blew bowe do'ſt crowne
My bosky acres, and my unſhrubd downe,
Rich ſcarph to my proud earth: why hath thy Queene
Summond me hither, to this ſhort graſ'd Greene?
Ir. A contract of true Love, to celebrate,
And ſome donation freely to eſtate
On the bleſs'd Lovers.
Cer. Tell me heavenly Bowe,
If Venus or her ſonne, as thou do'ſt know,
Doe now attend the Queene? ſince they did plot
The meanes, that dusky Dis, my daughter got:
Her, and her blind-Boyes ſcandald company,
I have forſworne.
Ir. Of her ſociety
Be not afraid: I met her deity
Cutting the clouds towards Paphos: and her ſon
Dove-drawne with her: here thought they to have done
Some wanton charme, upon this man and maide,
Whoſe vowes are, that no bed-right ſhall be paid
Till Hymens Torch be lighted: but in vaine,
Marſes hot Minion is returnd againe,
Her waſpiſh headed ſonne, has broke his arrowes,
Swears he will ſhoot no more, but play with Sparrowes,
And be a boy right out.
Cer. Higheſt Queene of State,
Great Iuno comes, I know her by her gate.
Iu. How do's my bounteous ſiſter? goe with me
To bleſſe this twaine, that they may proſperous be,
And honord in their iſſue. They Sing.

Iu. Honor, riches, marriage, bleſſing,
Long continuance, and encreaſing,
Hourely joyes, be ſtill upon you,

Iuno ſings her bleſſings on you.
Earths increaſe, and foyzon plenty,
Barnes, and Garners, never empty.
Vines, with cluſtring bunches growing,
Plants, with goodly burthen bowing:
Spring come to you at the fartheſt,
In the very end of Harveſt.
Scarcity and want ſhall ſhun you,
Ceres bleſſing ſo is on you.

Fer. This is a moſt majeſticke viſion, and Harmonious charmingly: may I be bold
To thinke theſe ſpirits?

Pro. Spirits, which by mine Art
I have from all their confines call'd to enact
My preſent fancies.

Fer. Let me live here ever,
So rare a wondred father, and a wiſe,
Makes this place Paradiſe.

Pro. Sweet now, ſilence:
Iuno and Ceres whiſper ſeriouſly,
There's ſomething elſe to doe: huſh, and be mute
Or elſe our ſpell is mar'd.

Iuno and Ceres whiſper, and ſend Iris on employment.

Iris. You Nimphs cald Nayades of the windring brooks
With your ſedg'd crownes, and ever-harmeleſſe lookes,
Leave your criſpe channels, and on this greene-land
Anſwer your ſummons, Iuno do's command
Come temperate Nimphes, and helpe to celebrate
A Contract of true Love: be not too late.

Enter certaines Nimphes.

You Sun-burn'd Sicklemen of Auguſt weary,
Come hether from the furrow, and be merry,
Make holly day: your Rye-ſtraw hats put on,
And theſe freſh Nimphes encounter every one
In Country footing.

Enter certaine Reapers (properly habited:) they joyne with the Nimphes, in a gracefull dance, towards the end whereof, Proſpero ſtarts ſodainly and ſpeakes, after which to a ſtrange hollow and confuſed noyſe, they heavily vaniſh.

Pro. I had forgot that foule conſpiracy
Of the beaſt Calliban, and his confederates
Againſt my life: the minute of their plot
Is almoſt come: Well done, avoyd: no more.

Fer. This is ſtrange: your father's in ſome paſſion
That workes him ſtrongly.

Mir. Never till this day
Saw I him touch'd with anger, ſo diſtemper'd.

Pro. You doe looke (my ſon) in a mov'd ſort,
As if you were diſmaid: be cheerefull Sir,
Our Revels now are ended: Theſe our actors,
(As I foretold you) were all Spirits, and
Are melted into Ayre, into thin Ayre,
And like the baſeleſſe fabricke of their viſion
The Clowd-capt Towres, the gorgeous Pallaces,
The ſolemne Temples, the great Globe it ſelfe,
Yea, all which it inherit, ſhall diſſolve,
And like this inſubſtantiall Pageant faded
Leave not a racke behind: we are ſuch ſtuffe
As dreames are made on; and our little life
Is rounded with a ſleepe: Sir, I am vext,
Beare with my weakeneſſe, my old braine is troubled:
Be not diſturb'd with my infirmity,
If you be pleaſ'd, retire into my Cell,
And there repoſe, a turne or two, Ile walke
To ſtill my beating mind.

Fer. Mir. We wiſh your peace. Exit.

Pro. Come with a thought; I thanke thee Ariell: come.

Enter Ariell.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to, what's thy pleaſure?

Pro. Spirit: we muſt prepare to meet with Caliban.

Ari. I my Commander, when I preſented Ceres
I thought to have told thee of it, but I fear'd
Leaſt I might anger thee.

Pro. Say againe, where didſt thou leave theſe varlots?

Ar. I told you Sir, they were red-hot with drinking,
So full of valour, that they ſmote the ayre
For breathing in their faces: beate the ground
For kiſſing of their feete; yet alwayes bending
Towards their project: then I beate my Tabor,
At which like unback't colts they prickt their eares,
Advanc'd their eye lids, lifted up their noſes
As they ſmelt muſicke, ſo I charm'd their eares
That Calfe-like, they my lowing follow'd, through
Tooth'd briars, ſharpe firzes, pricking goſſe, and thornes,
Which entred their fraile ſhins: at laſt I left them
I'th' filthy mantled poole beyond you Cell,
There dancing up to th'chins, that the fowle Lake
Ore-ſtunck their feet.

Pro. This was well done (my bird)
Thy ſhape inviſible retaine thou ſtill:
The trumpery in my houſe, goe bring it hither
For ſtale to catch theſe theeves.

Ariel I goe, I goe. Exit.

Pro. A devill, a borne-devill, on whoſe nature
Nurture can never ſticke: on whom my paines
Humanely taken, all, all loſt, quite loſt,
And, as with age, his body uglier growes,
So his minde cankers: I will plague them all,
Even to roaring: Come, hang on them this line.

Enter Ariel, loaden with gliſtering apparell, &c. Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you tread ſoftly, that the blind Mole may not heare a foot fall: we now are neere his Cell.

Ste. Monſter, your Fairy, which you ſay is a harmles (Fairy,
Has done little better then plaid the Iacke with us.

Trin. Monſter, I doe ſmell all horſe-piſſe, at which
My noſe is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Doe you heare Monſter: If I ſhould
Take a diſpleaſure againſt you: Looke you.

Trin. Thou wert but a loſt Monſter.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy favour ſtill,
Be patient, for the prize Ile bring thee to
Shall hudwinke this miſchance: therefore ſpeake ſoftly,
All's huſht as midnight yet.

Trin. I, but to loſe our bottles in the Poole.

Ste. There is not onely diſgrace and diſhonor in that (Monſter) but an infinite loſſe.

Trin. That's more to me then my wetting:
Yet this is your harmeleſſe Fairy, Monſter.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle,
Though I be o're eares for my labour.

Cal. Prethee (my King) be quiet. Seeſt thou heere
This is the mouth o'th Cell: no noiſe, and enter:
Doe that good miſchiefe, which may make this Iſland
Thine owne for ever, and I thy Caliban
For aye thy foot-licker.

Ste. Give me thy hand,
I doe begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O King Stephano, O Peere: O worthy Stephano,
Looke what a wardrobe heere is for thee.

Cal. Let it alone thou foole, it is but traſh.

Tri. Oh, ho, Monſter: we know what belongs to a frippery, O King Stephano.

Ste. Put off that gowne (Trinculo) by this hand Ile have that gowne.

Tri. Thy grace ſhall have it. (meane

Cal. The dropſie drowne this foole, what doe you
To doate thus on ſuch luggage? let's alone
And doe the murther firſt: if he awake,
From too to crowne hee'l fill our skins with pinches,
Make us ſtrange ſtuffe.

Ste. Be you quiet (Monſter) Miſtris line, is not this my Ierkin? now is the Ierkin under the line: now Ierkin you are like to loſe your haire, and prove a bald Ierkin.

Trin. Doe, doe; we ſteale by lyne and levell, and't like your grace.

Ste. I thanke thee for that jeſt; heer's a garment for't: Wit ſhall not goe un-rewarded while I am King of this Country: Steale by line and levell, is an excellent paſſe of pate: there's another garment for't.

Tri. Monſter, come put ſome Lime upon your fingers, and away with the reſt.

Cal. I will have done on't: we ſhall loſe our time,
And all be turn'd to Barnacles, or to Apes
With foreheads villanous low.

Ste. Monſter, lay to your fingers: helpe to beare this away, where my hogſhead of wine is, or Ile turne you out of my kingdome: goe to, carry this.

Tri. And this.

Ste. I, and this.

A noyſe of Hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits in ſhape of Dogs, and Hounds, hunting them about: Proſpero and Ariel ſetting them on.

Pro. Hey Mountaine, hey.

Ari. Silver: there it goes, Silver.

Pro. Fury, Fury: there Tyrant, there: harke, harke.
Goe, charge my Goblins that thou grinde their joynts
With dry Convultions, ſhorten up their ſinewes
With aged Cramps, and more pinch-ſpotted make them,
Then Pard, or Cat o' Mountaine.

Ari. Harke, they rore.

Pro. Let them be hunted ſoundly: At this houre
Lies at my mercy all mine enemies:
Shortly ſhall all my labours end, and thou
Shalt have the ayre at freedome: for a little
Follow, and doe me ſervice. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Proſpero (in his Magicke robes) and Ariel.

Pro. Now do's my Project gather to a head:
My charmes cracke not: my ſpirits obey, and time
Goes upright with his carriage: how's the day?

Ar. On the ſixt houre, at which time, my lord
You ſaid our worke ſhould ceaſe.

Pro. I did ſay ſo,
When firſt I rais'd the Tempeſt: ſay my ſpirit,
How fares the King, and's followers?

Ar. Confin'd together
In the ſame faſhion, as you gave in charge,
Iuſt as you left them; all priſoners Sir
In the Line-grove which weather-fends your Cell,
They cannot boudge till your releaſe: The King,
His brother, and yours, abide all three diſtracted,
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brim full of ſorrow, and diſmay: but chiefely
Him that you term'd Sir, the good old lord Gonzalo,
His teares run downe his beard like winters drops
From eaves of reeds: your charme ſo ſtrongly works'em
That if you now beheld them, your affections
Would become tender.

Pro. Doſt thou thinke ſo, ſpirit?

Ar. Mine would, Sir, were I humane.

Pro. And mine ſhall.
Haſt thou (which art but ayre) a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions, and ſhall not my ſelfe,
One of their kind, that relliſh all as ſharpely,
Paſſion as they, be kindlier mou'd then thou art?
Though with their high wrongs I am ſtrook to th' quick,
Yet, with my nobler reaſon, gainſt my fury
Doe I take part: the rarer Action is
In vertue, then in vengeance: they, being penitent,
The ſole drift of my purpoſe doth extend
Not a frowne further: Goe, releaſe them Ariel,
My Charmes Ile breake, their ſences Ile reſtore,
And they ſhall be themſelves.

Ar. Ile fetch them, Sir. Exit.

Pro. Ye Elves of hils, brookes, ſtanding lakes and
And ye, that on the ſands with printleſſe foote (groves,
Doe chaſe the ebbing-Neptune, and doe flye him
When he comes backe: you demy-Puppets, that
By Moone-ſhine doe the greene ſowre Ringlets make,
Whereof the Ewe not bites: and you, whoſe paſtime
Is to make midnight-Muſhrumps, that rejoyce
To heare the ſolemne Curfewe, by whoſe ayde
(Weake Maſters though ye be) I have bedymn'd
The Noone-tide Sun, call'd forth the mutenous winds,
And twixt the greene Sea, and the azur'd vault
Set roaring warre: To the dread ratling Thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Ioves ſtout Oke
With his owne Bolt: The ſtrong baſſ'd promontory
Have I made ſhake, and by the ſpurs pluckt up
The Pyne, and Cedar. Graves at my command
Have wak'd their ſleepers, op'd, and let'em forth
By my ſo potent Art. But this rough Magicke
I heere abjure: and when I have requir'd
Some heavenly Muſicke (which even now I doe)
To worke mine end upon their ſences, that
This Ayry-charme is for, Ile breake my ſtaffe,
Bury it certaine fadomes in the earth,
And deeper then did ever Plummet ſound
Ile drowne my booke. Solemne muſicke.

Heere enters Ariel before: Then Alonſo with a franticke geſture, attended by Gonzalo. Sebaſtian and Anthonio in like manner attended by Adrian and Franciſco: They all enter the circle which Proſpero had made, and there ſtand charm'd: which Proſpero obſerving, ſpeakes.

A ſolemne Ayre, and the beſt comforter,
To an unſetled fancy, Cure thy braines
(Now uſeleſſe) boile within thy skull: there ſtand
For you are Spell-ſtopt.
Holy Gonzalo, Honorable man,
Mine eyes ev'n ſociable to the ſhew of thine
Fall fellowly drops: The charme diſſolves apace,
And as the morning ſteales upon the night
(Melting the darkeneſſe) ſo their riſing ſences
Begin to chace the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their cleerer reaſon. O good Gonzalo
My true preſerver, and a loyall Sir,
To him thou follow'ſt; I will pay thy graces
Home both in word, and deed: Moſt cruelly

Didſt

Did thou Alonſo, uſe me, and my daughter :
Thy brother was a furtherer in the Aƈt,
Thou art pinch'd for't now Sebaſtian. Fleſh, and bloud,
You, brother mine, that entertain'd ambition,
Expell'd remorſe, and nature, whom, with Sebaſtian
(Whoſe inward pinches therefore are moſt ſtrong)
Would heere have kill'd your King : I doe forgive thee,
Vnnaturall though thou art : their underſtanding
Begins to ſwell, and the approaching tide
Will ſhortly fill the reaſonable ſhore
That now ly foule, and muddy : not one of them
That yet lookes on me, or would know me : Ariell,
Fetch me the Hat, and Rapier in my Cell,
I will diſcaſe me, and my ſelfe preſent
As I was ſometime Millaine : quickly ſpirit;
Thou ſhalt ere long be free.

Ariell ſings, and helps to attire him.

Where the Bee ſucks, there ſuck I,
In a Cowſlips bell, I lye,
There I cowch when Owles doe cry,
On the Batts back e I doe flye
after Sommer merrily.
Merrily, merrily, ſhall I live now,
Under the bloſſem that hangs on the Bow.

Pro. Why that's my dainty Ariell : I ſhall miſſe thee,
But yet thou ſhalt have freedome : ſo, ſo, ſo.
To the Kings ſhip, inviſible as thou art,
There ſhalt thou find the Marriners aſleepe
Vnder the Hatches: the Maſter and the Boat-ſwaine
Being awake, enforce them to this place ;
And preſently, I prethee.

Ari. I drinke the ayre before me, and returne
Or ere your pulſe twice beate. Exit.

Gon. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabits heere : ſome heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearefull Country.

Pro. Behold Sir King
The wronged Duke of Millaine, Proſpero :
For more aſſurance that a living Prince
Do's now ſpeake to thee, I embrace thy body,
And to thee, and thy Company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alo. Where thou bee'ſt he or no,
Or ſome inchanted trifle to abuſe me,
(As late I have beene) I not know : thy Pulſe
Beats as of fleſh, and blood : and ſince I ſaw thee,
Th'affliction of my mind amends, with which
I feare a madneſſe held me : this muſt crave
(And if this be at all) a moſt ſtrange ſtory.
Thy Dukedome I reſigne, and doe entreat
Thou pardon me my wrongs : but how ſhould Proſpero
Be living, and be heere ?

Pro. Firſt, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whoſe honor cannot
Be meaſur'd, or confin'd.

Gon. Whether this be,
Or be not, Ile not ſweare.

Pro. You doe yet taſte
Some ſubtleties o'th' Iſle, that will nor let you
Beleeve things certaine : Wellcome, my friends all,
But you, my brace of lords, were I ſo minded
I heere could plucke his highneſſe frowne upon you
And juſtifie you Traitors : at this time
I will tell no tales.

Seb. The divell ſpeakes in him :

Pro. No.
For you (moſt wicked Sir) whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I doe forgive
Thy rankeſt fault ; all of them : and require
My Dukedome of thee, which, perforce I know
Thou muſt reſtore.

Alo. If thou beeſt Proſpero,
Give us particulars of thy preſervation,
How thou haſt met us heere, who three howres ſince
Were wrackt upon this ſhore ? where I have loſt,
(How ſharpe the point of this remembrance is)
My deere ſonne Ferdinand,

Pro. I am woe for't, Sir.

Alo. Irreparable is the loſſe, and patience
Sayes, it is paſt her cure.

Pro. I rather thinke
You have not ſought her helpe, of whoſe ſoft grace
For the like loſſe, I have her ſoveraigne ayd,
And reſt my ſelfe content.

Alo. You the like loſſe ?

Pro. As great to me, as late, and ſupportable
To make the deere loſſe, have I meanes much weaker
Then you may call to comfort you; for I
Have loſt my daughter.

Alo. A daughter ?
Oh heavens, that they were living both in Naples
The King and Queene there, that they were, I wiſh
My ſelfe were mudded in that oo-zy bed
Where my ſonne lies: when did you loſe your daughter?

Pro. In this laſt Tempeſt. I perceive theſe lords,
At this encounter doe ſo much admire,
That they devoure their reaſon, and ſcare thinke
Their eie doe offices of truth : their words
Are naturall breath : but howſoevere you have
Beene juſtled from your ſences, know for certaine
That I am Proſpero, and that very Duke
Which was thruſt forth of Millaine, who moſt ſtrangely
Vpon this ſhore (where you were wrackt) was landed
To be the Lord on't : no more yet of this,
For 'tis a Chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a break-faſt, nor
Befitting this firſt meeting : Welcome, Sir ;
This Cell's my Court : heere have I few attendants,
And Subjects none abroad : pray you looke in :
My Dukedome ſince you have given me againe,
I will requite you with as good a thing,
At leaſt bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much, as me my Dukedome.

Here Proſpero diſcovers Ferdinand and Miranda, playing at Cheſſe.

Mir. Sweet lord, you play me falſe.

Fer. No my deareſt love,
I would not for the world.

Mir. Yes, for a ſcore of Kingdomes, you ſhould (wrangle,
And I would call it faire play.

Alo. If this prove
A viſion of the Iſland, one deere Sonne
Shall I twice looſe.

Seb. A moſt high miracle.

Fer. Though the Seas threaten they are mercifull,
I have curſ'd them without cauſe.

Alo. Now all the bleſſings
Of a glad father, compaſſe thee about :
Ariſe, and ſay how thou cam'ſt heere.

Mir. O wonder !
How many goodly creatures are there heere ?
How beauteous makind is ? O brave new world

That has ſuch people in't.
Pro. 'Tis new to thee. (play?
Alo. What is this Maid, with whom thou was't at
Your eld'ſt acquaintance cannot be three houres:
Is ſhe the goddeſſe that hath ſever'd us,
And brought us thus together?
Fer. Sir, ſhe is mortall;
But by immortall providence, ſhe's mine;
I choſe her when I could not aske my Father
For his adviſe: nor thought I had one: She
Is daughter to this famous Duke of Millaine,
Of whom, ſo often I have heard renowne,
But never ſaw before: of whom I have
Receiv'd a ſecond life; and ſecond Father
This Lady makes him to me.
Alo. I am hers.
But O, how odly will it ſound, that I
Muſt aske my child forgiveneſſe?
Pro. There Sir ſtop,
Let us not burthen our remembrances, with
A heavineſſe that's gone.
Gon. I have inly wept,
Or ſhould have ſpoke ere this: looke downe you gods
And on this couple drop a bleſſed crowne;
For it is you, that have chalk'd forth the way
Which brought us hither.
Alo. I ſay Amen, Gonzalo.
Gon. Was Millaine thruſt from Millaine, that his iſſue
Should become Kings of Naples? O rejoyce
Beyond a common joy, and ſet it downe
With gold on laſting Pillers: In one voyage
Did Claribell her husband find at Tunis,
And Ferdinand her brother, found a wife,
Where he himſelfe was loſt: Proſpero, his Dukedome
In a poore Iſle: and all of us, our ſelves,
When no man was his owne.
Alo. Give me your hands:
Let griefe and ſorrow ſtill embrace his heart,
That doth not wiſh you joy.
Gon. Be it ſo, Amen.

Enter Ariell, with the Maſter and Boatſwaine, amazedly following.

O looke Sir, looke Sir, here is more of us:
I propheſi'd, if a Gallowes were on Land
This fellow could not drowne: Now blaſphemy,
That ſwear'ſt grace ore-boord, not an oath on ſhore,
Haſt thou no mouth by land?
What is the newes?
Bot. The beſt newes is, that we have ſafely found
Our King, and company: The next: our Ship,
Which but three glaſſes ſince, we gave out ſplit,
Is tyte, and yare, and bravely rig'd, as when
We firſt put out to Sea.
Ar. Sir, all this ſervice
Have I done ſince I went.
Pro. My trickſey ſpirit.
Alo. Theſe are not naturall events, they ſtrengthen
From ſtrange, to ſtranger: ſay, how came you hither?
Bot. If I did thinke, Sir, I were well awake,
I'ld ſtrive to tell you: we were dead of ſleepe,
And (how we know not) all clapt under hatches,
Where, but even now, with ſtrange, and ſeverall noyſes
Of roring, ſhreeking, howling, gingling chaines,
And mo diverſity of ſounds, all horrible,
We were awak'd: ſtraight way, at liberty;
Where we, in all our trim, freſhly beheld
Our royall, good, and gallant Ship: our Maſter
Capring to eye her: on a trice, ſo pleaſe you,
Even in a dreame, were we divided from them,
And were brought moaping hither.
Ar. Was't well done?
Pro. Bravely (my diligence) thou ſhalt be free.
Ar. This is as ſtrange a Maze, as ere men trod,
And there is in this buſineſſe, more than nature
Was ever conduct of: ſome Oracle
Muſt rectifie our knowledge.
Pro. Sir, my Leige,
Doe not infeſt your mind, with beating on
The ſtrangeneſſe of this buſineſſe, at pickt leiſure
(Which ſhall be ſhortly ſingle) I'le reſolve you,
(Which to you ſhall ſeeme probable) of every
Theſe happend accidents: till when, be cheerefull
And thinke of each thing well: Come hither ſpirit,
Set Caliban, and his companions free:
Vntye the Spell: How fares my gracious Sir?
There are yet miſſing of your Company
Some few odde Lads, that you remember not,

Enter Ariell, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo in their ſtolne Apparell.

Ste. Every man ſhift for all the reſt, and let
No man take care for himſelfe; for all is
But fortune: Coragio Bully-Monſter Coragio.
Tri. If theſe be true ſpies which I weare in my head,
Here's a goodly ſight.
Cal. O Setebos, theſe be brave ſpirits indeed:
How fine my Maſter is? I am afraid
He will chaſtiſe me.
Seb. Ha, ha:
What things are theſe my lord Anthonio?
Will money buy em?
Ant. Very like: one of them
Is a plaine Fiſh, and no doubt marketable,
Pro. Marke but the badges of theſe men, my lords,
Then ſay if they be true: This miſhapen knaue;
His Mother was a Witch, and one ſo ſtrong
That could controle the Moone; make flowes, and ebs,
And deale in her command, without her power:
Theſe three have robd me, and this demy-divell;
(For he's a baſtard one) had plotted with them
To take my life: two of theſe Fellowes, you
Muſt know, and owne, this Thing of darkeneſſe, I Acknowledge mine.
Cal. I ſhall be pincht to death.
Alo. Is not this Stephano, my drunken Butler?
Seb. He is drunke now;
Where had he wine?
Alo. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where ſhould they Find this grand Liquor that hath gilded 'em?
How cam'ſt thou in this pickle?
Tri. I have beene in ſuch a pickle ſince I ſaw you laſt,
That I feare me will never out of my bones:
I ſhall not feare flye-blowing.
Seb. Why how now Stephano?
Ste. O touch me not, I am not Stephano, but a Cramp.
Pro. You'ld be King o'the Iſle, Sirha?
Ste. I ſhould have beene a ſore one then.
Alo. This is a ſtrange thing as ere I look'd on.
Pro. He is as diſproportion'd in his manners
As in his ſhape: Goe Sirha, to my Cell,
Take with you your Companions: as you looke
To have my pardon, trim it handſomely.
Cal. I that I will: and Ile be wiſe hereafter,

And ſeeke for grace: what a thrice double Aſſe
Was I to take this drunkard for a god?
And worſhip this dull foole?
Pro. Goe to, away. (found it.
Alo. Hence, and beſtow your luggage where you
Seb. Or ſtole it rather.
Pro. Sir, I invite your Highneſſe and your traine,
To my poore Cell: where you ſhall take your reſt
For this one night, which part of it, Ile waſte
With ſuch diſcourſe, as I not doubt, ſhall make it
Goe quicke away: The ſtory of my life,
And the particular accidents, gone by
Since I came to this Iſle: And in the morne
Ile bring you to your ſhip, and ſo to Naples,
Where I have hope to ſee the Nuptials
Of theſe our deare-belov'd, ſolemnized,
And thence retire me to my Millaine, where
Every third thought ſhall be my grave.
Alo. I long
To heare the ſtory of your life; which muſt
Take the eare ſtrangely.
Pro. Ile deliver all,
And promiſe you calme Seas, auſpicious gales,
And ſaile, ſo expeditious, that ſhall catch
Your Royall fleet farre off: My Ariel (Chicke)
That is thy charge: then to the Elements
Be free, and fare thou well: pleaſe you draw neare.
Exeunt omnes.

EPILOGVE
ſpoken by Proſpero.

Now my Charmes are all ore-throwne,
And what ſtrength I have's mine owne,
Which is moſt faint: now tis true
I muſt be heere confinde by you,
Or ſent to Naples: Let me not
Since I have my Dukedome got,
And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell
In this bare Iſland, by your Spell,
But releaſe me from my bands
With the helpe of your good hands:
Gentle breath of yours, my Sailes
Muſt fill, or elſe my project failes,
Which was to pleaſe: Now I want
Spirits to enforce: Art to enchant,
And my ending is deſpaire,
Vnleſſe I be reliev'd by prayer,
Which pierces ſo, that it aſſaults
Mercy it ſelfe, and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardon'd be,
Let your Indulgence ſet me free. Exit.

FINIS.

THE
Tvvo Gentlemen of Verona.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Valentine, Protheus, and Speed.

Valentine.

CEaſe to perſwade, my loving Protheus;
Home-keeping youth, have ever homely wits,
Wer't not affection chaines thy tender dayes,
To the ſweet glances of thy honour'd Love,
I rather would entreat thy company,
To ſee the wonders of the world abroad,
Then (living dully ſluggardiz'd at home)
Weare out thy youth with ſhapeleſſe idleneſſe.
But ſince thou lov'ſt; love ſtill, and thrive therein,
Even as I would, when I to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine adieu,
Thinke on thy Protheus, when thou (haply) ſeeſt
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travaile.
Wiſh me partaker in thy happineſſe,
When thou do'ſt meet good hap; and in thy danger,
(If ever danger doe environ thee)
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy Beadeſ-man, Valentine.

Val. And on a Love-booke pray for thy ſucceſſe?

Pro. Vpon ſome booke I love, Ile pray for thee.

Val. Thats on ſome ſhallow Story of deepe love,
How yong Leander croſt the Helleſpont.

Pro. Thats a deepe Story of a deeper love,
For he was more than over-ſhooes in love.

Val. Tis true; for you are over-bootes in love,
And yet you never ſwom the Helleſpont.

Pro. Over the Boots? nay give me not the Boots.

Val. No, I will not; for it boots thee not.

Pro. What?

Val. To be in love, where ſcorne is bought with grones:
Coy lookes, with heart-ſore ſighes: one fading moments
With twenty watchfull, weary, tedious nights; (mirth,
If haply won, perhaps a hapleſſe gaine:
If loſt, why then a grievous labour won;
How ever, but a folly bought with wit,
Or elſe a wit, by folly vanquiſhed.

Pro. So, by your circumſtance, you call me foole.

Val. So, by your circumſtance, I feare youl prove.

Pro. Tis Love you cavill at, I am not Love.

Val. Love is your maſter, for he maſters you;
And he that is ſo yoked by a foole,
Me thinkes ſhould not be Chronicled for wiſe.

Pro. Yet Writers ſay; as in the ſweeteſt Bud,
The eating Canker dwels; ſo eating Love
Inhabits in the fineſt wits of all.

Val. And Writers ſay; as the moſt forward Bud
Is eaten by the Canker ere it blow,
Even ſo by Love, the yong and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blaſting in the Bud,
Loſing his verdure, even in the prime,
And all the faire effects of future hopes.
But wherefore waſte I time to counſaile thee
That art a Votary to fond deſire?
Once more adieu: my Father at the Roade
Expects my comming, there to ſee me ſhipp'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee Valentine.

Val. Sweet Protheus, no: Now let us take our leave:
At Millaine let me heare from thee by Letters
Of thy ſucceſſe in love; and what newes elſe
Betideth here in abſence of thy Friend:
And I likewiſe will viſite thee with mine.

Pro. All happineſſe bechance to thee in Millaine.

Val. As much to you at home: and ſo farewell. Exit.

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after Love;
He leaves his friends to dignifie them more;
I love my ſelfe, my friends, and all for love:
Thou Iulia, thou haſt metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my Studies, loſe my time;
Warre with good counſaile; ſet the world at nought;
Made wit with muſing, weake; heart ſicke with thought.

Sp. Sir Protheus: 'ſave you: ſaw you my Maſter?

Pro. But now he parted hence to embarke for Millaine.

Sp. Twenty to one then, he is ſhipp'd already,
And I have plaid the ſheepe in loſing him.

Pro. Indeed a ſheepe doth very often ſtray,
And if the Shepheard be awhile away.

Sp. You conclude that my Maſter is a Shepheard then, and I a ſheepe?

Pro. I doe.

Sp. Why then my hornes are his hornes, whether I wake or ſleepe.

Pro. A ſilly anſwer, and fitting well a ſheepe.

Sp. This proves me ſtill a ſheepe.

Pro. True; and thy Maſter a ſhepheard.

Sp. Nay, that I can deny by a circumſtance.

Pro. It ſhall goe hard but Ile prove it by another.

Sp. The Shepheard ſeekes the ſheepe, and not the Sheepe the Shepheard; but I ſeeke my Maſter, and my Maſter ſeekes not me: therefore I am no ſheepe.

Pro. The Sheepe for Fodder follow the Shepheard, the Shepheard for food followes not the Sheepe: thou for wages followeſt thy Maſter, thy Maſter for wages followes not thee: therefore thou art a ſheepe.

Sp. Such another proofe will make me cry baâ.

Pro. But doſt thou heare: gav'ſt thou my Letter to Iulia?

Sp. I Sir: I (a loſt-Mutton) gave your Letter to her (a lac'd Mutton,) and ſhe (a lac'd Mutton) gave me (a loſt-Mutton) nothing for my labour.

Pro. Heres too ſmall a Paſture for ſuch ſtore of Muttons.

Sp. If the ground be over-charg'd, you were beſt ſtick her.

Pro. Nay, in that you are aſtray: twere beſt pound you.

Sp. Nay ſir, leſſe then a pound ſhall ſerve me for carrying your letter.

Pro. You miſtake; I meane the Pound, a Pinfold.

S[illegible] From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over,
Tis th[illegible]old too little for carrying a letter to your Lover.

Pro. But what ſaid ſhe?

Sp. I.

Pro. Nod-I, why thats Noddy.

Sp. You miſtooke ſir, I ſaid ſhe did nod:
And you aske me if ſhe did nod, and I ſaid I.

Pro. And that ſet together, is noddy.

Sp. Now you have taken the paines to ſet it together, take it for your paines.

Pro. No, no, you ſhall have it for bearing the Letter.

Sp. Well, I perceive I muſt be faine to beare with you.

Pro. Why ſir, how doe you beare with me?

Sp. Marry ſir, the Letter very orderly,
Having nothing but the word noddy for my paines.

Pro. Beſhrew me, but you have a quicke wit.

Sp. And yet it cannot overtake your ſlow purſe.

Pro. Come, come, open the matter in briefe; what ſaid ſhe.

Sp. Open your purſe, that the money and the matter may be both delivered.

Pro. Well ſir: here is for your paines: what ſaid ſhe?

Sp. Truely ſir, I thinke youle hardly win her.

Pro. Why? couldſt thou perceive ſo much from her?

Sp. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her;
No, not ſo much as a Ducket for delivering your letter:
And being ſo hard to me, that brought your minde;
I feare ſhee'l prove as hard to you in telling her minde.
Give her no token but ſtones, for ſhe's as hard as ſteele.

Pro. What ſaid ſhe, nothing?

Sp. No, not ſo much as take this for thy paines: (me;
To teſtifie your bounty, I thanke you, you have Teſtern'd
In requitall whereof, hencefore carry your letter your ſelfe; And ſo ſir, Ile commend you to my Maſter.

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to ſave your ſhip from wracke,
Which cannot periſh having thee aboard,
Being deſtin'd to a dryer death on ſhore:
I muſt goe ſend ſome better Meſſenger,
I feare my Iulia would not deigne my lines,
Receiving them from ſuch a worthleſſe poſt. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Iulia and Lucetta.

Iul. But ſay Lucetta (now are we alone)
Wouldſt thou then counſaile me to fall in love?

Luc. I Madam, ſo you ſtumble not unheedfully.

Iul. Of all the faire reſort of Gentlemen,
That every day with par'le encounter me,
In thy opinion which is worthieſt love?

Luc. Pleaſe you repeat their names, Ile ſhew my mind,
According to my ſhallow ſimple skill.

Iu. What thinkſt thou of the faire Sir Eglamoure?

Lu. As of a Knight, well-ſpoken, neat, and fine;
But were I you, he never ſhould be mine.

Iu. What thinkſt thou of the rich Mercatio?

Lu. Well of his wealth; but of himſelfe, ſo, ſo.

Iu. What thinkſt thou of the gentle Protheus?

Lu. Lord, Lord: to ſee what folly raignes in us.

Iu. How now? what meanes this paſſion at his name?

Lu. Pardon deare Madam, tis a paſſing ſhame,
That I (unworthy body as I am)
Should cenſure thus on lovely Gentlemen.

Iu. Why not on Protheus, as of all the reſt?

Lu. Then thus: of many good, I thinke him beſt.

Iu. Your reaſon?

Lu. I have no other but a womans reaſon.
I thinke him ſo, becauſe I thinke him ſo.

Iu. And wouldſt thou have me caſt my love on him?

Lu. I: if you thought your love not caſt away.

Iu. Why he of all the reſt, hath never mov'd me.

Lu. Yet he, of all the reſt, I thinke beſt loves ye.

Iu. His little ſpeaking ſhewes his love but ſmall.

Lu. Fire thats cloſeſt kept, burnes moſt of all.

Iu. They doe not love, that doe not ſhew their love.

Lu. Oh, they love leaſt, that let men know their love.

Iu. I would I knew his minde.

Lu. Peruſe this Paper Madam.

Iu. To Iulia: ſay, from whom?

Lu. That the Contents will ſhew.

Iu. Say, ſay: who gave it thee?

Lu. Sir Valentines Page: and ſent I think from Protheus.
He would have given it you, but I being in the way,
Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault I pray.

Iu. Now (by my modeſty) a goodly Broker:
Dare you preſume to harbour wanton lines?
To whiſper and conſpire againſt my youth?
Now truſt me, tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place:
There: take the Paper: ſee it be return'd,
Or elſe returne no more into my ſight.

Lu. To pleade for love, deſerves more fee then hate.

Iu. Will ye be gone?

Lu. That you may ruminate. Exit.

Iu. And yet I would I had ore-look'd the Letter;
It were a ſhame to call her backe againe,
And pray her to a fault, for which I chid her.
What 'foole is ſhe, that knowes I am a Maid,
And would not force the letter to my view?
Since Maides in modeſty, ſay no to that,
Which they would have the profferer conſtrue, I.
Fie, fie; how way-ward is this fooliſh love;
That (like a teſty Babe) will ſcratch the Nurſe,
And preſently, all humbled, kiſſe the Rod?
How churliſhly I chid Lucetta hence,
When willingly I would have had her here?
How angerly I taught my brow to frowne,
When inward joy enforc'd my heart to ſmile?
My pennance is, to call Lucetta backe,
And aske remiſſion for my folly paſt.
What hoe: Lucetta.

Lu. What would your Ladiſhip?

Iu. Is't neere dinner time?

Lu. I would it were,
That you might kill your ſtomacke on your meat,

And not upon your Maid.
Iu. What is't that you
Tooke up ſo gingerly?
Lu. Nothing.
Iu. Why didſt thou ſtoope then?
Lu. To take a Paper up, that I let fall.
Iu. And is that Paper nothing?
Lu. Nothing concerning me.
Iu. Then let it lye, for thoſe that it concernes.
Lu. Madam, it will not lye where it concernes,
Vnleſſe it have a falſe interpreter.
Iu. Some Love of yours hath writ to you in Rime.
Lu. That I might ſing it (Madam) to a tune:
Give me a note, your Ladiſhip can ſet.
Iu. As little by ſuch toyes, as may be poſſible:
Beſt ſing it to the tune of Light O, Love,
Lu. It is too heavy for ſo light a tune.
Iu. Heavy? belike it hath ſome burden then?
Lu. I: and melodious were it, would you ſing it.
Iu. And why not you?
Lu. I cannot reach ſo high.
Iu. Lets ſee your ſong:
How now Minion?
Lu. Keepe tune there ſtill, ſo you will ſing it out:
And yet me thinkes I doe not like this tune.
Iu. You doe not?
Lu. No (Madam) tis too ſharpe.
Iu. You (Minion) are too ſawcie.
Lu. Nay, now you are too flat;
And marre the concord, with too harſh a deſcant:
There wanteth but a Meane to fill your Song.
Iu. The Meane is drown'd with your unruly baſe.
Lu. Indeed I bid the baſe for Protheus.
Iu. This babble ſhall not henceforth trouble me;
Here is a coile with proteſtation:
Goe, get you gone: and let the Papers lye:
You would be fingring them to anger me.
Lu. She makes it ſtrange, but ſhe would be beſt pleas'd
To be ſo angred with another Letter. Exit.
Iu. Nay, would I were ſo angred with the ſame:
Oh hatefull hands, to teare ſuch loving words;
Injurious Waſpes, to feed on ſuch ſweet honey,
And kill the Bees that yeeld it, with your ſtings;
Ile kiſſe each ſeverall Paper for amends:
Looke, here is writ, kinde Iulia: unkinde Iulia,
As in revenge of thy ingratitude,
I throw thy name againſt the bruzing ſtones,
Trampling contemptuouſly on thy diſdaine.
And here is writ, Love-wounded Protheus.
Poore wounded name: my boſome, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee till thy wound be throughly heal'd;
And thus I ſearch it with a ſoveraigne kiſſe.
But twice, or thrice, was Protheus written downe:
Be calme (good winde) blow not a word away,
Till I have found each letter in the Letter,
Except mine owne name: That ſome whirle-wind beare
Vnto a ragged, fearefull, hanging Rocke,
And throw it thence into the raging Sea.
Loe, here in one line is his name twice writ:
Poore forlorne Protheus, paſſionate Protheus:
To the ſweet Iulia: that Ile teare away:
And yet I will not, ſith ſo pretily
He couples it, to his complaining names;
Thus will I fold them, one upon another;
Now kiſſe, embrace, contend, doe what you will. Enter.
Lu. Madam: dinner is ready, and your father ſtayes.
Iu. Well, let us goe.
Lu. What, ſhall theſe Papers lie, like tell-tales here?
Iu. If you reſpect them; beſt to take them up.
Lu. Nay, I was taken up, for laying them downe.
Yet here they ſhall not lie for catching cold.
Iu. I ſee you have a monthes minde to them.
Lu. I (Madam) you may ſay what ſights you ſee;
I ſee things to, although you judge I winke.
Iu. Come, come, wilt pleaſe you goe? Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Antonio and Panthino. Protheus.

Ant. Tell me Panthino, what ſad talke was that,
Wherewith my brother held you in the Cloyſter?
Pan. 'Twas of his Nephew Protheus, your ſonne.
Ant. Why? what of him?
Pan. He wondred that your Lordſhip
Would ſuffer him to ſpend his youth at home,
While other men of ſlender reputation
Put forth their Sonnes, to ſeeke preferment out.
Some to the warres, to try their fortune there;
Some to diſcover Iſlands farre away:
Some, to the ſtudious Vniverſities;
For any, or for all theſe exerciſes,
He ſaid, that Protheus, your ſonne, was meet;
And did requeſt me to importune you
To let him ſpend his time no more at home;
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having knowne no travaile in his youth.
Ant. Nor need'ſt thou much importune me to that Whereon, this month I have been hammering.
I have conſider'd well, his loſſe of time,
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried, nor tutor'd in the world:
Experience is by induſtry atchiev'd,
And perfected by the ſwift courſe of time:
Then tell me, whither were I beſt to ſend him?
Pan. I thinke your Lordſhip is not ignorant
How his companion, youthfull Valentine,
Attends the Emperour in his Royall Court.
Ant. I know it well.
Pan. 'Twere good, I thinke, your Lordſhip ſent him (thither,
There ſhall he practiſe Tilts and Turnaments;
Heare ſweet diſcourſe, converſe with Noblemen,
And be in eye of every exerciſe
Worthy his youth and nobleneſſe of birth.
Ant. I like thy counſaile: well haſt thou adviſ'd:
And that thou maiſt perceive how well I like it,
The execution of it ſhall make knowne;
Even with the ſpeedieſt expedition,
I will diſpatch him to the Emperours Court.
Pan. To morrow, may it pleaſe you, Don Alphonſo,
With other Gentlemen of good eſteeme
Are journeying to ſalute the Emperour,
And to commend their ſervice to his will.
Ant. Good company: with them ſhall Protheus goe:
And in good time, now will we breake with him. Enter (Pro.
Pro. Sweet Love, ſweet lines, ſweet life,
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart,
Here is her oath for love, her honours pawne;

O

O that our Fathers would applaud our Loves
To ſeale our happineſſe with their conſents.
Oh heavenly Iulia.
Ant. How now? What Letter are you reading there?
Pro. May't pleaſe your Lordſhip, 'tis a word or two
Of commendations ſent from Valentine;
Deliver'd by a friend, that came frm him.
Ant. Lend me the Letter: Let me ſee what newes.
Pro. There is no newes (my Lord) but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well belov'd,
And daily graced by the Emperour;
Wiſhing me with him, partner of his fortune.
Ant. And how ſtand you affected to his wiſh?
Pro. As one relying on your Lordſhips will,
And not depending on his friendly wiſh.
Ant. My will is ſomething ſorted with his wiſh:
Muſe not that I thus ſuddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end:
I am reſolv'd that thou ſhalt ſpend ſome time
With Valentino in the Emperours Court:
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou ſhalt have from me,
To morrow be in readineſſe to goe,
Excuſe it not: for I am peremptory.
Pro. My Lord I cannot be ſo ſoone provided,
Pleaſe you deliberate a day or two.
Ant. Looke what thou wantſt ſhall be ſent after thee:
No more of ſtay: to morrow thou muſt goe;
Come on Panthino; you ſhall be imploy'd,
To haſten on his expedition.
Pro. Thus have I ſhunn'd the fire for feare of burning,
And drench'd me in the Sea, where I am drown'd.
I fear'd to ſhew my father Iulia's Letter,
Leaſt he ſhould take exceptions to my Love,
And with the vantage of mine owne excuſe
Hath he excepted moſt againſt my Love.
Oh, how this ſpring of love reſembleth
The uncertaine glory of an Aprill day,
Which now ſhewes all the beauty of the Sunne,
And by and by a cloud takes all away. Enter.
Pan. Sir Protheus, your Father call's for you,
He is in haſte, therefore I pray you goe.
Pro. Why this it is: my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thouſand times it anſwer's no.
Exeunt. Finis.

Actus ſecundus: Scæna Prima.

Enter Valentine, Speed, Silvia.

Speed. Sir, your Glove.
Valen. Not mine: my Gloves are on.
Sp. Why then this may be yours: for this is but one.
Val. Ha? Let me ſee: I, give it me, it's mine:
Sweet Ornament, that decks a thing divine,
Ah Silvia, Silvia.
Speed. Madam Silvia: Madam Silvia.
Val. How now Sirrha?
Speed. Shee is not within hearing Sir.
Val. Why ſir, who bad you call her?
Sp. Your worſhip ſir, or elſe I miſtooke.
Val. Well: you'll ſtill be too forward.
Sp. And yet I was laſt chidden for being too ſlow.
Val. Goe to ſir, tell me: doe you know Madam Silvia?
Sp. Shee that your worſhip loves?
Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Sp. Marry by theſe ſpeciall markes: firſt, you have learn'd (like ſir Protheus) to wreathe your armes like a Male-content: to reliſh a Love-ſong, like a Robin-red-breaſt: to walke alone like one that had the Peſtilence: to ſigh like a Schoole-boy that had loſt his A. B. C. to weepe like a yong Wench that had loſt her Grandam: to faſt like one that takes dyet: to watch like one that feares robbing: to ſpeake puling like a Beggar at Hallowmaſſe: You were wont when you laughed to crow like a Cocke: when you walk'd, to walke like one of the Lions: when you faſted, it was preſently after dinner: when you lookt ſadly, it was for want of money: And now you are Metamorphos'd with a Miſtreſſe, that when I looke on you, I can hardly thinke you my Maſter.

Val. Are all theſe things perceiv'd in me?
Sp. They are all perceiv'd without ye.
Val. Without me? they cannot.

Sp. Without you? nay, that's certaine: for without you were ſo ſimple, none elſe would: but you are ſo without theſe follies, that theſe follies are within you, and ſhine through you like the water in an Vrinall: that not an eye that ſees you, but is a Phyſitian to Comment on your Malady.

Val. But tell me: doſt thou know my Lady Silvia?
Sp. Shee that you gaze on ſo, as ſhe ſits at Supper?
Val. Haſt thou obſerv'd that? even ſhe I meane.
Sp. Why ſir, I know her not.
Val. Doſt thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'ſt her not?
Sp. Is ſhe not hard favour'd ſir?
Val. Not ſo faire (Boy) as well favour'd.
Sp. Sir, I know that well enough.
Val. What doſt thou know?
Sp. That ſhee is not ſo faire, as (of you) well favour'd?
Val. I meane that her beauty is exquiſite,
But her fauour infinite.
Sp. That's becauſe the one is painted, and the other out of all count.
Val. How painted? and how out of count?
Sp. Marry ſir, ſo painted to make her faire, that no man counts of her beauty.
Val. How eſteem'ſt thou me? I account of her beauty.
Sp. You never ſaw her ſince ſhe was deform'd.
Val. How long hath ſhe been deform'd?
Sp. Ever ſince you lov'd her.
Val. I have lov'd her ever ſince I ſaw her,
And ſtill I ſee her beautifull.
Sp. If you love her, you cannot ſee her.
Val. Why?

Sp. Becauſe Love is blinde: O that you had mine eyes, or your owne eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at Sir Protheus, for going ungarter'd.

Val. What ſhould I ſee then?

Sp. Your owne preſent folly, and her paſſing deformity: for he being in love, could not ſee to garter his Hoſe; and you, being in love, cannot ſee to put on your Hoſe.

Val. Belike (Boy) then you are in loue, for laſt morning
You could not ſee to wipe my ſhooes.

Sp. True ſir: I was in love with my bed, I thanke you, you ſwing'd me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.

Val. In concluſion, I ſtand affected to her:

Sp. I would you were ſet, ſo your affection would ceaſe.

Val. Laſt night ſhe enjoyn'd me,
To write ſome lines to one ſhe loves.

Sp. And have you.

Val. I have.

Sp. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No (Boy) but as well as I can doe them:
Peace, here ſhe comes.

Sp. Oh excellent Motion; Oh exceeding Puppet:
Now will he interpret to her.

Val. Madam and Miſtris, a thouſand good morrowes.

Sp. Oh, 'give ye-good-ev'n: heere's a million of manners.

Sil. Sir Valentine, and ſervant, to you two thouſand.

Sil. He ſhould give her intereſt: and ſhe gives it him.

Val. As you injoyn'd me; I have writ your Letter
Vnto the ſecret, nameleſſe friend of yours:
Which I was much unwilling to proceed in,
But for my duty to your Ladiſhip.

Sil I thanke you (gentle ſervant) 'tis very Clerkly done.

Val. Now truſt me (Madam) it came hardly off:
For being ignorant to whom it goes,
I writ at randon very doubtfully.

Sil. Perchance you thinke too much of ſo much paines?

Val. No (Madam), ſo it ſteed you, I will write
(Pleaſe you command) a thouſand times as much:
And yet————

Sil. A pretty period: well: I gheſſe the ſequell;
And yet I will not name it: and yet I care not.
And yet, take this againe: and yet I thanke you:
Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

Sp. And yet you will: and yet, another yet.

Val. What meanes your Ladiſhip?
Doe you not like it?

Sil. Yes, yes: the lines are very quaintly writ,
But (ſince unwillingly) take them againe.
Nay, take them.

Val. Madam, they are for you.

Sil. I, I: you writ them Sir at my requeſt,
But I will none of them: they are for you:
I would have had them writ more movingly:

Val. Pleaſe you, Ile write your Ladiſhip another.

Sil. And when its writ: for my ſake reade it over,
And if it pleaſe you, ſo: if not, why ſo.

Val. If it pleaſe me (Madam?) what then?

Sil. Why if it pleaſe you, take it for your labour;
And ſo good morrow ſervant. Exit.

Sp. Oh Ieſt unſeene: inſcrutible, inviſible,
As a noſe on a mans face, or a Wethercocke on a Steeple:
My Maſter ſues to her: and ſhe hath taught her Sutor,
He being her Pupill, to become her Tutor.
Oh excellent deviſe, was there ever heard a better?
That my Maſter being Scribe,
To himſelfe ſhould write the Letter?

Val. How now ſir?
What are you reaſoning with your ſelfe?

Sp. Nay, I was riming: tis you that have the reaſon.

Val. To doe what?

Sp. To be a ſpokeſ-man from Madam Silvia.

Val. To whom?

Sp. To your ſelfe: why, ſhe woes you by a figure.

Val. What figure?

Sp. By a Letter, I ſhould ſay.

Val. Why ſhe hath not writ to me?

Sp. What need ſhe,
When ſhe hath made you write to your ſelfe?
Why, doe you not perceive the jeſt?

Val. No, beleeve me.

Sp. No beleeving you indeed Sir:
But did you perceive her earneſt?

Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.

Sp. Why ſhe hath given you a Letter.

Val. Thats the Letter I writ to her friend.

Sp. And ẏ Letter hath ſhe deliver'd, and there's an end.

Val. I would it were no worſe.

Sp. Ile warrant you tis as well:
For often have you writ to her: and ſhe in modeſty,
Or elſe for want of idle time, could not againe reply,
Or fearing els ſome meſſēger, ẏ might her mind diſcover
Her ſelfe hath taught her Love himſelfe to write unto her
All this I ſpeake in Print, for in Print I found it. (Lover
Why muſe you ſir, tis dinner time.

Val. I have din'd.

Sp. I, but hearken ſir: though the Cameleon Love can feed on the ayre, I am one that am nouriſh'd by my victuals; and would faine have meat: oh be not like your Miſtreſſe, be moved, be moved. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Protheus, Iulia, Panthion.

Pro. Haue patience, gentle Iulia.

Iul. I muſt where is no remedy.

Pro. When poſſibly I can, I will returne.

Iul. If you turne not: you will returne the ſooner:
Keepe this remembrance for thy Iulia's ſake.

Pro. Why then wee'll make exchange;
Here, take you this.

Iul. And ſeale the bargaine with a holy kiſſe.

Pro. Here is my hand, for my true conſtancie:
And when that houre ore-ſlips me in the day,
Wherein I ſigh not (Iulia.) for thy ſake,
The next enſuing houre, ſome foule miſchance
Torment me for my Loves forgetfulneſſe:
My father ſtayes my comming: anſwer not:
The Tide is now; nay, not thy tide of teares,
That tide will ſtay me longer then I ſhould,
Iulia farewell: what, gone without a word?
I, ſo true love ſhould doe: it cannot ſpeake,
For truth hath better deeds than words to grace it.

Pan. Sir Protheus, you are ſtaid for.

Pro. Goe, I come, I come:
Alas, this parting ſtrikes poore Lovers dumbe.

Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Launce, Panthion.

Launce. Nay, 'twill bee this houre ere I have done weeping: all the kinde of the Launces have this very fault: I have receiv'd my proportion, like the prodigious ſonne,

Sonne, and am going with Sir Prothens to the Imperialls Court: I thinke Crab my dog, be the ſowreſt natured dogge that lives: My Mother weeping: my Father wayling: my Siſter crying: our Maid howling: our Catte wringing her hands, and all our houſe in a great perplexitie, yet did not this cruell-hearted Curre ſhedde one teare: he is a ſtone, a very pibble ſtone, and has no more pitty in him then a dogge: a Iew would have wept to have ſeene our parting: why my Grandam having no eyes, looke you, wept her ſelfe blind at my parting: nay, Ile ſhow you the manner of it. This ſhooe is my father: no, this left ſhooe is my father; no, no, this left ſhooe is my mother: nay, that cannot bee ſo neyther: yes; it is ſo, it is ſo: it hath the worſer ſole: this ſhooe with the hole in it, is my mother: and this my father: a veng'ance on't, there 'tis: Now ſir, this ſtaffe is my ſiſter: for looke you, ſhe is as white as a lilly, and as ſmall as a wand: this hat is Nan our maid: I am the dogge: no, the dogge is himſelfe, and I am the dogge: oh, the dogge is me, and I am my ſelfe: I; ſo, ſo: now come I to my Father; Father, your bleſſing: now ſhould not the ſhooe ſpeake a word for weeping: now ſhould I kiſſe my Father; well, hee weepes on: Now come I to my Mother: Oh that ſhe could ſpeake now, like a would-woman: well, I kiſſe her: why there 'tis; heere's my mothers breath up and downe: Now come I to my ſiſter; marke the moane ſhe makes: now the dogge all this while ſheds not a teare: nor ſpeakes a word: but ſee how I lay the duſt with my teares.

Panth. Launce, away, away: a Boord: thy Maiſter is ſhip'd, and thou art to poſt after with oares; what's the matter? why weep'ſt thou man? away aſſe, you'l looſe the Tide, if you tarry any longer.

Laun. It is no mater if the tide were loſt, for it is the unkindeſt Tide, that ever any man tyde.

Panth. What's the unkindeſt tide?

Lau. Why, he that's tide here, Crab my dog.

Pant. Tut man: I meane thou'lt looſe the flood, and in looſing the flood, looſe thy voyage, and in looſing thy voyage, looſe thy Maiſter, and in looſing thy Maiſter, looſe thy ſervice, and in looſing thy ſervice: ——why doſt thou ſtop my mouth?

Laun. For feare thou ſhouldſt looſe thy tongue.

Panth. Where ſhould I looſe my tongue?

Laun. In thy Tale.

Pauth. In thy Taile.

Laun. Looſe the Tyde, and the voyage, and the Maiſter, and the Service, and the tide: why man if the River were drie, I am able to fill it with my teares: if the winde were downe, I could drive the boate with my ſighes.

Panth. Come: come away man, I was ſent to call thee.

Lau. Sir: call me what thou dar'ſt.

Pant. Wilt thou goe.

Lau. Well, I will goe.

Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Eater Valentine, Siluia, Thurio, Speed, Duke, Protheus.

Sil. Servant.

Val. Miſtris.

Spee. Maiſter, Sir Thurio frownes on you.

Val. I Boy it's for love.

Spe. Not of you.

Val. Of my Miſtreſſe then.

Spe. 'Twere good you knockt him.

Sil. Servant, you are ſad.

Val. Indeed, Madam, I ſeeme ſo.

Thu. Seeme you that you are not?

Val. Hap'ly I doe.

Thu. So doe Counterfeyts.

Val. So doe you.

Thu. What ſeeme I that I am not?

Val. Wiſe.

Thu. What inſtance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quoat you my folly?

Val. I quoat it in your Ierken.

Thu. My Ierkin is a doublet.

Val. Well then, Ile double your folly.

Thu. How?

Sil. What, angry, Sir Thurio, do you change colour?

Val. Give him leave, Madam, he is a kind of Camelion.

Thu. That hath more minde to feed on your bloud, then live in your ayre.

Val. You have ſayd Sir.

Thu. I Sir, and done too for this time.

Val. I know it well ſir, you alwayes end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volly of words, gentlemẽ, & quickly ſhot off.

Val. 'Tis indeed, Madam, we thanke the giver.

Sil. Who is that Servant?

Val. Your ſelfe (ſweet Lady) for you gave the fire,
Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your Ladiſhips lookes,
And ſpends what he borrowes kindly in your company.

Thu. Sir, if you ſpend word for word with me, I ſhall make your wit bankrupt. (words,

Val. I know it well ſir: you have an Exchequer of
And I thinke, no other treaſure to give your followers:
For it appeares by their bare Liveries
That they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more:
Here comes my father.

Duke. Now, daughter Siluia, you are hard beſet.
Sir Valentine, your father is in good health,
What ſay you to a Letter from your friends
Of much good newes?

Va. My Lord I will be thankefull,
To any meſſenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your Countriman?

Va. I, my good Lord, I know the Gentleman
To be of worth, and worthy eſtimation,
And not without deſert ſo well reputed.

Duk. Hath he not a Sonne?

Va. I my good Lord, a Son; that well deſerves
The honour, and regard of ſuch a father.

Duk. You know him well?

Va. I knew him as my ſelfe: for from our Infancie
We have converſt, and ſpent our houres together,
And though my ſelfe have beene an idle Trewant,
Omitting the ſwet benefit of time
To cloathe mine age with Angel-like perfection:
Yet hath Sir Protheus (for that's his name)
Made uſe, and faire advantage of his dayes:
His yeares but yong, but his experience old:
His head unmellowed, but his Iudgement ripe;
And in a word (for far behinde his worth
Comes all the praiſes that I now beſtow.)

He is compleat in feature, and in minde,
With all good grace, to grace a Gentleman.
Duk. Beſhrew me ſir, but if he make this good
He is as worthy for an Empreſſe love,
As meet to be an Emperors Councellor:
Well, Sir: this gentleman is come to me
With Commendation from great Potentates,
And here he meanes to ſpend his time a while,
I thinke 'tis no welcome newes to you.
Val. Should I have wiſh'd a thing, it had beene he.
Duk. Welcome him then according to his worth:
Silvia, I ſpeake to you, and you Sir Thurio,
For Valentine, I need not cite him to it,
I will ſend him hither to you preſently.
Va. This is the Gentleman I told your Ladiſhip
Had come along with me, but that his Miſtreſſe
Did hold his eyes, lockt in her Criſtall lookes.
Sil. Be-like that now ſhe hath enfranchis'd them
Vpon ſome other pawne for fealty.
Va. Nay ſure, I thinke ſhe holds them priſoners ſtill.
Sil. Nay then he ſhould be blind, and being blind
How could he ſee his way to ſeeke out you?
Va. Why Lady, Love hath twenty paire of eyes.
Thu. They ſay that love hath not an eye at all.
Va. To ſee ſuch Lovers, Thurio, as your ſelfe,
Vpon a homely object love can winke. Enter.
Sil. Have done, have done: here comes the gentleman.
Va. Welcome, deere Protheus: Miſtris, I beſeech you
Confirme this welcome, with ſome ſpeciall favour,
Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wiſh'd to heare from.
Val. Miſtris, it is: ſweet Lady, entertaine him
To be my fellow-ſervant to your Ladiſhip.
Sil. Too low a Miſtris for ſo high a ſervant.
Pro. Not ſo, ſweet Lady, but too meane a ſervant,
To have a looke of ſuch a worthy Miſtris.
Va. Leave off diſcourſe of diſabilitie:
Sweet Lady, entertaine him for your ſervant.
Pro. My dutie will I boaſt of, nothing elſe.
Sil. And dutie never yet did want his meed.
Servant, you are welcome to a worthleſſe Miſtris.
Pro. Ile dye on him that ſaies ſo but your ſelfe.
Sil. That you are welcome?
Pro. That you are worthleſſe. (you.
Thur. Madam, my Lord your father would ſpeak with
Sil. I wait upon his pleaſure: Come Sir Thurio,
Goe with me: once more, new ſervant welcome;
Ile leave you to confer of home affaires,
When you have done, we looke to heare from you.
Pro. Wee'l both attend upon your Ladiſhip.
Val. Now tell me how do al from whence you came?
Pro. Your frends are wel, & have thẽ much comẽded.
Va. And how doe yours?
Pro. I left them all in health.
Va. How does your Lady? & how thrives your love?
Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you,
I know you joy not in a Love-diſcourſe.
Val. I Protheus, but that life is alter'd now,
I have done pennance for contemning Love,
Whoſe high emperious thoughts have puniſh'd me
With bitter faſts, with penitentiall grones,
With nightly teares, and daily heart-ſore ſighes,
For in revenge of my contempt of love,
Love hath chac'd ſleepe from my enthralled eyes,
And made them watchers of mine owne hearts ſorrow.
O gentle Protheus, Love's a mightie Lord,
And hath ſo humbled me, as I confeſſe
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor to his ſervice, no ſuch joy on earth:
Now, no diſcourſe, except it be of love:
Now can I breake my faſt, dine, ſup, and ſleepe,
Vpon the very naked name of love.
Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye:
Was this the Idoll, that you worſhip ſo?
Va. Even She; and is ſhe not a heavenly Saint?
Pro. No; But ſhe is an earthly Paragon.
Va. Call her divine.
Pro. I will not flatter her.
Va. O flatter me: for Love delights in praiſe.
Pro. When I was ſicke, you gave me bitter pils,
And I muſt miniſter the like to you.
Val. Then ſpeake the truth by her, if not divine,
Yet let her be a principalitie,
Soveraigne to all the Creatures on the earth.
Pro. Except my Miſtreſſe.
Val. Sweet: except not any,
Except thou wilt except againſt my Love.
Pro. Have I not reaſon to prefer mine owne?
Va. And I will helpe thee to prefer her to;
Shee ſhall be dignified with this high honour,
To beare my Ladies traine, leaſt the baſe earth
Should from her veſture chance to ſteale a kiſſe,
And of ſo great a favor growing proud,
Diſdaine to roote the Sommer-ſwelling flowre,
And make rough Winter everlaſtingly.
Pro. Why Valentine, what Bragadiſme is this?
Va. Pardon me (Protheus) all I can is nothing,
To her, whoſe worth makes other worthies nothing;
Shee is alone.
Pro. Then let her alone.
Va. Not for the world: why man, ſhe is mine owne,
And I as rich in having ſuch a Iewell
As twenty Seas, if all their ſand were pearle,
The water, Nectar and the Rocke pure gold.
Forgive me, that I doe not dreame on thee,
Becauſe thou ſeeſt me doate upon my love:
My fooliſh Rivall that her father likes
(Onely for his poſſeſſions are ſo huge)
Is gone with her along, and I muſt after,
For Love (thou know'ſt) is full of jealouſie.
Pro. But ſhe loves you? (howre,
Va. I, and we are betroathd: nay more, our mariage
With all the cunning manner of our flight
Determin'd of: how I muſt climbe her window,
The Ladder made of Cords, and all the means
Plotted, and 'greed on for my happineſſe.
Good Protheus goe with me to my chamber,
In theſe affaires to aid me with thy counſaile.
Pro. Goe on before: I ſhall enquire you forth:
I muſt unto the Road, to diſ-embarque
Some neceſſaries, that I needs muſt uſe,
And then Ile preſently attend you.
Va. Will you make haſte?
Pro. I will.
Even as one heate, another heate expels,
Or as one nayle by ſtrength drives out another:
So the remembrance of my former Love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten,
Is it mine then, or Valentineans praiſe?
Her true perfection, or my falſe tranſgreſſion?
That makes me reaſonleſſe, to reaſon thus?
Shee is faire: and ſo is Iulia that I love,

(That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd,
Which like a waxen Image 'gainſt a fire
Beares no impreſſion of the thing it was.)
Me thinkes my zeale to Valentine is cold,
And that I love him not as I was wont:
O, but I love his Lady too-too much,
And that's the reaſon I love him ſo little.
How ſhall I doate on her with more aduice,
That thus without advice begin to love her?
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazel'd ſo my reaſons light:
But when I looke on her perfections,
There is no reaſon, but I ſhall be blinde.
If I can checke my erring love, I will,
If not, to compaſſe her Ile uſe my ſkill.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce, by mine honeſty welcome to Padua.

Laun. Forſweare not thy ſelfe, ſweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this alwaies, that a man is never undon till he be hang'd, nor never welcome to a place, till ſome certaine ſhot be paid, and the Hoſteſſe ſay welcome.

Speed. Come-on you mad-cap: Ile to the Ale-houſe with you preſently; where, for one ſhot of five pence, thou ſhalt have five thouſand welcomes: But ſirha, how did thy Maſter part with Madam Iulia?

Lau. Marry after they cloas'd in earneſt, they parted very fairely in jeſt.

Spee. But ſhall ſhe marry him?

Lau. No.

Spee. How then? ſhall he marry her?

Lau. No, neyther.

Spee. What, are they broken?

Lau. No; they are both as whole as a fiſh.

Spee. Why then, how ſtands the matter with them?

Lau. Marry thus, when it ſtands well with him, it ſtands well with her.

Spee. What an aſſe art thou, I underſtand thee not.

Lau. What a blocke art thou, that thou canſt not? My ſtaffe underſtands me.

Spee. What thou ſayſt?

Lau. I, and what I do too: looke thee, Ile but leane, and my ſtaffe underſtands me.

It ſtands under thee indeed.

Lau. Why, ſtand-under: and underſtand is all one.

Spee. But tell me true, wil't be a match?

Lau. Aske my dogge, if he ſay I, it will: if hee ſay no, it will: if he ſhake his taile and ſay nothing, it will.

Spee. The concluſion is then, that it will.

Lau. Thou ſhalt never get ſuch a ſecret from me, but by a parable.

Spee. 'Tis well that I get it ſo: but Launce, how ſaiſt thou that my maſter is become a notable Lover?

Lau. I never knew him otherwiſe.

Spee. Then how?

Lau. A notable Lubber: as thou reporteſt him to bee.

Spee. Why, thou whorſon Aſſe, thou miſtak'ſt me.

Lau. Why Foole, I meant not thee, I meant thy Maſter.

Spee. I tell thee, my maſter, is become a hot Lover.

Lau. Why, I tell thee, I care not, though hee burne himſelfe in Love. If thou wilt goe with me to the Ale-houſe, ſo, if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Iew, and not worth the name of a Chriſtian.

Spee. Why?

Lau. Becauſe thou haſt not ſo much charity in thee as to goe to the Ale with a Chriſtian: Wilt thou goe?

Spee. At thy ſervice.

Enter Protheus solus.

Pro. To leave my Iulia; ſhall I be forſworne?
To love faire Silvia; ſhall I be forſworne?
To wrong my friend, I ſhall be much forſworne.
And ev'n that Powre which gave me firſt my oath
Provokes me to this three-fold perjurie.
Love bad me ſweare, and Love bids me for-ſweare;
O ſweet-ſuggeſting Love, if thou haſt ſinn'd,
Teach me (thy tempted ſubject) to excuſe it.
At firſt I did adore a twinkling Starre,
But now I worſhip a cæleſtiall Sunne:
Vn-heedfull vowes may heedfully be broken,
And he wants wit, that wants reſolved will,
To learne his wit, t'exchange the bad for better;
Fie, fie, unreverend tongue, to call her bad,
Whoſe ſoveraignty ſo oft thou haſt preferd,
With twenty thouſand ſoule-confirming oathes.
I cannot leave to love, and yet I doe:
But there I leave to love, where I ſhould love.
Iulia I looſe, and Valentine I looſe,
If I keepe them, I needs muſt looſe my ſelfe:
If I looſe them, thus finde I but their loſſe,
For Valentine, my ſelfe: for Iulia, Silvia.
I to my ſelfe am deerer then a friend,
For Love is ſtill moſt precious in it ſelfe,
And Silvia (witneſſe heaven that made her faire)
Shewes Iulia but a ſwarthy Ethiope.
I will forget that Iulia is alive,
Remembring that my love to her is dead.
And Valentine Ile hold an Enemie,
Ayming at Silvia as a ſweeter friend.
I cannot now prove conſtant to my ſelfe,
Without ſome trechery us'd to Valentine.
This night he meaneth with a Corded-ladder
To climbe celeſtiall Silvia's chamber window,
My ſelfe in counſaile his competitor.
Now preſently Ile give her father notice
Of their diſguiſing and pretended flight:
Who (all inrag'd) will baniſh Valentine:
For Thurio he intends ſhall wed his daughter,
But Valentine being gone, Ile quickly croſſe
By ſome ſlie tricke, blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love lend me wings, to make my purpoſe ſwift,
As thou haſt lent me wit to plot his drift.

Enter Iulia and Lucetta.

Iul. Counſaile, Lucetta, gentle girle aſſiſt me,
And ev'n in kinde love, I doe conjure thee,
Who art the Table wherein all my thoughts
Are viſibly Character'd, and engrav'd,
To leſſon me, and tell me ſome good meane
How with my honour I may undertake
A journey to my loving Protheus.
Luc. Alas, the way is weariſome and long.
Iul. A true-devoted Pilgrime is not weary
To meaſure Kingdoms with his feeble ſteps,
Much leſſe ſhall ſhe that hath Loves wings to flie;
And when the flight is made to one ſo deere,
Of ſuch divine perfection as Sir Protheus.
Luc. Better forbeare, till Protheus make returne.
Iul. Oh, know'ſt yͧ not, his looks are my ſoules food?
Pitty the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food ſo long a time.
Didſt thou but know the inly touch of Love,
Thou wouldſt as ſoone goe kindle fire with ſnow
As ſeeke to quench the fire of Love with words.
Luc. I doe not ſeeke to quench your Loves hot fire,
But qualifie the fires extreame rage,
Leaſt it ſhould burne above the bounds of reaſon.
Iul. The more thou dam'ſt it up, the more it burnes:
The Current that with gentle murmure glides
(Thou know'ſt) being ſtop'd, impatiently doth rage:
But when his faire courſe is not hindered,
He makes ſweet muſicke with th'enameld ſtones,
Giving a gentle kiſſe to every ſedge
He over-taketh in his pilgrimage.
And ſo by many winding nookes he ſtraies
With willing ſport to the wilde Ocean.
Then let me goe, and hinder not my courſe:
Ile be as patient as a gentle ſtreame,
And make a paſtime of each weary ſtep,
Till the laſt ſtep have brought me to my Love,
And there ile reſt, as after much turmoile
A bleſſed ſoule doth in Elizium.
Luc. But in what habit will you goe along?
Iul. Not like a woman, for I would prevent
The looſe encounters of laſcivious men:
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with ſuch weedes
As may beſeeme ſome well reputed Page.
Luc. Why then your Ladiſhip muſt cut your haire.
Iul. No girle, ile knit it up in ſilken ſtrings,
With twentie od-conceited true-love knots:
To be fantantaſtique, may become a youth
Of greater time then I ſhall ſhew to be.
Luc. What faſhion (Madam) ſhall I make your breeches?
Iul. That fits as well, as tell me (good my Lord)
What compaſſe will you weare your Farthingale?
Why ev'n what faſhion thou beſt likes (Lucetta.)
Luc. You muſt needs have them with a cod-peece (Madam.
Iul. Out, out, (Lucetta) that wilbe illfavord.
Luc. A round hoſe (Madam) now's not worth a pin
Vnleſſe you have a cod-peece to ſtick pins on.
Iul. Lucetta, as thou lov'ſt me let me have
What thou think'ſt meet, and is moſt mannerly,
But tell me (wench) how will the world repute me
For undertaking ſo unſtaid a journey?
I feare me it will make me ſcandaliz'd.
Luc. If you thinke ſo, then ſtay at home and go not.
Iul. Nay, that I will not.
Luc. Then never dreame on Infamy, but go:
If Protheus like your journey when you come,
No matter who's diſpleas'd when you are gone:
I feare me he will ſcarce be pleas'd withall.
Iul. That is the leaſt (Lucetta) of my feare:
A thouſand oathes, an Ocean of his teares
And inſtances as infinite of Love,
Warrant me welcome to my Protheus.
Luc. All theſe are ſervants to deceitfull men.
Iul. Baſe men, that uſe them to ſo baſe effect;
But truer ſtarres did governe Protheus birth,
His words are bonds, his oathes are oracles,
His love ſincere, his thoughts immaculate,
His teares, pure meſſengers, ſent from his heart,
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.
Luc. pray heav'n he prove ſo when you come to him.
Iul. Now, as thou lov'ſt me, do him not that wrong,
To beare a hard opinion of his truth:
Onely deſerve my love, by loving him,
And preſently goe with me to my chamber
To take a note of what I ſtand in need of,
To furniſh me upon my longing journey:
All that is mine I leave at thy diſpoſe,
My goods, my Lands, my reputation,
Onely in lieu thereof, diſpatch me hence:
Come; anſweare not: but to it preſently,
I am impatient of my tarriance.
Exeunt.

Actus Tertius, Scæna Prima.

Enter Duke, Thurio, Protheus, Valentine,
Launce, Speed.

Duk. Sir Thurio, give us leave (I pray) a while,
We have ſome ſecrets to confer about.
Now tell me Protheus, what's your will with me?
Pro My gracious Lord, that which I would diſcover,
The Law of friendſhip bids me to conceale,
But when I call to minde your gracious favours
Done to me (undeſerving as I am)
My dutie pricks me on to utter that
Which elſe no worldly good ſhould draw from me:
Know (worthy Prince) Sir Valentine my friend
This night intends to ſteale away your daughter:
My ſelfe am one made priuy to the plot.
I know you have determin'd to beſtow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And ſhould ſhe thus be ſtolne away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus (for my duties ſake) I rather choſe
To croſſe my friend in his intended drift,
Then (by concealing it) heap on your head
A pack of ſorrowes, which would preſſe you downe
(Being unprevented) to your timeleſſe grave.
Duk. Protheus, I thanke thee for thine honeſt care,
Which to requite, command me while I live.
This love of theirs, my ſelfe have often ſeene,
Haply when they have iudg'd me faſt aſleepe,
And oftentimes have purpos'd to forbid

Sir Valentine her company, and my Court.
But fearing leſt my jealous ayme might erre,
And ſo (unworthily) diſgrace the man
(A raſhneſſe that I ever yet have ſhun'd)
I gave him gentle lookes, thereby to finde
That which thy ſelfe haſt now diſclos'd to me.
And thou maiſt perceive my feare of this,
Knowing that tender youth is ſoone ſuggeſted,
I nightly lodge her in an upper Towre,
The key whereof, my ſelfe have ever kept:
And thence ſhe cannot be convay'd away.
Pro. Know (noble Lord) they have deviſ'd a meane
How he her chamber-window will aſcend,
And with a Corded-ladder fetch her downe:
For which, the youthfull Lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it preſently.
Where (if it pleaſe you) you may intercept him.
But (good my Lord) doe it ſo cunningly
That my diſcovery be not aimed at:
For, love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publiſher of this pretence.
Duke. Vpon mine honour, he ſhall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.
Pro. Adieu, my Lord, Sir Valentine is comming. Enter.
Duk. Sir Valentine, whither away ſo faſt?
Va. Pleaſe it your Grace, there is a Meſſenger
That ſtayes to beare my Letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.
Duk. Be they of much import?
Val. The tenure of them doth but ſignifie
My health, and happy being at your Court.
Duk. Nay then no matter: ſtay with me a while,
I am to breake with thee of ſome affaires
That touch me neere: wherein thou muſt be ſecret.
'Tis not unknowne to thee, that I have ſought
To match my friend Sir Thurio, to my daughter.
Val. I know it well (my Lord(and ſure the Match
Were rich and honourable: beſides, the gentleman
Is full of Vertue, Bounty, Worth, and Qualities
Beſeeming ſuch a Wife, as your faire daughter:
Cannot your Grace win her to fancie him?
Duk. No, truſt me, She is peeviſh, ſullen, froward,
Proud, diſobedient, ſtubborne, lacking duty,
Neyther regarding that ſhe is my childe,
Nor fearing me, as if I were her father:
And may I ſay to thee, this pride of hers
(Vpon advice) hath drawne my love from her,
And where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have beene cheriſh'd by her child-like dutie,
I now am full reſolv'd to take a wife,
And turne her out to who will take her in:
Then let her beautie be her wedding dowre:
For me, and my poſſeſſions ſhe eſteemes not.
Val. What would your Grace have me to do in this?
Duke. There is a Lady in Verona heere
Whom I affect: but ſhe is nice, and coy,
And nought eſteemes my aged eloquence.
Now therefore would I have thee to my Tutor
(For long agone I have forgot to court,
Beſides the faſhion of the time is chang'd)
How, and which way I may beſtow my ſelfe
To be regarded in her ſun-bright eye.
Va. Win her with gifts, if ſhe reſpect not words,
Dumbe Jewels often in their ſilent kinde
More then quicke words, doe move a womans minde.
Duk. But ſhe did ſcorne a preſent that I ſent her,
Val. A woman ſometime ſcorns what beſt cōtents her.
Send her another: never give her ore,
For ſcorne at firſt makes after-love the more.
If ſhe doe frowne, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you.
If ſhe doe chide, 'its not to have you gone,
For why, the fooles are mad, if left alone.
Take no repulſe, what ever ſhe doth ſay,
For, get you gon, ſhe doth not meane away.
Flatter, and prayſe, commend, extoll their graces:
Though nere ſo blacke, ſay they have Angels faces,
That man that hath a tongue, I ſay is no man,
If this his tongue he cannot win a woman.
Duk. But ſhe I meane, is promis'd by her friends
Vnto a youthfull gentleman of worth,
And kept ſeverely from reſort of men,
That no man hath acceſſe by day to her.
Val. Why then I would reſort to her by night.
Duk. I, but the doores be lockt, and keyes kept ſafe,
That no man hath recourſe to her by night.
Val. What lets but one may enter at her window?
Duk. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground,
And built ſo ſhelving, that one cannot climbe it
Without apparant hazard of his life.
Val. Why then a Ladder quaintly made of Cords
To caſt up, with a paire of anchoring hookes,
Would ſerve to ſcale another Here's towre,
So bold Leander would adventure it.
Duk. Now as thou art a gentleman of blood
adviſe me, where I may have ſuch a Ladder.
Val. When would you uſe it? pray ſir, tell me that.
Duk. This very night; for Love is like a childe
That longs for every thing that he can come by.
Val. By ſeaven a clock, ile get you ſuch a Ladder.
Duk. But harke thee: I will goe to her alone,
How ſhall I beſt convey the Ladder thither?
Val. It will be light (my Lord) that you may beare it
Vnder a clocke, that is of any length.
Duk. A cloake as long as thine will ſerve the turne?
Val. I my good Lord.
Duk. Then let me ſee thy cloake,
Ile get me one of ſuch another length.
Val. Why any clocke will ſerve the turn (my Lord)
Duk. How ſhall I faſhion me to weare a cloake?
I pray thee let me feele thy cloake upon me.
What Letter is this ſame? what's here? to Silvia?
And heere an Engine fit for my proceeding,
Ile be ſo bold to breake the ſeale for once.

My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly,
And ſlaves they are, to me, that ſend them flying.
Oh, could their Maſter come, and goe as lightly,
Himſelfe would lodge, where (ſenceles) they are lying.
My Harald Thoughts, in thy pure boſome reſt-them,
While I (their King) that thither them importune
Doe curſe the grace that with ſuch grace hath bleſt them,
Becauſe my ſelfe doe want my ſervants fortune.
I curſe my ſelfe, for they are ſent by me,
That they ſhould harbour where their Lord would be.

What's here? Silvia, this night I will infranchiſe thee.
'Tis ſo: and heere's the Ladder fot the purpoſe.
Why Phaeton (for thou art Merops ſonne)
Wilt thou aſpire to guide the heavenly Car?
And with thy daring folly burne the world?
Wilt thou reach ſtars, becauſe they ſhine on thee?

Goe baſe Intruder, over-weening Slave,
Beſtow thy fawning ſmiles on equall mates,
And thinke my patience, (more then thy deſert)
Is priviledge for thy departure hence.
Thanke me for this, more then for all the favors
Which (all too-much) I have beſtowed on thee.
But if thou linger in my Territories
Longer then ſwifteſt expedition
Will give thee time to leave our royall Court,
By heaven, my wrath ſhall farre exceed the love
I ever bore my daughter, or thy ſelfe.
Be gone, I will not heare thy vaine excuſe,
But as thou lov'ſt thy life, make ſpeed from hence. Exit.
Val. And why not death, rather then living torment?
To die, is to be baniſht from my ſelfe,
And Silvia is my ſelfe: baniſh'd from her
Is ſelfe from ſelfe. A deadly baniſhment:
What light, is light, if Silvia be not ſeene?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Vnleſſe it be to thinke that ſhe is by
And feed upon the ſhaddow of perfection.
Except I be by Silvia in the night,
There is no muſike in the nightingale.
Vnleſſe I looke on Silvia in the day,
There is no day for me to looke upon.
She is my eſſence, and I leave to be;
If I be not by her faire influence
Foſter'd, illumin'd, cheriſh'd, kept alive.
I flie not death, to flie his deadly doome,
Tarry I heere, I but attend on death,
But flie I hence, I flie away from life. Enter Pro. and Launs.
Pro. Run (boy) run, run, and ſeeke him out.
Lau. Soa-hough, Soa hough——
Pro. What ſeeſt thou?
Lau. Him we goe to finde,
There's not a haire on's head, but t'is a Valentine.
Pro. Valentine?
Va. No.
Pro. Who then? his Spirit?
Va. Neither,
Pro. What then?
Va. nothing.
Lau. Can nothing ſpeake? Maſter, ſhall I ſtrike?
Pro. Whom wouldſt thou ſtrike?
Lau. Nothing.
Pro. Villaine, forbeare.
Lau. Why Sir, Ile ſtrike nothing: I pray you.
Bro. Sirha, I ſay forbeare? friend Valentine, a word.
Va. My eares are ſtopt, & cannot heare good newes,
So much of bad already hath poſſeſt them.
Pro. Then in dumbe ſilence will I bury mine;
For they are harſh, un-tuneable, and bad.
Va. Is Silvin dead?
Pro. No, Valentine.
Va. No Valentine indeed, for ſacred Silvia,
Hath ſhe forſworne me?
Pro. No, Valentine.
Va. No Valentine, if Silvia have forſworne me.
What is your newes?
Lau. Sir, there is a proclamation, that you are vaniſhed.
Pro. That thou art baniſh'd: oh that's the newes,
From hence, from Silvia, and from me thy friend.
Va. Oh, I have fed upon this woe already,
And now exceſſe of it will make me ſurfet.
Doth Silvia know that I am baniſh'd?
Pro. I, I: and ſhe hath offered to the doome
(Which un-reverſt ſtands in effectuall force)
A Sea of melting pearle, which ſome call teares.
Thoſe at her fathers churliſh feete ſhe tenderd,
With them upon her knees, her humble ſelfe,
Wringing her hands, whoſe whiteneſſe ſo became them,
As if but now they waxed pale for woe:
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad ſighes, deepe grones, nor ſilver-ſhedding teares
Could penetrate her uncompaſſionate Sire;
But Valentine, if he be tane, muſt die.
Beſides, her interceſſion chaf'd him ſo,
When ſhe for thy repeale was ſuppliant,
That to cloſe priſon he commaunded her,
With many bitter threates of biding there.
Va. No more: unles the next word that thou ſpeak'ſt
Have ſome maligant power upon my life:
If ſo: I pray thee breathe it in mine eare,
As ending Antheme of my endleſſe dolor.
Pro. Ceaſe to lament for that thou canſt not helpe,
And ſtudy helpe for that which thou lament'ſt,
Time is the Nurſe, and breeder of all good;
Here, if thou ſtay, thou canſt not ſee thy love:
Beſides, thy ſtaying will abridge thy life:
Hope is a lovers ſtaffe, walke hence with that
And mannage it, againſt deſpairing thoughts:
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence,
Which, being writ to me, ſhall be deliver'd
Even in the milke-white boſome of thy love.
The time now ſerves not to expoſtulate,
Come, Ile convey thee through the City-gate.
And ere I part with thee, confer at large
Of all that may concerne thy love affaires:
As thou lov'ſt Silvia (though not for thy ſelfe)
Regard thy danger, and along with me.
Va. I pray thee Launce, and if thou ſeeſt my Boy
Bid him make haſte, and meet me at the North-gate.
Pro. Goe ſirha, finde him out: Come Valentine.
Va. Oh my deere Silvia; hapleſſe Valentine. Exeunt.

Launce. I am but a foole, looke you, and yet I have the wit to thinke my Maſter is a kinde of a knave: but that's all one, if he be but one knave: He lives not now that knowes me to be in love, yet I am in love, but a Teeme of horſe ſhall not plucke that from me: nor who 'tis I love: and yet 'tis a woman; but what woman, I will not tell my ſelfe: and yet 'tis a Milkemaid: yet 'tis not a maid: for ſhe hath had Goſſips: yet 'tis a maid, for ſhe is her Maſters maid, and ſerves for wages. Shee hath more qualities then a Water-Spaniell, which is much in a bare Chriſtian: Heere is the Cate-log of her Condition. Inprimis, Shee can fetch and carry: why a horſe can doe no more; nay, a horſe cannot fetch, but onely carry, therefore is ſhe better then a Iade. Item. She can milke, looke you, a ſweet vertue in a maid with cleane hands. Enter Speed.

Speed. How now Signior Launce? what newes with your Maſterſhip?
La. With my Maſterſhip? why, it is at Sea:
Sp. Well, your old vice ſtill: miſtake the word: what newes then in your paper?
La. The black'ſt newes that ever thou heard'ſt.
Sp. Why man? how blacke?
La. Why, as blacke as Inke.
Sp. Let me read them?
La. Fie on thee Iolt-head, thou canſt not read.
Sp. Thou lyeſt: I can.
La. I will try thee: tell me this: who begot thee?

Sp. Marry, the ſon of my Grand-father.

La. Oh illiterate loyterer; it was the ſonne of thy Grand-mother: this proves that thou canſt not read.

Sp. Come foole, come: try me in thy paper.

La. There: and S. Nicolas be thy ſpeed.

Sp. Inprimis ſhe can milke.

La. I that ſhe can.

Sp. Item, ſhe brewes good Ale.

La. And thereof comes the proverbe: (Bleſſing of your heart, you brew good Ale.)

Sp. Item, ſhe can ſowe.

La. That's as much as to ſay (Can ſhe ſo)

Sp. Item ſhe can knit.

La. What neede a man care for a ſtock with a wench, When ſhe can knit him a ſtocke?

Sp. Item, ſhe can waſh and ſcoure.

La. A ſpeciall vertue: for then ſhe neede not to be waſh'd and ſcowr'd.

Sp. Item, ſhe can ſpin.

La. Then may I ſet the world on wheeles, when ſhe can ſpin for her living.

Sp. Item, ſhe hath many nameleſſe vertues.

La. That's as much as to ſay Baſtard-vertues: that indeede know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.

Sp. Here followes her vices.

La. Cloſe at the heeles of her vertues:

Sp. Item, ſhe is not to bee faſting in reſpect of her breath.

La. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfaſt: read on.

Sp. Item, ſhe hath a ſweet mouth.

La. That makes amends for her ſowre breath.

Sp. Item, ſhe doth talke in her ſleepe.

La. It's no matter for that; ſo ſhe ſleepe not in her talke.

Sp. Item, ſhe is ſlow in words.

La. Oh villanie, that ſet downe among her vices;
To be ſlow in words is a womans onely vertue:
I pray thee out with't, and place it for her chiefe vertue.

Sp. Item, ſhe is proud.

La. Out with that too:
It was Eves legacie, and cannot be tane from her.

Sp. Item, ſhe hath no teeth.

La. I care not for that neither, becauſe I love cruſts.

Sp. Item, ſhe is curſt.

La. Well: the beſt is ſhe hath no teeth to bite.

Sp. Item, ſhe will often praiſe her liquor.

La. If her liquor be good, ſhe ſhall: if ſhe will not, I will; for good things ſhould be prayſed.

Sp. Item, ſhe is too liberall.

La. Of her tongue ſhe cannot; for that's writ downe ſhe is ſlow of: of her purſe, ſhe ſhall not, for that ile keepe ſhut: Now, of another thing ſhe may, and that cannot I helpe. Well, proceede.

Sp. Item, ſhe hath more haires then wit, and more faults then haires, and more wealth then faults.

La. Stop there: Ile have her: ſhe was mine, and not mine twice, or thrice in that Article: rehearſe that once more.

Sp. Item, ſhe hath more haire then wit.

La. More haire then wit: it may be ile prove it: The cover of the ſalt, hides the ſalt, and therefore it is more then the ſalt; the haire that covers the wit, is more then the wit: for the greater hides the leſſe: What's next?

Sp. And more faults then haires.

La. That's monſtrous: oh that that were out.

Sp. And more wealth then faults.

La. Why that word makes the faults gracious
Well, ile have her: and if it be a match, as nothing is impoſſible.

Sp. What then?

La. Why then, will I tell thee, that thy Maſter ſtayes for thee at the North-gate.

Sp. For me?

La. For thee? I, who art thou? he hath ſtaid for a better man then thee.

Sp. And muſt I goe to him?

La. Thou muſt run to him; for thou haſt ſtaid ſo long that going will ſcarce ſerve the turne.

Sp. Why didſt not tell me ſooner? 'pox of your love Letters.

La. Now will he be ſwing'd for reading my Letter;
An unmannerly ſlave, that will thruſt himſelfe into ſecrets: Ile after, to rejoyce in the boyes correction. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Duke, Thurio, Protheus.

Du. Sir Thurio, feare not, but that ſhe will love you
Now Valentine is baniſh'd from her ſight.

Th. Since his exile ſhe hath deſpis'd me moſt,
Forſworne my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am deſperate of obtaining her.

Du. This weake impreſſe of love, is as a figure
Trenched in ice, which with an houres heate
Diſſolves to water, and doth looſe his forme.
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthleſſe Valentine ſhall be forgot.
How now Sir Protheus, is your countriman
(According to our Proclamation) gon?

Pro. Gon, my good Lord.

Du. My daughter takes his going heavily?

Pro. A litttle time (my Lord) will kill that grieſe.

Du. So I beleeve: but Thurio thinkes not ſo:
Protheus, the good conceit I hold of thee,
(For thou haſt ſhowne ſome ſigne of good deſert)
Makes me the better to confer with thee.

Pro. Longer then I prove royall to your Grace,
Let me not live, to looke upon you Grace.

Du. Thou know'ſt how willingly, I would effect
The match betweene ſir Thurio, and my daughter?

Pro. I doe my Lord.

Du. And alſo I doe thinke, thou art not ignorant
How ſhe oppoſes her againſt my will?

Pro. She did my Lord, when Valentine was here.

Du. I, and perverſly, ſhe perſevers ſo:
What might we doe to make the girle forget
The Love of Valentene, and love ſir Thurio?

Pro. The beſt way is to ſlander Valentine,
With falſehood, cowardize, and poore deſcent:
Three things, that women highly hold in hate.

Du. I, but ſhe'll thinke, that it is ſpoke in hate.

Pro. I, if his enemie deliver it.
Therefore it muſt with circumſtance be ſpoken
By one, whom ſhe eſteemes as his friend.

Du. Then you muſt undertake to ſlander him.

Pro. And that (my Lord) I ſhall be loath to doe.
'Tis an ill office for a Gentleman,
Eſpecially againſt his very friend.
Du. Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your ſlander never can endamage him;
Therefore the office is indifferent,
Being intreated to it by your friend.
Por. You haue prevail'd (my Lord) if I can doe it
By ought that I can ſpeake in his diſpraiſe,
She ſhall not long continue love to him:
But ſay this weede her love from Valentine,
It followes not that ſhe will love ſir Thurio.
Th. Therefore as you unwinde her love from him;
Leaſt it ſhould ravell, and be good to none,
You muſt provide to bottome it on me:
Which muſt be done, by prayſing me as much
As you, in worth diſprayſe, ſir Valentine.
Du. And Protheus, we dare truſt you in this kinde,
Becauſe we know (on Valentines report)
You are already loves firme votary,
And cannot ſoone revolt, and change your minde.
Vpon this warrant, ſhall you have acceſſe,
Where you, with Silvia may conferre at large.
For ſhe is lumpiſh, heavy, melancholly,
And (for your friends ſake) will be glad of you;
Where you may temper her, by your perſwaſion,
To hate yong Valentine, and love my friend.
Pro. As much as I can doe, I will effect:
But you ſir Thurio, are not ſharpe enough:
You muſt lay Lime, to tangle her deſires
By wailefull Sonnets, whoſe compoſed Rimes
Should be full fraught with ſerviceable vowes.
Du. I, much is the force of heaven-bred Poeſie.
Pro. Say that upon the altar of her beauty
You ſacrifice your teares, your ſighes, your heart:
Write till your inke be dry; and with your teares
Moiſt it againe: and frame ſome feeling line,
That may diſcover ſuch integrity:
For Orpheus Lute, was ſtrung with Poets ſinewes,
Whoſe golden touch could ſoften ſteele and ſtones;
Make Tygers tame, and huge Leviathans
Forſake unſounded deepes, and dance on Sands.
After your dire-lamenting Elegies,
Viſit by night your Ladies chamber-window
With ſome ſweet Conſort; To their Inſtruments
Tune a deploring dumpe: the nights dead ſilence
Will well become ſuch ſweet complaining grievance:
This, or elſe nothing, will inherit her.
Du. This diſcipline, ſhowes thou haſt bin in love.
Th. And thy advice, this night, ile put in practiſe:
Therefore, ſweet Protheus, my direction-giver,
Let us into the City preſently
To ſort ſome gentlemen, well skil'd in Muſique.
I have a Sonnet, that will ſerve the turne
To give the on-ſet to thy good advice.
Du. About it Gentlemen.
Pro. We'll wait upon your Grace, till after Supper,
And afterward determine our proceedings.
Du. Even now about it, I will pardon you. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Valentine, Speed, and certaine Out-Lawes.

1. Out-l. Fellowes, ſtand faſt: I ſee a paſſenger.
2. Out. If there be ten, ſhrinkd not, but down with'em.
3. Out. Stand ſir, and throw us that you have about'ye.
If not: we'll make you ſit, and rifle you.
Sp. Sir we are undone; theſe are the Villaines
That all the Travaillers doe feare ſo much.
Val. My friends.
1. Out. That's not ſo, ſir: we are your enemies.
2. Out. Peace: we'll heare him.
3. Out. I by my beard will we: for he is a proper man.
Val. Then know that I have little to loſe;
A man I am, croſs'd with adverſitie:
My riches, are theſe poore habiliments,
Of which, if you ſhould here diſfurniſh me,
You take the ſum and ſubſtance that I have.
2. Out. Whither travell you?
Val. To Verona.
1. Out. Whence came you?
Val. From Millaine.
3. Out. Have you long ſojourn'd there? (ſtaid,
Val. Some ſixteene moneths, and longer might have
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.
1. Out. What, were you baniſh'd thence?
Va. I was.
2. Out. For what offence?
Va. For that which now torments me to rehearſe;
I kil'd a man, whoſe death I much repent,
But yet I ſlew him manfully in fight,
Without falſe vantage, or baſe treachery.
1. Out. Why nere repent it, if it were done ſo;
But were you baniſht for ſo ſmall a fault?
Va. I was, and held me glad of ſuch a doome.
2. Out. Have you the Tongues?
Va. My youthfull travaile, therein made me happy,
Or elſe I often had beene miſerable.
3. Out. By the bare ſcalpe of Robin hoods fat Fryer,
This fellow were a King, for our wilde faction.
1. Out. We'll have him: Sirs, a word.
Sp. Maſter, be one of them:
It's an honerable kinde of theevery.
Va. Peace villaine.
2. Out. Tell us this: have you any things to take to?
Va. Nothing but my fortune.
3. Out. Know then, that ſome of us are Gentlemen,
Such as the furie of ungovern'd youth
Thruſt from the company of awfull men.
My ſelfe was from Verona baniſhed,
For practiſing to ſteale away a Lady,
And heire and Neece, allide unto the Duke.
2. Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman,
Who, in my moode, I ſtab'd unto the heart.
1. Out. And I, for ſuch like petty crimes as theſe.
But to the purpoſe: for we cite our faults,
That they may hold excus'd our lawleſſe lives;
And partly ſeeing you are beautifide
With goodly ſhape; and by your owne report,
A Linguiſt, and a man of ſuch perfection,
As we doe in our quality much want.
2. Out. Indeede becauſe you are a baniſh'd man,
Therefore, above the reſt, we parley to you:
Are you content to be our Generall?
To make a vertue of neceſſitie,
And live as we doe in the wilderneſſe?
3. Out. What ſaiſt thou? wilt thou be of our conſort?
Say I, and be the captaine of us all:
We'll doe thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,
Love thee as our Commander, and our King.

1. Out. But if thou ſcorne our curteſie, thou dyeſt.
2. Out. Thou ſhalt not live, to brag what we have of-
Val. I take your offer, and will live with you, (fer'd.
Provided that you do no outrages
On ſilly women, or poore paſſengers.
3. Out. No, we deteſt ſuch vile baſe practiſes.
Come, goe with us, we'll bring thee to our Crewes,
And ſhew thee all the Treaſure we have got;
Which, with our ſelves, all reſt at thy diſpoſe. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Prothens, Thurio, Iulia, Hoſt, Muſitian, Silvia.

Pro. Already have I bin falſe to Valentine,
And now I muſt be as unjuſt to Thurio,
Vnder the colour of commending him,
I have acceſſe my owne love to prefer.
But Silvia is too faire, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthleſſe guifts;
When I proteſt true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falſehood to my friend;
When to her beauty I commend my vowes,
She bids me thinke how I have bin forſworne
In breaking faith with Iulia, whom I lov'd;
And notwithſtandiug all her ſodaine quips,
The leaſt whereof would quell a lovers hope:
Yet (Spaniel-like) the more ſhe ſpurnes my love,
The more it growes, and fawneth on her ſtill;
But here comes Thurio; now muſt we to her window,
And give ſome evening Muſique to her eare.
Th. How now, ſir Prothens, are you crept before us?
Pro. I gentle Thurio, for you know that love
Will creepe in ſervice, where it cannot goe.
Thu. I, but I hope, Sir, that you love not here.
Pro. Sir, but I doe: or elſe I would be hence.
Thu. Whom, Silvia?
Pro. I, Silvia, for your ſake.
Thu. I thanke you for your owne: Now Gentlemen
Let's turne: and too it luſtily a while.
Ho. Now, my young gueſt; me thinks you'r allycholly;
I pray you what is it?
Iu. Marry (mine Hoſt) becauſe I cannot be merry.
Ho. Come, wee'll have you merry: ile bring you where you ſhall heare Muſique, and ſee the Gentleman that you ask'd for.
Iu. But ſhall I heare him ſpeake.
Ho. I that you ſhall.
Iu. That will be Muſique.
Ho. Harke, harke.
Iu. Is he among theſe?
Ho. I: but peace, let's heare'm.

Song. Who is Silvia? what is ſhe?
That all our Swaines commend her?
Holy, faire, and wiſe is ſhe,
The heaven ſuch grace did lend her,
that ſhe might admired be.
Is ſhe kinde as ſhe is faire?
For beautie lives with kindneſſe,
Love doth to her eyes repaire,
To helpe him of his blindneſſe:
And being help'd, inhabits there.
Then to Silvia, let us ſing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortall thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling.
To her let us Garlands bring.

Ho. How now? are you ſadder then you were before;
How doe you, man? the Muſicke likes you not.
Iu. You miſtake: the Muſitian likes me not.
Ho. Why, my pretty youth?
Iu. He plaies falſe (father.)
Ho. How, out of tune on the ſtrings?
Iu. Not ſo: but yet
So falſe that he grieves my very heart-ſtrings.
Ho. You have a quicke eare. (heart.
Iu. I, I would I were deafe: it makes me have a ſlow
Ho. I perceive you delight not in Muſicke.
Iu. Not a whit, when it jars ſo.
Ho. Harke what fine change is in the Muſicke.
Iu. I: that change is the ſpight.
Ho. You would have them alwaies play but one thing.
Iu. I would alwayes have one play but one thing.
But Hoſt, doth this Sir Prothens, that we talke on,
Often reſort unto this Gentlewoman?
Ho. I tell you what Launce his man told me,
He lov'd her out of all nicke.
Iu. Where is Launce?
Ho. Gone to ſeeke his dog, which to morrow, by his Maſters command, hee muſt carry for a preſent to his Lady.
Iu. Peace, ſtand aſide, the company parts.
Pro. Sir Thurio, feare not I will ſo pleade,
That you ſhall ſay, my cunning drift excels.
Th. Where meete we?
Pro. At Saint Gregories well.
Th. Farewell.
Pro. Madam: good ev'n to your Ladiſhip.
Sil. I thanke you for your Muſicke (Gentlemen)
Who is that that ſpake?
Pro. One (Lady) if you knew his pure hearts truth,
You would quickly learne to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Prothens, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Prothens (gentle Lady) and your Servant.
Sil. What's your will?
Pro. That I may compaſſe yours.
Sil. You have your wiſh: my will is ever this,
That preſently you hie you home to bed:
Thou ſubtile, perjur'd, falſe, diſloyall man:
Think'ſt thou I am ſo ſhallow, ſo conceitleſſe,
To be ſeduced by thy flattery,
That has't deceiv'd ſo many with thy vowes?
Returne, returne, and make thy love amends:
For me (by this pale queene of night I ſweare)
I am ſo farre from granting thy requeſt,
That I deſpiſe thee, for thy wrongfull ſuite;
And by and by intend to chide my ſelfe,
Even for this time I ſpend in talking to thee.
Pro. I grant (ſweet love) that I did love a Lady,
But ſhe is dead.
Iu. 'Twere falſe, if I ſhould ſpeake it;
For I am ſure ſhe is not buried.
Sil. Say that ſhe be: yet Valentine thy friend
Survives; to whom (thy ſelfe art witneſſe)
I am betroth'd; and art thou not aſham'd
To wrong him, with thy importunacy?

Pro. I likewiſe heare that Valentine is dead.
Sil. And ſo ſuppoſe am I; for in his grave
Aſſure thy ſelfe, my love is buried.
Pro. Sweet Lady, let me rake it from the earth.
Sil. Goe to thy Ladies grave and call hers thence,
Or at the leaſt, in hers, ſepulcher thine.
Iul. He heard not that.
Pro. Madam: if your heart be ſo obdurate:
Vouchſafe me yet your Picture for my love,
The Picture that is hanging in your chamber:
To that Ile ſpeake, to that Ile ſigh and weepe:
For ſince the ſubſtance of your perfect ſelfe
Is elſe devoted, I am but a ſhadow;
And to your ſhadow, will I make true love.
Iul. If 'twere a ſubſtance you would ſure deceive it,
And make it but a ſhadow, as I am.
Sil. I am very loath to be your Idoll Sir;
But, ſince your falſehood ſhall become you well
To worſhip ſhadowes, and adore falſe ſhapes,
Send to me in the morning, and ile ſend it:
And ſo, good reſt.
Pro. As wretches have ore-night
That wait for execution in the morne. Exeunt.
Iul. Hoſt, will you goe?
Ho. By my hallidome, I was faſt aſleepe.
Iul. Pray you where lies Sir Protheus?
Ho. Marry, at my houſe:
Truſt me, I thinke 'tis almoſt day.
Iul. Not ſo: but it hath bin the longeſt night
That ere I watch'd, and the moſt heavieſt. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Eglamore, Silvia.

Eg. This is the houre that Madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her minde:
Ther's ſome great matter ſhe'ld employ me in.
Madam, Madam.
Sil. Who cals?
Eg. Your ſervant, and your friend;
One that attends your Ladiſhips command.
Sil. Sir Eglamore, a thouſand times good morrow.
Eg. As many (worthy Lady) to your ſelfe:
According to your Ladiſhips impoſe,
I am thus early come, to know what ſervice
It is your pleaſure to command me in.
Sil. Oh Eglamore, thou art a Gentleman:
Thinke not I flatter (for I ſweare I doe not)
Valiant, wiſe, remorſe-full, well accompliſh'd.
Thou art not ignorant what deere good will
I beare unto the baniſh'd Valentine:
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vaine Thurio (whom my very ſoule abhor'd)
Thy ſelfe haſt lov'd, and I have heard thee ſay
No griefe did come ſo neere thy heart,
As when thy Lady, and thy true-love di'de,
Vpon whoſe Grave thou vow'dſt pure chaſtitie:
Sir Eglamore: I would to Valentine
To Mantua, where I heare, he makes aboad;
And for the wayes are dangerous to paſſe,
I doe deſire thy worthy company,
Vpon whoſe faith and honor, I repoſe.
Vrge not my fathers anger (Eglamore)
But thinke upon my griefe (a Ladies griefe)
And on the juſtice of my flying hence,
To keepe me from a moſt unholy match,
Which heaven and fortune ſtill rewards with plagues.
I doe deſire thee, even from a heart
As full of ſorrowes, as the Sea of ſands,
To beare me company and goe with me:
If not, to hide what I have ſayd to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.
Eg. Madam, I pitty much your grievances,
Which, ſince I know they vertuouſly are plac'd,
I give conſent to goe along with you,
Wreaking as little what betideth me,
As much, I wiſh all good befortune you.
When will you goe?
Sil. This evening comming.
Eg. Where ſhall I meete you?
Sil. At Frier Patrickes Cell,
Where I intend holy confeſſion.
Eg. I will not faile your Ladiſhip:
Good morrow (gentle Lady.)
Sil. Good morrow, kinde Sir Eglamore. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Launce, Protheus, Iulia, Silvia.

Lau. When a mans ſervant ſhall play the Curre with him (looke you) it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I ſav'd from drowning, when three or foure of his blinde brothers and ſiſters went to it: I have taught him (even as one would ſay preciſely, thus I would teach a dog) I was ſent to deliver him, as a preſent to Miſtris Silvia, from my Maſter; and I came no ſooner into the dyning-chamber, but he ſteps me to her Trencher, and ſteals her Capons-leg: O, 'tis a foule thing, when a Cur cannot keepe himſelfe in all companies: I would have (as one ſhould ſay) one that takes upon him to be a dog indeede, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit then he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I thinke verily he had bin hang'd for't: ſure as I live he had ſuffer'd for't: you ſhall judge: He thruſts me himſelfe into the company of three or foure gentleman-like-doggs, under the Dukes table: he had not bin there (bleſſe the marke) a piſſing while, but all the chamber ſmelt him: out with the dog (ſaies one) what cur is that (ſaies another) whip him out (ſaies the third) hang him up (ſaies the Duke.) I having bin acquainted with the ſmell before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogges: friend (quoth I) you meane to whip the dog: I marry doe I (quoth he) you doe him the more wrong (quoth I) 'twas I did the thing you wot of: he makes me no more adoe, but whips me out of the chamber: how many Maſters would doe this for his ſervant? nay, ile be ſworne I have ſat in the ſtockes for puddings he hath ſtolne, otherwiſe he had bin executed: I have ſtood on the Pillorie for Geeſe he hath kil'd, otherwiſe he had ſufferd for't: thou think'ſt not of this now: nay, I remember the tricke you ſerv'd me, when I tooke my leave of Madam Silvia: did not I bid thee ſtill marke me,and doe as I do;when did'ſt thou ſee me heave up my leg, and make water againſt a Gentlewomans farthingale? did'ſt thou ever ſee me doe

ſuch a tricke?
Pro. Sebaſtian is thy name: I like thee well,
And will imploy thee in ſome ſervice preſently.
Iu. In what you pleaſe, ile doe Sir what I can.
Pro. I hope thou wilt.
How now you whor-ſon pezant,
Where have you bin theſe two dayes loytering?
La. Mary Sir, I carried Miſtris Silvia the dogge you bade me.
Pro. And what ſayes ſhe to my little Iewell?
La. Marry ſhe ſaies your dog was a cur,and tells you curriſh thankes is good enough for ſuch a preſent.
Pro. But ſhe receiv'd my dog?
La. No indeede did ſhe not:
Here have I brought him backe againe.
Pro. What, didſt thou offer her this from me?
La. I Sir,the other Squirrill was ſtolne from me
By the hangmans boy in the market place,
And then I offer'd her mine owne, who is a dog
As big as ten of yours,& therefore the gift the greater.
Pro. Goe, get thee hence, and finde my dog againe,
Or nere returne againe into my ſight.
Away, I ſay: ſtayeſt thou to vexe me here;
A ſlave, that ſtill an end, turnes me to ſhame. Exit.
Sebaſtian, I have entertained thee,
Partly that I have need of ſuch a youth,
That can with ſome diſcretion do my buſineſſe:
For 'tis no truſting to yond fooliſh Lowt;
But chiefely, for thy face, and thy behaviour,
Which (if my Augury deceive me not)
Witneſſe good bringing up, fortune, and truth:
Therefore know thou, for this I entertaine hee.
Go preſently and take this Ring with thee,
Deliver it to Madam Silvia;
She lov'd me well, deliver'd it to me.
Iul. It ſeemes you lov'd not her, to leave her token:
She is dead belike?
Pro. Not ſo: I thinke ſhe lives.
Iul. Alas.
Pro. Why do'ſt thou cry alas?
Iul. I cannot chooſe but pitty her.
Pro. Wherefore ſhould'ſt thou pitty her?
Iul. Becauſe, me thinkes that ſhe lov'd you as well
As you doe love your Lady Silvia:
She dreames on him, that has forgot her love;
You doate on her, that cares not for your love.
'Tis pitty Love ſhould be ſo contrary:
And thinking on it, makes me cry alas.
Pro. Well: give her that Ring,and therewithall
This Letter: that's her chamber: Tell my Lady,
I claime the promiſe for her heavenly Picture:
Your meſſage done, hye home unto my chamber,
Where thou ſhalt finde me ſad, and ſolitarie. Exit.
Iul. How many women would doe ſuch a meſſage?
Alas poore Protheus, thou haſt entertain'd
A Foxe, to be the Shepheard of thy Lambs;
Alas,poore foole, why doe I pitty him
That with his very heart deſpiſeth me?
Becauſe he loves her, he deſpiſeth me,
Becauſe I love him, I muſt pitty him.
This Ring I gave him, when he parted from me,
To binde him to remember my good will:
And now am I (unhappy Meſſenger)
To plead for that, which I would not obtaine;
To carry that, which I would have refus'd;
To praiſe his faith which I would have diſprais'd.
I am my Maiſters true confirmed love,
But cannot be true ſervant to my Maiſter,
Vnleſſe I prove falſe traitor to my ſelfe.
Yet will I wooe for him,but yet ſo coldly, Enter
As(heaven it knows) I would not have him ſpeed. Silvia.
Gentlewoman, good day: I pray you be my meane
To bring me where to ſpeake with Madam Silvia.
Sil. What would you with her, if that I be ſhe?
Iul. If you be ſhe, I doe intreat your patience
To heare me ſpeake the meſſage I am ſent on.
Sil. From whom?
Iul. From my Maſter, Sir Protheus, Madam.
Sil. Oh: he ſends you for a Picture?
Iul. I, Madam.
Sil. Vrſula, bring my Picture there,
Goe, give your Maſter this: tell him from me,
One Iulia, that his changing thoughts forget,
Would better fit his Chamber, then this Shadow.
Iu. Madam, pleaſe you peruſe this Letter;
Pardon me (Madam) I have unadvis'd
Deliver'd you a paper that I ſhould not;
This is the Letter to your Ladiſhip.
Sil. I pray thee let me looke on that againe.
Iu. It may not be: good Madam pardon me.
Sil. There, hold:
I will not looke upon your Maſters lines:
I know they are ſtuft with proteſtations,
And full of new-found oathes, which he will breake
As eaſie as I do teare his paper.
Iu. Madam, he ſends your Ladiſhip this Ring.
Si. The more ſhame for him, that he ſends it me;
For I have heard him ſay a thouſand times,
His Iulia gave it him, at his departure:
Though his falſe finger have prophan'd the Ring,
Mine ſhall not doe his Iulia ſo much wrong.
Iu. She thankes you.
Si. What ſai'ſt thou?
Iu. I thanke you Madam, that you tender her:
Poore Gentlewoman, my Maſter wrongs her much.
Si. Do'ſt thou know her?
Iu. Almoſt as well as I doe know my ſelfe.
To thinke upon her woes, I do proteſt
That I have wept a hundred ſeverall times.
Si. Belike ſhe thinks that Protheus hath forſook her?
Iu. I thinke ſhe doth: and that's her cauſe of ſorrow.
Si. Is ſhe not paſſing faire?
Iu. She hath bin fairer (Madam) then ſhe is,
When ſhe did thinke my Maſter lov'd her well;
She, in my judgement, was as faire as you.
But ſince ſhe did neglect her looking glaſſe,
And threw her Sun-expelling Maſque away,
The ayre hath ſtarv'd the roſes in her cheekes,
And pinch'd the lilly-tincture of her face,
That now ſhe is become as blacke as I.
Sil. How tall was ſhe?
Iu. About my ſtature: for at Pentecoſt,
When all our Pageants of delight were plaid,
Our youth got me to play the womans part,
And I was trim'd in Madam Iulias gowne,
Which ſerved me as fit, by all mens judgements,
As if the garment had bin made for me:
Therefore I know ſhe is about my height;
And at that time I made her weepe agood,

For I did play a lamentable part.
(Madam) 'twas Ariadne, paſſioning
For Theſeus periury, and unjuſt flight;
Which I ſo lively acted with my teares:
That my poore Miſtris moved therewithall,
Wept bitterly: and would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very ſorrow.
Sil. She is beholding to thee (gentle youth)
Alas, (poore Lady) deſolate, and left;
I weepe my ſelfe to thinke upon thy words:
Here youth: there is a purſe; I give thee this
For thy ſweet Miſtris ſake, becauſe thou lov'ſt her.
Farewell. Exit.
Iul. And ſhe ſhall thanke you for't, if ere you know
A vertuous gentlewoman, milde, and beautifull. (her.
I hope my Maiſter's ſuit will be but cold,
Since ſhe reſpects my Miſtris love ſo much.
Alas, how love can trifle with it ſelfe:
Here is her Picture: let me ſee, I thinke
If I had ſuch a Tyre, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And yet the Painter flatter'd her a little,
Vnleſſe I flatter with my ſelfe too much.
Her haire is Aburne, mine is perfect Yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
Ile get me ſuch a colour'd Perriwig:
Her eyes are grey as graſſe, and ſo are mine:
I, but her fore-head's low, and mine's as high:
What ſhould it be that he reſpects in her,
But I can make reſpectiue in my ſelfe,
If this fond love, were not a blinded god?
Come ſhadow, come, and take this ſhadow up,
For 'tis thy rivall: O thou ſenceleſſe forme.
Thou ſhalt be worſhip'd, kiſs'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
And were there ſence in his Idolatry,
My ſubſtance ſhould be ſtatue in thy ſtead.
Ile uſe thee kindly, for thy miſtris ſake
That us'd me ſo: or elſe by Iove, I vow,
I ſhould have ſcratch'd out your unſeeing eyes,
To make my Maiſter out of love with thee. Exit.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Eglamoure, Slvia.

Egl. The Sun begins to guild the weſterne skie,
And now it is about the very houre
That Silvia, at Fryer Patrickes Cell ſhould meet me,
She will not faile; for Lovers breake not houres,
Vnleſſe it be to come before their time,
So much they ſpur their expedition.
See where ſhe comes: Lady a happy evening.
Sil. Amen, Amen: goe on (good Eglamoure)
Out at the Poſterne by the Abbey wall;
I feare I am attended by ſome Spies.
Egl. Feare not: the Forreſt is not three leagues off,
If we recover that, we are ſure enough. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Thurio, Protheus, Iulia, Duke.

Th. Sir Protheus, what ſayes Silvia to my ſuit?
Pro. Oh Sir, I finde her milder then ſhe was,
And yet ſhe takes exceptions at your perſon.
Thu. What? that my leg is too long?
Pro. No, that it is too little. (der.
Thu. Ile weare a Boote, to make it ſomewhat roun-
Pro. But love will not be ſpurd to what it loathes.
Thu. What ſayes ſhe to my face?
Pro. She ſaies it is a faire one.
Thu. Nay then the wanton lyes: my face is blacke.
Pro. But Pearles are faire; and the old ſaying is,
Blacke men are Pearles, in beauteous Ladyes eyes.
Thu. 'Tis true, ſuch Pearles as put out Ladies eyes.
For I had rather winke, then looke on them.
Thu. How likes ſhe my diſcourſe?
Pro. Ill, when you talke of war.
Thu. But well, when I diſcourſe of love and peace.
Iul. But better indeed, when you hold you peace.
Thn. What ſayes ſhe to my valour?
Pro. Oh Sir, ſhe makes no doubt of that.
Iul. She needes not, when ſhe knowes it cowardize.
Thu. What ſayes ſhe to my birth?
Pro. That you are well deriv'd.
Iu. True: from a Gentleman to a foole.
Thu. Conſiders ſhe my poſſeſſions?
Pro. Oh I: and pitties them.
Thu. Wherefore?
Iu. That ſuch an Aſſe ſhould owe them.
Pro. That they are out by Leaſe.
Iu. Here comes the Duke.
Du. How now ſir Protheus; how now Thurio?
Which of you ſay ſaw Sir Eglamoure of late?
Thu. Not I.
Pro. Nor I.
Du. Saw you my daughter?
Pro. Neyther.
Du. Why then
She's fled unto the pezant, Valentine;
And Eglamoure is in her companie:
'Tis true: for Frier Laurence met them both.
As he, in pennance wander'd through the Forreſt:
Him he knew well: and gueſd that it was ſhe,
But being mask'd, he was not ſure of it.
Beſides ſhe did intend Confeſſion
At Patricks Cell this even, and there ſhe was not.
Theſe likelihoods confirme her flight from hence;
Therefore I pray you ſtand not to diſcourſe,
But mount you preſently, and meete with me
Vpon the riſing of the Mountaine foote
That leads toward Mantua, whither they are fled:
Diſpatch (ſweet Gentlemen) and follow me.
Thu. Why this it is, to be a peeviſh Girle,
That flies her fortune where it followes her:
Ile after; more to be reveng'd on Eglamoure,
Then for the love of reck-leſſe Silvia.
Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvias love
Then hate of Eglamoure that goes with her.
Iu. And I will follow, more to croſſe that love
Then hate for Silvia, that is gone for love. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Siliva, Out-lawes.

1. Out. Come, come be patient:

We muſt bring you to our Captaine.
Sil. A thouſand more miſchances then this one
Have learn'd me how to brooke this patiently.
2 Out. Come, bring her away.
1 Out. Where is the Gentleman that was with her.
3 Out. Being nimble footed, he hath out-run us.
But Moyſes and Valerius follow him:
Goe thou with her to the Weſt end of the Wood,
There is our Captaine: wee'll follow him thats fled,
The thicket is beſet, he cannot ſcape.
1 Out. Come, I muſt bring you to our Captaines Cave.
Feare not: he beares an honourable mind,
And will not vſe a woman lawleſly.
Sil. O Valentine: this I endure for thee.
Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Valentine, Protheus, Silvia, Iulia, Duke, Thurio, Out-lawes.

Val. How uſe doth breed a habite in a man?
This ſhadowy Deſart, unfrequented woods,
I better brooke then flouriſhing peopled townes:
Here can I ſit alone, un-ſeene of any,
And to the Nightingales complaining Notes;
Tune my diſtreſſes, and record my woes.
O thou that doſt inhabit in my breſt,
Leave not the Manſion ſo long Tenantleſſe,
Leſt growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was,
Repaire me with thy preſence, Silvia:
Thou Gentle Nymph, cheriſh thy forlorne Swaine.
What hallowing, and what ſtirre is this to day?
Theſe are my mates, that make their wils their Law,
Have ſome unhappy paſſenger in chace;
They love me well, yet I have much to doe
To keepe them from uncivill outrages.
Withdraw thee Valentine: who's this comes here?
Pro. Madam, this ſervice I have done for you,
(Though you reſpect not ought your ſervant doth)
To hazzard life, and reskew you from him,
That would have forc'd your honour and your love,
Vouchſafe me for my meed, but one faire looke:
(A ſmaller boone than this, I cannot beg,
And leſſe than this, I am ſure you cannot give.)
Val. How like a dreame is this? I ſee and heare:
Love, lend me patience to forbeare a while.
Sil. O miſerable, unhappy that I am.
Pro. Vnhappy were you (Madam) ere I came:
But by my comming, I have made you happy.
Sil. By thy approach thou mak'ſt me moſt unhappy.
Iu. And me, when he approcheth to your preſence.
Sil. Had I beene ſeazed by a hungry Lion,
I would have beene a breakfaſt to the Beaſt,
Rather than have falſe Protheus reskew me:
O heaven be judge how I love Valentine,
Whoſe life's as tender to me as my ſoule,
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I doe deteſt falſe perjur'd Protheus:
Therefore be gone, ſolicit me no more.
Pro. What dangerous action, ſtood it next to death,
Would I not undergoe for one calme looke:
Oh, tis the curſe in Love, and ſtill approv'd,
When women cannot love, where they're belov'd.
Sil. When Protheus cannot love, where he's belov'd:
Reade over Iulia's heart, (thy firſt beſt Love)
For whoſe deare ſake thou didſt then rend thy faith
Into a thouſand oathes; and all thoſe oathes,
Deſcended into perjury to deceive me,
Thou haſt no faith left now, unleſſe thou'dſt two,
And that's farre worſe than none: better have none
Then plurall faith, which is too much by one:
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend.
Pro. In love,
Who reſpects friend?
Sil. All men but Protheus.
Pro. Nay, if the gentle ſpirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder forme;
Ile move you like a Souldier, at armes end,
And love you 'gainſt the nature of love: force ye.
Sil. Oh heaven.
Pro. Ile force thee yeeld to my deſire.
Val. Ruffian, let goe that rude uncivill touch,
Thou friend of an ill faſhion.
Pro. Valentine!
Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or love.
For ſuch is a friend now: Thou treacherous man,
Thou haſt beguil'd my hopes; nought but mine eye
Could have perſwaded me: now I dare not ſay
I have one friend alive; thou wouldſt diſprove me:
Who ſhould be truſted now, when ones right hand
Is perjured to the boſome? Protheus
I am ſorry I muſt never truſt thee more,
But count the world a ſtranger for thy ſake:
The private wound is deepeſt: oh time, moſt accurſt:
'Mongſt all foes, that a friend ſhould be the worſt?
Pro. My ſhame and guilt confounds me:
Forgive me Valentine: if hearty ſorrow
Be a ſufficient Ranſome for offence,
I tender't heere: I doe as truely ſuffer,
As ere I did commit.
Val. Then I am paid:
And once againe, I doe receive thee honeſt;
Who by Repentance is not ſatisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for theſe are pleas'd:
By Penitence th'Eternals wrath's appeas'd:
And that my love may appeare plaine and free,
All that was mine, in Silvia, I give thee.
Iu. Oh me unhappy.
Pro. Looke to the Boy.
Val. Why, Boy?
Why Wag: how now? what's the matter? looke up: ſpeak.
Iu. O good ſir, my Maſter charg'd me to deliver a Ring to Madam Silvia: which (out of my neglect) was never Pro. Where is that Ring? Boy? (done.
Iu. Heere 'tis: this is it.
Pro. How? let me ſee.
Why this is the Ring I gave to Iulia.
Iu. Oh, cry you mercy ſir, I have miſtooke:
This is the Ring you ſent to Silvia.
Pro. But how cam'ſt thou by this Ring? at my depart
I gave this unto Iulia.
Iu. And Iulia her ſelfe did give it me,
And Iulia her ſelfe hath brought it hither.
Pro. How? Iulia?
Iu. Behold her that gave ayme to all thy oathes,
And entertain'd 'em deepely in her heart.
How oft haſt thou with perjury cleft the roote?
Oh Protheus, let this habit make thee bluſh.

Be thou aſham'd that I have tooke upon me,
Such an immodeſt rayment; if ſhame live
In a diſguiſe of love?
It is the leſſer blot modeſty findes,
Women to change their ſhapes, than men their mindes.
Pro. Than men their minds? tis true, oh heaven, were
Man but conſtant, he were perfect; that one errour
Fils him with faults: makes him run through all th'ſins;
Inconſtancy fals off ere it begins:
What is in Silvia's face, but I may ſpie
More freſh in Iulia's, with a conſtant eye?
Val. Come, come: a hand from either:
Let me be bleſt to make this happy cloſe:
Twere pitty two ſuch friends ſhould be long foes:
Pro. Beare witneſſe (heaven) I have my wiſh for ever.
Iul. And I mine.
Out-l. A prize, a prize, a prize.
Val. Forbeare, forbeare I ſay: It is my Lord the Duke:
Your Grace is welcome to a man diſgrac'd,
Baniſhed Valentine.
Duke. Sir Valentine?
Thu. Yonder is Silvia: and Silvia's mine.
Val. Thurio give backe; or elſe imbrace thy death:
Come not within the meaſure of my wrath:
Doe not name Silvia thine: if once againe,
Verona ſhall not hold thee: here ſhe ſtands,
Take but poſſeſſion of her, with a Touch:
I dare thee, but to breathe vpon my Love.
Thur. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I:
I hold him but a foole that will endanger
His body, for a Girle that loves him not:
I claime her not, and therefore ſhe is thine.
Duke. The more degenerate and baſe art thou
To make ſuch meanes for her as thou haſt done,
And leave her on ſuch ſlight conditions.
Now, by the honour of my Anceſtry,
I doe applaud thy ſpirit, Valentine,
And thinke thee worthy of an Empreſſe love:
Know then, I here forget all former griefes,
Cancell all grudge, repeale thee home againe,
Plead a new ſtate in thy arrival'd merit,
To which I thus ſubſcribe: Sir Valentine,
Thou art a Gentleman, and well deriv'd,
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou haſt deſerv'd her.
Val. I thanke your Grace; the gift hath made me hap-
I now beſeech you (for your Daughters ſake) (py:
To grant one Boone that I ſhall aske of you.
Duke. I grant it (for thine owne) what ere it be.
Val Theſe baniſh'd men, that I have kept withall,
Are men endu'd with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here
And let them be recall'd from their exile:
They are reform'd, civill, full of good,
And fit for great imployment (worthy Lord.)
Duke. Thou haſt prevai'ld, I pardon them and thee:
Diſpoſe of them, as thou knowſt their deſerts.
Come, let us goe, we will include all jarres,
With Triumphes, Mirth, and all ſolemnity.
Val. And as we walke along, I dare be bold
With our diſcourſe, to make your Grace to ſmile.
What thinke you of this Page (my Lord?)
Duke. I thinke the Boy hath grace in him, he bluſhes.
Val. I warrant you (my Lord) more grace then Boy.
Duke. What meane you by that ſaying?
Val. Pleaſe you, Ile tell you as we paſſe along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned:
Come Protheus, tis your pennance but to heare
The ſtory of your Loves diſcovered.
That done, our day of marriage ſhall be yours,
One feaſt, one houſe, one mutuall happineſſe. Exeunt.

FINIS.

THE
Merry VVives of VVindſor.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Iuſtice Shallow, Slender, Sir Hugh Evans, Maſter Page, Falſtaffe, Bardolph, Nym, Piſtoll, Anne Page, Miſtreſſe Ford, Miſtreſſe Page, Simple.

Shallow.

SIr Hugh, perſwade me not: I will make a Star-Chamber matter of it, if hee were twenty Sir Iohn Falſtaffes, he ſhall not abuſe Robert Shallow, Eſquire.

Slen. In the County of Glooceſter, Iuſtice of Peace and (Coram.

Shal. I (Coſen Slender) and Cuſt-alorum.

Slen. I, and Rato-lorum too; and a Gentleman borne (Maſter Parſon) who writes himſelfe Armigero, in any Bill, Warrant, Quittance, or Obligation, Armigero.

Shal. I that I doe, and have done any time theſe three hundred yeeres.

Slen. All his ſucceſſors (gone before him) hath don't: and all his Anceſtors (that come after him) may: they may give the dozen white Luces in their Coat.

Shal. It is an old Coat.

Evans. The dozen white Lowſes doe become an old Coat well: it agrees well paſſant: It is a familiar beaſt to man, and ſignifies Love.

Shal. The Luce is the freſh-fiſh, the ſalt-fiſh, is an old Coat.

Slen. I may quarter (Coz.)

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Evans. It is marrying indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Fvans. Yes per-lady: if he has a quarter of your Coat, there is but three skirts for your ſelfe, in my ſimple conjectures; but that is all one: if Sir Iohn Falſtaffe have committed diſparagements unto you, I am of the Church and will be glad to doe my benevolence, to make attonements and compremiſes betweene you.

Shal. The Councell ſhall heare it, it is a Riot.

Evan. It is not meet the Councell heare of a Ryot: there is no feare of Got in a Ryot: The Councell (looke you) ſhall deſire to heare the feare of Got, and not to heare a Riot: take you viza-ments in that.

Shal. Ha; o' my life, if I were yong againe, the ſword ſhould end it.

Evans. It is petter that friends is the ſword, and end it: and there is alſo another device in my praine, which peradventure prings good diſcretions with it. There is Anne-Page, which is daughter to Maſter Thomas Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slen. Miſtris Anne Page? ſhe has browne haire, and ſpeakes like a woman.

Evans. It is that ferry perſon for all the orld, as juſt as you will deſire, and ſeven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, & ſilver, is her Grand-ſire upon his deaths-bed, (Got deliver to a joyfull Reſurrections) give, when ſhe is able to overtake ſeventeene yeeres old. It were a good motion, if we leave our pribbles and prabbles, and deſire a marriage betweene Maſter Abraham, and Miſtris Anne Page.

Slen. Did her Grand-ſire leave her ſeven hundred pound?

Evans. I, and her father is make her a petter penny.

Slen. I know the yong Gentlewoman, ſhee has good gifts.

Evan. Seven hundred pounds, and poſſibilitie is goot gifts.

Shal. Well, let us ſee honeſt Mr, Page: is Falſtaffe there?

Evan. Shall I tell you a lye? I doe deſpiſe a lyer, as I doe deſpiſe one that is falſe, or as I deſpiſe one that is not true: the Knight Sir Iohn is there, and I beſeech you bee ruled by your well-willers: I will peat the doore for Mr. Page. What hoa? Got bleſſe your houſe here.

Mr. Page. Who's there?

Evans. Here is got's pleſſing and your friend, and Iuſtice Shallow, and h[illegible]'s yong Maſter Slender: that peradventures ſhall tell [illegible] another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

Mr. Page. I am glad to ſee your Worſhips well: I thanke you for my Veniſon, Maſter Shallow.

Shal. Maſter Page, I am glad to ſee you: much good doe it your good heart: I wiſh'd your Veniſon better, it was ill kill'd: how doth good miſtreſſe Page? and I thank you alwayes with my heart, la: with my heart.

M. Page. Sir, I thanke you.

Shal. Sir, I thanke you: by yea and no I doe.

M. Page. I am glad to ſee you good Maſter Slender.

Slen. How do's your fallow Greyhound, Sir, I heard ſay he was out-run on Cotſale.

M. Pa. It could not be judg'd ſir.

Slen. You'll not confeſſe, you'll not confeſſe.

Shal. That he will not, 'tis your fault, 'tis your fault: 'tis a good dogge.

M. Page. A Cur ſir.

Shal. Sir, hee's a good Dog, and a faire Dog, can there be more ſaid? he is good, and faire. Is Sir Iohn Falſtaffe here?

M. Page. Sir, he is within: and I would I could doe a good office betweene you.

Evan. It is ſpoke as a Chriſtians ought to ſpeake.

Shal He hath wrong'd me (Maſter Page.)

M. Page. Sir, he doth in ſome ſort confeſſe it.

Shal. If it be confeſſed, it is not redreſſed; is not that ſo (M.Page?) he hath wrong'd me, indeed he hath, at a word he hath: beleeve me, Robert Shallow Eſquire, ſaith he is wrong'd.

Ma.Pa. Here comes Sir Iohn.

Fal. Now, Maſter Shallow, you'll complaine of mee to the King?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, kill'd my Deere, and broke open my Lodge.

Fal. But not kiſs'd your Keepers Daughter?

Shal. Tut a pin: this ſhall be anſwer'd.

Fal. I will anſwer it ſtrait, I have done all this:
That is now anſwer'd.

Shal. The Councell ſhall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you if it were knowne in councell: you'll be laugh'd at.

Evans. Pauca verba; (Sir Iohn) good worts.

Fal. Good worts? good Cabidge; Slender, I broke your head: what matter have you againſt me?

Slen. Marry ſir, I have matter in my head againſt you, and againſt your Cony-catching Raſcals, Bardolph, Nym, and Piſtoll.

Bar. You Banbury Cheeſe.

Slen. I, it is no matter.

Piſt. How now, Mephoſtophilus?

Slen. I, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I ſay; pauca, pauca: Slice, that's my humor.

Slen. Where's Simple my man? can you tell, Coſen?

Evans. Peace I pray you: now let us underſtand; there is three Vmpires in this matter, as I underſtand; that is, Maſter Page (fidelicet Maſter Page) and there is my ſelfe, (fidelicet my ſelfe) and the three party is (laſtly, and finally) mine Hoſt of the Gater.

M.Pa. We three to heare it, and end it between them.

Evan. Ferry goo't, I will make a priefe of it in my Note-booke, and we will afterwards orke upon the cauſe, with as great diſcreetly as we can.

Fal. Piſtoll.

Piſt. He heares with eares.

Evan. The Tevill and his Tam [illegible] what phraſe is this, he heares with eare? why it is affe[illegible]ons.

Fal. Piſtol, did you picke M.Slenders purſe?

Slen. I, by theſe gloves did hee, or I would I might never come in mine owne great chamber againe elſe, of ſeaven groates in Mill-ſixpences, and two Edward Shovel-boords, that coſt me two ſhilling and two pence a peece, of Yead Miller: by theſe gloues.

Fal. Is this true Piſtoll?

Evan. No, it is falſe, if it is a pickepurſe.

Piſt. Ha, thou Mountaine Forreiner: Sir Iohn, and Maſter mine, I combat challenge of this Latine Bilboe: word of denyall in thy labras here; word of deniall, froth, and ſcum thou lyeſt.

Slen. By theſe gloves, then 'twas he.

Nym. Be avis'd ſir, and paſſe good humours: I will ſay marry trap with you, if you runne the nut-hookes humour on me, that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this Hat, then he in the red face had it: for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunke, yet I am not altogether an Aſſe.

Fal. What ſay you Scarlet and Iohn?

Bar. Why ſir (for my part) I ſay the Gentleman had drunke himſelfe out of his five ſentences.

Evans. It is his five ſenſes: fie, what the ignorance is.

Bar. And being fap, ſir, was (as they ſay) caſheer'd: and ſo concluſions paſt the Car-eires.

Slen. I, you ſpake in Latine then to: but 'tis no matter; Ile nere be drunke whilſt I live againe, but in honeſt, civill, godly company for this tricke: if I be drunke, Ile be drunke with thoſe that have the feare of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Evan. So got-udge me, that is a vertuous mind.

Fal. You heare all theſe matters deny'd, Gentlemen you heare it.

Mr.Page. Nay daughter, carry the Wine in, wee'll drinke within.

Mr.Page. How now Miſtris Ford?

Fal. Miſtris Ford, by my troth you are very well met: by your leave good Miſtris.

Mr.Page. Wife, bid theſe Gentlemen welcome: come, we have a hot Veniſon Paſty to dinner; Come gentlemen, I hope we ſhall drinke downe all unkindneſſe.

Slen. I hadd rather then forty ſhillings I had my booke of Songs and Sonnets here; How now Simple, where have you beene? I muſt waite on my ſelfe, muſt I? you have not the booke of Riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Booke of Riddles, why did you not lend it to Alice Short-cake upon Alhallowmas laſt, a fortnight afore Michaelmas.

Shal. Come Coz, come, Coz, we ſtay for you: a word with you Coz: marry this, Coz: there is as 'twere a tender, a kinde of tender, made a farre off by Sir Hugh here: doe you underſtand me?

Slen. I Sir, you ſhall finde me reaſonable; if it be ſo, I ſhall doe that that is reaſon.

Shal. Nay, but underſtand me.

Slen. So I doe Sir.

Evan. Give eare to his motions; (M Slender) I will deſcription the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will doe as my Coſen Shallow ſayes: I pray you pardon me, he's a Iuſtice of Peace in his Country, ſimple though I ſtand here.

Evan. But that is not the queſtion: the queſtion is concerning your marriage.

Shal. I, there's the point Sir.

Evan. Marry is it: the very point of it, to M.An.Page.

Slen. Why if it be ſo; I will marry her upon any reaſonable demands.

Eva. But can you affection the 'o-man, let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips: for divers Philoſophers hold, that the lips is parcell of the mouth: therefore preciſely, can you marry your good will to the maid?

Shal. Coſen Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Slen. I hope ſir, I will doe as it ſhall become one that would doe reaſon.

Evan. Nay, got's Lords and his Ladies, you muſt ſpeak poſſitable, if you can carry-her your deſires towards her.

Shal. That you muſt:
Will you (vpon good dowry) marry her?

Slen. I will doe a greater thing then that, upon your requeſt (Coſen) in any reaſon.

Shal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, (ſweet Coz:) what I doe is to pleaſure you (Coz) can you love the Maide?

Slen. I will marry her (Sir) at your requeſt; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet Heaven may decreaſe it upon better acquaintance, when we are maryed, and have more occaſion to know one another: I hope upon familiarity will grow more content: but if you ſay marry-her', I will marry her, that I am freely diſſolved, and diſſolutely.

Evan. It is a ferry diſcretion anſwer: ſave the fall is in the 'ord, diſſolutely: the ort is (according to our meaning) reſolutely: his meaning is good.

Sh. I, I thinke my Coſen meant well.

Sl. I, or elſe I would I might be hang'(la.)

Sh. Here comes faire Miſtris Anne; would I were yong for your ſake, Miſtris Anne.

An. The dinner is on the Table, my Father deſires your Worſhips company.

Sh. I will waite on him, (faire Miſtris Anne.) (Grace.

Evan. Od's pleſſed will: I will not be abſence at the

An. Wil't pleaſe your Worſhip to come in, Sir?

Sl. No, I thanke you forſooth, heartily; I am very well.

An. The dinner attends you ſir.

Sl. I am not a-hungry, I thanke you, forſooth; goe Sirrha, for all you are my man, goe wait upon my Coſen Shallow: a Iuſtice of Peace ſometime may be beholding to his friend for a man; I keepe but three men and a Boy yet, till my Mother be dead: but what though, yet I live a poore Gentleman borne.

An. I may not goe in without your Worſhip: they will not ſit till you come.

Sl. I'faith, Ile eate nothing: I thanke you as much as though I did.

An. I pray you ſir walke in.

Sl. I had rather walke here (I thanke you) I bruiz'd my ſhin th'other day, with playing at Sword and Dagger with a Maſter of Fence (three veneys for a diſh of ſtew'd Prunes) and by my troth, I cannot abide the ſmell of hot meate ſince. Why doe your dogs barke ſo? be there Beares ith' Towne?

An. I thinke there are, Sir, I heard them talk'd of.

Sl. I love the ſport well, but I ſhall as ſoon quarrell at it, as any man in England: you are afraid if you ſee the Beare looſe, are you not?

An. I indeed Sir.

Sl. That's meat and drinke to me now: I have ſeene Sackerſon looſe, twenty times, and have taken him by the Chaine: but (I warrant you) the women have ſo cride and ſhrekt at it, that it paſt: But women indeed cannot abide 'em, they are very ill-favour'd rough things.

Ma. Pa. Come gentle M. Slender, come: we ſtay for you.

Sl. Ile eat nothing, I thanke you ſir.

Ma. Pa. By cocke and pye you ſhall not chooſe Sir: come, come.

Sl. Nay, pray you lead the way.

Ma. Pa. Come on Sir.

Sl. Miſtris Anne, your ſelfe ſhall goe firſt.

An. Not I Sir, pray you keepe on.

Sl. Truely I will not goe firſt: truely-la: I will not doe you that wrong.

An. I pray you Sir.

Sl. Ile rather be unmannerly then troubleſome: you doe your ſelfe wrong indeed-la. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Evans and Simple.

Evan. Goe your wayes and aske of Doctor Caius houſe, which is the way; and there dwels one Miſtris Quickly, which is in the manner of his Nurſe; or his dry-Nurſe; or his Cooke; or his Laundry; his Waſher, and his Ringer.

Sim. Well Sir.

Evans. Nay, it is petter yet: give her this letter; for it is a'oman that altogethers acquaintance with Miſtris Anne Page; and the Letter is to deſire, and require her to ſolicite your Maſters deſires, to Miſtris Anne Page: I pray you be gone: I will make an end of my dinner; there's Pippins and Cheeſe to come. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Falſtaffe, Hoſt, Bardolfe, Nym, Piſtoll, Page.

Fal. Mine Hoſt of the Garter?

Ho. What ſayes my Bully Rooke? ſpeake Schollerly, and wiſely.

Fal. Truely mine Hoſt; I muſt turne away ſome of my followers.

Ho. Diſcard, (Bully Hercules) caſheere; let them wag; trot, trot.

Fal. I ſit at ten pounds a weeke.

Ho. Thou'rt an Emperour (Ceſar, Keiſar and Pheazar) I will entertaine Bardolfe: he will draw, he will tap; ſaid I well (Bully Hector?)

Fa. Doe ſo (good mine Hoſt.)

Ho. I have ſpoke, let him follow: let me ſee thee froth, and live: I am at a word: follow.

Fa. Bardolfe follow him, a Tapſter is a good trade: an old Cloake makes a new Ierkin: a wither'd Servingman, a freſh Tapſter, goe, adieu.

Ba. It is a life that I have deſir'd: I will thrive.

Piſt. O baſe hungarian wight: wilt yͭ the Spigot weild.

Ni. He was gotten in drink: is not the humor cõceited.

Fa. I am glad I am ſo acquit of this Tinderbox: his Thefts were too open: his filching was like an unskilfull Singer, he kept not time.

Ni. The good humour is to ſteale at a minutes reſt.

Piſt. Convey, the wiſe it call: Steale? foh: a fico for the phraſe.

Fa. Well ſirs, I am almoſt out at heeles.

Piſt. Why then let Kibes enſue.

Fal. There is no remedy: I muſt conicatch, I muſt ſhift.

Piſt. Yong Ravens muſt have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this Towne?

Piſt. I ken the Wight, he is of ſubſtance good.

Fal. My honeſt Lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Piſt. Two yards and more.

Fal. No quips now Piſtol: (Indeed I am in the Waſte two yards about: but I am now about no waſte: I am about thrift) briefely: I doe meane to make love to Fords wife: I ſpie entertainment in her: ſhee diſcourſes: ſhe carves: ſhe gives the leere of invitation: I can conſtrue the action of her familiar ſtile, and the hardeſt voice of her behavior (to be engliſh'd rightly) is, I am ſir Iohn Falſtafs.

Piſt. He hath ſtudied her will; and tranſlated her will: out of honeſty into Engliſh.

Ni. The Anchor is deepe: will that humour paſſe?

Fal. Now, the report goes, ſhe has all the rule of her husbands Purſe: he hath a legend of Angels.

Piſt. As many divels entertaine: and to her Boy ſay I.

Ni. The humor riſes: it is good: humor me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Pages wife, who even now gave me good eyes too; examind my parts with moſt judicious illiads: ſometimes the beame of her view, guided my foot: ſometimes my portly belly.

Piſt. Then did the Sun on dung-hill ſhine.

Ni. I thanke thee for that humour.

Fal. O ſhe did ſo courſe o're my exteriors with ſuch a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye, did ſeeme to ſcorch me up like a burning-glaſſe: here's another letter to her: She beares the Purſe too: She is a Region in Guiana: all gold and bounty: I will bee Cheators to them both, and they ſhall be Exchequers to mee: they ſhall be my Eaſt and Weſt Indies, and I will trade to them both: Goe, beare thou this letter to Miſtris Page; and thou this to Miſtris Ford: wee will thrive (Lads) wee will thrive.

Piſt. Shall I Sir Pandarus of Troy become,
And by my ſide weare Steele? then Lucifer take all.

Ni. I will run no baſe humour: here take the humour-Letter; I will keepe the haviour of reputation.

Fal. Hold Sirrha, beare you theſe Letters rightly,
Saile like my Pinnaſſe to theſe golden ſhores.
Rogues, hence, avaunt, vaniſh like haile-ſtones; goe,
Trudge; plod away oth' hoofe, ſeeke ſhelter, packe:
Falſtaffe will learne the honour of the age,
French-thrift, you Rogues, my ſelfe, and skirted Page.

Piſt. Let Vultures gripe thy guts; for gourd, and Fullam holds: & high and low beguiles the rich & poore,
Teſter Ile have in Pouch when thou ſhalt lacke,
Baſe Phrygian Turke.

Ni. I have operations,
Which be humours of revenge.

Piſt. Wilt thou revenge?

Ni. By Welkin, and her Starre.

Piſt. With wit, or ſteele?

Ni. With both the humours, I:
I will diſcuſſe the humour of this Love to Ford.

Piſt. And I to Page ſhall eke unfold
How Falſtaffe (Varlet vile)
His Dove will prove; his gold will hold,
And his ſoft couch defile.

Ni. My humour ſhall not coole: I will incenſe Ford to deale with poyſon: I will poſſeſſe him with yellowneſſe, for the revolt of mine is dangerous: that is my true humour.

Piſt. Thou art the Mars of Male-contents: I ſecond thee: troope on. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Miſtris Quickly, Simple, Iohn Rugby, Doctor Caius, Fenton.

Qu. What, Iohn Rugby, I pray thee goe to the Caſement, and ſee if you can ſee my Maſter, Maſter Doctor Caius comming: if he doe (I'faith) and finde any body in the houſe; here will be an old abuſing of Gods patience, and the Kings Engliſh.

Ru. Ile goe watch.

Qu. Goe, and we'll have a Poſſet for't ſoone at night, (in faith) at the latter end of a Sea-coale-fire: An honeſt, willing, kinde fellow, as ever ſervant ſhall come in houſe withall: and I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate: his worſt fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is ſomething peeviſh that way: but no body but has his fault: but let that paſſe. Peter Simple, you ſay your name is.

Si. I, for fault of a better.

Qu. And Maſter Slender's your Maſter?

Si. I forſooth.

Qu. Doe's he not weare a great round Beard, like a Glovers pairing-knife?

Si. No forſooth: he hath but a little wee-face; with a little yellow Beard: a Caine-colour'd Beard.

Qu. A ſoftly-ſprighted man, is he not?

Si. I forſooth: but he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is betweene this and his head: he hath fought with a Warrener.

Qu. How ſay you: oh, I ſhould remember him: doe's he not hold up his head (as it were?) and ſtrut in his gate?

Si. Yes indeed doe's he.

Qu. Well, heaven ſend Anne Page no worſe fortune: Tell Maſter Parſon Evans, I will doe what I can for your Maſter: Anne is a good girle, and I wiſh——

Ru. Out alas: here comes my Maſter.

Qu. We ſhall all be ſhent: Run in here, good yong man: goe into this Cloſſet: he will not ſtay long: what Iohn Rugby? Iohn: what Iohn I ſay? goe Iohn, goe enquire for my Maſter, I doubt he be not well, that hee comes not home: (and downe, downe, adowne'a, &c.)

Ca. Vat is you ſing? I doe not like des-toyes: pray you goe and vetch me in my Cloſſet, unboyteene verd; a Box, a greene-a-Box: do intend vat I ſpeake? a greene-a-Box.

Qu. I forſooth ile fetch it you:
I am glad he went not in himſelfe: if he had found the yong man, he would have beene horne mad.

Ca. Fe, fe, fe, fe, mai foi, il fait for ehando, Ie man voi a le Court la grand affaires.

Qu. Is it this Sir?

Ca. Ouy, mette le au mon pocket, de-peech quickly:
Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Qu. What Iohn Rugby, Iohn?

Ru. Here ſir.

Ca. You are Iohn Rugby, and you are Iacke Rugby: Come, take a-your Rapier, and come after my heele to the Court.

Ru. 'Tis ready ſir, here in the Porch.

Ca. By my trot I tarry too long: od's-me: que ay ie oublie: dere is ſome Simples in my Cloſſet, dat I will not for the varld I ſhall leave behind.

Qu. Ay-me, he'll find the yong man there, and be mad.

Ca. O Diable, Diable: vat is in my Cloſſet?
Villanie, La-roone: Rugby, my Rapier.

Qu. Good Maſter be content.

Ca. Wherefore ſhould I be content-a?

Qu. The yong man is an honeſt man.

Ca. What ſhall de honeſt man do in my Cloſſet: dere is no honeſt man dat ſhall come in my cloſſet.

Qu. I beſeech you be not ſo flegmaticke: heare the truth of it. He came of an errand to mee from Parſon Hugh.

Ca. Vell.

Si. I forſooth, to deſire her to——

Qu. Peace, I pray you.

Ca. Peace-a-your-tongue: ſpeake-a-your Tale.

Si. To deſire this honeſt Gentlewoman (your Maid) to ſpeake a good word to Miſtris Anne Page, for my Maſter in the way of marriage.

Qu. This is all indeed-la: but ile nere put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Ca. Sir Hugh ſend-a-you? Rugby, ballow mee ſome Paper: tarry you a littell-a-while.

Qui. I am glad he is ſo quiet: if he had been throughly moved, you ſhould have heard him ſo loud, and ſo melancholly: but notwithſtanding man, Ile doe for your Maſter what good I can: and the very yea, and the no is, the French Doctor my Maſter, (I may call him my Maſter, looke you, for I keepe his houſe; and I waſh, ring, brew, bake, ſcowre, dreſſe meat and drinke, make the beds, and doe all my ſelfe.)

Sim. 'Tis a great charge to come under one bodies hand.

Qui. Are you a-vis'd o'that? you ſhall find it a great charge: and to be up early, and downe late: but notwithſtanding, (to tell you in your eare, I would have no words of it) my Maſter himſelfe is in love with Miſtris Anne Page: but notwithſtanding that I know Ans mind, that's neither heere nor there.

Cai. You, Iack'Nape: givie-'a this Letter to Sir Hugh, by gar it is a ſhallenge: I will cut his troat in de Parke, and I will teach a ſcurvy Iack-a-nape Prieſt to meddle, or make: —you may be gon: it is not good you tarry here: by gar I will cut all his two ſtones: by gar, hee ſhall not have a ſtone to trow at his dogge.

Qui. Alas: he ſpeakes but for his friend.

Cai. It is no matter'a ver dat: doe not you tell-a-me dat I ſhall have Anne Page for my ſelfe? by gar, I vill kill de Iack-Prieſt: and I have appointed mine Hoſt of de Iarteer to meaſure our weapon: by gar, I will my ſelfe have Anne Page.

Qui. Sir, the maid loves you, and all ſhall be well: We muſt give folkes leave to prate: what the good-jer.

Cai. Rugby, come to the Court with me: by gar, if I have not Anne Page, I ſhall turne your head out of my dore: follow my heeles, Rugby.

Qui. You ſhall have An-fooles head of your owne: No, I know Ans mind for that: never a woman in Windſor knowes more of Ans mind then I doe, nor can doe more then I doe with her, I thanke heaven.

Fenton. Who's within there, hoa?

Qui. Who's there, I troa? Come neere the houſe I pray you.

Fen. How now (good woman) how doſt thou?

Qui. The better that it pleaſes your good Worſhip to aske?

Fen. What newes? how do's pretty Miſtris Anne?

Qui. In truth Sir, and ſhe is pretty, and honeſt, and gentle, and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way, I praiſe heaven for it.

Fen. Shall I do any good thinkſt thou? ſhall I not looſe my ſuit?

Qui. Troth Sir, all is in his hands above: but notwithſtanding (Maſter Fenton) Ile be ſworne on a booke ſhee loves you: have not your Worſhip a wart above your eye?

Fen. Yes marry have I, what of that?

Qui. Well, thereby hangs a tale: good faith, it is ſuch another Nan; (but (I deteſt) an honeſt maid as ever broke bread: we had an houres talke of that wart; I ſhall never laugh but in that maids company: but (indeed) ſhe is given too much to Allicholy and muſing, but for you ——well—goe to——

Fen. Well: I ſhall ſee her to day: hold, there's money for thee: Let me have thy voyce in my behalfe: if thou ſeeſt her before me, commend me.——

Qui. Will I? Ifaith that we will: And I will tell your Worſhip more of the Wart, the next time we have confidence, and of other wooers.

Fen. Well, farewell, I am in great haſte now.

Qui. Farewell to your Worſhip: truely an honeſt Gentleman: but Anne loves him not: for I know Ans minde as well as another do's: out upon't: what have I forgot?

Exit.

Actus ſecundus: Scæna Prima.

Miſt. Page. What, have I ſcap'd Love-letters in the holly-day-time of my beauty, and am I now a ſubject for them? let me ſee?

Aske me no reaſon why I love you, for though love uſe reaſon for his preciſian, he admits him not for his Counſailour: you are not yong, no more am I: goe to then, there's ſimpathy: you are merry, ſo am I: ha, ha, then there's more ſimpathy: you love Sacke, and ſo doe I: would your deſire better ſimpathy? Let it ſuffice thee (Miſtris Page) at the leaſt if the Love of Souldier can ſuffice, that I love thee; I will not ſay pitty me, 'tis not a Souldier-like phraſe; but I ſay, love me:

By me, thine owne true Knight, by day or night:
Or any kind of light, with all his might,
For thee to fight. Iohn Falſtaffe.

What a Herod of Iury is this? O wicked, wicked world:
One that is well-nye worne to peeces with age
To ſhow himſelfe a yong Gallant? What an unwayed Behaviour hath this Flemiſh drunkard pickt (with
The devills name) out of my converſation, that he dares
In this manner aſſay me? why, he hath not beene thrice
In my Company: what ſhould I ſay to him? I was then
Frugall of my mirth: (heaven forgive me:) why Ile
Exhibit a Bill in the Parliament for the putting downe of men: how ſhall I be reveng'd on him? for reveng'd I will be? as ſure as his guts are made of puddings.

Miſ. Ford. Miſtris Page, truſt me, I was going to your houſe.

Miſ. Page. And truſt me, I was comming to you: you looke very ill.

Miſ. Ford. Nay, Ile nere beleeve that; I have to ſhew to the contrary.

Miſ. Page. 'Faith but you doe in my mind.

Miſ. Ford. Well: I doe then: yet I ſay, I could ſhew you to the contrary: O Miſtris Page, give me ſome counſaile.

Miſ, Page. What's the matter, woman?

Miſ. Ford. O woman: if it were not for one trifling reſpect, I could come to ſuch honor.

Miſ. Page. Hang the trifle (woman) take the honor: what is it? diſpence with trifles: what is it?

Miſ. Ford. If I would but goe to hell, for an eternall moment, or ſo: I could be knighted.

Miſ. Page. What thou lieſt? Sir Alice Ford? theſe Knights will hacke, and ſo thou ſhouldſt not alter the article of thy Gentry.

Miſ. Ford. We burne day-light, heere, read, read: perceive how I might be knighted, I ſhall thinke the worſe of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of mens liking; and yet hee would not ſweare:

praiſe womens modeſty: and gave ſuch orderly and wel-behaved reproofe to all uncomelineſſe, that I would have ſworne his diſpoſition would have gone to the truth of his words: but they doe no more adhere and keepe place together, then the hundred Pſalmes to the tune of Green-ſleeues: What tempeſt (I troa) threw this Whale, (with ſo many Tuns of [illegible]yle in his belly) a'ſhoare at Windſor? How ſhall I be revenged on him? I thinke the beſt way were to entertaine him with hope, till the wicked fire of luſt have melted him in his owne greace: Did you ever heare the like?

Miſ. Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs: to thy great comfort in this myſtery of ill opionions, heer's the twyn-brother of thy Letter: but let thine inherit firſt, for I proteſt mine never ſhall: I warrant he hath a thouſand of theſe Letters, writ with blancke-ſpace for different names (ſue more:) and theſe are of the ſecond edition: he will print them out of doubt: for he cares not what he puts into the preſſe, when he would put us two: I had rather be a Gianteſſe, and lye under Mount Pelion: Well, I will find you twenty laſcivious Turtles ere one chaſte man.

Miſ. Ford. Why this is the very ſame: the very hand: the very words: what doth he thinke of us?

Miſ. Page. Nay I know not: it makes me almoſt ready to wrangle with mine owne honeſty: Ile entertaine my ſelfe like one that I am not acquainted withall: for ſure unleſſe he know ſome ſtraine in me, that I know not my ſelfe, he would never have boorded me in this fury.

Miſ. Ford. Boording, call you it? Ile be ſure to keepe him aboue decke.

Miſ. Page. So will I: if he come under my hatches, Ile never to Sea againe: Let's be reveng'd on him, let's appoint him a meeting: give him a ſhow of comfort in his Suit, and lead him on with a fine baited dela[illegible] till he hath pawn'd his horſes to mine Hoſt of the G[illegible]er.

Miſ. Ford. Nay, I will conſent to act any villany againſt him, that may not ſully the charineſſe of our honeſty: oh that my husband ſaw this Letter: it would give eternall food to his jealouſie.

Miſ. Page. Why looke where he comes; and my good man too: hee's as farre from jealouſie, as I am from giving him cauſe, and that (I hope) is an unmeaſurable diſtance.

Miſ. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Miſ. Page. Let's conſult together againſt this greaſie Knight: Come hither.

Ford. Well: I hope, it be not ſo.

Piſt. Hope is a curtall-dog in ſome affaires:
Sir Iohn affects thy wife.

Ford. Why ſir, my wife is not yong.

Piſt. He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor, both yong and old, one with another (Ford) he loves thy Gally-mawfry (Ford) perpend.

Ford. Love my wife?

Piſt. With liver, burning hot: prevent:
Or goe thou like Sir Acteon he, with
Ring-wood at thy heeles: O, odious is the name.

Ford. What name Sir?

Piſt. The horne I ſay: Farewell:
Take heed, have open eye, for theeves doe foot by night.
Take heed, ere ſommer comes, or Cuckoo-birds doe ſing.
Away ſir Corporall Nim:
Beleeve it (Page) he ſpeakes ſence.

Ford. I will be patient: I will find out this.

Nim. And this is true: I like not the humor of lying: he hath wronged me in ſome humors: I ſhould have borne the humour'd Letter to her: but I have a ſword: and it ſhall bite upon my neceſſity: he loves your wife; There's the ſhort, and the long: My name is Corporall Nim: I ſpeake, and I avouch; 'tis true: my name is Nim: and Falſtaffe loves your wife: adieu, I love not the humour of bread and cheeeſe: adieu.

Page. The humour of it (quoth'a?) heer's a fellow frights Engliſh out of his wits.

Ford. I will ſeeke out Falſtaffe.

Page. I never heard ſuch a drawling affecting rogue.

Ford. If I doe find it: well.

Page. I will not beleeve ſuch a Cataian, though the Prieſt o'th'Towne commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good ſenſible fellow: well.

Miſ. Page. Whither goe you (George?) harke you.

Miſ. Ford. How now (ſweet Franke) why art thou melancholy?

Ford. I melancholy? I am not melancholy:
Get you home, goe.

Miſ. Ford. Faith, thou haſt ſome crochets in thy head.
Now: will you goe, Miſtris Page?

Miſ. Page. Have with you: you'll come to dinner George? Looke who comes yonder: ſhe ſhall be our Meſſenger to this paltry Knight.

Miſ. Ford. Truſt me, I thought on her: ſhee'll fit it.

Miſ. Page. You are come to ſee my daughter Anne?

Qui. I forſooth: and I pray how do's good Miſtreſſe Anne?

Miſ. Page. Goe in with us and ſee: we have an houres talke with you.

Page. How now Maſter Ford.

Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not?

Page. Yes, and you heard what the other told me?

Ford. Doe you thinke there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em ſlaves: I doe not thinke the Knight would offer it, But theſe that accuſe him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoake of his diſcarded men: very rogues, now they be out of ſervice.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that,
Do's he lye at the Garter?

Page. I marry do's hee: if hee ſhould intend this voyage toward my wife, I would turne her looſe to him; and what he gets more of her, then ſharpe words, let it lye on my head.

Ford. I doe not miſdoubt my wife: but I would bee loath to turne them together: a man may be too confident: I would have nothing lye on my head: I cannot be thus ſatisfied.

Page. Looke where my ranting Hoſt of the Garter comes: there is either liquor in his pate, or mony in his purſe, when he lookes ſo merrily: How now mine Hoſt?

Hoſt. How now Bully-Rooke: thou'rt a Gentleman Caveleiro Iuſtice, I ſay.

Shal. I follow, (mine Hoſt) I follow: Good-even, and twenty (good Maſter Page.) Maſter Page, will you go with us? we have ſport in hand.

Hoſt. Tell him Caveleiro-Iuſtice: tell him Bully-Rooke.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, betweene Sir Hugh the Welch Prieſt, and Caius the French Doctor.

Ford. Good mine Hoſt o'th'Garter: a word with you.

Hoſt. What ſaiſt thou, my Bully-Rooke?

Shal. Will you goe with us to behold it? My merry Hoſt hath had the meaſuring of their weapons; and (I thinke) hath appointed them contrary places: for (beleeve me) I heare the Parſon is no Ieſter: harke, I will tell you what our ſport ſhall be.

Hoſt. Haſt thou no ſuit againſt my Knight? my gueſt-Cavaleire?

Shal. None, I proteſt: but Ile give you a pottle of burn'd Sacke, to give me recourſe to him, and tell him my name is Broome: onely for a jeſt.

Hoſt. My hand, (Bully:) thou ſhalt have egreſſe and regreſſe, (ſaid I well?) and thy name ſhall be Broome. It is a merry Knight: will you goe An-heires?

Shal. Have with you mine Hoſt.

Page. I have heard the French-man hath good skill in his Rapier.

Shal. Tut ſir: I could have told you more: In theſe times you ſtand on diſtance: your Paſſes, Stoccado's, and I know not what: 'tis the heart (Maſter Page) 'tis heere, 'tis heere: I have ſeene the time, with my long-ſword, I would have made you foure tall fellowes skip like Rattes.

Hoſt. Heere boyes, heere, heere: ſhall we wag?

Page. Have with you: I had rather heare them ſcold, then fight.

Ford. Though Page be a ſecure foole, and ſtands ſo firmely on his wives frailty; yet, I cannot put-off my opinion ſo eaſily: ſhe was in his company at Pages houſe: and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will looke further into't, and I have a diſguiſe, to ſound Falſtaffe; if I find her honeſt, I loſe not my labour: if ſhe be otherwiſe, 'tis labour well beſtowed.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Falſtaffe, Piſtoll, Robin, Quickly, Bardolffe, Ford.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Piſt. Why then the world's mine Oyſter, which I, with ſword will open.

Fal. Not a penny: I have beene content (Sir) you ſhould lay my countenance to pawne: I have grated upon my good friends for three Repreeves for you, and your Coach-fellow Nim; or elſe you had look'd through the grate, like a Geminy of Baboones: I am damn'd in hell, for ſwearing to Gentlemen my friends, you were good Souldiers, and tall-fellowes. And when Miſtreſſe Briget loſt the handle of her Fan, I took't upon mine honour thou hadſt it not.

Piſt. Didſt not thou ſhare? hadſt thou not fifteene pence?

Fal. Reaſon, you roague, reaſon: thinkſt thou Ile endanger my ſoule, gratis? at a word, hang no more about mee, I am no gibbet for you: goe, a ſhort knife, and a throng, to your Mannor of Pickt-hatch: goe, you'll not beare a Letter for me you roague? you ſtand upon your honor: why, (thou unconfinable baſeneſſe) it is as much as I can doe to keepe the terme of my honor preciſe: I, I, I my ſelfe ſometimes, leaving the feare of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honor in my neceſſity, am faine to ſhuffle: to hedge, and to lurch, and yet, you Rogue, will en-ſconce your raggs; your Cat-a-Mountaine-lookes, your red-lattice phraſes, and your bold-beating-oathes, under the ſhelter of your honor? you will not doe it? you?

Piſt. I doe relent: what would thou more of man?

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would ſpeake with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Qui. Give your worſhip good morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good-wife.

Qui. Not ſo and't pleaſe your worſhip.

Fal. Good maid then.

Qui. Ile be ſworne,
As my mother was the firſt houre I was borne.

Fal. I doe beleeve the ſwearer; what with me?

Qui. Shall I vouchſafe your worſhip a word, or two?

Fal. Two thouſand (faire woman) and ile vouchſafe thee the hearing.

Qui. There is one Miſtreſſe Ford, (Sir) I pray come a little neerer this wayes: I my ſelfe dwell with M. Doctor Caius.

Fal. Well, on; Miſtreſſe Ford, you ſay.

Qui. Your worſhip ſayes very true; I pray your worſhip come a little neerer this wayes.

Fal. I warrant thee, no body heares: mine owne people, mine owne people.

Qui. Are they ſo? heaven bleſſe them, and make them his ſervants.

Fal. Well; Miſtreſſe Ford, what of her?

Qui. Why, Sir; ſhee's a good creature; lord, lord, your Worſhip's a wanton: well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray ———.

Fal. Miſtreſſe Ford; come, Miſtreſſe Ford.

Qui. Marry this is the ſhort, and the long of it: you have brought her into ſuch a Canaries, as 'tis wonderfull: the beſt Courtier of them all (when the Court lay at Windſor) could never have brought her to ſuch a Canary: yet there has beene Knights, and Lords, and Gentlemen, with their Coaches; I warrant you Coach after Coach, letter after letter, gift after gift, ſmelling ſo ſweetly; all Muske, and ſo ruſhling, I warrant you, in ſilke and gold, and in ſuch alligant termes, and in ſuch wine and ſuger of the beſt, and the faireſt, that would have wonne any womans heart: and I warrant you, they could never get an eye-winke of her: I had my ſelfe twenty Angels given me this morning, but I defie all Angels (in any ſuch ſort, as they ſay) but in the way of honeſty: and I warrant you, they could never get her ſo much as ſippe on a cup with the prowdeſt of them all, and yet there has beene Earles: nay, (which is more) Pentioners, but I warrant you all is one with her.

Fal. But what ſayes ſhe to me? be briefe my good ſhee-Mercury.

Qui. Marry, ſhe hath receiv'd your Letter: for the which ſhe thankes you a thouſand times; and ſhe gives you to notifie, that her husband will be abſence from his houſe, betweene ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten, and eleven.

Qui. I, forſooth: and then you may come and ſee the picture (ſhe ſayes) that you wot of: Maſter Ford her husband will be from home: alas, the ſweet woman leades an ill life with him: hee's a very jealouſie-man; ſhe leads a very frampold life with him, (good hart.)

Fal. Ten, and eleven.

Woman, commend me to her, I will not faile her.

Qui. Why, you ſay well: But I have another meſſenger to your worſhip: Miſtreſſe Page hath her hearty commendations to you too: and let me tell you in your eare, ſhee's as fartuous a civill modeſt wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miſſe you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windſor, who ere be the other: and ſhe bade me tell your worſhip, that her husband is ſeldome from home, but ſhe hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman ſo doate upon a man; ſurely I thinke you have charmes, la: yes in truth.

Fal. Not I, I aſſure thee; ſetting the attraction of my good parts aſide, I have no other charmes.

Qui. Bleſſing on your heart for't.

Fal. But I pray thee tell me this: has Fords wife, and Pages wife acquainted each other, how they love me?

Qui. That were a jeſt indeed: they have not ſo little grace I hope, that were a tricke indeed: But Miſtris Page would deſire you to ſend her your little Page of all loves: her husband has a marvellous infection to the little Page: and truely Maſter Page is an honeſt man: never a wife in Windſor leades a better life then ſhe do's: doe what ſhe will, ſay what ſhe will, take all, pay all, goe to bed when ſhe liſt, riſe when ſhe liſt, all is as ſhe will: and truely ſhe deſerves it; for if there be a kind woman in Windſor, ſhe is one: you muſt ſend her your Page, no remedie.

Fal. Why, I will.

Qu. Nay, but doe ſo then, and looke you, he may come and goe betweene you both: and in any caſe have a nay-word, that you may know one anothers mind, and the Boy never need to underſtand any thing; for 'tis not good that children ſhould know any wickedneſſe: old folkes you know, have diſcretion, as they ſay, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee-well, commend me to them both: there's my purſe, I am yet thy debter: Boy, goe along with this woman, this newes diſtracts me.

Piſt. This Puncke is one of Cupids Carriers,
Clap on more ſailes, purſue: up with your fights:
Give fire: ſhe is my prize, or Ocean whelme them all.

Fal. Saiſt thou ſo (old Iacke) goe thy wayes: Ile make more of thy old body then I have done: will they yet looke after thee? wilt thou after the expence of ſo much money, be now a gainer? good body, I thanke thee: let them ſay 'tis groſſely done, ſo it be fairely done, no matter.

Bar. Sir Iohn, there's one Maſter Broome below would faine ſpeake with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath ſent you worſhip a mornings draught of Sacke.

Fal. Broome is his name?

Baſt. I Sir.

Fal. Call him in: ſuch Broomes are welcome to me, that ore' flowes ſuch liquor: ah, ha, Miſtreſſe Ford and Miſtreſſe Page, have I encompaſſed you? goe to, via.

Ford. 'Bleſſe you ſir.

Fal. And you ſir: would you ſpeake with me?

Ford. I make bold, to preſſe, with ſo little preparation upon you.

Fal. You'r welcome, what's your will? give us leave Drawer.

Ford. Sir, I am a Gentleman that have ſpent much, my name is Broome.

Fal. Good Maſter Broome, I deſire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good Sir Iohn, I ſue for yours: not to charge you, for I muſt let you underſtand, I thinke my ſelfe in better plight for a Lender, then you are: the which hath ſomething emboldned me to this unſeaſon'd intruſion: for they ſay, if money goe before, all wayes doe lye open.

Fal. Money is a good Souldier (Sir) and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money heere troubles me: if you will helpe to beare it (Sir Iohn) take all, or halfe, for eaſing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deſerve to be your Porter?

Ford. I will tell you ſir, if you will give mee the hearing.

Fal. Speake (good Maſter Broome) I ſhall be glad to be your ſervant.

Ford. Sir, I heare you are a Scholler: (I will be briefe with you) and you have beene a man long knowne to me, though I had never ſo good meanes as deſire, to make my ſelfe acquainted with you. I ſhall diſcover a thing to you, wherein I muſt very much lay open mine owne imperfection: but (good Sir Iohn) as you have one eye upon my follies, as you heare them unfolded, turne another into the Regiſter of your owne, that I may paſſe with a reproofe the eaſier, ſith you your ſelfe know how eaſie it is to be ſuch an offender.

Fal. Very well Sir, proceed.

Ford. There is a Gentlewoman in this Towne, her husbands name is Ford.

Fal. Well Sir.

Ford. I have long lov'd her, and I proteſt to you, beſtowed much on her: followed her with a doating obſervance: Ingroſs'd opportunities to meete her: fee'd every ſlight occaſion that could but nigardly give mee ſight of her: not onely bought many preſents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what ſhee would have given: briefely, I have purſu'd her, as Love hath purſued me, which hath beene on the wing of all occaſions: but whatſoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my meanes, meede I am ſure I have received none, unleſſe Experience be a Iewell, that I have purchaſed at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to ſay this.

" Love like a ſhadow flies, when ſubſtance Love purſues,
" Purſuing that that flies, and flying what purſues.

Fal. Have you receiv'd no promiſe of ſatisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importun'd her to ſuch a purpoſe?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love then?

Ford. Like a faire houſe, built on another mans ground, ſo that I have loſt my edifice, by miſtaking the place, where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpoſe have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all: Some ſay, that though ſhe appeare honeſt to me, yet in other places ſhe enlargeth her mirth ſo farre, that there is ſhrewd conſtruction made of her. Now (Sir Iohn) here is the heart of my purpoſe: you are a Gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable diſcourſe, of great admittance, authenticke in your place and perſon, generally allow'd for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O Sir.

Ford. Beleeve it, for you know it: there is money, ſpend it, ſpend it, ſpend more; ſpend all I have, onely give me ſo much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable ſiege to the honeſty of this Fords wife: uſe your Art of wooing; win her to conſent to you: if any man may, you may as ſoone as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection that I ſhould win what you would enjoy? Methinkes you preſcribe to your ſelfe very prepoſterouſly.

Ford. O, underſtand my drift: ſhe dwels ſo ſecurely on the excellency of her honor, that the folly of my ſoule dares not preſent it ſelfe: ſhe is too bright to be look'd againſt. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand; my deſires had inſtance and argument to commend themſelves, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thouſand other her defences, which now are too-too ſtrongly embattailed againſt me: what ſay you too't, Sir Iohn.

Fal. Maſter Broome, I will firſt make bold with your money: next, give me your hand: and laſt, as I am a Gentleman, you ſhall, if you will, enjoy Fords wife.

Ford. O good Sir.

Fal. I ſay you ſhall.

Ford. Want no money (Sir Iohn) you ſhall want none.

Fal. Want no Miſtreſſe Ford (Maſter Broome) you ſhall want none: I ſhall be with her (I may tell you) by her owne appointment, even as you came in to me, her aſſiſtant, or goe-betweene, parted from me: I ſay I ſhall be with her betweene ten and eleven: for at that time the jealious-raſcally-knave her husband will be forth: come you to me at night, you ſhall know how I ſpeed.

Ford. I am bleſt in your acquaintance: doe you know Ford Sir?

Fal. Hang him (poore Cuckoldly knave) I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poore: They ſay the jealous wittolly-knave hath maſſes of money, for the which his wife ſeemes to me well-favourd. I will uſe her as the key of the Cuckold-rogues Coffer, and there's my harveſt-home.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, ſir, that you might avoid him, if you ſaw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanicall-ſalt-butter rogue; I will ſtare him out of his wits: I will awe-him with my cudgell: it ſhall hang like a Meteor ore the Cuckolds hornes: Maſter Broome, thou ſhalt know, I will predominate over the pezant, and thou ſhalt lye with his wife. Come to me ſoone at night: Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his ſtile: thou (Maſter Broome) ſhalt know him for knave, and Cuckold. Come to me ſoone at night. Exit.

Ford. What a damn'd Epicurian-Raſcall is this? my heart is ready to cracke with impatience: who ſayes this is improvident jealouſie? my wife hath ſent to him, the howre is fixt, the match is made: would any man have thought this? ſee the hell of having a falſe woman: my bed ſhall be abus'd, my Coffers ranſackd, my reputation gnawne at, and I ſhall not onely receive this villanous wrong, but ſtand under the adoption of abhominable termes, and by him that does me this wrong: Termes, names: Amaimon ſounds well: Lucifer, well: Barbaſon, well: yet they are Divels additions, the names of fiends: But Cuckold, Wittoll, Cuckold? the Divell himſelfe hath not ſuch a name. Page is an Aſſe, a ſecure Aſſe; he will truſt his wife, he will not be jealous: I will rather truſt a Fleming with my butter, Parſon Hugh the Welſhman with my Cheeſe, an Iriſh-man with my Aqua-vitæ-bottle, or a Theefe to walke my ambling gelding, than my wife with her ſelfe. Then ſhe plots, then ſhe ruminates, then ſhe deviſes: and what they thinke in their hearts they may effect; they will breake their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be prais'd for my jealouſie: eleven o'clocke the howre, I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revengd on Falſtaffe, and laugh at Page. I will about it, better three houres too ſoone, then a mynute too late: fie, fie, fie: Cuckold, Cuckold, Cuckold. Exit.

Scœna Tertia.

Enter Caius, Rugby, Shallow, Slender, Hoſt.

Caius. Iacke Rugby.

Rug. Sir.

Caius. Vat is the clocke, Iacke.

Rug. 'Tis paſt the houre (Sir) that Sir Hugh promis'd to meet.

Cai. By gar, he has ſave his ſoule, dat he is no-come: he has pray his Pible well, dat he is no-come: by gar (Iacke Rugby) he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wiſe Sir: he knew your worſhip would kill him if he came.

Cai. By gar, de herring is no dead, ſo as I vill kill him: take your Rapier, (Iacke) I vill tell you how I vill kill him.

Rug. Alas ſir, I cannot fence.

Cai. Villany, take your Rapier.

Rug. Forbeare: her's company.

Hoſt. 'Bleſſe thee, bully-Doctor.

Shal. 'Save you M^{r}. Doctor Caius.

Page. Now good M^{r}. Doctor.

Slen. 'Give you good-morrow, ſir.

Caius. Vat be all you one, two, tree, fowre, come for?

Hoſt. To ſee thee fight, to ſee thee foigne, to ſee thee traverſe, to ſee thee heere, to ſee thee there, to ſee thee paſſe thy puncto, thy ſtocke, thy reverſe, thy diſtance, thy montant: Is he dead, my Ethiopian? Is he dead, my Franciſco? ha Bully? what ſayes my Eſculapius? my Galien? my heart of Elder? ha? is he dead bully-Stale? is he dead?

Cai. By gar, he is de Coward-Iacke-Prieſt of de vorld: he is not ſhow his face.

Hoſt. Thou art a Caſtalion-king-Vrinall: Hector of Greece (my Boy)

Cai. I pray you beare witneſſe, that me have ſtay, ſixe or ſeven, two tree howres for him, and he is no-come.

Shal. He is the wiſer man (M^{r}. Doctor) he is a curer of ſoules, and you a curer of bodies: if you ſhould fight, you goe againſt the haire of your profeſſions: is it not true, Maſter Page?

Page. Maſter Shallow; you have your ſelfe beene a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Body-kins M^{r}. Page, though I now be old, and of peace; if I ſee a ſword out, my finger itches to make one: though we are Iuſtices, and Doctors, and Church-men (M^{r}. Page) we have ſome ſalt of our youth in us, we are the ſons of women (M^{r}. Page.)

Page. 'Tis true, M^{r}. Shallow.

Shal. It will be found ſo, (M^{r}. Page) M^{r}. Doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home: I am ſworne of the peace: you have ſhew'd your ſelfe a wiſe Phyſician, and ſir Hugh hath ſhown himſelfe a wiſe and patient Churchman: you muſt goe with me, M^{r}. Doctor.

Hoſt. Pardon, Gueſt-Iuſtice; a Mounſeur Mockewater.

Cai. Mocke-water? vat is dat?

Hoſt. Mocke-water, in our Engliſh tongue, is Valour (Bully.)

Cai. By gar, then I have as much Mocke-vater as de Engliſhman: ſcuruy-Iack-dog-Prieſt: by gar, me vill cut his eares.

Hoſt. He will Clapper-claw thee tightly (Bully.)

Cai. Clapper-de-claw? vat is dat?

Hoſt. That is, he will make thee amends.

Cai. By gar, me do looke he ſhall clapper-de-claw me, for by-gar, me vill have it.

Hoſt. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Cai. Me tanck you for dat.

Hoſt. And moreover, (Bully) but firſt, Mr. Gueſt, and Mr. Page, and eeke Cavaleiro Slender, go you through the Towne to Frogmore.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Hoſt. He is there, ſee what humor he is in: and I will bring the Doctor about by the Fields: will it do well?

Shal. We will doe it.

All. Adieu, good Mr. Doctor.

Cai. By gar, me vill kill de Prieſt, for he ſpeake for a Iacke-an-Ape to Anne Page.

Hoſt. Let him dye: ſheath thy impatience: throw cold water on thy Choller: goe about the fields with me through Frogmore, I will bring thee where Miſtris Anne Page is, at a Farme-houſe a Feaſting: and thou ſhalt woe her: Cride-game, ſaid I well?

Cai. By-gar, mee dancke you vor dat: by gar I love you: and I ſhall procure 'a you de good Gueſt: de Earle, de Knight, de lords, de Gentlemen, my patients.

Hoſt. For the which, I will be thy adverſary toward Anne Page: ſaid I well?

Cai. By-gar, 'tis good: vell ſaid.

Hoſt. Let us wag then.

Cai. Come at my heeles, Iacke Rugby.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius, Scæna Prima.

Enter Evans, Simple, Page, Shallow, Slender, Hoſt, Caius, Rugby.

Evans. I pray you now, good Maſter Slenders ſerving-man, and friend Simple by your name; which way have you look'd for Maſter Caius, that calls himſelfe Doctor of Phiſicke.

Sim. Marry Sir, the pitty-wary, the Parke-ward; every way: old Windſor way, and every way but the Towne way.

Evan. I moſt fehemently deſire you, you will alſo looke that way.

Sim. I will ſir.

Evan. 'Pleſſe my ſoule: how full of Chollors I am, and trempling of mind: I ſhall be glad if he have deceived me: how melancholies I am? I will knog his Vrinalls about his knaves coſtard, when I have good opportunities for the orke: 'Pleſſe my ſoule: To ſhallow Rivers to whoſe falls: melodious Birds ſings Madrigalls: There will we make our Peds of Roſes: and a thouſand fragrant poſies. To ſhallow. 'Mercy on me, I have a great diſpoſitions to cry. Melodious birds ſing Madrigalls: —When as I ſat in Pabilon: and a thouſand vagram Poſies. To ſhallow, &c.

Sim. Yonder he is comming, this way, Sir Hugh.

Evan. Hee's welcome: To ſhallow Rivers, to whoſe fals: Heaven proſper the right: what weapons is he?

Sim. No weapons, Sir: there comes my Maſter, Mr. Shallow; and another Gentleman; from Frogmore, over the ſtile, this way.

Evan. Pray you give me my gowne, or elſe keepe it in your armes. Enter All.

Shal. How now Maſter Parſon? good morrow good Sir Hugh: keepe a Gameſter from the dice, and a good Studient from his booke, and it is wonderfull.

Slen. Ah ſweet Anne Page.

Page. 'Save you, good Sir Hugh.

Evan. 'Pleſſe you from his mercy-ſake, all of you.

Shal. What? the Sword, and the word?
Doe you ſtudy them both, Mr. Parſon?

Page. And youthfull ſtill, in your doublet and hoſe, this raw-rumaticke day?

Evan. There is reaſons, and cauſes for it.

Page. We are come to you: to doe a good office, Mr. Parſon.

Evan. Fery-well: what is it?

Page. Yonder is a moſt reverend Gentleman; who (be like) having received wrong by ſome perſon, is at moſt odds with his owne gravity and patience, that ever you ſaw.

Shal. I have lived foureſcore yeeres, and upward: I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, ſo wide of his owne reſpect.

Evan. What is he?

Page. I thinke you know him: Mr. Doctor Caius the renowned French Phyſitian.

Evan. Got's-will, and his paſſion of my heart: I had as lief you would tell me of a meſſe of porredge.

Page. Why?

Evan. He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates and Galen, and he is a knaue beſides: a cowardly knave, as you would deſire to be acquainted withall.

Page. I warrant you, hee's the man ſhould fight with him.

Shal. It appeares ſo by his weapons: keepe them aſunder: here comes Doctor Caius.

Page. Nay good Mr. Parſon, keepe in your weapon.

Shal. So doe you, good Mr. Doctor.

Hoſt. Diſarme them, and let them queſtion: let them keepe their limbs whole, and hack our Engliſh,

Cai. I pray you let-a-mee ſpeake a word with your eare; wherefore vill you not meet-a me?

Evan. Pray you uſe your patience in good time.

Cai. By-gar, you are de Coward: de Iacke dog: Iohn Ape.

Evan. Pray you let us not be laughing-ſtockes to other mens humors: I deſire you in friendſhip, and I will one way or other make you amends: I will knog your Vrinall about your knaves Cogs-combe.

Cai. Diable, Iacke Rugby, mine Hoſt de Iarteer, have I not ſtay for him, to kill him? have I not at de place I did appoint?

Evan. As I am a Chriſtians-ſoule, now looke you: this is the place appointed, Ile be judgement by mine Hoſt of the Garter.

Hoſt. Peace, I ſay, Gallia, and Gaule, French, and Welch, Soule-Curer, and Body-Curer.

Cai. I, dat is very good, excellant.

Hoſt. Peace, I ſay: heare mine Hoſt of the Garter, Am I politicke? Am I ſubtle? Am I a Machivell? Shall I looſe my Doctor? No, he gives me the Potions and the Motions. Shall I looſe my Parſon? my Prieſt? my Sir Hugh? No, he gives me the Proverbes, and the Noverbes. Give me thy hand (Celeſtiall) ſo: Boyes of Art, I have deceiv'd you both: I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burn'd Sacke be the iſſue: come, lay their ſwords to pawne: Follow me, Lad of peace, follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Truſt me, a mad Hoſt: follow Gentlemen, follow.

Slen. O ſweet Anne Page.

Cai. Ha'do I perceive dat? Have you make-a-de-ſot of us, ha, ha?

Evan. This is well, he has made us his vlowting-ſtog: I deſire you that we may be friends: and let us knog our praines together to be revenge on this ſame ſcall ſcurvy-cogging-companion the Hoſt of the Garter.

Cai. By gar, with all my heart: he promiſe to bring-me where is Anne Page: by gar he deceive me too.

Evan. Well, I will ſmite his noddles: pray you follow.

Scæna Secunda.

Miſt. Page. Nay keepe your way (little Gallant) you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a Leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your maſters heeles?

Rob. I had rather (forſooth) goe before you like a man, then follow him like a dwarfe. (Courtier.

Miſ. Pa. O you are a flattering boy, now I ſee you'l be a

Ford. Well met Miſtris Page, whither goe you.

Miſ. Page. Truly Sir, to ſee your wife, is ſhe at home?

Ford. I, and as idle as ſhe may hang together for want of company: I thinke if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

Miſ. Page. Be ſure of that, two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cocke?

M. Pa. I cannot tel what (the dickens) his name is my husband had him of, what do you cal your Knights name

Rob. Sir Iohn Falſtaffe. (ſirrah?

Ford. Sir Iohn Falſtaffe.

M. Pa. He, he, I can never hit on's name; there is ſuch a league betweene my goodman, and he: is your Wife at Ford. Indeed ſhe is. (home indeed?

M. Pa. By your leave ſir, I am ſicke till I ſee her.

Ford. Has Page any braines? Hath he any eies? Hath he any thinking? Sure they ſleepe, he hath no uſe of them: why this boy will carry a letter twenty mile as eaſie, as a Canon will ſhoot point-blanke twelve ſcore: he peeces out his wives inclination: he gives her folly motion and advantage: and now ſhe's going to my wife, and Falſtaffes boy with her: A man may heare this ſhowre ſing in the wind; and Falſtaffes boy with her: good plots, they are laid, and our revolted wives ſhare damnation together. Well, I will take him, then torture my wife, plucke the borrowed vaile of modeſty from the ſo ſeeming Miſt. Page, divulge Page himſelfe for a ſecure and wilfull Actæon, and to theſe violent proceedings all my neighbours ſhall cry ayme. The clocke gives me my Qu, and my aſſurance bids me ſearch, there I ſhall find Falſtaffe: I ſhall be rather praiſed for this, then mock'd, for it is as poſſitive, as the earth is firme, that Falſtaffe is there: I will goe.

Shal. Page, &c. Well met Mr. Ford.

Ford. Truſt me, a good knot: I have good cheere at home, and I pray you all goe with me.

Shal. I muſt excuſe my ſelfe Mr. Ford.

Slen. And ſo muſt I Sir,
We have appointed to dine with Miſtris Anne,
And I would not breake with here for more mony
Then Ile ſpeake of.

Shal. We have linger'd about a match betweene Anne Page, and my cozen Slender, and this day wee ſhall have our anſwer.

Slen. I hope I have your good will father Page.

Page. You have Mr. Slender, I ſtand wholly for you, But my wife (Mr. Doctor) is for you altogether.

Cai. I be-gar, and de Maid is love-a-me: my nurſh-a-Quickly tell me ſo muſh.

Hoſt. What ſay you to yong M. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth: he writes verſes, hee ſpeakes holliday, he ſmels Aprill and May, he will carry't he will carry't, 'tis in his buttons, he will carry't.

Page. Not by my conſent I promiſe you. The Gentleman is of no having, he kept company with the wilde Prince, and Pointz: he is of too high a Region, he knows too much: no, he ſhall not knit a knot in his fortunes; with the finger of my ſubſtance: if he take her, let him take her ſimply: the wealth I have waits on my conſent, and my conſent goes not that way.

Ford. I beſeech you heartily, ſome of you goe home with me to dinner: beſides your cheere you ſhall have ſport, I will ſhew you a monſter: Mr. Doctor, you ſhall goe, ſo ſhall you Mr. Page, and you Sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well:
We ſhall have the freer wooing at Mr. Pages.

Cai. Goe home Iohn Rugby, I come anon.

Hoſt. Farewell my hearts, I will to my honeſt Knight Falſtaffe, and drinke Canary with him.

Ford. I thinke I ſhall drinke in Pipe-wine firſt with him, Ile make him dance. Will you goe, Gentles?

All. Have with you, to ſee this Monſter. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Miſtris Ford, Miſtris Page, Servants, Robin, Falſtaffe, Ford, Page, Caius, Evans.

Miſ. Ford. What Iohn, what Robert.

Miſ. Page. Quickly, quickly: Is the Buck-basket—

Miſ. Ford. I warrant. What Robin I ſay,

Miſ. Page. Come, come, come.

Miſ. Ford. Heere, ſet it downe.

Miſ. Pa. Give your men the charge, we muſt be briefe.

M. Ford. Marry as I told you before (Iohn and Robert) be ready here hard-by in the Brew-houſe, and when I ſodainely call you, come forth, and (without any pauſe, or ſtaggering) take this basket on your ſhoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haſt, and carry it among the Whitſters in Dotchet Mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch, cloſe by the Thames ſide.

M. Page. You will doe it? (direction.

M. Ford. I ha told them over and over, they lacke no

Be gone, and come when you are call'd.

Miſ. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Miſ. Ford. How now my Eyas-Musket, what newes (with you?

Rob. My M. Sir Iohn is come in at your backe doore (Miſt. Ford.) and requeſts your company.

Miſ. Pa. You little Iack-a-lent, have you bin true to us?

Rob. I, Ile be ſworne: my Maſter knowes not of your being heere: and hath threatened to put me into everlaſting liberty, if I tell you of it: for he ſweares hee'l turne me away.

Miſ. Page. Thou'rt a good boy: this ſecrecy of thine ſhall be a Tailor to thee, and ſhall make thee a new doublet and hoſe. Ile goe hide me.

Miſ. Ford. Doe ſo: goe tell thy Maſter, I am alone: Miſtris Page, remember you your Qu.

Miſ. Page. I warrant thee, if I doe not act it, hiſſe me.

Miſ. Ford. Goe too then: we'l uſe this unwholſome humidity, this groſſe-watry Pumpion; we'll teach him to know Turtles from Iayes.

Enter Fal.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly Iewell? Why now let me dye, for I have liv'd long enough: This is the period of my ambition: O this bleſſed houre.

Miſ. Ford. O ſweet Sir Iohn.

Fal. Miſtris Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate (Miſtris Ford) now ſhall I ſin in my wiſh; I would thy Husband were dead, Ile ſpeake it before the beſt lord, I would make thee my Lady.

Miſ. Ford. I your Lady Sir Iohn! Alas, I ſhould be a pittifull Lady.

Fal. Let the Court of France ſhew me ſuch another: I ſee how thine eye would emulate the Diamond: Thou haſt the right arched-beauty of the brow, that becomes the Ship-tyre, the Tyre-valiant, or any Tire of Venetian admittance.

Miſ. Ford. A plaine Kerchiefe, Sir Iohn:
My browes become nothing elſe, nor that well neither.

Fal. Thou art a tyrant to ſay ſo: thou wouldſt make an abſolute Courtier, and the firme fixure of thy foote, would give an excellent motion to thy gate, in a ſemicircled Farthingale. I ſee what thou wert if Fortune thy foe were not, Nature thy friend: Come, thou canſt not hide it.

Miſ. Ford. Beleeve me, there's no ſuch thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? Let that perſwade thee. Ther's ſomething extraordinary in thee: Come, I cannot cog, and ſay thou art this and that, like a-many of theſe liſping-hauthorne buds, that come like women in mens apparell, and ſmell like Bucklers-berry in ſimple time: I cannot, but I love thee, none but thee; and thou deſeru'ſt it.

Mi. For. Do not betray me ſir, I feare you love M. Page.

Fal. Thou mightſt as well ſay, I love to walke by the Counter-gate, which is as hatefull to me, as the reeke of a Lime-kill.

Miſ. Ford. Well, heaven knowes how I love you,
And you ſhall one day find it.

Fal. Keepe in that mind, Ile deſerve it.

Miſ. Ford. Nay, I muſt tell you, ſo you doe;
Or elſe I could not be in that mind.

Within.

Rob. Miſtris Ford, Miſtris Ford: here's Miſtris Page at the doore, ſwearing, and blowing, and looking wildely, and would needs ſpeake with you preſently.

Fal. She ſhall not ſee me, I will enſconce me behind the Arras.

M. Ford. Pray you doe ſo, ſhe's a very tatling woman. Whats the matter? how now?

Enter Miſ. Page.

Miſ. Page. O miſtris Ford what have you done?
You'r ſham'd, y'are overthrowne, y'are undone for ever.

M. Ford. What's the matter, good miſtris Page?

M. Page. O weladay, miſtris Ford, having an honeſt man to your husband, to give him ſuch cauſe of ſuſpition.

Miſ. Ford. What cauſe of ſuſpition?

Miſ. Page. What cauſe of ſuſpition? Out upon you: How am I miſtooke in you?

Miſ. Ford. Why (alas) what's the matter?

Miſ. Page. Your husbands comming hither (woman) with all the Officers in Windſor, to ſearch for a Gentleman, that he ſayes is heere now in the houſe; by your conſent to take an ill advantage of his abſence: you are undone.

Miſ. Ford. 'Tis not ſo, I hope.

Miſ. Page. Pray heaven it be not ſo, that you have ſuch a man heere: but 'tis moſt certaine your husband's comming, with halfe Windſor at his heeles, to ſerch for ſuch a one, I come before to tell you: If you know your ſelfe cleere, why I am glad of it: but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amaz'd, call all your ſenſes to you, defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Miſ. Ford. What ſhall I doe? There is a Gentleman my deere friend: and I feare not mine owne ſhame ſo much, as his perill. I had rather then a thouſand pound he were out of the houſe.

Miſ. Page. For ſhame, never ſtand (you had rather, and you had rather:) your husband's heere at hand, bethinke you of ſome conveyance: in the houſe you cannot hide him. Oh, how have you deceiv'd me? Looke, heere is a basket, if he be of any reaſonable ſtature, he may creepe in heere, and throw foule linnen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: Or it is whiting time, ſend him by your two men to Datchet-Meade.

Miſ. Ford. He's too big to goe in there: what ſhall I doe?

Fal. Let me ſee't, let me ſee't, O let me ſee't:
Ile in, Ile in: Follow your friends counſell, Ile in.

Miſ. Page. What Sir Iohn Falſtaffe? Are theſe your Letters Knight?

Fal. I love thee, helpe me away: let me creepe in heere: ile never———

Miſ. Page. Helpe to cover your maſter (boy:) Call your men (Miſtris Ford) You diſſembling Knight.

Miſ. Ford. What Iohn, Robert, Iohn; Goe, take up theſe cloathes heere, quickly: Wher's the Cowle-ſtaffe? Looke how you drumble? Carry them to the Landreſſe in Datchet-Mead: quickly, come.

Ford. 'Pray you come nere: if I ſuſpect without cauſe,
Why then make ſport at me, then let me be your jeſt,
I deſerve it: How now? Whither beare you this?

Ser. To the Landreſſe forſooth?

Miſ. Ford. Why, what have you to doe whither they beare it? You were beſt meddle with buck-waſhing.

Ford. Buck? I would I could waſh my ſelfe of the Buck:
bucke, bucke, bucke, I bucke: I warrant you Bucke,
And of the ſeaſon too; it ſhall appeare.
Gentlemen, I have dream'd to night, Ile tell you my dreame: heere, heere, heere be my keyes, aſcend my Chambers, ſearch, ſeeke, find out: Ile warrant wee'll unkennell the Fox. Let me ſtop this way firſt: ſo, now uncape.

Page. Good maſter Ford, be contented:
You wrong your ſelfe too much.

Ford. True (maſter Page) up Gentlemen.
You ſhall ſee ſport anon:

Follow me Gentlemen.

Evan. This is fery fantaſticall humors and jealouſies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no-the faſhion of France:
It is not jealous in France. — Exeunt.

Page. Nay follow him (Gentlemen) ſee the yſſue of his ſearch.

Miſ. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this?

Miſ. Ford. I know not which pleaſes me better,
That my huſband is deceived, or Sir Iohn.

Miſ. Page. What a taking was he in, when your huſband askt who was in the basket?

Miſ. Ford. I am halfe affraid he will have need of waſhing: ſo throwing him into the water, will doe him a benefit.

Miſ. Page. Hang him diſhoneſt raſcall: I would all of the ſame ſtraine, were in the ſame diſtreſſe.

Miſ. Ford. I thinke my huſband hath ſome ſpeciall ſuſpition of Falſtaffes being heere: I never ſaw him ſo groſſe in his jealouſie till now.

Miſ. Page. I will lay a plot to try that, and we will yet have more trickes with Falſtaffe: his diſſolute diſeaſe will ſcarſe obey this medicine.

Miſ. Ford. Shall we ſend that fooliſh Carion, Miſt. Quickly to him, and excuſe his throwing into the water, and give him another hope, to betray him to another puniſhment?

Miſ. Page. We will doe it: let him be ſent for to morrow by eight a clocke to have amends. Enter All.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragg'd of that he could not compaſſe.

Miſ. Page. Heard you that?

Miſ. Ford. You uſe me well, Miſt. Ford? doe you?

Ford. I, I doe ſo.

Miſ. Page. Heaven make you better then your thoughts

Ford. Amen.

Mi. Pa. You doe your ſelfe mighty wrong (M. Ford)

Ford. I, I: I muſt beare it.

Ev. If there be any pody in the houſe, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the preſſes: heaven forgive my ſinnes.

Caius. Be gar, nor I too: there is no-bodies.

Page. Fy, fy, M. Ford, are you not aſham'd? What ſpirit, what divell ſuggeſts this imagination? I would not ha your diſtemper in this kind, for the welth of Windſor caſtle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault (M. Page) I ſuffer for it.

Evan. You ſuffer for a pad conſcience: your wife is as honeſt a o'mans, as I will deſires among fiue thouſand, and five hundred too.

Cai. By gar, I ſee 'tis an honeſt woman.

Ford. Well, I promiſd you a dinner: come, come, walke in the Parke, I pray you pardon me: I will hereafter make knowne to you why I have done this. Come wife, come Mi. Page, I pray you pardon me. Pray hartly pardon me.

Page. Let's go in Gentlemen, but (truſt me) we'l mocke him: I doe invite you to morrow morning to my houſe to breakfaſt: after we'll a Birding together, I have a fine Hawke for the buſh. Shall it be ſo:

Ford. Any thing.

Ev. If there is one, I ſhall make two in the Company.

Cai. If there be one, or two, I ſhall make-a-theturd.

Ford. Pray you goe, M. Page.

Evan. I pray you now remembrance to morrow on the lowſie knave, mine Hoſt.

Cai. Dat is good by gar, with all my heart.

Eva. A lowſie knave, to have his gibes, and his mockeries. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Fenton, Anne Page, Shallow, Slender, Quickly, Page, Miſ. Page.

Fen. I ſee I cannot get thy fathers love,
Therefore no more turne me to him (ſweet Nan.)

Anne. Alas, how then?

Fen. Why thou muſt be thy ſelfe.
He doth object, I am too great of birth,
And that my ſtate being gall'd with my expence,
I ſeeke to heale it onely by his wealth.
Beſides theſe, other barres he layes before me,
My Riots paſt, my wilde Societies,
And tels me 'tis a thing impoſſible
I ſhould love thee, but as a property.

Anne. May be he tells you true.

Fen. No, heaven ſo ſpeed me in my time to come,
Albeit I will confeſſe, thy fathers wealth
Was the firſt motive that I woo'd thee (Anne:)
Yet wooing thee, I found thee of more valew
Then ſtampes in Gold, or ſummes in ſealed bagges:
And 'tis the very riches of thy ſelfe,
That now I ayme at.

An. Gentle M. Fenton,
Yet ſeeke my fathers love, ſtill ſeeke it ſir,
If opportunity and humbleſt ſuite
Cannot attaine it, why then harke you hither.

Shal. Breake their talke Miſtris Quickly,
My Kinſman ſhall ſpeake for himſelfe.

Slen. Ile make a ſhaft or a bolt on't, ſlid, tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not diſmaid.

Slen. No, ſhe ſhall not diſmay me:
I care not for that, but that I am affeard.

Qui. Hark ye, M. Slender would ſpeake a word with you

An. I come to him. This is my fathers choyce:
O what a world of vilde ill-favour'd faults
Lookes handſome in three hundred pounds a yeere?

Qui. And how do's good Maſter Fenton?
Pray you a word with you.

Shal. Shee's comming: to her Coz.
O boy, thou hadſt a father.

Slen. I had a father (M. An.) my uncle can tel you good jeſts of him: pray you Vncle, tell Miſt. Anne the jeſt how my father ſtole two Geeſe out of a Pen, good Vnckle.

Shal. Miſtris Anne, my Cozen loves you.

Slen. I that I doe, as well as I love any woman in Gloceſterſhire.

Shal. He will maintaine you like a Gentlewoman.

Slen. I that I will, come cut and long-taile, under the degree of a Squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds joynture.

Anne. Good Maſter Shallow let him woo for himſelfe.

Shal. Marry I thanke you for it: I thanke you for that good comfort: ſhe cals you (Coz) Ile leave you.

Anne. Now Maſter Slender.

Slen. Now good Miſtris Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will? Odd's-hart-lings, that's a pretty jeſt indeed: I ne're made my Will yet (I thanke Heaven:) I am not ſuch a ſickely creature, I give Heaven praiſe.

Anne. I meane (M. Slender) what would you with me?

Slen. Truely, for mine owne part, I would little or nothing with you: your father and my uncle hath made motions: if it be my lucke, ſo: if not, happy man be his dole, they can tell you how things goe, better then I can: you may aske your father, heere he comes.

Page. Now Maſter Slender; Love him daughter Anne.
Why how now? What does Maſter Fenton heare?
You wrong me Sir, thus ſtill to haunt my houſe.
I told you Sir, my daughter is diſpoſd of.

Fen. Nay Maſter Page, be not impatient.

Miſ. Page. Good Maſter Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fen. Sir, will you heare me?

Page. No, good Maſter Fenton.
Come Maſter Shallow: Come ſonne Slender, in;
Knowing my wind, you wrong me (Maſter Fenton.

Qui. Speake to Miſtris Page.

Fen. Good Miſtris Page, for that I love your daughter
In ſuch a righteous faſhion as I doe,
Perforce, againſt all checkes, rebukes, and manners,
I muſt advance the colours of my love,
And not retire. Let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, doe not marry me to yond foole.

Miſ. Page. I meane it not, I ſeeke you a better huſband.

Qui. That's my Maſter, Maſter Doctor.

Anne. Alas I had rather be ſet quicke i'th earth,
And bowl'd to death with Turnips.

Miſ. Page. Come, trouble not your ſelfe good Maſter Fenton, I will not be your friend, nor enemy:
My daughter will I queſtion how ſhe loves you,
And as I find her, ſo am I affected:
Till then, farewell Sir, ſhe muſt needs goe in,
Her father will be angry.

Fen. Farewell gentle Miſtris: farewell Nan.

Qui. This is my doing now; Nay, ſaid I, will you caſt away your child on a Foole, and a Phyſitian: Looke on Maſter Fenton, this is my doing.

Fen. I thanke thee: and I pray thee once to night,
Give my ſweet Nan this Ring: there's for thy pains. Exit.

Qui. Now heaven ſend thee good fortune, a kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for ſuch a kind heart. But yet, I would my Maſter had Miſtris Anne, or I would Maſter Slender had her: or (in ſooth) I would Maſter Fenton had her; I will do what I can for them all three, for ſo I have promiſd, and Ile be as good as my word, but ſpeciouſly for Maſter Fenton. Well, I muſt of another errand to Sir Iohn Falſtaffe from my two Miſtreſſes: what a beaſt am I to ſlacke it. Exit.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Falſtaffe, Bardolfe, Quickly, Ford.

Fal. Bardolfe I ſay.

Bar. Heere Sir.

Fal. Goe, fetch me a quart of Sacke, put a toſt in't. Have I liv'd to be carryed in a Basket like a barrow of butchers Offall? and to be throwne in the Thames? Wel, if I be ſerv'd ſuch another tricke, Ile have my braines 'tane out and butter'd, and give them to a dogge for a New-yeares gift. The rogues ſlighted me into the river with as little remorſe, as they would have drown'de a blind bitches Puppies, fifteene i'th litter: and you may know by my ſize, that I have a kind of alacrity in ſinking: if the bottome were as deepe as hell, I ſhould downe. I had beene drown'd, but that the ſhore was ſhelvy and ſhallow: a death that I abhorre: for the water ſwelles a man; and what a thing ſhould I have beene, when I had beene ſwel'd? I ſhould have beene a Mountaine of Mummy.

Bar. Here's Miſtris Quickly, Sir to ſpeake with you.

Fal. Come, let me poure in ſome Sacke to the Thames water: for my belli's as cold as if I had ſwallow'd ſnowbals, for pilles to coole the reines. Call her in.

Bar. Come in woman. Enter Quickly.

Qui. By your leave: I cry you mercy?
Give your worſhip good morrow.

Fal. Take away theſe Challices:
Goe, brew me a pottle of Sacke finely.

Bard. With Egges, Sir?

Fal. Simple of it ſelfe: Ile no Pullet-Sperme in my brewage. How now?

Qui. Marry Sir, I come to your worſhip from Mi. Ford.

Fal. Miſtris Ford? I have had Ford enough: I was throwne into the Ford; I have my belly full of Ford.

Qui. Alas the day (good-heart) that was not her fault: ſhe do's ſo take on with her men; they miſtooke their erection.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a fooliſh Womans (promiſe.

Qui. Well, ſhe laments ſir for it, that it would yerne your heart to ſee it: her husband goes this morning a birding; ſhe deſires you once more to come to her, betweene eight and nine: I muſt carry her word quickely, ſhe'll make you amends I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will viſit her, tell her ſo; and bid her thinke what a man is: Let her conſider his frailety, and then judge of my merit.

Qui. I will tell her.

Fal. Doe ſo. Betweene nine and ten ſaiſt thou?

Qui. Eight and nine Sir.

Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miſſe her.

Qui. Peace be with you ſir. Exit.

Fal. I marvaile I heare not of Maſter Broome: he ſent me word to ſtay within: I like his money well.
Oh, heere be comes. Enter Ford.

Ford. Bleſſe you Sir.

Fal. Now Maſter Broome, you come to know
What hath paſt betweene me, and Fords wife.

Ford. That indeed (Sir Iohn) is my buſineſſe.

Fal. Maſter Broome I will not lye to you,
I was at her houſe the houre ſhe appointed me.

Ford. And ſped you Sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly Maſter Broome.

Ford. How ſo ſir, did ſhe change her determination?

Fal. No (M. Broome) but the peaking Cornuto her huſband (M. Broome) dwelling in a continuall larum of jelouſie, comes me in the inſtant of our encounter, after we had embraſt, kiſt, proteſted, and (as it were) ſpoke the prologue of our Comedy: and at his heeles, a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and inſtigated by his diſtemper, and (forſooth) to ſerch his houſe for his wives love.

Ford. What? While you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he ſearch for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You ſhall heare. As good lucke would have it, comes in one Miſtris Page, gives intelligence of Fords approch: and in her invention, and Fords wives diſtraction, they convey'd me into a bucke-basket.

Ford. A Buck-basket?

Fal. Yea: a Buck-basket: ram'd me in with foule Shirts and Smockes, Socks, foule Stockings, greaſie Napkins, that (Maſter Broome) there was the rankeſt compound of villanous ſmell, that ever offended noſtrill.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you ſhall heare (Maſter Broome) what I have ſuffered, to bring this woman to evill, for your good: Being thus cram'd in the Basket, a couple of Fords Knaves, his hindes, were cald forth by their Miſtris, to carry me in the name of foule Cloathes to Datchet-lane: they tooke me on their ſhoulders: met the jealous Knave their Maſter in the doore; who ask'd them once or twice what they had in their Basket? I quak'd for feare leaſt the Lunatique Knave would have ſearch'd it: but Fate (ordaining he ſhould be a Cuckold) held his hand: well, on went he, for a ſearch, and away went I for foule Cloathes: But marke the ſequell (Maſter Broome) I ſuffered the pangs of three ſeverall deaths: Firſt, an intollerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten Bell-weather: Next to be compaſs'd like a good Bilbo in the circumference of a Pecke, hilt to point, heele to head. And then to be ſtopt in like a ſtrong diſtillation with ſtinking Cloathes, that fretted in their owne greaſe: thinke of that, a man of my Kidney; thinke of that that am as ſubject to heate as butter; a man of continuall diſſolution, and thaw: it was a miracle to ſcape ſuffocation. And in the height of this Bath (when I was more then halfe ſtew'd is greaſe (like a Dutchdiſh) to be throwne into the Thames, and coold, glowing hot, in that ſerge like a Horſeſhooe; thinke of that: hiſſing hot, thinke of that (Maſter Broome.)

Ford. In good ſadneſſe Sir, I am ſorry, that for my ſake you have ſufferd all this.
My ſuite then is deſperate: You'll undertake her no more?

Fal. Maſter Broome: I will be throwne into Etna, as I have beene into Thames, ere I will leave her thus; her husband in this morning gone a birding: I have received from her another ambaſſie of meeting: 'twixt eight and nine is the houre (Maſter Broome.)

Ford. 'Tis paſt eight already Sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then addreſſe me to my appointment: Come to me at your convenient leiſure, & you ſhall know how I ſpeed: and the concluſion ſhall be crowned with your enjoying her: adjew, you ſhall have her (Maſter Broome) Maſter Broome, you ſhall cuckold Ford. Exit.

Ford. Hum: ha? is this a viſion? is this a dreame? doe I ſleepe? Maſter Ford awake, awake Maſter Ford; there's a hole made in your beſt coate (Maſter Ford:) this 'tis to be married; this 'tis to have Lynnen, and Buck-baskets: Well, I will proclaime my ſelfe what I am: I will now take the Leacher: hee is at my houſe; hee cannot ſcape me: 'tis impoſſible he ſhould: hee cannot creepe into a halfe-penny purſe, nor into a Pepper-boxe: But leaſt the Divell that guides him, ſhould aide him, I will ſearch impoſſible places: though what I am, I cannot avoide; yet to be what I would not, ſhall not make me tame: If I have hornes, to make one mad, let the proverbe goe with me, Ile be hornemad.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Miſtris Page, Quickly, William, Evans.

Miſ. Page. Is he at M. Fords already think'ſt thou?

Qui. Sure he is by this; or will be preſently; but truely he is very couragious mad, about his throwing into the water. Miſtris Ford deſires you to come ſodainely.

Miſ. Page. Ile be with her by and by: Ile but bring my yong-man here to Schoole: looke where his Maſter comes; 'tis a playing day I ſee: how now Sir Hugh, no Schoole to day?

Eva. No: Maſter Slender is let the Boyes leave to play.

Qui. 'Bleſſing of his heart.

Miſ. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband ſayes my ſonne profits nothing in the world at his booke: I pray you aske him ſome queſtions in his Accidence.

Eva. Come hither William; hold up your head; come.

Miſ. Page. Come on ſirha, hold up your head; anſwer your Maſter, be not afraid.

Evan. William, how many Numbers is in Nownes?

Will. Two.

Qui. Truely, I thought there had beene one Number more, becauſe they ſay od's-Nownes.

Evan. Peace, your tatlings. What is (Faire) William?

Will. Pulcher.

Qui. Poulcats? there are fairer things then Poulcats, ſure.

Evan. You are a very ſimplicity o'man: I pray you peace. What is (Lapis) William?

Will. A ſtone.

Evan. And what is a ſtone (William?)

Will. A Peeble.

Evan. No; it is Lapis: I pray you remember in your praine.

Will. Lapis.

Evan. That is a good William: what is he (William) that do's lend Articles.

Will. Articles are borrowed of the Pronoune; and be thus declined, Singulariter nominativo, hic, hæc, hoc.

Eva. Nominativo hig, hag, hog: pray you marke: genitivo hujus: Well, what is your Accuſative-caſe?

Will. Accuſativo hinc.

Evan. I pray you have your remembrance (child) Accuſativo, hing, hang, hog.

Qui. Hang-hog, is latten for Bacon, I warrant you.

Eva. Leave your prables (o'man) What is the Focative caſe (William?)

Will. O, Vocativo, O.

Evan. Remember William, Focative, is caret.

Qui. And that's a good roote,

Evan. O'man, forbeare.

Miſ. Page. Peace.

Evan. What is your Genitive caſe plurall (William?)

Will. Genitive caſe?

Evan. I.

Will. Genitive horum, harum, horum.

Qui. 'Vengeance of Ginyes caſe; fie on her: never name her (child) if ſhe be a whore.

Eva. For ſhame o'man.

Qui. You doe ill to teach the child ſuch words: hee teaches him to hic, and to hac; which they'll doe faſt enough of themſelves, and to call horum; fie upon you.

Evan. O'man, art thou Lunaties? Haſt thou no underſtandings for thy Caſes, and the numbers of the Genders? Thou art as fooliſh Chriſtian creatures, as I would deſires.

Miſ. Page. Prethee hold thy peace.

Evan. Shew me now (William) ſome declenſions of your Pronounes.

Will. Forſooth, I have forgot.

Eva. It is Qui, que, quod; if you forget your Quies, your Ques, and your Quods, you muſt be preeches: Goe your wayes and play, go.

M.Pag. He is a better ſcholler then I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good ſprag-memory: Farewell M.Pa.

Miſ. Page. Adieu good Sir Hugh.
Get you home boy, Come we ſtay too long. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Falſtaffe, Miſ. Ford. Miſ. Page, Servants, Ford, Page, Caius, Evans, Shallow.

Fal. Miſtris Ford, Your ſorrow hath eaten up my ſufferance; I ſee you are obſequious in your love, and I profeſſe requitall to a haires bredth, not onely Miſtris Ford, in the ſimple office of love, but in all the accouſtrement, complement, and ceremony of it: but are you ſure of your husband now?

Miſ. Ford. He's a birding (ſweet ſir Iohn.)

Miſ. Page. What hoa, goſſip Ford: what hoa.

Miſ. Ford. Step into th'chamber, Sir Iohn. Enter.

Miſ. Page. How now (ſweet heart) who's at home beſides your ſelfe?

Miſ. Ford. Why none but mine owne people.

Miſ. Page. Indeed?

Miſ. Ford. No certainely: ſpeake louder.

Miſ. Page. Truly, I am ſo glad you have no body here.

Miſ. Ford. Why?

Miſ. Page. Why woman, your husband is in his old lines againe: he ſo takes on yonder with my husband, ſo railes againſt all married mankind; ſo curſes all Eues daughters, of what complexion ſoever; and ſo buffetts himſelfe on the for-head: crying peere-out, peere out, that any madneſſe I ever yet beheld, ſeem'd but tameneſſe, civility, and patience to this his diſtemper he is in now: I am glad the fat Knight is not heere.

Miſ. Ford. Why, do's he talke of him?

Miſ. Page. Of none but him, and ſweares he was caried out the laſt time he ſearch'd for him, in a Basket: Proteſts to my husband he is now here, and hath drawne him and the reſt of their company from their ſport, to make another experiment of his ſuſpition: But I am glad the Knight is not here; now he ſhall ſee his owne foolery.

Miſ. Ford. How neere is he Miſtris Page?

Miſ. Pag. Hard by, at ſtreets end; he will be here anon.

Miſ. Ford. I am undone, the Knight is heere.

Miſ. Page. Why then you are utterly ſham'd, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you? Away with him, away with him: Better ſhame, then murther.

Miſ. Ford. Which way ſhould he goe? How ſhould I beſtow him? Shall I put him into the basket againe?

Fal. No, ile come no more i'th Basket: Enter. May I not goe out ere he come?

Miſ. Page. Alas: three of Maſter Fords brothers watch the doore with Piſtols, that none ſhall iſſue out: otherwiſe you might ſlip away ere he came: But what make you heere?

Fal. What ſhall I doe? Ile creepe up into the chimney.

Miſ. Ford. There they alwayes uſe to diſcharge their Birding-peeces: creepe into the Kill-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Miſ. Ford. He will ſeeke there on my word: Neither Preſſe, Coffer, Cheſt, Trunke, Well, Vault, but he hath an abſtract for the remembrance of ſuch places, and goes to them by his Note: There is no hiding you in the houſe.

Fal. Ile goe out then.

Miſ. Ford. If you goe out in your owne ſemblance, you dye Sir Iohn, unleſſe you goe out diſguis'd.
How might we diſguiſe him?

Miſ. Page. Alas the day I know not, there is no womans gowne bigge enough for him: otherwiſe he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kercheiſe, and ſo eſcape.

Fal. Good hearts, deviſe ſomething: any extremity, rather then a miſcheife.

Miſ. Ford. My Maids Aunt the fat woman of Brainford, has a gowne above.

Miſ. Page. On my word it will ſerve him: ſhe's as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too: run up Sir Iohn.

Miſ. Ford. Goe, goe, ſweet Sir Iohn: Miſtris Page and I will looke ſome linnen for your head.

Miſ. Page. Quicke, quicke, we'll come dreſſe you ſtraight: put on the gowne the while. Exit.

Miſ. Ford. I would my husband would meete him in this ſhape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brainford; he ſweares ſhe's a witch, forbad her my houſe, and hath threatned to beate her.

Miſ. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husbands cudgell: and the divell guide his cudgell afterwards.

Miſ. Ford. But is my husband comming?

Miſ. Page. I in good ſadneſſe is he, and talkes of the basket too, howſoever he hath had intelligence.

Miſ. Ford. We'l try that: for Ile appoint my men to carry the basket againe, to meete him at the doore with it, as they did laſt time.

Miſ. Page. Nay, but hee'l be heere preſently: let's go dreſſe him like the witch of Brainford.

Miſ. Ford. Ile firſt direct my men, what they ſhall doe with the basket: Goe up, ile bring linnen for him ſtraight.

Miſ. Page. Hang him diſhoneſt Varlet,
We cannot miſuſe him enough:
We'll leave a proofe by that which we will doo,
Wives may be merry, and yet honeſt too:
We doe not act, that often, jeſt, and laugh,
'Tis old, but true, ſtill Swine eates all the draugh.

Miſ. Ford. Goe Sirs, take the basket againe on your ſhoulders: your Maſter is hard at doore: if he bid you ſet it downe, obey him: quickly, diſpatch. Enter Ser.

1 Ser. Come, come, take it up.

2 Ser. Pray heaven it be not full of the Knight againe.

1 Ser. I hope not, I had as leife beare ſo much Lead.

Ford. I, but if it prove true (Maſter Page) have you any way then to unfoole me againe? Set downe the basket villaine: ſome body call my wife: Youth in a Basket: Oh you Panderly Raſcals, there's a knot: a ging, a packe, a conſpiracie againſt me: Now ſhall the divell be aſham'd. What wife I ſay: Come, come forth: behold what honeſt neſt cloathes you ſend forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this paſſes M. Ford: you are not to goe looſe any longer, you muſt be pinnion'd.

Evans. Why, this is Lunatickes: this is mad as a mad dog.

Shal. Indeed M. Ford, this is not well indeed.

Ford. So ſay I too ſir, come hither Miſtris Ford, Miſtris Ford, the honeſt woman, the modeſt wife, the vertuous creature, that hath the jealous foole to her husband: I ſuſpect without cauſe (Miſtris) doe I?

Miſ. Ford. Heaven be my witneſſe you doe, if you ſuſpect me in any diſhoneſty.

Ford. Well ſaid brazen-face, hold it out: Come forth ſirrah.

Miſ. Ford. Are you not aſham'd, let the cloathes alone.

Ford. I ſhall find you anon.

Evans. 'Tis unreaſonable; will you take up your wives cloathes? Come, away.

Ford. Empty the basket I ſay.

M. Ford. Why man, why?

Ford. Maſter Page, as I am a man, there was one convay'd out of my houſe yeſterday in this basket: why may not he be there againe? in my houſe I am ſure he is: my intelligence is true, my jealouſie is reaſonable, plucke mee out all the linnen.

Miſt. Ford. If you finde a man there, he ſhall dye a Fleas death.

Page. Here's no man.

Shal. By my fidelity this is not well Mr. Ford: This wrongs you.

Evan. M. Ford, you muſt pray, and not follow the imaginations of your owne heart: this is jealouſies.

Ford. Well, hee's not here I ſeeke for.

Ford. Helpe to ſearch my houſe this one time: if I find not what I ſeeke, ſhew no colour for my extremity: Let me for ever be your Table-ſport: Let them ſay of me as jealous as Ford, that ſearch'd a hollow Wall-nut for his Wives Lemman. Satisfie me once more, once more ſearch with me.

M. Ford. What hoa (Miſtris Page) come you and the old Woman downe: my husband will come into the Chamber.

Ford. Old woman? what old woman's that?

Miſt. Ford. Why it is my Maids Aunt of Brainford.

Ford. A Witch, a Queane, an old cozening Queanee: Have I not forbid her my houſe? She comes of errands do's ſhe? We are ſimple men, we doe not know what's brought to paſſe under the profeſſion of Fortune-telling. She workes by Charmes, by Spels, by th'Figure, and ſuch dawbry as this is, beyond our Element: wee know nothing. Come downe you Witch, you Hagge you, come downe I ſay.

Miſt. Ford. Nay, good ſweet husband, good Gentlemen, let him not ſtrike the old Woman. Enter Fal.

Miſt. Page. Come Mother Prat, Come give me your hand.

Ford. Ile Prat her: Out of my doore you Witch, you Rag, you Baggage, you Poulcat, you Runnion, out, out: Ile conjure you, Ile Fortune-tell you. Exit Fal.

Miſt. Page. Are you not aſham'd?
I thinke you have kil'd the poore woman.

Miſt. Ford. Nay he will doe it, 'tis a goodly credite for you.

Ford. Hang her Witch.

Evans. By yea, and no, I thinke the o'man is a Witch indeed: I like not when a o'man has a great peard; I ſpie a great peard under his Muffler.

Ford. Will you follow Gentlemen, I beſeech you follow: ſee but the iſſue of my jealouſie: If I cry out thus upon no traile, never truſt me when I open againe.

Page. Let's obey his humour a little further:
Come Gentlemen. Exeunt.

Miſt. Page. Truſt me he beate him moſt pitifully.

M. Ford. Nay by th'Maſſe that hee did not: hee beate him moſt unpittifully, me thought.

Miſt. Page. Ile have the cudgell hallow'd, and hung ore the Altar, it hath done meritorious ſervice.

Miſt. Ford. What thinke you? May we with the warrant of woman-hood, and the witneſſe of a good conſcience, purſue him with any further revenge?

M. Page. The ſpirit of wantonneſſe is ſure ſcar'd out of him, if the Divell have him not in fee-ſimple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I thinke, in the way of waſte, attempt us againe.

Miſt. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how wee have ſerved him?

Miſt. Page. Yes, by all meanes: if it be but to ſcrape the figures out of your husbands braines: if they can finde in their hearts, the poore unvertuous fat Knight ſhall be any further afflicted, we two will ſtill be the miniſters.

Miſt. Ford. Ile warrant they'l have him publikely ſham'd, and me thinkes there would be no period to the jeſt, ſhould he not be publikely ſham'd.

Miſt. Page. Come, to the Forge with it, then ſhape it: I would not have things coole. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Hoſt and Bardolfe.

Bar. Sir, the Germane deſires to have three of your horſes: the Duke himſelfe will be to morrow at Court, and they are going to meet him.

Hoſt. What Duke ſhould that be comes ſo ſecretly? I heare not of him in the Court: let me ſpeake with the Gentlemen, they ſpeake Engliſh?

Bar. I Sir? Ile call him to you.

Hoſt. They ſhall have my horſes, but Ile make them pay: Ile ſawce them, they have had my houſes a weeke at command: I have turn'd away my other gueſts, they muſt come off, Ile ſawce them, come. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Page, Ford, Miſtris Page, Miſtris Ford, Ford, and Evans.

Evans. 'Tis one of the beſt diſcretions of a o'man as ever I did looke upon.

Page. And did he ſend you both theſe Letters at an inſtant?

Miſt. Page. Within a quarter of an houre.

Ford. Pardon me (wife) henceforth do what thou wilt:
I rather will ſuſpect the Sunne with gold,
Then thee with wantonneſſe; Now doth thy honor ſtand

(In him that was of late an Hereticke)
As firme of faith.
Page. 'Tis well,'tis well,no more:
Be not extreame in ſubmiſſion,as in offence,
Bnt let our plot goe forward : Let our wives
Yet once againe(to make us publike ſport)
Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow,
Where we may take him,and diſgrace him for it.
Ford. There is no better way then that they ſpoke of.
Page. How?to ſend him word they'l meet him in the Parke at midnight? Fie,fie,he'l never come.
Evan. You ſay he hath been throwne into the River:and has been grievouſly peaten, as an old 'oman : me thinkes there ſhould be terrours in him,that he ſhould not come : Methinkes his fleſh is puniſh'd, hee ſhall have no deſires.
Page. So thinke I too.
M.Ford. Deviſe but how you'l uſe him when he comes.
And let us two deviſe to bring him thither.
M.Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the Hunter(ſometime a Keeper here in Windſor Forreſt)
Doth all the Winter time at ſtill of midnight
Walke round about an Oake, with great ragg'd hornes,
And there he blaſts the tree,and takes the cattle,
And makes milch-kine yeeld blood, and ſhakes a chaine
In a moſt hideous and dreadfull manner.
You have heard of ſuch a ſpirit,and well you know
The ſuperſtitious idle-headed-Eld
Receiv'd,and did deliver to our age
This tale of Herne the Hunter for a truth.
Page. Why yet there want not many that doe feare
In deepe of night to walke by this Hernes Oake :
But what of this?
Miſ. Ford. Marry this is our deviſe,
That Falſtaffe at that Oake ſhall meet with us.
Page. Well,let it not be doubted but he'l come,
And in this ſhape when you have brought him thither,
What ſhall be done with him ? What is your plot?
M.Page. That likewiſe have we thought upon , and thus :
Nan Page (my daughter)and my little ſonne,
And three or foure more of their growth,wee'l dreſſe
Like Vrchins,Ouphes,and Fairies,greene and white,
With rounds of waxen Tapers on their heads,
And Rattles in their hands; upon a ſodaine,
As Falſtaffe,ſhe,and I,are newly met,
Let them from forth a Saw-pit ruſh at once
With ſome diffuſed ſong : Vpon their ſight
We two,in great amazedneſſe will flye :
Then let them all encircle him about,
And Fairy-like to pinch the uncleane Knight;
And aske him why that houre of Fairy Revell,
In their ſo ſacred pathes,he dares to tread
In ſhape prophane.
Ford. And till he tell the truth,
Let the ſurpoſed Fairies pinch him ſound,
And burne him with their Tapers.
M.Pa. The truth being knowne,
We'l all preſent our ſelves; diſ-horne the ſpirit,
And mocke him home to Windſor.
Ford. The children muſt
Be practis'd well to this,or they'l nev'r doo't.
Evan. I will teach the children their behaviours:and I will be like a Iacke-an-Apes alſo,to burne the Knight with my Taber.
Ford. That will be excellent,
Ile goe buy them vizards.
Miſt. Page. My Nan ſhall be the Queene of all the Fairies,finely attired in a robe of white.
Page. That ſilke will I goe buy,and in that time
Shall M.Slender ſteale my Nan away,
And marry her at Eaton : goe,ſend to Falſtaffe ſtraight.
Ford. Nay,Ile to him againe in name of Broome,
Hee'l tell me all his purpoſe : ſure hee'l come.
Mi.Pa. Feare not you that : Goe get us properties
And tricking for your Fairies.
Evans. Let us about it,
It is admirable pleaſures,and ferry honeſt knaveries.
Miſ.Page. Goe Miſt.Ford,
Send quickely to Sir Iohn,to know his minde :
Ile to the Doctor,he hath my good will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page :
That Slender (though well landed)is an Ideot :
And he,my husband beſt of all affects :
The Doctor is well monyed,and his friends
Potent at Court : he,none but he ſhall have her,
Though twenty thouſand worthier come to crave her.
Exit.

Scæna quinta.

Enter Hoſt,Simple,Falſtaffe,Bardolfe,Evans,
Caius,Quickly.

Hoſt. What woulſt thou have? (Boore) what? (thick skin)ſpeake,breathe,diſcuſſe : briefe,ſhort,quicke,ſnap.
Sim. Marry ſir,I come to ſpeake with Sir Iohn Falſtaffe from M.Slender.
Hoſt. There's his Chamber , his Houſe , his Caſtle, his ſtanding bed and truckle bed : 'tis painted about with the ſtory of the Prodigall,freſh and new : go, knock and call : hee'l ſpeake like an Anthropophaginian unto thee : Knocke I ſay.
Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman gone up into his chamber : Ile be ſo bold as ſtay Sir till ſhe come downe : I come to ſpeake with her indeed.
Hoſt. Ha? A fat woman? The Knight may be robb'd: Ile call, Bully-Knight, Bully-Sir Iohn : ſpeake from thy Lungs Military : Art thou there? It is thine Hoſt , thine Epheſian cals.
Fal. How now,mine Hoſt?
Hoſt. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar taries the comming downe of thy fat woman : Let her deſcend (Bully) let her deſcend : my Chambers are honourable : Fie, privacy? Fie.
Fal. There was (mine Hoſt) an old fat woman even now with me,but ſhe's gone.
Sim. Pray you ſir, was't not the wiſe woman of Brainford?
Fal. I marry was it (Muſſel-ſhel) what would you with her?
Sim. My Maſter (Sir) my Maſter Slender , ſent to her ſeeing her goe through the ſtreets , to know (Sir) whether one Nim (Sir)that beguild him of a chaine , had the chaine,or no.
Fal. I ſpake with the old woman about it.
Sim. And what ſayes ſhe,I pray Sir?
Fal. Marry ſhe ſayes,that the very ſame man that beguil'd Maſter Slender of his Chaine,cozen'd him of it.
Simp. I would I could have ſpoken with the woman her ſelfe, I had other things to have ſpoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Hoſt. I, come: quicke.

Fal. I may not conceale them (ſir.)

Hoſt. Conceale them, or thou di'ſt.

Sim. Why ſir, they were nothing but about Miſtris Anne Page, to know if it were my Maſters fortune to have her or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What Sir.

Fal. To have her, or no: goe; ſay the woman told me ſo.

Sim. May I be bold to ſay ſo ſir?

Fal. I ſir: like who more bold.

Sim. I thanke your worſhip: I ſhall make my maſter glad with theſe tidings.

Hoſt. Thou art clearkly: thou art clearkly (ſir Iohn) was there a wiſe woman with thee?

Fal. I, that there was (mine Hoſt) one that hath taught me more wit, then ever I learn'd before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning. Enter Bardolph.

Bar. Out alas (ſir) cozonage: meere cozonage.

Hoſt. Where be my horſes? ſpeake well of them varletto.

Bar. Run away with the cozoners: for ſo ſoone as I came beyond Eaton, they threw me off from behinde one of them in a ſlow of myre; and ſet ſpurres, and away; like three Germane-Divels; three Doctor Fauſtuſſes.

Hoſt. They are gone but to meet the Duke (villaine) doe not ſay they be fled: Germanes are honeſt men.

Enter Evans.

Ev. Where is mine Hoſt?

Hoſt. What is the matter ſir?

Evans. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to towne, tels me there is three Cozen-Iermans, that has cozend all the Hoſts of Readins, of Maidenhead; of Cole-brooke, of horſes and money: I tell you for good will (looke you) you are wiſe, and full of gibes, and vlouting-ſtockes: and 'tis not convenient you ſhould be cozoned. Fare you well. Exit. Enter Caius.

Cai. Ver'is mine Hoſt de Iarteere?

Hoſt. Here (Maſter Doctor) in perplexity and doubtfull delemma.

Cai. I cannot tell vat is dat: but it is tell-a-me, dat you make grand preparation for a Duke de Iamany: by my trot: der is no Duke dat the Court is know, to come: I tell you for good will: adieu. Exit.

Hoſt. Huy and cry (villaine) goe: aſſiſt me Knight, I am undone: flye, run: hu and cry (villaine) I am undone. Exit.

Fal. I would all the world might be cozen'd, for I have beene cozened and beaten too: if it ſhould come to the eare of the Court, how I have beene transform'd; and how my transformation hath beene waſh'd and cudgel'd, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor Fiſhermens boots with me: I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as creſt-falne as a dri'd Peare: I never proſper'd, ſince I forſwore my ſelfe at Primero: well, if my wind were but long enough; I would repent: Now? Whence come you?

Enter Quickly.

Qu. From the two parties forſooth.

Fal. The Divell take one party, and his Dam the other: and ſo they ſhall be both beſtow'd; I have ſuffer'd more for their ſakes; more than the villanous inconſtancy of mans diſpoſition is able to beare.

Qu. And have not they ſuffer'd? Yes, I warrant, ſpeciouſly one of them; Miſtris Ford (good heart) is beaten blacke and blue, that you cannot ſee a white ſpot about her.

Fal. What tell'ſt thou mee of blacke and blue? I was beaten my ſelfe into all the colours of the Rainebow: and I was like to be apprehended for the Witch of Brainford, but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old Woman deliver'd mee, the Knave Conſtable had ſet me ith' Stockes, ith' common Stockes for a Witch.

Qu. Sir, let me ſpeake with you in your Chamber, you ſhall heare how things goe, and (I warrant) to your content: here is a letter will ſay ſomewhat: (good hearts) what a-doe here is to bring you together? Sure one of you do's not ſerve heaven well, that you are ſo croſs'd.

Fal. Come up into my Chamber. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Fenton, Hoſt.

Hoſt. Maſter Fenton, talke not to mee, my minde is heavy: I will give over all.

Fen. Yet heare me ſpeake: aſſiſt me in my purpoſe,
And (as I am a Gentleman) Ile give thee
A hundred pound in gold, more then your loſſe.

Hoſt. I will heare you (Maſter Fenton) and I will (at the leaſt) keepe your counſell.

Fen. From time to time, I have acquainted you
With the deare love I beare to faire Anne Page,
Who, mutually, hath anſwer'd my affection,
(So farre forth, as her ſelfe might be her chuſer)
Even to my wiſh; I have a letter from her
Of ſuch contents, as you will wonder at;
The mirth whereof, ſo larded with my matter,
That neither ſingly can be manifeſted
Without the ſhew of both: fat Sir Iohn Falſtaffe
Hath a great Scene; the image of the jeſt
Ile ſhew you here at large (harke good mine Hoſt:)
To night at Hernes Oke, juſt 'twixt twelve and one,
Muſt my ſweet Nan preſent the Faiery Queene:
The purpoſe why, is here: in which diſguiſe
While other jeſts are ſomething ranke on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to ſlip
Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton
Immediately to marry: She hath conſented: Now Sir,
Her mother, (even ſtrong againſt that match
And firme for Doctor Caius) hath appointed
That he ſhall likewiſe ſhuffle her away,
While other ſports are taskíng of their mindes,
And at the Deanry, where a Prieſt attends
Strait marry her: to this her Mothers plot
She (ſeemingly obedient) likewiſe hath
Made promiſe to the Doctor: Now, thus it reſts,
Her father meanes ſhe ſhall be all in white;
And in that habite, when Slender ſees his time
To take her by the hand, and bid her goe,
She ſhall goe with him: her Mother hath intended
(The better to devote her to the Doctor;
For they muſt all be mask'd and vizarded)

That quaint in greene, ſhe ſhall be looſe enroab'd,
With Ribands-pendant, flaring 'bout her head;
And when the Doctor ſpies his vantage ripe,
To pinch her by the hand, and on that token,
The maid hath given conſent to goe with him.

Hoſt. Which meanes ſhe to deceive? Father, or Mother?

Fen. Both (my good Hoſt) to goe along with me,
And here it reſts, that you'l procure the Vicar
To ſtay for me at Church, 'twixt twelve and one,
And in the lawfull name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony.

Hoſt. Well, husband your device; Ile to the Vicar,
Bring you the Maid, you ſhall not lacke a Prieſt.

Fen. So ſhall I evermore be bound to thee;
Beſides, Ile make a preſent recompence. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Falſtaffe, Quickly, and Ford.

Fal. Prethee no more pratling: go, Ile hold, this is the third time: I hope good lucke lies in odde numbers, Away, goe, they ſay there is Divinity in odde numbers, either in Nativity, chance, or death: away.

Qui. Ile provide you a chaine, and Ile doe what I can to get you a paire of hornes.

Fal. Away I ſay, time weares, hold up your head and mince. How now M. Broome? Maſter Broome, the matter will be knowne to night, or never. Be you in the Parke about midnight, at Hernes-Oake, and you ſhall ſee wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yeſterday (Sir) as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her (Maſter Broome) as yôu ſee, like a poore-old-man, but I came from her (Maſter Broome) like a poore-old-woman; that ſame Knave (Ford her huſband) hath the fineſt mad Divell of jealouſie in him (Maſter Broome) that ever govern'd Frenzie. I will tell you, he beat me grievouſly, in the ſhape of a woman: (for in the ſhape of man (Maſter Broome) I feare not Goliah with a Weavers beame, (becauſe I know alſo, life is a Shuttle) I am in haſte, goe along with mee, Ile tell you all (Maſter Broome:) ſince I pluckt Geeſe, plaid Trewant and whipt Top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten, till lately. Follow me, Ile tell you ſtrange things of this Knave Ford, on whom to night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. Follow, ſtrange things in hand (M. Broome) follow. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender.

Page. Come, come: wee'll couch i'th Caſtle-ditch, till we ſee the light of our Fairies. Remember ſonne Slender, my daughter.

Slen. I forſooth, I have ſpoke with her, and wee have a nay-word how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry Mum; ſhe cryes Budget, and by that we know one another.

Shal. That's good too: but what needes either your Mum, or her Budget? The white will decipher her well enough. It hath ſtrooke ten a'clocke.

Page. The night is darke, Light and Spirits will become it well: Heaven proſper our ſport. No man meanes evill but the Divell, and we ſhall know him by his hornes. Lets away: follow me. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Miſt. Page, Miſt. Ford, Caius.

Miſt. Page. M^r. Doctor, my daughter is in greene, when you ſee your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the Deanry, and diſpatch it quickly: goe before into the Parke: we two muſt goe together.

Cai. I know vat I have to do, adieu. Exit.

Miſt. Page. Fare you well (ſir) my husband will not rejoyce ſo much at the abuſe of Falſtaffe, as he will chafe at the Doctors marrying my daughter: But 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, then a great deale of heart-breake.

Miſt. Ford. Where is Nan now? and her troope of Fairies? and the Welſh Divell Herne?

Miſt. Page. They are all couch'd in a pit hard by Hernes Oake, with obſcur'd Lights; which at the very inſtant of Falſtaffes and our meeting, they will at once diſplay to the night.

Miſt. Ford. That cannot chooſe but amaze him.

Miſt. Page. If he be not amaz'd he will be mock'd: If he be amaz'd, he will be mock'd.

Miſt. Ford. Wee'l betray him finely.

Mi. Pa. Againſt ſuch Lewdſters, and their Lechery,
Thoſe that betray them doe no treachery.

Miſt. Ford. The houre drawes on: to the Oake, to the Oake. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Evans and Fairies.

Evans. Trib, trib, Fairies: Come, and remember your parts: be pold (I pray you) follow me into the pit, and when I give the watch-'ords: doe as I bid you: Come, come, trib, trib. Exeunt.

Scæna quinta.

Enter Falſtaffe, Miſtreſſe Page, Miſtris Ford, Evans,
Anne Page, Fairies, Page, Ford, Quickly,
Slender, Fenton, Caius, Piſtoll.

Fal. The Windſor Bell hath ſtroke twelve: the Minute drawes on: Now the hot-bloodied-gods aſſiſt mee: Remember Iove, thou waſt a Bull for thy Europa, Love ſet on thy hornes. O powerfull Love, that in ſome reſpects makes a Beaſt a Man: in ſome other, a Man, a Beaſt. You were alſo (Iupiter) a Swan, for the love of Leda: O omnipotent Love, how nere the god drew to the complexion of a Gooſe: a fault done firſt in the forme of a Beaſt, (O Iove, a beaſtly fault:) and then another fault, in the ſemblance of a Fowle, thinke on't (Iove) a fowle-fault. When gods have hot backes, what ſhall poore men doe? For me, I am here a Windſor Stagge, and the fatteſt (I thinke) i'th Forreſt. Send me a coole rut-time (Iove) or who can blame me to piſſe my Tallow? Who comes here? my Doe?

M.Ford. Sir Iohn? Art thou there (my Deare?)
My male-Deere?

Fal. My Doe with the blacke Scut? Let the skie raine Potatoes: let it thunder, to the tune of Greene-ſleeves, haile-kiſſing Comfits, and ſnow Eringoes: Let there come a tempeſt of provocation, I will ſhelter mee here.

M.Ford. Miſtris Page is come with me (Sweetheart.)

Fal. Divi'd me like a brib'd-Bucke, each a Haunch: I will keepe my ſides to my ſelfe, my ſhoulders for the fellow of this walke; and my hornes I bequeathe your husbands. Am I a Woodman, ha? Speake I like Herne the Hunter? Why, now is Cupid a childe of Conſcience, he makes reſtitution. As I am a true ſpirit, welcome.

M.Page Alas, what noyſe?

M.Ford. Heaven forgive our ſinnes.

Fal. What ſhould this be?

M.Ford. M.Page. Away, away.

Fal. I thinke the Divell will not have me damn'd,
Leaſt the Oyle that's in me ſhould ſet hell on fire;
He would never elſe croſſe me thus.

Enter Fairies.

Qui. Fairies, blacke, gray, greene, and white,
You Moone-ſhine Revellers, and ſhades of night.
You Orphan heires of fixed deſtiny,
Attend your office, and your quality.
Crier Hob-goblin, make the Fairy Oyes.

Piſt. Elves, liſt your names: Silence you ayry toyes.
Cricket, to Windſor Chimneyes ſhalt thou leape:
Where fires thou find'ſt unrak'd, and Hearths unſwept,
There pinch the Maides as blue as Bilbery,
Our radiant Queene hates Sluts and ſluttery.

Fal. They are Fairies, he that ſpeakes to them ſhall die.
Ile winke and couch: No man their workes muſt eye.

Ev. Where's Bede? Go you, and where you find a Maid
That ere ſhe ſleepe has thrice her prayers ſaid,
Raiſe up the Organs of her fantaſie,
Sleepe ſhe as ſound as careleſſe infancy,
But thoſe as ſleepe and thinke not on their ſinnes,
Pinch them armes, legs, backs, ſhoulders, ſides and ſhinnes.

Qu. About, about;
Search Windſor Caſtle (Elves) within, and out.
Strew good lucke (Ouphes) on every ſacred roome,
That it may ſtand till the perpetuall doome,
In ſtate as wholeſome, as in ſtate 'tis fit,
Worthy the Owner, and the Owner it.
The ſeverall Chaires of Order, looke you ſcowre
With juyce of Balme; and every precious flowre,
Each faire Inſtalment, Coat, and ſev'rall Creſt,
With loyall Blazon evermore be bleſt.
And Nightly-medow-Fairies, looke you ſing
Like to the Garters-Compaſſe in a Ring,
Th'expreſſure that it beares: Greene let it be,
More fertile-freſh then all the field to ſee:
And, Hony Soit Qui Mal-y-Penſe, write
In Emrold-tuffes, Flowres purple, blue, and white,
Like Saphire-pearle, and rich Embroiderie,
Buckled below faire Knight-hoods bending knee;
Fairies uſe Flowers for their Characterie,
Away, diſperſe: But till 'tis one a clocke,
Our dance of cuſtome round about the Oke
Of Herne the Hunter, let us not forget.

Ev. Pray you locke hand in hand, your ſelves in order ſet:
And twenty Glow-wormes ſhall our Lanthornes be
To guide our Meaſure round about the tree.
But ſtay, I ſmell a man of middle earth.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welſh Fairy,
Leaſt he transforme me to a peece of Cheeſe.

Piſt. Vilde worme, thou waſt ore-look'd even in thy birth.

Qu. With tryall-fire touch me his finger end:
If he be chaſte, the flame will backe deſcend
And turne him to no paine: but if he ſtart,
It is the fleſh of a corrupted heart.

Piſt. A triall, come.

Evans. Come, will this wood take fire?

Fal. Oh, oh, oh.

Qu. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in deſire.
About him (Fairies) ſing a ſcornfull Rime,
And as you trip, ſtill pinch him to your time.

The Song.

Fie on ſinfull phantaſie: Fie on Luſt and Luxurie:
Luſt is but a bloody fire, kindled with unchaſte deſire,
Fed in heart whoſe flames aſpire,
As thoughts doe blow them higher and higher.
Pinch him (Fairies) mutually: pinch him for his Villanie.
Pinch him, and burne him, and turne him about,
Till Candles, and Star-light, and Moone-ſhine be out.

Page. Nay doe not flye, I thinke we have watcht you now: Will none but Herne the Hunter ſerve your turne?

M.Page. I pray you come, hold up the jeſt no higher.
Now (good Sir Iohn) how like you Windſor Wives?
See you theſe husbands? Doe not theſe faire Okes
Become the Forreſt better then the Towne?

Ford. Now Sir, who's a Cuckold now?
M^r^. Broome, Falſtaff's a Knave, a Cuckoldly Knave,
Heere are his hornes Maſter Broome:
And Maſter Broome, he hath enjoyed nothing of Fords, but his Buck-basket, his Cudgell, and twenty pounds of money, which muſt be paid to M. Broome, his horſes are arreſted for it, M. Broome.

M.Ford. Sir Iohn, we have had ill lucke: we could never meet: I will never take you for my Love againe, but I will alwayes count you my Deere.

Fal. I doe begin to perceive that I am made an Aſſe.

Ford. I, and an Oxe too: both the proofes are extant.

Fal. And theſe are not Fairies:
I was three or foure times in the thought they were not Fairies, and yet the guiltineſſe of my minde, the ſodaine ſurprize of my powers, drove the groſſeneſſe of the foppery into a receiv'd beliefe, in deſpight of the teeth of all rime and reaſon, that they were Fairies. See now how wit may be made a Iacke-a-Lent, when 'tis upon ill imployment.

Evan. Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, ſerve Got, and leave your deſires, and Fairies will not pinſe you.

Ford. Well ſaid Fairy Hugh.

Evan. And leave you your jealouzies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never miſtruſt my wife againe, till thou art able to wooe her in good Engliſh.

Fal. Have I laid my braine in the Sunne and dri'd it, that it wants matter to prevent ſo groſſe ore-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch Goat too? Shall I have a Coxecombe of Frize? 'Tis time I were choak'd with a peece of toaſted Cheeſe.

Evans. Seeſe is not good to give putter; your pelly is all putter.

Fal. Seeſe and Putter? Have I liv'd to ſtand at the taunt of one that makes Fritters of Engliſh? This is enough to be the decay of Luſt and late-walking through the Realme.

Miſt.Page. Why Sir Iohn, doe you thinke, though we would have thruſt vertue out of our hearts by the head and ſhoulders, and have given our ſelves without ſcruple to Hell, that ever the Divell could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a Hodge-pudding? A bag of Flax?

Miſt.Page. A puft man?

Page. Old, cold, wither'd, and of intollerable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as ſlanderous as Sathan?

Page. And as poore as Iob.

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Evan. And given to Fornications, and to Tavernes, and Sacke, and Wine, and Metheglins, and to drinkings, and ſwearings, and ſtaring? Pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your Theame: you have the ſtart of me, I am dejected: I am not able to anſwer the Welch Flannell, Ignorance it ſelfe is a Plummet ore me, uſe me as you will.

Ford. Marry ſir, wee'l bring you to Windſor to one Mr Broome, that you have cozon'd of money, to whom you ſhould have beene a Pander: over and above that you have ſuffer'd, I thinke, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerefull Knight, thou ſhalt eat a Poſſet to night at my houſe, where I will deſire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughes at thee: Tell her Mr. Slender hath married her daughter.

Miſt.Page. Doctors doubt that;
If Anne Page be my daughter, ſhe is (by this) Doctor Caius wife.

Enter Slender.

Slen. Whoa hoe, hoe, Father Page.

Page. Sonne? How now? How now ſonne,
Have you diſpatch'd?

Slen. Diſpatch'd? Ile make the beſt in Gloſterſhire know on't: would I were hang'd la, elſe.

Slen. I came yonder at Eaton to marry Miſtris Anne Page, and ſhee's a great lubberly Boy. If it had not beene i'th Church, I would have ſwing'd him, or he ſhould have ſwing'd mee. If I did not thinke it had beene Anne Page, would I might never ſtirre, and 'tis a Poſt-maſters Boy.

Page. Vpon my life then, you tooke the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I thinke ſo, when I tooke a Boy for a Girle: If I had beene married to him, (for all he was in womans apparell) I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your owne folly,
Did not I tell you how you ſhould know my daughter
By her garments?

Slen. I went to her in greene, and cryed Mum, and ſhe cry'd Budget, as Anne and I had appointed, and yet it was not Anne, but a Poſt-maſters Boy.

Miſt.Page. Good George be not angry, I knew of your purpoſe: turn'd my daughter into white, and indeed ſhee is now with the Doctor at the Deanry, and there married.

Enter Caius.

Cai. Ver is Miſtris Page: by gar I am cozoned, I ha married one Garſoon, a Boe; oon Peſant, by gar. A Boy, it is not An Page, by gar, I am cozoned.

M.Pa. Why? did you take her in white?

Cai. I be gar, and 'tis a Boy: be gar, Ile raiſe all Windſor.

Ford. This is ſtrange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart miſgives me, here comes M. Fenton.
How now M. Fenton?

An. Pardon good father, good my mother pardon.

Page. Now Miſtris:
How chance you went not with M. Slender?

Mi.Pa. Why went you not with Mr Doctor Maid?

Fen. You doe amaze her: heare the truth of it,
You would have married her moſt ſhamefully,
Where there was no proportion held in love:
The truth is, ſhe and I (long ſince contracted)
Are now ſo ſure that nothing can diſſolve us:
Th'offence is holy that ſhe hath committed,
And this deceit loſes the name of craft,
Of diſobedience, or unduteous title,
Since therein ſhe doth evitate and ſhun
A thouſand irreligious curſed houres
Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Ford. Stand not amaz'd, here is no remedy:
In Love, the heavens themſelves doe guide the ſtate,
Money buyes Lands, and wives are ſold by fate.

Fal. I am glad, though you have tane a ſpeciall ſtand to ſtrike at me, that your Arrow hath glanc'd.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy, what cannot be eſchew'd, muſt be embrac'd.

Fal. When night-dogs runne, all ſorts of Deere are chac'd.

Mi.Pa. Well, I will muſe no further: M. Fenton,
Heaven give you many, many merry dayes:
Good husband, let us every one goe home,
And laugh this ſport ore by a countrey fire,
Sir Iohn and all.

Ford. Let it be ſo (Sir Iohn:)
To Maſter Broome, you yet ſhall hold your word,
For he, to night, ſhall lye with Miſtris Ford. Exeunt.

FINIS.

MEASVRE For Meaſure.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Duke, Eſcalus, Lords.

Duke.
Eſcalus.
Eſca. My Lord.
Duk. Of government, the properties to unfold,
Would ſeeme in me t'affect ſpeech and diſcourſe.
Since I am put to know, that your owne Science
Exceedes (in that) the liſts of all advice
My ſtrength can give you: Then no more remaines
But that, to your ſufficiency, as your worth is able,
And let them worke: The nature of our people,
Our Cities inſtitutions, and the Termes
For Common Iuſtice, y'are as pregnant in
As Art, and practiſe hath enriched any
That we rememember: There is our Commiſſion,
From which, we would not have you warpe; call hither,
I ſay, bid come before us Angelo:
What figure of us thinke you, he will beare.
For you muſt know, we have with ſpeciall ſoule
Elected him our abſence to ſupply;
Lent him our terror, dreſt him with our love,
And given his Deputation all the Organs
Of our owne power: what thinke you of it?
Eſc. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergoe ſuch ample grace and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Looke where he comes.
Ang. Alwayes obedient to your graces will,
I come to know your Graces pleaſure.
Duke. Angelo:
There is a kinde of Character in thy life,
That to th'obſerver, doth thy hiſtory
Fully vnfold: Thy ſelfe and thy belongings
Are not thine owne ſo proper, as to waſte
Thy ſelfe upon thy vertues; they on thee:
Heaven doth with us, as we with Torches doe,
Not light them for themſelves: For if our vertues
Did not goe forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not: Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine iſſues: nor Nature never lends
The ſmalleſt ſcruple of her excellence,
But like a thrifty goddeſſe, ſhe determines
Her ſelfe the glory of a creditour,
Both thankes and uſe; but I doe bend my ſpeech
To one that can my part in him advertiſe;
Hold therefore Angelo:
In our remove, be thou at full, our ſelfe:
Mortality and Mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart: Old Eſcalus
Though firſt in queſtion, is thy ſecondary.
Take thy Commiſſion.
Ang. Now good my Lord
Let there be ſome more teſt, made of my mettle,
Before ſo noble and ſo great a figure
Be ſtampt't upon it.
Duke. No more evaſion:
We have with a leaven'd, and prepared choyce
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours:
Our haſte from hence is of ſo quicke condition,
That it prefers it ſelfe, and leaves unqueſtion'd
Matters of needfull value: We ſhall write to you
As time, and our concernings ſhall importune,
How it goes with us, and doe looke to know
What doth befall you here. So fare you well;
To th'hopefull execution doe I leave you,
Of your Commiſſion.
Ang. Yet give leave (my Lord,)
That we may bring you ſomething on the way.
Duke. My haſte may not admit it,
Nor need you (on mine honour) have to doe
With any ſcruple: your ſcope is as mine owne,
So to inforce, or qualifie the Lawes,
As to your ſoule ſeemes good: Give me your hand;
Ile privily away: I love the people,
But doe not like to ſtage me to their eyes:
Though it doe well, I doe not relliſh well
Their loud applauſe, and Aves vehement:
Nor doe I thinke the man of ſafe diſcretion
That do's affect it. Once more fare you well.
Ang. The heavens give ſafety to your purpoſes.
Eſc. Lead forth and bring you backe in happineſſe.
Duke. I thanke you, fare you well. Exit.
Eſc. I ſhall deſire you, Sir, to give me leave
To have free ſpeech with you; and it concernes me
To looke into the bottome of my place:
A power I have, but of what ſtrength and nature,
I am not yet inſtructed.
Ang. 'Tis ſo with me: Let us with-draw together,
And we may ſoone our ſatisfaction have
Touching that point.
Eſc. Ile wait upon you honour.

Exeunt.

Scæna ſecunda.

Enter Lucio, and two other Gentlemen.

Luc. If the Duke, with the other Dukes, come not to compoſition with the King of Hungary, why then all the Dukes fall upon the King.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungaries.

2 Gent. Amen.

Luc. Thou conclud'ſt like the Sanctimonious Pyrat, that went to Sea with the tenne Commandements, but ſcrap'd one out of the Table.

2 Gent. Thou ſhalt not ſteale?

Luc. I, that he raz'd.

1 Gent. Why? 'twas a Commandement to command the Captaine and all the reſt from their functions: they put forth to ſteale: There's not a ſouldier of us all, that in the thankeſgiving before meate, doe ralliſh the petition well that prayes for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any ſouldier diſlike it.

Luc. I beleeve thee: for I thinke thou never was't where Grace was ſaid.

2 Gent. No? a dozen times at leaſt.

1 Gent. What? in meeter?

Luc. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I thinke, or in any Religion.

Luc. I, why not? Grace, is Grace, deſpight of all controverſie: as for example; Thou thy ſelfe art a wicked villaine, deſpight of all Grace.

1 Gent. Well: there went but a paire of ſheeres betweene us.

Luc. I grant: as there may betweene the Liſts and the Velvet. Thou art the Liſt.

1 Gent. And thou the Velvet; thou art good Velvet; thou'rt a three pil'd-peece I warrant thee: I had as lieſe be a Lyſt of an Engliſh Kerſey, as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French Velvet. Doe I ſpeeke feelingly now?

Luc. I thinke thou doſt: and indeed with moſt painefull feeling of thy ſpeech: I will, out of thine owne confeſſion, learne to begin thy health; but whilſt I live, forget to drinke after thee.

1 Gent. I thinke I have done my ſelfe wrong, have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou haſt; whether thou art tainted, or free. Enter Bawde.

Luc. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes.
I have purchas'd as many diſeaſes under her Roofe,
As come to————

2 Gent. To what I pray?

Luc. Iudge.

2 Gent. To three thouſand Dollours a yeere.

1 Gent. I, and more.

Luc. A French crowne more.

1 Gent. Thou art alwayes figuring diſeaſes in me; but thou art full of errour, I am ſound.

Luc. Nay, not (as one would ſay) healthy: but ſo ſound, as things that are hollow; thy bones are hollow; Impiety has made a feaſt of thee.

1 Gent. How now, which of your hips has the moſt profound Sciatica?

Bawd. Well, well: there's one yonder arreſted, and carried to priſon, was worth five thouſand of you all.

2 Gent. Who's that I prethee?

Bawd. Marry ſir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to priſon? 'tis not ſo.

Bawd. Nay, but I know 'tis ſo: I ſaw him arreſted: ſaw him carried away: and which is more, within theſe three dayes his head to be chopt off.

Luc. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it ſo: Ar thou ſure of this?

Bawd. I am too ſure of it: and it is for getting Madam Iulietta with child.

Luc. Beleeve mee this may be: hee promis'd to meete me two howres ſince, and he was ever preciſe in promiſe-keeping.

2 Gent. Beſides you know, it drawes ſomething neere to the ſpeech we had to ſuch a purpoſe.

1 Gent. But moſt of all agreeing with the Proclamation.

Luc. Away, let's goe learne the truth of it. Exeunt.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war; what with the ſweat, what with the gallowes, and what with poverty, I am cuſtome-ſhrunke. How now? what's the newes with you? Enter Clowne.

Clow. Yonder man is carryed to priſon.

Baw. Well: what has he done?

Clow. A woman.

Baw. But what's his offence?

Clow. Groping for Trowts, in a peculiar River.

Baw. What? is there a Maid with child by him?

Clow. No: but there's a woman with Maid by him: you have not heard of the Proclamation, have you?

Baw. What Proclamation, man?

Clow. All houſes in the Suburbes of Vienna muſt bee pluck'd downe.

Baw. And what ſhall become of thoſe in the Citie?

Clow. They ſhall ſtand for ſeed: they had gone downe too, but that a wiſe Burger put in for them.

Baw. But ſhall all our houſes of reſort in the Suburbes be pull'd downe?

Clow. To the ground Miſtris.

Baw. Why here's a change indeed in the Commonwealth: what ſhall become of me?

Clow. Come: feare not you: good Counſellours lacke no Clients: though you change your place, you need not change your Trade: Ile be your Tapſter ſtill; courage, there will be pitty taken on you; you that have worne your eies almoſt out in the ſervice, you will be conſidered.

Bawd. What's to doe here, Thomas Tapſter? let's withdraw.

Clow. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the Provoſt to priſon: and theres Madam Iuliet. Exeunt.

Scæna tertia.

Enter Provoſt, Claudio, Iuliet, Officers, Lucio, and two Gent.

Cla. Fellow, why doſt thou ſhow me thus to th'world?
Beare me to priſon, where I am committed.

Pro. I doe it not in evill diſpoſition,
But from Angelo by ſpeciall charge.

Clau. Thus can the demy-god (Authority)
Make us pay downe, for our offence, by waight
The words of heaven; on whom it will, it will,
On whom it will not (ſo) yet ſtill tis juſt.

Luc. Why how now Claudio? whence comes this reſtraint.

Clau. From too-much liberty, (my Lucio) liberty,
As ſurfet is the father of much faſt,
So every ſcope by the immoderate uſe
Turnes to reſtraint: our Natures doe purſue

Like Rats that ravin downe their proper Bane,
A thirſty evill, and when we drinke, we die.

Luc. If I could ſpeake ſo wiſely, under an arreſt, I would ſend for certaine of my Creditors: and yet, to ſay the truth, I had as liefe have the foppery of freedome, as the mortality of impriſonment: what's thy offence, Claudio?

Cla. What (but to ſpeake of) would offend againe.
Luc. What is't murder?
Cla. No.
Luc. Lechery?
Cla. Call it ſo.
Pro. Away, ſir, you muſt goe.
Cla. One word, good friend:
Lucio, a word with you.
Luc. A hundred:
If they'l doe you any good: Is Lechery ſo look'd after?
Cla. Thus ſtands it with me: upon a true contract
I got poſſeſſion of Iuliettas bed,
You know the Lady, ſhe is faſt my wife,
Save that we doe the denunciation lacke
Of outward Order. This we came not to,
Onely for propagation of a Dowre
Remaining in the Coffer of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our Love
Till Time had made them for us. But it chances
The ſtealth of our moſt mutuall entertainment
With Character too groſſe, is writ in Iuliet.
Luc. With Childe, perhaps?
Cla. Vnhappily, even ſo.
And the new Deputy, now for the Duke,
Whether it be the fault and glimpſe of newneſſe,
Or whether that the body publique, be
A horſe whereon the Governour doth ride,
Who newly in the ſeat, that it may know
He can command; lets it ſtrait feele the ſpur:
Whether the tyranny be in his place,
Or in his eminence that fils it up
I ſtagger in: But this new Governour
Awakes me all the enrolled penalties
Which have (like unſcowr'd Armor) hung by th'wall
So long, that nineteene Zodiacks have gone round,
And none of them been worn; and for a name
Now puts the drowſie and neglected Act
Freſhly on me: 'tis ſurely for a name.

Luc. I warrant it is: and thy head ſtands ſo tickle on thy ſhoulders, that a Milke-maid, if ſhe be in love, may ſigh it off: Send after the Duke and appeale to him.

Cla. I have done ſo, but he's not to be found.
I prethee (Lucio) doe me this kinde ſervice:
This day, my ſiſter ſhould the Cloyſter enter,
And there receive her approbation.
Acquaint her with the danger of my ſtate,
Implore her, in my voyce, that ſhe make friends
To the ſtrict Deputy: bid her ſelfe aſſay him,
I have great hope in that: for in her youth
There is a prone and ſpeechleſſe Dialect,
Such as move men: beſide ſhe hath proſperous Art
When ſhe will play with reaſon, and diſcourſe,
And well ſhe can perſwade.

Luc. I pray ſhe may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which elſe would ſtand upon grievous impoſition: as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be ſorry ſhould be thus fooliſhly loſt, at a game of Ticke-tacke: Ile to her.

Cla. I thanke you good friend Lucio.
Luc. Within two houres.
Cla. Come Officer, away. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Duke and Frier Thomas.

Duke No: holy Father, throw away that thought,
Beleeve not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a compleat boſome: why, I deſire thee
To give me ſecret harbour, hath a purpoſe
More grave and wrinkled, then the aimes and ends
Of burning youth.
Fri. May your Grace ſpeake of it.
Duke My holy ſir, none better knowes then you
How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd
And held in idle price, to haunt aſſemblies
Where youth and coſt, and witleſſe bravery keepes.
I have delivered to Lord Angelo
(A man of ſtricture and firme abſtinence)
My abſolute power, and place here in Vienna,
And he ſuppoſes me travail'd to Poland,
(For ſo I have ſtrew'd it in the common eare)
And ſo it is receiv'd: Now (pious ſir)
You will demaund of me, why I do this.
Fri. Gladly, my Lord.
Duke. We have ſtrict Statutes, and moſt biting Lawes,
(The needfull bits and curbes for headſtrong weeds,)
Which for this fourteene yeares, we have let ſlip,
Even like an ore-growne Lyon in a Cave
That goes not out to prey: Now, as fond Fathers,
Having bound up the threatning twigs of Birch,
Onely to ſticke it in their childrens ſight,
For errour, not to uſe: in time the rod
More mock'd then fear'd: ſo our Decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themſelves are dead,
And liberty plucks Iuſtice by the noſe;
The Baby beates the Nurſe, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.
Fri. It reſted in your Grace
To unlooſe this tyde-up Iuſtice, when you pleas'd:
And it in you more dreadfull would have ſeem'd
Than in Lord Angelo.
Duke. I doe feare, too dreadfull:
Sith 'twas my fault to give the people ſcope,
'Twould be my tyranny to ſtrike & gall them,
For what I bid them doe: For we bid this be done
When evill deeds have their permiſſive paſſe,
And not the puniſhment: therefore indeed (my father)
I have on Angelo impos'd the office,
Who may in th'ambuſh of my name, ſtrike home,
And yet, my nature never in the fight
To doe in ſlander: And to behold his ſway
I will, as 'twere a brother of your Order,
Viſit both Prince and people: Therefore I prethee
Supply me with the habit, and inſtruct me
How I may formally in perſon beare
Like a true Frier: Moe reaſons for this action
At your more leiſure, ſhall I render you;
Onely this one: Lord Angelo is preciſe,
Stands at a guard with Envie: ſcarce confeſſes
That his blood flowes: or that his appetite
Is more to bread than ſtone: hence ſhall we ſee
If power change purpoſe: what our Seemers be. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Iſabell, and Franciſca a Nun.

Iſa. And have you Nuns no farther priviledges?
Nun. Are not theſe large enough?
Iſa. Yes truely; I ſpeake not as deſiring more,
But rather wiſhing a more ſtrict reſtraint
Vpon the Siſterhood, the Votariſts of Saint Clare.
Lucio within.
Luc. Hoa? peace be in this place.
Iſa. Who's that which cals?
Nun. It is a mans voyce, gentle Iſabella,
Turne you the key, and know his buſineſſe of him;
You may; I may not: you are yet unſworne:
When you have vow'd, you muſt not ſpeake with men,
But in the preſence of the Prioreſſe;
Then if you ſpeake, you muſt not ſhew your face;
Or if you ſhew your face, you muſt not ſpeake:
He cals againe: I pray you anſwer him.
Iſa. Peace and proſperity: who is't that cals?
Luc. Haile Virgin, (if you be) as thoſe cheeke-Roſes
Proclaime you are noleſſe: can you ſo ſteed me,
As bring me to the ſight of Iſabella,
A novice of this place, and the faire Siſter
To her unhappy brother Claudio?
Iſa. Why her unhappy brother? Let me aske,
The rather for I now muſt make you know
I am that Iſabella, and his Siſter.
Luc. Gentle and faire: your brother kindly greets you;
Not to be weary with you; he's in priſon.
Iſa. Woe me; for what?
Luc. For that, which if my ſelfe might be his Iudge,
He ſhould receive his puniſhment in thankes:
He hath got his friend with Childe.
Iſa. Sir, make me not your ſtory.
Luc. 'Tis true; I would not, though 'tis my familiar ſin,
With Maids to ſeeme the Lapwing, and to jeſt
Tongue, farre from heart: play with all Virgins ſo:
I hold you as a thing en-skied and ſainted,
By your renouncement, an immortall ſpirit
And to be talk'd with in ſincerity,
As with a Saint.
Iſa. You doe blaſpheme the good, in mocking me.
Luc. Doe not beleeve it: fewneſſe, and truth; tis thus,
Your brother and his Lover have imbrac'd;
As thoſe that feed, grow full: as bloſſoming Time
That from the ſeedneſſe, the bare fallow brings
To teeming foyſon: even ſo her plenteous wombe
Expreſſeth his full Tilth and Husbandry.
Iſa. Some one with child by him? my Coſen Iuliet?
Luc. Is ſhe your Coſen?
Iſa. Adoptedly, as ſchoole-maids change their names
By vaine, though apt affection.
Luc. She it is.
Iſa. Let him marry her.
Luc. This is the point.
The Duke is very ſtrangely gone from hence;
Bore many Gentlemen (my ſelfe being one)
In hand, and hope of action: but we doe learne,
By thoſe that know the very Nerves of State,
His giving-out, were of an Infinite diſtance
From his true meant deſigne: upon his place,
(And with full line of his authority)
Governes Lord Angelo; A man, whoſe blood
Is very ſnow-broth: one, who never feeles
The wanton ſtings, and motions of the ſenſe;
But doth rebate, and blunt his naturall edge
With profits of the minde: Study, and faſt.
He (to give feare to uſe, and liberty,
Which have, for long, run-by the hideous Law,
As Myce by Lions) hath pickt out an act,
Vnder whoſe heavy ſenſe, your brothers life
Fals into forfeit: he arreſts him on it,
And followes cloſe the rigour of the Statute
To make him an example: all hope is gone,
Vnleſſe you have the grace, by your faire prayer
To ſoften Angelo: And that's my pith of buſineſſe
'Twixt you, and your poore brother.
Iſa. Doth he ſo,
Seeke his life?
Luc. Has cenſur'd him already,
And as I heare, the Provoſt hath a warrant
For's execution.
Iſa. Alas: what poore
Abilitie's in me, to doe him good?
Luc. Aſſay the power you have.
Iſa. My power? alas, I doubt.
Luc. Our doubts are traitors
And makes us loſe the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt: Goe to Lord Angelo,
And let him learne to know, when Maidens ſue
Men give like gods: but when they weepe and kneele,
All their petitions, are as truely theirs
As they themſelves would owe them.
Iſa. Ile ſee what I can doe.
Luc. But ſpeedily.
Iſa. I will about it ſtrait;
No longer ſtaying, but to give the Mother
Notice of my affaire: I humbly thanke you:
Commend me to my brother: ſoone at night
Ile ſend him certaine word of my ſucceſſe.
Luc. I take my leave of you.
Iſa. Good ſir, adieu. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Angelo, Eſcalus, and ſervants, Iuſtice.

Ang. We muſt not make a ſcar-crow of the Law,
Setting it up to feare the Birds of prey,
And let it keepe one ſhape, till cuſtome make it
Their Pearch, and not their terrour.
Eſc. I, but yet
Let us be keene, and rather cut a little
Then fall, and bruiſe to death: alas, this Gentleman
Whom I would ſave, had a moſt noble father,
Let but your honour know
(Whom I beleeve to be moſt ſtrait in vertue)
That in the working of your owne affections,
Had Time coheard with Place, or place with wiſhing,
Or that the reſolute acting of our blood
Could have attain'd th'effect of your owne purpoſe,
Whether you had not ſometime in your life
Err'd in this point, which now you cenſure him,
And pull'd the Law upon you.
Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted (Eſcalus)

Another thing to fall : I not deny
The Iury paſſing on the priſoners life
May in the ſworne-twelve have a theefe, or two
Guiltier then him they try; what's open made to Iuſtice,
That Iuſtice ceizes; What knowes the Lawes
That theeves doe paſſe on theeves? 'Tis very pregnant,
The Iewell that we finde, we ſtoope, and take't,
Becauſe we ſee it; but what we doe not ſee,
We treade upon, and never thinke of it.
You may not ſo extenuate his offence,
For I have had ſuch faults; but rather tell me
When I, that cenſure him, doe ſo offend,
Let mine owne Iudgement patterne out my death,
And nothing come in partiall. Sir, he muſt die.

Enter Provoſt.

Eſc. Be it as your wiſedome will.

Ang. Where is the Provoſt?

Pro. Here if it like your Honour.

Ang. See that Claudio
Be executed by nine to morrow morning,
Bring him his Confeſſor, let him be prepar'd,
For that's the utmoſt of his Pilgrimage.

Eſt. Well: heaven forgive him; and forgive us all:
Some riſe by ſinne, and ſome by vertue fall:
Some Run from brakes of Ice, and anſwer none,
And ſome condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clowne, Officers.

Elb. Come, bring them away: if theſe be good people in a Common-weale, that doe nothing but uſe their abuſes in common houſes, I know no law: bring them away.

Ang. How now ſir, what's your name? And what's the matter?

Elb. If it pleaſe your honour, I am the poore Dukes Conſtable, and my name is Elbow; I doe leane upon Iuſtice ſir, and doe bring in here before your good honour, two notorious Benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors? Well: What Benefactors are they? Are they not Malefactors?

Elb. If it pleaſe your honour, I know not well what they are: But preciſe villaines they are, that I am ſure of, and voyd of all prophanation in the world, that good Chriſtians ought to have.

Eſc. This comes off well: here's a wiſe Officer.

Ang. Goe to: What quality are they of? Elbow is your name?
Why do'ſt thou not ſpeake Elbow?

Clo. He cannot ſir: he's out at Elbow.

Ang. What are you ſir?

Elb. He ſir, a Tapſter ſir: parcell Bawd: one that ſerves a bad woman: whoſe houſe ſir was (as they ſay) pluckt downe in the Suburbes: and now ſhe profeſſes a hot-houſe; which, I thinke is a very ill houſe too.

Eſc. How know you that?

Elb. My wife Sir, whom I deteſt before heaven and your honour.

Eſc. How? thy wife?

Elb. I Sir: whom I thanke heaven is an honeſt woman.

Eſca. Do'ſt thou deteſt her therefore?

Elb. I ſay ſir, I will deteſt my ſelfe alſo, as well as ſhee, that this houſe, if it be not a Bawds houſe, it is pitty of her life, for it is a naughty houſe.

Eſca. How do'ſt thou know that, Conſtable?

Elb. Marry ſir, by my wife, who, if ſhe had been a woman Cardinally given, might have beene accus'd in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanneſſe there.

Eſc. By the womans meanes?

Elb. I ſir, by Miſtris Over-dons meanes: but as ſhe ſpit in his face, ſo ſhe defi'd him.

Clo. Sir, if it pleaſe your honour, this is not ſo.

Elb. Prove it before theſe Varlets here, thou honourable man, prove it.

Eſc. Doe you heare how he miſplaces?

Clo. Sir, ſhe came in great with childe: and longing (ſaving your honors reverence) for ſtew'd Prewynes; ſir, we had but two in the houſe, which at that very inſtant time ſtood, as it were in a fruit diſh (a diſh of ſome three pence; your honours have ſeene ſuch diſhes) they are not China-diſhes, but very good diſhes.

Eſc. Goe too, goe too: no matter for the diſh ſir.

Clo. No indeed ſir not of a pin; you are therein in the right: but, to the point: as I ſay, this Miſtris Elbow, being (as I ſay) with childe, and being great bellied, and longing (as I ſaid) for Prewyns: and having no more in the diſh (as I ſaid) Maſter Froth here, this very man, having eaten the reſt (as I ſaid) and (as I ſay) paying for them very honeſtly: for, as you know Maſter Froth, I could not give you three pence againe.

Fro. No indeed.

Clo. Very well: you being then (if you be remembred) cracking the ſtones of the foreſaid Prewyns.

Fro. I, ſo I did indeed.

Clo. Why, very well: I telling you then (if you bee remembred) that ſuch a one, and ſuch a one, were paſt cure of the thing you wot of, unleſſe they kept very good dyet, as I told you.

Fro. All this is true.

Clo. Why very well then.

Eſc. Come: you are a tedious foole: to the purpoſe: what was done to Elbowes wife, that he hath cauſe to complaine of? Come me to what was done to her.

Clo. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Eſc. No ſir, nor I meane it not.

Clo. Sir, but you ſhall come to it, by your Honours leave: And I beſeech you, looke into Maſter Froth here ſir, a man of foure-ſcore pound a yeere; whoſe Father dyed at Hallowmas: Was't not at Hallowmas Maſter Froth?

Fro. All-hallond-Eve.

Clo. Why very well: I hope here be truthes: he Sir, ſitting (as I ſay) in a lower Chaire, Sir, 'twas in the bunch of Grapes, where indeed you have a delight to ſit, have you not?

Fro. I have ſo, becauſe it is an open roome, and good for Winter.

Clo. Why very well then: I hope here be truthes.

Ang. This will laſt out a night in Ruſſia,
When nights are longeſt there: Ile take my leave,
And leave you to the hearing of the cauſe;
Hoping you'l finde good cauſe to whip them all. Exit.

Eſc. I thinke no leſſe: good morrow to your Lordſhip. Now ſir, come on: What was done to Elbowes wife, once more?

Clo. Once ſir? there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beſeech you ſir, aske him what this man did to my wife.

Clo. I beſeech your honour, aske me.

Eſc. Well ſir, what did this Gentleman to her?

Clo. I beſeech you ſir, looke in this Gentlemans face: good Maſter Froth looke upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpoſe; doth your honour marke his face?

Eſc. I ſir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beſeech you marke it well.

Eſc. Well, I doe ſo.

Clo. Doth your honour ſee any harme in his face?

Eſc. Why no.

Clo. Ile be ſuppos'd upon a booke, his face is the worſt thing about him: good then: if his face be the worſt thing about him, how could Maſter Froth doe the Conſtables wife any harme? I would know that of your honour.

Eſc. He's in the right (Conſtable) what ſay you to it?

Elb. Firſt, and it like you, the houſe is a reſpected houſe; next, this is a reſpected fellow; and his Miſtris is a reſpected woman.

Clo. By this hand ſir, his wife is a more reſpected perſon then any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou lyeſt; thou lyeſt wicked Varlet: the time is yet to come that ſhee was ever reſpected with man, woman, or childe.

Clo. Sir, ſhe was reſpected with him before he married with her.

Eſc. Which is the wiſer here; Iuſtice, or Iniquitie? Is this true?

Elb. O thou Caytiffe: O thou Varlet: O thou wicked Hannibal; I reſpected with her, before I was married to her? If ever I was reſpected with her, or ſhe with me, let not your Worſhip thinke me the poore Dukes Officer: prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or Ile have mine action of battery on thee.

Eſc. If he tooke you a box 'oth'eare, you might have your action of ſlander too.

Elb. Marry I thanke your good worſhip for it: what is't your Worſhips pleaſure I ſhall doe with this wicked Caytiffe?

Eſc. Truely Officer, becauſe he hath ſome offences in him, that thou wouldſt diſcover, if thou couldſt, let him continue in his courſes, till thou know'ſt what they are.

Elb. Marry I thanke your Worſhip for it: Thou ſeeſt thou wicked Varlet now, what's come upon thee. Thou art to continue now thou Varlet, thou art to continue.

Eſc. Where were you borne, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, Sir.

Eſc. Are you of foureſcore pounds a yeere?

Froth. Yes, and't pleaſe you ſir.

Eſc. So: what trade are you of, ſir?

Clo. A Tapſter, a poore Widdowes Tapſter.

Eſc. Your Miſtris name?

Clo. Miſtris Over-don.

Eſc. Hath ſhe had any more then one husband?

Clo. Nine, ſir: Over-don by the laſt.

Eſc. Nine? come hither to me, Maſter Froth; Maſter Froth, I would not have you acquainted with Tapſters; they will draw you Maſter Froth, and you will hang them: get you gone, and let me heare no more of you.

Fro. I thanke your worſhip: for mine owne part, I never come into any roome in a Tap-houſe, but I am drawne in.

Eſc. Well: no more of it Maſter Froth: farewell: Come you hither to me, M. Tapſter: what's your name M. Tapſter?

Clo. Pompey.

Eſc. What elſe?

Clo. Bum, Sir.

Eſc. Troth, and your Bum is the greateſt thing about you, ſo that in the beaſtlieſt ſenſe, you are Pompey the great; Pompey, you are partly a Bawd, Pompey; howſoever you colour it being a Tapſter, are you not? come, tell me true, it ſhall be the better for you.

Clo. Truely ſir, I am a poore fellow that would live.

Eſc. How would you live Pompey? by being a Bawd? what doe you thinke of the Trade Pompey? is it a lawfull Trade?

Clo. If the Law would allow it, ſir.

Eſc. But the law will not allow it Pompey; nor it ſhall not be allowed in Vienna.

Clo. Do's your Worſhip meane to geld and ſplay all the youth in the Citie?

Eſc. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truely Sir, in my poore opinion they will too't then: if your Worſhip will take order for the Drabs and Knaves, you need not to feare the Bawdes.

Eſc. There are pretty orders beginning I can tell you: It is but heading and hanging.

Clo. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten yeare together; you'll be glad to give out a Commiſſion for more heads: if this law hold in Vienna ten yeares, Ile rent the faireſt houſe in it after three pence a Bay: if you live to ſee this come to paſſe, ſay Pompey told you ſo.

Eſc. Thanke you good Pompey; and in requitall of your Propheſie, harke you: I adviſe you let me not finde you before me againe upon any complaint whatſoever: no, not for dwelling where you doe: if I doe Pompey, I ſhall beat you to your Tent, and prove a ſhrewd Cæſar to you: in plaine dealing Pompey, I ſhall have you whipt; ſo for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Clo. I thanke your Worſhip for your good counſell; but I ſhall follow it as the fleſh and fortune ſhall better determine. Whip me? no, no, let Carman whip his Iade,
The valiant heart's not whipt out of his Trade. Exit.

Eſc. Come hither to me, Maſter Elbow: come hither Maſter Conſtable: how long have you been in this place of Conſtable?

Elb. Seven yeare and a halfe ſir.

Eſc. I thought by the readineſſe in the office, you had continued in it ſome time: you ſay ſeaven yeeres together.

Elb. And a halfe ſir.

Eſc. Alas, it hath beene great paines to you: they doe you wrong to put you ſo oft upon't. Are there not men in your Ward ſufficient to ſerve it?

Elb. 'Faith ſir, few of any wit in ſuch matters: as they are choſen, they are glad to chooſe me for them; I doe it for ſome peece of money, and goe through with all.

Eſc. Looke you bring me in the names of ſome ſixe or ſeven, the moſt ſufficient of your Pariſh.

Elb. To your Worſhips houſe ſir?

Eſc. To my houſe: fare you well: what's a clocke, thinke you?

Iuſt. Eleven, ſir.

Eſc. I pray you goe home to dinner with me.

Iuſt. I humbly thanke you.

Eſc. It grieves me for the death of Claudio,
But there's no remedy.

Iuſt. Lord Angelo is ſevere.

Eſc. It is but needfull.
Mercy is not it ſelfe, that oft lookes ſo,
Pardon is ſtill the nurſe of ſecond woe:
But yet, poore Claudio; there is no remedy.
Come Sir. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Provoſt, Servant.

Ser. Hee's hearing of a Cauſe; he will come ſtraight,
I'le tell him of you.
Pro. 'Pray you doe; Ile know
His pleaſure, may be he will relent; alas
He hath but as offended in a dreame,
All Sects, all Ages ſmacke of this vice, and he
To dye for't!

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter Provoſt?
Pro. Is it your will Claudio ſhall dye to morrow?
Ang. Did not I tell thee yea? hadſt thou not order?
Why do'ſt thou aske againe?
Pro. Leſt I might be too raſh:
Vnder your good correction, I have ſeene
When after execution, Iudgement hath
Repented ore his doome.
Ang. Goe to: let that be mine,
Doe you your office, or give up your Place,
And you ſhall well be ſpar'd.
Pro. I crave your Honors pardon:
What ſhall be done ſir, with the groaning Iuliet?
Shee's very neere her houre.
Ang. Diſpoſe of her
To ſome more fitter place; and that with ſpeed.
Ser. Here is the ſiſter of the man condemn'd,
Deſires acceſſe to you.
Ang. Hath he a ſiſter?
Pro. I my good Lord, a very vertuous maid,
And to be ſhortly of a Siſter-hood,
If not already.
Ang. Well: let her be admitted,
See you the Fornicatreſſe be remov'd,
Let her have needfull, but not laviſh meanes,
There ſhall be order for't.

Enter Lucio, and Iſabella.

Pro. 'Save your Honor.
Ang. Stay a little while: y'are welcome: what's your will?
Iſab. I am a woefull Sutor to your Honor,
'Pleaſe but your honor heare me.
Ang, Well: what's your ſuite?
Iſab. There is a vice that moſt I doe abhorre,
And moſt deſire ſhould meet the blow of juſtice;
For which I would not plead, but that I muſt,
For which I muſt not plead, but that I am
At warre, twixt will, and will not.
Ang. Well: the matter?
Iſab. I have a brother is condemn'd to dye,
I doe beſeech you let it be his fault,
And not my brother.
Pro. Heaven give thee moving graces.
Ang. Condemne the fault, and not the actor of it,
Why every fault's condemn'd ere it be done:
Mine were the very Cipher of a Function
To fine the faults, whoſe fine ſtands in record,
And let goe by the Actor.
Iſab. Oh juſt, but ſevere law:
I had a brother then; heaven keepe your honor.
Luc. Give't not ore ſo: to him againe, entreat him,
Kneele downe before him, hang upon his gowne,
You are too cold: if you ſhould need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue deſire it:
To him, I ſay.
Iſab. Muſt he needs dye?
Ang. Maiden, no remedy.
Iſab. Yes: I doe thinke that you might pardon him,
And neither heaven, nor man grieve at the mercy.
Ang. I will not do't.
Iſab. But can you if you would?
Ang. Looke what I will not, that I cannot doe.
Iſab. But might you doe't and doe the world no wrong
If ſo your heart were touch'd with that remorſe,
As mine is to him?
Ang. Hee's ſentenc'd, tis too late.
Luc. Yo art too cold.
Iſab. Too late? why no: I that doe ſpeake a word,
May call it backe againe: well, beleeve this
No ceremony that to great ones longs,
Not the Kings Crowne; nor the deputed ſword,
The Marſhalls Truncheon, nor the Iudges Robe
Become them with one halfe ſo good a grace
As mercy does: If he had beene as you, and you as he,
You would have ſlipt like him, but he like you
Would not have beene ſo ſterne.
Ang. Pray you be gone.
Iſab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Iſabell: ſhould it then be thus?
No: I would tell what 'twere to be a judge,
And what a priſoner.
Luc. I touch him: there's the veine.
Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the Law,
And you but waſte your words.
Iſab. Alas, alas:
Why all the ſoules that were, were forfeit once,
And he that might the vantage beſt have tooke,
Found out the remedy: how would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgement, ſhould
But judge you, as you are? Oh, thinke on that,
And mercy then will breathe within your lips
Like man new made.
Ang. Be you content, (faire Maid)
It is the Law, not I, condemne your brother,
Were he my kinſman, brother, or my ſonne;
It ſhould be thus with him: he muſt dye to morrow.
Iſab. To morrow? oh, that's ſodaine,
Spare him, ſpare him:
Hee's not prepar'd for death; even for our kitchines
We kill the fowle of ſeaſon: ſhall we ſerve heaven
With leſſe reſpect then we doe miniſter
To our groſſe-ſelves? good, good my Lord, bethinke you;
Who is it that hath di'd for this offence?
There's many have committed it.
Luc. I, well ſaid.
Ang: The Law hath not been dead, though it hath ſlept:
Thoſe many had not dar'd to doe that evill
If the firſt, that did th'Edict infringe
Had anſwer'd for his deed. Now 'tis awake,
Takes note of what is done, and like a Prophet
Lookes in a glaſſe that ſhewes what future evills
Either now, or by remiſſeneſſe, new conceiv'd,
And ſo in progreſſe to be hatch'd, and borne,
Are now to have no ſucceſſive degrees,
But here they live to end.
Iſab. Yet ſhow ſome pitty.
Ang. I ſhew it moſt of all, when I ſhow Iuſtice;
For then I pitty thoſe I doe not know,
Which a diſmiſ'd offence, would after gaule

And doe him right, that anſwering one foule wrong
Lives not to act another. Be ſatisfied;
Your Brother dies to morrow; be content.
Iſa. So you muſt be the firſt that gives this ſentence,
And he, that ſuffers: Oh, it is excellent
To have a Giants ſtrength: but it is tyrannous
To uſe it like a Giant.
Luc. That's well ſaid.
Iſab. Could great men thunder
As Iove himſelfe do's, Iove would nere be quiet,
For every pelting petty Officer
Would uſe his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder: Mercifull heaven,
Thou rather with thy ſharpe and ſulphureous bolt
Splitſt the un-wedgable and gnarled Oke,
Then the ſoft Mertill: O But man! proud man!
Dreſt in a little briefe authority,
Moſt ignorant of what he's moſt aſſur'd,
(His glaſſie Eſſence) like an angry Ape
Playes ſuch phantaſtique tricks before high heaven,
As makes the Angels weepe: who with our ſpleenes,
Would all themſelves laugh mortall.
Luci. Oh, to him, to him wench: he will relent,
Hee's comming: I perceive't.
Pro. Pray heaven ſhe winne him.
Iſab. We cann ot weigh our brother with our ſelfe,
Great men may jeſt with Saints: tis wit in them,
But in the leſſe foule prophanation.
Luc. Thou'rt i'th right (Girle) more o'that.
Iſab. That in the Captaine's but a chollericke word,
Which in the Souldier is flat blaſphemy.
Luc. Art aviſ'd o'that? more on't.
Ang. Why doe you put theſe ſayings upon me?
Iſab. Becauſe Authority, though it erre like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in it ſelfe
That skins the vice o'th top; goe to your boſome,
Knocke there, and aske your heart what it doth know
That's like my brothers fault: if it confeſſe
A naturall guiltineſſe, ſuch as is his,
Let it not ſound a thought upon you tongue
Againſt my brothers life.
Ang. Shee ſpeakes, and 'tis ſuch ſence
That my ſence breeds with it; fare you well.
Iſab. Gentle my lord, turne backe.
Ang. I will bethinke me: come againe to morrow.
Iſab. Harke, how Ile bribe you: good my lord turne
Ang. How? bribe me? (backe.
Iſa. I, with ſuch gifts that heaven ſhall ſhare with you.
Luc. You had mar'd all elſe.
Iſab. Not with fond Sickles of the teſted-gold,
Or ſtones, whoſe rate are either rich, or poore
As fancy values them: but with true prayers,
That ſhall be up at heaven, and enter there
Ere Sunne riſe: prayers from preſerved ſoules,
From faſting Maides, whoſe mindes are dedicate
To nothing temporall.
Ang. Well: come to me to morrow.
Luc. Goe to: 'tis well; away.
Iſab. Heaven keep your honor ſafe.
Ang. Amen.
For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers croſſe.
Iſab. At what howre to marrow,
Shall I attend you lordſhip?
Ang. At any time 'fore-noone.
Iſab. 'Save your Honor. Exeunt.
Ang. From thee: even from thy vertue.
What's this? What's this? is this her fault, or mine?
The Tempter, or the Tempted, who ſinnes moſt? ha?
Not ſhe: nor doth ſhe tempt: but it is I,
That, lying by the Violet in the Sunne,
Doe as the Carrion do's, not as the flowre,
Corrupt with vertuous ſeaſon: Can it be,
That Modeſty may more betray our ſence
Then womans lightneſſe? having waſte ground enough,
Shall we deſire to raze the Sanctuary
And pitch our evils there? oh fie, fie, fie:
What doſt thou? or what art thou Angelo?
Doſt thou deſire her fowly, for thoſe things
That make her good? oh, let her brother live:
Theeves for their robbery have authority,
When Iudges ſteale themſelves: what! doe I love her,
That I deſire to heare her ſpeake againe?
And feaſt upon her eyes? what is't I dreame on?
Oh cunning enemy, that to catch a Saint,
With Saints doſt bait thy hooke: moſt dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To ſinne, in loving vertue: never could the Strumpet
With all her double vigor, Art, and Nature
Once ſtir my temper: but this vertuous Maid
Subdues me quite: Even till now
When men were fond, I ſmild, and wondred how. Exit

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Duke, and Provoſt.
Duk. Haile to you, Provoſt, ſo I thinke you are.
Pro. I am the Provoſt: what's your will, good Frier;
Duk. Bound by my charity, and my bleſt order,
I come to viſit the afflicted ſpirits
Here in the priſon: doe me the common right
To let me ſee them: and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may miniſter
To them accordingly.
Pro. I would do more then that, if more were needfull.
Enter Iuliet.
Looke here comes one: a Gentlewoman of mine,
Who falling in the flawes of her owne youth,
Hath bliſterd her report: She is with child,
And he that got it, ſentenc'd: a yong man,
More fit to doe another ſuch offence,
Then dye for this.
Duk. When muſt he dye?
Pro. As I doe thinke to morrow.
I have provided for you, ſtay a while
And you ſhall be conducted.
Duk. Repent you (faire one) of the ſin you carry?
Iul. I doe; and beare the ſhame moſt patiently.
Du. Ile teach you how you ſhall araign your conſcience
And try your penitence, if it be ſound,
Or hollowly put on.
Iul. Ile gladly learne.
Duk. Love you the man that wrong'd you?
Iul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.
Duk. So then it ſeemes your moſt offencefull act
Was mutually committed.
Iul. Mutually.
Duk. Then was your ſinne of heavier kind than his.
Iul. I doe confeſſe it, and repent it (Father.)

Duk. 'Tis meet ſo (daughter) but leaſt you doe repent
As that the ſinne hath brought you to this ſhame,
Which ſorrow is alwayes toward our ſelves, not heaven,
Showing we would not ſpare heaven, as we love it,
But as we ſtand in feare.
Iul. I doe repent me, as it is an evill,
And take the ſhame with joy.
Duk. There reſt:
Your partner (as I heare) muſt dye to morrow,
And I am going with inſtruction to him:
Grace goe with you, Benedicite. Exit.
Iul. Muſt dye to morrow? oh injurious love
That reſpits me a life, whoſe very comfort
Is ſtill a dying horror.
Pro. 'Tis pitty of him. Exeunt.

Scæna quarta.

Enter Angelo.

An. When I would pray, and thinke, I thinke, and pray
To ſeverall ſubjects: heaven hath my empty words,
Whilſt my Invention, hearing not my Tongue,
Anchors on Iſabell: heaven in my mouth,
As if I did but onely chew his name,
And in my heart the ſtrong and ſwelling evill
Of my conception: the ſtate whereon I ſtudied
Is like a good thing, being often read
Growne feard, and tedious: yea, my Gravity
Wherein (let no man heare me) I take pride,
Could I, with boote, change for an idle plume
Which the ayre beats for vaine: oh place! oh forme!
How often doſt thou with thy caſe, thy habit
Wrench awe from fooles, and tye the wiſer ſoules
To thy falſe ſeeming? Blood, thou art blood,
Let's write good Angell on the Devills horne;
'Tis not the devills Creſt: how now? who's there?

Enter Servant.

Ser. One Iſabell, a ſiſter, deſires acceſſe to you.
Ang. Teach her the way: oh, heavens
Why doe's my bloud thus muſter to my heart,
Making both it unable for it ſelfe,
And diſpoſſeſſing all my other parts
Of neceſſary fitneſſe?
So play the fooliſh throngs with one that ſwounds,
Come all to helpe him, and ſo ſtop the ayre
By which he ſhould revive: and even ſo
The generall ſubject to a wel-wiſht King
Quit their owne part, and in obſequious fondneſſe
Crowd to his preſence, where their untaught love
Muſt needs appeare offence: how now faire Maid?

Enter Iſabella.

Iſa. I am come to know your pleaſure. (me,
An. That you might know it, would much better pleaſe
Then to demand what 'tis: your brother cannot live.
Iſa. Even ſo: heaven keepe your Honor.
An. Yet may he live a while: and it may be
As long as you, or I: yet he muſt dye.
Iſab. Vnder your Sentence?
Ang. Yea.
Iſab. When, I beſeech you? that in his Reprieve
(Longer, or ſhorter) he may be ſo fitted
That his ſoule ſicken not.
Ang. Ha? fie, theſe filthy vices: It were as good
To pardon him, that hath from nature ſtolne
A man already made, as to remit
Their ſawcy ſweetneſſe, that doe coyne heavens Image
In ſtamps that are forbid: 'tis all as eaſie,
Falſely to take away a life true made,
As to put mettle in reſtrained meanes
To make a falſe one.
Iſab. 'Tis ſet downe ſo in heaven, but not in earth.
Ang. Say you ſo: then I ſhall poze you quickly.
Which had you rather, that the moſt juſt Law
Now tooke your brothers life, and to redeeme him
Give up your body to ſuch ſweet uncleanneſſe,
As ſhe that he hath ſtaind?
Iſab. Sir, beleeve this,
I had rather give my body, then my ſoule.
Ang. I talke not of your ſoule: our compel'd ſinnes
Stand more for number, then for accompt.
Iſab. How ſay you?
Ang. Nay Ile not warrant that: for I can ſpeake
Againſt the thing I ſay: Anſwer to this,
I (now the voyce of the recorded Law)
Pronounce a ſentence on your brothers life,
Might there not be a charity in ſinne,
To ſave this brothers life?
Iſab. Pleaſe you to doo't,
Ile take it as a perill to my ſoule,
It is no ſinne at all, but charity.
Ang. Pleas'd you to doo't, at perill of your ſoule
Were equall poize of ſinne, and charity.
Iſab. That I doe beg his life, if it be ſinne
Heaven let me beare it: you granting of my ſuit,
If that be ſinne, Ile make it my Morne-prayer,
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your anſwer.
Ang. Nay, but heare me.
Your ſence purſues not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or ſeeme ſo crafty; and that's not good.
Iſab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciouſly to know I am no better.
Ang. Thus wiſdome wiſhes to appeare moſt bright,
When it doth taxe it ſelfe: As theſe blacke Maſques
Proclaime an en-ſhield beauty ten times louder
Then beauty could diſplaied: But marke me,
To be received plaine, Ile ſpeake more groſſe:
Your brother is to dye.
Iſab. So.
Ang. And his offence is ſo, as it appeares,
Accountant to the Law, upon that paine.
Iſab. True.
Ang. Admit no other way to ſave his life
(As I ſubſcribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loſſe of queſtion) that you, his Siſter,
Finding your ſelfe deſir'd of ſuch a perſon,
Whoſe credit with the Iudge, or owne great place,
Could fetch your brother from the Manacles
Of the all-building-Law: and that there were
No earthly meane to ſave him, but that either
You muſt lay downe the treaſures of your body,
To this ſuppoſed, or elſe to let him ſuffer:
What would you doe?
Iſab. As much for my poore Brother, as my ſelfe;
That is: were I under the tearmes of death,
Th'impreſſion of keene whips, I'ld weare as Rubies,
And ſtrip my ſelfe to death, as to a bed,
That longing have beene ſicke for, ere I'ld yeeld
My body up to ſhame.

Ang. Then

Ang. Then muſt your brother dye.
Iſa. And 'twer the cheaper way:
Better it were a brother di'd at once,
Then that a ſiſter, by redeeming him
Should dye for ever.
Ang. Were not you then as cruell as the Sentence,
That you have ſlander'd ſo?
Iſa. Ignominy in ranſome, and free pardon
Are of two houſes: lawfull mercy,
Is nothing kin to foule redemption.
Ang. You ſeem'd of late to make the Law a tirant,
And rather prov'd the ſliding of your brother
A merriment, then a vice.
Iſa. Oh pardon me my lord, it oft fals out
To have, what we would have,
We ſpeake not what we meane;
I ſomething doe excuſe the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearely love.
Ang. We are all fraile.
Iſa. Elſe let my brother dye,
If not a feodary but onely he
Owe, and ſucceed thy weakeneſſe.
Ang. Nay, women are fraile too.
Iſa. I, as the glaſſes where they view themſelves,
Which are as eaſie broke as they make formes:
Women? Helpe heaven; men their creation marre
In profiting by them: Nay, call us ten times fraile,
For we are ſoft, as our complexions are,
And credulous to falſe prints.
Ang. I thinke it well:
And from this teſtimony of your owne ſex
(Since I ſuppoſe we are made to be no ſtronger
Then faults may ſhake our frames) let me be bold;
I doe arreſt your words Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you'r none.
If you be one (as you are well expreſt
By all externall warrants) ſhew it now,
By putting on the deſtin'd Livery.
Iſa. I have no tongue but one; gentle my lord,
Let me entreate you ſpeake the former language.
Ang. Plainly conceive I love you.
Iſa. My brother did love Iuliet.
And you tell me that he ſhall dye for't.
Ang. He ſhall not Iſabell if you give me love.
Iſa. I know your vertue hath a licence in't,
Which ſeemes a little fouler then it is,
To plucke on others.
Ang. Beleeve me on mine Honor,
My words expreſſe my purpoſe.
Iſa. Ha? Little honor, to be much beleev'd,
And moſt pernitious purpoſe: Seeming, ſeeming.
I will proclaime thee Angelo, looke for't.
Signe me a preſent pardon for my brother,
Or with an out-ſtretcht throate Ile tell the world aloud
What man thou art.
Ang. Who will beleeve thee Iſabell?
My unſoild name, th' auſteereneſſe of my life,
My vouch againſt you, and my place i'th State,
Will ſo your accuſation over-weigh,
That you ſhall ſtifle in your owne report,
And ſmell of calumny. I have begun,
And now I give my ſenſuall race, the reine,
Fit thy conſent to my ſharpe appetite,
Lay by all nicety, and prolixious bluſhes
That baniſh what they ſue for: Redeeme thy brother,
By yeelding up thy body to my will,
Or elſe he muſt not onely dye the death,
But thy unkindneſſe ſhall his death draw out
To lingring ſufferance: Anſwer me to morrow,
Or by the affection that now guides me moſt,
Ile prove a Tirant to him. As for you,
Say what you can; my falſe, ore-weighs your true. Exit.
Iſa. To whom ſhould I complaine? Did I tell this,
Who would beleeve me? O perilous mouthes
That beare in them, one and the ſelfeſame tongue,
Either of condemnation, or approofe,
Bidding the Law make curtſie to their will,
Hooking both right and wrong to th'appetite,
To follow as it drawes. Ile to my brother,
Though he hath falne by prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him ſuch a mind of Honor,
That had he twenty heads to tender downe
On twenty bloody blockes, hee'ld yeeld them up,
Before his ſiſter ſhould her body ſtoope
To ſuch abhord pollution.
Then Iſabell live chaſte, and brother dye;
"More then our Brother, is our Chaſtity.
Ile tell him yet of Angelo's requeſt,
And fit his mind to death, for his ſoules reſt. Exit.

Actus Tertius, Scæna Prima.

Enter Duke, Claudio, and Provoſt.

Duk. So then you hope of pardon from lord Angelo?
Clau. The miſerable have no other medicine
But onely hope: I'have hope to live, and am prepar'd to dye.
Duke. Be abſolute for death: either death or life
Shall thereby be the ſweeter. Reaſon thus with life:
If I doe looſe thee, I doe looſe a thing
That none but fooles would keepe: a breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyie-influences,
That doſt this habitation where thou keepſt
Hourely afflict: Meerely, thou art deaths foole,
For him thou labourſt by thy flight to ſhun,
And yet runſt toward him ſtill. Thou art not noble,
For all th'accommodations that thou bearſt,
Are nurſt by baſeneſſe: Thou'rt by no meanes valiant,
For thou doſt feare the ſoft and tender forke
Of a poore worme: thy beſt of reſt is ſleepe,
And that thou oft provoakſt, yet groſſely fearſt
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thy ſelfe,
For thou exiſts on many a thouſand graines
That iſſue out of duſt. Happy thou art not,
For what thou haſt not, ſtill thou ſtriv'ſt to get,
And what thou haſt, forgetſt. Thou art not certaine,
For thy complexion ſhifts to ſtrange effects,
After the Moone: if thou art rich, thou'rt poore,
For like an Aſſe, whoſe backe with Ingots bowes;
Thou bearſt thy heavy riches but a journy,
And death unloads thee; Friend haſt thou none.
For thine owne bowels which doe call thee, fire
The meere effuſion of thy proper loynes,
Doe curſe the Gout, Sarpego, and the Rheume
For ending thee no ſooner. Thou haſt nor youth, nor age
But as it were an after-dinners ſleepe
Dreaming on both, for all thy bleſſed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth begge the almes
Of palſied-Eld: and when thou art old, and rich

Thou haſt neither heate, affection, limbe, nor beauty
To make thy riches pleaſant: what’s yet in this
That beares the name of life? Yet in this life
Lye hid moe thouſand deaths; yet death we feare
That makes theſe oddes, all even.
Cla. I humbly thanke you.
To ſue to live, I find I ſeeke to dye,
And ſeeking death, find life: Let it come on.
Enter Iſabella.
Iſab. What hoa? Peace heere; Grace, and good company.
Pro. Who’s there? Come in, the wiſh deſerves a welcome.
Duk. Deere ſir, ere long Ile viſit you againe.
Cla. Moſt holy ſir, I thanke you.
Iſa. My buſineſſe is a word or two with Clandio.
Pro. And very welcome: looke Signior, here’s your ſiſter.
Duk. Provoſt, a word with you.
Pro. As many as you pleaſe.
Duk. Bring them to ſpeake, where I may be conceal’d, yet heare them. Exeunt.
Cla. Now ſiſter, what’s the comfort?
Iſa. Why,
As all comforts are: moſt good, moſt good indeed,
Lord Angelo having affaires to heaven
Intends you for his ſwift Ambaſſador,
Where you ſhall be an everlaſting Leiger;
Therefore your beſt appointment make with ſpeed,
To Morrow you ſet on.
Clau. Is there no remedy?
Iſa. None but ſuch remedy, as to ſave a head
To cleave a heart in twaine:
Cla. But is there any?
Iſa. Yes brother, you may live;
There is a divelliſh mercy in the Iudge,
If you’l implore it, that will free your life,
But fetter you till death.
Cla. Perpetuall durance!
Iſa. I juſt, perpetuall durance, a reſtraint
Through all the worlds vaſtidity you had
To a determin’d ſcope.
Clau. But in what nature?
Iſa. In ſuch a one, as you conſenting too’t,
Would barke your honor from that trunke you beare,
And leave you naked.
Clau. Let me know the point.
Iſa. Oh, I doe feare thee Clandio, and I quake,
Leaſt thou a feavorous life ſhouldſt entertaine,
And ſixe or ſeven winters more reſpect
Then a perpetuall honor. Dar’ſt thou dye?
The ſence of death is moſt in apprehenſion,
And the poore Beetle that we tread upon
In corporall ſufferance, finds a pang as great,
As when a Giant dyes.
Cla. Why give you me this ſhame?
Thinke you I can a reſolution fetch
From flowry tenderneſſe? If I muſt dye,
I will encounter darkneſſe as a bride,
And hugge it in mine armes.
Iſa. There ſpake my brother: there my fathers grave
Did utter forth a voyce. Yes, thou muſt dye:
Thou art too noble, to conſerve a life
In baſe appliances. This outward ſainted Deputy,
Whoſe ſetled viſage, and deliberate word
Nips youth i’th head, and follies doth emmew
As Falcon doth the fowle, is yet a divell:
His filth within being caſt, he would appeare
A pond, as deepe as hell.
Cla. The Princely Angelo?
Iſa. Oh ’tis the cunning Livery of hell,
The damnedſt body to inveſt, and cover
In Princely gardes; doſt thou thinke Clandio,
If I would yeeld him my virginity
Thou might’ſt be freed?
Cla. Oh heavens, it cannot be.
Iſa. Yes, he would giv’t thee; from this ranke offence
So to offend him ſtill. This night’s the time
That I ſhould doe what I abhorre to name,
Or elſe thou dieſt to morrow.
Cla. Thou ſhalt not do’t.
Iſa. O, were it but my life,
I’de throw it downe for your deliverance
As frankely as a pin.
Clau. Thankes deere Iſabell.
Iſa. Be ready Clandio, for your death to morrow.
Clau. Yes. Has he affections in him,
That thus can make him bite the Law by th’noſe,
When he would force it? Sure it is no ſinne,
Or of the deadly ſeven it is the leaſt.
Iſa. Which is the leaſt?
Clau. If it were damnable, he being ſo wiſe,
Why would he for the momentary tricke
Be perdurably fin’de? Oh Iſabell.
Iſa. What ſayes my brother?
Cla. Death is a fearefull thing.
Iſa. And ſhamed life, a hatefull.
Cla. I, but to dye, and goe we know not where,
To lye in cold obſtruction, and to rot,
This ſenſible warme motion, to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted ſpirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reſide
In thrilling region of thick-ribbed Ice,
To be impriſon’d in the viewleſſe windes
And blowne with reſtleſſe violence round about
The pendant world: or to be worſe then worſt
Of thoſe, that lawleſſe and incertaine thought,
Imagine howling, ’tis too horrible.
The weärieſt, and moſt loathed worldly life
That Age, Ache, penury, and impriſonment
Can lay on nature, is a Paradiſe
To what we feare of death.
Iſa. Alas, alas.
Cla. Sweet Siſter, let me live.
What ſinne you doe, to ſave a brothers life,
Nature diſpenſes with the deed ſo farre,
That it becomes a vertue.
Iſa. Oh you beaſt!
Oh faithleſſe Coward! oh diſhoneſt wretch,
Wilt thou be made a man, out of my vice?
Is’t not a kind of inceſt, to take life
From thine owne ſiſters ſhame? What ſhould I thinke,
Heaven ſhield my Mother plaid my Father faire:
For ſuch a warped ſlip of wilderneſſe
Nere iſſu’d from his blood. Take my defiance,
Dye, periſh: Might but my bending downe
Repreeve thee from thy fate, it ſhould proceed.
Ile pray a thouſand prayers for thy death,
No word to ſave thee.
Cla. Nay heare me Iſabell.
Iſa. Oh, fie, fie, fie.
Thy ſinn’s not accidentall, but a Trade;

Mercy to thee would prove it ſelfe a Bawd,
'Tis beſt that thou dieſt quickly.

Cla. Oh heare me Iſabella. Duke ſteps in.

Duk. Vouchſafe a word, yong ſiſter, but one word.

Iſa. What is your Will.

Duk. Might you diſpenſe with your leiſure, I would by and by have ſome ſpeech with you: the ſatisfaction I would require, is likewiſe your owne benefit.

Iſa. I have no ſuperfluous leiſure, my ſtay muſt be ſtolen out of other affaires: but I will attend you a while.

Duk. Son, I have over-heard what hath paſt betweene you and your ſiſter. Angelo had never the purpoſe to corrupt her; onely he hath made an aſſay of her vertue, to practiſe his judgement with the diſpoſition of natures. She (having the truth of honor in her) hath made him that gracious deniall, which he is moſt glad to receive: I am Confeſſor to Angelo, and I know this to be true, therefore prepare your ſelfe to death: doe not ſatisfie your reſolution with hopes that are fallible, to morrow you muſt dye, goe to your knees, and make ready.

Cla. Let me aske my ſiſter pardon, I am ſo out of love with life, that I will ſue to be rid of it. Exit.

Duk. Hold you there: farewell: Provoſt, a word with you.

Pro. What's your will (father?)

Duk. That now you are come, you will be gone: leave me a while with the Maid, my mind promiſes with my habit, no loſſe ſhall touch her by my company.

Pro. In good time. Exit.

Duk. The hand that hath made you faire, hath made you good: the goodneſſe that is cheape in beauty, makes beauty briefe in goodneſſe; but grace being the ſoule of your complexion, ſhall keepe the body of it ever faire: the aſſault that Angelo hath made to you, Fortune hath convaid to my underſtanding; and but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I ſhould wonder at Angelo: how will you doe to content this Subſtitute, and to ſave your brother?

Iſab. I am now going to reſolve him: I had rather my brother dye by the Law, then my ſonne ſhould be unlawfully borne. But (oh) how much is the good Duke deceiv'd in Angelo: if ever he returne, and I can ſpeake to him, I will open my lips in vaine, or diſcover his government.

Duk. That ſhall not be much amiſſe: yet as the matter now ſtands, he will avoyd your accuſation: he made triall of you onely. Therefore faſten your eare on my adviſings, to the love I have in doing good; a remedy preſents it ſelfe. I doe make my ſelfe beleeve that you may moſt uprighteouſly doe a poore wronged Lady a merited benefit; redeeme your brother from the angry Law; doe no ſtaine to your owne gracious perſon, and much pleaſe the abſent Duke, if peradventure he ſhall ever returne to have hearing of this buſineſſe.

Iſab. Let me heare you ſpeake farther; I have ſpirit to doe any thing that appeares not foule in the truth of my ſpirit.

Duke. Vertue is bold, and goodneſſe never fearefull: Have you not heard ſpeake of Mariana the ſiſter of Fredericke the great Souldier, who miſcarried at Sea?

Iſab. I have heard of the Lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. She ſhould this Angelo have married: was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the ſolemnity, her brother Fredericke was wrackt at Sea, having in that periſhed veſſell, the dowry of his ſiſter: but marke how heavily this befell to the poore Gentlewoman, there ſhe loſt a noble and renouned brother, in his love toward her, ever moſt kind and naturall: with him the portion and ſinew of her fortune, her marriage dowry: with both, her combynate-husband, this well ſeeming Angelo.

Iſab. Can this be ſo? did Angelo ſo leave her?

Duk. Left her in her teares, and dried not one of them with his comfort: ſwallowed his vowes whole, pretending in her, diſcoveries of diſhonor: in few, beſtow'd her on her owne lamentation, which ſhe yet weares for his ſake: and he, a marble to her eares, is waſhed with them, but relents not.

Iſab. What a merit were it in death to take this poore maid from the world? what corruption in this life, that it will let this man live? But how out of this can ſhe availe?

Duk. It is a rupture that you may eaſily heale: and the cure of it not onely ſaves your brother, but keepes you from diſhonor in doing it.

Iſab. Shew me how (good father.)

Duk. This forenamed Maid hath yet in her the continuance of her firſt affection: his unjuſt unkindneſſe (that in all reaſon ſhould have quenched her love) hath (like an impediment in the Current) made it more violent and unruly: Goe you to Angelo, anſwer his requiring with a plauſible obedience, agree with his demands to the point: onely referre your ſelfe to this advantage, firſt, that your ſtay with him may not be long: that the time may have all ſhadow, and ſilence in it: and the place anſwer to convenience: this being granted in courſe, and now followes all: we ſhall adviſe this wronged maid to ſteed up your appointment, goe in your place: if the encounter acknowledge it ſelfe hereafter, it may compell him to her recompence; and heere, by this is your brother ſaved, your honor untainted, the poore Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt Deputy ſcaled. The Maid will I frame, and make fit for his attempt: if you thinke well to carry this as you may, the doubleneſſe of the benefit defends the deceit from reproofe. What thinke you of it?

Iſab. The image of it gives me content already, and I truſt it will grow to a moſt proſperous perfection.

Duk. It lyes much in your holding up: haſte you ſpeedily to Angelo, if for this night he intreat you to his bed, give him promiſe of ſatisfaction: I will preſently to S^t^. Lukes, there at the moated-Grange reſides this dejected Mariana; at that place call upon me, and diſpatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Iſa. I thanke you for this comfort: fare you well good father. Exit.

Enter Elbow, Clowne, Officers.

El. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and ſell men and women like beaſts, we ſhall have all the world drinke browne and white baſtard.

Duk. Oh heavens, what ſtuffe is heere?

Clow. Twas never merry world ſince of two uſuries the merrieſt was put downe, and the worſer allow'd by order of Law; a fur'd gowne to keepe him warme; and fur'd with Foxe and Lamb-skins too, to ſignifie, that craft being richer then innocency, ſtands for the facing.

Elbow. Come your way Sir: 'bleſſe you good father Frier.

Duk. And you good brother father; what offence hath this man made you, Sir?

Elb. Marry

Elbo. Marry ſir, he hath offended the Law; and Sir, we take him to be a Theefe too ſir: for we have found upon him Sir, a ſtrange Picke-locke, which we have ſent to the Deputy.

Duk. Fye, ſirrah, a Bawd, a wicked bawd,
The evill that thou cauſeſt to be done,
That is thy meanes to live. Doe thou but thinke
What 'tis to cram a maw, or cloath a backe
From ſuch a filthy vice: ſay to thy ſelfe,
From their abhominable and beaſtly touches
I drinke, I eate away my ſelfe, and live:
Canſt thou beleeve thy living is a life,
So ſtinkingly depending? Goe mend, goe mend.

Clo. Indeed, it do's ſtinke in ſome ſort, Sir:
But yet Sir I would prove ——

Duk. Nay, if the divell have given thee proofes for ſin
Thou wilt prove his. Take him to priſon Officer;
Correction, and inſtruction muſt both worke
Ere this rude beaſt will profit.

Elb. He muſt before the Deputy Sir, he ha's given him warning: the Deputy cannot abide a Whore-maſter: if he be a Whore-monger, and comes before him, he were as good goe a mile on his errand.

Duk. That we were all, as ſome would ſeeme to be Free from our faults, as faults from ſeeming free.

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His necke will come to your waſt, a Cord ſir.

Clo. I ſpy comfort, I cry baile: Here's a Gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Luc. How now noble Pompey? What, at the wheels of Cæſar? Art thou led in triumph? What is there none of Pigmalions Images newly made woman to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket, and extracting clutch'd? What reply? Ha? What ſaiſt thou to this Tune, Matter, and Method? Is't not drown'd i'th laſt raine? Ha? What ſaiſt thou Trot? Is the world as it was Man? Which is the way? Is it ſad, and few words? Or how? The tricke of it?

Duk. Still thus, and thus: ſtill worſe?

Luc. How doth my deere Morſell, thy Miſtris? Procures ſhe ſtill? Ha?

Clo. Troth ſir, ſhe hath eaten up all her Beefe, and ſhe is her ſelfe in the tub.

Luc. Why 'tis good: It is the right of it: it muſt be ſo. Ever your freſh Whore, and your pouder'd Baud, an unſhun'd conſequence, it muſt be ſo. Art going to priſon Pompey?

Clo. Yes faith ſir.

Luc. Why 'tis not amiſſe Pompey: farewell: goe ſay I ſent thee thether: for debt Pompey? Or how?

Elb. For being a baud, for being a baud.

Luc. Well, then impriſon him: If impriſonment be the due of a baud, why 'tis his right. Baud is he doubtleſſe, and of antiquity too: Baud borne. Farewell good Pompey: Commend me to the priſon Pompey, you will turne good husband now Pompey, you will keepe the houſe.

Clo. I hope Sir, your good Worſhip will be my baile?

Luc. No indeed will I not Pompey, it is not the weare: I will pray (Pompey) to encreaſe your bondage if you take it not patiently: Why, your mettle is the more: Adieu truſty Pompey.
Bleſſe you Friar.

Duke. And you.

Luc. Do's Bridget paint ſtill, Pompey? Ha?

Elb. Come your wayes ſir, come.

Clo. You will not baile me then Sir?

Luc. Then Pompey, not now: what newes abroad Fryer? What newes?

Elb. Come your wayes ſir, come.

Luc. Goe to kennell (Pompey) goe: Exeunt.
What newes Fryer of the Duke?

Duke. I know none: can you tell me of any?

Luc. Some ſay he is with the Emperour of Ruſſia: other ſome, he is in Rome: but where is he thinke you?

Duke. I know not where: but whereſoever, I wiſh him well.

Luc. It was a mad fantaſticall tricke of him to ſteale from the State, and uſurpe the beggery he was never borne to: Lord Angelo Dukes it well in his abſence: hee puts tranſgreſſion too't.

Duke. He do's well in't.

Luc. A little more lenitie to Lechery would doe no harme in him: Something too crabbed that way, Fryer.

Duk. It is too generall a vice, and ſeverity muſt cure it.

Luc. Yes in good ſooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied, but it is impoſſible to extirpe it quite, Frier, till eating and drinking be put downe. They ſay this Angelo was not made by Man and Woman, after this downe-right way of Creation: is it true, thinke you?

Duk. How ſhould he be made then?

Luc. Some report, a Sea-maid ſpawn'd him. Some, that he was begot betweene two Stock-fiſhes. But it is certaine, that when he makes water, his Vrine is congeal'd ice, that I know to be true: and he is a motion generative, that's infallible.

Duk. You are pleaſant ſir, and ſpeake apace.

Luc. Why, what a ruthleſſe thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a Cod-peece, to take away the life of a man? Would the Duke that is abſent have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred Baſtards, he would have paide for the Nurſing a thouſand. He had ſome feeling of the ſport, he knew the ſervice, and that inſtructed him to mercy.

Duk. I never heard the abſent Duke much detected for Women, he was not enclin'd that way.

Luc. Oh Sir, you are deceiv'd.

Duk. 'Tis not poſſible.

Luc. Who, not the Duke? Yes, your beggar of fifty: and his uſe was, to put a ducket in her Clack-diſh; the Duke had Crochets in him. He would be drunke too, that let me informe you.

Duk. You doe him wrong, ſurely.

Luc. Sir, I was an inward of his: a ſhye fellow was the Duke, and I beleeve I know the cauſe of his withdrawing.

Duke. What (I prethee) might be the cauſe?

Luc. No, pardon: 'Tis a ſecret muſt be lockt within the teeth and the lipes: but this I can let you underſtand, the greater file of the ſubject held the Duke to be wiſe.

Duk. Wiſe? Why no queſtion but he was.

Luc. A very ſuperficiall, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duk. Either this is envy in you, folly, or miſtaking: The very ſtreame of his life, and the buſineſſe he hath helmed, muſt upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but teſtimonied in his owne bringings forth, and he ſhall appeare to the envious, a Scholler, a Stateſman, and a Souldier: therefore you ſpeake unskilfully: or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkned in your malice.

Luc. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duk. Love talkes with better knowledge, and knowledge with deare love.

Luc. Come Sir, I know what I know.

Duk. I can hardly beleeve that, ſince you know not what you ſpeake. But if ever the Duke returne (as our prayers are he may) let me deſire you to make your anſwer before him: if it be honeſt you have ſpoke, you have courage to maintaine it; I am bound to call upon you, and I pray you your name?

Luc. Sir my name is Lucio, well knowne to the Duke.

Duk. He ſhall know you better Sir, if I may live to report you.

Luc. I feare you not.

Duk. O, you hope the Duke will returne no more: or you imagine me too unhurtfull an oppoſite: but indeed I can doe you little harme: You'll for-ſweare this againe?

Luc. Ile be hang'd first: Thou art deceiv'd in mee Friar. But no more of this. Canſt thou tell if Claudio dye to morrow, or no?

Duk. Why ſhould he dye Sir?

Luc. Why? For filling a bottle with a Tunne-diſh: I would the Duke we talke of were return'd againe: this ungenitur'd Agent wil un-people the Province with Continency. Sparrowes muſt not build in his houſe-eeves, becauſe they are lecherous: The Duke yet would have darke deeds darkely anſwered, he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd. Marry this Claudio is condemned for untruſſing. Farewell good Friar, I prethee pray for me: The Duke (I ſay to thee againe) would eate Mutton on Fridayes. He's now paſt it, yet (and I ſay to thee) he would mouth with a beggar, though ſhe ſmelt browne-bread and Garlicke: ſay that I ſaid ſo: Farewell. Exit.

Duke. No might, nor greatneſſe in mortality
Can cenſure ſcape: Back-wounding calumny
The whiteſt vertue ſtrikes. What King ſo ſtrong,
Can tye the gall up in the ſlanderous tongue?
But who comes here?

Enter Eſcalus, Provoſt, and Baud.

Eſc. Goe, away with her to priſon.

Baud. Good my lord be good to me, your Honor is accounted a mercifull man: good my Lord.

Eſc. Double, and trebble admonition, and ſtill forfeite in the ſame kind? This would make mercy ſweare and play the Tirant.

Pro. A Baud of eleven yeares continuance, may it pleaſe your Honor.

Baud. My lord, this is one Lucio's information againſt me, Miſtris Kate Keepe-downe was with child by him in the Dukes time, hee promis'd her marriage: his Child is a yeere and a quarter old come Philip and Iacob: I have kept it my ſelfe; and ſee how he goes about to abuſe me.

Eſca. That fellow is a fellow of much Licenſe: Let him be call'd before us. Away with her to priſon: Goe to, no more words. Provoſt, my Brother Angelo will not be alter'd, Claudio muſt dye to morrow: Let him be furniſh'd with Divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it ſhould not be ſo with him.

Pro. So pleaſe you, this Friar hath beene with him, and advis'd him for th'entertainment of death.

Eſca. Good'even, good father.

Duk. Bliſſe, and goodneſſe on you.

Eſca. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this Country, though my chance is now
To uſe it for my time: I am a brother
Of gracious Order, late come from the Sea,
In ſpecial buſineſſe from his Holineſſe.

Eſca. What newes abroad i'th World?

Duk. None, but that there is ſo great a Feavor on goodneſſe, that the diſſolution of it muſt cure it. Novelty is onely in requeſt, and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of courſe, as it is vertuous to be conſtant in any undertaking. There is ſcarſe truth enough alive to make Societies ſecure, but Security enough to make Fellowſhips accurſt. Much upon this riddle runnes the wiſedome of the world: This newes is old enough, yet it is every dayes newes. I pray you Sir, of what diſpoſition was the Duke?

Eſca. One, that above all other ſtrifes,
Contended eſpecially to know himſelfe.

Duk. What pleaſure was he given to?

Eſca. Rather rejoycing to ſee another merry, then merry at any thing which profeſt to make him rejoyce. A Gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove proſperous; and let me deſire to know, how you find Claudio prepar'd? I am made to underſtand, that you have lent him viſitation.

Duk. He profeſſes to have received no ſiniſter meaſure from his Iudge, but moſt willingly humbles himſelfe to the determination of Iuſtice: yet had he framed to himſelfe (by the inſtruction of his frailty) many deceiving promiſes of life, which I (by my good leiſure) have diſcredited to him, and now is he reſolv'd to dye.

Eſca. You have paid the heavens your Function, and the priſoner the very debt of your Calling. I have labour'd for the poore Gentleman, to the extremeſt ſhore of my modeſty, but my brother-juſtice have I found ſo ſevere, that he hath forc'd me to tell him, he is indeed juſtice.

Duk. If his owne life,
Anſwer the ſtraitneſſe of his proceeding,
It ſhall become him well: wherein if he chance to faile, he hath ſentenc'd himſelfe.

Eſ. I am going to viſit the priſoner, Fare you wel. Exit.

Duk. Peace be with you.
He who the ſword of Heaven will beare,
Should be as holy, as ſeveare:
Patterne in himſelfe to know,
Grace to ſtand, and Vertue goe:
More, nor leſſe to others paying,
Then by ſelfe-offences weighing.
Shame to him, whoſe cruell ſtriking,
Kils for faults of his owne liking:
Twice trebble ſhame on Angelo,
To weede my vice, and let his grow.
Oh, what may Man within him hide,
Though Angell on the outward ſide?
How may likeneſſe made in crimes,
Making practiſe on the Times,
To draw with idle Spiders ſtrings
Moſt ponderous and ſubſtantiall things?
Craft againſt vice, I muſt apply.
With Angelo to night ſhall lye
His old betroathed (but deſpiſed:)
So diſguiſe ſhall by th'diſguiſed
Pay with falſhood, falſe exacting,
And performe an old contracting. Exit.

Actus Quartus, Scœna Prima.

Enter Mariana, and Boy ſinging.

Song. Take, oh take thoſe lips away,
that ſo ſweetly were forſworne,
And thoſe eyes: the breake of day
lights that doe miſlead the Morne;
But my kiſſes bring againe, bring againe,
Seales of love, but ſeal'd in vaine, ſeal'd in vaine.

Enter Duke.

Mari. Breake off thy ſong, and haſte thee quick away,
Here comes a man of comfort, whoſe adviſe
Hath often ſtill'd my brawling diſcontent.
I cry you mercy, Sir, and well could wiſh
You had not found me here ſo muſicall.
Let me excuſe me, and beleeve me ſo,
My mirth it much diſpleaſ'd, but pleaſ'd my woe.

Duk. 'Tis good: though Muſicke oft hath ſuch a charme
To make bad, good; and good provoake to harme.
I pray you tell me, hath any body enquir'd for me here to day? much upon this time have I promiſ'd heere to meete.

Mari. You have not beene enquir'd after: I have ſat here all day.

Enter Iſabell.

Duk. I doe conſtantly beleeve you: the time is come even now. I ſhall crave your forbearance a little, may be I will call upon you anone for ſome advantage to your ſelfe.

Mari. I am alwayes bound to you. Exit.

Duk. Very well met, and well come:
What is the newes from this good Deputy?

Iſa. He hath a Garden circummur'd with Bricke,
Whoſe weſterne ſide is with a Vineyard back't;
And to that Vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger Key:
This other doth command a little doore,
Which from the Vineyard to the Garden leades,
There have I made my promiſe, upon the
Heavy middle of the night, to call upon him.

Duk. But ſhall you on your knowledge find this way?

Iſa. I have tane a due and wary note upon't,
With whiſpering, and moſt guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did ſhow me
The way twice ore.

Duke. Are there no other tokens
Betweene you'greed, concerning her obſervance?

Iſa. No: none but onely a repaire ith' darke,
And that I have poſſeſt him, my moſt ſtay
Can be but briefe: for I have made him know,
I have a Servant comes with me along
That ſtayes upon me, whoſe perſwaſion is,
I come about my brother.

Duk. 'Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made knowne to Mariana

Enter Mariana.

A word of this: what hoa, within; come forth,
I pray you be acquainted with this Maid,
She comes to doe you good.

Iſa. I doe deſire the like.

Duk. Doe you perſwade your ſelfe that I reſpect you?

Mari. Good Frier, I know you doe, and have found it.

Duk. Take then this your companion by the hand
Who hath a ſtory ready for your eare:
I ſhall attend your leiſure, but make haſte
The vaporous night approaches.

Mari. Wilt pleaſe you walke aſide? Exit.

Duk. Oh Place, and greatneſſe: millions of falſe eyes
Are ſtucke upon thee: volumes of report
Runne with theſe falſe, and moſt contrarious Queſts
Vpon thy doings: thouſand ſcapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreame,
And racke thee in their fancies. Welcome, how agreed?

Enter Mariana, and Iſabell.

Iſa. She'll take the enterprize upon her, father,
If you adviſe it.

Duk. It is not my conſent,
But my entreaty too.

Iſa. Little have you to ſay.
When you depart from him, but ſoft and low,
Remember now my brother.

Mar. Feare me not.

Duk. Nor gentle daughter, feare you not at all:
He is your husband on a pre-contract:
To bring you thus together 'tis no ſinne,
Sith that the Iuſtice of your title to him
Doth flouriſh the deceit. Come, let us goe,
Our Corne's to reape, for yet our Tithes to ſow. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Provoſt, and Clowne.

Pro. Come hither ſirha; can you cut off a mans head?

Clo. If the man be a Bachelor Sir, I can:
But if he be a married man, he's his wives head,
And I can never cut off a womans head.

Pro. Come ſir, leave me your ſnatches, and yeeld mee a direct anſwer. To morrow morning are to dye Claudio, and Barnardine: here is in our priſon a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper, if you will take it on you to aſſiſt him, it ſhall redeeme you from your Gyves: if not, you ſhall have your full time of impriſonment, and your deliverance with an unpittied whipping; for you have beene a notorious baud.

Clo. Sir, I have beene an unlawfull baud, time out of mind, but yet I will be content to be a lawfull hangman: I would be glad to receive ſome inſtruction from my fellow partner.

Pro. What hoa, Abhorſon: where's Abhorſon there?

Enter Abhorſon.

Abho. Doe you call ſir?

Pro. Sirha, here's a fellow will helpe you to morrow in your execution: if you thinke it meet, compound with him by the yeere, and let him abide here with you, if not, uſe him for the preſent, and diſmiſſe him, he cannot plead his eſtimation with you: he hath beene a Bawd.

Abbo. A Baud Sir? fie upon him, he will diſcredit our myſtery.

Pro. Goe too Sir, you waigh equally; a feather will turne the Scale. Exit.

Clo. Pray ſir, by your good favour: for ſurely ſir, a good favor you have, but that you have a hanging looke: Doe you call ſir, your occupation a Myſtery?

Abbo. I Sir, a Miſtery.

Clo. Painting Sir, I have heard ſay, is a Miſtery: and your Whores ſir, being members of my occupation, vſing painting, doe prove my Occupation, a Miſtery: but what Miſtery there ſhould be in hanging, if I ſhould be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abbo. Sir, it is a Miſtery.

Clo Proofe.

Abbo. Every true mans apparell fits your Theeſe.

Clo. If it be too little for your theeſe, your true man thinkes it bigge enough. If it be too big for your Theeſe, your Theeſe thinkes it little enough: So every true mans apparell fits your Theeſe.

Enter Provoſt.

Pro. Are you agreed?

Clo. Sir, I will ſerve him: For I doe find your Hangman is a more penitent Trade then your Baud: he doth oftner aske forgiveneſſe.

Pro. You ſirah, provide your blocke and your Axe to morrow, foure a clocke.

Abbo. Come on (Baud) I will inſtruct thee in my Trade: follow.

Clo. I doe deſire to learne ſir: and I hope, if you have occaſion to uſe me for your owne turne, you ſhall find me y'are. For truly ſir, for your kindneſſe, I owe you a good turne. Exit.

Pro. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio:
Th'one has my pitty; not a jot the other,
Being a Murtherer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Looke, here's the Warrant Claudio, for thy death,
'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to morrow
Thou muſt be made immortall. Where's Barnardine?

Cla. As faſt lock'd up in ſleepe, as guiltleſſe labour,
When it lyes ſtarkely in the Travellers bones.
He will not wake.

Pro. Who can doe good on him?
Well, goe, prepare your ſelfe. But harke, what noiſe?
Heaven give your ſpirits comfort: by, and by,
I hope it is ſome pardon, or repreeve
For the moſt gentle Claudio. Welcome father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. The beſt, and wholſomſt ſpirits of the night,
Invellop you, good Provoſt: who call'd heere of late?

Pro. Now ſince the Curphew rung.

Duk. Not Iſabell.

Pro. No.

Duke. They will then er't be long.

Pro. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's ſome in hope.

Pro. It is a bitter Deputy.

Duk. Not ſo, not ſo: his life is paralel'd
Even with the ſtroke and line of his great Iuſtice:
He doth with holy abſtinence ſubdue
That in himſelfe, which he ſpurres on his powre
To qualifie in others: were he meal'd with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous,
But this being ſo, he's juſt. Now are they come.
This is a gentle Provoſt, ſildome when
The ſteeled Gaoler is the friend of men:
How now? what noiſe? That ſpirit's poſſeſt with haſte,
That wounds th'unſiſting Poſterne with theſe ſtrokes.

Pro. There he muſt ſtay untill the Officer
Ariſe to let him in: he is call'd up.

Duk. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet?
But he muſt dye to morrow?

Pro. None Sir, none.

Duk. As neere the dawning Provoſt, as it is,
You ſhall heare more ere Morning.

Pro. Happely
You ſomething know: yet I beleeve there comes
No countermand: no ſuch example have we:
Beſides, upon the very ſiege of juſtice,
Lord Angelo hath to the publike eare
Profeſt the contrary.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Duk. This is his lords man.

Pro. And heere comes Claudio's pardon.

Meſſ. My lord hath ſent you this note,
And by me this further charge:
That you ſwerve not from the ſmalleſt Article of it,
Neither in time, matter, or other circumſtance.
Good morrow: for as I take it, it is almoſt day.

Pro. I ſhall obey him.

Duk. This is his Pardon purchas'd by ſuch ſinne,
For which the Pardoner himſelfe is in:
Hence hath offence his quicke celerity,
When it is borne in high Authority.
When Vice makes Mercy; Mercy's ſo extended,
That for the faults love, is th'offender friended.
Now Sir, what newes?

Pro. I told you:
Lord Angelo (be-like) thinking me remiſſe
In mine Office, awakens me
With this unwonted putting on, methinkes ſtrangely:
For he hath not us'd it before.

Duk. Pray you let's heare.

The Letter.

Whatſoever you may heare to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by foure of the clocke, and in the afternoone Barnardine: For my better ſatisfaction, let me have Claudios head ſent me by five. Let this be duely performed with a thought that more depends on it, then we muſt yet deliver. Thus faile not to doe your office, as you will anſwer it at your perill.

What ſay you to this Sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in th'afternoone?

Pro. A Bohemian borne: But here nurſt up and bred,
One that is a priſoner nine yeeres old.

Duk. How came it, that the abſent Duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him? I have heard it was ever his manner to doe ſo.

Pro. His friends ſtill wrought Repreeves for him: And indeed his fact till now in the government of lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtfull proofe.

Duk. It is now apparent?

Pro. Moſt manifeſt, and not denied by himſelfe.

Duk. Hath he borne himſelfe penitently in priſon?
How ſeemes he to be touch'd?

Pro. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken ſleepe, careleſſe, wreakeleſſe, and feareleſſe of what's paſt, preſent, or to come: inſenſible of mortality, and deſperately mortall.

Duk. He wants advice.

Pro. He will heare none: he hath evermore had the liberty of the priſon: give him leave to eſcape hence, hee would not. Drunke many times a day, if not many dayes entirely drunke. We have very oft awak'd him, as if to carry him to execution, and ſhew'd him a ſeeming warrant for it, it hath not moved him at all.

Duk. More of him anon: There is written in your brow Provoſt, honeſty and conſtancy; if I reade it not truely, my ancient skill beguiles me: but in the boldneſſe of my cunning, I will lay my ſelfe in hazard: Claudio, whom heere you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the Law, than Angelo who hath ſentenc'd him. To make you underſtand this in a manifeſted effect, I crave but foure dayes reſpit: for the which, you are to doe me both a preſent, and a dangerous courteſie.

Pro. Pray Sir, in what?

Duk. In the delaying death.

Pro. Alacke, how may I doe it? Having the houre limited, and an expreſſe command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my caſe as Claudio's, to croſſe this in the ſmalleſt.

Duk. By the vow of mine Order, I warrant you,
If my inſtructions may be your guide,
Let this Barnardine be this morning executed,
And his head borne to Angelo.

Pro. Angelo hath ſeene them both,
And will diſcover the favour.

Duk. Oh, death's a great diſguiſer, and you may adde to it; Shave the head, and tye the beard, and ſay it was the deſire of the penitent to be ſo bar'de before his death: you know the courſe is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more then thankes and good fortune, by the Saint whom I profeſſe, I will plead againſt it with my life.

Pro. Pardon me, good father, it is againſt my oath.

Duk. Were you ſworne to the Duke, or to the Deputy?

Pro. To him, and to his Subſtitutes.

Duk. You will thinke you have made no offence, if the Duke avouch the juſtice of your dealing?

Pro. But what like lyehood is in that?

Duk. Not a reſemblance, but a certainty; yet ſince I ſee you fearefull, that neither my coate, integrity, nor perſwaſion, can with eaſe attempt you, I will goe further then I meant, to plucke all feares out of you. Looke you Sir, here is the hand and Seale of the Duke: you know the Charracter I doubt not, and the Signet is not ſtrange to you?

Pro. I know them both.

Duk. The Contents of this, is the returne of the Duke; you ſhall anon over-reade it at your pleaſure: where you ſhall find within theſe two dayes, he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not, for he this very day receives letters of ſtrange tenor, perchance of the Dukes death, perchance entering into ſome Monaſtery, but by chance nothing of what is writ. Looke, th'unfolding Starre calles up the Shepheard; put not your ſelfe into amazement, how theſe things ſhould be; all difficulties are but eaſie when they are knowne. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardines head: I will give him a preſent ſhrift, and adviſe him for a better place. Yet you are amaz'd, but this ſhall abſolutely reſolve you: Come away, it is almoſt cleere dawne. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. I am as well acquainted heere, as I was in our houſe of profeſſion: one would thinke it were Miſtris Over-dons owne houſe, for heere bee many of her old Cuſtomers. Firſt, here's yong M^{r}. Raſh, he's in for a commodity of browne paper, and old Ginger, ninescore and ſeventeene pounds, of which he made five Markes ready money: marry then, Ginger was not much in requeſt, for the old Women were all dead. Then is there heere one M^{r}. Caper, at the ſuite of Maſter Three-Pile the Mercer, for ſome foure ſuites of Peach-colour'd Satten, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here, yong Dizy, and yong M^{r}. Deepe-vow, and M^{r}. Copperſpure, and Maſter Starve-Lackey the Rapier and dagger man, and yong Drop-heire that kild luſty Pudding, and M^{r}. Forthlight the Tilter, and brave M^{r}. Shooty the great Traveller, and wilde Halfe-Canne that ſtabb'd Pots, and I thinke forty more, all great doers in our Trade, and are now for the lords ſake.

Enter Abhorſon.

Abho. Sirah, bring Barnardine hither.

Clo. Maſter Barnardine, you muſt riſe and be hang'd, Maſter Barnardine.

Abh. What hoa Barnardine.

Barnardine within.

Bar. A pox o'your throats: who makes that noyſe there? What are you?

Clo. Your friends Sir, the Hangman:
You muſt be ſo good Sir to riſe, and be put to death.

Bar. Away you Rogue, away, I am ſleepy.

Abh. Tell him he muſt awake,
And that quickly too.

Clo. Pray Maſter Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and ſleepe afterwards.

Abh. Goe in to him, and fetch him out.

Clo. He is comming Sir, he is comming: I heare his Straw ruſſle.

Enter Barnardine.

Abh. Is the Axe upon the blocke, ſirah?

Clo. Very ready Sir.

Bar. How now Abhorſon?
What's the newes with you?

Abh. Truly Sir, I would deſire you to clap into your prayers: for looke you, the Warrant's come.

Bar. You Rogue, I have beene drinking all night,
I am not fitted for't.

Clo. Oh, the better Sir: for he that drinkes all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may ſleepe the ſounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abh. Looke you Sir, here comes your ghoſtly father: doe we jeſt now thinke you?

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how haſtily you are to depart, I am come to adviſe you,
Comfort you, and pray with you.

Bar. Friar, not I: I have beene drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they ſhall beat out my braines with billets: I will not conſent to dye this day, that's certaine.

Duk. Oh ſir, you muſt: and therefore I beſeech you
Looke forward on the journy you ſhall goe.

Bar. I ſweare I will not dye to day for any mans perſwaſion.

Duk. But heare you:

Bar. Not a word: if you have any thing to ſay to me, come to my Ward: for thence will not I to day. Exit.

Enter Provoſt.

Duk. Vnfit to live, or dye: oh gravell heart.

After him (Fellowes) bring him to the blocke.
Pro. Now Sir, how doe you find the priſoner?
Duk. A creature unpre-par'd, unmeet for death,
And to tranſport him in the minde he is,
Were damnable.
Pro. Here in the priſon, father,
There died this morning of a cruell Feaver,
One Ragozine, a moſt notorious Pirate,
A man of Claudio's yeares: his beard, and head
Iuſt of colour. What if we doe omit
This Reprobate, till he were well enclin'd,
And ſatisfie the Deputy with the viſage
Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?
Duke. Oh, 'tis an accident that heaven provides:
Diſpatch it preſently, the houre drawes on
Prefixt by Angelo: See this be done,
And ſent according to command, whiles I
Perſwade this rude wretch willingly to dye.
Pro. This ſhall be done (good father) preſently:
But Barnardine muſt dye this afternoone,
And how ſhall we continue Claudio,
To ſave me from the danger that might come,
If he were knowne alive?
Duk. Let this be done.
Put them in ſecret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio,
Ere twice the Sun hath made his journall greeting
To yond generation, you ſhall find
Your ſafety maniſeſted.
Pro. I am your free dependant. Exit.
Duk. Quicke, diſpatch, and ſend the head to Angelo.
Now will I write Letters to Angelo,
(The Provoſt he ſhall beare them) whoſe contents
Shall witneſſe to him I am neere at home:
And that by great injunctions I am bound
To enter publickely: him ile deſire
To meet me at the conſecrated Fount,
A League below the Citty: and from thence,
By cold gradation, and weale-ballanc'd forme.
We ſhall proceed with Angelo.
Enter Provoſt.
Pro. Heere is the head, Ile carry it my ſelfe.
Duk. Convenient is it: Make a ſwift returne,
For I would commune with you of ſuch things,
That want no eare but yours,
Pro. Ile make all ſpeed. Exit.
Iſabell within.
Iſa. Peace hoa, be heere.
Duk. The tongue of Iſabell. She's come to know,
If yet her brothers pardon be come hither:
But I will keepe her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of deſpaire,
When it is leaſt expected.
Enter Iſabella.
Iſa. Hoa, by your leave.
Duk. Good morning to you, faire, and gracious daughter.
Iſa. The better given me be ſo holy a man,
Hath yet the Deputy ſent my brothers pardon?
Duk. He hath releaſ'd him, Iſabell, from the world,
His head is off, and ſent to Angelo.
Iſa. Nay, but it is not ſo.
Duk. It is no other.
Shew your wiſedome daughter in your cloſe patience.
Iſa. Oh, I will to him, and plucke out his eyes.
Duke. You ſhall not be admitted to his ſight.
Iſa. Vnhappy Claudio, wretched Iſabell,
Injurious world, moſt damned Angelo.
Duk. This nor hurts him, nor profits you a jot.
Forbeare it therfore, give your cauſe to heaven,
Marke what I ſay, which you ſhall find
By every ſillable a faithfull verity.
The Duke comes home to morrow: nay dry your eyes,
One of our Covent, and his Confeſſor
Gives me this inſtance: Already he hath carried
Notice to Eſcalus and Angelo,
Who doe prepare to meete him at the gates,
There to give up their powre: if you can pace your wiſdome,
In that good path that I would wiſh it goe,
And you ſhall have your boſome on this wretch,
Grace of the Duke, revenges to your heart,
And generall Honor.
Iſa. I am directed by you.
Duk. This Letter then to Friar Peter give,
'Tis that he ſent me of the Dukes returne:
Say, by this token, I deſire his company
At Mariana's houſe to night. Her cauſe, and yours
Ile perfect him withall, and he ſhall bring you
Before the Duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accuſe him home and home. For my poore ſelfe,
I am combined by a ſacred Vow,
And ſhall be abſent. Wend you with this Letter:
Command theſe fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart; truſt not my holy Order
If I pervert your courſe: who's heere?
Enter Luci.
Luc. Good'even;
Frier, where's the Proveſt?
Duke. Not within Sir,

Luc. Oh pretty Iſabella, I am pale at mine heart, to ſee thine eyes ſo red: thou muſt be pacient; I am faine to dine and ſup with water and bran: I dare not for my head fill my belly. One fruitfull Meale would ſet mee too't: but they ſay the Duke will be heere to Morrow. By my troth Iſabell I lov'd thy brother, if the old fantaſticall Duke of darke corners had beene at home, he had lived.

Duke. Sir, the Duke is marveilous little beholding to your reports, but the beſt is, he lives not in them.

Luc. Friar, thou knoweſt not the Duke ſo well as I doe: he's a better woodman then thou tak'ſt him for.

Duke. Well: you'll anſwer this one day. Fare ye well.
Luc. Nay tarry, Ile goe along with thee.
I can tell thee pretty tales of the Duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already ſir if they be true: if not true, none were enough.

Luc. I was once before him for getting a Wench with child.

Duk. Did you ſuch a thing?
Luc. Yes marry did I; but I was faine to forſweare it,
They would elſe have married me to the rotten Medler.

Duke. Sir you company is fairer then honeſt, reſt you well.

Luc. By my troth Ile goe with thee to the lanes end: if baudy talke offend you, we'll have very little of: nay Friar I am a kind of a Burre, I ſhall ſticke. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Angelo, and Eſcalus.
Eſc. Every Letter he hath writ, hath diſvouch'd other.

Ang. In moſt uneven and diſtracted manner, his actions ſhew much like to madneſſe, pray heaven his wiſedome be not tainted: and why meet him at the gates and deliver our authorities there?

Eſc. I gheſſe not.

Ang. And why ſhould we proclaime it in an houre before his entring, that if any crave redreſſe of injuſtice, they ſhould exhibite their petitions in the ſtreet?

Eſc. He ſhewes his reaſon for that: to have a diſpatch of Complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which ſhall then have no power to ſtand againſt vs.

Ang. Well: I beſeech you let it be proclaim'd betimes i'th morne, Ile call you at your houſe: give notice to ſuch men of ſort and ſuit as are to meet him.

Eſc. I ſhall ſir: fare you well. Exit.

Ang. Good night.
This deed unſhapes me quite, makes me unpregnant
And dull to all proceedings. A deflowred Maide,
And by an eminent Body, that enforc'd
The Law againſt it? But that her tender ſhame
Will not proclaime againſt her Maiden loſſe,
How might ſhe tongue me? yet reaſon dares her no,
For my Authority beares of a credent bulke,
That no particular ſcandall once can touch
But it confounds the breather. He ſhould have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth with dangerous ſenſe,
Might in the times to come have ta'ne revenge
By ſo receiving a diſhonour'd life,
With ranſome of ſuch ſhame: would yet he had liv'd.
Alack, when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right, we would, and we would not. Exit.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Duke and Fryer Peter.

Duk. Theſe Letters at fit time deliver me.
The Provoſt knowes our purpoſe and our plot,
The matter being a foote, keepe your inſtruction
And hold you ever to our ſpeciall drift,
Though ſometimes you doe blench from this to that
As cauſe doth miniſter: Goe call at Flavia's houſe,
And tell him where I ſtay: give the like notice
To Valencius, Rowland, and to Craſſus,
And bid them bring the Trumpets to the gate:
But ſend me Flavius firſt.

Peter. It ſhall be ſpeeded well.

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thanke thee Varrius, thou haſt made good haſt,
Come; we will walke: There's other of our friends
Will greet us heere anon: my gentle Varrius. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Iſabella and Mariana.

Iſab. To ſpeake ſo indirectly I am loath,
I would ſay the truth, but to accuſe him ſo
That is your part, yet I am adviſ'd to doe it,
He ſayes, to vaile full purpoſe.

Mar. Be rul'd by him.

Iſa. Beſides, he tels me, that if peradventure
He ſpeake againſt me on the adverſe ſide,
I ſhould not thinke it ſtrange, for 'tis a Phyſicke
That's bitter, to ſweet end.

Enter Peter.

Mar. I would Fryer Peter.——

Iſab. Oh peace, the Fryer is come.

Peter. Come I have found you out a ſtand moſt fit,
Where you may have ſuch vantage on the Duke
He ſhall not paſſe you:
Twice have the Trumpets ſounded.
The generous and graveſt Citizens
Have hent the gates, and very neere upon
The Duke is entring:
Therefore hence away. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Duke, Varrius, Lords, Angelo, Eſcalus, Lucio, Citizens at ſeverall doores.

Duke. My very worthy Coſen, fairely met,
Our old and faithfull friend, we are glad to ſee you.

Ang. Eſc. Happy returne be to your Royall Grace.

Duke. Many and hearty thankings be to you both:
We have made enquiry of you, and we heare
Such goodneſſe of your Iuſtice, that our ſoule
Cannot but yeeld you forth to publike thankes
Forerunning more requitall.

Ang. You make my bonds ſtill greater.

Du. Oh your deſert ſpeakes loud, and I ſhould wrong
To locke it in the wards of covert boſome
When it deſerves with Characters of Braſſe
A forted reſidence 'gainſt the tooth of time,
And razure of oblivion: Give we your hand
And let the ſubject ſee, to make them know
That outward curteſies would faine proclaime
Favours that keepe within: Come Eſcalus,
You muſt walke by us on our other hand:
And good ſupporters are you.

Enter Peter and Iſabella.

Peter. Now is your time
Speake loud, and kneele before him.

Iſab. Iuſtice, O Royall Duke, vaile your regard
Vpon a wrong'd (I would faine have ſaid a Maid)
Oh worthy Prince diſhonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object,
Till you have heard me, in my true complaint,
And given me Iuſtice, Iuſtice, Iuſtice, Iuſtice.

Duke. Relate your wrongs;
In what, by whom? be briefe:
Here is Lord Angelo ſhall give you Iuſtice,
Reveale your ſelfe to him.

Iſab. Oh worthy Duke,
You bid me ſeeke redemption of the Divell,
Heare me your ſelfe: for that which I muſt ſpeake
Muſt either puniſh me, not being beleev'd,
Or wring redreſſe from you:
Heare me: oh heare me, heere.

Ang. My Lord, her wits, I feare me, are not firme:
She hath been a ſuitor to me, for her brother
Cut off by courſe of Iuſtice.

Iſab. By courſe of Iuſtice!

Ang. And ſhe will ſpeake moſt bitterly.

Iſab. Moſt ſtrange: but yet moſt truely will I ſpeake,
That Angelo's forſworne, is it not ſtrange?
That Angelo's a murtherer, is't not ſtrange?
That Angelo is an adulterous theefe,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator,
Is it not ſtrange? and ſtrange?
Du. Nay it is ten times ſtrange?
Iſa. It is not truer he is Angelo,
Than this is all as true, as it is ſtrange;
Nay, it is ten times true, for truth is truth
To th'end of reckning.
Du. Away with her: poore ſoule
She ſpeakes this, in th'infirmity of ſenſe.
Iſab. Oh Prince, I conjure thee, as thou beleev'ſt
There is another comfort, than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madneſſe: make not impoſſible
That which but ſeemes unlike, 'tis not impoſſible
But one, the wickedſt Caitiffe on the ground
May ſeeme as ſhie, as grave, as juſt, as abſolute:
As Angelo, even ſo may Angelo
In all his dreſſings, caracts, titles, formes,
Be an arch-villaine: Beleeve it, royall Prince
If he be leſſe, he's nothing, but he's more,
Had I more name for badneſſe.
Du. By mine honeſty
If ſhe be mad, as I beleeve no other,
Her madneſſe hath the oddeſt frame of ſenſe,
Such a dependancy of thing on thing,
As ere I heard in madneſſe.
Iſab. Oh gracious Duke
Harpe not on that; nor doe not baniſh reaſon
For inequality, but let your reaſon ſerve
To make the truth appeare, where it ſeemes hid,
And hide the falſe ſeemes true.
Duke. Many that are not mad
Have ſure more lacke of reaſon:
What would you ſay?
Iſab. I am the ſiſter of one Claudio,
Condemn'd upon the act of Fornication
To loſe his head, condemn'd by Angelo:
I, (in probation of a Siſterhood)
Was ſent to by my brother; one Lucio
As then the Meſſenger.
Luc. That's I, and't like your Grace:
I came to her from Claudio, and deſir'd her,
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo:
For her poore brothers pardon.
Iſab. That's he indeed.
Du. You were not bid to ſpeake.
Luc. No, my good Lord,
Nor wiſh'd to hold my peace.
Du. I wiſh you now then,
Pray you take note of it: and when you have
A buſineſſe for your ſelfe: pray heaven you then
Be perfect.
Luc. I warrant your honour.
Du. The warrant's for your ſelfe: take heed to't.
Iſab. This Gentleman told ſomething of my Tale.
Luc. Right.
Du. It may be right, but you are i'th wrong
To ſpeake before your time, proceed.
Iſab. I went
To this pernicious Caytiffe Deputy.
Du. That's ſomewhat madly ſpoken.
Iſab. Pardon it,
The phraſe is to the matter.
Du. Mended againe: the matter: proceed.
Iſab. In briefe, to ſet the needleſſe by:
How I perſwaded, how I praid, and kneel'd,
How he refeld me, and how I replide
(For this was of much length) the vilde concluſion
I now begin with griefe and ſhame to utter.
He would not, but by gift of my chaſte body
To his concupiſcible intemperate luſt
Releaſe my brother; and after much debatement,
My ſiſterly remorſe, confutes mine honour,
And I did yeeld to him: But the next morne betimes,
His purpoſe ſurfetting, he ſends a warrant
For my poore brothers head.
Du. This is moſt likely.
Iſab. Oh that it were as like as it is true.
Du. By heaven (fond wretch) yͧ know'ſt not what thou (ſpeak'ſt,
Or elſe thou art ſuborn'd againſt his honour
In hatefull practiſe: firſt his Integrity
Stands without blemiſh: next it imports no reaſon,
That with ſuch vehemency he ſhould purſue
Faults proper to himſelfe: if he had ſo offended
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himſelfe,
And not have cut him off: ſome one hath ſet you on:
Confeſſe the truth, and ſay by whoſe advice
Thou cam'ſt here to complaine.
Iſab. And is this all?
Then oh you bleſſed Miniſters above,
Keepe me in patience, and with ripened time
Vnfold the evill which is here wrapt up
In countenance: heaven ſhield your Grace from woe,
As I thus wrong'd, hence unbeleeved goe.
Du. I know you'ld faine be gone: An Officer:
To priſon with her: Shall we thus permit
A blaſting and a ſcandalous breath to fall,
On him ſo neere us? This needs muſt be a practiſe;
Who knew of your intent and comming hither?
Iſab. One that I would were here, Fryer Lodowicke.
Du. A ghoſtly Father belike:
Who knowes that Lodowicke?
Luc. My Lord, I know him, 'tis a medling Fryer,
I doe not like the man: had he beene Lay, my Lord,
For certaine words he ſpake againſt your Grace
In your retirement, I had ſwing'd him ſoundly.
Du. Words againſt me? this'a good Fryer belike
And to ſet on this wretched woman here
Againſt our Subſtitute: Let this Fryer be found.
Luc. But yeſternight my Lord, ſhe and that Fryer
I ſaw them at the priſon: a ſawcy Fryer,
A very ſcurvy fellow.
Peter. Bleſſed be your Royall Grace:
I have ſtood by my Lord, and I have heard
Your Royall eare abus'd: firſt hath this woman
Moſt wrongfully accus'd your Subſtitute,
Who is as free from touch, or ſoyle with her
As ſhe from one ungot.
Du. We did beleeve no leſſe.
Know you that Fryer Lodowicke which ſhe ſpeakes of?
Peter. I know him for a man Divine and holy,
Not ſcurvy, nor a temporary medler
As he's reported by this Gentleman:
And on my truſt, a man that never yet
Did (as he vouches) miſreport your Grace.
Luc. My Lord, moſt villanouſly, beleeve it.
Peter. Well: he in time may come to cleare himſelfe;
But at this inſtant he is ſicke, my Lord:

Of a ſtrange Feaver : upon his meere requeſt
Being come to knowledge, that there was complaint
Intended againſt Lord Angelo, came I hither
To ſpeake as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true and falſe : and what he with his oath
And all probation will make up full cleare
Whenſoever he's convented : Firſt, for this woman,
To juſtifie this worthy Nobleman,
So vulgarly and perſonally accus'd,
Her ſhall you heare diſproved to her eyes,
Till ſhe herſelfe confeſſe it.

Duke. Good Fryer let's heare it :
Doe you not ſmile at this, Lord Angelo?
Oh heaven, the vanity of wretched fooles.
Give vs ſome ſeates, Come Coſen Angelo,
In this Ile be impartiall : be you judge
Of your owne Cauſe : Is this the Witneſſe Fryer ?

Enter Mariana.

First, let her ſhew her face, and after ſpeake.

Mar. Pardon my Lord, I will not ſhew my face
Vntill my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married ?

Mar. No my Lord.

Duke. Are you a Maid?

Mar. No my Lord,

Duke. A Widdow then ?

Mar. Neither my Lord.

Duke. Why are you nothing then : neither Maid, Widow, nor Wife ?

Luc. My Lord, ſhe may be a Punke : for many of them, are neither Maid, Widdow, nor Wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow : I would he had ſome cauſe to prattle for himſelfe.

Luc. Well my Lord.

Mar. My Lord, I doe confeſſe I nere was married,
And I confeſſe beſides, I am no Maid,
I have knowne my husband, yet my husband
Knowes not that ever he knew me.

Luc. He was drunke then, my Lord, it can be no better.

Du. For the benefit of ſilence, would thou wert ſo to.

Luc. Well my Lord.

Du. This is no witneſſe for Lord Angelo.

Mar. Now I come to't, my Lord.
Shee that accuſes him of Fornication,
In ſelfe-ſame manner doth accuſe my husband,
And charges him, my Lord, with ſuch a time,
When Ile depoſe I had him in mine Armes
With all th'effect of Love.

Ang. Charges ſhe moe then me?

Mar. Not that I know.

Du. No ? you ſay your husband.

Mar. Why juſt my Lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinkes he knowes, that he neere knew my body,
But knowes, he thinkes, that he knowes Iſabels.

Ang. This is a ſtrange abuſe : Let's ſee thy face.

Mar. My husband bids me, now I will unmaske.
This is that face, thou cruell Angelo
Which once thou ſworſt, was worth the looking on:
This is the hand, which with a vow'd contract
Was faſt belockt in thine : This is the body
That tooke away the match from Iſabell,
And did ſupply thee at thy Garden-houſe
In her Imagin'd perſon.

Du. Know you this woman ?

Luc. Carnally ſhe ſayes.

Du. Sirrha, no more.

Luc. Enough my Lord.

Ang. My Lord, I muſt confeſſe, I know this woman,
And five yeares ſince there was ſome ſpeech of marriage
Betwixt my ſelfe and her : which was broke off,
Partly for that her promis'd proportions
Came ſhort of Compoſition : but in chiefe
For that her reputation was diſ-valued
In levity : Since which time of five yeeres
I never ſpake with her, ſaw her, nor heard from her
Vpon my faith and honour.

Mar. Noble Prince,
As there comes light from heaven, and words from breath
As there is ſenſe in truth, and truth in vertue,
I am affianced this mans wife, as ſtrongly
As words could make up Vowes : And my good Lord,
But Tueſday night laſt gone, in's Garden houſe,
He knew me as a wife. As this is true,
Let me in ſafety raiſe me from my knees,
Or elſe for ever be confixed here
A Marble Monument.

Ang. I did but ſmile till now,
Now, good my Lord, give me the ſcope of Iuſtice,
My patience here is touch'd : I doe perceive
Theſe poore informall women, are no more
But inſtruments of ſome more mightier member
That ſets them on. Let me have way, my Lord,
To finde this practiſe out.

Duke. I, with my heart,
And puniſh them to your height of pleaſure.
Thou fooliſh Fryer, and thou pernicious woman
Compact with her that's gone : think'ſt thou thy oathes,
Though they would ſweare downe each particular Saint,
Were teſtimonies gainſt his worth, and credit
That's ſeald in approbation? you, Lord Eſcalus,
Sit with my Cozen, lend him your kinde paines
To finde out this abuſe, whence 'tis deriv'd.
There is another Fryer that ſet them on,
Let him be ſent for.

Peter. Would he were here, my Lord, for he indeed
Hath ſet the women on to this complaint ;
Your Provoſt knowes the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

Duk. Goe, doe it inſtantly :
And you my Noble and well-warranted Coſen
Whom it concernes to heare this matter forth,
Doe with your injuries as ſeemes you beſt
In any chaſtiſement ; I for a while
Will leave you ; but ſtirre not you till you have
Well determin'd upon theſe Slanderers. Exit.

Eſc. My Lord, wee'll doe it throughly : Signior Lucio, did not you ſay, you knew that Fryer Lodowicke to bee a diſhoneſt perſon ?

Luc. Cucullus non facit Monachum, honeſt in nothing but in his Cloathes, and one that hath ſpoke moſt villanous ſpeeches of the Duke.

Eſc. We ſhall intreat you to abide here till he come, and inforce them againſt him : wee ſhall finde this Fryer a notable fellow.

Luc. As any in Vienna on my word.

Eſca. Call that ſame Iſabell here once againe, I would ſpeake with her : pray you, my Lord, give mee leave to queſtion, you ſhall ſee how Ile handle her.

Luc. Not better then he, by her owne report.

Eſca. Say you ?

Luc. Marry ſir, I thinke, if you handled her privately

She ſhould ſooner confeſſe,perchance publikely ſhe'll bee aſham'd.

Enter Duke,Provoſt,Iſabella.

Eſc. I will goe darkely to worke with her.

Luc. That's the way: for women are light at midnight.

Eſc. Come on Miſtris, here's a Gentlewoman Denies all that you have ſaid.

Luc. My Lord,here comes the Raſcall I ſpoke of,
Here with the Provoſt.

*Eſt.*In very good time: ſpeake not you to him, till we call upon you.

Luc. Mum.

Eſc. Come ſir,did you ſet theſe women on to ſlander Lord Angelo? they have confeſ'd you did.

Duke. 'Tis falſe.

Eſc. How? know you where you are?

Duke. Reſpect to your great place; and let the Divell
Be ſometime honour'd,for his burning throne.
Where is the Duke? 'tis he ſhould heare me ſpeake.

Eſc. The Duke's in us: and we will heare you ſpeake,
Looke you ſpeake juſtly.

Duke. Boldly at leaſt. But oh poore ſoules,
Come you to ſeeke the Lambe here of the Fox?
Good night to your redreſſe: is the Duke gone?
Then is your cauſe gone too: The Duke's unjuſt,
Thus to retort your manifeſt appeale,
And put your tryall in the villaines mouth,
Which here you come to accuſe.

Luc. This is the Raſcall: this is he I ſpoke of.

Eſt. Why thou unreverend and unhallowed Fryer:
Is't not enough thou haſt ſuborn'd theſe women,
To accuſe this worthy man? but in fowle mouth,
And in the witneſſe of his proper eare,
To call him villaine; and then to glance from him,
To th'Duke himſelfe,to taxe him with Injuſtice?
Take him hence;to th'racke with him: we'll towze you
Ioynt by joynt,but we will know his purpoſe:
What? unjuſt?

Duke. Be not ſo hot: the Duke dare
No more ſtretch this finger of mine,then he Dare racke his owne: his Subject am I not,
Nor here Provinciall: My buſineſſe in this State
Made me a looker on here in Vienna,
Where I have ſeene corruption boyle and bubble,
Till it ore-runne the Stew: Lawes for all faults,
But faults ſo countenanc'd,that the ſtrong Statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a Barbers ſhop,
As much in mocke,as marke.

Eſc. Slander to th'State:
Away with him to priſon.

Ang. What can you vouch againſt him Signior Lucio?
Is this the man that you did tell us of?

Luc. 'Tis he,my Lord: come hither goodman baldpate,doe you know me?

Duke. I remember you ſir by the ſound of your voyce, I met you at the priſon in the abſence of the Duke.

Luc. Oh,did you ſo? and doe you remember what you ſaid of the Duke?

Duke. Moſt notedly ſir.

Luc. Doe you ſo ſir: And was the Duke a fleſh-monger, a foole,and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You muſt (ſir) change perſons with me,ere you make that my report: you indeed ſpoke ſo of him, and much more, much worſe.

Luc. Oh thou damnable fellow: did not I plucke thee by the noſe,for thy ſpeeches?

Duke. I proteſt,I love the Duke as I love my ſelfe.

Ang. Harke how the villaine would cloſe now, after his treaſonable abuſes.

Eſc. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withall: Away with him to priſon: Where is the Provoſt? away with him to priſon: lay bolts enough upon him: let him ſpeake no more: away with thoſe Giglets too, and with the other confederate companion.

Duke. Stay ſir,ſtay a while.

Ang. What,reſiſts he? helpe him Lucio.

Luc. Come ſir,come ſir,come ſir: foh ſir, why you baldpated lying Raſcall: you muſt be hooded muſt you? ſhow your knaves viſage with a poxe to you: ſhow your ſheepe-biting face, and bee hang'd an houre: will't not off?

Duke. Thou art the firſt knave that ere mad'ſt a Duke.
Firſt Provoſt,let me bayle theſe gentle three:
Sneake not away ſir,for the Fryer and you,
Muſt have a word anon: lay hold on him.

Luc. This may prove worſe then hanging.

Duke. What you have ſpoke,I pardon: ſit you downe,
We'll borrow place of him; Sir,by your leave:
Ha'ſt thou or word or wit,or impudence,
That yet can doe thee office? If thou ha'ſt,
Rely upon it,till my tale be heard,
And hold no longer out.

Ang. Oh my dread Lord,
I ſhould be guiltier then my guiltineſſe,
To thinke I can be undiſcernable,
When I perceive your Grace,like power Divine,
Hath look'd upon my paſſes. Then good Prince,
No longer Seſſion hold vpon my ſhame,
But let my triall be mine owne Confeſſion:
Immediate ſentence then,and ſequent death,
Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither Mariana,
Say: was't thou ever contracted to this woman?

Ang. I was my Lord.

Duke, Goe take her hence,and marry her inſtantly.
Doe you the office(Fryer)which conſummate,
Returne him here againe: goe with him Provoſt. Exit.

Eſc. My Lord I am more amaz'd at his diſhonour,
Then at the ſtrangeneſſe of it.

Duke. Come hither Iſabel,
Your Fryer is now your Prince: As I was then
Advertiſing,and holy to your buſineſſe,
(Not changing heart with habit) I am ſtill,
Atturnied at your ſervice.

Iſab. Oh give me pardon
That I,your vaſſaile, have imploy'd and pain'd,
Your unknowne Soveraignety.

Duke. You are pardon'd Iſabel:
And now deare Maide,be you as free to us.
Your brothers death,I know,ſits at your heart:
And you may marveile,why I obſcur'd my ſelfe,
Labouring to ſave his life; and would not rather
Make raſh remonſtrance of my hidden power,
Then let him ſo be loſt: Oh moſt kinde Maid,
It was the ſwift celerity of his death,
Which I did thinke with ſlower foote came on,
That brain'd my purpoſe: but peace be with him,
That life is better life paſt fearing death,
Then that which lives to feare: make it your comfort,

So happy is your Brother.

Enter Angelo, Maria, Peter, Provoſt.

Iſa. I doe my Lord.

Duke For this new-married man, approching here,
Whoſe ſalt imagination yet hath wrong'd
Your well defended honour; you muſt pardon
For Mariana's ſake: But as he adjudg'd your Brother,
Being criminall, in double violation
Of ſacred chaſtitie, and of promiſe-breach,
Thereon dependant for your brothers life,
The very mercy of the Law cryes out
Moſt audible, even from his proper tongue,
An Angelo for Claudio, death for death:
Haſte ſtill payes haſte, and leaſure anſweres leaſure;
Like doth quit like, and Meaſure ſtill for Meaſure:
Then Angelo thy fault's thus manifeſted:
Which though thou wouldſt deny, denyes thee vantage.
We doe condemne thee to the very Blocke
Where Claudio ſtoop'd to death, and with like haſte.
Away with him.

Mar. Oh my moſt gracious Lord,
I hope you will not mocke me with a husband?

Duke It is your husband mock'd you with a husband,
Conſenting to the ſafe-guard of your honour,
I thought your marriage fit: elſe Imputation,
For that he knew you, might reproch your life,
And choake your good to come: for his poſſeſſions,
Although by confiſcation they are ours;
We doe enſtate, and widdow you withall,
To buy you a better husband.

Mar. Oh my deere Lord,
I crave no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Never crave him, we are definitive.

Mar. Gentle my Liege.

Duke. You doe but loſe your labour.
Away with him to death: Now ſir, to you.

Mar. Oh my good Lord, ſweet Iſabel, take my part,
Lend me your knees, and all my life to come,
Ile lend you all my life to doe you ſervice.

Duke. Againſt all ſenſe you doe importune her,
Should ſhe kneele downe, in mercy of this fact,
Her brothers ghoſt his paved bed would breake,
And take her hence in horror.

Mar. Iſabel:
Sweet Iſabel, doe yet but kneele by me,
Hold up your hands, ſay nothing: I'le ſpeake all.
They ſay beſt men are moulded out of faults,
And for the moſt, become much more the better
For being a little bad: So may my husband.
Oh Iſabel: will you not lend a knee?

Duke. He dyes for Claudio's death.

Iſab. Moſt bounteous Sir.
Looke, if it pleaſe you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my brother liv'd: I partly thinke,
A due ſincerity governed his deeds,
Till he did looke on me: Since it is ſo,
Let him not dye: my brother had but Iuſtice,
In that he did the thing for which he di'd.
For Angelo, his act did not ore-take his bad intent,
And muſt be buried but as an intent
That periſh'd by the way: thoughts are no ſubjects
Intents, but meerely thoughts.

Mar. Meerely my Lord.

Duke. Your ſuite's unprofitable: ſtand up I ſay:
I have bethought me of another fault.
Provoſt, how came it Claudio was beheaded
At an unuſuall houre?

Pro. It was commanded ſo.

Duk. Had you a ſpeciall warrant for the deed?

Pro. No my good Lord, it was by private meſſage.

Duke. For which I doe diſcharge you of your office,
Give up your keyes.

Pro. Pardon me, Noble Lord:
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not,
Yet did repent me after more advice,
For teſtimony whereof, one in the priſon
That ſhould by private order elſe have dy'd,
I have reſerv'd alive.

Duke. What's he?

Pro. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I wouldſt thou hadſt done ſo by Claudio:
Goe fetch him hither, let me looke upon him.

Eſc. I am ſorry, one ſo learned, and ſo wiſe
As you, Lord Angelo, have ſtill appear'd,
Should ſlip ſo groſly, both in the heat of blood
And lacke of temper'd judgement afterward.

Ang. I am ſorry, that ſuch ſorrow I procure,
And ſo deepe ſticks it in my penitent heart,
That I crave death more willingly then mercy,
'Tis my deſerving, and I doe intreat it.

Enter Barnardine and Provoſt, Claudio, Iulietta.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Pro. This my Lord.

Duke. There was a Fryer told me of this man.
Sirrha, thou art ſaid to have a ſtubborne ſoule
That apprehends no further then this world,
And ſquar'ſt thy life according: Thou'rt condemn'd,
But for thoſe earthly faults, I quit them all,
I pray thee take this mercy to provide
For better times to come: Fryer, adviſe him,
I leave him to your hand. What muffled fellow's that?

Pro. This is another priſoner that I ſav'd,
Who ſhould have dy'd when Claudio loſt his head,
As like almoſt to Claudio, as himſelfe.

Duke. If he be like your brother, for his ſake
Is he pardon'd, and for your lovely ſake
Give me your hand, and ſay you will be mine,
He is my brother too: But fitter time for that:
By this Lord Angelo perceives hee's ſafe,
Me thinkes I ſee a quickning in his eye:
Well Angelo, your evill quits you well.
Looke that you love your wife: her worth, worth yours.
I finde an apt remiſſion in my ſelfe:
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon,
You ſirrha, that knew me for a foole, a Coward,
One all of Luxurie, an Aſſe, a mad man:
Wherein have I ſo deſerv'd of you
That you extoll me thus?

Luc. 'Faith my Lord, I ſpoke it but according to the tricke: if you will hang me for it, you may: but I had rather it would pleaſe you, I might be whipt.

Duke. Whipt firſt ſir, and hang'd after.
Proclaime it Provoſt round about the City;
If any woman wrong'd by this lew'd fellow
(As I have heard him ſweare himſelfe there's one Whom he begot with childe) let her appeare,
And he ſhall marry her: the nuptiall finiſh'd,
Let him be whip'd and hang'd.

Luc. I beſeech your Highneſſe doe not marry mee to a Whore: your Highneſſe ſaid even now, I made you a Duke, good my Lord doe not recompence me, in making me a Cuckold.

Duke. Vpon mine honor thou ſhalt marry her.
Thy ſlanders I forgive, and therewithall
Remit thy other forfeits : take him to priſon,
And ſee our pleaſure herein executed.

Luc. Marrying a punke my Lord, is preſſing to death,
Whipping and hanging.

Duk. Slandering a Prince deſerves it.
She Claudio that you wrong'd, looke you reſtore.
Ioy to you Mariana, love her Angelo :
I have confes'd her, and I know her vertue.
Thankes good friend, Eſcalus, for thy much goodneſſe,
There's more behind that is more gratulate.
Thankes Provoſt for thy care, and ſecrecy,
We ſhall imploy thee in a worthier place.
Forgive him Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's,
Th'offence pardons it ſelfe. Deere Iſabell,
I have a motion much imports your good,
Whereto if you'll a willing eare incline ;
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.
So bring us to our Pallace, where wee'll ſhow
What's yet behind, thats meete you all ſhould know.

FINIS.

The Comedie of Errors.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Enter the Duke of Epheſus, with the Merchant of Syracuſa, Iaylor, and other attendants.

Merchant.

PRoceed Salinus to procure my fall,
And by the doome of death end woes and all.
Duke. Merchant of Siracuſa, plead no more.
I am not partiall to infringe our Lawes;
The enmitie and diſcord which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your Duke,
To merchants our well-dealing Countrimen,
Who wanting gilders to redeeme their lives,
Have ſeal'd his rigorous ſtatutes with their blouds,
Excludes all pitty from our threatening lookes:
For ſince the mortall and inteſtine iarres
Twixt thy ſeditious Countrimen and us,
It hath in ſolemne Synodes beene decreed,
Both by the Siracuſians and our ſelves,
T'admit no trafficke to our adverſe townes:
Nay more, if any borne at Epheſus
Be ſeene at any Siracuſian Marts and Faires:
Againe, if any Siracuſian borne
Come to the Bay of Epheſus, he dies:
His goods confiſcate to the Dukes diſpoſe,
Vnleſſe a thouſand markes be levied
To quit the penalty, and ranſome him:
Thy ſubſtance, valued at the higheſt rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred Markes,
Therefore by Law thou art condemn'd to die.
Mer. Yet this my comfort, when your words are done,
My woes end likewiſe with the evening Sunne.
Duk. Well Siracuſian; ſay in briefe the cauſe
Why thou departedſt from thy natiue home?
And for what cauſe thou cam'ſt to Epheſus?
Mer. A heavier taske could not have beene impos'd,
Then I to ſpeake my griefe unſpeakeable:
Yet that the world may witneſſe, that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence,
Ile utter what my ſorrow gives me leave.
In Syracuſa was I borne, and wedde
Vnto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me too, had not our hap beene bad:
With her I liv'd in joy, our wealth increaſt
By proſperous voyages I often made
To Epidamium, till my factors death:
And he great ſtore of goods at randone leaving,
Drew me from kinde embracements of my ſpouſe;
From whom my abſence was not ſixe moneths olde,
Before her ſelfe (almoſt at fainting under
The pleaſing puniſhment that women beare)
Had made proviſion for her following me,
And ſoone, and ſafe arrived where I was:
There had ſhe not beene long, but ſhe became a joyfull mother of two goodly ſonnes:
And, which was ſtrange, the one ſo like the other,
As could not be diſtinguiſh'd but by names.
That very howre, and in the ſelfſame Inne,
A poore meane woman was delivered
Of ſuch a burthen, Male twins both alike:
Thoſe, for their parents were exceeding poore,
I bought, and brought up to attend my ſonnes.
My wife, not meanely proud of two ſuch boyes,
Made daily motions for our home returne:
Vnwilling I agreed, alas, too ſoone we came aboord.
A league from Epidamium had we ſayld
Before the alwaies winde-obeying deepe
Gave any tragicke Inſtance of our harme:
But longer did we not retaine much hope;
For what obſcured light the heavens did grant,
Did but convay unto our fearefull mindes
A doubtfull warrant of immediate death;
Which though my ſelfe would gladly have imbrac'd,
Yet the inceſſant weeping of my wife,
Weeping before for what ſhe ſaw muſt come,
And pitteous playnings of the prety babes
That mourn'd for faſhion, ignorant what to feare,
Forſt me to ſeeke delayes for them and me,
And this it was: (for other meanes was none)
The Sailors ſought for ſafety by our boate,
And left the ſhip then ſinking-ripe to us.
My wife, more carefull for the latter borne,
Had faſtened him unto a ſmall ſpare Maſt,
Such as ſea-faring men provide for ſtormes:
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whil'ſt I had beene like heedfull of the other.
The children thus diſpo'd, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fixt,
Faſtned our ſelves at eyther end the maſt,
And floating ſtraight, obedient to the ſtreame,
Was carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the Sunne gazing upon the earth,
Diſperſt thoſe vapours that offended us,
And by the benefit of his wiſh'd light
The ſeas waxe calme, and we diſcovered
Two ſhippes from farre, making amaine to us:
Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this;
But ere they came, oh let me ſay no more,
Gather the ſequell by that went before.
Duke. Nay forward old man, doe not breake off ſo,

For we may pitty, though not pardon thee.
Merch. Oh had the gods done ſo, I had not now
Worthily tearm'd them mercileſſe to us:
For ere the ſhips could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encountred by a mighty rocke,
Which being violently borne up upon,
Our helpefull ſhip was ſplitted in the midſt;
So that in this unjuſt divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike,
What to delight in, what to ſorrow for,
Her part, poore ſoule, ſeeming as burdened,
With leſſer waight, but not with leſſer woe,
Was carried with more ſpeed before the winde,
And in our ſight they three were taken up
By Fiſhermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length another ſhip had ſeiz'd on us,
And knowing whom it was their hap to ſave,
Gave helpefull welcome to their ſhip-wrackt gueſts,
And would have reft the Fiſhers of their prey,
Had not their barke beene very ſlow of ſaile;
And therefore homeward did they bend their courſe.
Thus have you heard me ſever'd from my bliſſe,
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,
To tell ſad ſtories of my owne miſhaps.
Duke. And for the ſakes of them thou ſorroweſt for,
Doe me the favour tu dilate at full,
What hath befalne of them and thee till now.
Merch. My yongeſt boy, aud yet my eldeſt care,
At eighteene yeares became inquiſitive
After his brother; and importun'd me
That his attendant, (for his caſe was like,
Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name,)
Might beare him company in the queſt of him:
Whom whil'ſt I laboured of a love to ſee,
I hazarded the loſſe of whom I lov'd.
Five Sommers have I ſpent in fartheſt Greece,
Roming cleane through the bounds of Aſia,
And coaſting homeward, came to Epheſus:
Hopeleſſe to finde, yet loath to leave unſought
Or that, or any place that harbours men:
But heere muſt end the ſtory of my life,
And happy were I in my timely death,
Could all my travells warrant me they live.
Duk. Hapleſſe Egeon whom the fates have markt
To beare th' extremitie of dire miſhap:
Now truſt me, were it not againſt our Lawes,
Againſt my Crowne, my oath, my dignity,
Which Princes would, they may not diſanull,
My ſoule ſhould ſue as advocate for thee:
But though thou art adjudged to the death,
And paſſed ſentence may not be recal'd
But to our honours great diſparagement:
Yet will I favour thee in what I can,
Therefore Marchant, Ile limit thee this day
To ſeeke thy helpe by beneficiall helpe,
Try all the friends thou haſt in Epheſus,
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the ſumme,
And live: if no, then thou art doom'd to die:
Iaylor take him to thy cuſtodie.
Iaylor. I will my Lord.
Merch. Hopeleſſe and helpeleſſe doth Egeon wend,
But to procraſtinate his liveleſſe end. Exeunt.

Enter Antipholis, Erotes, a Merchant, and Dromio.

Mer. Therefore give out you are of Epidamium,
Leſt that your goods too ſoone be confiſcate:
This very day a Syracuſan Merchant
Is apprehended for arrivall here,
And not being able to buy out his life,
According to the ſtatute of the towne,
Dies ere the weary Sunne ſet in the Weſt:
There is your monie that I had to keepe.
Ant. Goe beare it to the Centaure, where we hoſt,
And ſtay there Dromio, tell I come to thee;
Till that Ile view the manners of the towne,
Within this houre it will be dinner time:
Peruſe the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then returne and ſleepe within mine Inne,
For with long travaile I am ſtiffe and wearie.
Get thee away.
Dro. Many a man would take you at your word,
And goe indeede, having ſo good a meanes.
Exit Dromio.
Ant. A truſtie villaine ſir, that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholly,
Lightens my humor with his merry jeſts:
What, will you walke with me about the towne,
And then goe to the Inne and dine with me?
E. Mer. I am invited ſir to certaine Merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit:
I crave your pardon, ſoone at five a clocke,
Pleaſe you, Ile meete with you upon the Mart,
And afterward conſort you till bed time:
My preſent buſineſſe cals me from you now.
Ant. Farewell till then: I will goe looſe my life,
And wander up and downe to view the Citie.
E. Mer. Sir I commend you to your owne content.
Exeunt.
Ant. He that commends me to my owne content,
Commends me to the thing I cannot get:
I to the world am like a drop of water,
That in the Ocean ſeekes another drop,
Who falling there to finde his fellow forth,
(Vnſeene, inquiſitive) confounds himſelfe,
So I, to finde a Mother and a Brother,
In queſt of him (unhappie) looſe my ſelfe.

Enter Dromio of Epheſus.

Here comes the almanacke of my true date:
What now? How chance thou art return'd ſo ſoone.
E. Dro. Return'd ſo ſoone, rather approacht too late:
The Capon burnes, the Pig fals from the ſpit;
The clocke hath ſtrucken twelue upon the bell:
My Miſtris made it one upon my cheeke:
She is ſo hot becauſe the meate is colde:
The meate is cold becauſe you come not home;
You come not home, becauſe you have no ſtomacke:
You have no ſtomacke, having broke your faſt:
But we that know what 'tis to faſt and pray,
Are penitent for your default to day.
Ant. Stop in your winde ſir, tell me this I pray,
Where have you left the mony that I gave you?
E. Dro. Oh? ſixe pence that I had a wenſday laſt,
To pay the Sadler for my Miſtris crupper:
The Sadler had it Sir, I kept it not.
Ant. I am not in a ſportive humor now:
Tell me, and dally not, where is the monie?
We being ſtrangers here, how dar'ſt thou truſt
So great a charge from thine owne cuſtodie.
E. Dro. I pray you jeſt ſir as you ſit at dinner:
I from my Miſtris come to you in poſt:
If I returne I ſhall be poſt indeede.

For ſhe will ſcoure your fault upon my pate :
Methinkes your maw, like mine, ſhould be you cooke,
And ſtrike you home without a meſſenger.

Ant. Come Dromio, come, theſe jeſts are out of ſeaſon,
Reſerue them till a merrier houre then this :
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee ?

E. Dro. To me ſir ? why you gave no gold to me ?

Ant. Come on ſir knave, have done your fooliſhnes,
And tell me how thou haſt diſpos'd thy charge.

E. Dro. My charge was but to fetch you from the Mart
Home to your houſe, (the Phœnix ſir) to dinner;
My Miſtris and her ſiſter ſtaies for you.

Ant. Now as I am a Chriſtian anſwer me,
In what ſafe place you have beſtow'd my monie :
Or I ſhall breake that merrie ſconce of yours
That ſtands on trickes, when I am undiſpos'd :
Where is the thouſand Markes thou hadſt of me ?

E. Dro. I have ſome markes of yours upon my pate;
Some of my Miſtris markes upon my ſhoulders :
But not a thouſand markes betweene you both.
If I ſhould pay your worſhip thoſe againe,
Perchance you will not beare them patiently.

Ant. Thy Miſtris markes? what miſtris ſlave haſt thou?

E. Dro. Your worſhips wife, my Miſtris at the Phœnix;
She that doth faſt till you come home to dinner :
And prayes that you will hie you home to dinnner.

Ant. What wilt thou flout me thus unto my face
Being forbid? There take you that ſir knave.

E. Dro. What meane you ſir, for God ſake hold your (hands:
Nay, and you will not ſir, Ile take my heeles.

Exit Dromio Ep.

Ant. Vpon my life by ſome device or other,
The villaine is ore-wrought of all my mony.
They ſay this towne is full of coſenage ;
As nimble Iuglers that deceive the eye :
Darke-working Sorcerers that change the minde :
Soule-killing Witches, that deforme the body :
Diſguiſed Cheaters, prating Mountebankes;
And many ſuch like liberties of ſinne :
If it prove ſo, I will be gone the ſooner :
Ile to the Centaure to goe ſeeke this ſlave,
I greatly feare my monie is not ſafe. Exit.

Actus Secunda.

Enter Adriana, wiſe to Antipholis Sereptus, with Luciana her Siſter.

Adr. Neither my husband nor the ſlave return'd,
That in ſuch haſte I ſent to ſeeke his Maſter?
Sure Luciana it is two a clocke.

Luc. Perhaps ſome Merchans hath invited him,
And from the Mart he's ſomewhere gone to dinner :
Good Siſter Let us dine, and never fret ;
A man is Maſter of his libertie ;
Time is their Maſter, and when they ſee time,
They'll goe or come ; if ſo, be patient Siſter.

Adr. Why ſhould their libertie then ours be more?

Luc. Becauſe their buſineſſe ſtill lyes out adore.

Adr. Looke when I ſerve him ſo, he takes it ill.

Luc. Oh, know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but aſſes will be bridled ſo.

Luc. Why, headſtrong liberty is laſht with woe :
There's nothing ſituate under heavens eye,
But hath his bound in earth, in ſea, in skie.
The beaſts, the fiſhes, and the winged fowles
Are their males ſubjects, and at their controules :
Man more divine, the Maſter of all theſe,
Lord of the wide world, and wide watry ſeas,
Indued with intellectuall ſence and ſoule,
Of more preheminence then fiſh and fowle.
Are maſters to their females, and their Lords :
Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adri. This ſervitude makes you to keepe unwed.

Luci. Not this but troubles of the marriage bed.

Adr. But were you wedded, you wold bear ſome ſway

Luc. Ere I learne love, Ile practiſe to obey.

Adr. How if your husband ſtart ſome other where?

Luc. Till he come home againe, I would forbeare.

Adr. Patience unmov'd, no marvel though ſhe pauſe,
They can be meeke, that have no other cauſe :
A wretched ſoule bruis'd with adverſitie,
We bid be quiet when we heare it crie.
But were we burdned with like waight of paine,
As much, or more, we ſhould our ſelves complaine :
So thou that haſt no unkinde mate to greeve thee,
With urging helpeleſſe patience would releeve me ;
But if thou live to ſee like right bereft,
This foole-beg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luci. Well, I will marry one day but to trie :
Heere comes your man, now is your husband nie.

Enter Dromio Eph.

Adr. Say, is your tardie maſter now at hand ?

E. Dro. Nay, hee's at two hands with mee, and that my two eares can witneſſe.

Adr. Say, didſt thou ſpeake with him ? knowſt thou his minde?

E. Dro. I, I, he told his minde upon mine eare,
Beſhrew his hand, I ſcarce could underſtand it.

Luc. Spake he ſo doubtfully, thou couldſt not feele his meaning.

E. Dro. Nay, hee ſtrooke ſo plainely, I could too well feele his blowes; and withall ſo doubtfully, that I could ſcarce underſtand them.

Adri. But ſay, I prethee, is he comming home ?
It ſeemes he hath great care to pleaſe his wife.

E. Dro. Why Miſtreſſe, ſure my Maſter is horne mad.

Adri. Horne mad, thou villaine ?

E. Dro. I meane not Cuckold-mad,
But ſure he is ſtarke mad:
When I deſir'd him to come home to dinner;
He ask'd me for a 1000. markes in gold:
'Tis dinner time quoth I : my gold, quoth he ;
Your meat doth burne, quoth I : my gold quoth he :
Will you come, quoth I ; my gold quoth he;
Where is the thouſand markes I gave thee villaine?
The Pigge quoth I, is burn'd : my gold quoth he :
My miſtreſſe, ſir, quoth I : hang up thy miſtreſſe :
I know not thy miſtreſſe, out on my miſtreſſe.

Luci. Quoth who ?

E. Dr. Quoth my Maſter, I know quoth he, no houſe no wife, no miſtreſſe : ſo that my arrant due unto my tongue, I thanke him, I bare home upon thy ſhoulders: for in concluſioe, he did beate me there.

Adr. Go backe againe thou ſlave, & fetch him home.

Dro. Goe backe againe, and be new beaten home ?
For Gods ſake ſend ſome other meſſenger.

Adri. Backe ſlave, or I will breake thy pate acroſſe.
Dro. And he will bleſſe that croſſe with other beating:
Betweene you, I ſhall have a holy head.
Adri. Hence prating peſant, fetch thy maſter home.
Dro. Am I ſo round with you, as you with me,
That like a foot-ball you doe ſpurne me thus:
You ſpurne me hence, and he will ſpurne me hither,
If I laſt in this ſervice, you muſt caſe me in leather. Exit.
Luci. Fie how impatience lowreth in your face:
Adri. His company muſt do his minions grace,
Whil'ſt I at home ſtarve for a merrie looke:
Hath homely age th'alluring beauty tooke
From my poore cheeke? then he hath waſted it.
Are my diſcourſes dull? Barren my wit,
If voluble aud ſharpe diſcourſe be mar'd,
Vnkindneſſe blots it more then marble hard.
Doe their gay veſtments his affections baite?
That's not my fault, he's maſter of my ſtate.
What ruins are in me that can be found,
By him not ruin'd? Then is he the ground
Of my defeatures. My decayed faire,
A ſunnie looke of his, would ſoone repaire.
But, (too unruly Deere,) he breakes the pale,
And feedes from home; poore I am but his ſtale.
Luci. Selfe-harming Iealouſie; fie beat it hence.
Ad. Vnfeeling fools can with ſuch wrongs diſpence:
I know his eye doth homage other-where,
Or elſe, what lets it but he would be here?
Siſter, you know he promis'd me a chaine,
Would that alone, alone he would detaine,
So he would keepe faire quarter with his bed:
I ſee the Iewell beſt enamaled
Will loſe his beautie: yet the gold bides ſtill
That others touch, and often touching will:
Since that my beautie cannot pleaſe his eie,
Ile weepe (what's left) away and weeping die.
Luc. How manie fond fooles ſerve mad Iealouſie?
Exeunt.

Enter Antipolis Erotes.

Ant. The gold I gave to Dromio is laid up
Safe at the Centaur, and the heedfull ſlave
Is wandred forth in care to ſeeke me out
By computation and mine hoſts report.
I could not ſpeake with Dromio, ſince at firſt
I ſent him from the Mart: ſee here he comes.

Enter Dromio Siracuſan.

How now ſir, is your merrie humor alter'd?
As you love ſtrokes, ſo jeſt with me againe:
You know no Centaur? you receiv'd no gold?
Your miſtris ſent to have me home to dinner?
My houſe was at the Phœnix? Waſt thou mad,
That thus ſo madlie thou didſt anſwere me?
S. Dro. What anſwer ſir? when ſpake I ſuch a word?
E. Ant. Even now, even here, not halfe an houre ſince:
S. Dro. I did not ſee you ſince you ſent me hence
Home to the Centaur with the gold you gave me?
Ant. Villaine, thou didſt denie the golds receit,
And toldſt me of a Miſtris, and a dinner.
For which I hope thou feltſt I was diſpleas'd.
S. Dro. I am glad to ſee you in this merrie veine,
What meanes this jeſt, I pray you Maſter tell me?
Ant. Yea, do'ſt thou jeere and flowt me in the teeth?
Thinkſt yͧ I jeſt? hold, take thou that, and that. Beats Dro.
S. Dr. Hold ſir, for Gods ſake, now your jeſt is earneſt,
Vpon what bargaine doe you give it me?
Antiph. Becauſe that I familiarlie ſometimes
Doe uſe you for my foole, and chat with you,
Your ſawcineſſe will jeſt upou my love,
And make a Common of my ſerious houres:
When the Sunne ſhines, let fooliſh gnats make ſport,
But creepe in crannies, when he hides his beames;
If you will jeſt with me, know my aſpect,
And faſhion your demeanor to my lookes,
Or I will beat this method in your ſconce.

S. Dro. Scocne call you it? ſo you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head, and you uſe theſe blows long, I muſt get a ſconce for my head, and Inſconce it too, or elſe I ſhall ſeek my wit in my ſhoulders, but I pray ſir, why am I beaten?

Ant. Doſt thou not know?

S. Dro. Nothing ſir, but that I am beaten.

Ant. Shall I tell you why?

S. Dro. I ſir, and wherefore; for they ſay, every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. Why firſt for flouting me, and then wherefore, for urging it the ſecond time to me.

S. Dro. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of ſeaſon, when in the why and the wherefore, is neither rime nor reaſon. Well ſir, I thanke you.

Ant. Thanke me ſir, for what?

S. Dro. Marry ſir, for this ſomething that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. Ile make you amends next, to give you nothing for ſomething. But ſay ſir, is it dinner time?

S. Dro. No ſir, I thinke the meat wants that I have.

Ant. In good time ſir, what's that?

S. Dro. Baſting.

Ant. Well ſir, then 'twill be drie.

S. Dro. If it be ſir, I pray you eate not of it.

Ant. Your reaſon?

S. Dro. Leſt it make you chollericke, and purchaſe me another drie baſting.

Ant. Well ſir, learne to jeſt in good time, there's a time for all things.

S. Dro. I durſt have denied that before you were ſo chollericke.

Anti. By what rule ſir?

S. Dro. Marry ſir, by a rule as plaine as the plaine bald pate of Father time himſelfe.

Ant. Let's heare it.

S. Dro. There's no time for a man to recover his haire that growes bald by nature.

Ant. May he not doe it by fine and recoverie?

S. Dro. Yes, to pay a fine for a perewig, and recover the loſt haire of another man.

Ant. Why, is Time ſuch a niggard of haire, being (as it is) ſo plentifull an excrement?

S. Dro. Becauſe it is a bleſſing that hee beſtowes on beaſts, and what he hath ſcanted them in haire, he hath given them in wit.

Ant. Why, but there's many a man hath more haire then wit.

S. Dro. Not a man of thoſe but he hath the wit to loſe his haire.

Ant. Why thou didſt conclude hairie men plaine dealers without wit.

S. Dro. The plainer dealer, the ſooner loſt; yet he looſeth it in a kinde of jollitie.

An. For what reaſon?

S. Dro. For two, and ſound ones too.

An. Nay not ſound ones I pray you.
S. Dro. Sure ones then.
An. Nay, not ſure in a thing falſing.
S. Dro. Certaine ones then.
An. Name them.
S. Dro. The one to ſave the mony that he ſpends in trying: the other, that at dinner they ſhould not drop in his porrage.
An. You would all this time have prov'd, there is no time for all things.
S. Dro. Marry and did ſir: namely, no time to recover haire loſt by Nature.
An. But your reaſon was not ſubſtantiall, why there is no time to recover.
S. Dro. Thus I mend it: Time himſelfe is bald, and therefore to the worlds end, will have bald followers.
An. I knew 'twould bee a bald concluſion: but ſoft, who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adri. I, I, Antipholis, looke ſtrange and frowne,
Some other Miſtreſſe hath ſome ſweet aſpects:
I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.
The time was once, when thou un-urg'd wouldſt vow,
That never words were muſicke to thine eare,
That never object pleaſing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand;
That never meat ſweet-ſavour'd in thy taſte;
Vnleſſe I ſpake, or look'd, or touch'd or carv'd to thee.
How comes it now, (my Husband) oh how comes it,
That thou art then eſtranged from thy ſelfe?
Thy ſelfe I call it, being ſtrange to me:
That undividable Incorporate
Am better than thy deere ſelfes better part.
Ah doe not teare away thy ſelfe from me;
For know my love: as eaſie maiſt thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulfe,
And take unmingled thence that drop againe
Without addition or diminiſhing,
As take from me thy ſelfe, and not me too.
How dearely would it touch thee to the quicke,
Shouldſt thou heare I were licencious?
And that this body conſecrate to thee,
By Ruffian Luſt ſhould be contaminate?
Wouldſt thou not ſpit at me, and ſpurne at me,
And hurle the name of husband in my face,
And teare the ſtain'd ſkin of my Harlot brow,
And from my falſe hand cut the wedding ring,
And breake it with a deepe-divorcing vow?
I know thou canſt, and therefore ſee thou do it.
I am poſſeſt with an adulterate blot,
My bloud is mingled with the crime of luſt:
For if we two be one, and thou play falſe,
I doe digeſt the poyſon of my fleſh,
Being ſtrumpeted by thy contagion.
Keepe then faire league and truce with thy true bed,
I live diſtain'd, thou undiſhonoured.
Antip. Plead you to me faire dame? I know you not:
In Epheſus I am but two houres old,
As ſtrange unto your towne, as to your talke,
Who every word by all my wit being ſcan'd,
Wants wit in all, one word to underſtand.
Luci. Fie brother, how the world is chang'd with you:
When were you wont to uſe my ſiſter thus?
She ſent for you by Dromio home to dinner,
Ant. By Dromio? Drom. By me.
Adr. By thee, and thus thou didſt returne from him.
That he did buffet thee, and in his blowes,
Denied my houſe for his, me for his wife.
Ant. Did you converſe ſir with this gentlewoman:
What is the courſe and drift of your compact?
S. Dro. I ſir? I never ſaw her till this time.
Ant. Villaine thou lieſt, for even her very words,
Didſt thou deliver to me on the Mart.
S. Dro. I never ſpake with her in all my life.
Ant. How can ſhe thus then call us by our names?
Vnleſſe it be by inſpiration.
Adr. How ill agrees it with you gravitie,
To counterfeit thus groſely with your ſlave,
Abetting him to thwart me in my moode;
Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt,
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come I will faſten on this ſleeve of thine:
Thou art an Elme my husband, I a Vine:
Whoſe weakneſſe married to thy ſtranger ſtate,
Makes me with thy ſtrength to communicate:
If ought poſſeſſe thee from me, it is droſſe,
Vſurping Ivie, Brier, or idle Moſſe,
Who all for want of pruning, with intruſion,
Infect thy ſap, and live on thy confuſion.
Ant. To me ſhe ſpeakes, ſhee moves mee for her theame;
What, was I married to her in my dreame?
Or ſleepe I now, and thinke I heare all this?
What error drives our eyes and eares amiſſe?
Vntill I know this ſure uncertaintie,
Ile entertaine the free'd fallacie.
Luc. Dromio, goe bid the ſervants ſpred for dinner.
S. Dro. Oh for my beads, I croſſe me for a ſinner.
This is the fairie land, oh ſpite of ſpights,
We talke with Goblins, Owles and Elves Sprights;
If we obay them not, this will inſue:
They'l ſucke our breath, or pinch us blacke and blew.
Luc. Why prat'ſt thou to thy ſelfe,
Dromio, thou Dromio, ſnaile, thou ſlug, thou ſot.
S. Dro. I am transformed Maſter, am I not?
Ant. I thinke thou art in minde, and ſo am I.
S. Dro. Nay Maſter, both in minde, and in my ſhape
Ant. Thou haſt thine owne forme.
S. Dro. No, I am an Ape.
Luc. If thou art chang'd to ought, 'tis to an Aſſe.
S. Dro. 'Tis true ſhe rides me, and I long for graſſe.
'Tis ſo, I am an Aſſe, elſe it could never be,
But I ſhould know her as well as ſhe knowes me.
Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a foole,
To put the finger in thy eye and weepe;
Whil'ſt man and maſter laughes my woes to ſcorne:
Come ſir to dinner, Dromio keepe the gate:
Husband Ile dine above with you to day,
And ſhrive you of a thouſand idle prankes:
Sirra, if any aske you for your Maſter,
Say he dines forth, and let no creature enter:
Come ſiſter, Dromio play the Porter well.
Ant. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sleeping or waking, mad or well adviſde:
Knowne unto theſe, and to my ſelfe diſguiſde!
Ile ſay as they ſay, and perſever ſo:
And in this miſt at all adventures go.
S. Dro. Maſter, ſhall I be Porter at the gate?
Adr. I, and let none enter, leaſt I breake your pate.
Luci. Come, come, Antipholis, we dine too late.

Actus Tertius. Scœna Prima.

Enter Antipholis of Epheſus, his man Dromio, Angelo the Goldſmith, and Balthazar the Merchant.

E. Ant. Good ſignior Angelo you muſt excuſe us all,
My wife is ſhrewiſh when I keepe not howres;
Say that I lingerd with you at your ſhop
To ſee the making of her Carkanet,
And that to morrow you will bring it home.
But here's a villaine that would face me downe
He met me on the Mart, and that I beat him;
And charg'd him with a thouſand markes in gold,
And that I did denie my wife and houſe;
Thou drunkard thou, what didſt thou meane by this?

E. Dro. Say what you will ſir, but I know what I know,
That you beat me at the Mart I have your hand to ſhow;
If the skin were parchmēt, & ẏ blows you gave were ink,
Your hand-writing would tell you what I thinke.

E. Ant. I thinke thou art an aſſe.

E. Dro. Marry ſo it doth appeare
By the wrongs I ſuffer, and the blowes I beare:
I ſhould kicke being kickt, and being at that paſſe,
You would keepe from my heeles, and beware of an aſſe.

E. An. Y'are ſad ſignior Balthazar, pray God our cheer
May anſwer my good will, and your good welcom here.

Bal. I hold your dainties cheap ſir, & your welcom deer.

E. Ant. Oh ſignior Balthazar, either at fleſh or fiſh.
A table full of welcome, makes ſcarce one daintie diſh.

Bal. Good meat ſir is cōmon that every churle affords.

Ant. And welcome more common, for that's nothing but words.

Bal. Small cheere and great welcome, makes a merrie feaſt.

Ant. I, to a niggardly Hoſt, and more ſparing gueſt:
But though my cates be meane, take them in good part,
Better cheere may you have, but not with better hart.
But ſoft, my doore is lockt; goe bid them let us in.

E. Dro. Maud, Briget, Marian, Ciſly, Gillian, Ginn.

S. Dro. Mome, Malt-horſe, Capon, Coxcombe, Idiot, Patch,
Either get thee from the dore, or ſit downe at the hatch:
Doſt thou conjure for wenches, that ẏ calſt for ſuch ſtore,
When one is one too many, goe get the from the doore.

E. Dro. What patch is made our porter? my Maſter ſtayes in the ſtreet.

S. Dro. Let him walke from whence he came, leſt he catch cold on's feet.

E. Ant. Who talks within there? hoa, open the dore.

S. Dro. Right ſir, Ile tell you when, and you'll tell me wherefore.

Ant. Wherefore? for my dinner: I have not din'd to day.

S. Dro. Nor to day here you muſt not come againe when you may.

Ant. What art thou that keep'ſt mee out from the houſe I owe?

S. Dro. The Porter for this time Sir, and my name is Dromio.

E. Dro. O villaine, thou haſt ſtolne both mine office and my name,
The one ne're got me credit, the other mickle blame:
If thou hadſt bid Dromio to day in my place,
Thou wouldſt have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an aſſe.

Enter Luce.

Luc. What a coile is there Dromio? who are thoſe at the gate?

E. Dro. Let my maſter in Luce.

Luc. Faith no, hee comes too late, and ſo tell your Maſter.

E. Dro. O Lord I muſt laugh, have at you with a Proverbe.
Shall I ſet in my ſtaffe.

Luc. Have at you with another, that's when? can you tell?

S. Dro. If thy name be called Luce, Luce thou haſt anſwer'd him well.

Ant. Doe you heare you minion, you'll let us in I hope?

Luce. I thought to have askt you.

S. Dro. And you ſaid no.

E. Dro. So come helpe, well ſtrooke, there was blow for blow.

Ant. Thou baggage let me in.

Luce. Can you tell for whoſe ſake?

E. Drom. Maſter, knocke the doore hard.

Luc. Let him knocke till it ake.

Ant. You'll crie for this minion, if I beate the doore downe.

Luc. What needs all that, and a paire of ſtocks in the towne?

Enter Adriana.

Adr. Who is that at the doore ẏ keepes all this noiſe?

S. Dro. By my troth your towne is troubled with unruly boyes.

Anti. Are you there Wife? you might have come before.

Adr. Your wife ſir knave? go get you from the dore.

E. Dro. If you went in paine Maſter, this knave wold goe ſore.

Angelo. Heere is neither cheere ſir, nor welcome, we would faine have either.

Baltz. In debating which was beſt, wee ſhall part with neither.

E. Dro. They ſtand at the doore, Maſter, bid them welcome hither.

Ant. There is ſomething in the winde, that we cannot get in.

E. Dro. You would ſay ſo Maſter, if your garments were thin.
Your cake here is warme within: you ſtand heere in the cold.
It would make a man as mad as a Bucke to be ſo bought and ſold.

Ant. Go fetch me ſomething, Ile breake ope the gate.

S. Dro. Breake any breaking here, and Ile breake your knaves pate.

E. Dro. A man may breake a word with you ſir, and words are but winde:
I and breake it in your face, ſo he breake it not behinde.

S. Dro. It ſeemes thou want'ſt breaking, out upon thee hinde.

E. Dro. Heer's too much, out upon thee, I pray thee let me in.

S. Dro. I, when fowles have no feathers and fiſh have no fin.

Ant. Well, Ile breake in: goe borrow me a crow.

E. Dro. A crow without feather, Maſter meane you ſo;

For a fiſh without a fin, ther's a fowle without a feather,
If a crow help us in ſirra, wee'll plucke a crow together.
Ant. Go, get thee gon, fetch me an iron Crow.
Balth. Have patience ſir, oh let it not be ſo,
Heerein you warre againſt your reputation,
And draw within the compaſſe of ſuſpect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife.
Once this your long experience of your wiſedome,
Her ſober vertue, yeares and modeſtie,
Plead on your part ſome cauſe to you unknowne;
And doubt not ſir, but ſhe will well excuſe
Why at this time the dores are made againſt you.
Be rul'd by me, depart in patience,
And let us to the Tyger all to dinner,
And about evening come your ſelfe alone,
To know the reaſon of this ſtrange reſtraint:
If by ſtrong hand you offer to breake in
Now in the ſtirring paſſage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;
And that ſuppoſed by the common rowt
Againſt your yet ungalled eſtimation.
That may with foule intruſion enter in,
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead;
For ſlander lives upon ſucceſſion;
For ever hows'd, where it once gets poſſeſſion.
Ant. You have prevail'd, I will depart in quiet,
And in deſpight of mirth meane to be merrie:
I know a wench of excellent diſcourſe,
Prettie and wittie; wilde, and yet too gentle;
There will we dine: this woman that I meane
My wife (but I proteſt without deſert)
Hath oftentimes upbraided me withall:
To her will we to dinner, get you home
And fetch the chaine, by this I know 'tis made,
Bring it I pray you to the Porpentine,
For there's the houſe: That chaine I will beſtow
(Be it for nothing but to ſpight my wife)
Vpon my hoſteſſe there, good ſir make haſte:
Since mine owne doores refuſe to entertaine me,
Ile knocke elſe-where, to ſee if they'll diſdaine me.
Ang. Ile meet you at that place ſome houre ſir hence.
Ant. Do ſo, this jeſt ſhall coſt me ſome expence.
Exeunt.

Enter Luciana, with Antipholis of Siracuſa.

Iulia. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husbands office? ſhall Antipholis
Even in the ſpring of Love, thy Love-ſprings rot?
Shall love in buildings grow ſo ruinate?
If you did wed my ſiſter for her wealth,
Then for her wealths-ſake uſe her with more kindneſſe:
Or if you like elſe-where, doe it by ſtealth,
Muffle your falſe love with ſome ſhew of blindneſſe:
Let not my ſiſter reade it in your eye:
Be not thy tongue thy owne ſhames Orator:
Looke ſweet, ſpeake faire, become diſloyaltie:
Apparell vice like vertues harbenger:
Beare a faire preſence, though your heart be tainted,
Teach ſinne the carriage of a holy Saint,
Be ſecret falſe: what need ſhe be acquainted?
What ſimple thiefe brags of his owne attaine?
'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her reade it in thy lookes at boord:
Shame hath a baſtard fame, well mannaged,
Ill deeds are doubled with an evill word:
Alas poore women, make us not beleeve
(Being compact of credit) that you love us,
Though others have the arme, ſhew us the ſleeve:
We in your motion turne, and you may move us.
Then gentle brother get you in againe;
Comfort my ſiſter, cheere her, call her wife;
'Tis holy ſport to be a little vaine,
When the ſweet breath of flatterie conquers ſtrife.
S. Ant. Sweet Miſtris: what your name is elſe I know not;
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine:
Leſſe in your knowledge, and your grace you ſhow not,
Then our earths wonder, more then earth divine.
Teach me deere creature how to thinke and ſpeake:
Lay open to my earthy groſſe conceit:
Smothred in errors, feeble, ſhaddow, weake,
The foulded meaning of your words deceit;
Againſt my ſoules pure truth, why labour you,
To make it wander in an unknowne field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transforme me then, and to your powre Ile yeeld.
But if that I am I, then well I know,
Your weeping ſiſter is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed a homage doe I owe:
Farre more, farre more, to you doe I decline:
Oh traine me not ſweet Mermaide with thy note
To drowne me in thy ſiſters floud of teares:
Sing Siren for thy ſelfe, and I will dote:
Spred ore the ſilver waves thy golden haires;
And as a bed Ile take thee, and there lie:
And in that glorious ſuppoſition thinke,
He gaines by death, that hath ſuch meanes to die:
Let Love, being light, be drowned if ſhe ſinke.
Luc. What are you mad, that you do reaſon ſo?
Ant. Not mad, but mated, how I do not know.
Luc. It is a fault that ſpringeth from your eie.
Ant. For gazing on your beames, faire ſun being by.
Luc. Gaze when you ſhould, and that will cleere your ſight.
Aat. As good to winke ſweet love, as looke on night.
Luc. Why call you me love? call my ſiſter ſo.
Ant. Thy ſiſters ſiſter.
Luc. That's my ſiſter.
Dnt. No: it is thy ſelfe, mine owne ſelfes better part:
Mine eies cleere eie, my deere hearts dearer heart,
My foode, my fortune, and my ſweet hopes aime;
My ſole earths heaven, and my heavens claime.
Luc. All this my ſiſter is, or elſe ſhould be.
Ant. Call thy ſelfe ſiſter ſweet, for I am thee:
Thee will I love, and with thee leade my life;
Thou haſt no husband yet, nor I no wife;
Give me thy hand.
Luc. Oh ſoft ſir, hold you ſtill:
Ile fetch my ſiſter to get her good will.

Enter Dromio, Siracuſia.

Ant. Why how now Dromio, where run'ſt thou ſo faſt?
S.Dro. Doe you know me ſir? Am I Dromio? Am I your man? Am I my ſelfe?
Aut. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thy ſelfe.
Dro. I am an aſſe, I am a womans man, and beſides my ſelfe.
Ant. What womans man? and how beſides thy ſelfe?
Dro. Marrie ſir, beſides my ſelfe, I am due to a woman: One that claimes me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. What claime laies ſhe to thee?

Dro. Marry ſir, ſuch claime as you would lay to your horſe, and ſhe would have me as a beaſt; not that I being a beaſt ſhe would have me, but that ſhe being a verie beaſtly creature layes claime to me.

Ant. What is ſhe?

Dro. A very reverent body: I ſuch a one, as a man may not ſpeake of, without he ſay ſir reverence: I have but leane lucke in the match, and yet is ſhe a wondrous fat marriage.

Anti. How doſt thou meane a fat marriage?

Dro. Marry ſir, ſhe's the Kitchin wench, and all greaſe, and I know not what uſe to put her too, but to make a Lampe of her, and run from her by her owne light. I warrant, her ragges and the Tallow in them, will burne a Poland Winter: If ſhe lives till doomeſday, ſhe'l burne a weeke longer then the whole World.

Ant. What complexion is ſhe of?

Dro. Swart like my ſhooe, but her face nothing like ſo cleane kept: for why? ſhe ſweates a man may goe over-ſhooes in the grime of it.

Ant. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. No ſir, 'tis in graine, Noahs flood could not do it.

Ant. What's her name?

Dro. Nell Sir: but her name is three quarters, that's an Ell and three quarters, will not meaſure her from hip to hip.

Ant. Then ſhe beares ſome bredth?

Dro. No longer from head to foot, then from hippe to hippe: ſhe is ſphericall like a globe: I could find out Countries in her.

Ant. In what part of her body ſtands Ireland?

Dro. Marry ſir in her buttockes, I found it out by the bogges.

Ant. Where Scotland?

Dro. I found it by the barrenneſſe, hard in the palme of the hand.

Ant. Where France?

Dro. In her forehead, arm'd and reverted, making warre againſt her haire.

Ant. Where England?

Dro. I look'd for the chalky Cliffes, but I could find no whiteneſſe in them. But I gueſſe, it ſtood in her chin by the ſalt rheume that ranne betweene France, and it.

Ant. Where Spaine?

Dro. Faith I ſaw it not: but I felt it hot in her breath.

Ant. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. Oh ſir, upon her noſe, all ore embelliſhed with Rubies, Carbuncles, Saphires, declining their rich Aſpect to the hot breath of Spaine, who ſent whole Armadoes of Carracts to be ballaſt at her noſe.

Ant. Where ſtood Belgia, the Netherlands?

Dro. Oh ſir, I did not looke ſo low. To conclude, this drudge or Diviner layd claime to mee, call'd mee Dromio, ſwore I was aſſur'd to her, told me what privie markes I had about mee, as the markes of my ſhoulder, the Mole in my necke, the great Wart on my left arme, that I amaz'd ranne from her as a witch. And I thinke, if my breſt had not beene made of faith, and my heart of ſteele, ſhe had transform'd me to a Curtall dog, & made me turne i'th wheele.

Ant. Go hie thee preſently, poſt to the rode,
And if the winde blow any way from ſhore,
I will not harbour in this towne to night.
If any Barke put forth, come to the Mart,
Where I will walke till thou returne to me:
If everie one knowes us, and we know none,
'Tis time I thinke to trudge, packe, and be gone.

Dro. As from a Beare a man would run for life,
So flie I from her that would be my wife. Exit.

Ant. There's none but witches do inhabite heere,
And therefore 'tis hie time that I were hence:
She that doth call me husband, even my ſoule
Doth for a wife abhorre. But her faire ſiſter
Poſſeſt with ſuch a gentle ſoveraigne grace,
Of ſuch inchanting preſence and diſcourſe,
Hath almoſt made me Traitor to my ſelfe:
But leaſt my ſelfe be guilty to ſelfe wrong,
Ile ſtop mine eares againſt the Mermaides ſong.

Enter Angelo with the Chaine.

Ang. M. Antipholis.

Ant. I that's my name,

Ang. I know it well ſir, loe here's the chaine,
I thought to have tane you at the Porpentine,
The chaine unfiniſh'd made me ſtay thus long.

Ant. What is your will that I ſhall do with this?

Ang. What pleaſe your ſelfe ſir: I have made it for you.

Ant. Made it for me ſir! I beſpoke it not.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twentie times you have:
Go home with it, and pleaſe your Wife withall,
And ſoone at ſupper time Ile viſit you,
And then receive my mony for the chaine.

Ant. I pray you ſir receive the monie now,
For feare you ne're ſee chaine, nor mony more.

Ang. You are a merry man ſir, fare you well. Exit.

Dro. What I ſhould thinke of this, I cannot tell:
But this I thinke, there's no man is ſo vaine,
That would refuſe ſo faire an offer'd Chaine.
I ſee a man heere needs not live by ſhifts,
When in the ſtreets he meetes ſuch Golden gifts:
Ile to the Mart, and there for Dromio ſtay,
If any ſhip put out, then ſtrait away. Exit.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter a Merchant, Goldſmith, and an Officer.

Mer. You know ſince Pentecoſt the ſum is due,
And ſince I have not much importun'd you,
Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
To Perſia, and want Gilders for my voyage:
Therefore make preſent ſatisfaction,
Or Ile attach you by this Officer.

Gold. Even juſt the ſum that I do owe to you,
Is growing to me by Antipholis,
And in the inſtant that I met with you,
He had of me a Chaine: at five a clocke
I ſhall receive the money for the ſame:
Pleaſeth you walke with me downe to his houſe,
I will diſcharge my bond, and thanke yoo too.

Enter Antipholis Epheſ. Dromio from the Courtizans.

Offi. That labour may you ſave: See where he comes.

Ant. While I go to the Goldſmiths houſe, goe thou

And buy a ropes end, that will I beſtow
Among my wife, and their confederates,
For locking me out of my doores by day:
But ſoft I ſee the Goldſmith; get thee gone,
Buy thou a rope and bring it home to me.
Dro. I buy a thouſand pound a yeare, I buy a rope.
Exit Dromio
Eph. Ant. A man is well holpe up that truſts to you,
I promiſed your preſence, and the Chaine,
But neither Chaine nor Goldſmith came to me:
Belike you thought our love would laſt too long
If it were chain'd together: and therefore came not.
Gold. Saving your merry humor, here's the note
How much your Chaine weighs to the utmoſt Raccat,
The fineneſſe of the Gold, and chargefull faſhion,
Which doth amount to three odde Duckets more
Then I ſtand debted to this Gentleman,
I pray you ſee him preſently diſcharg'd,
For he is bound to Sea, and ſtayes but for it.
Anti. I am not furniſh'd with the preſent mony:
Beſides I have ſome buſineſſe in the towne,
Good Signior take the ſtranger to my houſe,
And with you take the Chaine, and bid my wife
Diſburſe the ſumme, on the receit thereof,
Perchance I will be there as ſoone as you.
Gold. Then you will bring the Chaine to her your ſelfe.
Ant. No beare it with you, leaſt I come not time enough.
Gold. Well ſir, I will? Have you the Chaine about you?
Ant. And if I have not ſir, I hope you have:
Or elſe you may returne without your money.
Gold. Nay come I pray you ſir, give me the Chaine:
Both winde and tide ſtayes for the Gentleman,
And I too blame have held him here too long.
Ant. Good Lord, you uſe this dalliance to excuſe
Your breach of promiſe to the Porpentine,
I ſhould have chid you for not bringing it,
But like a ſhrew you firſt begin to brawle.
Mer. The houre ſteales on, I pray you ſir diſpatch.
Gold. You heare how he importunes me, the Chaine:
Ant. Why give it to my wife, and fetch your mony.
Gold. Come, come, you know I gave it you even now.
Either ſend the Chaine, or ſend me by ſome token.
Ant. Fie, now you run this humor out of breath,
Come where's the Chaine, I pray you let me ſee it.
Mer. My buſineſſe cannot brooke this dalliance,
Good ſir ſay, whe'r you'l anſwer me, or no:
If not, Ile leave him to the Officer.
Ant. I anſwer you? Why ſhould I anſwer you?
Gold. The monie that you owe me for the Chaine.
Ant. I owe you none till I receive the Chaine.
Gold. You know I gave it you halfe an houre ſince.
Ant. You gave me none, you wrong mee much to ſay ſo.
Gold. You wrong me ſir in denying it:
Conſider how it ſtands upon my credit.
Mar. Well Officer, arreſt him at my ſuite.
Off. I doe, and charge you in the Dukes name to obey me.
Gold. This touches me in reputation.
Either conſent to pay the ſum for me,
Or I attach you by this Officer.
Ant. Conſent to pay that I never had:
Arreſt me fooliſh fellow if thou dar'ſt.
Gold. Heere is thy fee, arreſt him, Officer.
I would not ſpare my brother in this caſe,
If he ſhould ſcorne me ſo apparantly.
Offi. I do arreſt you ſir, you heare the ſuite.
Ant. I do obey thee, till I give thee baile.
But ſirrah you ſhall buy this ſport as deere,
As all the mettall in your ſhop will anſwer.
Gold. Sir, ſir, I ſhall have Law in Epheſus,
To your notorious ſhame, I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio Sira. from the Bay.

Dro. Maſter, there's a Barke of Epidamium,
That ſtayes but till her Owner comes aboord,
Then ſir ſhe beares away. Our fraughtage ſir,
I have convei'd aboord, and I haue brought
The Oyle, the Balſamum, and Aqua-vitæ.
The ſhip is in her trim, the merrie winde
Blowes faire from land: they ſtay for nought at all,
But for their Owner, Maſter, and your ſelfe.
An. How now! a Madman! Why thou peeviſh ſheep
What ſhip of Epidamium ſtayes for me?
S. Dro. A ſhip you ſent me to, to hier waftage.
Ant. Thou drunken ſlave, I ſent thee for a rope,
And told thee to what purpoſe and what end.
S. Dro. You ſent me for a ropes end as ſoone,
You ſent me to the Bay ſir, for a Barke.
Ant. I will debate this matter at more leiſure
And teach your eares to liſt me with more heed:
To Adriana Villaine hie thee ſtraight:
Give her this key, and tell her in the Deske
That's cover'd o're with Turkiſh Tapiſtrie,
There is a purſe of Duckets, let her ſend it:
Tell her, I am arreſted in the ſtreete,
And that ſhall baile me: hie thee ſlave, be gone,
On Officer to priſon, till it come. Exeunt.
S. Dro. To Adriana, that is where we din'd,
Where Dowſabell did claime me for her husband,
She is too bigge I hope for me to compaſſe,
Thither I muſt, although againſt my will:
For ſervants muſt their Maſters mindes fulfill. Exit.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah Luciana, did he tempt thee ſo,
Might'ſt thou perceive auſteerely in his eye,
That he did plead in earneſt, yea or no:
Look'd he or red or pale, or ſad or merrily?
What obſervation mad'ſt th[illegible] in this caſe?
Of his hearts Meteors tilting in his face?
Luc. Firſt he denide you had in him no right.
Adr. He meant he did me none: the more my ſpight.
Luc. Then ſwore he that he was a ſtranger heere.
Adr. And true he ſwore, though yet forſworne he were.
Luc. Then pleaded I for you.
Adr. And what ſaid he?
Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.
Adr. With what perſwaſion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words, that in an honeſt ſuit might move.
Firſt, he did prayſe my beautie, then my ſpeech.
Adr. Did'ſt ſpeake him faire?
Luc. Have patience I beſeech.
Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me ſtill,
My tongue, though not my heart, ſhall have his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old and ſere,
Ill-fac'd, worſe bodied, ſhapeleſſe every where:
Vicious, ungentle, fooliſh, blunt, unkinde,

Stigmaticall in making worſe the minde.

Luc. Who would be jealous then of ſuch a one?
No evill loſt is wail'd, when it is gone.

Adr. Ah but I thinke him better then I ſay:
And yet would herein others eyes were worſe:
Farre from her neſt the Lapwing cries away;
My heart prayes for him, though my tongue doe curſe.

Enter S. Dromio.

Dro. Here, goe: the deske, the purſe, ſweet now make haſte.

Luc. How haſt thou loſt thy breath?

S. Dro. By running faſt.

Adr. Where is thy Maſter Dromio? Is he well?

S. Dro. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worſe then hell:
A divell in an everlaſting garment hath him;
One whoſe hard heart is button'd up with ſteele:
A Feind, a Fairie, pittileſſe and ruffe:
A Wolfe, nay worſe, a fellow all in buffe,
A backfriend, a ſhoulder-clapper, one that countermãds
The paſſages of allies, creekes, and narrow lands:
A hound that runs Counter, and yet draws drifoot well,
One that before the Iudgmẽt carries poore ſoules to hel.

Adr. Why man, what is the matter?

S. Dro. I doe not know the matter, he is reſted on the caſe.

Adr. What is he arreſted? tell me at whoſe ſuite?

S. Dro. I know not at whoſe ſuite he is arreſted, well; but is in a ſuite of buffe which reſted him, that can I tell: Will you ſend him Miſtris redemption, the monie in his deske?

Adr. Go fetch it Siſter: this I wonder at.

Exit Luciana.

That he vnknowne to me ſhould be in debt:
Tell me, was he areſted on a band?

S. Dro. Not on a band, but on a ſtronger thing:
A chaine, a chaine, doe you not here it ring?

Adria. What, the chaine?

S. Dro. No, no, the bell, 'tis time that I were gone:
It was two ere I left him, and now the clocke ſtrikes one.

Adr. The houres come backe! that did I never heare.

S. Dro. Oh yes, if any houre meete a Serjeant, a turnes backe for very feare.

Adri. As if time were in debt: how fondly do'ſt thou reaſon?

S. Dro. Time is a very bankrout, and owes more then he's worth to ſeaſon.
Nay, he's a theefe too: have you not heard men ſay,
That time comes ſtealing on by night and day?
If I be in debt and theft, and a Serjeant in the way,
Hath he not reaſon to turne backe an houre in a day?

Enter Luciana.

Adr. Go Dromio, there's the mony, beare it ſtraight,
And bring thy Maſter home immediately.
Come ſiſter, I am preſt downe with conceit:
Conceit, my comfort and my injurie. Exit.

Enter Antipholis Siracuſia.

An. S. There's not a man I meete but doth ſalute me
As if I were their well acquainted friend,
And everie one doth call me by my name:
Some tender monie to me, ſome invite me;
Some other give me thankes for kindneſſes;
Some offer me Commodities to buy.
Even now a tailor cal'd me in his ſhop,
And ſhow'd me Silkes that he had bought for me,
And therewithall tooke meaſure of my body.
Sure theſe are but imaginarie wiles,
And Lapland Sorcerers inhabite here.

Enter Dromio. Sir.

S. Dro. Maſter, here's the gold you ſent me for: what have you got the picture of old Adam new apparel'd?

Ant. What gold is this? What Adam do'ſt thou meane?

S. Dro. Not that Adam that kept the Paradiſe: but that Adam that keepes the priſon; hee that goes in the calves-skin, that was kil'd for the Prodigall: hee that came behinde you ſir, like an evill angel, and bid you forſake your liberty.

Ant. I underſtand thee not.

S. Dro. No? why 'tis a plaine caſe: he that went like a Baſe Viole in a caſe of leather; the man ſir, that when gentlemen are tired gives them a ſob, and reſts them: he ſir, that takes pitty on decaied men, and gives them ſuites of durance: he that ſets up his reſt to doe more exploits with his Mace, then a Moris Pike.

Ant. What! thou mean'ſt an officer?

S. Dro. I ſir, the Serjeant of the Band: he that brings any man to anſwer it that breakes his Band: one that thinkes a man alwayes going to bed, and ſaieth, God give you good reſt.

Ant. Well ſir, there reſt in your foolerie:
Is there any ſhip puts forth to night? may we be gone?

S. Dro. Why ſir, I brought you word an houre ſince, that the Barke Expedition put forth to night, and then were you hindred by the Serjeant to tarry for the Hoy Delay: Here are the angels that you ſent for to deliver you.

Ant. The fellow is diſtract and ſo am I,
And here we wander in illuſions:
Some bleſſed power deliver us from hence.

Enter a Curtizan.

Cur. Well met, well met, Maſter Antipholis:
I ſee ſir you have found the Gold-ſmith now:
Is that the chaine you promis'd me to day?

Ant. Sathan avoide, I charge thee tempt me not.

S. Dro. Maſter, is this Miſtris Sathan?

Ant. It is the divell.

S. Dro. Nay, ſhe is worſe, ſhe is the divels dam: And here ſhe comes in the habit of a light wench, and thereof comes that the wenches ſay God dam me, That's as much to ſay, God make me a light wench: It is written, they appeare to men like angels of light, light is an effect of fire, and fire will burne: ergo, light wenches will burne, come not neere her.

Cur. Your man and you are marveilous merry ſir.
Will you goe with me, wee'll mend our dinner here?

S. Dro. Maſter, if you doe, expect ſpoon-meate, or beſpeake a long ſpoone.

Ant. Why Dromio?

S. Dro. Marrie he muſt have a long ſpoone that muſt eate with the divell.

Ant. Avoid then fiend, what tel'ſt thou me of ſupping?
Thou art, (as you are all) a ſorcereſſe:
I conjure thee to leave me, and be gon.

Cur. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,
Or for my Diamond the chaine you promis'd,
And Ile be gone ſir, and not trouble you.

S. Dro. Some divels aske but the parings of ones naile, a ruſh, a haire, a drop of blood, a pin, a nut, a cherrie-ſtone: but ſhe more covetous, would have a chaine: Maſter be wiſe, and if you give it her, the divell will ſhak her Chaine, and fright us with it.

Cur. I pray you ſir my Ring, or elſe the Chaine,
I hope you do not meane to cheate me ſo?

Ant. Auant thou witch: Come Dromio let us go.

S. Dro. Flie pride ſayes the Pea-cocke, Miſtris that you know. Exeunt.

Cur. Now out of doubt Antipholis is mad,
Elſe would he never ſo demeane himſelfe,
A Ring he hath of mine worth fortie Duckets,
And for the ſame he promis'd me a Chaine,
Both one and other he denies me now:
The reaſon that I gather he is mad,
(Beſides this preſent inſtance of his rage,)
Is a mad tale he told to day at dinner,
Of his owne doores being ſhut againſt his entrance,
Belike his wife acquainted with his fits,
On purpoſe ſhut the doores againſt his way.
My way is now to hie home to his houſe,
And tell his wife that being Lunaticke,
He ruſh'd into my houſe, and tooke perforce
My Ring away. This courſe I fitteſt chooſe,
For fortie Duckets is too much to looſe. Exit.

Enter Antipholus Epheſ. with a Iailor.

An. Feare me not man, I will not breake away,
Ile give thee ere I leave thee ſo much mony
To warrant thee as I am reſted for.
My wife is in a wayward moode to day,
And will not lightly truſt the Meſſenger,
That I ſhould be attach'd in Epheſus,
I tell you 'twill ſound harſhly in her eares.

Enter Dromio Eph. with a ropes end.

Heere comes my Man, I thinke he brings the monie.
How now ſir? Have you that I ſent you for?

E. Dro. Here's that I warrant you will pay them all.

Anti. But where's the Money?

E. Dro. Why ſir, I gave the Monie for the Rope.

Ant. Five hundred Duckets villaine for a rope?

E. Dro. Ile ſerve you ſir five hundred at the rate.

Ant. To what end did I bid thee high thee home?

E. Dro. To a ropes end ſir, and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. And to that end ſir, I will welcome you.

Offi. Good ſir be patient.

E. Dro. Nay 'tis for me to be patient, I am in adverſitie.

Offi. Good now hold thy tongue.

E. Dro. Nay, rather perſwade him to hold his hands.

Anti. Thou whoreſon ſenſeleſſe Villaine.

E. Dro. I would I were ſenſeleſſe ſir, that I might not feele your blowes.

Anti. Thou art ſenſible in nothing but blowes, and ſo is an Aſſe.

E. Dro. I am an Aſſe indeede, you may proove it by my long eares. I have ſerved him from the houre of my Nativitie to this inſtant, and have nothing at his hands for my ſervice but blowes. When I am cold, he heates me with beating: when I am warme, he cooles me with beating: I am wak'd with it when I ſleepe, rais'd with it when I ſit, driven out of doores with it when I goe from home, welcom'd home with it when I returne, nay I beare it on my ſhoulders, as a begger woont her brat and I thinke when he hath lam'd me, I ſhall begge with it from doore to doore.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtizan, and a Schoole-maſter, called Pinch.

Ant. Come goe along, my wife is comming yonder.

E. Dro. Miſtris reſpice finem, reſpect your end, or rather the propheſie like the Parrot, beware the ropes end.

Anti. Wilt thou ſtill talke? Beats Dro.

Cur. How ſay you now? Is not your husband mad?

Adri. His incivility confirmes no leſſe:
Good Doctor Pinch, you are a Conjurer,
Eſtabliſh him in his true ſence againe,
And I will pleaſe you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas how fiery and how ſharpe he lookes,

Cur. Marke, how he trembles in his extaſie.

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let mee feele your pulſe.

Ant. There is my hand, and let it feele your eare.

Pinch. I charge thee Sathan, hous'd within this man
To yeeld poſſeſſion to my holie praiers,
And to thy ſtate of darkeneſſe hie thee ſtraight,
I conjure thee by all the Saints in heaven.

Ant. Peace doting wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Adr. Oh that thou wer't not, poore diſtreſſed ſoule.

Ant. You Minion you, are theſe your Cuſtomers?
Did this companion with the ſaffron face
Revell and feaſt it at my houſe to day,
Whil'ſt upon me the guiltie doores were ſhut,
And I denied to enter in my houſe.

Adr. O husband, God doth know you din'd at home
Where would you had remaind untill this time,
Free from theſe ſlanders, and this open ſhame.

Ant. Din'd at home? Thou Villaine, what ſayeſt thou?

Dro. Sir ſooth to ſay, you did not dine at home.

Ant. Were not my doores lockt up, and I ſhut out?

Dro. Perdie, your doores were lockt, and you ſhut out.

Anti: And did not ſhe her ſelfe revile me there?

Dro. Sans Fable, ſhe her ſelfe revil'd you there.

Ant. Did not her Kitchen maide raile, taunt, and ſcorne me?

Dro. Certis ſhe did, the kitchin veſtall ſcorn'd you:

Ant. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. In veritie you did, my bones beare witneſſe,
That ſince have felt the vigor of his rage.

Adr. Is't good to ſmooth him in theſe contraries?

Pinch. It is no ſhame, the fellow finds his veine,
And yeelding to him, humors well his frenſie,

Ant. Thou haſt ſubornd the Goldſmith to arreſt me.

Adr. Alas, I ſent you Monie to redeeme you,
By Dromio heere, who came in haſt for it.

Dro. Monie by me? Heart and good will you might,
But ſurely Maſter not a ragge of Monie.

Ant. Wentſt not thou to her for a purſe of Duckets?

Adri. He came to me and I deliver'd it.

Luci. And I am witneſſe with her that ſhe did:

Dro. God and the Rope-maker beare me witneſſe,
That I was ſent for nothing but a rope.

Pinch. Miſtris, both Man and Maſter is poſſeſt,
I know it by their pale and deadly lookes.

They muſt be bound and laide in ſome darke roome.
Ant. Say wherefore didſt thou locke me forth to day,
And why doſt thou denie the bagge of gold?
Adr. I did not gentle husband locke thee forth.
Dro. And gentle M. I receiv'd no gold:
But I confeſſe ſir, that we were lock'd out.
Adr. Diſſembling Villain, thou ſpeak'ſt falſe in both.
Ant. Diſſembling harlot, thou art falſe in all,
And are confederate with a damned packe,
To make a loathſome abject ſcorne of me:
But with theſe nailes Ile plucke out theſe falſe eyes,
That would behold in me this ſhamefull ſport.

Enter three or foure, and offer to binde him:
He ſtrives.

Adr. Oh binde him, binde him, let him not come neere me.
Pinch. More company, the fiend is ſtrong within him.
Luc. Aye me poore man, how pale and wan he looks.
Ant. What, will you murther me, thou Iailor thou?
I am thy priſoner, wilt thou ſuffer them to make a reſcue?
Off. Maſters let him goe: he is my priſoner, and you ſhall not have him.
Pinch. Go binde this man, for he is franticke too.
Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peeviſh officer?
Haſt thou delight to ſee a wretched man
Do outrage and diſpleaſure to himſelfe?
Off. He is my priſoner, if I let him go,
The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.
Adr. I will diſcharge thee ere I goe from thee,
Beare me forthwith unto his Creditor,
And knowing how the debt growes I will pay it.
Good Maſter Doctor ſee him ſafe convey'd
Home to my houſe, oh moſt unhappy day.
Ant. Oh moſt unhappy ſtrumpet.
Dro. Maſter, I am heere entred in bond for you.
Ant. Out on thee Villaine wherefore doſt thou mad mee?
Dro. Will you be bound for nothing, be mad good maſter, cry the divell.
Luc. God helpe poore ſoules, how idlely doe they talke.
Adr. Goe beare him hence, ſiſter go you with me:
Say now, whoſe ſuite is he arreſted at?
Exeunt. Manet Offic. Adri. Luci. Courtizan.
Off. One Angelo a Goldſmith, do you know him?
Adr. I know the man: what is the ſumme he owes?
Off. Two hundred Duckets.
Adr. Say, how growes it due.
Off. Due for a Chaine your husband had of him.
Adr. He did beſpeake a chaine for me, but had it not.
Cour. When as your husband all in rage to day
Came to my houſe, and tooke away my Ring,
The Ring I ſaw upon his finger now,
Straight after did I meete him with a Chaine,
Adr. It may be ſo, but I did never ſee it.
Come Iailor, bring me where the Goldſmith is,
I long to know the truth heereof at large.

Enter Antipholis Siracuſian with his Rapier drawne, and Dromio Sirac.

Luc. God for thy mercy, they are looſe againe.
Adr. And come with naked ſwords,
Let's call more helpe to have them bound againe.
Runne all out.
Off. Away, they'l kill us
Exeunt omnes, as faſt as may be, frighted.
S. Ant. I ſee theſe Witches are affraid of ſwords.
S. Dro. She that would be your wife, now ran from you.
Ant. Come to the Centaure, fetch our ſtuffe from thence:
I long that we were ſafe and ſound aboord.
Dro. Faith ſtay heere this night, they will ſurely do us no harme: you ſaw they ſpake us faire, give us gold: me thinkes they are ſuch a gentle Nation, that but for the Mountaine of mad fleſh that claimes mariage of me, I could finde in my heart to ſtay heere ſtill, and turne Witch.
Ant. I will not ſtay to night for all the towne,
Therefore away, to get our ſtuffe aboord. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the Merchant and the Goldſmith.

Gold. I am ſorry Sir that I have hindred you,
But I proteſt he had the Chaine of me,
Though moſt diſhoneſtly he did denie it.
Mer. How is the man eſteeem'd heere in the Citie?
Gold. Of very reverent reputation ſir,
Of credit infinite, highly belov'd.
Second to none that lives here in the Citie:
His word might beare my wealth at any time.
Mer. Speake ſoftly, yonder as I thinke he walkes.

Enter Antipholis and Dromio againe.

Gold. 'Tis ſo: and that ſelfe chaine about his necke,
Which he forſwore (moſt monſtrouſly) to have.
Good ſir draw neere to me, Ile ſpeake to him:
Signior Antipholis, I wonder much
That you would put me to this ſhame and trouble,
And not without ſome ſcandall to your ſelfe,
With circumſtance and oathes, ſo to denie
This chaine, which now you weare ſo openly.
Beſide the charge, the ſhame, impriſonment,
You have done wrong to this my honeſt friend,
Who but for ſtaying on our Controverſie,
Had hoiſted ſaile, and put to ſea to day:
This chaine you had of me, can you denie it?
Ant. I thinke I had, I never did deny it.
Mer. Yes that you did ſir, and forſwore it too.
Ant. Who heard me to denie it or forſweare it?
Mer. Theſe eares of mine thou knowſt did hear thee:
Fie on thee wretch, 'tis pitty that thou liv'ſt
To walke where any honeſt men reſort.
Ant. Thou art a Villaine to impeach me thus,
Ile prove mine honor, and mine honeſty
Againſt thee preſently, if thou dar'ſt ſtand:
Mer. I dare and do defie thee for a villaine.

They draw. Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezan, & others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not for God ſake, he is mad,
Some get within him, take his ſword away:
Binde Dromio too, and beare them to my houſe.
S. Dro. Runne maſter run, for Gods ſake take a houſe,
This is ſome Priorie, in, or we are ſpoyl'd.
Exeunt to the Priorie.

Enter Lady Abbeſſe.

Abb. Be quiet people, wherefore throng you hither?
Adr. To fetch my poore diſtracted husband hence,
Let us come in, that we may binde him faſt,
And beare him home for his recovery.
Gold. I knew he was not in his perfect wits.
Mer. I am ſorry now that I did draw on him.
Ab. How long hath this poſſeſſion held the man?
Adr. This weeke he hath beene heavy, ſower, ſad,
And much much different from the man he was:
But till this afternoone his paſſion
Ne're brake into extremity of rage.
Ab. Hath he not loſt much wealth by wracke at Sea,
Buried ſome deare friend, hath not elſe his eye
Strai'd his affection in unlawfull love,
A ſinne prevailing much in youthfull men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.
Which of theſe ſorrowes is he ſubject too?
Adr. To none of theſe except it be the laſt,
Namely, ſome love that drew him oft from home.
Ab. You ſhould for that have reprehended him.
Ad. Why ſo I did.
Ab. I, but not rough enough.
Ad. As roughly as my modeſty would let me.
Ab. Haply in private.
Ad. And in aſſemblies too.
Ab. I, but not enough.
Ad. It was the copie of our conference.
In bed he ſlept not for my urging it,
At boord he fed not for my urging it:
Alone, it was the ſubject of my Theame:
In company I often glanced it:
Still did I tell him, it was vilde and bad.
Ab. And thereof came it that the man was mad.
The venome clamours of a jealous woman,
Poyſons more deadly then a mad dogs tooth.
It ſeemes his ſleepes were hindred by thy rayling,
And thereof comes it that his head is light.
Thou ſai'ſt his meate was ſawc'd with thy upbraidings,
Vnquiet meales makes ill diſgeſtions,
Thereof the raging fire of feaver bred,
And what's a Feaver but a fit of Madneſſe?
Thy ſayeſt his ſports were hindred by thy brawles:
Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth enſue
But muddy and dull melancholly,
Kinſman to grim and comfortleſſe deſpaire,
And at her heeles a huge infectious troope
Of pale diſtemperatures, and foes to life?
In food, in ſport, and life-preſerving reſt
To be diſturb'd, would mad or man or beaſt:
The conſequence is then, thy jealous fits
Have ſcar'd thy husband from the uſe of wits.
Luc. She never reprehended him but mildely,
When he demean'd himſelfe rough, rude, and wildely.
Why beare you theſe rebukes, and anſwer not?
Ad. She did betray me to my owne reproofe,
Good people enter and lay hold on him.
Ab. No, not a creature enters in my houſe.
Ad. Then let your ſervants bring my husband forth.
Ab. Neither: he tooke this place for ſanctuary,
And it ſhall priviledge him from your hands,
Till I have brought him to his wits againe,
Or loſe my labour in aſſaying it.
Ad. I will attend my husband, be his nurſe,
Diet his ſickneſſe, for it is my Office,
And will have no Atturney but my ſelfe,
And therefore let me have him home with me.
Ab. Be patient, for I will not let him ſtirre,
Till I have us'd the approved meanes I have,
With wholſome ſirrups, drugges, and holy prayers
To make of him a formall man againe:
It is a branch and parcell of mine oath,
A charitable dutie of my order,
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.
Ad. I will not hence, and leave my husband heere:
And ill it doth beſeeme your holineſſe
To ſeparate the husband and the wife.
Ab. Be quiet and depart, thou ſhalt not have him.
Luc. Complaine unto the Duke of this indignity.
Ad. Come goe, I will fall proſtrate at his feet,
And never riſe untill my teares and prayers
Have won his Grace to come in perſon hither,
And take perforce my husband from the Abbeſſe. Exeunt.

Enter Merchant and Goldſmith.

Mer. By this I thinke the Dyall points at five:
Anon I'me ſure the Duke himſelfe in perſon
Comes this way to the Melancholly vale;
The place of depth, and ſorry execution,
Behinde the ditches of the Abbey here.
Gold. Vpon what cauſe?
Mer. To ſee a reverent Siracuſian Merchant,
Who put unluckily into this Bay
Againſt the Lawes and Statutes of this Towne,
Beheaded publikely for his offence.
Gold. See where they come, we will behold his death.

Enter Adriana and Lucio.

Luc. Kneele to the Duke before he paſſe the Abbey.

Enter the Duke of Epheſus, and the Merchant of Siracuſe, bareheaded, with the Headſ-man, and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once againe proclaime it publikely,
If any friend will pay the ſumme for him,
He ſhall not die, ſo much we tender him.

Enter Adriana.

Adr. Iuſtice moſt ſacred Duke againſt the Abbeſſe.
Duke. She is a vertuous and a reverend Lady,
It cannot be that ſhe hath done thee wrong.
Ad. May it pleaſe your Grace, Antipholis my husband.
Whom I made Lord of me, and all I had,
(At your impotent Letters) this ill day,
A moſt outragious fit of madneſſe tooke him,
That deſp'rately he hurried through the ſtreet,
With him his bondman, all as mad as he,
Doing diſpleaſure to the Citizens,
By ruſhing in their houſes: bearing thence
Rings, Iewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound, and ſent him home,
Whil'ſt to take order for the wrongs I went,
That here and there his fury had committed.
Anon, I wot not, by what ſtrong eſcape
He broke from thoſe that had the guard of him,
And with his mad attendant and himſelfe,
Each one with irefull paſſion, with drawne Swords
Met us againe, and madly bent on us,
Chac'd us away: till raiſing of more aide,
We came againe to binde them: then they fled
Into this Abbey, whither we purſu'd them,
And here the Abbeſſe ſhuts the gates on us,
And will not ſuffer us to fetch him out,
Nor ſend him forth, that we may beare him hence.

Therefore moſt gracious Duke with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for helpe.
Duke. Long ſince thy husband ſerv'd me in my Warres,
And I to thee ingag'd a Princes word,
When thou didſt make him maſter of thy bed,
To doe him all the grace and good I could.
Goe ſome of you knocke at the Abbey gate,
And bid the Lady Abbeſſe come to me:
I will determine this before I ſtirre.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. O Miſtriſſe, Miſtris, ſhift and ſave your ſelfe,
My Maſter and his man are both broke looſe,
Beaten the Maides a-row, and bound the Doctor,
Whoſe beard they have ſindg'd off with brands of fire,
And ever as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pailes of pudled myre to quench the haire;
My M^{r}. preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with Sciſſors nickes him like a foole:
And ſure (unleſſe you ſend ſome other preſent helpe)
Betweene them they will kill the Conjurer.
Ad. Peace foole, thy Maſter and his man are here,
And that is falſe thou doſt report of us.
Meß. Miſtris, upon my life I tell you true,
I have not breath'd almoſt ſince I did ſee it.
He cryes for you, and vowes if he can take you,
To ſcorch your face, and to disfigure you:

Cry within.

Harke, harke, I heare him Miſtris: flie, be gone.
Duke. Come, ſtand by me, feare nothing: guard with Halberds.
Ad. Ay me, it is my husband: witneſſe you,
That he is borne about inviſible,
Even now we houſ'd him in the Abbey here,
And now hee's there, paſt thought of humane reaſon.

Enter Antipholis, and E. Dromio of Epheſus.

E.Ant. Iuſtice moſt gracious Duke, oh grant me Iuſtice,
Even for the ſervice that long ſince I did thee,
When I beſtrid thee in the warres, and tooke
Deepe skarres to ſave thy life; even for the blood
That then I loſt for thee, now grant me Iuſtice.
Mer.Fat. Vnleſſe the feare of death doth make mee dote, I ſee my ſonne Antipholis and Dromio.
E.Ant. Iuſtice (ſweet Prince) againſt that woman (there:
She whom thou gav'ſt to me to be my wife;
That hath abuſed and diſhonoured me,
Even in the ſtrength and height of injury:
Beyond imagination is the wrong
That ſhe this day hath ſhameleſſe throwne on me.
Duke. Diſcover how, and thou ſhalt finde me juſt.
E.2Ant. This day (great Duke) ſhe ſhut the doores upon me.
Whilſt ſhe with Harlots feaſted in my houſe.
Duke. A grievous fault: ſay woman didſt thou ſo?
Ad. No, my good Lord. My ſelfe, he, and my Siſter,
To day did dine together: ſo befall my ſoule,
As this is falſe he burthens me withall.
Luc. Ne're may I looke on day, nor ſleepe on night,
But ſhe tels to your Highneſſe ſimple truth.
Gold. O perjur'd woman! They are both forſworne,
In this the Mad man juſtly chargeth them.
E.Ant. My Liege, I am adviſed what I ſay,
Neither diſturbed with the effect of Wine,
Nor heady-raſh provok'd with raging ire,
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiſer mad.
This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner;
That Goldſmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could witneſſe it: for he was with me then,
Who parted with me to goe fetch a Chaine,
Promiſing to bring it to the Porpentine,
Where Balthaſar and I did dine together.
Our dinner done, and he not comming thither,
I went to ſeeke him. In the ſtreet I met him,
And in his company that Gentleman.
There did this perjur'd Goldſmith ſweare me downe,
That I this day from him receiv'd the Chaine,
Which God he knowes, I ſaw not. For the which,
He did arreſt me with an Officer.
I did obey, and ſent my Peſant home
For certaine Duckets: he with none return'd.
Then fairely I beſpoke the Officer
To goe in perſon with me to my houſe.
By'th'way, we met my wife, her ſiſter, and a rabble more
Of vilde Confederates: Along with them
They brought one Pinch, a hungry leane-fac'd Villaine;
A meere Anatomy, a Mountebanke,
A thred-bare Iugler, and a Fortune-teller,
A needy-hollow-ey'd-ſharpe-looking-wretch;
A living dead man. This pernicious ſlave,
Forſooth tooke on him as a Conjurer:
And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulſe,
And with no-face (as t'were) out-facing me,
Cryes out, I was poſſeſt. Then altogether
They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a darke and dankiſh vault at home
There left me and my man, both bound together,
Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds aſunder,
I gain'd my freedome; and immediately
Ran hither to your Grace, whom I beſeech
To give me ample ſatisfaction
For theſe deepe ſhames, and great indignities.
Gold. My Lord, in truth, thus farre I witneſſe with him:
That he din'd not at home, but was lock'd out.
Duke. But had he ſuch a Chaine of thee, or no?
Gold. He had my Lord, and when he ran in here,
Theſe people ſaw the Chaine about his necke.
Mer. Beſides, I will be ſworne theſe eares of mine,
Heard you confeſſe you had the Chaine of him,
After you firſt forſwore it on the Mart,
And thereupon I drew my ſword on you:
And then you fled into this Abbey here,
From whence I thinke you are come by miracle.
E.Ant. I never came within theſe Abbey wals,
Nor ever didſt thou draw thy ſword on me:
I never ſaw the Chaine, ſo helpe me heaven:
And this is falſe you burthen me withall.
Duke. Why what an intricate impeach is this?
I thinke you all have drunke of Circes Cup:
If here you hous'd him, here he would have been.
If he were mad he would not pleade ſo coldly:
You ſay he din'd at home, the Goldſmith here
Denies that ſaying. Sirra, what ſay you?
E.Dro. Sir hee din'd with her there, at the Porpentine.
Cur. He did, and from my finger ſnatcht that Ring.
E.Ant. Tis true (my Liege) this Ring I had of her.
Duke. Saw'ſt thou him enter at the Abbey heere?
Curt. As ſure (my Leige) as I doe ſee your Grace.
Duke. Why this is ſtrange: Goe call the Abbeſſe hither.
I thinke you are all mated, or ſtarke made.

Exit one to the Abbeſſe.

Fa. Moſt mighty Duke, vouchſafe me ſpeake a word:
Haply I ſee a friend will ſave my life,
And pay the ſumme that may deliver me.
Duke. Speake freely Syracuſan what thou wilt.
Fath. Is not your name ſir call'd Antipholis?
And is not that your bondman Dromio?
E.Dro. Within this houre I was his bondman ſir,
But he I thanke him gnaw'd in two my cords,
Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.
Fath. I am ſure both of you remember me.
Dro. Our ſelves we doe remember ſir by you:
For lately we were bound as you are now.
You are not Pinches Patient, are you ſir?
Father. Why looke you ſtrange on me? you know me well.
E, Ant. I never ſaw you in my life till now.
Fa. Oh! griefe hath chang'd me ſince you ſaw me laſt,
And carefull houres with times deformed hand,
Have written ſtrange defeatures in my face:
But tell me yet, doſt thou not know my voyce?
Ant. Neither.
Fat. Dromio, nor thou.
Dro. No truſt me ſir, nor I.
Fat. I am ſure thou doſt?
E.Dromio. I ſir, but I am ſure I doe not, and whatſoever a man denies, you are now bound to beleeve him.
Fat. Not know my voyce! oh times extremity,
Haſt thou ſo crack'd and ſplitted my poore tongue
In ſeven ſhort yeares, that here my onely ſonne
Knowes not my feeble key of untun'd cares?
Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In ſap-conſuming Winters drizled ſnow,
And all the Conduits of my blood froze up:
Yet hath my night of life ſome memorie:
My waſting lampes ſome fading glimmer left;
My dull deafe eares a little uſe to heare:
All theſe old witneſſes, I cannot erre.
Tell me, thou art my ſonne Antipholis.
Ant. I never ſaw my Father in my life.
Fa. But ſeven yeares ſince, in Syracuſa Boy,
Thou know'ſt we parted, but perhaps my ſonne,
Thou ſham'ſt to acknowledge me in miſery.
Ant. The Duke, and all that know me in the City,
Can witneſſe with me that it is not ſo,
I ne're ſaw Siracuſa in my life.
Duke. I tell thee Siracuſan, twenty yeares
Have I been Patron to Antipholis,
During which time he ne're ſaw Syracuſa:
I ſee thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter the Abbeſſe with Antipholis Siracuſan, and Dromio Sir.

Abbeſſe. Moſt mighty Duke, behold a man much wrong'd.

All gather to ſee them.

Adr. I ſee two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.
Duke. One of theſe men is genius to the other:
And ſo of theſe, which is the naturall man,
And which the ſpirit? Who deciphers them?
S.Dromio. I Sir am Dromio, command him away.
E.Dro. I Sir am Dromio, pray let me ſtay.
S.Ant. Egeon art thou not? or elſe his ghoſt.
S. Drom. Oh my old Maſter, who hath bound him heere?
Abb. Who ever bound him, I will looſe his bonds,
And gaine a husband by his liberty:
Speake old Egeon, if thou bee'ſt the man
That had'ſt a wife once call'd Æmilia,
That bore thee at a burthen two faire ſonnes?
Oh if thou bee'ſt the ſame Egeon, ſpeake:
And ſpeake unto the ſame Æmilia.
Duke. Why heere begins his Morning ſtory right:
Theſe two Antipholis, theſe two ſo like,
And thoſe two Dromio's, one in ſemblance:
Beſides her urging of her wracke at ſea,
Theſe are the Parents to theſe children,
Which accidentally are met together.
Fat. If I dreame not, thou art Æmilia,
If thou art ſhe, tell me, where is that ſonne
That floated with thee on the fatall rafte.
Abb. By men of Epidamium, he, and I,
And the twin Dromio, all were taken up;
But by and by, rude Fiſhermen of Corinth
By force tooke Dromio, and my ſonne from them,
And me they left with thoſe of Epidamium.
What then became of them, I cannot tell:
I, to this fortune that you ſee me in.
Duke. Antipholis thou cam'ſt from Corinth firſt.
S.Ant. No ſir, not I, I came from Siracuſe.
Duke. Stay, ſtand apart, I know not which is which.
E. Ant. I came from Corinth my moſt gracious Lord.
E.Dro. And I with him.
E. Ant. Brought to this Towne by that moſt famous Warriour,
Duke Menaphon, your moſt renowned Vncle.
Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to day?
S.Ant. I, gentle Miſtris.
Adr. And are not you my husband?
E. Ant. No, I ſay nay to that.
S. Ant. And ſo doe I, yet did ſhe call me ſo:
And this faire Gentlewoman here
Did call me brother. What I told you then,
I hope I ſhall have leiſure to make good,
If this be not a dreame I ſee and heare.
Goldſmith. That is the Chaine ſir, which you had of mee.
S. Ant. I thinke it be ſir, I deny it not.
E, Ant. And you ſir for this Chaine arreſted me.
Gold. I thinke I did ſir, I deny it not.
Adr. I ſent you money ſir to be your baile
By Dromio, but I thinke he brought it not.
E.Dro. No, none by me.
S.Ant. This purſe of Duckets I receiv'd from you,
And Dromio my man did bring them me:
I ſee wee ſtill did meet each others man,
And I was tane for him, and he for me,
And thereupon theſe errors are aroſe.
E.Ant. Theſe Duckets pawne I for my Father here.
Duke. It ſhall not need, thy father hath his life.
Cur. Sir I muſt have that Diamond from you.
E. Ant. There take it, and much thankes for my good cheere.
Abb. Renowned Duke, vouchſafe to take the paines
To goe with us into the Abbey here,
And heare at large diſcourſed all our fortunes,
And all that are aſſembled in this place:
That by this ſimpathized one dayes error,
Have ſuffered wrong. Goe, keepe us company.

And we ſhall make full ſatisfaction.
Thirty three yeares have I beene gone in travell
Of you my ſonnes, and till this preſent houre
My heavy burthens are delivered:
The Duke my husband, and my children both,
And you the Kalenders of their Nativity,
Goe to a Goſſips feaſt, and goe with me,
After ſo long griefe ſuch Nativity.

Duke. With all my heart, Ile Goſſip at this feaſt.

Exeunt omnes. Manet the two Dromio's and two Brothers.

S.Dro. Maſt. ſhall I fetch your ſtuffe from ſhipboord?

E.An. Dromio, what ſtuffe of mine haſt thou imbark'd.

S.Dro. Your goods that lay at hoſt ſir in the Centaur.

S.Ant. He ſpeakes to me, I am your Maſter Dromio.
Come, goe with us, we'll looke to that anon,
Embrace thy brother there, rejoyce with him. Exit.

S.Dro. There is a fat friend at your Maſters houſe,
That kitchin'd me for you to day at dinner:
She now ſhall be my ſiſter, not my wife.

E.D. Me thinkes you are my glaſſe, and not my brother:
I ſee by you, I am a ſweet fac'd youth,
Will you walke in to ſee their Goſſipping?

S.Dro. Not I ſir, you are my Elder.

E.Dro. That's a queſtion, how ſhall I try it.

S.Dro. Wee'll draw Cuts for the Signior, till then, leade thou firſt.

E.Dro. Nay then thus:
We came into the world like brother and brother:
And now let's goe hand in hand, not one before another.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

Much adoe about Nothing.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Leonato Governour of Meſſina, Innogen his wife, Hero his daughter, and Beatrice his Neece, with a Meſſenger.

Leonato.

I Learne in this Letter, that Don Peter of Arragon comes this night to Meſſina.

Meſſ. He is very neere by this: he was not three Leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many Gentlemen have you loſt in this action?

Meſ. But few of any ſort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice it ſelfe, when the atchiever brings home full numbers: I find heere, that Don Peter hath beſtowed much honour on a yong Florentine, called Claudio.

Meſ. Much deſerv'd on his part, and equally remembred by Don Pedro, he hath borne himſelfe beyond the promiſe of his age, doing in the figure of a Lambe, the feates of a Lyon, he hath indeed better bettred expectation, than you muſt expect of me to tell you how.

Leo. He hath an Vnckle here in Meſſina, will be very much glad of it.

Meſ. I have already delivered him Letters, and there appeares much joy in him, even ſo much that joy could not ſhew it ſelfe modeſt enough, without a badge of bitterneſſe.

Leo. Did he breake out into teares?

Meſ. In great meaſure.

Leo. A kinde overflow of kindeneſſe: there are no faces truer, then thoſe that are ſo waſh'd, how much better is it to weepe at joy, then to joy at weeping?

Bea. I pray you, is Signior Mountanto return'd from the warres, or no?

Meſ. I know none of that name, Lady, there was none ſuch in the Army of any ſort.

Leo. What is he that you aske for Neece?

Hero. My Couſin meanes Signior Benedicke of Padua.

Meſ. O he's return'd, and as pleaſant as ever he was.

Beat. He ſet up his bils heere in Meſſina, and challeng'd Cupid at the Flight: and my Vncles foole reading the Challenge, ſubſcrib'd for Cupid, and Challeng'd him at the Burbolt. I pray you, how many hath hee kill'd and eaten in theſe warres? But how many hath he kill'd? for indeed, I promis'd to eate all of his killing.

Leon. 'Faith Neece, you taxe Signior Benedicke too much, but hee'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Meſ. He hath done good ſervice Lady in thoſe wars.

Meſ. You had muſty victuall, and hee hath holpe to eate it: hee's a very valiant Trencher-man, hee hath an excellent ſtomacke.

Meſ. And a good ſouldier too Lady.

Beat. And a good ſouldier to a Lady. But what is he to a Lord?

Meſ. A Lord to a Lord, a Man to a Man, ſtuft with all honourable vertues.

Beat. It is ſo indeed, he is no leſſe then a ſtuft man: but for the ſtuffing well, we are all mortall.

Leon. You muſt not (ſir) miſtake my Neece, there is a kinde of merry War betwixt Signior Benedicke and her: they never meet, but there's a skirmiſh of wit betweene them.

Bea. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our laſt conflict, foure of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man govern'd with one: ſo that if hee have wit enough to keepe himſelfe warme, let him beare it for a difference betweene himſelfe and his horſe: For it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be knowne a reaſonable creature. Who is his Companion now? He hath every month a new ſworne brother.

Meſ. I'st poſſible?

Beat. Very eaſily poſſible: he weares his faith but as the faſhion of his hat, it ever changes with the next blocke.

Meſ. I ſee (Lady) the Gentleman is not in your bookes.

Beat. No, and he were, I would burne my ſtudy. But I pray you who is his companion? Is there no young ſquarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the Divell?

Meſ. He is moſt in the company of the right noble Clandio.

Beat. O Lord, he will hang upon him like a diſeaſe: he is ſooner caught then the Peſtilence, and the taker runnes preſently madde. God helpe the noble Claudio, if he have caught the Benedicke, it will coſt him a thouſand pound ere it be cur'd.

Meſ. I will hold friends with you Lady.

Beat. Doe good friend.

Leo. You'll ne're run mad Neece.

Bea. No, not till a hot Ianuary.

Meſ. Don Pedro is approach'd.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedicke, Balthazar, and Iohn the baſtard.

Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, you are come to meete your trouble: the faſhion of the world is to avoyd coſt, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my houſe in the likeneſſe of your Grace: for trouble being gone, comfort ſhould remaine: but when you depart from me, ſorrow abides, and happineſſe takes his leave.

Pedro. You imbrace your charge more willingly: I thinke this is your daughter.

Leo. Her mother hath many times told me ſo.

Ben. Were you in doubt that you askt her?

Leo. Signior Benedicke, no, for then were you a childe.

Pedro. You have it full Benedicke, wee may gheſſe by this, what you are, being a man, truely the Lady fathers her ſelfe: be happy Lady, for you are like an honourable father.

Ben. If Signior Leonato be her Father, ſhee would not have his head on her ſhoulders for all Meſsina, as like him as ſhe is.

Beat. I wonder that you will ſtill be talking, Signior Benedicke, no body markes you.

Ben. What my deare Lady Diſdaine! are you yet living?

Beat. Is it poſſible Diſdaine ſhould die, while ſhee hath ſuch meet food to feed it, as Signior Benedicke? Courteſie it ſelfe muſt convert to Diſdaine, if you come in her preſence.

Bene. Then is Courteſie a turne-coat, but it is certaine I am loved of all Ladies, onely you excepted: and I would I could finde in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for truely I love none.

Beat. A deere happineſſe to women, they would elſe have beene troubled with a pernicious Sutor, I thanke God and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that, I had rather heare my Dog barke at a Crow, then a man ſweare he loves me.

Ben. God keepe your Ladiſhip ſtill in that minde, ſo ſome Gentleman or other ſhall ſcape a Predeſtinate ſcratcht face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worſe, and 'twere ſuch a face as yours were.

Ben. Well, you are a rare Parrat-teacher.

Beat. A Bird of my tongue, is better then a beaſt of yours.

Ben. I would my horſe had the ſpeed of your tongue, and ſo good a continuer, but keepe your way a Gods name, I have done.

Beat. You alwayes end with a Iades tricke, I know you of old.

Pedro. This is the ſumme of all: Leonato, Signior Claudio, and Signior Benedicke; my deare friend Leonato, hath invited you all, I tell him we ſhall ſtay here, at the leaſt a moneth, and he heartily prayes ſome occaſion may detaine us longer: I dare ſweare hee is no hypocrite, but prayes from his heart.

Leon. If you ſweare, my Lord, you ſhall not bee forſworne, let me bid you welcome, my Lord, being reconciled to the Prince your brother: I owe you all dutie.

Iohn. I thanke you, I am not of many words, but I thanke you.

Leon. Pleaſe it your Grace leade on?

Pedro. Your hand Leonato, we will goe together.

Exeunt. Manet Benedicke and Claudio.

Clau. Benedicke, didſt thou note the daughter of Signior Leonato?

Ben. I noted her not, but I lookt on her.

Clau. Is ſhe not a modeſt yong Ladie?

Ben. Doe you queſtion me as an honeſt man ſhould doe, for my ſimple true judgement? or would you have me ſpeake after my cuſtome, as being a profeſſed tyrant to their ſexe?

Clau. No, I prethee ſpeake in ſober judgement.

Ben. Why yfaith me thinkes ſhee's too low for a hie praiſe, too browne for a faire praiſe, and too little for a great praiſe, onely this commendation I can affoord her, that were ſhe other than ſhe is, ſhee were unhandſome, and being no other but as ſhe is, I doe not like her.

Clau. Thou think'ſt I am in ſport, I pray thee tell mee truely how thou lik'ſt her.

Ben. Would you buy her, that you enquier after her?

Clau. Can the world buy ſuch a Iewell?

Ben. Yea, and a caſe to put it into, but ſpeake you this with a ſad brow? Or doe you play the flowting Iacke, to tell us Cupid is a good Hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare Carpenter: Come, in what Key ſhall a man take you to goe in the ſong?

Clau. In mine eye, ſhe is the ſweeteſt Ladie that ever I lookt on.

Ben. I can ſee yet without Spectacles, and I ſee no ſuch matter: there's her Coſin, and ſhe were not poſſeſt with a fury, exceedes her as much in beautie, as the firſt of May doth the laſt of December: but I hope you have no intent to turne husband, have you?

Clau. I would ſcarce truſt my ſelfe, though I had ſworne the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Ben. Iſt come to this? in faith hath not the world one man but he will weare his cap with ſuſpition? ſhall I never ſee a Batchellor of threeſcore againe? goe to yfaith, and thou wilt needes thruſt thy necke into a yoke, weare the print of it, and ſigh away ſundayes: looke Don Pedro is returned to ſeeke you.

Enter Don Pedro, Iohn the Baſtard.

Pedr. What ſecret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonatoes?

Bened. I would your Grace would conſtraine mee to tell.

Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegeance.

Ben. You heare, Count Claudio, I can be ſecret as a dumbe man, I would have you thinke ſo (but on my allegeance, marke you this, on my allegeance) hee is in love, With whom? now that is your Graces part: marke how ſhort his anſwer is, with Hero, Leonatoes ſhort daughter.

Clau. If this were ſo, ſo were it uttred.

Ben. Like the old Tale, my Lord, it is not ſo, nor 'twas not ſo: but indeed, God forbid it ſhould be ſo.

Clau. If my paſſion change not ſhortly, God forbid it ſhould be otherwiſe.

Pedro. Amen, if you love her, for the Lady is very well worthy.

Clau. You ſpeake this to fetch me in, my Lord.

Pedro. By my troth I ſpeake my thought.

Clau. And in faith, my Lord, I ſpoke mine.

Ben. And by my two faiths and troths, my Lord, I ſpeake mine.

Clau. That I love her, I feele.

Ped. That ſhe is worthy, I know.

Ben. That I neither feele how ſhee ſhould bee loved, nor know how ſhe ſhould be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me, I wil die in it at the ſtake.

Ped. Thou waſt ever an obſtinate Heretique in the deſpight of Beauty.

Clau. And never could maintaine his part, but in the force of his will.

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thanke her: that ſhe brought me up, I likewiſe give her moſt humble thankes: but that I will have a rechate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an inviſible baldricke, all women ſhall pardon me: becauſe I will not doe them the wrong to miſtruſt any, I will doe my ſelfe the right to truſt none: and the fine is, (for the which I may goe the finer) I will live a Batchellor.

Pedro. I ſhall ſee thee ere I dye, looke pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with ſickeneſſe, or with hunger, my lord, not with love: prove that ever I looſe more blood with love, then I will get againe with drinking, picke out mine eyes with a Ballet-makers penne, and hang me up at the doore of a brothel-houſe for the ſigne of blind Cupid.

Pedro. Well, if ever thou dooſt fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Bene. If I doe, hang me in a bottle like a Cat, and ſhoot at me, and he that hit's me, let him be clapt on the ſhoulder, and cal'd Adam.

Pedro. Well, as time ſhall try: In time the ſavage Bull doth beare the yoake.

Bene. The ſavage bull may, but if ever the ſenſible Benedicke beare it, plucke off the bulles hornes, and ſet them in my forehead, and let me be vildely painted, and in ſuch great Letters as they write, heere is good horſe to hire: let them ſignifie under my ſigne, here you may ſee Benedicke the married man.

Clau. If this ſhould ever happen, thou wouldſt bee horne mad.

Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not ſpent all his Quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this ſhortly.

Bene. I looke for an earth quake too then.

Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the houres, in the meane time, good Signior Benedicke, repaire to Leonatoes, commend me to him, and tell him I will not faile him at ſupper, for indeed he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almoſt matter enough in me for ſuch an Embaſſage, and ſo I commit you.

Clau. To the tuition of God. From my houſe, if I had it.

Pedro. The ſixt of Iuly. Your loving friend, Benedicke.

Bene. Nay mocke not, mocke not; the body of your diſcourſe is ſometime guarded with fragments, and the guardes are but ſlightly baſted on neither, ere you flout old ends any further, examine your conſcience, and ſo I leave you. Exit.

Clau. My Leige, your Highneſſe now may doe mee good.

Pedro. My love is thine to teach, teach it but how,
And thou ſhalt ſee how apt it is to learne
Any hard Leſſon that may doe thee good.

Clau. Hath Leonato any ſonne my lord?

Pedro. No child but Hero, ſhe's his onely heire.
Doſt thou affect her Claudio?

Clau. O my lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a ſouldiers eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher taske in hand,
Than to drive liking to the name of love:
But now I am return'd, and that warre-thoughts
Have left their places vacant: in their roomes,
Come thronging ſoft and delicate deſires,
All prompting me how faire yong Hero is,
Saying I lik'd her ere I went to warres.

Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover preſently,
And tire the hearer with a booke of words:
If thou doſt love faire Hero, cheriſh it,
And I will breake with her: waſt not to this end,
That thov beganſt to twiſt ſo fine a ſtory?

Clau. How ſweetly doe you miniſter to love,
That know loves griefe by his complexion!
But leſt my liking might too ſodaine ſeeme,
I would have ſalu'd it with a longer treatiſe.

Pedro. What need the bridge much broder then the
The faireſt grant is the neceſſity: (flood?
Looke what will ſerve, is fit: 'tis once, thou loveſt,
And I will fit thee with the remedy,
I know we ſhall have revelling to night,
I will aſſume thy part in ſome diſguiſe,
And tell faire Hero I am Claudio,
And in her boſome Ile unclaſpe my heart,
And take her hearing priſoner with the force
And ſtrong incounter of my amorous tale:
Then after, to her father will I breake,
And the concluſion is, ſhe ſhall be thine,
In practiſe let us put it preſently. Exeunt.

Enter Leonato and an old man, brother to Leonato.

Leo. How now brother, where is my coſen your ſon: hath he provided this muſicke?

Old. He is very buſie about it, but brother, I can tell you newes that you yet dreamt not of.

Lo. Are they good?

Old. As the event ſtampes them, but they have a good cover: they ſhew well outward: the Prince and Count Claudio walking in a thicke pleached alley in my orchard, were thus over-heard by a man of mine: the Prince diſcovered to Claudio that he loved my neece your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance, and if he found her accordant, he meant to take the preſent time by the top, and inſtantly breake with you of it.

Leo. Hath the fellow any wit that told you this?

Old. A good ſharpe fellow, I will ſend for him, and queſtion him your ſelfe.

Leo. No, no: we will hold it as a dreame, till it appeare it ſelfe: but I will acquaint my daughter withall, that ſhe may be the better prepared for anſwer, if peradventure this be true: goe you and tell her of it: coſins, you know what you have to doe, O I cry you mercy friend, goe you with me and I will uſe your skill, good coſin have a care this buſie time. Exeunt.

Enter Sir Iohn the Baſtard, and Conrade his companion.

Con. What the good yeere my Lord, why are you thus out of meaſure ſad?

Iohn. There is no meaſure in the occaſion that breeds, therefore the ſadneſſe is without limit.

Con. You ſhould heare reaſon.

Iohn. And when I have heard it, what bleſſing bringeth it?

Con. If not a preſent remedy, yet a patient ſufferance.

Iob. I wonder that thou (being as thou ſaiſt thou art, borne under Saturne) goeſt about to apply a mortall medicine, to a mortifying miſcheife: I cannot hide what I am: I muſt be ſad when I have cauſe, and ſmile at no mans jeſts; eate when I have ſtomacke, and wait for no mans leiſure: ſleepe when I am drowſie, and tend on no mans buſineſſe; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you muſt not make the fulll ſhow of this till you may doe it without controllment, you have of late ſtood out againſt your brother, and he hath tane you newly into his grace, where it is impoſſible you ſhould take root, but by the faire weather that you make your ſelfe, it is needfull that you frame the ſeaſon for your owne harveſt.

Iohn. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, then a roſe in his grace, and it better fits my bloud to be diſdain'd of all, then to faſhion a carriage to rob love from any: in this (though I cannot be ſaid to be a flattering honeſt man) it muſt not be denyed but I am a plaine dealing villaine, I am truſted with a muſſell, and enfranchiſde with a clog, therefore I have decreed, not to ſing in my cage: if I had my mouth, I would bite: if I had my liberty, I would do my liking: in the meane time, let me be that I am, and ſeeke not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no uſe of your diſcontent?

Iohn. I will make all uſe of it, for I uſe it onely. Who comes heere? what newes Borachio?

Enter Borachio.

Bor. I came yonder from a great ſupper, the Prince your brother is royally entertained by Leonato, and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

Iohn. Will it ſerve for any Modell to build miſcheiſe on? What is he for a foole that betrothes himſelfe to unquietneſſe?

Bor. Marry it is your brothers right hand.

Iohn. Who, the moſt exquiſite Claudio?

Bor. Even he.

Iohn. A proper ſquier, and who, and who, which way lookes he?

Bor. Marry on Hero, the daughter and Heire of Leonato.

Iohn. A very forward March-chicke, how come you to this?

Bor. Being entertain'd for a perfumer, as I was ſmoaking a muſty roome, comes me the Prince and Claudio, hand in hand in ſad conference: I whipt behind the Arras, and there heard it agreed upon, that the Prince ſhould wooe Hero for himſelfe, and having obtained'd her, give her to Count Claudio.

Iohn. Come, come, let us thither, this may prove food to my diſpleaſure, that young ſtart-up hath all the glory of my overthrow: if I can croſſe him any way, I bleſſe my ſelfe every way; you are both ſure, and will aſſiſt me?

Conr. To the death my Lord.

Iohn. Let us to the great ſupper, their cheere is the greater that I am ſubdued, would the Cooke were of my mind: ſhall we goe prove what's to be done?

Bor. We'll wait upon your Lordſhip.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Leonato, his brother, his wife, Hero his daughter, and Beatrice his neece, and a kinſman.

Leona. Was not Count Iohn here at ſupper?

Brot. I ſaw him not.

Beat. How tartly that Gentleman lookes, I never can ſee him, but I am heart-burn'd an houre after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy diſpoſition.

Beat. He were an excellent man that were made juſt in the mid-way betweene him and Benedicke, the one is too like an image and ſayes nothing, and the other too like my Ladies eldeſt ſonne, evermore tatling.

Leon. Then halfe Signior Benedickes tongue in Count Iohns mouth, and halfe Count Iohns melancholy in Signior Benedickes face——.

Beat. With a good legge, and a good foot unckle, and money enough in his purſe, ſuch a man would winne any woman in the world, if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth Neece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be ſo ſhrewd of thy tongue.

Brot. Infaith ſhe's too curſt.

Beat. Too curſt is more then curſt, I ſhall leſſen Gods ſending that way: for it is ſaid, God ſends a curſt Cow ſhort hornes, but to a Cow too curſt he ſends none.

Leon. So, by being too curſt, God will ſend you no hornes.

Beat. Iuſt, if he ſend me no husband, for the which bleſſing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening: Lord, I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face, I had rather lye in the woollen.

Leona. You may light upon a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What ſhould I doe with him? dreſſe him in my apparell, and make him my waiting gentlewoman? he that hath a beard, is more then a youth: and he that hath no beard, is leſſe then a man: and he that is more then a youth, is not for me: and he that is leſſe then a man, I am not for him: therefore I will even take ſixepence in earneſt of the Berrord, and leade his Apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, goe you into hell.

Beat. No, but to the gate, and there will the Devill meete me like an old Cuckold with hornes on his head, and ſay, get you to heaven Beatrice, get you to heaven, heere's no place for you maids, ſo deliver I up my Apes, and away to Saint Peter: for the heavens, he ſhewes me where the Batchellers ſit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Brot. Well neece, I truſt you will be rul'd by your father.

Beat. Yes faith, it is my coſens duty to make curtſie, and ſay, as it pleaſe you: but yet for all that coſin, let him be a handſome fellow, or elſe make an other curtſie, and ſay, father, as it pleaſes me.

Leon. Well neece, I hope to ſee you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of ſome other mettall then earth, would it not grieve a woman to be overmaſtred with a peece of valiant duſt? to make account of her life to a clod of wayward marle? no uncle, ile none: Adams ſonnes are my brethren, and truly I hold it a ſinne to match in my kinred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you, if the Prince doe ſolicit you in that kind, you know your anſwer.

Beat. The fault will be in the muſicke coſin, if you be not wood in good time: if the Prince be too important, tell him there is meaſure in every thing, and ſo dance out the anſwer, for heare me Hero, wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jigge, a meaſure, and a cinquepace: the firſt ſuite is hot and haſty like a Scotch jigge (and full as fantaſticall) the wedding mannerly modeſt, (as a meaſure) ful of ſtate and aunchentry, and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinquepace faſter and faſter, till he ſinkes into his grave.

Leonata. Coſin you apprehend paſſing ſhrewdly.

Beatrice. I have a good eye unckle, I can ſee a Church by day light.

Leon. The revellers are entring brother, make good roome.

Enter Prince, Pedro, Claudio, and Benedicke, and Balthaſar, or dumbe Iohn, Maskers with a drum.

Pedro. Lady, will you walke about with your friend?

Hero. So you walke ſoftly, and looke ſweetly, and ſay nothing, I am yours for the walke, and eſpecially when I walke away.

Pedro, With me in your company.

Hero. I may ſay ſo when I pleaſe.

Pedro. And when pleaſe you to ſay ſo?

Hero. When I like your favour, for God defend the Lute ſhould be like the caſe.

Pedro. My viſor is Philemons roofe, within the houſe is love.

Hero. Why then your viſor ſhould be thatcht.

Pedro. Speake low if you ſpeake Love.

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Mar. So would not I for your owne ſake, for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Mar. I ſay my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better, the hearers may cry Amen.

Mar. God match me with a good dancer.

Balt. Amen.

Mar. And God keepe him out of my ſight when the dance is done: anſwer Clarke.

Balt. No more words, the Clarke is anſwered.

Vrſula. I know you well enough, you are Signior Anthonio.

Anth. At a word, I am not.

Vrſula. I know you by the wagling of your head.

Anth. To tell you true, I counterfet him.

Vrſu. You could never doe him ſo ill well, unleſſe you were the very man: here's his dry hand up and downe, you are he, you are he.

Antho. At a word I am not.

Vrſula. Come, come, doe you thinke I doe not know you by your excellent wit? can vertue hide it ſelfe? goe to, mumme, you are he, graces will appeare, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you ſo?

Bene. No, you ſhall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was diſdainefull, and that I had my good wit out of the hundred merry tales: well, this was Signior Benedicke that ſaid ſo.

Bene. What's he?

I am ſure you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, beleve me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you what is he?

Beat. Why he is the Princes jeaſter, a very dull foole, onely his gift is, in deviſing impoſſible ſlanders, none but Libertines delight in him, and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany, for hee both pleaſeth men and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him; I am ſure he is in the Fleet, I would he had boorded me.

Bene. When I know the Gentleman, Ile tell him what you ſay.

Beat. Doe, doe, hee'l but breake a compariſon or two on me, which peradventure (not markt, or not laugh'd at) ſtrikes him into melancholly, and then there's a Partridge wing ſaved, for the foole will eate no ſupper that night. We muſt follow the Leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Bea. Nay, if they leade to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning. Exeunt.

Muſicke for the dance.

Iohn. Sure my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawne her father to breake with him about it: the Ladies follow her, and but one viſor remaines.

Bora. And that is Claudio, I know him by his bearing.

Iohn. Are not you ſignior Benedicke?

Clau. You know me well, I am hee.

Iohn. Signior, you are very neere my brother in his love, he is enamor'd on Hero, I pray you diſſwade him from her, ſhe is no equall for his birth: you may doe the part of an honeſt man in it.

Clau. How know you he loves her?

Iohn. I heard him ſweare his affection.

Bora. So did I too, and he ſwore he would marry her to night.

Iohn. Come, let us to the banquet. Exit. manet. Clau.

Clau. Thus anſwer I in name of Benedicke,
But heare theſe ill newes with the eares of Claudio:
'Tis certaine ſo, the Prince wooes for himſelfe:
Friendſhip is conſtant in all other things,
Save in the Office and affaires of love:
Therefore all hearts in love uſe their owne tongues,
Let every eye negotiate for it ſelfe,
And truſt no Agent: for beauty is a witch,
Againſt whoſe charmes, faith melteth into blood:
This is an accident of hourely proofe,
Which I miſtruſted not. Farewell therefore Hero.

Enter Benedicke.

Bene. Count Claudio.

Clau. Yea the ſame.

Bene. Come, will you goe with me?

Clau. Whither?

Bene. Even to the next Willow, about your owne buſineſſe, Count. What faſhion will you weare the Garland off? About your necke, like an Vſurers chaine? Or under your arme, like a Lieutenants ſcarfe? You muſt weare it one way, for the Prince hath got your Hero.

Clau. I wiſh him joy of her.

Bene. Why that's ſpoken like an honeſt Drovier, ſo they ſell Bullockes: but did you thinke the Prince would have ſerved you thus?

Clau. I pray you leave me.

Bene. Ho no! you ſtrike like the blindman, 'twas the boy that ſtole your meate, and you'll beat the poſt.

Clau. If it will not be, Ile leave you. Exit.

Bene. Alas poore hurt ſoule, now will he creepe into ſedges: but that my Lady Beatrice ſhould know me, and not know mee: the Princes foole! Ha? It may be I goe under that title, becauſe I am merry: you but ſo I am apt to doe my ſelfe wrong: I am not ſo reputed, it is the baſe (though bitter) diſpoſition of Beatrice, that put's the world into her perſon, and ſo gives me out: well, Ile be revenged as I may.

Enter the Prince.

Pedro. Now Signior, where's the Count, did you ſee him?

Ben.

Bene. Troth my Lord, I have played the part of Lady Fame, I found him heere as melancholly as a Lodge in a Warren, I told him, and I thinke, told him true, that your grace had got the will of this young Lady, and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forſaken, or to bind him a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.

Pedro. To be whipt, what's his fault?

Bene. The flat tranſgreſſion of a Schoole-boy, who being over-joyed with finding a birds neſt, ſhewes it his companion, and he ſteales it.

Pedro. Wilt thou make a truſt, a tranſgreſſion? the tranſgreſſion is in the ſtealer.

Bene. Yet it had not beene amiſſe the rod had beene made, and the garland too, for the garland he might have worne himſelfe, and the rod he might have beſtowed on you, who (as I take it) have ſtolne his birds neſt.

Pedro. I will but teach them to ſing, and reſtore them to the owner.

Bene. If their ſinging anſwer your ſaying, by my faith you ſay honeſtly.

Pedro. The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrell to you, the Gentleman that danſt with her, told her ſhe is much wrong'd by you.

Bene. O ſhe miſuſde me paſt the indurance of a blocke: an oake but with one greene leafe on it, would have anſwered her: my very viſor began to aſſume life, and ſcold with her: ſhe told mee, not thinking I had beene my ſelfe, that I was the Princes Ieſter, and that I was duller then a great thaw, hudling jeſt upon jeſt, with ſuch impoſſible conveiance upon me, that I ſtood like a man at a marke, with a whole army ſhooting at me: ſhe ſpeakes poynyards, and every word ſtabbes: if her breath were as terrible as terminations, there were no living neere her, ſhe would infect to the north ſtarre: I would not marry her, though ſhe were indowed with all that Adam had left him before he tranſgreſt, ſhe would have made Hercules have turnd ſpit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too: come, talke not of her, you ſhall find her the infernall Ate in good apparell. I would to God ſome ſcholler would conjure her, for certainely while ſhe is heere, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a ſanctuary, and people ſinne upon purpoſe, becauſe they would goe thither, ſo indeed all diſquiet, horror, and perturbation followes her.

Enter Claudio, and Beatrice, Leonato, Hero.

Pedro. Looke heere ſhe comes.

Bene. Will your Grace command me any ſervice to the worlds end? I will goe on the ſlighteſt arrand now to the Antypodes that you can deviſe to ſend me on: I will fetch you a tooth-picker now from the furtheſt inch of Aſia: bring you the length of Preſter Iohns foot: fetch you a haire off the great Chams beard: doe you any embaſſage to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words conference, with this Harpy: you have no employment for me?

Pedro. None, but to deſire your good company.

Bene. O God ſir, heeres a diſh I love not, I cannot indure this Ladyes tongue. Exit.

Pedro. Come Lady, come, you have loſt the heart of Signior Benedicke.

Beat. Indeed my lord, he lent it me a while, and I gave him uſe for it, a double heart for a ſingle one, marry once before he wonne it of me, with falſe dice, therefore your Grace may well ſay I have loſt it.

Pedro. You have put him downe Lady, you have put him downe.

Beat. So I would not he ſhould doe me, my lord, leſt I ſhould proove the mother of fooles: I have brought Count Claudio, whom you ſent me to ſeeke.

Pedro. Why how now Count, wherefore are you ſad?

Clau. Not ſad my lord.

Pedro. How then? ſicke?

Clau. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The Count is neither ſad, nor ſicke, nor merry, nor well: but civill Count, civill as an Orange, and ſomething of a jealous complexion.

Pedro. Ifaith Lady, I thinke your blazon to be true, though I be ſworne, if he bee ſo, his conceit is falſe: heere Claudio, I have wooed in thy name, and faire Hero is won, I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained, name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy.

Leona. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace ſay, Amen to it.

Beat. Speake Count, tis your Qu.

Clau. Silence is the perfecteſt Herault of joy, I were but little happy if I could ſay, how much? Lady, as you are mine, I am yours, I give away my ſelfe for you, and doat upon the exchange.

Beat. Speake coſin, or (if you cannot) ſtop his mouth with a kiſſe, and let not him ſpeake neither.

Pedro. Infaith Lady you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yea my lord I thanke it, poore foole it keepes on the windy ſide of care, my coſin tells him in his eare that he is in my heart.

Clau. And ſo ſhe doth coſin.

Beat. Good lord for alliance: thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am ſun-burn'd, I may ſit in a corner and cry, heigh ho for a husband.

Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your fathers getting: hath your Grace ne're a brother like you? your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

Prince. Will you have me? Lady.

Beat. No, my lord, unleſſe I might have another for working-dayes, your Grace is too coſtly to weare every day: but I beſeech your Grace pardon me, I was borne to ſpeake all mirth, and no matter.

Prince. Your ſilence moſt offends me, and to be merry, beſt becomes you, for out of queſtion, you were borne in a merry houre.

Beat. No ſure my lord, my mother cryed, but then there was a ſtarre danſt, and under that was I borne: coſins God give you joy.

Leona. Neece, will you looke to thoſe things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy Vncle, by your Graces pardon. Exit Beatrice.

Prince. By my troth a pleaſant ſpirited Lady.

Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her my lord, ſhe is never ſad, but when ſhe ſleepes, and not ever ſad then: for I have heard my daughter ſay, ſhe hath often dreamt of unhappineſſe, and wakt her ſelfe with laughing.

Pedro. Shee cannot indure to heare tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no meanes, ſhe mockes all her wooers out of ſuite.

Prince. She were an excellent wife for Benedicke.

Leona. O lord, my lord, if they were but a weeke married, maried, they would talke themſelves mad.

Prince. Count Claudio, when meane you to goe to Church?

Clau. To morrow my Lord, Time goes on crutches, till Love have all his rites.

Leona. Not till monday, my deare ſonne, which is hence a juſt ſeven night, and a time too briefe too, to have all things anſwer mind.

Prince. Come, you ſhake the head at ſo long a breathing, but I warrant thee Claudio, the time ſhall not goe dully by us, I will in the interim, undertake one of Hercules labours, which is, to bring Signior Benedicke and the Lady Beatrice into a mountaine of affection, th'one with th'other, I would faine have it a match, and I doubt not but to faſhion it, if you three will but miniſter ſuch aſſiſtance as I ſhall give you direction.

Leona. My lord, I am for you, though it coſt me ten nights watchings.

Clau. And I my lord.

Prin. And you too gentle Hero?

Hero. I will doe any modeſt office, my lord, to helpe my coſin to a good husband.

Prin. And Benedicke is not the unhopefulleſt husband that I know: thus farre can I praiſe him, he is of a noble ſtraine, of approved valour, and confirm'd honeſty. I will teach you how to humour your coſin, that ſhe ſhall fall in love with Benedicke, and I, with your two helpes, will ſo practiſe on Benedicke, that in deſpight of his quicke wit, and his queaſie ſtomacke, he ſhall fall in love with Beatrice: if we can doe this, Cupid is no longer an Archer, his glory ſhall be ours, for we are the onely love-gods, goe in with me, and I will tell you my drift. Exeunt.

Enter Iohn and Borachio.

Ioh. It is ſo, the Count Claudio ſhall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yea my lord, but I can croſſe it.

Iohn. Any barre, any croſſe, any impediment, will be medicinable to me, I am ſicke in diſpleaſure to him, and whatſoever comes athwart his affection, ranges evenly with mine, how canſt thou croſſe this marriage?

Bor. Not honeſtly my lord, but ſo covertly, that no diſhoneſty ſhall appeare in me,

Ioh. Shew me briefely how.

Bor. I thinke I told your lordſhip a yeere ſince, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting gentlewoman to Hero.

Iohn. I remember.

Bor. I can at any unſeaſonable inſtant of the night, appoint her to looke out at her Ladies chamber window.

Iohn. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bor. The poyſon of that lyes in you to temper, goe you to the Prince your brother, ſpare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his Honor in marrying the renowned Claudio, whoſe eſtimation doe you mightily hold up, to a contaminated ſtale, ſuch a one as Hero.

Iohn. What proofe ſhall I make of that?

Bor. Proofe enough, to miſuſe the Prince, to vexe Claudio, to undoe Hero, and kill Leonato, looke you for any other iſſue?

Iohn. Onely to deſpight them, I will endeavour any thing.

Bor. Goe then, find me a meete houre, to draw on Pedro and the Count Claudio alone, tell them that you know that Hero loves me, intend a kind of zeale both to the Prince and Claudio (as in a love of your brothers honor who hath made this match) and his friends reputation, who is thus like to be coſen'd with the ſemblance of a maid, that you have diſcover'd thus: they will ſcarcely beleeve this without triall: offer them inſtances which ſhall beare no leſſe likelyehood, than to ſee me at her chamber window, heare me call Margaret, Hero; heare Margaret terme me Claudio, and bring them to ſee this the very night before the intended wedding, for in the meane time, I will ſo faſhion the matter, that Hero ſhall be abſent, and there ſhall appeare ſuch ſeeming truths of Heroes diſloyalty, that jealouſie ſhall be call'd aſſurance, and all the preparation ouerthrowne.

Iohn. Grow this to what adverſe iſſue it can, I will put it in practiſe: be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thouſand ducates.

Bor. Be thou conſtant in the accuſation, and my cunning ſhall not ſhame me.

Iohn. I will preſently goe learne their day of marriage. Exit.

Enter Benedicke alone.

Bene. Boy.

Boy. Signior.

Bene. In my chamber window lies a booke, bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am heere already ſir. Exit.

Bene. I know that, but I would have thee hence, and heere againe. I doe much wonder, that one man ſeeing how much another man is a foole, when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will after he hath laught at ſuch ſhallow follies in others, become the argument of his owne ſcorne, by falling in love, and ſuch a man is Claudio, I have knowne when there was no muſicke with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather heare the taber and the pipe: I have knowne when he would have walkt ten mile a foot, to ſee a good armor, and now will he lye ten nights awake carving the faſhion of a new dublet: he was wont to ſpeake plaine, and to the purpoſe (like an honeſt man and a ſouldier) and now is he turn'd orthography, his words are a very fantaſticall banquet, juſt ſo many ſtrange diſhes: may I be ſo converted, and ſee with theſe eyes? I cannot tell, I thinke not: I will not bee ſworne, but love may transforme me to an oyſter, but Ile take my oath on it, till he have made an oyſter of me, he ſhall never make me ſuch a foole: one woman is faire, yet I am well: another is wiſe, yet I am well: another vertuous, yet I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman ſhall not come in my grace: rich ſhe ſhall be, that's certaine: wiſe, or Ile none; vertuous, or Ile never cheapen her: faire, or Ile never looke on her: milde, or come not neere me: Noble, or not for an Angell: of good diſcourſe: an excellent Muſitian, and her haire ſhall be of what colour it pleaſe God, hah! the Prince and Monſieur Love, I will hide me in the Arbor.

Enter Prince, Leonato, Claudio, and Iacke Wilſon.

Princ. Come, ſhall we heare this muſicke?

Claud. Yea my good lord: how ſtill the evening is,
As huſht on purpoſe to grace harmony.

Prin. See you where Benedicke hath hid himſelfe?

Clau. O very well my lord: the muſicke ended,
We'll fit the kid-foxe with a penny worth.

Princ. Come Balthazar, we'll heare that ſong againe.

Balth. O good my lord, taxe not ſo bad a voyce,
To ſlander muſicke any more then once.

Prince. It is the witneſſe ſtill of excellency,
To put a ſtrange face on his owne perfection,
I pray thee ſing, and let me wooe no more.

Balth. Becauſe you talke of wooing, I will ſing,
Since many a wooer doth commence his ſuit,
To her he thinkes not worthy, yet he wooes,
Yet will he ſweare he loves.

Prince. Nay pray thee come,
Or if thou wilt hold longer argument,
Doe it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes,
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

Prince. Why theſe are very crotchets that he ſpeakes,
Note notes forſooth, and nothing.

Bene. Now divine ayre, now is his ſoule raviſht, is it not ſtrange that ſheepes guts ſhould hale ſoules out of mens bodies? well, a horne for my money when all's done.

The Song.

Sigh no more Ladies, ſigh no more,
Men were deceivers ever,
One foote in Sea, and one on ſhore,
To one thing conſtant never:
Then ſigh not ſo, but let them goe,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all yours ſounds of woe,
Into hey nony, nony.

Sing no more ditties, ſing no more,
Of dumps ſo dull and heavy,
The fraud of men were ever ſo,
Since ſummer firſt was leavy;
Then ſigh not ſo, &c.

Prince. By my troth a good ſong.

Balth. And an ill ſinger, my lord.

Prince. Ha, no, no, faith, thou ſingſt well enough for a ſhift.

Bene. And he had beene a dog that ſhould have howl'd thus, they would have hang'd him, and I pray God his bad voyce bode no miſchiefe, I had as leife have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

Prince. Yea marry, doſt thou heare Balthazar? I pray thee get us ſome excellent muſick: for to morrow night we would have it at the Lady Heroes chamber window.

Balth. The beſt I can my lord. Exit Balthazar.

Prince. Doe ſo, farewell. Come hither Leonato, what was it you told me of to day, that your Niece Beatrice was in love with Signior Benedicke?

Clau. O I, ſtalke on, ſtalke on, the foule ſits. I did never thinke that Lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither, but moſt wonderfull, that ſhe ſhould ſo dote on Signior Benedicke, whom ſhe hath in all outward behaviours ſeemed ever to abhorre.

Bene. Is't poſſible? ſits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth my lord, I cannot tell what to thinke of it, but that ſhe loves him with an inraged affection, it is paſt the infinite of thought.

Prince. May be ſhe doth but counterfeit.

Claud. Faith like enough.

Leon. O God! counterfeit? there was never counterfeit of paſſion, came ſo neere the life of paſſion as ſhe diſcovers it.

Prince. Why what effects of paſſion ſhewes ſhe?

Claud. Bait the hooke well, the fiſh will bite.

Leon. What effects my lord? ſhe will ſit you, you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did indeed.

Prin. How, how I pray you? you amaze me, I would have thought her ſpirit had beene invincible againſt all aſſaults of affection.

Leo. I would have ſworne it had, my lord, eſpecially againſt Benedicke.

Bene. I ſhould thinke this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow ſpeakes it: knavery cannot ſure hide himſelfe in ſuch reverence.

Claud. He hath tane th'infection, hold it up.

Prince. Hath ſhe made her affection knowne to Benedicke?

Leonato. No, and ſweares ſhe never will, that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true indeed, ſo your daughter ſayes: ſhall I, ſayes ſhe, that have ſo oft encountred him with ſcorne, write to him that I love him?

Leo This ſayes ſhee now when ſhe is beginning to write to him, for ſhee'll be up twenty times a night, and there will ſhe ſit in her ſmocke, till ſhe have writ a ſheet of paper: my daughter tells us all.

Cla. Now you talke of a ſheet of paper, I remember a pretty jeſt your daughter told us of.

Leon. O when ſhe had writ it, and was reading it over, ſhe found Benedicke and Beatrice betweene the ſheete.

Clau. That.

Leon. O ſhe tore the letter into a thouſand halfpence, raild at her ſelfe, that ſhe ſhould be ſo immodeſt to write, to one that ſhe knew would flout her: I meaſure him, ſayes ſhe, by my owne ſpirit, for I ſhould flout him if he writ to me, yea though I love him, I ſhould.

Clau. Then downe upon her knees ſhe falls, weepes, ſobs, beats her heart, teares her hayre, prayes, curſes, O ſweet Benedicke, God give me patience.

Leon. She doth indeed, my daughter ſayes ſo, and the extaſie hath ſo much overborne her, that my daughter is ſometime afeard ſhe will doe a deſperate out-rage to her ſelfe, it is very true.

Princ. It were good that Benedicke knew of it by ſome other, if ſhe will not diſcover it.

Clau. To what end? he would but make a ſport of it, and torment the poore Lady worſe.

Prin. And he ſhould, it were an almes to hang him, ſhe's an excellent ſweet Lady, and (out of all ſuſpition,) ſhe is vertuous.

Clau. And ſhe is exceeding wiſe.

Prin. In every thing, but in loving Benedicke.

Leon. O my lord, wiſedome and bloud combating in ſo tender a body, we have ten proofes to one, that bloud hath the victory, I am ſory for her, as I have juſt cauſe, being her Vncle, and her Guardian.

Prince. I would ſhe had beſtowed this dotage on me, I would have daft all other reſpects, and made her halfe my ſelfe: I pray you tell Benedicke of it, and heare what he will ſay.

Leon. Were it good thinke you?

Cla. Hero thinkes ſurely ſhe will dye, for ſhe ſayes ſhe will dye, if he love her not, and ſhe will dye ere ſhee make her love knowne, and ſhe will dye if he wooe her, rather than ſhe will bate one breath of her accuſtomed croſſeneſſe.

Prin. She doth well, if ſhe ſhould make tender of her love,

loue,'tis very poſſible hee'l ſcorne it,for the man(as you know all)hath a contemptible ſpirit.

Clau. He is a very proper man.

Prin. He hath indeed a good outward happines.

Clau. 'Fore God,and in my minde very wiſe.

Prin. He doth indeed ſhew ſome ſparkes that are like wit.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

Prin. As Hector, I aſſure you, and in the managing of quarrels you may ſee he is wiſe , for either hee auoydes them with great diſcretion , or vndertakes them with a Chriſtian-like feare.

Leon. If hee doe feare God , a muſt neceſſarily keepe peace,if hee breake the peace , hee ought to enter into a quarrell with feare and trembling.

Prin. And ſo will he doe, for the man doth fear God, howſoever it ſeemes not in him , by ſome large ieaſts he will make : well, I am ſorry for your niece , ſhall we go ſee Benedicke, and tell him of her loue?

Claud. Neuer tell him, my Lord, let her weare it out with good counſell.

Leon. Nay that's impoſſible, ſhe may weare her heart out firſt.

Prin. Well,we will heare further of it by your daughther, let it coole the while. I loue Benedicke well , and I could wiſh he would modeſtly examine himſelfe,to ſee how much he is vnworthy to haue ſo good a Lady.

Leon. My Lord, will you walke?dinner is ready.

Clau. If he do not doat on her vpon this , I will never truſt my expectation.

Prin. Let there be the ſame Net ſpread for her,and that muſt your daughter and her gentlewoman carry : the ſport will be,when they hold one an opinion of anothers dotage,and no ſuch matter,that's the Scene that I would ſee,which will be meerely a dumbe ſhew:let vs ſend her to call him into dinner. Exeun:.

Bene. This can be no tricke, the conference was ſadly borne,they haue the truth of this from Hero,they ſeeme to pitie the Lady : it ſeemes her affections have the full bent : love me ? why it muſt be requited : I heare how I am cenſur'd, they ſay I will beare my ſelfe proudly , if I perceiue the love come from her : they ſay too,that ſhe will rather die than giue any ſigne of affection:I did never thinke to marry , I muſt not ſeeme proud,happy are they that heare their detractions , and can put them to mending : they ſay the Lady is faire , 'tis a truth , I can beare them witneſſe : and vertuous,tis ſo , I cannot reprooue it, and wiſe, but for louing me,by my troth it is no addition to her witte , nor no great argument of her folly;for I wil be horribly in love with her,I may chance haue ſome odde quirkes and remaines of witte broken on me , becauſe I haue rail'd ſo long againſt marriage: but doth not the appetite alter?a man loves the meat in his youth,that he cannot indure in his age. Shall quips and ſentences, and theſe paper bullets of the braine awe a man from the careere of his humour ? No , the world muſt be peopled. When I ſaid I would die a batcheler,I did not think I ſhould liue till I were maried:here comes Beatrice:by this day, ſhee's a faire Lady,I doe ſpie ſome markes of loue in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Againſt my will I am ſent to bid you come in to dinner.

Bene. Faire Beatrice, I thanke you for your paines.

Beat. I tooke no more paines for thoſe thankes, then you take paines to thanke me,if it had beene painefull ; I would not haue come.

Bene. You take pleaſure then in the meſſage.

Beat. Yea juſt ſo much as you may take upon a knives point, and choake a daw withall : you have no ſtomacke ſignior, fare you well. Exit.

Bene. Ha , againſt my will I am ſent to bid you come in to dinner : there's a double meaning in that : I tooke no more paines for thoſe thankes then you tooke paines to thanke me, that's as much as to ſay , any paines that I take for you is as eaſie as thankes : if I do not take pitty of her I am a villaine , if I do not love her I am a Iew, I will go get her picture. Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Hero and two Gentlemen, Margaret, and Vrſula.

Hero. Good Margaret runne thee to the parlour,
There ſhalt thou finde my Coſin Beatrice,
Propoſing with the Prince and Claudio,
Whiſper her eare, and tell her I and Vrſula
Walke in the Orchard, and our whole diſcourſe
Is all of her, ſay that thou over-heardſt vs,
And bid her ſteale into the pleached bower,
Where hony-ſuckles ripened by the ſunne,
Forbid the ſunne to enter : like favourites,
Made proud by Princes, that aduance their pride,
Againſt that power that bred it, there will ſhe hide her,
To liſten to our purpoſe , this is thy office,
Beare thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Marg. Ile make her come I warrant preſently. Exit.

Hero. Now Vrſula, when Beatrice doth come,
As we do trace this alley up and downe,
Our talke muſt onely be of Benedicke,
When I do name him, let it be thy part,
To praiſe him more then euer Man did merit,
My talke to thee muſt be how Benedicke
Is ſicke in love with Beatrice : of this matter,
Is little Cupids crafty arrow made,
That onely wounds by heare-ſay:now begin,

Enter Beatrice.

For looke where Beatrice like a Lapwing runs
Cloſe by the ground,to heare our conference.

Vrſ. The pleaſant'ſt angling is to ſee the fiſh
Cut with her golden ores the ſiluer ſtreame,
And greedily devovre the treacherous baite:
So angle we for Beatrice,who even now,
Is couched in the wood-bine coverture,
Feare you not my part of the Dialogue.

Her. Then go we neare her that her eare loſe nothing,
Of the falſe ſweete baite that we lay for it:
No truely Vrſula,ſhe is too diſdainfull,
I know her ſpirits are as coy and wilde,
As Haggerds of the rocke.

Vrſula. But are you ſure,
That Benedicke loves Beatrice ſo intirely?

Her. So ſaies the Prince,and my new trothed Lord.

Vrſ. And did they bid you tell her of it,Madam?

Her. They did intreate me to acquaint her of it,
But I perſwaded them,if they lou'd Benedicke,

To wiſh him wraſtle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it.

Vrſula. Why did you ſo, doth not the Gentleman
Deſerve as full as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice ſhall couch upon?

Hero. O God of love! I know he doth deſerve,
As much as may be yeelded to a man:
But nature never fram'd a womans heart,
Of prowder ſtuffe then that of Beatrice:
Diſdaine and Scorne ride ſparkling in her eye,
Miſ-prizing what they looke on, and her wit
Values it ſelfe ſo highly, that to her
All matter elſe ſeemes weake: ſhe cannot love,
Nor take no ſhape nor proiect of affection,
Shee is ſo ſelfe indeared.

Vrſula. Sure I thinke ſo,
And therefore certainely it were not good
She knew his loue, leſt ſhe make ſport at it.

Hero. Why you ſpeake truth, I never yet ſaw man,
How wiſe, how noble, yong, how rarely featur'd.
But ſhe would ſpell him backward: if faire fac'd,
She would ſweare the gentleman ſhould be her ſiſter:
If blacke, why Nature drawing of an anticke,
Made a foule blot: if tall, a launce ill-headed:
If low, an agot very vildlie cut:
If ſpeaking, why a vane blowne with all windes,
If ſilent, why a blocke moved with none.
So turnes ſhe every man the wrong ſide out,
And never gives to Truth and Vertue, that
Which ſimpleneſſe and merit purchaſeth.

Vrſu. Sure, ſure, ſuch carping is not commendable.

Hero. No, not to be ſo odde, and from all faſhions,
As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable,
But who dare tell her ſo? if I ſhould ſpeake,
She would mocke me into ayre, O ſhe would laugh me
Out of my ſelfe, preſſe me to death with wit.
Therefore let Benedicke like couered fire,
Conſume away in ſighes, waſte inwardly:
It were a bitter death, to die with mockes,
Which is as bad as die with tickling.

Vrſu, Yet tell her of it, heare what ſhe will ſay.

Hero. No, rather I will goe to Benedicke,
And counſaile him to fight againſt his paſſion,
And truly Ile deviſe ſome honeſt ſlanders,
To ſtaine my coſin with, one doth not know,
How much an ill word may impoiſon liking.

Vrſu. O doe not do your coſin ſuch a wrong,
She cannot be ſo much without true judgement,
Having ſo ſwift and excellent a wit
As ſhe is priſde to have, as to refuſe
So rare a Gentleman as ſignior Benedicke.

Hero. He is the onely man of Italy,
Alwaies excepted, my deare Claudio.

Vrſu. I pray you be not angry with me, Madame,
Speaking my fancy: Signior Benedicke,
For ſhape, for bearing argument and valour,
Goes formoſt in report through Italy.

Hero. Indeed he hath an excellent good name.

Vrſu. His excellence did earne it ere he had it:
When are you married Madame?

Hero. Why every day to morrow, come goe in,
Ile ſhew thee ſome attires, and have thy counſell,
Which is the beſt to furniſh me to morrow.

Vrſu. Shee's tane I warrant you,
We have caught her Madame?

Hero. If it prove ſo, then loving goes by haps,
Some Cupid kills with arrowes, ſome with traps. Exit.

Beat. What fire is in mine eares? can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and ſcorne ſo much?
Contempt, farewell, and maiden pride, adew,
No glory lives behinde the backe of ſuch.
And Benedicke, love on, I will requite thee,
Taming my wilde heart to thy loving hand:
If thou doſt love, my kindeneſſe ſhall incite thee
To binde our loves up in a holy band.
For others ſay thou doſt deſerve, and I
Beleeve it better then reportingly. Exit.

Enter Prince, Claudio, Benedicke, and Leonato.

Prince. I do but ſtay till your marriage be conſummate, and then go I toward Arragon.

Clau. Ile bring you thither my Lord, if you'l vouchſafe me.

Prin. Nay, that would be as great a ſoyle in the new gloſſe of your marriage, as to ſhew a childe his new coat and forbid him to weare it, I will onely bee bold with Benedicke for his companie; for from the crowne of his head, to the ſole of his foot, he is all mirth, he hath twice or thrice cut Cupids bow-ſtring, and the little hang-man dare not ſhoot at him, he hath a heart as ſound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinkes, his tongue ſpeakes.

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have bin.

Leo. So ſay I; methinkes you are ſadder.

Clau. I hope he be in love.

Prin. Hang him truant, there's no true drop of bloud in him to be truly toucht with love, if he be ſad, he wants money.

Bene. I have the tooth-ach.

Prin. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it.

Clau. You muſt hang it firſt, and draw it afterwards.

Prin. What? ſigh for the tooth-ach.

Leon. Where is but a humour or a worme.

Bene. Well, every one cannot maiſter a griefe, but hee that has it.

Clau. Yet ſay I, he is in love.

Prin. There is no appearance of fancie in him, unleſſe it be a fancy that he hath to ſtrange diſguiſes, as to bee a Dutchman to day, a Frenchman to morrow: unleſſe hee have a fancy to this foolery, as it appeares hee hath, hee is no foole for fancy, as you would have it to appeare he his.

Clau. If he be not in love with ſome woman, there is no beleeving old ſignes, a bruſhes his hat a mornings; What ſhould that bode?

Prin. Hath any man ſeene him at the Barbers?

Clau. No, but the Barbers man hath beene ſeen with him, and the old ornament of his cheeke hath alreadie ſtuft tennis balls.

Leon. Indeed he looks yonger than he did, by the loſſe of a beard.

Prin. Nay a rubs himſelfe with Ciuit, can you ſmell him out by that?

Clau. That's as much as to ſay, the ſweet youth's in love.

Prin. The greateſt note of it is his melancholy.

Clau. And when was he wont to waſh his face?

Prin. Yea, or to paint himſelfe? for the which I heare what they ſay of him.

Clau. Nay, but his jeſting ſpirit, which is now crept into a lute-ſtring, and now govern'd by ſtops.

Prin. Indeed that tels a heavy tale for him:conclude, he is in love.

Clau. Nay, but I know who loves him.

Prin. That would I know too, I warrāt one that knows him not.

Clau. Yes,and his ill conditions,and in deſpight of all, dies for him.

Prin. Shee ſhall be buried with her face upwards.

Bene. Yet is this no charme for the tooth-ake, old ſignior, walke aſide with mee, I have ſtudied eight or nine wiſe words to ſpeake to you, which theſe hobby-horſes muſt not heare.

Prin. For my life to breake with him about Beatrice.

Clau. 'Tis even ſo, Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice,and then the two Beares will not bite one another when they meete.

Enter Iohn the Baſtard.

Baſt. My Lord and brother, God ſave you.

Prin. Good den brother.

Baſt. If your leiſure ſerv'd, I would ſpeake with you.

Prin. In priuate?

Baſt. If it pleaſe you ,yet Count Claudio may heare, for what I would ſpeake of,concernes him.

Prin. What's the matter?

Baſta. Meanes your Lordſhip to be married to morrow?

Prin. You know he does.

Baſt. I know not that when he knowes what I know.

Clau. If there be any impediment, I pray you diſcover it.

Baſt. You may thinke I love you not, let that appeare hereaefter, & ayme better at me by that I now will manifeſt, for my brother(I thinke,he holds you well,and in dearenesſe of heart) hath holpe to effect your enſuing marriage:ſurely ſute ill ſpent,and labour ill beſtowed.

Prin. Why, what's the matter?

Baſt. I came hither to tell you, and circumſtances ſhortned ,(for ſhe hath beene too long a talking of) the Lady is diſloyall.

Clau. Who! Hero?

Baſt. Even ſhee, Leonatoes Hero, your Hero,every mans Hero.

Clau. Diſloyall?

Baſt. The word is too good to paint out her wickedneſſe, I could ſay ſhe were worſe, thinke you of a worſe title, and I will fit her to it: wonder not till further warrant: goe but with mee to night, you ſhall ſee her chamber window entred, even the night before her wedding day, if you love her, then to morrow wed her: but it would better fit your honour to change your minde.

Clau. May this be ſo?

Prin. I will not thinke it.

Baſt. If you dare not truſt that you ſee, confeſſe not that you know: if you will follow mee, I will ſhew you enough, and when you have ſeene more, & heard more, proceed accordingly.

Clau. If I ſee any thing to night, why I ſhould not marry her to morrow in the congregation,where I ſhold wedde, there will I ſhame her.

Prin. And as I wooed for thee to obtaine her, I will joyne with thee to diſgrace her.

Baſt. I will diſparage her no farther, till you are my witneſſes, beare it coldly but till night, and let the iſſue ſhew it ſelfe.

Prin. O day untowardly turned?

Clau. O miſchiefe ſtrangely thwarting!

Baſt. O plague right well prevented! ſo will you ſay, when have ſeene the ſequele. Exeunt.

Enter Dogbery and his compartner with the watch.

Dog. Are you good men and true?

Verg. Yea, or elſe it were pitty but they ſhould ſuffer ſaluation body and ſoule.

Dog. Nay, that were a puniſhment too good for them, if they ſhould have any allegiance in them, being choſen for the Princes watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbour Dogbery.

Dog. Firſt, who thinke you the moſt deſartleſſe man to be Conſtable?

Watch. 1. Hugh Ote-cake ſir, or George Sea-coale, for they can write and reade.

Dog. Come hither neighbour Sea-coale, God hath bleſt you with a good name: to be a wel-favoured man, is the gift of fortune, but to write and reade, comes by Nature.

Watch. 2. Both which Maſter Conſtable

Dog. You have: I knew it would bee your anſwere: well,for your favour ſir, why give God thankes,& make no boaſt of it, and for your writing and reading, let that appeare when there is no neede of ſuch vanity, you are thought heere to be the moſt ſenſleſſe and fit man for the Conſtable of the watch: therefore beare you the lanthorne: this is your charge: You ſhall comprehend all vagrom men, you are to bid any man ſtand in the Princes name.

Watch. 2. How if a will not ſtand?

Dog. Why then take no note of him, but let him go, and preſently call the reſt of the Watch together, and thanke God you are ridde of a knave.

Verg. If he will not ſtand when he is bidden, hee is none of the Princes ſubiects.

Dog. True, and they are to meddle with none but the Princes ſubjects: you ſhall alſo make no noiſe in the ſtreetes: for, for the Watch to babble and talke, is moſt tollerable, and not to be indured.

Watch. We will rather ſleepe than talke, wee know what belongs to a Watch.

Dog. Why you ſpeake like an ancient and moſt quiet watchman,for I cannot ſee how ſleeping ſhould offend: only have a care that your bills be not ſtolne: well, you are to call at all the Alehouſes, and bid them that are drunke get them to bed.

Watch. How if they will not?

Dog. Why then let them alone till they are ſober, if they make you not then the better anſwere,you may ſay, they are not the men you tooke them for.

Watch. Well ſir.

Dog. If you meet a theefe, you may ſuſpect him, by vertue of your office, to be no true man: and for ſuch kinde of men, the leſſe you meddle or make with them, why the more is for your honeſty.

Watch. If wee know him to be a thiefe, ſhall wee not lay hands on him?

Dog. Truly by your office you may, but I thinke they that touch pitch will be defil'd: the moſt peaceable way for you, if you do take a theefe,is,to let him ſhew himſelfe what he is;and ſteale out of your company.

Ver. You have bin alwaies cal'd a mercifull mā partner.

Dog. Truely I would not hang a dog by my will,much more a man who hath any honeſty in him.

Verges. If you heare a child crie in the night, you muſt call to the nurſe, and bid her ſtill it.

Watch. How if the nurſe be aſleepe and will not heare us?

Dog. Why then depart in peace, and let the childe wake her with crying, for the ewe that will not heare her Lambe when it baes, will never anſwer a calfe when he bleates.

Verges. 'Tis very true.

Dog. This is the end of the charge: you conſtable are to preſent the Princes owne perſon, if you meete the Prince in the night, you may ſtaie him.

Verges. Nay birlady that I thinke a cannot.

Dog. Five ſhillings to one on't with any man that knowes the Statutes, he may ſtaie him, marry not without the prince be willing, for indeed the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to ſtay a man againſt his will.

Verges. Birlady I thinke it be ſo.

Dog. Ha, ah ha, well maiſters good night, and there be any matter of weight chances, call up me, keepe your fellowes counſailes, and your owne, and good night, come neighbour.

Watch. Well maiſters, we heare our charge, let us go ſitt here upon the Church bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dog. One word more, honeſt neighbors. I pray you watch about ſignior Leonatoes doore, for the wedding being there to morrow, there is a great coile to night, adiew, be vigilant I beſeech you. Exeunt.

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bor. What, Conrade?

Watch. Peace, ſtir not.

Bor. Conrade I ſay.

Con. Here man, I am at thy elbow.

Bor. Mas and my elbow itcht, I thought there would a ſcabbe follow.

Con. I will owe thee an anſwere for that, and now forward with thy tale.

Bor. Stand thee cloſe then under this penthouſe, for it driſſels raine, and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. Some treaſon maiſters, yet ſtand cloſe.

Bor. Therefore know, I have earned of Don Iohn a thouſand Ducates.

Con. Is it poſſible that any villanie ſhould be ſo deare?

Bor. Thou ſhould'ſt rather aske if it were poſſible any villanie ſhould bee ſo rich? for when rich villains have neede of poore ones, poore ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bor. That ſhewes thou art unconfirm'd, thou knoweſt that the faſhion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloake, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparell.

Bor. I meane the faſhion.

Con. Yes the faſhion is the faſhion.

Bor. Tuſh, I may as well ſay the foole's the foole, but ſeeſt thou not what a deformed theefe this faſhion is?

Watch. I know that deformed, a has bin a vile theefe, this vii. yeares, a goes up and downe like a gentle-man: I remember his name.

Bor. Did'ſt thou not heare ſome body?

Con. No, 'twas the vane on the houſe.

Bor. Seeſt thou not (I ſay) what a deformed thiefe this faſhion is, how giddily a turnes about all the Hotblouds, betweene foureteene & fiue & thirty, ſometimes faſhioning them like Pharaoes ſouldiours in the rechie painting, ſometime lik god Bels prieſts in the old Church window, ſomtime like the ſhaven Hercules in the ſmircht worm-eaten tapeſtrie, where his cod-peece ſeemes as maſſie as his club.

Con. All this I ſee, and ſee that the faſhion weares out more apparell then the man; but art not thou thy ſelfe giddie with the faſhion too that thou haſt ſhifted out of thy tale into telling me of the faſhion?

Bor. Not ſo neither, but know that I have to night wooed Margaret the Lady Heroes gentle-woman, by the name of Hero, ſhe leanes me out at her miſtris chamber-window, bids me a thouſand times good night: I tell this tale vildly. I ſhould firſt tell thee how the Prince Claudio and my Maiſter planted, and placed, and poſſeſſed by my Maiſter Don Iohn, ſaw a far off in the Orchard this amiable incounter.

Con. And thought thy Margaret was Hero?

Bor. Two of them did, the Prince and Claudio, but the divell my Maiſter knew ſhe was Margaret, and partly by his oathes, which firſt poſſeſt them, partly by the darke night which did deceive them, but chiefely, by my villanie, which did confirme any ſlander that Don Iohn had made, away went Claudio enraged, ſwore hee would meete her as he was apointed next morning at the Temple, and there, before the whole congregation ſhame her with what he ſaw o're night, and ſend her home againe without a husband.

Watch. 1. We charge you in the Princes name ſtand.

Watch. 2. Call up the right maiſter Conſtable, we have here recouered the moſt dangerous peece of lechery, that ever was knowne in the Common-wealth.

Watch. 1. And one Deformed is one of them, I know him, a weares a locke.

Con. Maiſters, maiſters.

Watch. 2. Youle be made bring deformed forth I warrant you,

Con. Maiſters, never ſpeake, we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Bor. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of theſe mens bils.

Con. A commodity in queſtion I warrant you, come weele obey you. Exeunt.

Enter Hero, and Margaret, and Urſula.

Hero. Good Urſula wake my coſin Beatrice, and deſire her to riſe.

Urſu. I will Lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urſ. Well.

Mar. Troth I thinke your other rebato were better.

Bero. No pray thee good Meg, Ile weare this.

Mar. By my troth's not ſo good, and I warrant your coſin will ſay ſo.

Bero. My coſin's a foole, and thou art another, ile weare none but this.

Mar. I like the new tire within excellently, if the haire were a thought browner: and your gown's a moſt rare faſhion yfaith, I ſaw the Dutcheſſe of Millaines gowne that they praiſe ſo.

Bero. O that exceedes they ſay,

Mar. By my troth's but a night-gowne in reſpect of yours, cloth a gold and cuts, and lac'd with ſilver, ſet with pearles, downe ſleeves, ſide ſleeves, and skirts, round underborn with a blewiſh tinſel, but for a fine queint gracefull and excellent faſhion, yours is worth ten on't.

Bero. God

Hero. God give mee joy to weare it, for my heart is exceeding heavy.

Marga. 'Twill be heavier ſoone, by the waight of a man.

Hero. Fie upon thee, art not aſham'd?

Marga. Of what Lady? of ſpeaking honourably? is not marriage honourable in a beggar? is not your Lord honourable without marriage? I thinke you would have me ſay, ſaving your reverence a husband: and bad thinking do not wreſt true ſpeaking, Ile offend no body, is there any harme in the heavier for a husband? none I thinke, and it be the right husband, and the right wife, otherwiſe 'tis light and not heavy, aske my Lady Beatrice elſe, here ſhe comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good marrow Coze.

Beat. Good morrow ſweet Hero.

Hero. Why how now? do you ſpeake in the ſick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, me thinkes.

Mar. Claps into Light a love, (that goes without a burden,) do you ſing it and Ile dance it.

Beat. Ye light alove with your heeles, then if your husband have ſtables enough, you'll looke he ſhall lacke no barnes.

Mar. O illegitimate conſtruction! I ſcorne that with my heeles.

Beat. 'Tis almoſt five a clocke coſin, 'tis time you were ready, by my troth I am exceeding ill, hey ho.

Mar. For a hauke, a horſe, or a husband?

Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.

Mar. Well, and you be not turn'd Turke, there's no more ſailing by the ſtarre.

Beat. What meanes the foole trow?

Mar. Nothing I, but God ſend every one their hearts deſire.

Hero. Theſe gloves the Count ſent mee, they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am ſtuft coſin, I cannot ſmell.

Mar. A maid and ſtuft! there's goodly catching of colde.

Beat. O God helpe me, God helpe me, how long have you profeſt apprehenſion?

Mar. Ever ſince you left it, doth not my wit become me rarely?

Beat. It is not ſeene enough, you ſhould weare it in your cap, by my troth I am ſicke.

Mar. Get you ſome of this diſtill'd carduus benedictus and lay it to your heart, it is the onely thing for a qualm.

Hero. Theere thou prickſt her with a thiſſell.

Beat. Benedictus, why benedictus? you have ſome morall in this benedictus.

Mar. Morall? no by my troth, I have no morall meaning, I meant plaine holy thiſſell, you may thinke perchance that I thinke you are in love, nay birlady I am not ſuch a foole to thinke what I liſt, nor I liſt not to thinke what I can, nor indeed I cannot thinke, if I would thinke my hart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love: yet Benedicke was ſuch another, and now is he become a man, he ſwore hee would never marry, and yet now in deſpight of his heart he eates his meat without grudging, and how you may be converted I know not, but me thinkes you looke with your eyes as other women do.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keepes.

Mar. Not a falſe gallop.

Enter Vrſula.

Vrſu. Madam, with draw, the Prince, the Count, ſignior Benedicke, Don Iohn, and all the gallants of the towne are come to fetch you to Church.

Hero. Helpe to dreſſe me good coze, good Meg, good Vrſula.

Enter Leonato, and the Conſtable, and the Headborough.

Leonato. What would you with me, honeſt neighbour?

Conſt. Dog. Mary ſir I would have ſome confidence with you, that decernes you nearely.

Leon. Briefe I pray you, for you ſee it is a buſie time with me.

Conſt. Dog. Mary this it is ſir.

Headb. Yes in truth it is ſir.

Leon. What is it my good friends?

Con. Dog. Goodman Verges ſir ſpeakes a little of the matter, an old man ſir, and his wits are not ſo blunt, as God helpe I would deſire they were, but infaith honeſt as the skin betweene his browes.

Head. Yes I thanke God, I am as honeſt as any man living, that is an old man, and no honeſter then I.

Con. Dog. Compariſons are odorous, palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Con. Dog. It pleaſes your worſhip to ſay ſo, but we are the poore Dukes Officers, but truly for mine owne part, if I were as tedious as a King, I could find in my heart to beſtow it all of your worſhip.

Leon. All thy tediouſneſſe on me, ah?

Con. Dog. Yea, and 'twere a thouſand times more than 'tis, for I heare as good exclamation on your Worſhip as of any man in the City, and though I be but a poore man, I am glad to heare it.

Head. And ſo am I.

Leon. I would faine know what you have to ſay.

Head. Marry ſir our watch to night, excepting your worſhips preſence, have tane a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Meſſina.

Con. Dog. A good old man ſir, he will be talking as they ſay, when the age is in the wit is out, God helpe us, it is a world to ſee: well ſaid yfaith neighbour Verges, well, God's a good man, and two men ride of horſe, one muſt ride behind, an honeſt ſoule yfaith ſir, by my troth he is, as ever broke bread, but God is to be worſhipt, all men are not alike, alas good neighbour.

Leon. Indeed neighbour he comes too ſhort of you.

Con. Dog. Gifts that God gives.

Leon. I muſt leave you.

Con. Dog. One word ſir, our watch ſir have indeed comprehended two aſpitious perſons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worſhip.

Leon. Take their examination your ſelfe, and bring it me, I am now in great haſte, as may appeare unto you.

Conſt. It ſhall be ſuffigance. (Exit.

Leon. Drinke ſome wine ere you goe: fare you well.

Meſſ. My Lord, they ſtay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. Ile wait upon them, I am ready.

Dogb. Goe good partner, goe get you to Francis Seecoale, bid him bring his pen and inkehorne to the Gaole: we are now to examine thoſe men.

Verges. And we muſt doe it wiſely.

Dogb. Wee will ſpare for no witte I warrant you:

heere's that ſhall driue ſome of them to a non-come, only get the learned writer to ſet downe our excommunication, and meet me at the Iaile. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Prince, Baſtard, Leonato, Frier, Claudio, Benedicke, Hero, and Beatrice.

Leo. Come Frier Francis, be briefe, onely to the plaine forme of marriage, and you ſhall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Fran. You come hither, my Lord, to marry this Lady.

Clau. No.

Leo. To be maried to her, Frier, you come to marrie her.

Frier. Lady, you come hither to be married to this Count.

Hero. I doe.

Frier. If either of you know any inward impediment why you ſhould not be conjoyned, I charge you on your ſoules to utter it.

Clau. Know you any, Hero?

Hero. None my Lord.

Frier. Know you any, Count?

Leon. I dare make his anſwer, None.

Clau. O what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do!

Bene. How now! interjections? why then, ſome be of laughing, as ha, ha, he.

Clau. Stand thee by Frier, father, by your leave,
Will you with free and vnconſtrained ſoule
Give me this maid your daughter?

Leon. As freely ſonne as God did give her me.

Clau. And what have I to give you back, whoſe worth
May counterpoiſe this rich and precious gift?

Prin. Nothing, unleſſe you render her againe.

Clau. Sweet Prince, you learne me noble thankfulnes:
There Leonato, take her backe againe,
Give not this rotten Orenge to your friend,
Shee's but the ſigne and ſemblance of her honour:
Behold how like a maid ſhe bluſhes heere!
O what authority and ſhew of truth
Can cunning ſinne cover it ſelfe withall!
Comes not that bloud, as modeſt evidence,
To witneſſe ſimple Vertue? would you not ſweare
All you that ſee her, that ſhe were a maide,
By theſe exterior ſhewes? But ſhe is none:
She knowes the heat of a luxurious bed:
Her bluſh is guiltineſſe, not modeſtie.

Leo. What do you meane, my Lord?

Clau. Not to be married,
Not knit my ſoule to an approved wanton.

Leon. Deere my Lord, if you in your owne proofe,
Have vanquiſht the reſiſtance of her youth,
And made defeat of her virginity. (her,

Clau. I know what you would ſay: if I have knowne
You will ſay, ſhe did imbrace me as a husband,
And ſo extenuate the forehand ſinne: No Leonato,
I never tempted her with word too large,
But as a brother to his ſiſter, ſhewed
Baſhfull ſincerity and comely loue.

Hero. And ſem'd I ever otherwiſe to you?

Clau. Out on thee ſeeming, I will write againſt it,
You ſeeme to me as Diane in her Orbe,
As chaſte as is the budde ere it be blowne:
But you are more intemperate in your blood,
Than Venus, or thoſe pampred animalls,
That rage in ſavage ſenſuality.

Hero. Is my Lord well, that he doth ſpeake ſo wide?

Leon. Sweete Prince, why ſpeake not you?

Prin. What ſhould I ſpeeke?
I ſtand diſhonour'd that have gone about,
To linke my deare friend to a common ſtale.

Leon. Are theſe things ſpoken, or do I but dreame?

Baſt. Sir, they are ſpoken, and theſe things are true.

Bene. This lookes not like a nuptiall.

Hero. True, O God!

Clau. Leonato, ſtand I here?
Is this the Prince? is this the Princes brother?
Is this face Heroes? are our eyes our owne?

Leon. All this is ſo, but what of this my Lord?

Clau. Let me but move one queſtion to your daughter,
And by that fatherly and kindly power,
That you have in her, bid her anſwer truly.

Leon. I charge thee do ſo as thou art my childe.

Hero. O God defend me, how am I beſet,
What kinde of catechizing call you this?

Leo. To make you anſwer truly to your name.

Hero. Is it not Hero? who can blot that name
With any juſt reproach?

Clau. Marry that can Hero,
Hero it ſelfe can blot out Heroes vertue.
What man was he, talkt with you yeſternight,
Out at your window betwixt twelve and one?
Now if you are a maid anſwer to this.

Hero. I talkt with no man at that howre my Lord.

Prin. Why then you are no maiden. Leonato,
I am ſorry you muſt heare: upon mine honor,
My ſelfe, my brother, and this grieved Count
Did ſee her, heare her, at that howre laſt night,
Talke with a ruffian at her chamber window,
Who hath indeed moſt like a liberall villaine,
Confeſt the vile encounters they have had
A thouſand times in ſecret.

Iohn. Fie, fie, they are not to be named my Lord,
Not to be ſpoken of,
There is not chaſtity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them: thus pretty Lady
I am ſorry for thy much miſgovernement.

Clau. O Hero! what a Hero hadſt thou beene
If halfe thy outward graces had beene placed
About thy thoughts and counſailes of thy heart?
But fare thee well, moſt foule, moſt faire, farewell
Thou pure impiety, and impious purity,
For thee Ile locke up all the gates of Love,
And on my eie-lids ſhall Conjecture hang,
To turne all beauty into thoughts of harme,
And never ſhall it more be gracious.

Leo. Hath no mans dagger here a point for me?

Beat. Why how now coſin, wherfore ſink you down?

Baſt. Come, let vs go: theſe things come thus to light,
Smother her ſpirits up.

Bene. How doth the Lady?

Beat. Dead I thinke, helpe vncle,
Hero, why Hero, Vncle, Signor Benedicke, Frier.

Leo. O Fate! take not away thy heauy hand,
Death is the faireſt cover for her ſhame
That may be wiſht for.

Beat. How now coſin Hero?
Fri. Have comfort Lady.
Leo. Doſt thou looke up?
Fri. Yea, wherefore ſhould ſhe not?
Leo. Wherefore? Why doth not every earthly thing
Cry ſhame upon her? Could ſhe heere denie
The ſtorie that is printed in her blood?
Do not live Hero, do not ope thine eyes:
For did I thinke thou wouldſt not quickly die,
Thought I thy ſpirits were ſtronger then thy ſhames,
My ſelfe would on the reareward of reproaches
Strike at thy life. Griev'd I, I had but one?
Chid I, for that at frugall Natures frame?
One too much by thee: why had I one?
Why ever was't thou lovely in my eies?
Why had I not with charitable hand
Tooke up a beggars iſſue at my gates,
Who ſmeered thus, and mir'd with infamie,
I might have ſaid, no part of it is mine:
This ſhame derives it ſelfe from unknowne loines,
But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd,
And mine that I was proud on, mine ſo much,
That I my ſelfe, was to my ſelfe not mine:
Valewing of her, why ſhe, O ſhe is falne
Into a pit of Inke, that the wide ſea
Hath drops too few to waſh her cleane againe,
And ſalt too little, which may ſeaſon give
To her foule tainted fleſh.

Bene. Sir, ſir, be patient: for my part, I am ſo attired in wonder, I know not what to ſay.

Bea. O on my ſoule my coſin is belied.
Bene. Lady, were you her bedfellow laſt night?
Bea. No truly: not, although vntill laſt night,
I have this twelvemonth bin her bedfellow.
Leon. Confirm'd, confirm'd, O that is ſtronger made
Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron.
Would the Prince lie, and Claudio would he lie
Who lov'd her ſo, that ſpeaking of her foulneſſe,
Waſh'd it with teares? Hence from her, let her die.

Fri. Heare me a little, for I have onely bene ſilent ſo long, and given way vnto this courſe of fortune, by noting of the Lady, I have markt
A thouſand bluſhing apparitions,
To ſtart into her face, a thouſand innocent ſhames,
In Angel whitneſſe beare away thoſe bluſhes,
And in her eie there hath appear'd a fire
To burne the errors that theſe Princes hold
Againſt her maiden truth. Call me a foole,
Truſt not my reading, nor my obſeruations,
Which with experimentall ſeale doth warrant
The tenure of my booke: truſt not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor diuinity,
If this ſweet Lady lye not guiltleſſe heere,
Vnder ſome biting error.
Leo. Friar, it cannot be:
Thou ſeeſt that all the Grace that ſhe hath left,
Is, that ſhe will not adde to her damnation
A ſinne of perjury, ſhe not denies it:
Why ſeek'ſt thou then to cover with excuſe,
That which appeares in proper nakedneſſe?
Fri. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of?
Hero. They know that do accuſe me, I know none:
If I know more of any man alive
Then that which maiden modeſtie doth warrant,
Let all my ſinnes lacke mercy. O my Father,
Prove you that any man with me converſt,
At houres unmeete, or that I yeſternight
Maintain'd the change of words with any creature,
Refuſe me, hate me, torture me to death.
Fri. There is ſome ſtrange miſpriſion in the Prince.
Ben. Two of them have the very bent of honor,
And if their wiſedomes be miſled in this:
The practiſe of it lives in Iohn the baſtard,
Whoſe ſpirits toile in frame of villanies.
Leo. I know not: if they ſpeake but truth of her,
Theſe hands ſhall teare her: If they wrong her honour,
The proudeſt of them ſhall well heare of it.
Time hath not yet ſo dried this bloud of mine,
Nor age ſo eate up my invention,
Nor Fortune made ſuch havocke of my meanes,
Nor my bad life reft me ſo much of friends,
But they ſhall finde, awak'd in ſuch a kinde,
Both ſtrength of limbe, and policie of minde,
Ability in meanes, and choiſe of friends,
To quit me of them throughly.
Fri. Pauſe awhile,
And let my counſell ſway you in this caſe,
Your daughter heere the Princeſſe (left for dead)
Let her awhile be ſecretly kept in,
And publiſh it, that ſhe is dead indeed:
Maintaine a mourning oſtentation,
And on your Families old monument,
Hang mournfull Epitaphes, and do all rites,
That appertaine vnto a buriall.
Leo. What ſhall become of this? What will this do?
Fri. Marry this well carried, ſhall on her behalfe,
Change ſlander to remorſe, that is ſome good,
But not for that dreame I on this ſtrange courſe,
But on this travaile looke for greater birth:
She dying, as it muſt be ſo maintain'd,
Vpon the inſtant that ſhe was accus'd,
Shall be lamented, pittied, and excus'd
Of every hearer: for it ſo fals out,
That what we have, we prize not to the worth,
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lack'd and loſt,
Why then we racke the value, then we finde
The vertue that poſſeſſion would not ſhew us
Whiles it was ours, ſo will it fare with Claudio:
When he ſhall heare ſhe dyed upon his words,
Th'Idea of her life ſhall ſweetly creepe
Into his ſtudy of imagination.
And every lovely Organ of her life,
Shall come apparel'd in more precious habite:
More moving, delicate, and ful of life,
Into the eye and proſpect of his ſoule
Than when ſhe liv'd indeed: then ſhall he mourne,
If ever Love had intereſt in his Liver,
And wiſh he had not ſo accuſed her:
No, though he thought his accuſation true:
Let this be ſo, and doubt not but ſucceſſe
Will faſhion the event in better ſhape,
Then I can lay it downe in likelihood.
But if all ayme but this be levell'd falſe,
The ſuppoſition of the Ladies death,
Will quench the wonder of her infamy.
And if it ſort not well, you may conceale her,
As beſt befits her wounded reputation,
In ſome recluſive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, mindes and injuries.
Bene. Signior Leonato, let the Frier adviſe you,
And though you know my inwardneſſe and love
Is very much vnto the Prince and Claudio,

Yet, by mine honor, I will deale in this,
As ſecretly and juſtly, as your ſoule
Should with your body.

Leo. Being that I flow in greefe,
The ſmalleſt twine may leade me.

Frier. 'Tis well conſented, preſently away,
For to ſtrange ſores, ſtrangely they ſtraine the cure,
Come Lady, die to live, this wedding day
Perhaps is but prolong'd, have patience & endure. Exit.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?

Beat. Yea, and I will weepe a while longer.

Bene. I will not deſire that.

Beat. You have no reaſon, I doe it freely.

Bene. Surely I do beleeve your fair coſin is wrong'd.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deſerve of mee that would right her!

Bene. Is there any way to ſhew ſuch friendſhip?

Beat. A very even way, but no ſuch friend.

Bene. May a man doe it?

Beat. It is a mans office, but not yours.

Bene. I do love nothing in the world ſo well as you, is not that ſtrange?

Beat. As ſtrange as the thing I know not, it were as poſſible for me to ſay, I loved nothing ſo well as you, but beleeve me not, and yet I lie not, I confeſſe nothing, nor I deny nothing, I am ſorry for my couſin.

Bene. By my ſword Beatrice thou lov'ſt me.

Beat. Do not ſweare by it and eat it.

Bene. I will ſweare by it that you love mee, and I will make him eat it that ſayes I love not you.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Bene. With no ſawce that can be deviſed to it, I proteſt I love thee.

Beat. Why then God forgive me.

Bene. What offence ſweet Beatrice?

Beat. You have ſtayed me in a happy howre, I was about to proteſt I loved you.

Bene. And do it with all thy heart.

Beat. I love you with ſo much of my heart, that none is left to proteſt.

Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio.

Bene. Ha, not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to denie, farewell.

Bene. Tarrie ſweet Beatrice.

Beat. I am gone, though I am heere, there is no love in you, nay I pray you let me go.

Bene. Beatrice.

Beat. Infaith I will go.

Bene. Wee'll be friends firſt.

Beat. You dare eaſier be friends with mee, than fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?

Beat. Is a not approved in the height a villaine, that hath ſlandered, ſcorned, diſhonoured my kinſwoman? O that I were a man! what, beare her in hand untill they come to take hands, and then with publike accuſation uncovered ſlander, unmittigated rancour? O God that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Heare me Beatrice.

Beat. Talke with a man out at a window, a proper ſaying.

Bene. Nay but Beatrice.

Beat. Sweet Hero, ſhe is wrong'd, ſhee is ſlandered, ſhe is vndone.

Bene. Bett?

Beat. Princes and Counties! ſurely a Princely teſtimony, a goodly Count-Comfect, a ſweet Gallant ſurely, O that I were a man for his ſake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my ſake! But manhood is melted into curtſies, valour into complement, and men are onely turned into tongue, and trim ones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules, that onely tels a lie, and ſweares it: I cannot be a man with wiſhing, therfore I will die a woman with grieving.

Bene. Tarry good Beatrice, by this hand I love thee.

Beat. Vſe it for my love ſome other way then ſwearing by it.

Bened. Thinke you in your ſoule the Count Claudio hath wrong'd Hero?

Beat. Yea, as ſure as I have a thought, or a ſoule.

Bene. Enough, I am engagde, I will challenge him, I will kiſſe your hand, and ſo leave you: by this hand Claudio ſhall render me deere account: as you heare of me, ſo thinke of me: go comfort your coosin, I muſt ſay ſhe is dead, and ſo farewell. Exeunt.

Enter the Conſtables, Borachio, and the Towne Clerke in gownes.

Keeper. Is our whole diſſembly appeard?

Cowley. O a ſtoole and cuſhion for the Sexton.

Sexton. Which be the malefactors?

Andrew. Marry that am I, and my partner.

Cowley. Nay that's certaine, wee have the exhibition to examine.

Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined, let them come before maſter Conſtable.

Kemp. Yea marry, let them come before mee, what is your name friend?

Bor. Borachio.

Kem. Pray write downe Borachio. Yours ſirra.

Con. I am a Gentleman ſir, and my name is Conrade.

Keo. Write downe Maſter gentleman Conrade: maiſters, do you ſerve God: maiſters, it is proved already that you are little better than falſe knaves, and it will go neere to be thought ſo ſhortly, how anſwer you for your ſelves?

Con. Marry ſir, we ſay we are none.

Kemp. A marvellous witty fellow I aſſure you, but I will go about with him: come you hither ſirra, a word in your eare ſir, I ſay to you, it is thought you are falſe knaves.

Bor. Sir, I ſay to you, we are none.

Kemp. Well, ſtand aſide, 'fore God they are both in a tale: have you writ drowne that they are none?

Sext. Maiſter Conſtable, you go not the way to examine, your muſt call forth the watch that are their accuſers.

Kem. Yea marry, that's the efteſt way, let the watch come forth: maſters, I charge you in the Princes name, accuſe theſe men.

Watch 1. This man ſaid ſir, that Don Iohn the Princes brother was a villaine.

Kemp. Write down, Prince Iohn a villaine: why this is flat perjurie, to call a Princes brother villaine.

Bor. Maiſter Conſtable.

Kem. Pray thee fellow peace, I do not like thy looke, I promiſe thee.

Sexton. What heard you him ſay elſe?

Watch 2. Mary that he had received a thouſand Dukates of Don Iohn, for accuſing the Lady Hero wrongfully.

Kemp. Flat Burglarie as ever was committed.

Conſt. Yea by th'maſſe that it is.

Sexton. What elſe fellow?

Watch. 1. And that Count Claudio did meane upon his words, to diſgrace Hero before the whole aſſembly, and not marry her.

Kemp. O villaine! thou wilt be condemn'd into everlaſting redemption for this.

Sexton. Whas elſe?

Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more maiſters then you can deny, Prince Iohn is this morning ſecretly ſtolne away: Hero was in this manner accus'd, in this very manner refus'd, and upon the griefe of this ſodainely died: Maiſter Conſtable, let theſe men be bound, and brought to Leonato, I will goe before, and ſhew him their examination.

Conſt. Come, let them be opinion'd.

Sex. Let them be in the hands of Coxcombe.

Kem. Gods my life, where's the Sexton? let him write downe the Princes Officer Coxcombe: come, binde them thou naughty varlet.

Couley. Away, you are an aſſe, you are an aſſe.

Kemp. Doſt thou not ſuſpect my place? doſt thou not ſuſpect my yeeres? O that hee were heere to write mee downe an aſſe! but maiſters, remember that I am an aſſe: though it be not written down, yet forget not yͭ I am an aſſe: No thou villaine, yͧ art full of piety as ſhall be prov'd upon thee by good witneſſe, I am a wiſe fellow, and which is more, an officer, and which is more, a houſhoulder, and which is more, as pretty a peece of fleſh as any in Meſſina, and one that knowes the Law, goe to, and a rich fellow enough, go to, and a fellow that hath had loſſes, and one that hath two gownes, and every thing handſome about him: bring him away: O that I had been writ downe an aſſe! Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Leonato and his brother.

Brother. If you goe on thus, you will kill your ſelfe,
And 'tis not wiſedome thus to ſecond griefe,
Againſt your ſelfe.

Leon. I pray thee ceaſe thy counſaile,
Which falls into mine eares as profitleſſe,
As water in a ſiue: give not me counſaile,
Nor let no comfort els delight mine eare,
But ſuch a one whoſe wrongs doth ſute with mine.
Bring me a father that ſo lov'd his childe,
Whoſe joy of her is over-whelmed like mine.
And bid him ſpeake of patience,
Meaſure his woe the length and bredth of mine,
And let it anſwere every ſtraine for ſtraine,
As thus for thus, and ſuch a griefe for ſuch,
In every lineament, branch, ſhape, and forme:
If ſuch a one will ſmile and ſtroke his beard,
And ſorrow, wagge, crie hem, when he ſhould grone,
Patch griefe with proverbs, make misfortune drunke,
With-candle-waſters: bring him yet to me,
And I of him will gather patience:
But there is no ſuch man, for brother, men
Can counſaile, and ſpeake comfort to that griefe,
Which they themſelves not feele, but taſting it,
Their counſaile turnes to paſſion, which before,
Would give preceptiall medicine to rage,
Fetter ſtrong madneſſe in a ſilken thred,
Charme ache with ayre, and agony with words.
No, no, 'tis all mens office, to ſpeake patience
To thoſe that wring vnder the load of ſorrow:
But no mans vertue nor ſufficiencie
To be ſo morall, when he ſhall endure
The like himſelfe: therefore give me no counſaile,
My griefs cry lowder then advertiſement.

Broth. Therein do men from children nothing differ.

Leo. I pray thee peace, I will be fleſh and bloud,
For there was never yet Philoſopher,
That could endure the tooth-ake patiently,
How ever they have writ the ſtile of gods,
And made a puſh at chance and ſufferance.

Broth. Yet bend not all the harme upon your ſelfe,
Make thoſe that doe offend you, ſuffer too.

Leon. There thou ſpeak'ſt reaſon, nay I will doe ſo,
My ſoule doth tell me, Hero is belied,
And that ſhall Claudio know, ſo ſhall the Prince,
And all of them that thus diſhonour her.

Enter Prince and Claudio.

Brot. Here comes the Prince and Claudio haſtily.

Prin. Good den, good den.

Clau. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Heare you my Lords?

Prin. We have ſome haſte Leonato.

Leo. Some haſte my Lord! well, fare you well my Lord,
Are you ſo haſty now? well, all is one.

Prin. Nay, do not quarrell with us, good old man.

Brot. If he could right himſelfe with quarrelling,
Some of us would ly low.

Clau. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry thou doſt wrong me, thou diſſembler, thou:
Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy ſword,
I feare thee not.

Clau. Marry beſhrew my hand,
If it ſhould give your age ſuch cauſe of feare,
Infaith my hand meant nothing to my ſword.

Leo. Tuſh, tuſh, man, never fleere and jeſt at me,
I ſpeake not like a dotard, nor a foole,
As under priviledge of age to bragge,
What I have done being yong, or what would doe,
Were I not old, know Claudio to thy head,
Thou haſt ſo wrong'd my innocent childe and me,
That I am forc'd to lay my reverence by,
And with grey haires and bruiſe of many daies,
Doe challenge thee to triall of a man,
I ſay thou haſt belied mine innocent childe.
Thy ſlander hath gone through and through her heart,
And ſhe lies buried with her anceſtors:
O in a tombe where never ſcandall ſlept,
Save this of hers, fram'd by thy villanie.

Clau. My villany?

Leon. Thine Claudio, thine I ſay.

Prin. You ſay not right old man.

Leon. My Lord, my Lord,
Ile prove it on his body if he dare,
Deſpight his nice fence, and his active practiſe,
His Maie of youth, and bloome of luſtihood.

Clau. Away, I will not have to do with you.

Leo. Canſt thou ſo daffe me? thou haſt kild my child,
If thou kilſt me boy, thou ſhalt kill a man.

Bro. He ſhall kill two of us, and men indeed,
But that's no matter, let him kill one firſt:

Win me and weare me, let him anſwere me,
Come follow me boy, come ſir boy, come follow me
Sir boy, ile whip you from your foyning fence,
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother.

Bro. Content your ſelfe, God knows I lov'd my neece;
And ſhe is dead, ſlander'd to death by villaines,
That dare as well anſwer a man indeed,
As I dare take a ſerpent by the tongue.
Boyes, apes, braggarts, Iackes, milke-ſops.

Leon. Brother Anthony.

Brot. Hold you content, what man? I know them, yea
And what they weigh, even to the vtmoſt ſcruple,
Scambling, out-facing, faſhion-mongring boyes,
That lye, and cog, and flout, deprave, and ſlander,
Goe antiquely and ſhow outward hidiouſneſſe,
And ſpeake of halfe a dozen dang'rous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durſt.
And this is all.

Leon. But brother Anthony.

Ant. Come, 'tis no matter,
Do not you meddle, let me deale in this.

Pri. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience,
My heart is ſory for your daughters death:
But on my honour ſhe was charg'd with nothing
But was true, and very full of proofe.

Leon. My Lord, my Lord.

Prin. I will not heare you.

Enter Benedicke.

Leo. No! come brother, away, I will be heard.

Exeunt ambo.

Bro. And ſhall, or ſome of us will ſmart for it.

Prin. See, ſee, here comes the man we went to ſeeke.

Clau. Now ſignior, what newes?

Ben. Good day my Lord.

Prin. Welcome ſignior, you are almoſt come to part almoſt a fray.

Clau. Wee had like to have had our two noſes ſnapt off with two old men without teeth.

Prin. Leonato and his brother, what think'ſt thou? had wee fought, I doubt we ſhould have beene too yong for them.

Ben. In a falſe quarrell there is no true valour, I came to ſeeke you both.

Clau. We have beene up and downe to ſeeke thee, for we are high proofe melancholly, and would faine have it beaten away, wilt thou uſe thy wit?

Ben. It is in my ſcabberd, ſhall I draw it?

Prin. Doeſt thou weare thy wit by thy ſide?

Clau. Never any did ſo, though very many have beene beſide their wit, I will bid thee draw, as we do the minſtrels, draw to pleaſure us.

Prin. As I am an honeſt man he lookes pale, art thou ſicke, or angry?

Clau. What! courage man: what though care kil'd a cat, thou haſt mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Ben. Sir, I ſhall meete your wit in the careere, and you charge it againſt me, I pray you chuſe another ſubject.

Clau. Nay then give him another ſtaffe, this laſt was broke croſſe.

Prin. By this light, he changes more and more, I think he be angry indeed.

Clau. If he be, he knowes how to turne his girdle.

Ben. Shall I ſpeake a word in your eare?

Clau. God bleſſe me from a challenge.

Ben. You are a villaine, I jeſt not, I will make it good how yow dare, with what you dare, and when you dare: do me right, or I will proteſt your cowardiſe: you have kill'd a ſweete Lady, and her death ſhall fall heavy on you, let me heare from you.

Clau. Well, I will meete you, ſo I may have good cheare.

Prin. What, a feaſt?

Clau. I faith I thanke him, he hath bid me to a calves head and a Capon, the which if I do not carve moſt curiouſly, ſay my knife's naught, ſhall I not finde a woodcocke too?

Ben. Sir, your wit ambles well, it goes eaſily.

Prin. Ile tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit the other day: I ſaid thou hadſt a fine wit: true ſaies ſhe, a fine little one: n[illegible] ſaid I, a great wit: right ſaies ſhee, a great groſſe one: nay ſaid I, a good wit: juſt ſaid ſhe, it hurts no body: nay ſaid I, the gentleman is wiſe: certain ſaid ſhe, a wiſe gentleman: nay ſaid I, he hath the tongues: that I beleeve ſaid ſhee, for hee ſwore a thing to me on munday night, which he forſwore on tueſday morning: there's a double touge, there's two tongues: thus did ſhee an howre together tranſ-ſhape thy particular vertues, yet at laſt ſhe concluded with a ſigh, thou waſt the propreſt man in Italy.

Clau. For the which ſhe wept heartily, and ſaid ſhee car'd not.

Prin. Yea that ſhe did, but yet for all that, and if ſhee did not hate him deadly, ſhe would love him dearely, the old mans daughter told us all.

Clau. All, all, and moreover, God ſaw him when hee was hid in the garden.

Prin. But when ſhall we ſet the ſavage Bulls hornes on the ſenſible Benedicks head?

Clau. Yea and text vnder-neath, heere dwells Benedicke the married man.

Bene. Fare you well, Boy, you know my minde, I will leave you now to your goſſep-like humor, you breake jeſts as braggards do their blades, which God be thanked hurt not: my Lord, for your many courteſies I thank you, I muſt diſcontinue your company, your brother the Baſtard is fled from Meſſina: you have among you, kill'd a ſweete and innocent Lady: for my Lord Lackebeard there, he and I ſhall meete, and till then peace be with him.

Prin. He is in earneſt.

Clau. In moſt profound earneſt, aud Ile warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

Prin. And hath challeng'd thee.

Clau. Moſt ſincerely.

Prin. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hoſe, and leaves off his wit.

Enter Conſtable, Conrade, and Borachio.

Clau. He is then a Giant to an Ape, but then is an Ape a Doctor to ſuch a man.

Prin. But ſoft you, let me ſee, plucke up my heart, and be ſad, did he not ſay my brother was fled?

Conſt. Come you ſir, if juſtice cannot tame you, ſhee ſhall ne're weigh more reaſons in her ballance, nay, and you be a curſing hypocrite once, you muſt be lookt to.

Prin. How now, two of my brothers men bound? Borachio one,

Clau. Harken after their offence my Lord.

Prin. Officers, what offence have theſe men done:

Con. Marrie

Conſt. Marrie ſir; they have committed falſe report, moreover they have ſpoken untruths, ſecondarily they are ſlanders, ſixt and laſtly; they have belyed a Ladie, thirdly, they have verified unjuſt things, and to conclude they are lying knaves.

Prin. Firſt I aske thee what they have done, thirdly I aske thee what's their offence, ſixt and laſtly why they are committed, and to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

Clau. Rightly reaſoned, and in his owne diviſion, and by my troth there's one meaning well ſuted.

Prin. Whom have you offended maiſters, that you are thus bound to your anſwer? this learned Conſtable is too cunning to be vnderſtood, what's your offence?

Bor. Sweete Prince, let me go no farther to mine anſwere: do you heare me, and let this Count kill mee: I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wiſedomes could not diſcover, theſe ſhallow fooles have brought to light, who in the night overheard me confeſſing to this man; how Don Iohn your brother incenſed me to ſlander the Lady Hero, how you were brought into the Orchard, and ſaw me court Margaret in Heroes garments, how you diſgrac'd her when you ſhould marrie her: my villanie they have upon record, which I had rather ſeale with my death, then repeate over to my ſhame: the Lady is dead upon mine and my maiſters falſe accuſation: and briefely, I deſire nothing but the reward of a villaine.

Prin. Runs not this ſpeech like yron through your bloud?

Clau. I have drunke poiſon whiles he vtter'd it.

Prin. But did my Brother ſet thee on to this?

Bor. Yea, and paid me rich for the practiſe of it.

Prin. He is compos'd and fram'd of treachery,
And fled he is upon this villany.

Clau. Sweet Hero, now thy image doth appeare
In the rare ſemblance that I lov'd it firſt.

Conſt. Come, bring away the plaintiffes, by this time our Sexton hath reformed Signior Leonato of the matter: and maiſters, do not forget to ſpecifie when time & place ſhall ſerve, that I am an Aſſe.

Con. 2. Here, here comes maiſter Signior Leonato, and the Sexton too.

Enter Leonato.

Leon. Which is the villaine? let me ſee his eyes,
That when I note another man like him,
I may avoide him: which of theſe is he?

Bor. If you woul know your wronger, looke on me.

Leon. Art thou art thou the ſlave that with thy breath haſt kild mine innocent childe?

Bor. Yea, even I alone.

Leon. No, not ſo villaine, thou belieſt thy ſelfe,
Here ſtand a paire of honourable men,
A third is fled that had a hand in it:
I thanke you Princes for my daughters death,
Record it with your high and worthy deedes,
'Twas bravely done, if you bethinke you of it.

Clau. I know not how to pray your patience,
Yet I muſt ſpeake, chooſe your revenge your ſelfe,
Impoſe me to what penance your invention
Can lay upon my ſinne, yet ſinn'd I not,
But in miſtaking.

Prin. By my ſoule nor I,
And yet to ſatisfie this good old man,
I would bend vnder any heavy waight,
That heele enjoyne me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you daughter live,
That were impoſſible, but I praie you both,
Poſſeſſe the people in Meſſina here,
How innocent ſhe died, and if your love
Can labour aught in ſad invention,
Hang her an epitaph upon her toomb,
And ſing it to her bones, ſing it to night:
To morrow morning come you to my houſe,
And ſince you could not be my ſonne in law,
Be yet my Nephew: my brother hath a daughter,
Almoſt the copie of my childe that's dead,
And ſhe alone is heire to both of us,
Give her the right you ſhould have giv'n her coſin,
And ſo dies my revenge.

Clau. O noble ſir!
Your overkindneſſe doth wring teares from me,
I do embrace your offer, and diſpoſe
For henceforth of poore Claudio.

Leon. To morrow then I will expect your comming,
To night I take my leave: this naughty man
Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,
Who I beleeve was packt in all this wrong,
Hired to it by your brother.

Bor. No by my ſoule ſhe was not,
Nor knew not what ſhe did when ſhe ſpoke to me,
But alwaies hath bin juſt and vertuous,
In any thing that I do know by her.

Conſt. Moreover ſir, which indeed is not under white and blacke, this plaintiffe here, the offendour did call mee aſſe, I beſeech you let it be remembred in his puniſhment, and alſo the watch heard them talke of one Deformed, they ſay he weares a key in his eare and a lock hanging by it, and borrowes mony in Gods name, the which he hath us'd ſo long, and never paied, that now men grow hard-harted and will lend nothing for Gods ſake: praie you examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thanke thee for thy care and honeſt paines.

Conſt. Your worſhip ſpeakes like a moſt thankefull & reverend youth, and I praiſe God for you.

Leon. There's for thy paines.

Conſt. God ſave the foundation.

Leon. Goe, I diſcharge thee of thy priſoner, and I thanke thee.

Conſt. I leave an arrant knave with your worſhip, which I beſeech your worſhip to correct your ſelfe, for the example of others: God keepe your worſhippe, I wiſh your worſhip well, God reſtore you to health, I humbly give you leave to depart, and if a merrie meeting may bee wiſht, God prohibite it: come neighbour.

Leon. Vntill to morrow morning, Lords, farewell.

Exeunt.

Brot. Farewell my Lords, wee looke for you to morrow.

Prin. We will not faile.

Clau. To night ile mourne with Hero.

Leon. Bring you theſe fellowes on, wee'l talke with Margaret, how her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow.

Exeunt.

Enter Benedicke and Margaret.

Ben. Pray thee ſweete Miſtris Margaret, deſerve well at my hands, by helping me to the ſpeech of Beatrice.

Mar. Will you then writte me a Sonnet in praiſe of my beautie?

Bene. In ſo high a ſtile Margaret, that no man living ſhall come over it, for in moſt comely truth thou deſerveſt it.

Mar. To have no man come over me, why, ſhall I alwaies keepe below ſtaires?

Bene. Thy wit is as quicke as the grey-hounds mouth, it catches.

Mar. And yours, as blunt as the Fencers foiles, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A moſt manly wit Margaret, it will not hurt a woman: and ſo I pray thee call Beatrice, I giue thee the bucklers.

Mar. Give us the ſwords, wee have bucklers of our owne.

Bene. If you uſe them Margaret, you muſt put in the pikes with a vice, and they are dangerous weapons for Maides.

Mar. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who I thinke hath legges. Exit Margarite.

Bene. And therefore will come. The god of love that ſits above, and knowes me, and knowes me, how pittifull I deſerve. I meane in ſinging, but in loving, Leander the good ſwimmer, Troilous the firſt imployer of pandars, and a whole booke full of theſe quondam carpet-mongers, whoſe name yet runne ſmoothly in the even rode of a blanke verſe, why they were never ſo truely turned over as my poore ſelfe in love: marry I cannot ſhew it rime, I have tried, I can finde out no rime to Ladie but badie an innocents rime: for ſcorne, horne, a hard rime: for ſchoole foole, a babling rime: very ominous endings, no, I was not borne vnder a riming Plannet, for I cannot wooe in feſtivall tearmes:

Enter Beatrice.

Sweete Beatrice would'ſt thou come when I cal'd thee?

Beat. Yea Signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O ſtay but till then.

Beat. Then, is ſpoken: fare you well now, and yet ere I go, let me go with that I came, which is, with knowing what hath paſt betweene you and Claudio.

Bene. Onely foule words, and thereupon I will kiſſe thee.

Beat. Foule words is but foule wind, and foule winde is but foule breath, and foule breath is noiſome, therefore I will depart unkiſt.

Bene. Thou haſt frighted the word out of his right ſence, ſo forcible is thy wit, but I muſt tell thee plainely, Claudio vndergoes my challenge, and either I muſt ſhortly heare from him, or I will ſubſcribe him a coward, and I pray thee now tell me, for which of my bad parts didſt thou firſt fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together, which maintain'd ſo politique a ſtate of evill, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them: but for which of my good parts did you firſt ſuffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epithite, I do ſuffer love indeede, for I love thee againſt my will.

Bert. In ſpight of your heart I thinke, alas poore heart, if you ſpight it for my ſake, I will ſpight it for yours, for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bened. Thou and I are too wiſe to wooe peaceablie.

Beat. It appeares not in this confeſſion, there's not one wiſe man among twenty that will praiſe himſelfe.

Bene. An old, an old inſtance Beatrice, that liv'd in the time of good neighbours, if a man doe not erect in this age his owne tombe ere he dies, hee ſhall live no longer in monuments, then the Bels ring, and the Widdow weepes.

Beat. And how long is that thinke you?

Bene. Queſtion, why an hower in clamour and a quarter in rhewme, therfore is it moſt expedient for the wiſe, if Don worme (his conſcience) finde no impediment to the contrary, to be the trumpet of his owne vertues, as I am to my ſelfe ſo much for praiſing my ſelfe, who I my ſelfe will beare witneſſe is praiſe worthy, and now tell me how doth your coſin?

Beat: Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Enter Vrſula.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend, there will I leave you too, for here comes one in haſte.

Vrſ. Madam, you muſt come to your Vncle, yonders old coile at home, it is proved my Lady Hero hath bin falſely accuſde, the Prince and Claudio mightily abuſde, and Don Iohn is the author of all, who is fled and gone: will you come preſently?

Beat. Will you go heare this newes Signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes: and moreover, I will goe with thee to thy Vncles. Exeunt.

Enter Claudio, Prince, and three or foure with Tapers.

Clau. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Lord. It is my Lord. Epitaph.

Done to death by ſlanderous tongues,
Was the Hero that here lies:
Death in guerdon of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies:
So the life that died with ſhame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.
Hang thou there upon the tombe,
Praiſing her when I am dombe.

Clau. Now muſick ſound and ſing your ſolemne hymne.

Song.

Pardon goddeſſe of the night,
Those that ſlew thy virgin knight,
For the which with ſongs of woe,
Round about her tombe they goe:
Midnight aſſiſt our mone, helpe vs to ſigh and grone.
Heavily, heavily.
Graues yawne and yeelde your dead,
Till death be vttered,
Heavenly heavenly.

Lo. Now unto thy bones good night, yeerely will I do (this right.

Prin. Good morrow maiſters, put your Torches out,
The wolves have preied, and looke, the gentle day
Before the wheeles of Phœbus, round about
Dapples the drowſie Eaſt with ſpots of grey:
Thanks to you all, and leave us, fare you well.

Clau. Good morrow maiſters, each his ſeverall way.

Prin. Come let us hence, and put on other weedes,
And then to Leonatoes we will goe.

Clau. And Hymen now with luckier iſſue ſpeed;

Then this for whom we rendred up this woe. Exeunt.

Enter Leonato, Bene. Marg. Vrſula, old man, Frier, Hero.

Frier. Did I not tell you ſhe was innocent?

Leo. So are the Prince and Claudio who accus'd her,
Vpon the errour that you heard debated:
But Margaret was in ſome fault for this,
Although againſt her will as it appeares,
In the true courſe of all the queſtion.

Old. Well, I am glad that all things ſort ſo well.

Ben. And ſo am I, being elſe by faith enforc'd,
To call yong Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leo. Well daughter, and yong Gentlewomen all,
Withdraw into a Chamber by your ſelves,
And when I ſend for you, come hither mask'd:
The Prince and Claudio promis'd by this houre
To viſit me, you know your office Brother,
You muſt be father to your Brothers daughter,
And give her to yong Claudio. Exeunt Ladies.

Old. Which I will doe with confirm'd countenance.

Ben. Frier, I muſt intreat your paines, I thinke.

Frier. To doe what Signior?

Ben. To binde me, or undoe me, one of them:
Signior Leonato, truth it is good Signior,
Your Neece regards me with an eye of favour.

Old. That eye my daughter lent her, 'tis moſt true.

Ben. And I doe with an eye of love requite her.

Leo. The ſight whereof I thinke you had from me,
From Claudio, and the Prince, but what's your will?

Ben. Your anſwer ſir is Enigmaticall,
But for my will, my will is, your good will
May ſtand with ours, this day to be conjoyn'd,
I'th ſtate of honourable marriage,
In which good Frier I ſhall deſire your helpe.

Leo. My heart is with your liking.

Fryer. And my helpe.

Enter Prince and Claudio with attendants.

Prin. Good morrow to this faire aſſembly.

Leo. Good morrow Prince, good morrow Claudio,
We here attend you, are you yet determin'd,
To day to marry with my brothers daughter?

Clau. Ile hold my minde were ſhe an Ethiope.

Leo. Call her forth brother, heres the Frier ready.

Prin. Good morrow Benedicke, why what's the matter?
That you have ſuch a February face,
So full of froſt, of ſtorme, and clowdineſſe.

Clau. I thinke he thinkes upon the ſavage bull:
Tuſh, feare not man, we'll tip thy hornes with gold,
And all Europa ſhall rejoyce at thee,
As once Europa did at luſty Iove,
When he would play the noble beaſt in love.

Ben. Bull Iove ſir, had an amiable low,
And ſome ſuch ſtrange bull leapt your fathers Cow,
A got a Calfe in that ſame noble feat,
Much like to you, for you have juſt his bleat.

Enter brother, Hero, Beatrice, Margaret, Vrſula.

Cla. For this I owe you: here comes other recknings.
Which is the Lady I muſt ſeize upon?

Leo. This ſame is ſhe, and I doe give you her.

Cla. Why then ſhe's mine, ſweet let me ſee your face.

Leon. No that you ſhall not, till you take her hand,
Before this Frier, and ſweare to marry her.

Clau. Give me your hand before this holy Frier,
I am your husband if you like of me.

Hero. And when I liv'd I was your other wife,
And when you lov'd, you were my other husband.

Clau. Another Hero?

Hero. Nothing certainer.
One Hero died, but I doe live,
And ſurely as I live, I am a maid.

Prin. The former Hero, Hero that is dead.

Leon. Shee died my Lord, but whiles her ſlander liv'd.

Frier. All this amazement can I qualifie,
When after that the holy rites are ended,
Ile tell you largely of faire Heroes death:
Meane time let wonder ſeeme familiar,
And to the chappell let us preſently.

Ben. Soft and faire Frier, which is Beatrice?

Beat. I anſwer to that name, what is your will?

Bene. Doe not you love me?

Beat. Why no, no more then reaſon.

Bene. Why then your Vncle, and the Prince, & Claudio, have beene deceived, they ſwore you did.

Beat. Doe not you love me?

Bene. Troth no, no more then reaſon.

Beat. Why then my Coſin Margaret and Vrſula
Are much deceiu'd, for they did ſweare you did.

Bene. They ſwore you were almoſt ſicke for me.

Beat. They ſwore you were wel-nye dead for me.

Bene. 'Tis no matter, then you doe not love me?

Beat. No truly, but in friendly recompence.

Leon. Come Coſin, I am ſure you love the gentleman.

Clau. And Ile be ſworne upon't that he loves her,
For heres a paper written in his hand,
A halting ſonnet of his owne pure braine,
Faſhioned to Beatrice.

Hero. And heeres another,
Writ in my coſins hand, ſtolne from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedicke.

Bene. A miracle, here's our owne hands againſt our hearts: come I will have thee, but by this light I take thee for pittie.

Beat. I would not denie you, but by this good day, I yeeld upon great perſwaſion, and partly to ſave your life, for I was told, you were in a conſumption.

Leon. Peace I will ſtop your mouth.

Prin. How doſt thou Benedicke the married man?

Bene. Ile tell thee what Prince: a Colledge of witte-crackers cannot flout mee out of my humour, doſt thou thinke I care for a Satyre or an Epigram? no, if a man will be beaten with braines, a ſhall weare nothing handſome about him: in briefe, ſince I do purpoſe to marry, I will thinke nothing to any purpoſe that the world can ſay againſt it: and therefore never flout at me, for I have ſaid againſt it: for man is a giddy thing, and this is my concluſion: for thy part Claudio, I did thinke to have beaten thee, but in that thou art like to be my kinſman, live unbruis'd, and love my coſin.

Cla. I had well hop'd ÿ wouldeſt have denied Beatrice, ÿ I might have cudgel'd thee out of thy ſingle life, to make thee a double dealer, which out of queſtion thou wilt be, if my Couſin do not looke exceeding narrowly to thee.

Bene. Come, come, we are friends, let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives heeles.

Leon. Wee'll have dancing afterwards.

Bene. Firſt, of my word, therefore play muſicke. Prince, thou art ſad, get thee a wife, get thee a wife, there is no ſtaffe more reverend then one tipt with horn. Enter Meſ.

Meſſen. My Lord, your brother Iohn is tane in flight,
And brought with armed men backe to Meſſina.

Bene. Thinke not on him till to morrow, ile deviſe thee brave puniſhments for him: ſtrike up Pipers. Dance.

FINIS.

Loves Labour's loſt.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Ferdinand King of Navarre, Biron, Longavile, and Dumaine.

Ferdinand.

LEt Fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live regiſtred upon our brazen Tombes,
And then grace us in the diſgrace of death:
When ſpight of cormorant devouring Time,
Th'endevour of this preſent breath may buy
That honour which ſhall bate his Sythes keene edge,
And make us heires of all eternitie.
Therefore brave Conquerors (for ſo you are)
That warre againſt your owne affections,
And the huge Army of the worlds deſires;
Our late Edict ſhall ſtrongly ſtand in force,
Navarre ſhall be the wonder of the world.
Our Court ſhall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in living Art.
You three, Biron, Dumaine, and Longavile,
Have ſworne for three yeeres terme to live with me,
My fellow Schollers, and to keepe thoſe ſtatutes
That are recorded in this ſcedule here.
Your oathes are paſt, and now ſubſcribe your names:
That his owne hand may ſtrike his honour downe,
That violates the ſmalleſt branch herein:
If you are arm'd to doe, as ſworne to doe,
Subſcribe to your deepe oathes, and keepe them to.
Long. I am reſolv'd, 'tis but a three yeeres faſt:
The minde ſhall banquet, though the body pine,
Fat paunches have leane pates: and dainty bits,
Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits.
Dumain. My loving Lord, Dumaine is mortified,
The groſſer manner of theſe worlds delights,
He throwes upon the groſſe worlds baſer ſlaves:
To love, to wealth, to pompe, I pine and die,
With all theſe living in Philoſophy.
Biron. I can but ſay their proteſtation over,
So much (deare Liege) I have already ſworne,
That is, to live and ſtudy here three yeeres.
But there are other ſtrict obſervances:
As not to ſee a woman in that terme,
Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
And one day in a weeke to touch no foode:
And but one meale on every day beſide:
The which I hope is not enrolled there.
And then to ſleepe but three houres in the night,
And not be ſeene to winke of all the day.
When I was wont to thinke no harme all night,
And make a darke night too of halfe the day:
Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
O, theſe are barren taskes, too hard to keepe,
Not to ſee Ladies, ſtudy, faſt, not ſleepe.
Ferd. Your oath is paſt to paſſe away from theſe.
Biron. Let me ſay no my Liege, and if you pleaſe,
I onely ſwore to ſtudy with your Grace,
And ſtay here in your Court for three yeares ſpace.
Long. You ſwore to that Biron, and to the reſt.
Bir. By yea and nay ſir, then I ſwore in jeſt.
What is the end of ſtudy, let me know?
Ferd. Why that to know which elſe wee ſhould not know.
Bir. Things hid and bard (you meane) from common ſenſe.
Ferd. I, that is ſtudies god-like recompence.
Bir. Come on then, I will ſweare to ſtudy ſo,
To know the thing I am forbid to know:
As thus, to ſtudy where I well may dine,
When I to faſt expreſly am forbid.
Or ſtudy where to meet ſome Miſtreſſe fine,
When Miſtreſſes from common ſenſe are hid.
Or having ſworne too hard a keeping oath,
Study to breake it, and not breake my troth.
If ſtudies gaine be thus, and this be ſo,
Study knowes that which yet it doth not know,
Sweare me to this, and I will ne're ſay no.
Ferd. Theſe be the ſtops that hinder ſtudy quite,
And traine our intellects to vaine delight.
Bir. Why? all delights are vaine, and that moſt vaine,
Which with paine purchas'd, doth inherit paine,
As painefully to poare upon a booke,
To ſeeke the light of truth, while truth the while
Doth falſly blinde the eye-ſight of his looke:
Light ſeeking light, doth light beguile:
So ere you find where light in darkneſſe lies,
Your light growes darke by loſing of your eyes.
Study me how to pleaſe the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairer eye,
Who dazling ſo, that eye ſhall be his heed,
And give him light that it was blinded by.
Study is like the heavens glorious Sunne,
That will not be deepe ſearch'd with ſawcy lookes:
Small have continuall plodders ever wonne,
Save baſe authoritie from others Bookes.
Theſe earthly Godfathers of heavens lights,
That give a name to every fixed ſtarre,
Have no more profit of their ſhining nights,
Then thoſe that walke, and wot not what they are.
Too much to know, is to know nought but fame:
And every Godfather can give a name.
Ferd. How well hee's read, to reaſon againſt reading.

Dum. Proceeded well, to ſtop all good proceeding.

Lon. He weedes the Corne, and ſtill lets grow the weeding.

Bir. The Spring is neare when Greene Geeſe are a breeding.

Dum. How followes that?

Bir. Fit in his place and time.

Dum. In reaſon nothing.

Bir. Something then in rime.

Ferd. Biron is like an envious ſneaping Froſt,
That bites the firſt borne Infants of the Spring.

Bir. Well, ſay I am, why ſhould proud Summer boaſt,
Before the Birds have any cauſe to ſing?
Why ſhould I joy in any abortive birth?
At Chriſtmas I no more deſire a Roſe,
Than wiſh a Snow in Mayes new fangled ſhowes:
But like of each thing that in ſeaſon growes.
So you to ſtudy now it is too late,
That were to clymbe ore the houſe t'unlocke the gate.

Fer. Well, ſit you out: goe home Biron: adue.

Bir. No my good Lord, I have ſworn to ſtay with you.
And though I have for barbariſme ſpoke more,
Then for that Angell knowledge you can ſay,
Yet confident Ile keepe what I have ſwore,
And bide the pennance of each three yeeres day.
Give me the Paper let me reade the ſame,
And to the ſtrict'ſt decrees Ile write my name.

Fer. How well this yeelding reſcues thee from ſhame.

Bir. Item. That no woman ſhall come within a mile of my Court.
Hath this been proclaimed?

Long. Foure dayes agoe.

Bir. Let's ſee the penalty.
On paine of looſing her tongue.
Who devis'd this penalty?

Lon. Marry that did I.

Bir. Sweet Lord, and why?

Lon. To fright them hence with that dread penalty,
A dangerous Law againſt gentility.

Item, If any man be ſeene to talke with a woman within the tearme of three yeares, hee ſhall endure ſuch publique ſhame as the reſt of the Court ſhall poſſibly deviſe..

Bir. This Article my Liege your ſelfe muſt breake,
For well you know here comes in Embaſſie
The French Kings daughter, with your ſelfe to ſpeake:
A Maide of Grace and compleat Majeſty,
About ſurrender up of Aquitaine:
To her decrepit, ſicke, and bed-rid Father.
Therefore this Article is made in vaine,
Or vainely comes the admired Princeſſe hither.

Fer. What ſay you Lords?
Why, this was quite forgot.

Bir. So ſtudy evermore is overſhot,
While it doth ſtudy to have what it would,
It doth forget to doe the thing it ſhould:
And when it hath the thing it hunteth moſt,
'Tis won as Townes with fire, ſo won, ſo loſt.

Fer. We muſt of force diſpence with this Decree,
She muſt lie here on meere neceſſity.

Bir. Neceſſity will make us all forſworne
Three thouſand times within this three yeares ſpace:
For every man with his affects is borne,
Not by might maſtred, but by ſpeciall grace.
If I breake faith, this word ſhall breake for me,
I am forſworne on meere neceſſitie.
So to the Lawes at large I write my name,
And he that breakes them in the leaſt degree,
Stands in attainder of eternall ſhame.
Suggeſtions are to others as to me:
But I beleeve although I ſeeme ſo loth,
I am the laſt that will laſt keepe his oath.
But is there no quicke recreation granted?

Fer. I that there is, our Court you know is haunted
With a conceited Travailer of Spaine,
A man in all the world new faſhion planted,
That hath a mint of phraſes in his braine:
One, whom the muſicke of his owne vaine tongue,
Doth raviſh like inchanting harmony:
A man of complements, whom right and wrong
Have choſe as vmpire of their mutinie.
This childe of fancie that Armado hight,
For interim to our ſtudies ſhall relate,
In high-borne words the worth of many a Knight:
From tawny Spaine loſt in the worlds debate.
How you delight my Lords, I know not I,
But I proteſt I love to heare him lie,
And I will uſe him for my Minſtrelſie.

Bir. Armado is a moſt illuſtrious wight,
A man of fire, new words, Faſhions owne Knight.

Lon. Coſtard the ſwaine and he ſhall be our ſport,
And ſo to ſtudie, three yeeres is but ſhort.

Enter a Conſtable with Coſtard with a Letter.

Conſt Which is the Dukes owne perſon.

Bir. This fellow, What would'ſt?.

Con. I my ſelfe reprehend his owne perſon, for I am his Graces Tharborough: But I would ſee his owne perſon in fleſh and bloud.

Bir. This is he.

Con. Signior Arme, Arme commends you:
There's villany abroad, this letter will tell you more.

Clow. Sir, the Contempts thereof are as touching mee.

Fer. A Letter from the magnificent Armado.

Bir. How low ſoever the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Lon. A high hope for a low heaven, God grant us patience.

Bir. To heare, or forbeare hearing.

Lon. To heare meekely ſir, and to laugh moderately, or to forbeare both.

Bir. Well ſir, be it as the ſtile ſhall give us cauſe to clime in the merrineſſe.

Clow. The matter is to me ſir, as concerning Iaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.

Bir. In what manner?

Clow. In manner and forme following ſir all thoſe three. I was ſeene with her in the Mannor houſe, ſitting with her upon the Forme, and taken following her into the Parke: which put together, is in manner and forme following. Now ſir for the Manner; Is the manner of a man to ſpeake to a Woman, for the Forme in ſome forme.

Bir. For the following ſir.

Clow. As it ſhall follow in my correction, and God defend the right.

Fer. Will you heare this Letter with attention?

Bir. As we would heare an Oracle.

Clo. Such is the ſimplicity of man to hearken after the fleſh.

Ferdinand.

G*Reat Deputy, the Welkins Vicegerent, and ſole dominator of* Navarre, my ſoules earthes God, and bodies foſtring Patrone:

Coſt. Not a word of Coſtard yet.

Ferd. So it is.

Coſt. It may be ſo: but if he ſay it is ſo, he is in telling true: but ſo.

Ferd. Peace,

Clow. Be to me, and every man that dares not fight.

Ferd. No words,

Clow. Of other mens ſecrets I beſeech you.

Ferd. So it is, beſieged with ſable coloured melancholly, I did commend the blacke oppreſſing humour to the moſt wholeſome Phyſicke of thy health giving ayre: And as I am a Gentleman, betooke my ſelfe to walke: the time When? about the ſixt houre, When Beaſts moſt graſe, Birds beſt pecke, and men ſit downe to that nouriſhment which is called Supper: So much for the time When. Now for the ground Which? which I meane I walkt upon, it is ycliped, Thy Parke. Then for the place Where? where I meane I did encounter that obſcene and moſt prepoſterous event that draweth from my ſnow white Pen the Ebon-coloured Inke, which heere thou vieweſt, beholdeſt, ſurvayeſt or ſeeſt. But to the place Where: It ſtandeth North North-Eaſt and by Eaſt from the Weſt corner of thy curious knotted Garden; There did I ſee that low ſpirited Swaine, that baſe Minow of thy myrth, (Clowne. Mee?) that unlettered ſmall-knowing ſoule, (Clow. me?) that ſhallow vaſſal (Clow. Still Me?) which as I remember, hight Coſtard, (Clow. O me) ſorted and conſorted contrary to thy eſtabliſhed proclaimed Edict and Continent Canon: Which with, O with, but with this I paſſion to ſay wherewith:

Clo. With a Wench.

Ferd. With a childe of our Grandmother Eve, a female; or for thy more underſtanding a woman: him, I (as my ever eſteemed dutie prickes me on) have ſent to thee, to receive the meed of puniſhment by the ſweet Graces Officer Anthony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and eſtimation.

Anth. Me, an't ſhall pleaſe you? I am Anthony Dull.

Ferd. For Iaquenetta (ſo is the weaker veſſell called) which I apprehended with the aforeſaid Swain, I keep her as a veſſell of thy Lawes fury, and ſhall at the leaſt of thy ſweet notice, bring her to triall. Thine in all complements of devoted and heart-burning heat of dutie.

Don Adriana de Armado.

Bir. This is not ſo well as I looked for, but the beſt that ever I heard.

Ferd. I the beſt for the worſt. But ſirra, What ſay you to this?

Clo. Sir I confeſſe the Wench.

Fer. Did you heare the Proclamation?

Clo. I doe confeſſe much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

Ferd. It was proclaimed a yeeres impriſonment to bee taken with a Wench.

Clo: It was taken with none ſir, I was taken with a Damoſell.

Ferd. Well, it was proclaimed Damoſell.

Clo. This was no Damoſell neither ſir, ſhee was a Virgin.

Ferd. It is ſo varied too, for it was proclaimed Virgin.

Clo. If it were, I deny her Virginitie: I was taken with a Maide.

Fer. This Maide will not ſerve your turne ſir.

Clo. This Maide will ſerve my turne ſir.

Fer. Sir I will pronounce your ſentence: You ſhall faſt a Weeke with Branne and Water.

Clo. I had rather pray a Moneth with Mutton and Porrigde.

Ferd. And Don Armado ſhall be your Keeper.
My Lord Biron, ſee him deliver'd ore,
And goe we Lords to put in practice that,
Which each to other hath ſo ſtrongly ſworne. Exeunt.

Bir. Ile lay my head to any good mans Hat,
Theſe oathes and Lawes will prove an idle ſcorne.
Sirra, come on.

Clo. I ſuffer for the truth ſir: for true it is, I was taken with Iaquenetta, and Iaquenetta is a true Girle, and therefore welcome the ſowre cup of proſperity, affliction may one day ſmile againe, and untill then ſit downe ſorrow. Exit.

Enter Armado a Braggart, and Moth his Page.

Brag. Boy, What ſigne is it when a man of great ſpirit growes melancholly?

Boy. A great ſigne ſir, that he will looke ſad.

Brag. Why? ſadneſſe is one and the ſelfe-ſame thing deare Impe.

Boy. No, no, O Lord ſir no.

Brag. How canſt thou part ſadneſſe and melancholly, my tender Iuvenall?

Boy. By a familiar demonſtration of the working, my tough Signior.

Brag. Why tough Signior? Why tough ſignior?

Boy. Why tender Iuvenall? Why tender Iuvenall?

Boy. I ſpoke it tender Iuvenall, as a congruent epitheton, appertaining to thy yong dayes, which we may nominate tender.

Boy. And I tough Signior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.

Brag. Pretty and apt.

Boy. How meane you ſir, I pretty, and my ſaying apt? or I apt, and my ſaying pretty?

Brag. Thou pretty, becauſe little.

Boy. Little pretty, becauſe little: wherefore apt?

Brag. And therefore apt, becauſe quicke.

Boy. Speake you this in my praiſe Maſter?

Brag. In thy condigne praiſe.

Boy. I will praiſe an Eele with the ſame praiſe.

Brag. What? that an Eele is ingenuous.

Boy. That an Eele is quicke.

Brag. I doe ſay thou art quicke in anſweres. Thou heat'ſt my blood.

Boy. I am anſwer'd ſir.

Brag. I love not to be croſt.

Boy. He ſpeaks the clean contrary, croſſes love not him.

Br. I have promis'd to ſtudy iij yeeres with the Duke.

Boy. You may doe it in an houre ſir.

Brag. Impoſſible.

Boy How many is one thrice told?

Brag. I am ill at reckning, it fits the ſpirit of a Tapſter.

Boy. You are a Gentleman and a Gameſter ſir.

Brag. I confeſſe both, they are both the varniſh of a compleat man.

Boy. Then I am ſure you know how much the groſſe ſumme of deuſ-aſe amounts to.

Brag. It doth amount to one more then two.

Boy. Which the baſe vulgar call three. Br. True.

Boy. Why ſir is this ſuch a peece of ſtudy? Now here's three ſtudied, ere you'll thrice winke, and how eaſie it is to put yeares to the word three, and ſtudy three yeeres in two words, the dancing horſe will tell you

Brag. A moſt fine figure.

Boy. To Prove you a Cypher.

Brag. I will hereupon confeſſe I am in love: and as it is baſe for a Souldier to love; ſo am I in love with a baſe Wench. If drawing my ſword againſt the humour of affection, would deliver mee from the reprobate thought of it, I would take Deſire priſoner, and ranſome him to any French Courtier for a new deviſ'd curteſie. I thinke ſcorne to ſigh, mee thinkes I ſhould out-ſweare Cupid. Comfort me Boy, What great men have beene in love?

Boy. Hercules, Maſter.

Brag. Moſt ſweet Hercules: more authority deare Boy, name more; and ſweet my childe let them bee men of good repute and carriage.

Boy. Sampſon, Maſter, he was a man of good carriage, great carriage: for hee carried the Towne-gates on his backe like a Porter: and he was in love.

Brag. O well-knit Sampſon, ſtrong joynted Sampſon; I doe excell thee in my Rapier, as much as thou didſt mee in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was Sampſons Love my deare Moth?

Boy. A woman, Maſter.

Brag. Of what complexion?

Boy. Of all the foure, or the three, or the two, or one of the foure.

Brag. Tell me preciſely of what Complexion?

Boy. Of the Sea-water Greene ſir.

Brag. Is that one of the foure complexions?

Boy. As I have read ſir, and the beſt of them too.

Brag. Greene indeed is the colour of Lovers: but to have a Love of that colour, me thinkes Sampſon had ſmall reaſon for it. He ſurely affected her for her wit.

Boy. It was ſo ſir, for ſhe had a greene wit.

Brag. My Love is moſt immaculate white and red.

Boy. Moſt immaculate thoughts Maſter, are mask'd under ſuch colours.

Brag. Define, define, well educated infant.

Boy. My fathers witte, and my mothers tongue aſſiſt mee.

Brag. Sweet invocation of a childe, moſt pretty and patheticall.

Boy. If ſhe be made of white and red,
Her faults will ne're be knowne:
For bluſhing cheekes by faults are bred,
And feares by pale white ſhowne:
Then if ſhe feare, or be to blame,
By this you ſhall not know,
For ſtill her cheekes poſſeſſe the ſame,
Which native ſhe doth owe:

A dangerous rime Maſter againſt the reaſon of white and redde.

Brag. Is there not a Ballet Boy, of the King and the Begger?

Boy. The world was very guilty of ſuch a Ballet, ſome three Ages ſince, but I thinke now 'tis not to be found: or if it were, it would neither ſerve for the writing, nor the tune.

Brag. I will have that ſubject newly writ ore, that I may example my digreſſion by ſome mighty preſident. Boy, I doe love that Countrey Girle that I tooke in the Parke with the rationall Hinde Coſtard: ſhee deſerves well.

Boy. To be whip'd: and yet a better Love then my Maſter.

Brag. Sing Boy, my ſpirit growes heavy in love.

Boy. And that's great marvell, loving a light Wench.

Brag. I ſay ſing.

Boy. Forbeare till this company be paſt.

Enter Clowne, Conſtable, and Wench.

Conſt. Sir, the Dukes pleaſure, is that you keepe Coſtard ſafe, and you muſt let him take no delight, nor no pennance, but he muſt faſt three dayes a weeke: for this Damſell, I muſt keepe her at the Parke, ſhee is allow'd for the Day-woman. Fare you well. Exit.

Brag. I doe betray my ſelfe with bluſhing: Maide.

Maid. Man.

Brag. I will viſit thee at the Lodg.

Maid. That's here by.

Brag. I know where it is ſituate.

Maid. Lord how wiſe you are!

Brag. I will tell thee wonders.

Maid. With that face?

Brag. I love thee.

Maid. So I heard you ſay.

Brag. And ſo farewell.

Maid. Faire weather after you.

Come Iaquenetta, away. Exeunt.

Brag. Villaine, thou ſhalt faſt for thy offences ere thou be pardoned.

Clo. Well ſir, I hope when I doe it, I ſhall doe it on a full ſtomacke.

Brag. Thou ſhalt be heavily puniſhed.

Clo. I am more bound to you then your fellowes, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Con. Take away this Villaine, ſhut him up.

Boy. Come you tranſgreſſing ſlave, away.

Clow. Let me not be pent up ſir, I will be faſt being looſe.

Boy. No ſir, that were faſt and looſe: thou ſhalt to priſon.

Clow. Well, if ever I doe ſee the merry dayes of deſolation that I have ſeene, ſome ſhall ſee.

Boy. What ſhall ſome ſee?

Clow. Nay nothing, Maſter Moth, but what they looke upon. It is not for priſoners to be ſilent in their words, and therefore I will ſay nothing: I thanke God, I have as little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet. Exit.

Brag. I doe affect the very ground (which is baſe) where her ſhooe (which is baſer) guided by her foote (which is baſeſt) doth tread. I ſhall be forſworne (which is a great argument of falſhood) if I love. And how can that be true love, which is falſly attempted? Love is a familiar, Love is a Divell. There is no evill Angell but Love, yet Sampſon was ſo tempted, and hee had an excellent ſtrength: Yet was Salomon ſo ſeduced, and hee had a very good wit. Cupids But-ſhaft is too hard for Hercules Clubbe, and therefore too much oddes for a Spaniards Rapier: The firſt and ſecond cauſe will not ſerve my turne: the Paſſado hee reſpects not, the Duello hee regards not; his diſgrace is to bee called Boy, but his glory is to ſubdue men. Adue Valour, ruſt Rapier, bee ſtill Drum, for your manager is in love; yea, hee loveth. Aſſiſt me ſome extemporall god of Rime, for I am ſure I ſhall turne Sonnet. Deviſe Wit, write Pen, for I am for whole volumes in folio.

Finis Actus Primi.

Actus Secunda.

Enter the Princeſſe of France, with three attending Ladies, and three Lords.

Boyet. Now Madam ſummon up your deareſt ſpirits,
Conſider whom the King your Father ſends:
To whom he ſends, and what's his Embaſſie.
Your ſelfe, held precious in the worlds eſteeme,
To parlee with the ſole inheritour
Of all perfections that a man may owe,
Matcleſſe Navarre: the plea of no leſſe weight
Than Aquitaine, a Dowrie for a Queene.
Be now as prodigall of all deare grace,
As Nature was in making Graces deare,
When ſhe did ſtarve the generall world beſide,
And prodigally gave them all to you.
Prin. Good L. Boyet, my beauty though but meane,
Needes not the painted flouriſh of your praiſe:
Beauty is bought by judgement of the eye,
Not uttred by baſe ſale of Chapmens tongues:
I am leſſe proud to heare you tell my worth,
Then you much willing to be counted wiſe,
In ſpending thus your wit in praiſe of mine.
But now to taske the tasker, good Boyet,
You are not ignorant, all-telling fame
Doth noyſe abroad Navarre hath made a vow,
Till painefull ſtudy ſhall out-weare three yeares,
No woman may approach his ſilent Court:
Therefore to's ſeemeth it a needfull courſe,
Before we enter his forbidden Gates,
To know his pleaſure, and in that behalfe
Bold of your worthineſſe, we ſingle you,
As our beſt moving faire Soliciter:
Tell him the Daughter of the King of France,
On ſerious buſineſſe, craving quicke diſpatch,
Importunes perſonall conference with his Grace.
Haſte, ſignifie ſo much, while we attend,
Like humble viſag'd Sutors his high will.
Boyet. Proud of imployment, willingly I goe. Exit.
Prin. All pride is willing pride, and your's is ſo:
Who are the Votaries my loving Lords, that are vowfellowes with this vertuous Duke?
Lor. Longavile is one.
Prin. Know you the man?
1 Lad. I knew him Madam at a marriage Feaſt,
Betweene L. Perigort and the beauteous heire
Of Iaques Fauconbridge ſolemnized.
In Normandy ſaw I this Longavile,
A man of ſoveraigne parts he is eſteem'd:
Well fitted in the Arts, glorious in Armes:
Nothing becomes him ill that he would well.
The onely ſoyle of his faire vertues gloſſe,
(If vertues gloſſe will ſtaine with any ſoyle,)
Is a ſharpe wit match'd with too blunt a will:
Whoſe edge hath power to cut, whoſe will ſtill wils,
It ſhould none ſpare that come within his power.
Prin. Some merry mocking Lord belike, iſt ſo?
Lad. 1. They ſay ſo moſt, that moſt his humors know.
Prin. Such ſhort liv'd wits doe wither as they grow.
Who are the reſt?
2. Lad. The yong Dumaine, a well accompliſh'd youth,
Of all that Vertue love, for Vertue loved.
Moſt power to doe moſt harme, leaſt knowing ill:
For he hath wit to make an ill ſhape good,
And ſhape to win grace though he had no wit.
I ſaw him at the Duke Alanzoes once,
And much too little of that good I ſaw,
Is my report to his great worthineſſe.
Roſa. Another of theſe Students at that time,
Was there with him, as I have heard a truth.
Birone they call him, but a merrier man,
Within the limit of becomming mirth,
I never ſpent an houres talke withall.
His eye begets occaſion for wit,
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turnes to a mirth-moving jeſt.
Which his faire tongue (conceits Expoſitor)
Delivers in ſuch apt and gracious words,
That aged eares play Trewant at his Tales,
And yonger hearings are quite raviſhed.
So ſweet and voluble is his diſcourſe.
Prin. God bleſſe my Ladies, are they all in love?
That every one her owne hath garniſhed,
With ſuch bedecking ornaments of praiſe.
Ma. Heere comes Boyet.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance Lord?
Boyet. Navarre had notice of your faire approach;
And he and his Competitors in oath,
Were all addreſt to meete you gentle Lady
Before I came: Marry thus I have learnt,
He rather meanes to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes heere to beſiege his Court,
Than ſeeke a diſpenſation for his oath:
To let you enter his unpeopled houſe.

Enter Navar, Longavile, Dumaine, and Birone.

Heere comes Navarre.
Nav. Faire Princeſſe, welcome to the Court of Navar.
Prin. Faire I give you backe againe, and welcome I have not yet: the roofe of this Court is too high to bee yours, and welcome to the wide fields, too baſe to bee mine.
Nav. You ſhall be welcome Madam to my Court.
Prin. I will be welcome then, Conduct me thither.
Nav. Heare me deare Lady, I have ſworne an oath.
Frin. Our Lady helpe my Lord, hee'l be forſworne.
Nav. Not for the world faire Madam, by my will.
Prin. Why, will ſhall breake it will, and nothing elſe.
Nav. Your Ladiſhip is ignorant what it is.
Frin. Were my Lord ſo, his ignorance were wiſe,
Where now his knowledge muſt prove ignorance.
I heare your Grace hath ſworne out Houſ-keeping:
'Tis deadly ſinne to keepe that oath my Lord,
And ſinne to breake it:
But pardon me, I am too ſodaine bold,
To teach a Teacher ill beſeemeth me.
Vouchſafe to reade the purpoſe of my comming,
And ſodainely reſolve me in my ſuite.
Nav. Madam, I will, if ſodainly I may.
Prin. You will the ſooner that I were away,
For you'll prove perjur'd if you make me ſtay.
Bir. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Roſa. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Bir. I know you did,
Roſa. How needleſſe was it then to aske the queſtion ?
Bir. You muſt not be ſo quicke.
Ro. 'Tis long of you that ſpur mee with ſuch queſtions.
Bir. Your wit's too hot, it ſpeeds too faſt, 'twill tire.
Raſo. Not till it leave the Rider in the mire.
Bir. What time a day ?
Roſa. The houre that fooles ſhould aske.
Bir. Now faire befall your maske.
Roſa. Faire fall the face it covers.
Bir. And ſend you many lovers.
Roſa. Amen, ſo you be none.
Bir. Nay then will I be gone.
Fer. Madame, your father heere doth intimate,
The paiment of a hundred thouſand Crownes,
Being but th'one halfe, of an intire ſumme,
Disburſed by my father in his warres.
But ſay that he, or we, as neither have
Receiv'd that ſumme; yet there remaines unpaid
A hundred thouſand more: in ſurety of the which,
One part of Aquitaine is bound to us,
Although not valued to the moneys worth.
If then the King your father will reſtore
But that one halfe which is unſatisfied,
We will give up our right in Aquitaine,
And hold faire friendſhip with his Majeſty:
But that it ſeemes he little purpoſeth,
For here he doth demand to have repaid,
An hundred thouſand Crownes, and not demands
One paiment of a hundred thouſand Crownes,
To have his title live in Aquitaine.
Which we much rather had depart withall,
And have the money by our father lent,
Then Aquitaine, ſo guelded as it is.
Deare Princeſſe, were not his requeſts ſo farre
From reaſons yeelding, your faire ſelfe ſhould make
A yeelding 'gainſt ſome reaſon in my breſt,
And goe well ſatisfied to France againe.
Prin. You doe the King my Father too much wrong,
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In ſo unſeeming to confeſſe receit
Of that which hath ſo faithfully beene paid.
Fer. I doe proteſt I never heard of it,
And if you prove it, Ile repay it backe,
Or yeeld up Aquitaine.
Prin. We arreſt your word:
Boyet, you can produce acquittances
For ſuch a ſumme, from ſpeciall Officers,
Of Charles his Father.
Fer. Satisfie me ſo.
Boyet. So pleaſe your Grace, the packet is not come
Where that and other ſpecialties are bound,
To morrow you ſhall have a ſight of them.
Fer. It ſhall ſuffice me; at which enterview,
All liberall reaſon would I yeeld unto:
Meane time, receive ſuch welcome at my hand,
As Honour, without breach of Honor may
Make tender of, to thy true worthineſſe.
You may not come faire Princeſſe in my gates,
But heere without you ſhall be ſo receiv'd,
As you ſhall deeme your ſelfe lodg'd in my heart,
Though ſo deni'd farther harbour in my houſe:
Your owne good thoughts excuſe me, and farewell,
To morrow we ſhall viſit you againe.
Prin. Sweet health and faire deſires conſort your grace.
Fer. Thy owne wiſh, wiſh I thee, in every place. Exit.

Boy. Lady, I will commend you to my owne heart.
La. Ro. Pray you doe my commendations,
I would be glad to ſee it.
Boy. I would you heard it grone.
La. Ro. Is the ſoule ſicke ?
Boy. Sicke at the heart.
La. Ro. Alacke, let it bloud.
Boy. Would that doe it good ?
La. Ro. My Phiſicke ſayes I.
Bo. Will your prick't with your eye.
La. Ro. No poynt, with my knife.
Boy. Now God ſave thy life.
La. Ro. And yours from long living.
Bir. I cannot ſtay thankſgiving. Exit.

Enter Dumaine.

Dum. Sir, I pray you a word: what Lady is that ſame?
Boy. The heire of Alanſon, Roſalin her name.
Dum. A gallant Lady, Mounſier fare you well. Exit.

Enter Longavile.

Long. I beſeech you a word: what is ſhe in the white?
Boy. A woman ſometimes, if you ſaw her in the light.
Long. Perchance light in the light: I deſire her name.
Boy. She hath but one for her ſelfe,
To deſire that were a ſhame.
Lon. Pray you ſir, whoſe daughter?
Boy. Her mothers, I have heard.
Long. Gods bleſſing a your beard.
Boy. Good ſir be not offended,
She is an heire of Faulconbridge.
Long. Nay, my choller is ended:
Shee is a moſt ſweet Lady. Exit. Long.
Boy. Not unlike ſir, that may be.

Enter Birone.

Bir. What's her name in the cap.
Boy. Katherine by good hap.
Bir. Is ſhe wedded, or no.
Boy. To her will ſir, or ſo.
Bir. You are welcome ſir, adiew.
Boy. Fare well to me ſir, and welcome to you. Exit.
La. Ma. That laſt is Birone, the mery mad-cap Lord.
Not a word with him, but a jeſt.
Boy. And every jeſt but a word.
Pri. It was well done of you to take him at his word.
Boy. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to boord.
Lad. Ma. Two hot Sheepes mary;
And wherefore not Ships ? (lips.
Boy. No ſheepe (ſweet Lamb) unleſſe we feed on your
La. You ſheepe and I paſture: ſhall that finiſh the jeſt?
Boy. So you grant paſture for me.
La. Not ſo gentle beaſt.
My lips are no Common, though ſeverall they be.
Boy. Belonging to whom ?
La. To my fortunes and me.
Prin. Good wits will be jangling, but gentles agree.
This civill warre of wits were much better uſed
On Navar and his bookemen, for heere 'tis abus'd.
Boy. If my obſervation (which very ſeldome lyes
By the hearts ſtill rhetoricke, diſcloſed with eyes)
Deceive me not now, Navar is infected.
Prin. With what ?
Boy. With that which we Lovers intitle affected.
Prin. Your reaſon.
Boy. Why all his behaviours doe make their retire,
To the court of his eye, peeping thorough deſire.
His heart like an Agot with your print impreſſed,

Proud with his forme, in his eye pride expreſſed.
His tongue all impatient to ſpeake and not ſee,
Did ſtumble with haſte in his eye-ſight to be,
All ſenſes to that ſence did make their repaire,
To feele onely looking on faireſt of faire:
Me thought all his ſences were lockt in his eye,
As Iewels in Chriſtall for ſome Prince to buy. (glaſt,
Who tendring their owne worth from whence they were
Did point out to buy them along as you paſt.
His faces owne margent did coate ſuch amazes,
That all eyes ſaw his eyes inchanted with gazes.
Ile give you Aquitaine, and all that is his,
And you give him for my ſake, but one loving kiſſe.

Prin. Come to our Pavillion, Boyet is diſpoſde.

Boy. But to ſpeake that in words, which his eye hath
I onely have made a mouth of his eye, (diſcloſ'd,
By adding a tongue, which I know will not lye.

Lad. Ro. Thou art an old Love-monger, and ſpeakeſt ſkillfully.

Lad. Ma. He is Cupids Grandfather, and learnes news of him.

Lad. 2. Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.

Boy. Doe you heare my mad wenches?

Lad. 1. No

Boy. What then, doe you ſee?

Lad. 2. I, our way to be gone.

Boy. You are too hard for me. Exeunt omnes.

Actus Tertia.

Enter Braggart, and Boy.

Song.

Bra. Warble child, make paſſionate my ſenſe of hearing.

Boy. Concolinell.

Brag. Sweet Ayer, goe tenderneſſe of yeares: take this Key, give enlargement to the ſwaine, bring him feſtinatly hither: I muſt imploy him in a letter to my Love.

Boy. Will you win your love with a French braule?

Brag. How meaneſt thou, brauling in French?

Boy. No my compleat maſter, but to jigge off a tune at the tongues end, canary to it with the feete, humour it with turning up your eye: ſigh a note and ſing a note, ſometime through the throate: if you ſwallowed love with ſinging, love ſometime through the noſe, as if you ſnuft up love by ſmelling love, with your hat penthouſe-like ore the ſhop of your eyes, with your armes croſt on your thinbelly doublet, (like a Rabbet on a ſpit) or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting, and keepe not too long in one tune, but a ſnip and away: theſe are complements, theſe are humours, theſe betray nice wenches that would be betraied without theſe, and make them men of note: doe you note men that moſt are affected to theſe?

Brag. How haſt thou purchaſed this experience?

Boy. By my penne of obſervation.

Brag. But O, but O.

Boy. The Hobby-horſe is forgot.

Brag. Cal'ſt thou my love Hobbi-horſe.

Boy. No Maſter, the Hobbi-horſe is but a Colt, and your Love perhaps, a Hackny: But have you forgot your Love?

Brag. Almoſt I had.

Boy. Negligent ſtudent, learne her by heart.

Brag. By heart, and in heart Boy.

Boy. And out of heart Maſter: all thoſe three I will prove.

Brag. What wilt thou prove?

Boy. A man, if I live (and this) by, in, and without, upon the inſtant: by heart you love her, becauſe you heart cannot come by her: in heart you love her, becauſe your heart is in love with her: and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Brag. I am all theſe three.

Boy. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Brag. Fetch hither the Swaine, he muſt carry me a letter.

Boy. A meſſage well ſimpathiz'd, a Horſe to be embaſſadour for an Aſſe.

Brag. Ha, ha, What ſayeſt thou?

Boy. Marry ſir, you muſt ſend the Aſſe upon the Horſe, for he is very ſlow gated: but I goe.

Brag. The way is but ſhort, away.

Boy. As ſwift as Lead ſir.

Bra. Thy meaning pretty ingenious, is not Lead a mettall heavy, dull, and ſlow?

Boy. Minime honeſt Maſter, or rather Maſter no.

Brag. I ſay Lead is ſlow.

Boy. You are too ſwift ſir to ſay ſo.
Is that Lead ſlow which is fir'd from a Gunne?

Brag. Sweet ſmoke of Rhetorike,
He reputes me a Cannon, and the Bullet that's he:
I ſhoote thee at the Swaine.

Boy. Thump then, and I flee. Exit.

Brag. A moſt acute Iuvenal, voluble and free of grace,
By thy favour ſweet Welkin, I muſt ſigh in thy face.
Moſt rude melancholly, Valour gives thee place.
My Herald is return'd.

Enter Page, and Clowne.

Pag. A wonder Maſter, here's a Coſtard broken in a ſhin.

Arm. Some enigma, ſome riddle, no Lenvoy begin.

Clo. No egma, no riddle, no Lenvoy, no ſalve, in the male ſir. Or ſir, Plantan, a plaine Plantan: no Lenvoy, no Lenvoy, or Salve ſir, but a Plantan.

Arm. By vertue thou inforceſt laughter, thy ſilly thought, my ſpleene, the heaving of my lunges provokes me to ridiculous ſmiling: O pardon me my ſtarres, doth the inconſiderate take ſalve for Lenvoy, and the world Lenvoy for a ſalve?

Pag. Doe the wiſe thinke them other, is not Lenvoy a ſalve?

Arm. No Page, it is an epilogue or diſcourſe to make (plaine,
Some obſcure precedence that hath tofore beene ſaine.
Now will I begin your morrall, and doe you follow with my Lenvoy.

The Foxe, the Ape, and the Humble-Bee,
Were ſtill at oddes, being but three.

Pag. Vntill the Gooſe came out of doore,
Staying the oddes by adding foure.

A good Lenvoy, ending in the Gooſe: would you deſire more?

Clo. The Boy hath ſold him a bargaine, a Gooſe, that's

Sir, your penny-worth is good, and your Gooſe be fat.
To ſell a bargaine well is as cunning as faſt and looſe:
Let me ſee a fat Lenvoy, I that's a fat Gooſe.
Arma. Come hither, come hither;
How did this argument begin?
Boy. By ſaying that a Coſtard was broken in a ſhin.
Then cal'd you for the Lenvoy.
Clow. True, and I for a Plantan:
Thus came your argument in:
Then the Boyes fat Lenvoy, the Gooſe that you bought,
And he ended the market.

Arma. But tell me: How was there a Coſtard broken in a ſhin?

Pag. I will tell you ſencibly.
Clow. Thou haſt no feeling of it Moth,
I will ſpeake that Lenvoy.
I Coſtard running out, that was ſafely within,
Fell over the threſhould, and broke my ſhin.
Arm. We will talke no more of this matter.
Clow. Till there be more matter in the ſhin.
Arm. Sirra Coſtard, I will infranchiſe thee.

Clow. O, marry me to one Francis, I ſmell ſome Lenvoy, ſome Gooſe in this.

Arm. By my ſweet ſoule, I meane, ſetting thee at liberty. Enfreedoming thy perſon; thou wert Immured, reſtrained, captivated, bound.

Clow. True, true, and now you will be my purgation, and let me looſe.

Arma. I give thee thy liberty, ſet thee from durance, and in lieu thereof, impoſe on thee nothing but this: Beare this ſignificant to the country Maide Iaquenetta: there is remuneration, for the beſt ward of mine honors is rewarding my dependants. Moth, follow.— Exit.

Pag. Like the ſequell I.
Signeur Coſtard adew. Exit.
Clow. My ſweet ounce of mans fleſh, my in-cony Iew:
Now will I looke to his remuneration.

Remuneration, O, that's the Latine word for three-farthings: There-farthings remuneration, What's the price of this yncle? i.d.no, Ile give you a remuneration: Why? It carries it remuneration: Why? It is a fairer name then a French-Crowne. I will never buy and ſell out of this word.

Enter Birone.

Bir. O my good knave Coſtard, exceedingly well met.

Clow. Pray you ſir, How much Carnation Ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Bir. What is a remuneration?
Coſt. Marry ſir, halfe penny farthing.
Bir. O, Why then three farthings worth of Silke.
Coſt. I thanke your worſhip, God be wy you.
Bir. O ſtay ſlave, I muſt employ thee:
As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave,
Doe one thing for me that I ſhall intreate.
Clow. When would you have it done ſir?
Bir. O this after-noone.
Clow. Well, I will doe it ſir: Fare you well.
Bir. O thou knoweſt not what it is.
Clow. I ſhall know ſir, when I have done it.
Bir. Why villaine thou muſt know firſt.
Clo. I will come to your worſhip to morrow morning.
Bir. It muſt be done this after-noone,
Harke ſlave, it is but this:
The Princeſſe comes to hunt here in the Parke,
And in her traine there is a gentle Lady:
When tongues ſpeake ſweetly, then they name her name,
And Roſaline they call her, aske for her:
And to her white hand ſee thou doe commend
This ſeal'd up counſaile. There's thy guerdon: goe.

Clo. Guerdon, O ſweet guerdon, better then remuneration, a levenpence-farthing better: moſt ſweet guerdon. I will doe it ſir in print: guerdon, remuneration. Exit.

Bir. O! and I forſooth in love,
I that have beene loves whip?
A very Beadle to a humerous ſigh: A Criticke,
Nay, a night-watch Conſtable.
A domineering pedant ore the Boy,
Then whom no mortall ſo magnificent.
This wimpled, whyning, purblind waiward Boy,
This ſignior Iunios gyant dwarfe, don Cupid,
Regent of Love-rimes, Lord of folded armes,
Th'annointed ſoveraigne of ſighes and groanes:
Liedge of all loyterers and malecontents:
Dread Prince of Plackets, King of Codpeeces.
Sole Emperator and great generall
Of trotting Parrators (O my little heart.)
And I to be a Corporall of his field,
And weare his colours like a Tumblers hoope?
What? I love! I ſue.! I ſeeke a wife,
A woman, that is like a Germane Clocke,
Still a repairing: ever out of frame,
And never going a right, being but a Watch:
But being watcht, that it may ſtill goe right.
Nay, to be perjurde, which is worſt of all:
And among three, to love the worſt of all,
A whitly wanton, with a velvet brow.
With two pitch bals ſtucke in her face for eyes.
I, and by heaven, one that will doe the deed,
Though Argus were her Eunuch and her guarde.
And I to ſigh for her! to watch for her!
To pray for her, goe to: it is a plague
That Cupid will impoſe for my neglect,
Of his almighty dreadfull little might.
Well, I will love, write, ſigh, pray, ſue, and grone,
Some men muſt love my Lady, and ſome Ione.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Princeſſe, a Forreſter, her Ladies, and her Lords.

Prin. Was that the King that ſpurd his horſe ſo hard,
Againſt the ſteepe unriſing of the hill?
Boy. I know not, but I thinke it was not he.
Prin. Who ere a was, a ſhew'd a mounting mind:
Well Lords, to day we ſhall have our diſpatch,
On Saterday we will returne to France.
Then Forreſter my friend, Where is the Buſh
That we muſt ſtand and play the murtherer in?
For. Hereby upon the edge of yonder Coppice,
A Stand where you may make the faireſt ſhoote.
Prin. I thanke my beauty, I am faire that ſhoote,
And thereupon thou ſpeak'ſt the faireſt ſhoote.
For. Pardon me Madam, for I meant not ſo.
Prin. What, what? Firſt praiſe me, then againe ſay no.
O ſhore liv'd pride. Not faire? alacke for woe.

For. Yes Madam faire.
Prin. Nay, never paint me now,
Where faire is not, praiſe cannot mend the brow.
Here (good my glaſſe) take this for telling true:
Faire paiment for foule words, is more then due.
For. Nothing but faire is that which you inherit.
Prin. See, ſee, my beauty will be ſav'd by merit.
O hereſie in faire, fit for theſe dayes,
A giving hand, though foule, ſhall have faire praiſe.
But come, the Bow: Now Mercy goes to kill,
And ſhooting well, is then accounted ill:
Thus will I ſave my credit in the ſhoote,
Not wounding, pitty would not let me do't:
If wounding, then it was to ſhew my skill,
That more for praiſe, than purpoſe meant to kill.
And out of queſtion, ſo it is ſometimes:
Glory growes guilty of deteſted crimes,
When for Fames ſake, to praiſe an outward part,
We bend to that, the working of the heart.
As I for praiſe alone now ſeeke to ſpill
The poore Deere blood, that my heart meanes no ill.
Boy. Doe not curſt wives hold that ſelfe-ſoveraignty
Onely for praiſe ſake, when they ſtrive to be
Lords ore their Lords?
Prin. Onely for praiſe, and praiſe we may afford,
To any Lady that ſubdewes a Lord.

Enter Clowne.

Boy. Here comes a member of the common-wealth.

Clo. God dig-you-den all, pray you which is the head Lady?

Prin. Thou ſhalt know her fellow, by the reſt that have no heads.

Clo, Which is the greateſt Lady, the higheſt?
Prin. The thickeſt, and the talleſt.
Clo. The thickeſt, and the talleſt: it is ſo, truth is truth.
And your waſte Miſtris, were as ſlender as my wit,
One a theſe Maides girdles for your waſte ſhould be fit.
Are not you the chiefe woman? You are the thickeſt here.
Prin. What's your will ſir? What's your will?
Clo. I have a Letter from Monſier Birone,
To one Lady Roſaline,
Prin. O thy letter, thy letter: He's a good friend of (mine.
Stand aſide good bearer.
Boyet, you can carve,
Breake up this Capon.
Boy. I am bound to ſerve.
This Letter is miſtooke: it importeth none here:
It is write to Iaquenetta.
Prin. We will reade it, I ſweare.
Breake the necke of the Waxe, and every one give eare.

Boyet reades.

BY heaven, that thou art faire, is moſt infallible: true that thou art beauteous, truth it ſelfe that thou art lovely: more fairer then faire, beautifull then beautious, truer then truth it ſelfe: have comiſeration on thy heroicall Vaſſall. The magnanimous and moſt illuſtrate King Cophetua ſet eye upon the pernicious and indubitate Begger Zenelophon: and he it was that might rightly ſay, Veni, vidi, vici: Which to Anatomize in the vulgar, O baſe and obſcure vulgar; videlicet, He came, Saw, and overcame: he came one; ſee; two; covercame three. Who came? the King. Why did he come? to ſee. Why did he ſee? to overcome. To whom came he? to the Begger. What ſaw he? the Begger. Who overcame he? the Begger. The concluſion is victory: On whoſe ſide? the King: the captive is inricht: On whoſe ſide? the Beggers. The cataſtrophe is a Nuptiall: On whoſe ſide? the Kings: no, on both in one, or one in both. I am the King (for ſo ſtands the compariſon) thou the Begger, for ſo witneſſeth thy lowlineſſe. Shall I command thy love? I may. Shall I inforce thy love? I could. Shall I entreate thy love? I will. What, ſhalt thou exchange for ragges, roabes: for tittles titles, for thy ſelfe me. Thus expecting thy reply, I prophane my lips on thy foote, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part.

Thine in the deareſt deſigne of induſtry,

Don Adriana de Armado.

Thus doſt thou heare the Nemean Lion roare,
Gainſt thee thou Lambe, that ſtandeſt as his prey:
Submiſſive fall his princely feete before,
And he from forrage will incline to play.
But if thou ſtrive (poore ſoule) what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repaſture for his den.

Prin. What plume of feather is he that indited this Letter? What vaine? What Wethercocke? Did you ever heare better?

Boy. I am much deceived, but I remember the ſtile.
Prin. Elſe your memory is bad, going ore it erewhile.
Boy. This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court
A Phantaſme, a Monarcho, and one that makes ſport
To the Prince and his Booke-mates
Prin. Thou fellow, a word.
Who gave thee this Letter?
Clow. I told you, my Lord.
Prin. To whom ſhould'ſt thou give it?
Clow. From my Lord to my Lady.
Prin. From which Lord, to which Lady?
Clow. From my Lord Berowne, a good maſter of mine,
To a Lady of France, that he call'd Roſaline.
Prin. Thou haſt miſtaken his letter. Come Lords away.
Here ſweet, put up this, 'twill be thine another day.
Exeunt.
Boy. Who is the ſhooter? Who is the ſhooter?
Roſa. Shall I teach you to know.
Boy. I my continent of beauty.
Roſa. Why ſhe that beares the Bow. Finely put off.
Boy. My Lady goes to kill hornes, but if thou marry,
Hang me by the necke, if hornes that yeare miſcarry.
Finely put on.
Roſa. Well then, I am the ſhooter.
Boy. And who is your Deare?
Roſa. If we chooſe by hornes, your ſelfe come not neare. Finely put on indeed.
Mari. You ſtill wrangle with her Boyet, and ſhe ſtrikes at the brow.
Boy. But ſhee her ſelfe is hit lower:
Have I hit her now.

Roſa. Shall I come upon thee with an old ſaying, that was a man when King Pippin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it.

Boy. So I may anſwer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Queene Guinover of Britaine was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Roſa. Thou canſt not hit it, hit it, hit it,
Thou canſt not hit it my good man.

Boy. I cannot, cannot, cannot:
And I cannot, another can. Exit.

Clo. By my troth moſt pleaſant, how both did fit it.

Mar. A marke marveilous well ſhot, for they both did hit.

Boy. A marke, O marke but that marke: a marke ſayes my Lady.
Let the marke have a pricke in't, to meate at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide a'th bow hand, yfaith your hand is out.

Clo. Indeed a' muſt ſhoote nearer, or heele ne're hit the clout.

Boy. And if my hand be out, then belike you hand is in.

Clo. Then will ſhe get the upſhoot by cleaving the Pin.

Mar. Come, come, you talke greaſely, your lips grow foule.

Clo. She's too hard for you at pricks, ſir challenge her to boule.

Boy. I feare too much rubbing: good night my good Oule.

Clo. By my ſoule a Swaine, a moſt ſimple Clowne.
Lord, Lord, how the Ladies and I have put him downe.
O my troth moſt ſweete jeſts, moſt incony vulgar wit,
When it comes ſo ſmoothly off, ſo obſcenely, as it were, ſo fit.
Armado ath to ſide, O a moſt dainty man.
To ſee him walke before a Lady, and to beare her Fan.
To ſee him kiſſe his hand, and how moſt ſweetly a will ſweare:
And his Page at other ſide, that handfull of wit,
Ah heavens, it is a moſt patheticall nit.
Sowla, ſowla. Exeunt.

Showte within.

Enter Dull, Holofernes, the Pedant, and Nathaniel.

Nath. Very reverent ſport truely, and done in the teſtimony of a good conſcience.

Ped. The Deare was (as you know) ſanguis in blood, ripe as a Pomwater, who now hangeth like a Iewell in the eare of Celo the sky: the welken the heaven, and anon falleth like a Crab on the face of Terra, the ſoyle, the land, the earth.

Curat. Nath. Truly Maſter Holofernes, the epythites are ſweetly varied like a ſcholler at the leaſt: but ſir I aſſure yee, it was a Bucke of the firſt head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo.

Dul. 'Twas not a haud credo, 'twas a Pricket.

Hol. Moſt barbarous intimation: yet a kind of inſinuation, as it were in via, in way of explication facere: as it were replication, or rather oſtentare, to ſhow as it were his inclination after his undreſſed, unpoliſhed, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or ratherest unconfirmed faſhion, to inſert againe my haud credo for a Deare.

Dul. I ſaid the Deare was not a haud credo, 'twas a Pricket.

Hol. Twice ſod ſimplicity, bis coctus, O thou monſter ignorance, how deformed dooſt thou looke?

Nath. Sir he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a booke.
He hath not eate paper as it were:
He hath not drunke inke.
His intellect is not repleniſhed, he is onely an animall, onely ſenſible in the duller parts: and ſuch barren plants are ſet before us, that we thankefull ſhould be: which we taſte and feeling, are for thoſe parts that doe fructifie in us more then he.
For as it would ill become me to be vaine, indiſcreet, or a foole;
So were there a patch ſet on Learning, to ſee him in a Schoole.
But omne bene ſay I, being of an old Fathers mind,
Many can brooke the weather, that love not the wind.

Dul. You two are book-men: Can you tell by your wit, What was a month old at Cains birth, that's not five weekes old as yet?

Hol. Dictiſima goodman Dull, Dictiſima goodman Dull.

Dull. What is dictinna?

Nath. A tittle to Phebe, to Luna, to the Moone.

Hol. The Moone was a month old when Adam was no more.
And wrought not to five-weekes when he came to five-ſcore.
Th'alluſion holds in the Exchange.

Dul. 'Tis true indeed, the Colluſion holds in the Exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity, I ſay th'alluſion holds in the Exchange.

Dul. And I ſay the poluſion holds in the Exchange: for the Moone is never but a month old: and I ſay beſide that, 'twas a Pricket that the Princeſſe kild.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you heare an extemporall Epytaph on the death of the Deare, and to humour the ignorant call'd the Deare, the Princeſſe kill'd a Pricket:

Nath. Perge, good Maſter Holofernes, perge, ſo it ſhall pleaſe you to abrogate ſcurility.

Hol. I will ſomething affect the letter, for it argues facility.

The prayſfull Princeſſe pearſt and pricke
a pretty pleaſing Pricket,
Some ſay a Sore, but not a ſore,
till now made ſore with ſhooting.
The Dogges did yell, put ell to Sore,
then Sorell jumps from thicket:
Or Pricket-ſore, or elſe Sorell,
the people fall a hooting.
If Sore bee ſore, then ell to Sore,
makes fifty ſores O ſorell:
Of one ſore I an hundred make by adding but one more L.

Nath. A rare talent.

Dul. If a talent be a claw, looke how he clawes him with a talent.

Nath. This is a gift that I have ſimple: ſimple, a fooliſh extravagant ſpirit, full of formes, figures, ſhapes, objects, Ideas, apprehenſions, motions, revolutions. Theſe are begot in the ventricle of memory, nouriſht in the wombe of primater, and delivered upon the mellowing of occaſion: but the gift is good in thoſe in whom it is acute, and I am thankefull for it.

Hol. Sir, I praiſe the Lord for you, and ſo may my pariſhioners, for their Sonnes are well tutor'd by you, and their Daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the common-wealth.

Nath. Mehercle, If their Sonnes be ingennous, they ſhall want no inſtruction: If their Daughters be capable, I will put it to them. But Vir ſapit qui pauca loquitur, a ſoule Feminine ſaluteth us.

Enter Iaquenetta, and the Clowne.

Iaque. God give you good morrow Maſter Parſon.

Nath. Maſter Parſon, quaſi Perſone? And if one ſhould be perſt, Which is the one?

Clo. Marry Maſter Schoolemaſter, he that is likeſt to a hogſhead.

Nath. Of perſing a Hogſhead, a good luſter of conceit in a turph of Earth, fire enough for a Flint, Pearle enough for a Swine: 'tis pretty, it is well.

Iaqu. Good Maſter Parſon be ſo good as reade me this Letter, it was given me by Coſtard, and ſent me from Don Armatho: I beſeech you reade it.

Nath. Fauſte precor gelida, quando, pecus omne ſub vmbra, ruminat, and ſo forth. Ah good old Mantuan, I may ſpeake of thee as the traveller doth of Venice, Venechi, venachea, qui non te vide, i non te piaech. Old Mantuan, old Mantuan. Who underſtandeth thee not, vt re ſol la mi fa. Vnder pardon ſir, What are the contents? or rather as Horrace ſayes in his, What! my ſoule verſes.

Hol. I ſir, and very learned.

Nath. Let me heare a ſtaffe, a ſtanza, a verſe, Lege domine.

If Love make me forſworne, how ſhall I ſweare to loue?
Ah neuer faith could hold if not to beautie vowed.
Though to my ſelfe forſworne, to thee Ile faithfull proue.
Thoſe thoughts to me were Okes, to thee like Oſiers bowed.
Study his byas leaves, and makes his booke thine eyes.
Where all thoſe pleaſures live, that Art would comprehend.
If knowledge be the marke, to know thee ſhall ſuffice,
Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend.
All ignorant that ſoule, that ſees thee without wonder.
Which is to me ſome praiſe, that I thy parts admire;
Thy eye Ioves lightning beares, thy voyce his dreadfull thunder.
Which not to anger bent, is muſique, and ſweet fire.
Celeſtiall as thou art, Oh pardon love this wrong,
That ſings heavens praiſe, with ſuch an earthly tongue.

Pedro. You find not the apoſtraphas, and ſo miſſe the accent. Let me ſuperuiſe the cangenet.

Nath. Here are onely numbers ratified, but for the elegancy, facility, and golden cadence of poeſie caret: Ovidius Naſo was the man. And why in deed Naſo, but for ſmelling out the odoriferous floures of fancy? the jerkes of invention imitary is nothing: So doth the Hound his maſter, the Ape his keeper, the tyred Horſe his rider: But Damoſella Virgin, Was this directed to you?

Iaque. I ſir from one mounſier Berowne, one of the ſtrange Queenes Lords.

Nath. I will overglance the ſuperſcript.
To the ſnow-white hand of the moſt beautious Lady, Roſaline.
I will looke againe on the intellect of the Letter, for the nomination of the party written to the perſon writen unto.
Your Ladiſhips in all deſired imployment, Berowne.

Per. Sir Holofernes, this Berowne is one of the Votaries with the King, and heare he hath framed a Letter to a ſequent of the ſtranger Queenes: which accidentally, or by the way of progreſſion, hath miſcarried. Trip and goe my ſweet, deliver this Paper into the hand of the King, it may concerne much: ſtay not thy complement, I forgive thy duety, adue.

Maid. Good Coſtard goe with me;
Sir God ſave your life.

Coſt. Have with thee my girle. Exit.

Hol. Sir you have done this in the feare of God very religiouſly: and as a certaine father ſaith——.

Ped. Sir tell not me of the father, I doe feare Colourable colours. But to returne to the Verſes, Did they pleaſe you ſir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marveilous well for the pen.

Peda. I doe dine to day at the fathers of a certaine Pupill of mine, where if (being repaſt) it ſhall pleaſe you to gratifie the table with a Grace, I will on my priviledge I have with the parents of the foreſaid Child or Pupill, undertake your bien venuto, where I will prove thoſe Verſes to bee very unlearned, neither ſavouring of Poetry, Wit, nor Invention. I beſeech your Society.

Nath. And thanke you to: for ſociety (ſaith the text) is the happineſſe of life.

Peda. And certes the text moſt infallibly concludes it. Sir I doe invite you too, you ſhall not ſay me nay: pauca verba.
Away, the gentles are at their game, and we will to our recreation.

Exeunt.

Enter Birone with a Paper in his hand, alone.

Biro. The King he is hunting the Deare,
I am courſing my ſelfe.
They have pitcht a Toyle, I am toyling in a pytch, pitch that defiles; defile, a foule word: Well, ſet thee downe ſorrow; for ſo they ſay the foole ſaid, and ſo ſay I, and I the foole: Well proved wit. By the Lord this Love is as mad as Aiax, it kils ſheepe, it kils me, I a ſheepe: Well proved againe a my ſide. I will not love; if I doe, hang me: yfaith I will not. O but her eye: by this light, but for her eye, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I doe nothing in the world but lye and lye in my throate. By heaven I doe love, and it hath taught me to Rime, and to be mallicholy: and here is part of my Rime, and heere my mallicholly. Well, ſhe hath one a'my Sonnets already, the Clowne bore it, the Foole ſent it, and the Lady hath it: ſweet Clowne, ſweeter Foole, ſweeteſt Lady. By the world, I would not care a pin, if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper, God give him grace to grone.

He ſtands aſide. The King entreth.

Kin. Ay me!

Bir. Shot by heaven: proceed ſweet Cupid, thou haſt thumpt him with thy Birdbolt under the left pap: in faith ſecrets.

King. So ſweet a kiſſe the golden Sunne gives not,
To thoſe freſh morning drops upon the Roſe,
As thy eye beames when their freſh Rayes have ſmot
The night of dew that on my cheeks downe flowes.
Nor ſhines the ſilver Moone one halfe ſo bright,
Through the tranſparent boſome of the deepe,
As doth thy face through teares of mine give light:
Thou ſhin'ſt in every teare that I doe weepe,
No drop, but as a Coach doth carry thee,
So rideſt thou triumphing in my woe.
Doe but behold the teares that ſwell in me,
And they thy glory through my griefe will ſhew:

But doe not love thy ſelfe, then thou wilt keepe
My teares for glaſſes, and ſtill make me weepe.
O Queene of Queenes, how farre doſt thou excell,
No thought can thinke, nor tongue of mortall tell.
How ſhall ſhe know my griefes? Ile drop the paper.
Sweet leaves ſhade folly. Who is he comes heere?

Enter Longavile. The King ſteps aſide.

What! Longavill! and reading: liſten eare.
Bir. Now in thy likeneſſe, one more foole appeare.
Long. Ay me, I am forſworne.
Bir. Why he comes in like a perjure, wearing papers.
Long. In love I hope, ſweet fellowſhip in ſhame.
Bir. One drunkard loves another of the name.
Lon. Am I the firſt that have bin perjur'd ſo? (know,
Bir. I could put thee in comfort, not by two that I
Thou makeſt the triumphery, the corner cap of ſociety,
The ſhape of Loves Tiburne, that hangs up ſimplicity.
Lon. I feare theſe ſtubborne lines lacke power to move.
O ſweet Maria, Empreſſe of my love,
Theſe numbers will I teare, and write in proſe.
Bir. O! Rimes are guards on wanton Cupids hoſe,
Disfigure not his Shop.
Lon. This ſame ſhall goe. He reads the Sonnet.
Did not the heavenly Rhetoricke of thine eye,
'Gainſt whom the world cannot hold argument,
Perſwade my heart to this falſe perjury?
Vowes for thee broke deſerve not puniſhment.
A Woman I forſwore, but I will prove,
Thou being a Goddeſſe, I forſwore not thee.
My Vow was earthly, thou a heavenly Love.
Thy grace being gain'd, cures all diſgrace in me.
Vowes are but breath, and breath a vapour is,
Then thou faire Sun, which on my earth doeſt ſhine,
Exhal'ſt this vapor-vow, in thee it is:
If broken then, it is no fault of mine:
If by me broke, What foole is not ſo wiſe,
To looſe an oath, to win a Paradiſe?
Bir. This is the liver veine, which makes fleſh a deity.
A greene Gooſe, a Goddeſſe, pure pure Idolatry.
God amend us, God amend, we are much out o'th' way.

Enter Dumaine.

Lon. By whom ſhall I ſend this! (company?) Stay.
Bir. All hid, all hid, an old infant play,
Like a demy God, here ſit I in the sky,
And wretched fooles ſecrets heedfully ore-eye.
More Sackes to the myll! O heavens I have my wiſh,
Dumaine transform'd, foure Woodcocks in a diſh.
Dum. O moſt divine Kate.
Biro. O moſt prophane coxcombe.
Dum. By heaven the wonder of a mortall eye.
Bir. By earth ſhe is not, corporall, there you lye.
Dum. Her Amber haires for foule hath amber coted.
Bir. An Amber coloured Raven was well noted.
Dum. As upright as the Cedar.
Bir. Stoope I ſay, her ſhoulder is with-child.
Dum. As faire as day.
Bir. I as ſome dayes, but then no ſunne muſt ſhine.
Dum. O that I had my wiſh?
Long. And I had mine.
Kin. And mine too good Lord.
Bir. Amen, ſo I had mine: Is not that a good word?
Dum. I would forget her, but a Fever ſhe
Raignes in my bloud, and will remembred be.
Bir. A Fever in your bloud! why then inciſion
Would let her out in Sawcers, ſweet miſpriſion.
Dum. Once more Ile read the Ode that I have writ.
Bir. Once more Ile marke how Love can varry Wit.

Dumaine reades his Sonnet.

On a day, alacke the day:
Love, whoſe Month is every May,
Spied a bloſſome paſſing faire,
Playing in the wanton ayre:
Through the Velvet, leaves the wind,
All unſeene, can paſſage find.
That the Lover ſicke to death,
Wiſh'd himſelfe the heavens breath.
Ayre (quoth he) thy cheekes may blow,
Ayre, would I might triumph ſo.
But alacke my hand is ſworne,
Ne're to plucke thee from thy throne:
Vow alacke for youth unmeete,
Youth ſo apt to plucke a ſweet.
Doe not call it ſinne in me,
That I am forſworne for thee.
Thou for whom Iove would ſweare,
Iuno but an Æthiop were,
And deny himſelfe for Iove,
Turning mortall for thy Love.

This will I ſend, and ſomething elſe more plaine.
That ſhall expreſſe my true-loves faſting paine,
O would the King, Birone, and Longavile,
Were Lovers too, ill to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note:
For none offend, where all alike doe dote.
Long. Dumaine, thy Love is farre from charity,
That in Loves griefe deſir'ſt ſociety:
You may looke pale, but I ſhould bluſh I know,
To be ore-heard, and taken napping ſo.
King. Come ſir, you bluſh: as his, your caſe is ſuch,
You chid at him, offending twice as much.
You doe not love Maria? Longavile,
Did never Sonnet for her ſake compile;
Nor never lay his wreathed armes athwart
His loving boſome, to keepe downe his heart.
I had beene cloſely ſhrowded in this buſh,
And markt you both, and for you both did bluſh.
I heard your guilty Rimes, obſeru'd your faſhion;
Saw ſighes reeke from you, noted well your paſſion.
Aye me, ſayes one! O Iove, the other cries!
Her haires were Gold, Criſtall the others eyes.
You would for Paradiſe breake faith and troth,
And Iove for your Love would infringe an oath.
What will Birone ſay when that he ſhall heare
A faith infringed, which ſuch a zeale did ſweare.
How will he ſcorne? how will he ſpend his wit?
How will he triumph, leape, and laugh at it?
For all the wealth that ever I did ſee,
I would not have him know ſo much by me.
Bir. Now ſtep I forth to whip hypocriſie.
Ah good my Liedge, I pray thee pardon me.
Good heart, What grace haſt thou thus to reprove
Theſe wormes for loving, that are moſt in love?
Your eyes doe make no couches in your teares.
There is no certaine Princeſſe that appeares.
You'll not be perjur'd, 'tis a hatefull thing:
Tuſh, none but Minſtrels like of Sonnetting.
But are you not aſham'd? nay, are you not

All three of you, to be thus much ore ſhot?
You found his Moth, the King your Moth did ſee:
But I a Beame doe find in each of three.
O what a Scene of fool'ry have I ſeene,
Of ſighes, of grones, of ſorrow, and of teene:
O me, with what ſtrict patience have I ſat,
To ſee a King tranformed to a Gnat?
To ſee great Hercules whipping a Gigge,
And profound Salomon tuning a Iygge?
And Neſtor play at puſh-pin with the boyes,
And Critticke Tymon laugh at idle toyes.
Where lies thy griefe? O tell me good Dumaine.
And gentle Longavile, where lyes thy paine?
And where my Liedges? all about the breſt.
A Candle hoa!
Kin. Too bitter is thy jeſt,
Are we betrayed thus to thy over-view?
Bir. Not you by me, but I betrayed to you.
I that am honeſt, I that hold it ſinne
To breake the vow I am ingaged in:
I am betrayed by keeping company
With men, like men of ſtrang inconſtancy.
When ſhall you ſee me write a thing in rime?
Or grone for Ioane? or ſpend a minutes time,
In pruning me, when ſhall you heare that I will praiſe a hand, a foot, a face, an eye: a gate, a ſtate, a brow, a breſt, a waſte, a legge, a limme.
Kin. Soft, Whither away ſo faſt?
A true man, or a theefe, that gallops ſo.
Bir. I poſt from Love, good Lover let me go.

Enter Iaquenetta, and Clowne.

Iaque. God bleſſe the King.
Kin. What Preſent haſt thou there?
Clo. Some certaine treaſon.
Kin. What makes treaſon heere?
Clo. Nay it makes nothing ſir.
Kin. If it marre nothing neither,
The treaſon and you goe in peace together.
Iaque. I beſeech your Grace let this Letter be read,
Our perſon miſdoubts it: it was treaſon he ſaid.
Kin. Birone, reade it over. He reades the Letter.
Where hadſt thou it.
Iaque. Of Coſtard.
Kin. Where hadſt thou it?
Coſt. Of Dun Adramadio, Dun Adramadio.
Kin. How now, what is in you? why doſt thou teare it?
Bir. A toy my Liedge, a toy: your grace needs not feare it.
Long. It did move him to paſſion, and therefore let's heare it,
Dum. It is Birones writting, and heere is his name.
Bir. Ah you whoreſon loggerhead, you were borne to doe me ſhame.
Guilty my Lord, guilty: I confeſſe, I confeſſe.
King. What?
Bir. That you three fooles, lackt me foole, to make up the meſſe.
He, he, and you: and you my Liedge, and I,
Are picke-purſes in Love, and we deſerve to dye.
O diſmiſſe this audience, and I ſhall tell you more.
Dum. Now the number is even.
Bir. True, true, we are foure: will theſe Turtles be gone?
Kin. Hence ſirs, away. (Exit.
Clo. Walke aſide the true folke, and let the traytors ſtay.
Bir. Sweet Lords, ſweet Lovers, O let us imbrace:
As true we are as fleſh and bloud can be.
The Sea will ebbe and flow, heaven will ſhew his face:
Young bloud doth not obey an old decree.
We cannot croſſe the cauſe why we are borne:
Therefore of all hands muſt we be forſworne.
King. What, did theſe rent lines ſhew ſome love of thine? (Roſaline,
Bir. Did they, quoth you? Who ſees the heavenly
That (like a rude and ſavage man of Inde.)
At the firſt opening of the gorgeous Eaſt,
Bowes not his vaſſall head, and ſtrooken blind,
Kiſſes the baſe ground with obedient breaſt?
What peremptory Eage-ſighted eye
Dares looke upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her Majeſty?
Kin. What zeale, what fury, hath inſpir'd thee now?
My Love (her Miſtris) is a gracious Moone,
She (an attending Starre) ſcarce ſeene a light.
Bir. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Birone.
O, but for my Love, day would turne to night,
Of all complexions the cul'd ſoveraignty,
Doe meet as at a faire in her faire cheeke,
Where ſeverall Worthies make one dignity,
Where nothing wants, that want it ſelfe doth ſeeke.
Lend me the flouriſh of all gentle tongues,
Fye painted Rethoricke, O ſhe needs it not,
To things of ſale, a ſellers praiſe belongs:
She paſſes praiſe, then praiſe too ſhort doth blot.
A withered Hermite, fiveſcore winters worne,
Might ſhake off fifty, looking in her eye:
Beauty doth varniſh Age, as if new borne,
And gives the Crutch the Cradles infancy.
O 'tis the Sunne that maketh all things ſhine.
King. By heaven, thy Love is blacke as Ebony.
Bir. Is Ebony like her? O word divine?
A wife of ſuch wood were felicity.
O who can give an oth? Where is a booke?
That I may ſweare beauty doth beauty lacke,
If that ſhe learne not of her eye to looke:
No face is faire that is not full ſo blacke.
Kin. O paradoxe, blacke is the badge of hell,
The hue of dungeons, and the Schoole of night:
And beauties creſt becomes the heavens well.
Bir. Divels ſooneſt tempt reſembling ſpirits of light.
O if in blacke my Ladies browes be deckt,
It mournes, that painting an vſurping haire
Should raviſh doters with a falſe aſpect:
And therefore is ſhe borne to make blacke, faire.
Her favour turnes the faſhion of the dayes,
For native bloud is counted painting now:
And therefore red that would avoyd diſpraiſe,
Paints it ſelfe blacke, to imitate her brow.
Dum. To looke like her are Chimny-ſweepers blacke.
Lon. And ſince her time, are Colliers counted bright
King. And Aethiops of their ſweet complexion crake.
Dum. Darke needs no Candles now, for darke is light.
Bir. Your miſtreſſes dare never come in raine,
For feare their colours ſhould be waſht away.
Kin. 'Twere good yours did: for ſir to tell you plaine,
Ile find a fairer face not waſht to day.
Bir. Ile prove her faire, or talke till dooms-day here.
Kin. No Divell will fright thee then ſo much as ſhe.
Dum. I never knew man hold vile ſtuffe ſo deere.
Lon. Looke, here's thy love, my foot and her face ſee.
Bir. O if the ſtreets were paued with thine eyes,

Her feet were much too dainty for ſuch tread.
Dum. O vile, then as ſhe goes what upward lyes?
The ſtreet ſhould ſee as ſhe walk'd over head.
Kin. But what of this, are we not all in love?
Bir. Nothing ſo ſure, and thereby all forſworne.
Kin. Then leave this chat, and good Birone now prove
Our loving lawfull, and our faith not torne.
Dum. I marry there, ſome flattery for this evill.
Long. O ſome authority how to proceed,
Some trickes, ſome quillets, how to cheat the divell.
Dum. Some ſalve for perjury.
Bir. O 'tis more then neede.
Have at you then affections men at armes,
Conſider what you firſt did ſweare unto:
To faſt, to ſtudy, and to ſee no woman:
Flat treaſon gainſt the Kingly ſtate of youth.
Say, Can you faſt? your ſtomackes are too young:
And abſtinence ingenders maladies.
And where that you have vow'd to ſtudy (Lords)
In that each of you have forſworne his Booke.
Can you ſtill dreame and pore, and thereon looke?
For when would you my Lord, or you, or you,
Have found the ground of ſtudies excellence,
Without the beauty of a womans face;
From womens eyes this Doctrine I derive,
They are the Ground, the Bookes, the Academs,
From whence doth ſpring the true Promethean fire.
Why, univerſall plodding, poyſons up
The nimble ſpirits in the arteries,
As motion and long during action tyres
The ſinnowy vigour of the travailer.
Now for not looking on a womans face,
You have in that forſworne the uſe of eyes:
And ſtudy too, the cauſer of your vow.
For where is any Author in the world,
Teaches ſuch beauty as a womans eye:
Learning is but an adjunct to our ſelfe,
And where we are, our learning likewiſe is.
Then when our ſelves we ſee in Ladies eyes,
Doe we not likewiſe ſee our learning there?
O we have made a Vow to ſtudy, Lords,
And in that vow we have forſworne our Bookes:
For when would you (my Leige) or you, or you?
In leaden contemplation have found out
Such fiery Numbers as the prompting eyes,
Of beauties tutors have inrich'd you with:
Other ſlow Arts intirely keepe the braine:
And therefore finding barraine practizers,
Scarce ſhew a harveſt of their heavy toyle.
But Love firſt learned in a Ladies eyes,
Lives not alone immured in the braine:
But with the motion of all elements,
Courſes as ſwift as thought in every power,
And gives to every power a double power,
Above their functions and their offices.
It addes a precious ſeeing to the eye:
A Lovers eyes will gaze an Eagle blind.
A Lovers eare will heare the loweſt ſound.
When the ſuſpicious head of theft is ſtopt,
Loves feeling is more ſoft and ſenſible,
Then are the tender hornes of Cockled Snayles.
Loves tongue proves dainty Bachus, groſſe in taſte,
For Valour, is not Love a Hercules?
Still climing trees in the Heſperides.
Subtill as Sphinx, as ſweet and muſicall,
As bright Apollo's Lute, ſtrung with his haire.
As bright Apollo's Lute, ſtrung with his haire.
And when Love ſpeakes, the voyce of all the gods,
Make heaven drowſie with the harmony.
Never durſt Poet touch a pen to write,
Untill his Inke were tempred with Loves ſighes:
O then his lines would raviſh ſavage eares;
And plant in Tyrants mild humility,
From womens eyes this doctrine I derive.
They ſparcle ſtill the right Promethean fire,
They are the Bookes, the Arts, the Academes,
That ſhew, containe, and nouriſh all the world.
Elſe none at all in ought proves excellent.
Then fooles you were theſe women to forſweare:
Or keeping what is ſworne, you will prove fooles.
For Wiſedomes ſake (a word that all men love)
Or for Loves ſake, a word that loves all men.
Or for Mens ſake, the author of theſe Women:
Or Womens ſake, by whom we men are men,
Let us once looſe our oathes to find our ſelves,
Or elſe we looſe our ſelves, to keepe our oathes;
It is religion to be thus forſworne.
For Charity it ſelfe fulfills the Law:
And who can ſever love from Charity?
Kin. Saint Cupid then, and Souldiers to the field.
Bir. Advance your ſtandards, and upon them Lords.
Pell, mell, downe with them: but be firſt adviſ'd,
In confliſh that you get the Sunne of them.
Lon. Now to plaine dealing, Lay theſe glozes by,
Shall we reſolve to wooe theſe girles of France?
Kin. And winne them too, therefore let us deviſe,
Some entertainment for them in their Tents.
Bir. Firſt from the Parke let us conduct them thither,
Then homeward every man attach the hand
Of his faire Miſtreſſe, in the afternoone
We will with ſome ſtrange paſtime ſolace them:
Such as the ſhortneſſe of the time can ſhape,
For Revels, Dances, Maskes, and merry houres,
Fore-runne faire Love, ſtrewing her way with flowres.
Kin. Away, away, no time ſhall be omitted,
That will be time, and may by us be fitted.
Bir. Alone, alone ſowed Cockell, reap'd no Corne,
And Iuſtice alwayes whirles in equall meaſure:
Light Wenches may prove plagues to men forſworne,
If ſo, our Copper buyes no better treaſure.
Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Pedant, Curate, and Dull.

Peda. Satis quid ſufficit.

Cur. I praiſe God for you ſir, your reaſons at dinner have beene ſharpe and ſententious: pleaſant without ſcurrillity, witty without affectation, audacious without impudency, learned without opinion, and ſtrange without hereſie: I did converſe this quondam day with a companion of the Kings, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armatho.

Ped. Novi hominum tanquam te, His humour is lofty, his diſcourſe peremptory: his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gate majeſticall, and his generall behaviour vaine, ridiculous, and thraſonicall. He is too picked, too ſpruce, too affected, too odde, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Curat. A moſt ſingular and choiſe Epithat,

Draw out his Table-booke.

Ped. He draweth out the thred of his verboſity, finer then the ſtaple of his argument. I abhor ſuch phanaticall phantaſims, ſuch inſociable and poynt deviſe companions, ſuch rackers of ortagriphy, as to ſpeake dout fine, when he ſhould ſay doubt; det, when he ſhould pronounce debt; d e b t, nor det: he clepeth a Calfe, Caufe: halfe, hauſe: neighbour vocatur nebour; neigh abreviated ne: this is abhominable, which he would call abbominable: it inſinuateth me of infamy: ne inteligis domine, to make franticke, lunaticke?

Cura. Laus deo, bene intelligo.

Peda. Bome boon for boon preſcian, a little ſcarch, 'twill ſerve.

Enter Braggart, Boy.

Curat. Vides-ne quis venit?

Peda. Video, & gaudio.

Brag. Chirra.

Peda. Quare Chirra, not Sirra?

Brag. Men of peace well incountred.

Peda. Moſt millitary ſir, ſalutation.

Boy. They have beene at a great feaſt of Languages, and ſtole the ſcraps.

Clow. O they have liv'd long on the almes-basket of words. I marvell thy M. hath not eaten thee for a word, for thou art not ſo long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus: Thou art eaſier ſwallowed then a flapdragon.

Brag. Mounſier, are you not lettered?

Page. Yes, yes, he teaches boyes the Horne-booke: What is Ab ſpeld backward with the horne on his head?

Peda. Ba, pueritia with a horne added.

Pag. Ba moſt ſeely Sheepe, with a horne: you heare his learning.

Ped. Quis quis, thou Conſonant?

Pag. The laſt of the five Vowels if You repeat them, or the fift if I.

Ped. I will repeat them: a e I.

Pag. The Sheepe, the other two concludes it o u.

Brag. Now by the ſalt wave of the mediteranеum, a ſweet tutch, a quicke venewe of wit, ſnip ſnap, quicke and home, it rejoyceth my intellect, true wit.

Peda. What is the figure? What is the figure?

Page. Hornes.

Peda. Thou diſputes't like an Infant: goe whip thy Gigge.

Pag. Lend me your Horne to make one, and I will whip about your Infamy vnum cita a gigge of a Cuckolds horne.

Clow. And I had but one penny in the world, thou ſhouldſt have it to buy Ginger bread: Hold, there is the very Remuneration I had of thy maſter, thou halfpenny purſe of wit, thou Pidgeon-egge of diſcretion. O and the heavens were ſo pleaſed, that thou wert but my Baſtard; What a joyfull father wouldſt thou make me? Goe to, thou haſt it ad dungil, at the fingers ends, as they ſay.

Peda. Oh I ſmell falſe Latine, dunghel for vnguem.

Brad. Artſ-man preambulat, we will be ſingled from the barbarous. Doe you not educate youth at the Charghouſe on the top of the Mountaine?

Peda. Or Mons the hill.

Brag. At your ſweet pleaſure, for the Mountaine.

Peda. I doe ſans queſtion.

Brag. Sir, it is the Kings moſt ſweet pleaſure and affection, to congratulate the Princeſſe at her Pavilion, in the poſteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the after-noone.

Ped. The poſterior of the day, moſt generous ſir, is liable, congruent, and meaſurable for the after-noone: the word is well culd, choiſe, ſweet, and apt I doe aſſure you ſir, I doe aſſure.

Brag. Sir, the King is a noble Gentleman, and my familiar, I doe aſſure ye very good friend: for what is inward betweene us, let it paſſe. I doe beſeech thee remember thy curteſie. I beſeech thee apparell thy head: and among other importunate and moſt ſerious deſignes, and of great import indeed too: but let that paſſe, for I muſt tell thee it will pleaſe his Grace (by the world) ſometime to leane upon my poore ſhoulder, and with his royall finger thus dally with my excrement, with my muſtachio; but ſweet heart let that paſſe. By the world I recount no fable, ſome certaine ſpeciall honours it pleaſeth his Greatneſſe to impart to Armado a Souldier, a man of travell, that hath ſeene the world: but let that paſſe; the very all of all is: but ſweet heart, I doe implore ſecrecy, that the King would have me preſent the Princeſſe (ſweet chucke) with ſome delightfull oſtentation, or ſhow, or pageant, or anticke, or fire-worke: Now, underſtanding that the Curate and your ſweet ſelfe are good at ſuch eruptions, and ſodaine breaking out of myrth (as it were) I have acquainted you withall, to the end to crave your aſſiſtance.

Peda. Sir, you ſhall preſent before her the Nine Worthies. Sir Holofernes, as concerning ſome entertainment of time, ſome ſhow in the poſterior of this day, to bee rendred by our aſſiſtants at the Kings command: and this moſt gallant, illuſtrate and learned Gentleman, before the Princeſſe: I ſay none ſo fit as to preſent the Nine Worthies.

Curat. Where will you find men worthy enough to preſent them?

Peda. Ioſua, your ſelfe: my ſelfe, and this gallant gentleman Iudas Machabeus; this Swaine (becauſe of his great limme or joynt) ſhall paſſe Pompey the great, the Page Hercules.

Brag. Pardon ſir, error: He is not quantity enough for that Worthies thumbe, he is not ſo big as the end of his Club.

Peda. Shall I have audience? he ſhall preſent Hercules in minority: his enter and exit ſhall be ſtrangling a Snake; and I will have an Apology for that purpoſe.

Pag. An excellent device: ſo if any of the audience hiſſe, you may cry, Well done Hercules, now thou cruſheſt the Snake; that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to doe it.

Brag. For the reſt of the Worthies?

Peda. I will play three my ſelfe.

Pag. Thrice worthy Gentleman.

Brag. Shall I tell you a thing?

Peda. We attend.

Brag. We will have, if this fadge not, an Antique. I beſeech you follow.

Ped. Via good-man Dull, thou haſt ſpoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor underſtood none neither ſir.

Ped. Alone, we will employ thee.

Dull. Ile make one in a dance, or ſo: or I will play on the taber to the Worthies, and let them dance the hey.

Ped. Moſt Dull, honeſt Dull, to our ſport away. Exit.

Enter Princeſſe, and Ladies.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we ſhall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in.
A Lady wal'd about with Diamonds: looke you, what I have from the loving King.
Roſa. Madam, came nothing elſe along with that?
Prin. Nothing but this: yes as much love in Rime,
As would be cram'd up in a ſheet of paper
Writ on both ſides the leafe, margent and all,
That he was faine to ſeale on Cupids name.
Roſa. That was the way to make his god-head wax:
For he hath beene five thouſand yeeres a boy.
Kath. I, and a ſhrewd unhappy gallowes too.
Roſa. You'll ne're be friends with him, a kild your ſiſter.
Kath. He made her melancholy, ſad, and heavy,
And ſo ſhe died: had ſhe beene light like you,
Of ſuch a merry nimble ſtirring ſpirit,
She might a beene a Grandam ere ſhe died.
And ſo may you: For a light heart lives long.
Roſa. What's your darke meaning mouſe, of this light word?
Kath. A light condition in a beauty darke.
Roſa. We need more light to find your meaning out.
Kat. You'll marre the light by taking it in ſnuffe:
Therefore Ile darkely end the argument.
Roſ. Looke what you doe, you doe it ſtill i'th darke.
Kat. So doe not you, for you are a light Wench.
Roſa. Indeed I waigh not you, and therefore light.
Ka. You waigh me not, O that's you care not for me.
Roſ. Great reaſon: for paſt care, is ſtill paſt cure.
Prin. Well bandied both, a ſet of Wit well played.
But Roſaline, you have a Favour too?
Who ſent it? and what is it?
Roſ. I wovld you knew.
And if my face were but as faire as yours,
My Favour were as great, be witneſſe this.
Nay, I have Verſes too, I thanke Birone,
The numbers true, and were the numbring too,
I were the faireſt goddeſſe on the ground.
I am compar'd to twenty thouſand faires.
O he hath drawne my picture in his letter.
Prin. Any thing like?
Roſ. Much in the letters, nothing in the praiſe.
Prin. Beauteous as Incke: a good concluſion.
Kat. Faire as a text B. in a Coppy booke.
Roſ. Ware penſils. How? let me not dye your debtor,
My red Dominicall, my golden letter.
O that your face were full of Oes.
Prin. A Pox of that jeſt, and I beſhrew all Shrowes:
But Katherine, what was ſent to you
From faire Dumaine?
Kath. Madam, this Glove.
Prin. Did he not ſend you twaine?
Kath. Yes Madam: and moreover,
Some thouſand Verſes of a faithfull Lover
A huge tranſlation of hypocriſie,
Vildly compil'd, profound ſimplicity.
Mar. This, and theſe Pearls, to me ſent Longavile.
The Letter is too long by halfe a mile.
Prin. I thinke no leſſe: Doſt thou not wiſh in heart
The Chaine were longer, and the Letter ſhort?
Mar. I, or I would theſe hands might never part.
Prin. We are wiſe girles to mocke our Lovers ſo.
Roſa. They are worſe fooles to purchaſe mocking ſo.
That ſame Birone ile torture ere I goe.
O that I knew he were but in by th' weeke,
How I would make him fawne, and beg, and ſeeke,
And wait the ſeaſon, and obſerve the times,
And ſpend his prodigall wits in booteles rimes.
And ſhape his ſervice all to my beheſts,
And make him proud to make me proud with jeſts.
So pertaunt like would I o'reſway his ſtate,
That he ſhould be my foole, and I his fate.
Prin. None are ſo ſurely caught, when they are catcht,
As Wit turn'd foole: folly in Wiſedome hatch'd,
Hath wiſedomes warrant, and the helpe of Schoole,
And Wits owne grace to grace a learned Foole?
Roſ. The bloud of youth burnes not with ſuch exceſſe,
As gravities revolt to wantoneſſe.
Mar. Folly in fooles beares not ſo ſtrong a note,
As fool'ry in the Wiſe, when Wit doth dote:
Since all the power thereof it doth apply,
To prove by Wit, worth in ſimplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Heere comes Boyet, and mirth in his face.
Boy. O I am ſtab'd with laughter, Wher's her Grace?
Prin. Thy newes Boyet?
Boy. Prepare Madame, prepare.
Arme Wenches arme, incounters mounted are,
Againſt your Peace, Love doth approach, diſguis'd:
Armed in arguments, you'll be ſupriz'd.
Muſter your Wits, ſtand in your owne defence,
Or hide your heads like Cowards, and flye hence.
Prin. Saint Dennis, to S. Cupid: What are they,
That charge their breath againſt us? Say ſcout ſay.
Boy. Vnder the coole ſhade of a Siccamore,
I thought to cloſe mine eyes ſome halfe an houre:
When loe to interrupt my purpos'd reſt,
Toward that ſhade I might behold addreſt,
The King and his companions: warily
I ſtole into a neighbour thicket by,
And over-heard, what you ſhall over-heare:
That by and by diſguis'd they will be heere.
Their Herald is a pretty knaviſh Page:
That well by heart hath con'd his embaſſage,
Action and accent did they teach him there.
Thus muſt thou ſpeake, and thus thy body beare.
And ever and anon they made a doubt,
Preſence majeſticall would put him out:
For quoth the King, an Angell ſhalt thou ſee:
Yet feare not thou, but ſpeake audaciouſly.
The Boy reply'd, an Angell is not evill:
I ſhould have fear'd her, had ſhe beene a devill.
With that all laugh'd, and clap'd him on the ſhoulder,
Making the bold wagge by their praiſes bolder.
One rub'd his elboe thus, and fleer'd, and ſwore,
A better ſpeech was never ſpoke before.
Another with his finger, and his thumb,
Cry'd via, we will doo't, come what will come.
The third he caper'd and cried, All goes well.
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and downe he fell:
With that they all did tumble on the ground,
With ſuch a zealous laughter ſo profound,
That in this ſpleene ridiculous appeares,
To checke their folly paſſions, ſolemne teares.
Prin. But what, but what, come they to viſit us?
Boy. They doe, they doe; and are apparel'd thus,
Like Muſcovites, or Ruſſians, or I geſſe.
Their purpoſe is to parlee, to court, and dance,

And every one his Love-feat will advance,
Vnto his ſeverall Miſtreſſe : which they'll know
By favours ſeverall, which they did beſtow.
Prin, And will they ſo? the Gallants ſhall be taskt :
For Ladies ; we will every one be maskt,
And not a man of them ſhall have the grace
Deſpight of ſute, to ſee a Ladies face.
Hold Roſaline, this Favour thou ſhalt weare,
And then the King will court thee for his Deare :
Hold, take thou this my ſweet, and give me thine,
So ſhall Birone take me for Roſaline.
And change your Favours too, ſo ſhall your Loves
Wooe contrary, deceiv'd by theſe removes.
Roſa. Come on then, weare the favours moſt in ſight.
Kath. But in this changing, What is your intent?
Prin. The effect of my intent is to croſſe theirs :
They doe it but in mocking merriment,
And mocke for mocke is onely my intent.
Their ſeverall counſels they unboſome ſhall,
To Loves miſtooke, and ſo be mockt withall.
Vpon the next occaſion that we meete,
With Viſages diſplayed to talke and greete.
Roſa. But ſhall we dance, if they deſire us too't?
Prin. No, to the death we will not move a foot,
Nor to their pen'd ſpeech render we no grace :
But while 'tis ſpoke, each turne away her face.
Boy. Why that contempt will kill the keepers heart,
And quite divorce his memory from his part.
Prin. Therefore I doe it, and I make no doubt,
The reſt will ne're come in, if he be out.
There's no ſuch ſport, as ſport by ſport orethrowne :
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our owne.
So ſhall we ſtay mocking entended game,
And they well mockt, depart away with ſhame. Sound.
Boy. The Trumpet ſounds, be maskt, the maskers come.

Enter Black moores with muſicke, the Boy with a ſpeech, and the reſt of the Lords diſguiſed.

Page. All haile, the richeſt Beauties on the earth.
Bir. Beauties no richer then rich Taffata.
Pag. A holy parcell of the faireſt dames that ever turn'd their backes to mortall viewes.
The Ladies turne their backes to him.
Bir. Their eyes villaine, their eyes.
Pag. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortall viewes.
Out
Bir. True, out indeed.
Pag. Out of your favours heavenly ſpirit vouchſafe
Not to behold.
Bir. Once to behold, rogue.
Pag. Once to behold with your Sunne beamed eyes,
With your Sunne beamed eyes.
Bir. They will not anſwer to that Epythite,
You were beſt call it Daughter-beamed eyes.
Pag. They doe not marke me, and that brings me out.
Bir. Is this your perfectneſſe? be gon you rogue.
Roſa. What would theſe ſtrangers?
Know their minds Boyet.
If they doe ſpeake our language, 'tis our will
That ſome plaine man recount their purpoſes.
Know what thy would?
Boy. What would you with the Princes?
Bir. Nothing but peace, and gentle viſitation.
Roſ. What would they, ſay they?
Boy. Nothing but peace, and gentle viſitation.
Roſa. Why that they have, and bid them ſo be gone.
Boy. She ſayes you have it, and you may be gone.
Kin. Say to her we have meaſur'd many miles,
To tread a Meaſure with you on the graſſe.
Boy. They ſay that they have meaſur'd many a mile,
To tread a Meaſure with you on this graſſe.
Roſa. It is not ſo. Aske them how many inches
Is in one mile? If they have meaſur'd many,
The meaſure then of one is eaſly told.
Boy. If to come hither, you have meaſur'd miles,
And many miles : the Princeſſe bids you tell,
How many inches doth fill up one mile?
Bir. Tell her we meaſure them by weary ſteps.
Boy. She heares her ſelfe.
Roſa. How many weary ſteps,
Of many weary miles you have ore-gone,
Are numbred in the travell of one mile?
Bir. We number nothing that we ſpend for you,
Our duty is ſo rich, ſo infinite,
That we may doe it ſtill without accompt.
Vouchſafe to ſhew the ſunſhine of your face,
That we (like ſavages) may worſhip it.
Roſa. My face is but a Moone and clouded too.
Kin. Bleſſed are clouds, to doe as ſuch clouds doe.
Vouchſafe bright Moone, and theſe thy ſtarres to ſhine,
(Thoſe clouds removed) upon our watery eyne,
Roſa. O vaine peticioner, beg a greater matter,
Thou now requeſts but Mooneſhine in the water.
Kin. Then in our meaſure, vouchſafe but one change.
Thou bidſt me beg, this begging is not ſtrange.
Roſa. Play muſicke then : nay you muſt doe it ſoone.
Not yet no dance : thus change I like the Moone.
Kin. Will you not dance? How come you thus eſtranged?
Roſa. You tooke the Moone at full, but now ſhee's changed?
Kin. Yet ſtill ſhe is the Moone, and I the Man.
Roſa. The muſicke playes, vouchſafe ſome motion to it : Our eares vouchſafe it.
Kin. But your legges ſhould doe it.
Roſ. Since you are ſtrangers, and come here by chance,
We'll not be nice, take hands, we will not dance.
Kin. Why take you hands then?
Roſa. Onely to part friends.
Curtſie ſweet hearts, and ſo the Meaſure ends.
Kin. More meaſure of this meaſure, be not nice.
Roſa. We can afford no more at ſuch a price.
Kin. Priſe your ſelves then : what buyes your company?
Roſa. Your abſence onely.
Kin. That can never be.
Roſa. Then cannot we be bought : and ſo adue,
Twice to your Viſor, and halfe once to you.
Kin. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.
Roſ. In private then.
Kin. I am beſt pleaſ'd with that.
Bir. White handed Miſtris, one ſweet word with thee.
Prin. Hony, and Milke, and Suger : there is three.
Bir. Nay then two treyes, and if you grow ſo nice
Methegline, Wort, and Malmſey ; well runne dice :
There's halfe a dozen ſweets.
Prin. Seventh ſweet adue, ſince you can cog,
Ile play no more with you.
Bir. One word in ſecret.
Prin. Let it not be ſweet.
Bir. Thou greev'ſt my gall.

Prin. Gall, bitter.
Bir. Therefore meete.
Du. Will you vouchſafe with me to change a word?
Mar. Name it.
Dum. Faire Lady:
Mar. Say you ſo? Faire Lord:
Take you that for your faire Lady.
Dum. Pleaſe it you,
As much in private, and Ile bid adieu.
Mar. What, was your vizard made without a tongue?
Long. I know the reaſon Lady why you aske.
Mar. O for your reaſon, quickly ſir, I long.
Long. You have a double tongue within your maske.
And would affoord my ſpeechleſſe vizard halfe.
Mar. Veale quoth the Dutch-man: is not Veale a Calfe?
Long. A Calfe faire Lady?
Mar. No, a faire Lord Calfe.
Long. Let's part the word.
Mar. No, Ile not be your halfe:
Take all and weane it, it may prove an Oxe.
Long. Looke how you but to your ſelfe in theſe ſharpe mockes.
Will you give hornes chaſt Lady? Doe not ſo.
Mar. Then dye a Calfe before your hornes doe grow.
Lon. One word in private with you ere I dye.
Mar. Bleat ſoftly then, the Butcher heares you cry.
Boy. The tongues of mocking wenches are as keene
As is the Razors edge, inviſible:
Cutting a ſmaller haire then may be ſeene,
Above the ſenſe of ſence ſo ſenſible:
Seemeth their conference, their conceits have wings,
Fleeter then arrows, bullets, wind, thought, ſwifter things
Roſ. Not one word more my maides, breake off, breake off.
Bir. By heaven, all dry beaten with pure ſcoffe.
Kin. Fare-well madde Wenches, you have ſimple wits. Exeunt.
Prin. Twenty adieus my frozen Muſcovits.
Are theſe the breed of wits ſo wondred at?
Boy. Tapers they are, with your ſweet breathes puft out.
Roſa. Wel-liking wits they have, groſſe, groſſe, fat, fat.
Prin. O poverty in wit, Kingly poore flout.
Will they not (thinke you) hang themſelves to night?
Or ever but in vizards ſhew their faces:
This pert Birone was out of count'nance quite.
Roſ. O! They were all in lamentable caſes.
The King was weeping ripe for a good word.
Prin. Birone did ſweare himſelfe out of all ſuite.
Mar. Dumaine was at my ſervice, and his ſword:
No point (quoth I:) my ſervant ſtraight was mute.
Ka. Lord Longavile ſaid I came ore his heart:
And trow you what he call'd me?
Prin. Qualme perhaps.
Kat. Yes in good faith.
Prin. Goe ſickneſſe as thou art.
Roſ. Well, better wits have worne plaine ſtatute caps,
But will you heare; the King is my love ſworne.
Prin. And quicke Birone hath plighted faith to me.
Kat. And Longavile was for my ſervice borne.
Mar. Dumaine is mine as ſure as barke on tree.
Boy. Madam, and pretty miſtreſſes give eare,
Immediately they will againe be heere
In their owne ſhapes: for it can never be,
They will digeſt this harſh indignity.
Prin. Will they returne?
Boy. They will they will, God knowes,
And leape for joy, though they are lame with blowes:
Therefore change Favours, and when they repaire,
Blow like ſweet Roſes, in this ſummer aire.
Prin. How blow? how blow? Speake to be underſtood.
Boy. Faire Ladies maskt, are Roſes in their bud:
Diſmaskt, their damaske ſweet commixture ſhowne,
Are Angels vailing clouds, or Roſes blowne.
Prin. Avant perplexity: What ſhall we doe,
If they returne in their owne ſhapes to wooe?
Roſa. Good Madam, if by me you'll be adviſ'd,
Let's mocke them ſtill as well knowne as diſguiſ'd:
Let us complaine to them what fooles were heare,
Diſguiſ'd like Muſcovites in ſhapeleſſe geare:
And wonder what they were, and to what end
Their ſhallow ſhowes, and Prologue vildely pen'd,
And their rough carriage ſo ridiculous,
Should be preſented at our Tent to us.
Boy. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.
Prin. Whip to our Tents, as Roes runnes ore Land. Exeunt.

Enter the King and the reſt.

King. Faire ſir, God ſave you. Wher's the Princeſſe?
Boy. Gone to her Tent.
Pleaſe it your Majeſty command me any ſervice to her?
King. That ſhe vouchſafe me audience for one word.
Boy. I will, and ſo will ſhe, I know my Lord. Exit.
Bir. This fellow pickes up wit as Pigeons peaſe,
And utters it againe, when love doth pleaſe,
He is Wits Pedler, and retailes his Wares,
At Wakes, and Waſſels, Meetings, Markets, Faires.
And we that ſell by groſſe, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace it with ſuch ſhow.
This Gallant pins the Wenches on his ſleeve.
Had he bin Adam, he had tempted Eve.
He can carve too, and liſpe: Why this is he,
That kiſt away his hand in courteſie.
This is the Ape of Forme, Monſieur the nice,
That when he playes at Tables, chides the Dice
In honorable tearmes: Nay he can ſing
A meane moſt meanly, and in Vſhering
Mend him who can: the Ladies call him ſweet.
The ſtaires as he treads on them kiſſe his feete.
This is the flower that ſmiles on every one,
To ſhew his teeth as white as Whale his bone.
And conſciences that will not dye in debt,
Pay him the duty of hony-tongued Boyet.
Kin. A bliſter on his ſweet tongue with my heart,
That put Armadoes Page out of his part.

Enter Ladies.

Bir. See where it comes. Behaviour what wer't thou,
Till this madman ſhew'd thee? And what art thou now?
Kin. All haile ſweet Madam, and faire time of day.
Prin. Faire in all Haile is foule, as I conceive.
Kin. Conſtrue my ſpeeches better, if you may.
Prin. Then wiſh me better, I will give you leave.
Kin. We came to viſit you, and purpoſe now
To leade you to our Court, vouchſafe it then.
Prin. This field ſhall hold me, and ſo hold your vow:
Nor God, nor I, delights in perjur'd men.
Kin. Rebuke me not for that which you provoke:
The

The vertue of your eye muſt breake my oath.
Pr. You nickname vertue: vice you ſhould have ſpoke:
For vertues office never breakes men troth.
Now by my maiden honor, yet as pure
As the unſullied Lilly, I proteſt,
A world of torments though I ſhould endure,
I would not yeeld to be your houſes gueſt:
So much I hate a breaking cauſe to be
Of heavenly oathes, vow'd with integrity.
Kin. O you have liv'd in deſolation heere,
Vnſeene, unviſited, much to our ſhame.
Prin. Not ſo my Lord, it is not ſo I ſweare,
We have had paſtimes heere, and pleaſant game,
A meſſe of Ruſſians left us but of late.
Kin. How Madam? Ruſſians?
Prin. I in truth, my Lord.
Trim gallants, full of Courtſhip and of ſtate.
Roſa. Madam ſpeake true. It is not ſo my Lord:
My Lady (to the manner of the dayes)
In curteſie gives undeſerving praiſe.
We foure indeed confronted were with foure
In Ruſſian habit: Heere they ſtayed an houre,
And talk'd apace: and in that houre (my Lord)
They did not bleſſe us with one happy word.
I dare not call them fooles; but this I thinke,
When they are thirſty, fooles would faine have drinke.
Bir. This jeſt is dry to me. Faire gentle ſweet,
Your wit makes wiſe things fooliſh, when we greete
With eyes beſt ſeeing, heavens fiery eye:
By light we loſe light: your capacity
Is of that nature, that to your huge ſtore,
Wiſe things ſeeme fooliſh, and rich things but poore.
Roſ. This proves you wiſe and rich: for in my eye——
Bir. I am a foole, and full of poverty.
Roſ. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to ſnatch words from my tongue.
Bir. O, I am yours and all that I poſſeſſe.
Roſ. All the foole mine.
Bir. I cannot give you leſſe.
Roſ. Which of the Vizards was it that you wore?
Bir. Where? when? What Vizard?
Why demand you this?
Roſ. There, then, that vizard, that ſuperfluous caſe,
That hid the worſe, and ſhew'd the better face.
Kin. We are diſcried,
They'l mocke us now downeright.
Duk. Let us confeſſe, and turne it to a jeſt.
Prin. Amaz'd my Lord? Why lookes your Highneſſe ſadde?
Roſ. Helpe hold his browes, hee'l ſwound: why looke you pale?
Sea-ſicke I thinke comming from Muſcovy.
Bir. Thus poure the ſtarres downe plagues for perjury.
Can any face of braſſe hold longer out?
Heere ſtand I, Lady dart thy skill at me,
Bruiſe me with ſcorne, confound me with a flout.
Thruſt thy ſharpe wit quite through my ignorance.
Cut me to peeces with thy keene conceit:
And I will wiſh thee never more to dance,
Nor never more in Ruſſian habit waite.
O! never will I truſt to ſpeeches pen'd,
Nor to the motion of a Schoole-boyes tongue.
Nor never come in vizard to my friend,
Nor woo in rime like a blind-harpers ſongue,
Taffata phraſes, ſilken tearmes preciſe,
Three-pil'd Hyperboles, ſpruce affection;
Figures pedanticall, theſe ſummer flyes,
Have blowne me full of maggot oſtentation.
I doe forſweare them, and I heere proteſt,
By this white Glove (how white the hand God knows)
Henceforth my wooing mind ſhall be expreſt
In ruſſet yeas, and honeſt kerſie noes.
And to begin Wench, ſo God helpe me law,
My love to thee is ſound, ſans cracke or flaw.
Roſa. Sans, ſans, I pray you.
Bir. Yet I have a tricke
Of the old rage. beare with me, I am ſicke.
Ile leave it by degrees: ſoft, let us ſee,
Write Lord have mercy on us, on thoſe three,
They are infected, in their hearts it lyes:
They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes:
Theſe Lords are viſited, you are not free:
For the Lords tokens on you doe I ſee.
Prin. No, they are free that gave theſe tokens to us.
Bir. Our ſtates are forfeit, ſeeke not to undoe us.
Roſ. It is not ſo; for how can this be true,
That you ſtand forfeit, being thoſe that ſue.
Bir. Peace, for I will not have to doe with you.
Roſ. Nor ſhall not, if I doe as I intend.
Bir. Speake for your ſelves, my wit is at an end.
King. Teach us ſweet Madame, for our rude tranſgreſſion, ſome faire excuſe.
Prin. The faireſt is confeſſion.
Were you not heere but even now, diſguis'd?
Kin. Madam, I was.
Prin. And were you well adviſ'd?
Kin. I was faire Madam.
Prin. When you then were heere,
What did you whiſper in your Ladies eare?
Kin. That more then all the world I did reſpect her.
Prin. When ſhe ſhall challenge this, you will reject her.
Kin. Vpon mine Honor no.
Prin. Peace, peace, forbeare:
Your oath once broke, you force not to forſweare.
Kin. Deſpiſe me when I breake this oath of mine.
Prin. I will, and therefore keepe it. Roſaline,
What did the Ruſſian whiſper in your eare?
Roſa. Madam, he ſwore that he did hold me deare
As precious eye-ſight, and did value me
Above this World: adding there moreover,
That he would Wed me, or elſe dye my Lover.
Prin. God give thee joy of him: the Noble Lord
Moſt honorably doth uphold his word.
Kin. What meane you Madame?
By my life, my troth,
I never ſwore this Lady ſuch an oath.
Roſ. By heaven you did; and to confirme it plaine,
you gave me this: But take it ſir againe.
King. My faith and this, the Princeſſe I did give,
I knew her by this Iewell on her ſleeve.
Prin. Pardon me ſir, this Iewell did ſhe weare,
And Lord Birone (I thanke him) is my deare.
What? Will you have me, or your Pearle againe?
Bir. Neither of either, I remit both twaine.
I ſee the tricke on't: Heere was a conſent,
Knowing aforehand of our merriment,
To daſh it like a Chriſtmas Comedy.
Some carry-tale, ſome pleaſe-man, ſome ſlight Zany,
Some mumble-newes, ſome trencher-knight, ſome Dicke
That ſmiles his cheeke in yeares, and knowes the tricke
To make my Lady laugh, when ſhe's diſpos'd;

Told our intents before: which once diſclos'd,
The Ladies did change Favours, and then we
Following the ſignes, woo'd but the ſigne of ſhe.
Now to our perjury, to adde more terror,
We are againe forſworne in will and error.
Much upon this it is: and might not you
Foreſtall our ſport, to make us thus untrue?
Doe not you know my Ladies foot by'th ſquier?
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And ſtand betweene her backe ſir, and the fire,
Holding a trencher, jeſting merrily?
You put our Page out: goe, you are allowd
Die when you will, a ſmocke ſhall be your ſhrowd.
You leere upon me, doe you? There's an eye
Wounds like a Leaden ſword.

Boy. Full merrily hath this brave manager, this carreere beene runne.

Bir. Loe, he is tilting ſtraight. Peace, I have done.

Enter Clowne.

Welcome pure wit, thou part'ſt a faire fray.

Clo. O Lord ſir, they would kno,
Whether the three Worthies ſhall come in, or no.

Bir. What, are there but three?

Clow. No ſir, but it is vara fine,
For every one purſents three.

Bir. And three times thrice is nine.

Clo. Not ſo ſir, under correction ſir, I hope it is not ſo. You cannot beg us ſir, I can aſſure you ſir, we know what we know: I hope ſir three times thrice ſir.

Bir. Is not nine.

Clo. Vnder correction ſir, wee know where-untill it doth amount.

Bir. By Iove, I alwayes tooke three threes for nine.

Clo. O Lord ſir, it were pitty you ſhould get your living by reckning ſir.

Bir. How much is it?

Clo. O Lord ſir, the parties themſelves, the actors ſir will ſhew where-untill it doth amount: for mine owne part, I am (as they ſay, but to perfect one man in one poore man) Pompion the great ſir.

Bir. Art thou one of the Worthies?

Clo. It pleaſed them to thinke me worthy of Pompey the great: for mine owne part, I know not the degree of the Worthy, but I am to ſtand for him.

Bir. Goe, bid them prepare. Exit.

Clo. We will turne it finely off ſir, we will take ſome care.

King. Birone, they will ſhame us:
Let them not approach.

Bir. We are ſhame-proofe my Lord: and 'tis ſome policy, to have one ſhew worſe then the Kings and his company.

Kin. I ſay they ſhall not come.

Prin. Nay my good Lord, let me ore rule you now;
That ſport beſt pleaſes, that doth leaſt know how.
Where Zeale ſtrives to content, and the contents
Dies in the Zeale of that which it preſents:
Their forme confounded, makes moſt forme in mirth,
When great things labouring periſh in their birth.

Bir. A right deſcription of our ſport my Lord.

Enter Braggart.

Brag. Annointed, I implore ſo much expence of thy royall ſweet breath, as will vtter a brace of words.

Prin. Doth this man ſerve God?

Bir. Why aske you?

Prin. He ſpeak's not like a man of God's making.

Brag. That's all one my faire ſweet hony Monarch: For I proteſt, the Schoolmaſter is exceeding fantaſticall: Too too vaine, too too vaine. But we will put it (as they ſay) to Fortuna delaguar. I wiſh you the peace of mind moſt royall cupplement.

King. Here is like to be a good preſence of Worthies; He preſents Hector of Troy, the Swaine Pompey the great, the Pariſh Curate Alexander, Armadoes Page Hercules, the Pedant Iudas Machabeus: And if theſe foure Worthies in their firſt ſhew thriue, theſe foure will change habites, and preſent the other five.

Bir. There is five in the firſt ſhew.

Kin. You are deceived, tis not ſo.

Bir. The Pedant, the Braggart, the Hedge-Prieſt, the Foole, and the Boy.
A bare throw at Novum, and the whole world againe,
Cannot pricke out five ſuch, take each one in's vaine.

Kin. The ſhip is under ſaile, and here ſhe comes amaine.

Enter Pompey.

Clo. I Pompey am.

Boy. You lye, you are not he.

Clo. I Pompey am.

Boy. With Libbards head on knee.

Bir. Well ſaid old mocker,
I muſt needs be friends with thee.

Clo. I Pompey am, Pompey ſurnam'd the big.

Du. The great.

Clo. It is great ſir: Pompey ſurnam'd the great;
That oft in field, with Targe and Shield,
did make my foe to ſweat:
And travailing along this coaſt, I heere am come by chance,
And lay my Armes before the legs of this ſweet Laſſe of France.
If your Ladiſhip would ſay thankes Pompey, I had done.

Prin. Great thankes great Pompey.

Clr. Tis not ſo much worth: but I hope I was perfect. I made a little fault in great.

Bir. My hat to a halfe-peny, Pompey proves the beſt Worthy.

Enter Curate, for Alexander.

Curat. When in the world I liv'd, I was the worlds Commander:
By Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, I ſpred my conquering might
My Scutcheon plaine declares that I am Aliſander.

Boy. Your noſe ſaies no, you are not:
For it ſtands too right.

Bir. Your noſe ſmels no, in this moſt tender ſmelling Knight.

Prin. The Conqueror is diſmaid:
Proceed good Alexander.

Cur. When in the world I lived, I was the worldes Commander.

Boy. Moſt true, 'tis right: you were ſo Aliſander.

Bir. Pompey the great.

Clo. Your ſervant and Coſtard.

Bir. Take away the Conqueror, take away Aliſander.

Clo. O ſir, you have overthrowne Aliſander the conqueror: you will be ſcrap'd out of the painted cloth for this.

this: your Lion that holds his Pollax ſitting on a cloſe ſtoole, will be given to Ajax. He will be the ninth worthy. A Conqueror, and affraid to ſpeake? Runne away for ſhame Aliſander. There an't ſhall pleaſe you: a fooliſh mild man, an honeſt man, looke you, and ſoone daſht. He is a marvellous good neighbour inſooth, and a very good Bowler: but for Aliſander, alas you ſee, how 'tis a little ore-parted. But there are Worthies a comming, will ſpeake their mind in ſome other ſort.

Clo. Stand aſide good Pompey. Exit Clo.

Enter Pedant for Iudas, and the Boy for Hercules.

Ped. Great Hercules is preſented by this Impe,
Whoſe Club kil'd Cerberus that three-headed Canus,
And when he was a babe, a child, a ſhrimpe,
Thus did he ſtrangle Serpents in his Manus:
Quoniam, he ſeemeth in minority,
Ergo, I come with this Apology.
Keepe ſome ſtate in thy Exit, and vaniſh. Exit Boy.

Ped. Iudas I am.

Dum. A Iudas?

Ped. Not Iſcariot ſir.
Iudas I am ycliped Machabeus.

Dum. Iudas Machabeus clipt, is plaine Iudas.

Bir. A kiſſing traitor. How art thou prov'd Iudas?

Ped. Iudas I am.

Dum. The more ſhame for you Iudas.

Ped. What meane you ſir?

Boy. To make Iudas hang himſelfe.

Ped. Begin ſir, you are my elder.

Bir. Well follow'd, Iudas was hang'd on an Elder.

Ped. I will not be put out of countenance.

Bir. Becauſe thou haſt no face.

Ped. What is this.

Boy. A Citterne head.

Dum. The head of a bodkin.

Bir. A deaths face in a ring.

Lon. The face of an old Roman coyne, ſcarce ſeene.

Boy. The pummell of Ceſars Faulchion.

Dum. The carv'd-bone face on a Flaske.

Bir. Saint Georges halfe cheeke in a brooch.

Dum. I, and in a brooch of Lead.

Bir. I, and worne in the cap of a Tooth-drawer.
And now forward, for we have put thee in countenance.

Ped. You have put me out of countenance.

Bir. Falſe, we have given thee faces.

Ped. But you have out-fac'd them all.

Bir. And thou wer't a Lion, we would doe ſo.

Boy. Therefore as he is, an Aſſe, let him goe:
And ſo adieu ſweet Iude. Nay, why doſt thou ſtay?

Dum. For the latter end of his name.

Bir. For the Aſſe to the Iude: give it him. Iud-as away.

Ped. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Boy. A light for monſieur Iudas, it growes darke, he may ſtumble.

Prin. Alas poore Machabeus, how hath he beene baited.

Enter Braggart.

Bir. Hide thy head Achilles, heere comes Hector in Armes.

Dum. Though my mockes come home by me, I will now be merry.

King. Hector was but a Troyan in reſpect of this.

Boy. But is this Hector?

Kin. I thinke Hector was not ſo cleane timber'd.

Lon. His legge is too big for Hector.

Dum. More Calfe certaine.

Boy. No; he is beſt indued in the ſmall.

Bir. This can'ot be Hector.

Dum. He's a god or a Painter, for he makes faces.

Brag. The Armipotent Mares, of Launces the almighty, gave Hector a gift.

Dum. A gilt Nutmegge.

Bir. A Lemmon.

Lon. Stucke with Cloves.

Dum. No cloven.

Brag. The Armipotent Mars, of Launces the almighty,
Gave Hector a gift, the heire of Illion;
A man ſo breathed, that certaine he would fight: yea
From morne till night, out of his Pavillion.
I am that Flower.

Dum. That Mint.

Long. That Cullambine.

Brag. Sweet Lord Longavile reine thy tongue.

Lon. I muſt rather give it the reine: for it runnes againſt Hector.

Dum. I, and Hector's a Grey-hound.

Brag. The ſweet War-man is dead and rotten,
Sweet chuckes, beat not the bones of the buried:
But I will forward with my device;
Sweet Royalty beſtow on me the Sence of hearing.

Birone ſteps forth.

Prin. Speake brave Hector, we are much delighted.

Brag. I doe adore thy ſweet Graces ſlipper.

Boy. Loves her by the foot.

Dum. He may not by the yard.

Brag. This Hector farre ſurmounted Hanniball.

The party is gone.

Clo. Fellow Hector, ſhe is gone; ſhe is two moneths on her way.

Brag. What meaneſt thou?

Clo. Faith unleſſe you play the honeſt Troyan, the poore Wench is caſt away: ſhe's quicke, the child brags in her belly already: tis yours.

Brag. Doſt thou infamonize me among Potentates? Thou ſhalt dye.

Clo. Then ſhall Hector be whipt for Iaquenetta that is quicke by him, and hang'd for Pompey, that is dead by him.

Dum. Moſt rare Pompey.

Boy. Renowned Pompey.

Bir. Greater then great, great, great, great Pompey: Pompey the huge.

Dum. Hector trembles.

Bir. Pompey is moved, more Atees more Atees ſtirre them, or ſtirre them on.

Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Bir. I, if a have no more mans blood in's belly, then will ſup a Flea.

Brag. By the North-pole I doe challenge thee.

Clo. I will not fight with a pole like a Northern man; Ile ſlaſh, Ile doe it by the ſword: I pray you let me borrow my Armes againe.

Dum. Roome for the incenſed Worthies.

Clo. Ile doe it in my ſhirt.

Dum. Moſt reſolute Pompey.

Page. Maſter, let me take you a button hole lower: Doe you not ſee Pompey is uncaſing for the combat: what meane you ? you will loſe your reputation.

Brag. Gentlemen and Souldiers pardon me, I will not combat in my ſhirt.

Du. You may not deny it, Pompey hath made the challenge.

Brag. Sweet bloods, I both may, and will.

Bir. What reaſon have you for't?

Bra. The naked truth of it is, I have no ſhirt,
I goe woolward for penance.

Boy. True, and it was injoyned him in Rome for want of Linnen: ſince when, Ile be ſworne he wore none, but a diſhclout of Iaquenettas, and that hee weares next his heart for a favour.

Enter a Meſſenger, Monſieur Marcade.

Mar. God ſave you Madam.

Prin. Welcome Marcade, but that thou interrupteſt our merriment.

Merc. I am ſorry Madam, for the newes I bring is heavy in my tongue. The King your father.

Prin. Dead for my life.

Mar. Even ſo: My tale is told.

Bir. Worthies away, the Scene begins to cloud.

Bra. For mine owne part, I breathe free breath: I have ſeene the day of wrong, through the little hole of diſcretion, and I will right my ſelfe like a Souldier.

Exeunt Worthies.

Kin. How fare's your Majeſty?

Prin. Boyet prepare, I will away to night.

Kin. Madam not ſo, I doe beſeech you ſtay.

Prin. Prepare I ſay. I thanke you gracious Lords
For all your faire endevours and entreats:
Out of a new ſad-ſoule, that you vouchſafe,
In your rich wiſedome to excuſe, or hide,
The liberall oppoſition of our ſpirits,
If over-boldly we have borne our ſelves,
In the converſe of breath (your gentleneſſe
Was guilty of it.) Farewell worthy Lord:
A heavy heart beares not an humble tongue.
Excuſe me ſo, comming ſo ſhort of thankes,
For my great ſuit, ſo eaſily obtain'd.

Kin. The extreme parts of time, extremely formes
All cauſes to the purpoſe of his ſpeed:
And often at his very looſe decides
That, which long proceſſe could not arbitrate.
And though the mourning brow of progeny
Forbid the ſmiling curteſie of Love:
The holy ſuite which faine it would convince,
Yet ſince loves argument was firſt on foote,
Let not the cloud of ſorrow juſtle it
From what it purpoſed: ſince to waile friends loſt,
Is not by much ſo wholſome profitable,
As to rejoyce at friends but newly found.

Prin. I underſtand you not, my greefes are double.

Bir. Honeſt plain words, beſt pierce the eares of griefe
And by theſe badges underſtand the King,
For your faire ſakes have we neglected time,
Plaid foule play with our oathes: your beauty Ladies
Hath much deformed us, faſhioning our humors
Even to the oppoſed end of our intents.
And what in us hath ſeem'd ridiculous:
As Love is full of unbefitting ſtraines,
All wanton as a child, skipping and vaine.
Form'd by the eye, and therefore like the eye.
Full of ſtraying ſhapes, of habits, and of formes
Varying in ſubjects as the eye doth roule,
To every varied object in his glance:
Which party-coated preſence of looſe love
Put on by us, if in your heavenly eyes,
Have miſbecom'd our oathes and gravities.
Thoſe heavenly eyes that looke into theſe faults,
Suggeſted us to make: therefore Ladies
Our love being yours, the error that Love makes
Is likewiſe yours. We to our ſelves prove falſe,
By being once falſe, for ever to be true
To thoſe that make us both, faire Ladyes you,
And even that falſhood in it ſelfe a ſinne,
Thus purifies it ſelfe, and turnes to grace.

Prin. We have receiv'd your Letters, full of Love;
Your Favours, the Ambaſſadors of Love.
And in our maiden counſaile rated them,
At courtſhip, pleaſant jeſt, and curteſie,
As bumbaſt and as lining to the time:
But more devout then theſe are our reſpects
Have we not beene, and therefore met your loves
In their owne faſhion, like a merriment.

Du. Our letters Madam, ſhew'd much more then jeſt.

Long. So did our lookes.

Roſa. Wee did not coate them ſo.

King. Now at the lateſt minute of the houre,
Grant us your loves.

Prin. A time me thinkes too ſhort,
To make a world-without-end bargaine in;
No, no my Lord, your Grace is perjur'd much,
Full of deare guiltineſſe, and therefore this:
If for my Love (as there is no ſuch cauſe)
You will doe ought, this ſhall you doe for me,
Your oath I will not truſt: but goe with ſpeed
To ſome forlorne and naked Hermitage,
Remote from all the pleaſures of the world:
There ſtay, untill the twelve Celeſtiall Signes
Have brought about their annuall reckoning.
If this auſtere inſociable life,
Change not your offer made in heate of blood:
If froſts, and faſts, hard lodging, and thin weedes
Nip not the gaudy bloſſomes of your Love,
But that it beare this triall, and laſt love:
Then at the expiration of the yeare,
Come challenge me, challenge me by theſe deſerts,
And by this Virgin palme, now kiſſing thine,
I will be thine: and till that inſtant ſhut
My woefull ſelfe up in a mourning houſe,
Raining the teares of lamentation,
For the remembrance of my Fathers death.
If this thou doe deny, let our hands part,
Neither intitled in the others heart.

King. If this, or more then this, I would deny,
To flatter up theſe powers of mine with reſt,
The ſodaine hand of death cloſe up mine eye.
Hence ever then, my heart is in thy breſt.

Bir. And what to me my Love? and what to me?

Roſ. You muſt be purged too, your ſinnes are rack'd.
You are attaint with fault and perjury:
Therefore if you my favour meane to get,
A twelvemonth ſhall you ſpend, and never reſt,
But ſeeke the weary beds of people ſicke.

Dum. But what to me my love? but what to me?

Kat. A wife? a beard, faire health, and honeſty;
With three-fold love, I wiſh you all theſe three.

Dum. O ſhall I ſay, I thanke you gentle wife?

Kat. Not ſo my Lord, a twelvemonth and a day,

Ile marke no words that ſmoothfac'd wooers ſay.
Come when the King doth to my Lady come:
Then if I have much love, Ile give you ſome.
Dum. Ile ſerve thee true and faithfully till then.
Kath. Yet ſweare not, leaſt ye be forſworne agen.
Long. What ſayes Maria?
Mari. At the twelve-months end,
Ile change my blacke Gowne, for a faithfull friend.
Lon. Ile ſtay with patience: but the time is long.
Mari. The liker you, few taller are ſo yong.
Bir. Studies my Lady? Miſtris, looke on me,
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye:
What humble ſuite attends thy anſwer there,
Impoſe ſome ſervice on me for my Love.
Roſa. Oft have I heard of you my Lord Birone,
Before I ſaw you: and the worlds large tongue
Proclaimes you for a man repleate with mockes,
Full of compariſons, and wounding floutes:
Which you on all eſtates will execute,
That lie within the mercy of your wit.
To weed this Wormewood from your fruitfull braine,
And therewithall to win me, if you pleaſe,
Without the which I am not to be won:
You ſhall this twelve-month terme from day to day,
Viſite the ſpeechleſſe ſicke, and ſtill converſe
With groaning wretches: and your taske ſhall be,
With all the fierce endevour of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to ſmile.
Bir. To move wilde laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be, it is impoſſible.
Mirth cannot move a ſoule in agonie.
Roſa. Why that's the way to choke a gibing ſpirit,
Whoſe influence is begot of that looſe grace,
Which ſhallow laughing hearers give to fooles:
A jeſts proſperitie, lies in the eare
Of him that heares it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if ſickly eares,
Deaft with the clamors of their owne deare groanes,
Will heare your idle ſcornes; continue then,
And I will have you, and that fault withall.
But if they will not, throw away that ſpirit,
And I ſhall finde you empty of that fault,
Right joyfull of your reformation.
Bir. A twelve-month? Well: befall what will befall
Ile jeſt a twelve-month in an Hoſpitall.
Prin. I ſweet my Lord, and ſo I take my leave.
King. No Madam, we will bring you on your way.
Bir. Our wooing doth not end like an old Play:
Iacke hath not Gill: theſe Ladies courteſie
Might well have made our ſport a Comedie.
King. Come ſir, it wants a twelve-month and a day,
And then 'twill end.
Bir. That's too long for a Play.

Enter Braggart.

Brag. Sweet Majeſty vouchſafe me.
Prin. Was not that Hector?
Dum. The worthy Knight of Troy.
Brag. I will kiſſe thy Royall finger, and take leave.
I am a Votary, I have vow'd to Iaquenetta to hold the Plough for her ſweet love three yeeres. But moſt eſteemed greatneſſe, will you heare the Dialogue that the two Learned men have compiled, in praiſe of the Owle and the Cuckow? It ſhould have followed in the end of our ſhew.
Kin. Call them forth quickly, we will doe ſo.
Brag. Holla, Approach.

Enter all.

This ſide is Hiems, Winter.
This Ver, the Spring: the one maintained by the Owle,
The other by the Cuckow.
Ver, begin.

The Song.

When Daſies pied, and Violets blew,
And Cuckow-buds of yellow hew:
And Lady-ſmocks all ſilver white,
Doe paint the Medowes with delight,
The Cuckow then on every Tree,
Mockes married men, for thus ſings he,
Cuckow.
Cuckow, Cuckow: O word of feare,
Unpleaſing to a married eare.

When Shepheards pipe on Oaten ſtrawes,
And merry Larkes are Ploughmens clockes:
When Turtles tread, and Rookes and Dawes,
And Maidens bleach their ſummer ſmockes:
The Cuckow then on every tree
Mockes married men; for thus ſings he,
Cuckow.
Cuckow, Cuckow: O word of feare,
Vnpleaſing to a married eare.

Winter.

When Iſickles hang by the wall,
And Dicke the Shepheard blowes his naile;
And Tom beares Logges into the Hall,
And Milke comes frozen home in paile:
When blood is nipt, and wayes be fowle,
Then nightly ſings the ſtaring Owle
Tu-whit to-who.
A merry note,
While greaſie Ione doth keele the pot.

When all aloud the Wind doth blow,
And coffing drownes the Parſons Saw:
And Birds ſit brooding in the Snow,
And Marrians Noſe lookes red and raw:
When roaſted Crabs hiſſe in the bowle,
Then nightly ſings the ſtaring Owle,
Tu-whit to who:
A merry note,
While greaſie Ione doth keele the pot.

Brag. The words of Mercurie,
Are harſh after the ſongs of Apollo;
You that way; we this way.
Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

A MIDSOMMER
Nights Dreame.

Actus Primus.

Enter Theſeus, Hippolita, with others.

Theſeus.

NOw faire Hippolita, our nuptiall houre
Drawes on apace: foure happy daies bring in Another Moon: but oh, me thinks, how ſlow
This old Moon wanes? She lingers my deſires
Like to a Step-dame, or a Dowager,
Long withering out a yong mans revennew.
Hip. Foure daies will quickly ſteep thẽſelves in nights,
Foure nights will quickly dreame away the time:
And then the Moone, like to a ſilver bow.
Now bent in heaven, ſhall behold the night
Of our ſolemnities.
The. Go Philoſtrate,
Stirre up the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the pert and nimble ſpirit of mirth,
Turne melancholy forth to Funerals:
The pale companion is not for our pompe.
Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my ſword,
And wonne thy love, doing thee injuries:
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pompe, with triumph, and with revelling.

Enter Egeus and his daughter Hermia, Lyſander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theſeus, our renowned Duke.
The. Thanks good Egeus: what's the news with thee?
Ego. Full of vexation, come I, with complaint
Againſt my childe, my daughter Hermia.
Stand forth Demetrius.
My Noble Lord,
This man hath my conſent to marry her.
Stand forth Lyſander.
And my gracious Duke,
This hath bewitch'd the boſome of my childe:
Thou, thou Lyſander, thou haſt given her rimes,
And interchang'd love-tokens with my childe:
Thou haſt by Moone-light at her window ſung,
With faining voice, verſes of faining love,
And ſtolne the impreſſion of her fantaſie,
With bracelets of thy haire, rings, gawdes, conceits,
Knackes, trifles, Noſe-gaies, ſweet meats (meſſengers
Of ſtrong prevailment in unhardned youth)
With cunning haſt thou filch'd my daughters heart,
Turn'd her obedience (which is due to me)
To ſtuborne harſhneſſe. And my gracious Duke,
Be it ſo ſhe will not heere before your Grace,
Conſent to marry with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient priviledge of Athens;
As ſhe is mine, I may diſpuſe of her;
Which ſhall be either to this Gentleman,
Or to her death, according to our Law,
Immediately provided in that caſe.
The. What ſay you Hermia? be adviſ'd faire Maid.
To you your Father ſhould be as a God;
One that compos'd your beauties; yea and one
To whom you are but as a forme in waxe
By him imprinted: and within his power,
To leave the figure, or diſfigure it:
Demetrius is a worthy Gentleman.
Her. So is Lyſander.
The. In himſelfe he is.
But in this kinde, wanting your fathers voice
The other muſt be held the worthier.
Her. I would my father look'd but with my eyes.
The. Rather your eies muſt with his judgment looke.
Her. I do entreat your Grace to pardon me,
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concerne my modeſtie
In ſuch a preſence heere to pleade my thoughts:
But I beſeech your Grace, that I may know
The worſt that may befall me in this caſe,
If I refuſe to wed Demetrius.
The. Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the ſociety of men.
Therefore faire Hermia queſtion your deſires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether (if you yeeld not to your fathers choice)
You can endure the livery of a Nunne,
For aye to be in ſhady Cloiſter mew'd,
To live a barren ſiſter all your life,
Chanting faint hymnes to the cold fruitleſſe Moone,
Thrice bleſſed they that maiſter ſo their blood,
To undergo ſuch maiden pilgrimage,
But earthlier happy is the Roſe diſtill'd,
Then that which withering on the virgin thorne,
Growes, lives, and dies, in ſingle bleſſedneſſe.

Her. So will I grow, ſo live, ſo die my Lord,
Ere I will yeeld my virgin Patent up
Vnto his Lordſhip, to whoſe unwiſhed yoake,
My ſoule conſents not to give ſoveraignty.
The. Take time to pauſe, and by the next new Moon
The ſealing day betwixt my love and me,
For everlaſting bond of fellowſhip:
Vpon that day either prepare to die,
For diſobedience to you fathers will,
Or elſe to wed Demetrius as hee would,
Or on Dianaes Altar to proteſt
For aie, auſterity, and ſingle life.
Dem. Relent ſweet Hermia, and Lyſander, yeelde
Thy crazed title to my certaine right.
Lyſ. You have her fathers love, Demetrius:
Let me have Hermiaes: do you marry him.
Egens. Scornfull Lyſander, true, he hath my Love;
And what is mine, my love ſhall render him.
And ſhe is mine, and all my right of her,
I do eſtate vnto Demetrius.
Lyſ. I am my Lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well poſſeſt: my love is more then his:
My fortunes every way as fairely ranck'd
(If not with vantage) as Demetrius:
And (which is more then all theſe boaſts can be)
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia.
Why ſhould not I then proſecute my right?
Demetrins, Ile auouch it to his head,
Made love to Nedars daughter, Helena;
And won her ſoule: and ſhe (ſweet Lady) dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in Idolatry,
Vpon this ſpotted and inconſtant man.
The. I muſt confeſſe, that I have heard ſo much,
And with Demetrius thought to have ſpoke thereof:
But being over-full of ſelfe-affaires,
My minde did loſe it. But Demetrius come,
And come Egens, you ſhall go with me,
I have ſome private ſchooling for you both.
For you faire Hermia, looke you arme your ſelfe,
To fit your fancies to your Fathers will;
Or elſe the Law of Athens yeelds you vp
(Which by no meanes we may extenuate)
To death, or to a vow of ſingle life.
Come my Hippolita, what cheare my love?
Demetrins and Egens go along:
I muſt imploy you in ſome buſineſſe
Againſt our nuptialls, and conferre with you
Of ſomething, neerely that concernes your ſelves.
Ege. With dutie and deſire we follow you. Exeunt.

Manet Lyſander and Hermia.

Lyſ. How now my love? Why is your cheek ſo pale?
How chance the Roſes there do fade ſo faſt?
Her. Belike for want of raine, which I could well
Beteeme them, from the tempeſt of mine eyes.
Lyſ. Hermia for ought that ever I could reade,
Could ever heare by tale or hiſtory,
The courſe of true love never did run ſmooth,
But either it was different in blood.
Her. O croſſe! too high to be enthral'd to love.
Lyſ. Or elſe miſgraffed, in reſpect of yeares.
Her. O ſpight! too old to be ingag'd to yong.
Lyſ. Or elſe it ſtood upon the choiſe of merit.
Her. O hell! to chooſe love by anothers eye.
Lyſ. Or if there were a ſimpathie in choiſe,
Warre, death, or ſickneſſe, did lay ſiege to it;
Making it momentarie, as a ſound:
Swift as a ſhadow, ſhort as any dreame,
Briefe as the lightning in the collied night,
That (in a ſpleene) vnfolds both heaven and earth;
And ere a man hath power to ſay, behold;
The jawes of darkneſſe do devoure it up:
So quicke bright things come to confuſion.
Her. If then true Lovers have beene ever croſt,
It ſtands as an edict in deſtiny:
Then let us teach our triall patience;
Becauſe it is a cuſtomary croſſe,
As due to love, as thoughts, and dreames, and ſighes,
Wiſhes and teares; poore Fancies followers.
Lyſ. A good perſwaſion; therefore heare me Hermia,
I have a Widdow Aunt, a dowager,
Of great revennew, and ſhe hath no childe,
From Athens is her houſe remov'd ſeven leagues,
And ſhe reſpects me, as her onely ſonne:
There gentle Hermia, may I marry thee,
And to that place, the ſharpe Athenian Law
Cannot purſue us. If thou lov'ſt me, then
Steale forth thy fathers houſe to morrow night:
And in the wood, a league without the towne,
(Where I did meete thee once with Helena,
To do obſervance for a morne of May)
There will I ſtay for thee.
Her. My good Lyſander,
I ſweare to thee, by Cupids ſtrongeſt bow,
By his beſt arrow with the golden head,
By the ſimplicity of Venus Doves,
By that which knitteth ſoules, and proſpers love,
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage Queene,
When the falſe Troyan vnder ſaile was ſeene,
By all the vowes that ever men have broke,
(In number more then ever women ſpoke)
In that ſame place thou haſt appointed me,
To morrow truly will I meete with thee.
Lyſ. Keepe promiſe love: looke here comes Helena.

Enter Helena.

Her. God ſpeede faire Helena, whither away?
Hel. Cal you me faire? that faire againe unſay,
Demetrius loves you faire: O happy faire!
Your eyes are loadſtarres, and your tongues ſweet ayre
More tuneable then Larke to ſhepheards eare,
When wheate is greene, when hauthorne buds appeare,
Sickneſſe is catching: O were favour ſo,
Your words Ide catch, faire Hermia ere I go,
My eare ſhould catch your voice, my eye, your eye,
My tongue ſhould catch your tongues ſweet melodie,
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The reſt Ile give to be to you tranſlated.
O teach me how you looke, and with what art
You ſway the motion of Demetrius hart.
Her. I frowne upon him, yet he loves me ſtill.
Hel. O that your frownes would teach my ſmiles ſuch skil.
Her. I give him curſes, yet he gives me love.
Hel. O that my prayers could ſuch affection moove.
Her. The more I hate the more he followes me.
Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me.
Her. His folly Helena is none of mine.
Hel. None but your beauty, wold that fault were mine
Her. Take comfort: he no more ſhall ſee my face,
Lyſander and my ſelfe will flie this place.
Before the time I did Lyſander ſee,
Seem'd Athens like a Paradiſe to mee.

O then, what graces in my Love do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven into hell?

Lyſ. Helen, to you our mindes we will vnfold,
To morrow night, when Phœbe doth behold
Her ſilver viſage, in the watry glaſſe,
Decking with liquid pearle, the bladed graſſe
(A time that Lovers flights doth ſtill conceale)
Through Athens gates, have we deviſ'd to ſteale.

Her. And in the wood, where often you and I,
Vpon faint Primroſe beds, were wont to lye,
Emptying our boſomes, of their counſell ſweld:
There my Lyſander, and my ſelfe ſhall meete,
And thence from Athens turne away our eyes
To ſeeke new friends and ſtrange companions,
Farewell ſweet play-fellow, pray thou for us,
And good lucke grant thee thy Demetrius.
Keepe word Lyſander we muſt ſtarve our ſight,
From lovers foode, till morrow deepe midnight.

Exit Hermia.

Lyſ. I will my Hermia. Helena adieu,
As you on him, Demetrius dotes on you. Exit Lyſander.

Hel. How happy ſome, ore otherſome can be?
Through Athens I am thought as faire as ſhe.
But what of that? Demetrius thinkes not ſo:
He will not know, what all, but he doth know,
And as hee erres, doting on Hermias eyes;
So I, admiring of his qualities:
Things baſe and vilde, holding no quantity,
Love can tranſpoſe to forme and dignity,
Love lookes not with the eyes, but with the minde,
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blinde.
Nor hath loves minde of any judgement taſte:
Wings and no eyes, figure, vnheedy haſte.
And therefore is Love ſaid to be a childe,
Becauſe in choiſe he often is beguil'd,
As waggiſh boyes in game themſelves forſweare;
So the boy Love is perjur'd every where.
For ere Demetrius lookt on Hermias eyne,
He hail'd downe oathes that he was only mine.
And when this Haile ſome heat from Hermia felt,
So he diſſolv'd, and ſhowres of oathes did melt.
I will go tell him of faire Hermias flight:
Then to the wood will he, to morrow night,
Purſue her; and for his intelligence,
If I have thankes, it is a deere expence:
But heerein meane I to enrich my paine,
To have his ſight thither, and backe againe. Exit.

Enter Quince the Carpenter, Snug the Ioyner, Bottome the Weaver, Flute the bellowes-mender, Snout the Tinker, and Starveling the Taylor.

Qu. Is all our company heere?

Bot. You were beſt to call them generally, man by man, according to the ſcrip.

Qu. Here is the ſcrowle of every mans name, which is thought fit through all Athens, to play in our Enterlude before the Duke and the Dutches, on his wedding day at night.

Bot. Firſt, good Peter Quince, ſay what the play treats on: then reade the names of the Actors: and ſo grow on to a point.

Qu. Marry our play is the moſt lamentable Comedy, and moſt cruell death of Pyramus and Thisbie.

Bot. A very good peece of worke I aſſure you, and a merry. Now good Peter Quince, call forth your Actors by the ſcrowle. Maiſters ſpread your ſelves.

Quince. Anſwere as I call you. Nick Bottome the Weaver.

Bottome. Ready; name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quince. You Nicke Bottome are ſet downe for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus, a lover, or a tyrant?

Quince. A Lover that kils himſelfe moſt gallantly for love.

Bot. That will aske ſome teares in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience looke to their eies; I will moove ſtormes; I will condole in ſome meaſure. To the reſt yet, my chiefe humour is for a tyrant. I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to teare a Cat in, to make all ſplit the raging Rocks; and ſhivering ſhocks ſhall breake the locks of priſon gates, and Phibbus carre ſhall ſhine from farre, and make and marre the fooliſh Fates. This was lofty. Now name the reſt of the Players. This is Ercles veine, a tyrants veine: a lover is more condoling.

Quin. Francis Flute the bellowes-mender.

Flu. Heere Peter Quince.

Qu. You muſt take Thisbie on you.

Flu. What is Thisbie, a wandring Knight?

Qu. It is the Lady that Pyramus muſt love.

Flu. Nay faith, let not mee play a woman, I have a beard comming.

Qu. That's all one, you ſhall play it in a Maske, and you may ſpeake as ſmall as you will.

Bot. And I may hide my face, let me play Thisbie too: Ile ſpeake in a monſtrous little voyce, Thisne Thisne, ah Pyramus my lover deare, thy Thisbie deare, and Lady deare.

Quin. No no, you muſt play Pyramus, and Flute, you Thisby.

Bot, Well, proceed.

Qu. Robin Starveling the Taylor.

Star. Heere Peter Quince.

Quince. Robin Starveling, you muſt play Thisbies mother?

Tom Snowt, the tinker.

Snowt. Heere Peter Quince.

Qu. You Pyramus father; my ſelfe, Thisbies father; Snugge the Ioyner, you the Lyons part; and I hope there is a play fitted.

Snug. Have you the Lyons part written? pray you if it be, give it me, for I am ſlow of ſtudie.

Qu. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.

Bot. Let mee play the Lyon too, I will roare that I will doe any mans heart good to heare me. I will roare, that I will make the Duke ſay, Let him roare againe, let him roare againe.

Qu. If you ſhould doe it too terribly, you would fright the Dutcheſſe and the Ladies, that they would ſhrike, and that were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us every mothers ſonne.

Bottome. I graunt you friends, if that you ſhould fright the Ladies out of their Wittes, they would have no more diſcretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate my voyce ſo, that I will roare you as gently as any ſucking Dove; I will roare and 'twere any Nightingale.

Quince. You can play no part but Piramus, for Pira-

mus is a ſweet-fac'd man, a proper man as one ſhall ſee in a ſummers day; a moſt lovely Gentleman-like man, therfore you muſt needs play Piramus.

Bot. Well, I will vndertake it. What beard were I beſt to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will diſcharge it, in either your ſtraw-colour beard, your orange tawnie beard, your purple in graine beard, or your French-crowne colour'd beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French-Crownes have no haire at all, and then you will play bare-fac'd. But maiſters here are your parts, and I am to intreat you, requeſt you, and deſire you, to con them by to morrow night: and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the Towne, by Moone-light, there we will rehearſe: for if we meete in the Citie, we ſhalbe dog'd with company, and our deuiſes knowne. In the meane time, I will draw a bil of properties, ſuch as our play wants. I pray you faile me not.

Bot. We will meete, and there we may rehearſe more obſcenely and couragiouſly. Take paine, be perfect, adieu.

Quin. At the Dukes oake we meete.

Bot. Enough, hold or cut bow-ſtrings. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter a Fairie at one doore, and Robin goodfellow at another.

Rob. How now ſpirit, whither wander you?
Fai. Over hill, over dale, through buſh, through briar,
Over parke, over pale, through flood, through fire,
I do wander every where, ſwifter then yͤ Moons ſphere;
And I ſerve the Fairy Queene, to dew her orbs vpon the (green.
The Cowſlips tall, her penſioners be,
In their gold coats, ſpots you ſee,
Thoſe be Rubies, Fairie favors,
In thoſe freckles, live their ſavors,
I muſt go ſeeke ſome dew drops heere,
And hang a pearle in every cowſlips eare.
Farewell thou Lob of ſpirits, Ile be gon,
Our Queene and all her Elues come heere anon.
Rob. The King doth keepe his Revels here to night,
Take heed the Queene come not within his ſight,
For Oberon is paſsing fell and wrath,
Becauſe that ſhe, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy ſtolne from an Indian King,
She never had ſo ſweet a changeling,
And jealous Oberon would have the childe
Knight of his traine, to trace the Forreſts wilde.
But ſhe (per force) with-holds the loved boy,
Crownes him with flowers, and makes him all her joy.
And now they never meete in grove, or greene,
By fountaine cleere, or ſpangled ſtar-light ſheene,
But they do ſquare, that all their Elues for feare
Creepe into Acorne cups and hide them there.
Fai. Either I miſtake your ſhape and making quite,
Or elſe you are that ſhrew'd and knaviſh ſpirit
Cal'd Robin Good-fellow. Are you not hee,
That frights the maidens of the Villagree,
Skum milke, and ſometimes labour in the querne,
And bootleſſe make the breathleſſe huſwife cherne,
And ſometime make the drinke to beare no barme,
Miſleade night-wanderers, laughing at their harme,
Thoſe that Hobgoblin call you, and ſweet Pucke,
You do their worke, and they ſhall have good lucke.
Are not you he?
Rob. Thou ſpeak'ſt aright;
I am that merrie wanderer of the night:
I jeſt to Oberon, and make him ſmile,
When I a fat and beane-fed horſe beguile,
Neighing in likeneſſe of a ſilly foale,
And ſometime lurke I in a Goſſips bole,
In very likeneſſe of a roaſted crab:
And when ſhe drinkes, againſt her lips I bob,
And on her withered dewlop poure the Ale.
The wiſeſt Aunt telling the ſaddeſt tale,
Sometime for three-foot ſtoole, miſtaketh me,
Then ſlip I from her bum, downe topples ſhe,
And tailour cries, and fals into a coffe.
And then the whole quire hold their hips, and loffe,
And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and ſweare,
A merrier houre was never waſted there.
But roome Fairy, heere comes Oberon.
Fai. And heere my Miſtris:
Would that we were gone.

Enter the King of Fairies at one doore with his traine, and the Queene at another with hers.

Ob. Ill met by Moone-light,
Proud Tytania.
Qu. What, jealous Oberon? Fairy skip hence.
I have forſworne his bed and company.
Ob. Tarrie raſh Wanton, am not I thy Lord?
Qu. Then I muſt be thy Lady: but I know
When thou waſt ſtolne away fom Fairy Land,
And in the ſhape of Corin, ſate all day,
Playing on pipes of Corne, and verſing love
To amourous Phillida. Why art thou heere
Come from the fartheſt ſteepe of India?
But that forſooth the bouncing Amazon
Your buskin'd Miſtreſſe, and your Warrior love,
To Theſeus muſt be Wedded, and you come,
To give their bed joy and proſperity.
Ob. How canſt thou thus for ſhame Tytania,
Glance at my credite, with Hippolita?
Knowing I know thy love to Theſeus?
Didſt thou not leade him through the glimmering night
From Peregenia, whom he raviſhed?
And make him with faire Eagles breake his faith
With Ariadne, and Antiopa?
Qu. Theſe are the forgeries of jealouſie,
And never ſince the middle Summers ſpring
Met we on hill, in dale, forreſt, or mead,
By paved fountaine, or by ruſhie brooke,
Or in the beached margent of the ſea,
To dance our ringlets to the whiſtling Winde,
But with thy braules thou haſt diſturb'd our ſport.
Therefore the Windes, piping to vs in vaine,
As in revenge, have ſuck'd up from the ſea
Contagious fogges: Which falling in the Land,
Hath every petty River made ſo proud,
That they have over-borne their Continents.
The Oxe hath therefore ſtretch'd his yoake in vaine,
The Ploughman loſt his ſweat, and the greene Corne
Hath rotted, ere his youth attain'd a beard:
The fold ſtands empty in the drowned field,
And Crowes are fatted with the murrion flocke,

The nine mens Morris is fild up with mud,
And the queint Mazes in the wanton greene,
For lacke of tread are undiſtinguiſhable.
The humane mortals want their winter heere,
No night is now with hymne or caroll bleſt;
Therefore the Moone(the governeſſe of floods)
Pale in her anger, waſhes all the aire;
That Rheumaticke diſeaſes do abound.
And thorough this diſtemperature, we ſee
The ſeaſons alter; hoared-headed froſts
Fall in the freſh lap of the crimſon Roſe,
And on old Hyems chinne and Icie crowne,
An odorous Chapelet of ſweet Sommer buds
Is as in mockry ſet. The ſpring, the Sommer,
The childing Autumne, angry Winter change
Their wonted Liveries, and the mazed world,
By their increaſe, now knowes not which is which;
And this ſame progeny of evills comes
From our debate, from our diſſention,
We are their parents and originall.
Ob. Do you amend it then, it lies in you,
Why ſhould Titania croſſe her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my Henchman.
Qu. Set your heart at reſt,
The Fairy land buyes not the child of me.
His mother was a Votreſſe of my Order,
And in the ſpiced Indian aire, by night
Full often hath ſhe goſſipt by my ſide,
And ſat with me on Neptunes yellow ſands,
Marking th'embarked traders on the flood,
When we have laught to ſee the ſailes conceive,
And grow big bellied with the wanton winde:
Which ſhe with pretty and with ſwimming gate,
Following (her wombe then rich with my yong ſquire)
Would imitate, and ſaile upon the Land,
To fetch me trifles, and returne againe,
As from a voyage, rich with merchandize.
But ſhe being mortall of that boy did dye,
And for her ſake I do reare up her boy,
And for her ſake I will not part with him.
Ob. How long within this wood intend you ſtay?
Qu. Perchance till after Theſeus wedding day.
If you will patiently dance in our Round,
And ſee our Moone-light revels, go with us;
If not, ſhun me and I will ſpare your haunts.
Ob. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.
Qu. Not for thy Fairy Kingdome. Fairies away:
We ſhall chide downe right, if I longer ſtay. Exeunt.
Ob. Well, go thy way: thou ſhalt not from this grove,
Till I torment thee for this injury.
My gentle Pucke come hither; thou remembreſt
Since I ſat upon a promontory,
And heard a Meare-maide on a Dolphins backe,
Vttering ſuch dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude ſea grew civill at her ſong,
And certaine ſtarres ſhot madly from their Spheares,
To heare the Sea-maids muſicke.
Pu. I remember.
Ob. That very time I ſay (but thou couldſt not)
Flying betweene the cold Moone and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd; a certaine aime he tooke
At a faire Veſtall, throned by the Weſt,
And loos'd his love-ſhaft ſmartly from his bow,
As it ſhould pierce a hundred thouſand hearts,
But I might ſee youg Cupids fiery ſhaft
Quencht in the chaſte beames of the watry Moone;
And the imperiall Votreſſe paſſed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet markt I where the bolt of Cupid fell.
It fell upon a little weſterne flower:
Before, milke-white: now purple with loves wound,
And maidens call it, Love in idleneſſe.
Fetch me that flower; the hearb I ſhew'd thee once,
The juyce of it, on ſleeping eye-lids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Vpon the next live creature that it ſees.
Fetch me this hearbe, and be thou heere againe,
Ere the Leviathan can ſwim a league.
Pu. Ile put a girdle about the earth, in forty minutes.
Exit.
Ob. Having once this juyce,
Ile watch Titania, when ſhe is a ſleepe,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes:
The next thing when ſhe waking lookes upon,
(Be it on Lyon, Beare, or Wolfe, or Bull,
On medling Monkey, or on buſie Ape)
Shee ſhall purſue it, with the ſoule of love.
And ere I take this charme off from her ſight,
(As I can take it with another hearbe)
Ile make her render up her Page to me.
But who comes heere? I am inviſible,
And I will over-heare their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore purſue me not,
Where is Lyſander, and faire Hermia?
The one Ile ſtay, the other ſtayeth me.
Thou toldſt me they were ſtolne into this wood;
And heere am I, and wood within this wood,
Becauſe I cannot meet my Hermia.
Hence get thee gone, and follow me no more.
Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted Adamant,
But yet you draw not Iron, for my heart
Is true as ſteele. Leave you your power to draw,
And I ſhall have no power to follow you.
Dem. Do I entice you? do I ſpeake you faire?
Or rather do I not in plaineſt truth,
Tell you I do not, nor I cannot love you?
Hel. And even for that do I love thee the more;
I am your ſpainiell, and Demetrius,
The more you beat me, I will fawne on you.
Vſe me but as your ſpaniell; ſpurne me, ſtrike me,
Neglect me, loſe me; onely give me leaue
(Vnworthy as I am) to follow you.
What worſer place can can I beg in your love,
(And yet a place of high reſpect with me)
Then to be vſed as you do your dogge?
Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my ſpirit,
For I am ſicke when I do looke on thee.
Hel. And I am ſicke when I looke not on you.
Dem. You doe impeach your modeſty too much,
To leave the Citty, and commit your ſelfe
Into the hands of one that loves you not,
To truſt the opportunity of night,
And the ill counſell of a deſert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity.
Hel. Your vertue is my priviledge: for that
It is not night when I doe ſee your face.
Therefore I thinke I am not in the night,
Nor doth this wood lacke worlds of company,

For you in my reſpect are all the world.
Then how can it be ſaid I am alone,
When all the world is heere to looke on me?
Dem. Ile run from thee, and hide me in the brakes,
And leave thee to the mercy of wilde beaſts.
Hel. The wildeſt hath not ſuch a heart as you;
Runne when you will, the ſtory ſhall be chang'd:
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chaſe;
The Dove purſues the Griffin, the milde Hinde
Makes ſpeed to catch the Tyger. Bootleſſe ſpeede,
When cowardiſe purſues, and valour flies.
Dem. I will not ſtay thy queſtions, let me go;
Or if thou follow me, do not beleeve,
But I ſhall do thee miſchiefe in the wood.
Hel. I, in the Temple, in the Towne, and Field
You do me miſchiefe. Fye Demetrius,
Your wrongs do ſet a ſcandall on my ſexe:
We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We ſhould be woo'd, and were not made to wooe.
I follow thee, and make a heaven of hell,
To die upon the hand I love ſo well. Exit.
Ob. Fare thee well Nymph, ere he do leave this grove,
Thou ſhalt fly him, and he ſhall ſeeke thy love.
Haſt thou the flower there? Welcome wanderer.

Enter Pucke.

Pu. I, there it is.
Ob. I pray thee give it me.
I know a banke where the wilde time blowes,
Where Oxſlips and the nodding Violet growes,
Quite over-cannoped with luſcious woodbine,
With ſweet muske roſes, and with Eglantine;
There ſleepes Tytania, ſometime of the night,
Lul'd in theſe flowers, with dances and delight:
And there the ſnake throwes her enammel'd skinne,
Weed wide enough to wrap a Fairy in.
And with the juyce of this Ile ſtreake her eyes,
And make her full of hatefull fantaſies.
Take thou ſome of it, and ſeeke through this grove;
A ſweet Athenian Lady is in love
With a diſdainefull youth: annoint his eyes,
But do it when the next thing he eſpies,
May be the Lady. Thou ſhalt know the man,
By the Athenian garments he hath on.
Effect it with ſome care, that he may prove
More fond on her, then ſhe upon her love;
And looke thou meet me ere the firſt Cocke crow.
Pu. Feare not my Lord, your ſervant ſhall do ſo. Exit.

Enter Queene of Fairies, with her traine.

Qu. Come, now a Roundell, and a Fairy ſong:
Then for the third part of a minute hence,
Some to kill Cankers in the muske roſe buds,
Some warre with Reremiſe, for their leathern wings,
To make my ſmall Elves coates, and ſome keepe backe
The clamorous Owle that nightly hoots and wonders
At our queint ſpirits: Sing me now aſleepe,
Then to your offices, and let me reſt.

Fairies Sing.

You ſpotted Snakes with double tongue,
Thorny Hedgehogges be not ſeene,
Newts and blinde wormes do no wrong,
Come not neere our Fairy Queene.
Philomele with melodie,
Sing in your ſweet Lullaby,
Lulla, lulla, lullaby, lulla, lulla, lullaby:
Never harme, nor ſpell, nor charme,
Come our lovely Lady nye,
So good night with Lullaby.
2. Fairy. Weaving Spiders come not heere,
Hence you long leg'd Spinners, hence:
Beetles blacke approach not neere:
Worme nor Snayle do no offence.
Philomele with melody, &c.
1. Fairy. Hence away, now all is well:
One aloofe, ſtand Centinell. Shee ſleeps.

Enter Oberon.

Ob. What thou ſeeſt when thou doſt wake,
Do it for thy true Love take:
Love and languiſh for his ſake.
Be it Ounce, or Catte, or Beare,
Pard, or Boare with briſtled haire,
In thy eye that ſhall appeare,
When thou wak'ſt, it is thy deare,
Wake when ſome vile thing is neere.

Enter Lyſander and Hermia.

Lis. Faire love, you faint with wandring in the woods,
And to ſpeake troth, I have forgot our way:
Wee'll reſt us Hermia, if you thinke it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.
Her. Be it ſo Lyſander: finde you out a bed,
For I upon this banke will reſt my head.
Lyſ. One turfe ſhall ſerve as pillow for us both,
One heart, one bed, two boſomes, and one troth.
Her. Nay good Lyſander, for my ſake my deere
Lie further off yet, do not lie ſo neere.
Lyſ. O take the ſence ſweet, of my innocence,
Love takes the meaning, in loves conference,
I meane that my heart unto yours is knit,
So that but one heart can you make of it.
Two boſomes interchanged with an oath,
So then two boſomes, and a ſingle troth.
Then by your ſide, no bed-roome me deny,
For lying ſo, Hermia, I do not lye.
Her. Lyſander riddles very prettily:
Now much beſhrew my manners, and my pride,
If Hermia meant to ſay, Lyſander lied.
But gentle friend, for love and courteſie
Lie further off, in humane modeſty,
Such ſeparation, as may well be ſaid,
Becomes a vertuous batchelour, and a maide,
So farre be diſtant, and good night ſweet friend:
Thy love ne're alter, till thy ſweet life end.
Lyſ. Amen, amen, to that faire prayer, ſay I,
And then end life, when I end loyalty:
Heere is my bed, ſleepe give thee all his reſt.
Her. With halfe that wiſh, the wiſhers eyes be preſt.

Enter Pucke. They ſleepe.

Pu. Through the Forreſt have I gone,
But Athenian finde I none,
On whoſe eyes I might approve
This flowers force in ſtirring love.
Night and ſilence: who is heere?
Weedes of Athens he doth weare:
This is he (my maiſter ſaid)
Deſpiſed the Athenian maide:
And heere the maiden ſleeping ſound,

On the danke and durty ground.
Pretty ſoule, ſhe durſt not lye
Neere this lacke-love, this kill-curteſie.
Churle, upon thy eyes I throw
All the power this charme doth owe:
When thou wak'ſt, let love forbid
Sleepe his ſeate on thy eye-lid.
So awake when I am gone:
For I muſt now to Oberon. Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helena running.

Hel. Say, though thou kill me, ſweete Demetrius.
De. I charge thee hence, and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O wilt thou darkling leave me? do not ſo.
De. Stay on thy perill, I alone will go.
Exit Demetrius.
Hel. O I am out of breath, in this fond chace,
The more my prayer, the leſſer is my grace,
Happy is Hermia, whereſoere ſhe lies:
For ſhe hath bleſſed and attractive eyes.
How came her eyes ſo bright? Not with ſalt teares.
If ſo, my eyes are oftner waſht then hers.
No, no, I am as ugly as a Beare:
For beaſts that meete me, runne away for feare,
Therefore no mavaile, though Demetrius
Do as a monſter, fly my preſence thus.
What wicked and diſſembling glaſſe of mine,
Made me compare with Hermias ſphery eyne?
But who is here? Lyſander on the ground:
Deade or aſleepe? I ſee no bloud, no wound,
Lyſander, if you live, good ſir awake.
Lyſ. And run through fire I will for thy ſweet ſake.
Tranſparent Helena, nature here ſhews art,
That through thy boſome makes me ſee thy heart.
Where Demetrius? oh how fit a word
Is that vile name, to periſh on my ſword!
Hel. Do not ſay ſo Lyſander, ſay not ſo:
What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?
Yet Hermia ſtill loves you: then be content.
Lyſ. Content with Hermia? No, I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have ſpent.
Not Hermia, but Helena now I love;
Who will not change a Raven for a Dove?
The will of man is by his reaſon ſway'd:
And reaſon ſayes you are the worthier Maide.
Things growing are not ripe untill their ſeaſon:
So I being yong, till now ripe not to reaſon,
And touching now the point of humane skill,
Reaſon becomes the Marſhall to my will,
And leades me to your eyes, where I orelooke
Loves ſtories, written in Loves richeſt booke.
Hel. Wherefore was I to this keene mockery borne?
When at your hands did I deſerve this ſcorne?
Iſt not enough, iſt not enough, yong man,
That I did never, no nor never can,
Deſerve a ſweete looke from Demetrius eye,
But you muſt flout my inſufficiency?
Good troth you do me wrong (good-ſooth you do)
In ſuch diſdainfull manner, me to wooe.
But fare you well: perforce I muſt confeſſe,
I thought you Lord of more true gentleneſſe.
Oh, that a Lady of one man refus'd,
Should of another therefore be abus'd. Exit.
Lyſ. She ſees not Hermia: Hermia ſleepe thou there,
And never maiſt thou come Lyſander neere:
For as a ſurfeit of the ſweeteſt things
The deepeſt loathing to a ſtomacke brings:
Or as the hereſies that men do leave,
Are hated moſt of thoſe that did deceive:
So thou, my ſurfeit, and my hereſie,
Of all be hated; but the moſt of me;
And all my powers addreſſe your love and might,
To honour Helen, and to be her Knight. Exit.
Her. Helpe me Lyſander, helpe me; do thy beſt
To plucke this crawling ſerpent from my breſt.
Aye me, for pitty, what a dreame was here?
Lyſander looke, how I do quake with feare:
Me-thought a ſerpent eate my heart away,
And yet ſate ſmiling at his cruell prey.
Lyſander, what remov'd? Lyſander, Lord,
What, out of hearing, gone? No ſound, no word?
Alacke where are you? ſpeake and if you heare:
Speake of all loves; I ſwound almoſt with feare.
No, then I well perceive you are not nye,
Either death or you Ile finde immediately. Exit

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Clownes.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Par, pat, and here's a marvailous convenient place for our rehearſall. This greene plot ſhall bee our ſtage, this hauthorne brake our tyring houſe, and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the Duke.

Bot. Peter Quince?

Peter. What ſaiſt thou, bully Bottome?

Bot. There are things in this Comedy of Piramus and Thisby, that will never pleaſe. Firſt, Piramus muſt draw a ſword to kill himſelfe; which the Ladies cannot abide. How anſwere you that?

Snout. Berlaken, a parlous feare.

Star. I beleeve we muſt leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bottome. Not a whit, I have a device to make all well. Write me a Prologue, and let the Prologue ſeeme to ſay, we will do no harme with our ſwords, and that Pyramus is not kill'd indeede: and for the more better aſſurance, tell them, that I Piramus am not Piramus, but Bottome the Weaver; this will put them out of feare.

Qu. Well, we will have ſuch a Prologue, and it ſhall be written in eight and ſixe.

Bot. No, make it two more, let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the Ladies be afear'd of the Lyon?

Star. I feare it, I promiſe you.

Bot. Maiſters, you ought to conſider with your ſelves, to bring in (God ſhield us) a Lyon among Ladies, is a moſt dreadfull thing. For there is not a more fearefull wilde foule then your Lyon living: and wee ought to looke to it.

Snout. Therefore another Prologue muſt tell hee is not a Lyon.

Bot. Nay, you muſt name his name, and halfe his face muſt be ſeene through the Lyons necke, and he himſelfe muſt ſpeake through, ſaying thus, or to the ſame defect: Ladies, or faire Ladies, I would wiſh you, or I would requeſt you, or I would entreat you, not to feare, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you thinke I come hither as a Lyon, it were pitty of my life. No, I am no ſuch thing, I am a man as other men are; and there indeed let him name his name, and tell him plainly hee is Snug the joyner

Quince. Well, it ſhall be ſo; but there is two hard things, that is, to bring the Moone-light into a chamber: for you know, Pyramus and Thisby meete by Moone-light.

Snug. Doth the Moone ſhine that night wee play our play?

Bot. A Calender, a Calender, looke in the Almanack, finde out Moone-ſhine, finde out Moone-ſhine.

Enter Packe.

Quin. Yes, it doth ſhine that night.

Bot. Why then may you leave a caſement of the great chamber window (where we play) open, and the Moone may ſhine in at the caſement.

Qu. I, or elſe one muſt come in with a buſh of thorns and a lanthorne, and ſay he comes to disfigure, or to preſent the perſon of Moone-ſhine. Then there is another thing, we muſt have a wall in the great Chamber; for Piramus and Thisbie (ſaies the ſtory) did talke through the chinke of a wall.

Snu. You can never bring in a wall. What ſay you Bottome?

Bot. Some man or other muſt preſent wall, and let him have ſome Plaſter, or ſome Lome, or ſome rough caſt about him, to ſignifie wall; or let him hold his fingers thus; and through that cranny, ſhall Pyramus, and Thisby whiſper.

Qui. If that may be, then all is well. Come, ſit downe every mothers ſonne, and rehearſe your parts. Pyramus, you begin; when you have ſpoken your ſpeech, enter into that Brake, and ſo every one according to his cue.

Enter Robin.

Rob. What hempen home-ſpuns have we ſwaggering here,
So neere the Cradle of the Faiery Queene?
What, a Play toward? Ile be an auditor:
An Actor too perhaps, if I ſee cauſe.

Qu. Speake Pyramus: Thisby ſtand forth.

Pir. Thisby, the flowers of odious ſavors ſweete.

Qu. Odours, odours.

Pir. Odours ſavors ſweete,
So hath thy breath, my deareſt Thisby deare.
But harke, a voyce: ſtay thou but here a while,
And by and by I will to thee appeare. Exit. Pir.

Pu. A ſtranger Pyramus, then ere plaid here.

Thiſ. Muſt I ſpeake now?

Pet. I marry muſt you. For you muſt vnderſtand he goes but to ſee a noiſe that he heard, and is to come againe.

This. Moſt radiant Piramus, moſt Lilly white of hue,
Of colour like the red roſe on triumphant bryer,
Moſt brisky Iuuenall, and eke moſt lovely Iew,
As true as trueſt horſe, that yet would never tyre,
Ile meete thee Piramus, at Ninnies toombe.

Pet. Ninus toombe man: why, you muſt not ſpeake that yet; that you anſwere to Piramus: you ſpeake all your part at once, cues and all. Piramus enter, your cue is paſt; it is never tyre.

Thiſ. O, as true as trueſt horſe, that yet would never tyre:

Pir. If I were faire, Thiſby I were onely thine.

Pet. O monſtrous. O ſtrange. We are hanted; pray maiſters, flye maiſters, helpe.

The Clownes all Exeunt.

Pu. Ile follow you, Ile leade you about a Round,
Through bogge, through buſh, through brake, through (bryer,
Sometime a horſe Ile be, ſometime a hound:
A hogge, a headleſſe Beare, ſometime a fire,
And neigh, and barke, and grunt, and rore, and burne;
Like horſe, hound, hog, Beare, fire, at every turne. Exit.

Enter Piramus with the Aſſe head.

Bot. Why do they run away? This is a knavery of them to make me afeard. Enter Snowt.

Sn. O Bottome, thou art chang'd; What do I ſee on thee?

Bot. What do you ſee? You ſee an Aſſe-head of your owne, do you?

Enter Peter Quince.

Pet. Bleſſe thee Bottome, bleſſe thee; thou art tranſlated. Exit.

Bot. I ſee their knavery; this is to make an aſſe of me, to fright me if they Could; but. I will not ſtirre from this place, do what they can. I will walke up and downe here, and I will ſing that they ſhall heare I am not afraid.
The Wooſell cocke, ſo blacke of hew,
With Orenge-tawny bill.
The Throſtle, with his note ſo true,
The Wren and little quill.

Tita. What Angell wakes me from my flowry bed?

Bot. The Finch, the Sparrow, and the Larke,
The plainſong Cuckow gray;
Whoſe note full many a man doth marke,
And dares not anſwere, nay.
For indeed, who would ſet his wit to ſo fooliſh a bird?
Who would give a bird the lye, though he cry Cuckow, never ſo?

Tita. I pray thee gentle mortall, ſing againe,
Mine eare is much enamored of thy note;
On the firſt view to ſay, to ſweare I love thee.
So is mine eye enthralled to thy ſhape.
And thy faire vertues force (perforce) doth move me.

Bot. Me-thinkes maiſtreſſe, you ſhould have little reaſon for that: and yet to ſay the truth, reaſon and love keepe little company together, now-adayes. The more the pitty, that ſome honeſt neigbours will not mak them friends. Nay, I can gleeke upon occaſion.

Tyta. Thou art as wiſe as thou art beautifull.

Bot. Not ſo neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to ſerve mine owne turne.

Tyta. Out of this wood, do not deſire to go,
Thou ſhalt remaine here, whether thou wilt or no.
I am a ſpirit of no common rate:
The Summer ſtill doth tend upon my ſtate,
And I do love thee; therefore go with me,
Ile give thee Fairies to attend on thee;
And they ſhall fetch thee Iewels from the deepe,
And ſing, while thou on preſſed flowers doſt ſleepe:
And I will purge thy mortall groſſeneſſe ſo,
That thou ſhalt like an airy ſpirit go.

Enter Peaſe-bloſſome, Cobwed, Moth, Muſtard-ſeede, and foure Fairies.

Fai. Ready; and I, and I, and I, Where ſhall we go?

Tita. Be kinde and curteous to this Gentleman.
Hop in his walkes,and gambole in his eies,
Feede him with Apricocks,and Dewberries,
With purple Grapes,greene Figs,and Mulberries,
The honie-bags ſteale from the humble Bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighes,
And light them at the fierie-Glow-wormes eyes,
To have my love to bed, and to ariſe:
And pluke the wings from painted Butterflies,
To fan the Moone-beames from his ſleeping eies.
Nod to him Elues, and do him curteſies.

1. Fai. Haile mortall,haile.

2. Fai. Haile.

3. Fai. Haile.

Bot. I cry your worſhips mercy hartily;I beſeech your worſhips name.

Cob. Cobwed.

Bot. I ſhall deſire you of more acquaintance, good Maiſter Cobwed:if I cut my finger,I ſhall make bold with you.
Your name honeſt Gentleman?

Peaſ. Peaſe bloſſome.

Bot. I pray you commend mee to miſtreſſe Squaſh, your mother, and to maiſter Peaſcod your father. Good maiſter Peaſe-bloſſome,I ſhall deſire of you more acquaintance too. Your name I beſeech you ſir?

Muſ. Muſtard-ſeede.

Bot. Good maiſter Muſtard ſeede, I know your patience well:that ſame cowardly gyant-like Oxe-beefe hath devoured many a gentleman of your houſe. I promiſe you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I deſire you more acquaintance, good Maiſter Muſtard-ſeede.

Tita. Come waite upon him,lead him to my bower.
The Moone me-thinks,lookes with a watrie eie,
And when ſhe weepes,weepe every little flower,
Lamenting ſome enforced chaſtity.
Tye up my lovers tongue,bring him ſilently. Exit.

Enter King of Fairies,ſolus.

Ob. I wonder if Titania be awak't;
Then what it was that next came in her eye,
Which ſhe muſt dote on, in extremity.

Enter Pucke.

Here comes my meſſenger: how now mad ſpirit,
What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My Miſtris with a monſter is in love,
Neere to her cloſe and conſecrated bower,
While ſhe was in her dull and ſleeping hower,
A crew of patches,rude Mechanicals,
That worke for bread upon Athenian ſtals,
Were met together to rehearſe a Play,
Intended for great Theſeus nuptiall day:
The ſhalloweſt thick-skin of that barren ſort,
Who Piramus preſented,in their ſport,
Forſooke his Scene,and entred in a brake,
When I did him at this advantage take,
An Aſſes nole I fixed on his head.
Anon his Thisbie muſt be anſwered,
And forth my Mimmick comes: when they him ſpie,
As Wilde-geeſe,that the creeping Fowler eye,
Or ruſſed-pated choughes,many in ſort
(Riſing and cawing at the guns report)
Sever themſelves, and madly ſweepe the skye:
So at his ſight, away his fellowes flie,
And at our ſtampe,here ore and ore one fals;
He murther cries,and helpe from Athens cals.
Their ſenſe thus weake,loſt with their fears thus ſtrong,
Made ſenſeleſſe things begin to do them wrong.
For briars and thornes at their apparell ſnatch,
Some ſleeves,ſome hats,from yeelders all things catch,
Iled them on in this diſtracted feare,
And left ſweete Piramus tranſlated there:
When in that moment(ſo it came to paſſe)
Tytania waked,and ſtraight way lov'd an Aſſe.

Ob. This fals out better then I could deviſe:
But haſt thou yet lacht the Athenians eyes,
With the love juyce, as I did bid thee do?

Rob. I tooke him ſleeping(that is finiſht too)
And the Athenian woman by his ſide,
That when he wak't,of force ſhe muſt be eyde.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Ob. Stand cloſe,this is the ſame Athenian.

Rob. This is the woman,but not this the man.

Dem. O why rebuke you him that loves you ſo?
Lay breath ſo bitter on your bitter foe.

Her. Now I but chide,but I ſhould vſe thee worſe.
For thou(I feare)haſt given me cauſe to curſe,
If thou haſt ſlaine Lyſander in his ſleepe,
Being ore ſhooes in bloud,plunge in the deepe,and kill me too:
The Sunne was not ſo true unto the day,
As he to me. Would he have ſtollen away,
From ſleeping Hermia? Ile beleeve as ſoone
This whole earth may be bord,and that the Moone
May through the Center creepe,and ſo diſpleaſe
Her brothers noonetide,with th' Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou haſt murdred him,
So ſhould a murtherer looke,ſo dead,ſo grim.

Dem. So ſhould the murderer looke,and ſo ſhould I,
Pierſt through the heart with your ſtearne cruelty:
Yet you the murderer looks as bright as cleare,
As yonder Venus in her glimmering ſpheare.

Her. What's this to my Lyſander? where is he?
Ah good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

Dem. I'de rather give his carkaſſe to my hounds.

Her. Out dog,out cur,thou driv'ſt me paſt the bounds
Of maidens patience. Haſt thou ſlaine him then?
Henceforth be never numbred among men.
Oh, once tell true,and even for my ſake,
Durſt thou a lookt upon him,being awake?
And haſt thou kill'd him ſleeping?O brave tutch:
Could not a worme, an Adder do ſo much?
And Adder did it: for with doubler tongue
Then thine(thou ſerpent)never Adder ſtung,

Dem. You ſpend your paſſion on a miſpris'd mood,
I am not guilty of Lyſanders blood:
Nor is he dead for ought that I can tell.

Her. I pray thee tell me then that he is well.

Dem. And if I could, what ſhould I get therefore?

Her. A priviledge, never to ſee me more;
And from thy hated preſence part I: ſee me no more
Whether he be dead or no. Exit.

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce veine,
Here therefore for a while I will remaine.
So ſorrowes heauineſſe doth heauier grow:
For debt that bankrout ſlip doth ſorrow owe,
Which now in ſome ſlight meaſure it will pay,

If for his tender here I make ſome ſtay. Lie downe.
Ob. What haſt thou done? Thou haſt miſtaken quite
And laid the love juyce on ſome true loves ſight:
Of thy miſpriſion, muſt perforce enſue
Some true love turn'd, and not a falſe turn'd true.
Rob. Then fate ore-rules, that one man holding troth,
A million faile, confounding oath on oath.
Rob. About the wood, goe ſwifter then the winde,
And Helena of Athens looke thou finde.
All fancy-ſicke ſhe is, and pale of cheere,
With ſighes of love, that coſts the freſh bloud deare.
By ſome illuſion ſee thou bring her heere,
Ile charme his eyes againſt ſhe doth appeare,
Rob. I go, I go, looke how I go,
Swifter then arrow from the Tartars bowe. Exit.
Ob. Flower of this purple die,
Hit with Cupids archery,
Sinke in apple of his eye,
When his love he doth eſpy,
Let her ſhine as glorïouſly
As the Venus of the ſky.
When thou wak'ſt if ſhe be by.
Beg of her for remedy.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. Captaine of our Fairy band,
Helena is heere at hand,
And the youth, miſtooke by me,
Pleading for a Lovers fee.
Shall we their fond Pageant ſee?
Lord, what fooles theſe mortals be!
Ob. Stand aſide: the noyſe they make,
Will cauſe Demetrius to awake.
Puck. Then will two at once wooe one,
That muſt needs be ſport alone:
And thoſe things do beſt pleaſe me,
That befall prepoſterouſly.

Enter Lyſander and Helena.

Lyſ. Why ſhould you think yͭ I ſhould wooe in ſcorne?
Scorne and deriſion never comes in teares:
Looke when I vow I weepe, and vowes ſo borne,
In their nativity all truth appeares.
How can theſe things in me, ſeeme ſcorne to you?
Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true.
Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more,
When truth kils truth, O dinelish holy fray!
Theſe vowes are Hermias. Will you give her ore?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh.
Your vowes to her and me, (put in two ſcales)
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.
Lyſ. I had no judgement, when to her I ſwore.
Hel. Nor none in my minde, now you give her ore.
Lyſ. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you. Awa.
Dem. O Helen, goddeſſe, nimph, perfect, divine,
To what, my love, ſhall I compare thine eyne?
Chriſtall is muddy, O how ripe in ſhow,
Thy lips, thoſe kiſſing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure congealed white, high Taurus ſnow,
Fan'd with the Eaſterne winde, turnes to a crow,
When thou holdſt up thy hand. O let me kiſſe
This Princeſſe of pure white, this ſeale of bliſſe.
Hel. O ſpight! O hell! I ſee you are all bent
To ſet againſt me, for your merriment:
If you were civill, and knew curteſie,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you muſt joyne in ſoules to mocke me to?
If you are men, as men you are in ſhow,
You would not vſe a gentle Lady ſo?
To vow, and ſweare, and ſuperpraiſe my parts,
When I am ſure you hate me with your hearts.
You both are Rivals, and love Hermia;
And now both Rivals, to mocke Helena.
A trim exploit, a manly enterprize,
To conjure teares up in a poore maids eyes,
With your deriſion; none of noble ſort,
Would ſo offend a Virgin, and extort
A poore ſoules patience, all to make you ſport.
Lyſ. You are unkind Demetrius; be not ſo,
For you love Hermia; this you know I know;
And here with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermias love I yeeld you up my part;
And yours of Helena, to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do to my death.
Hel. Never did mockers waſte more idle breath.
Dem. Lyſander, keep thy Hermia, I will none:
If ere I lov'd her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her, but as gueſt-wiſe ſojourn'd,
And now to Helen it is home return'd,
There to remaine.
Lyſ. It is not ſo.
De. Diſparage not the faith thou doſt not know,
Leſt to thy perill thou abide it deare.
Looke where thy Love comes, yonder is thy deare.

Enter Hermia.

Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The eare more quicke of apprehenſion makes,
Wherein it doth impaire the ſeeing ſenſe,
It paies the hearing double recompence.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lyſander found,
Mine eare (I thanke it) brought me to that ſound.
But why vnkindly didſt thou leave me ſo? (to go?
Lyſan. Why ſhould hee ſtay whom Love doth preſſe
Her. What love could preſſe Lyſander from my ſide?
Lyſ. Lyſanders love (that would not let him bide)
Faire Helena; who more engilds the night,
Then all yon fiery oes, and eies of light.
Why ſeek'ſt thou me? Could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare thee, made me leave thee ſo?
Her. You ſpeake not as you thinke; it cannot be.
Hel. Loe, ſhe is one of this confederacy,
Now I perceive they have conjoyn'd all three,
To faſhion this falſe ſport in ſpight of me.
Injurious Hermia, moſt vngratefull maid,
Have you conſpir'd, have you with theſe contriv'd
To baite me, with this foule deriſion?
Is all the counſell that we two have ſhar'd,
The ſiſters vowes, the houres that we have ſpent,
When we have chid the haſty footed time,
For parting us; O and is all forgot?
All ſchooledaies friendſhip, child-hood innocence?
We Hermia, like two Artificiall gods,
Have with our needles, created both one flower,
Both on one ſampler, ſitting on one cuſhion,
Both warbling of one ſong, both in one key;
As if our hands, our ſides, voices, and mindes
Had beene incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, ſeeming parted,
But yet a vnion in partition,

Two lovely berries molded on one ſtem,
So with two ſeeming bodies, but one heart,
Two of the firſt life, coats in Heraldry,
Due but to one and crowned with one creſt.
And will you rent our ancient love aſunder,
To joyne with men in ſcorning your poore friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly.
Our ſexe as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feele the injurie.
Her. I am amazed at your paſſionate words,
I ſcorne you not; It ſeemes that you ſcorne me.
Hel. Have you not ſet Lyſander, as in ſcorne
To follow me, and praiſe my eies and face?
And made your other love, Demetrius
(Who even but now did ſpurne me with his foote)
To call me goddeſſe, nimph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celeſtiall? Wherefore ſpeakes he this
To her he hates? And wherefore doth Lyſander
Denie your love (ſo rich within his ſoule)
And tender me (forſooth) affection,
But by your ſetting on, by your conſent?
What though I be not ſo in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, ſo fortunate?
(But miſerable moſt, to love vnlov'd)
This you ſhould pitty, rather then deſpiſe.
Her. I underſtand not what you meane by this.
Hel. I, do, perſever, counterfeit ſad lookes,
Make mouthes upon me when I turne my backe,
Winke each at other, hold the ſweet jeſt up:
This ſport well carried, ſhall be chronicled.
If you have any pitty, grace, or manners,
You would not make me ſuch an argument:
But fare ye well, 'tis partly mine owne fault,
Which death or abſence ſoone ſhall remedy.
Lyſ. Stay gentle Helena, heare my excuſe,
My love, my ſoule, faire Helena.
Hel. O excellent!
Her. Sweet, do not ſcorne her ſo.
Dem. If ſhe cannot entreate, I can compell,
Lyſ. Thou canſt compell, no more then ſhe entreate.
Thy threats have no more ſtrength then her weak praiſe.
Helen, I love thee, by my life I doe;
I ſweare by that which I will loſe for thee,
To prove him falſe, that ſaies I love thee not.
Dem. I ſay, I love thee more then he can do.
Lyſ. If thou ſay ſo, with-draw and prove it too.
Dem. Quick, come.
Her. Lyſander, whereto tends all this?
Lyſ. Away, you Ethiope.
Dem. No, no, Sir, ſeeme to breake looſe;
Take on as you would follow,
But yet come not: you are a tame man, go.
Lyſ. Hang off thou cat, thou but; vile thing let looſe,
Or I will ſhake thee from me like a ſerpent.
Her. Why are you growne ſo rude?
What change is this ſweete Love?
Lyſ. Thy love? out tawny Tartar, out;
Out loathed medicine; O hated poiſon hence.
Her. Do you not jeſt?
Hel. Yes ſooth, and ſo do you.
Lyſ. Demetrius: I will keep my word with thee.
Dem. I would I had your bond: for I perceive
A weake bond holds you; Ile not truſt your word.
Lyſ. What, ſhould I hurt her, ſtrike her, kill her dead?
Although I hate her, Ile not harme her ſo.
Her. What, can you do me greater harme then hate?
Hate me, wherefore? O me, what newes my Love?
Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lyſander?
I am as faire now, as I was ere while.
Since night you lov'd me; yet ſince night you left me.
Why then you left me (O the gods forbid)
In earneſt, ſhall I ſay?
Lyſ. I, by my life;
And never did deſire to ſee thee more.
Therefore be out of hope, of queſtion, of doubt;
Be certaine, nothing truer: 'tis no jeſt,
That I do hate thee, and love Helena.
Her. O me, you jugler, you canker bloſſome,
You theefe of love; What, have you come by night,
And ſtolne my loves heart from him?
Hel. Fine yfaith:
Have you no modeſty, no maiden ſhame,
No touch of baſhfulneſſe? What, will you teare
Impatient anſwers from my gentle tongue?
Fie, fie, you counterfeit, you puppet, you.
Her. Puppet? why ſo? I, that way goes the game.
Now I perceive that ſhe hath made compare
Betweene our ſtatures, ſhe hath vrg'd her height,
And with her perſonage, her tall perſonage,
Her height (forſooth) ſhe hath prevail'd with him.
And are you growne ſo high in his eſteeme,
Becauſe I am ſo dwarfiſh, and ſo low?
How low am I, thou painted May-pole? Speake;
How low am I? I am not yet ſo low,
But that my nailes can reach unto thine eyes.
Hel. I pray you though you mocke me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me; I was never curſt:
I have no gift at all in ſhrewiſhneſſe;
I am a right maide for my cowardize;
Let her not ſtrike me: you perhaps may thinke,
Becauſe ſhe is ſomething lower then my ſelfe,
That I can match her.
Her. Lower? harke againe.
Hel. Good Hermia, do not be ſo bitter with me,
I evermore did love you Hermia,
Did ever keepe your counſels, never wronged you,
Save that in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your ſtealth unto this wood.
He followed you, for love I followd him,
But he hath chid me hence, and threatned me
To ſtrike me, ſpurne me, nay to kill me too;
And now, ſo you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I beare my folly backe,
And follow you no further. Let me go.
You ſee how ſimple, and how fond I am.
Her. Why get you gone: who iſt that hinders you?
Hel. A fooliſh heart, that I leave here behinde.
Her. What, with Lyſander?
Her. With Demetrius.
Lyſ. Be not afraid, ſhe ſhall not harme thee Helena.
Dem. No ſir, ſhe ſhall not, though you take her part.
Hel. O when ſhe's angry, ſhe is keene and ſhrewd,
She was a vixen when ſhe went to ſchoole,
And though ſhe be but little, ſhe is fierce.
Her. Little againe? Nothing but low and little?
Why will you ſuffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.
Liſ, Get you gone you dwarfe,
You minimus, of hindring knot-graſſe made,
You bead, you acorne.
Dem. You are too officious,
In her behalfe that ſcornes your ſervices.

Let her alone, ſpeake not of Helena,
Take not her part. For if thou doſt intend
Never ſo little ſhew of love to her,
Thou ſhalt abide it.
Lyſ. Now ſhe holds me not,
Now follow if thou dar'ſt, to try whoſe right,
Of thine or mine is moſt in Helena.
Dem. Follow? Nay, Ile go with thee cheeke by jowle.
Exit Lyſander and Demetrius.
Her. You Miſtris, all this coyle is long of you.
Nay, go not backe.
Hel. I will not truſt you I,
Nor longer ſtay in your curſt company.
Your hands then mine, are quicker for a fray,
My legs are longer though to runne away. Exeunt.

Enter Oberon and Pucke.
Ob. This is thy negligence, ſtill thou miſtak'ſt,
Or elſe committ'ſt thy knaveries willingly.
Puck. Beleeve me, King of ſhadowes, I miſtooke,
Did not you tell me, I ſhould know the man,
By the Athenian garments he hath on?
And ſo farre blameleſſe proves my enterprize,
That I have nointed an Athenians eies,
And ſo farre am I glad, it ſo did ſort,
As this their jangling I eſteeme a ſport.
Ob. Thou ſeeſt theſe Lovers ſeeke a place to fight,
Hie therefore Robin, overcaſt the night,
The ſtarry Welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogge as blacke as Acheron,
And lead theſe teſty Rivals ſo aſtray,
As one come not within anothers way.
Like to Lyſander, ſometime frame thy tongue,
Then ſtirre Demetrius vp with bitter wrong;
And ſometime raile thou like Demetrius;
And from each other looke thou leade them thus,
Till ore their browes, death-counterfeiting ſleepe
With leaden legs, and Battie-wings doth creepe;
Then cruſh this hearbe into Lyſanders eie,
Whoſe liquor hath this vertuous property,
To take from thence all error, with his might,
And make his eie-bals role with wonted ſight.
When they next wake, all this deriſion
Shall ſeeme a dreame, and fruitleſſe viſion,
And backe to Athens ſhall the Lovers wend
With league, whoſe date till death ſhall never end.
Whiles I in this affaire do thee imply,
Ile to my Queene, and beg her Indian Boy;
And then I will her charmed eie releaſe
From monſters view, and all things ſhall be peace.
Puck. My Fairy Lord, this muſt be done with haſte,
For nights-ſwſt Dragons cut the Clouds full faſt,
And yonder ſhines Auroras harbinger;
At whoſe approach Ghoſts wandring here and there,
Troope home to Church-yards; damned ſpirits all,
That in croſſe-waies and floods have buriall,
Already to their wormy beds are gone;
For feare leaſt day ſhould looke their ſhames vpon,
They wilfully themſelves exile from light,
And muſt for aye conſort with blacke browd night.
Ob. But we are ſpirits of another ſort:
I, with the morning love have oft made ſport,
And like a Forreſter, the groves may tread,
Even till the Eaſterne gate all fierie red,
Opening on Neptune, with faire bleſſed beames,
Turnes into yellow gold, his ſalt greene ſtreames.
But notwithſtanding haſte, make no delay:
We may effect this buſineſſe, yet ere day.
Puck. Vp and downe, vp and downe, I will leade them up and downe: I am fear'd in field and towne. Goblin, lead them up and downe: here comes one.
Enter Lyſander.
Lyſ. Where art thou, proud Demetrius?
Speake thou now.
Rob. Here villaine, drawne & readie. Where art thou?
Lyſ. I will be with thee ſtraight.
Rob. Follow me then to plainer ground.
Enter Demetrius.
Dem. Lyſander, ſpeake againe;
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speake in ſome buſh: Where doſt thou hide thy head?
Rob. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the ſtars,
Telling the buſhes that thou look'ſt for wars,
And wilt not come? Come recreant, come thou childe,
Ile whip thee with a rod. He is defil'd
That drawes a ſword on thee.
Dem. Yea, art thou there?
Ro. Follow my voice, we'l try no manhood here. Exit.
Lyſ. He goes before me, and ſtill dares me on,
When I come where he cals me, then he's gone.
The villaine is much lighter heel'd then I:
I followed faſt, but faſter he did flye; ſhifting places.
That fallen am I in darke vneven way,
And here will reſt me. Come thou gentle day: lye down.
For if but once thou ſhew me thy gray light,
Ile finde Demetrius, and revenge this ſpight.
Enter Robin and Demetrius.
Rob. Ho, ho, ho, coward, why com'ſt thou not?
Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'ſt. For well I wot.
Thou runſt before me, ſhifting every place,
And dar'ſt not ſtand, nor looke me in the face.
Where art thou?
Rob. Come hither, I am here.
Dem. Nay then thou mock'ſt me; thou ſhalt buy this deere,
If ever I thy face by day-light ſee.
Now go thy way: faintneſſe conſtraineth me,
To meaſure out my length on this cold bed,
By daies approach looke to be viſited.
Enter Helena.
Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,
Abate thy houres, ſhine comforts from the Eaſt,
That I may backe to Athens by day-light,
From theſe that my poore company deteſt;
And ſleepe that ſometime ſhuts up ſorrowes eie,
Steale me a while from mine owne companie. Sleepe.
Rob. Yet but three? Come one more,
Two of both kindes makes up foure.
Here ſhe comes, curſt and ſad,
Cupid is a knaviſh lad,
Enter Hermia.
Thus to make poore females mad.
Her. Never ſo wearie, never ſo in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torne with briars,
I can no further crawle, no further go;
My legs can keepe no pace with my deſires.
Here will I reſt me till the breake of day,
Heavens ſhield Lyſander, if they meane a fray.
Rob. On the ground ſleepe ſound,
Ile apply your eie, gentle lover, remedy.
When thou wak'ſt, thou tak'ſt
True delight in the ſight of thy former Ladies eie,
And

And the Country Proverbe knowne,
That every man ſhould take his owne,
In your waking ſhall be ſhowne.
Iacke ſhall have Iill, nought ſhall goe ill,
The man ſhall have his Mare againe, and all ſhall be well.

They ſleepe all the Act.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Queene of Fairies, and Clowne, and Fairies, and the King behind them.

Tita. Come, ſit thee downe upon this flowry bed,
While I thy amiable cheekes doe coy,
And ſticke muske roſes in thy ſleeke ſmoothe head,
And kiſſe thy faire large eares, my gentle joy.

Clow. Where's Peaſe bloſſome?

Peaſ. Ready.

Clow. Scratch my head, Peaſe-bloſſome. Where's Mounſieur Cobweb.

Cob. Ready.

Clo. Mounſieur Cobweb, good Mounſieur get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red hipt humble-Bee on the top of a thiſtle; and good Mounſieur bring mee the hony bag. Doe not fret your ſelfe too much in the action, Mounſieur; and good Mounſieur have a care the hony bag breake not, I would be loth to have you overflowne with a hony-bag ſigniour. Where's Mounſieur Muſtardſeed?

Muſ. Ready.

Clo. Give me your newſe, Mounſieur Muſtardſeed. Pray you leave your courteſie good Mounſieur.

Muſ. What's your will?

Clo. Nothing good Mounſieur, but to helpe Cavalero Cobweb to ſcratch. I muſt to the Barbers Mounſieur, for me thinkes I am marvellous hairy about the face. And I am ſuch a tender aſſe, if my haire doe but tickle me, I muſt ſcratch.

Tita. What, wilt thou heare ſome muſicke, my ſweet love?

Clo. I have a reaſonable good eare in muſicke. Let us have the tongues and the bones.

Muſicke Tongs, Rurall Muſicke,

Tita. Or ſay ſweet Love, what thou deſireſt to eate.

Clo. Truely a pecke of Provender; I could munch your good dry Oates. Me thinkes I have a great deſire to a bottle of hay: good hay, ſweet hay hath no fellow.

Tita. I have a venturous Fairy,
That ſhall ſeeke the Squirrels hoard,
And fetch thee new Nuts.

Clo. I had rather have a handfull or two of dried peaſe. But I pray you let none of your people ſtirre me, I have an expoſition of ſleepe come upon me.

Tyta. Sleepe thou, and I will winde thee in my armes,
Fairies be gone, and be alwayes away.
So doth the woodbine, the ſweet Honiſuckle,
Gently entwiſt; the female Iuy ſo
Enrings the barky fingers of the Elme,
O how I love thee! how I dote on thee!

Enter Robin goodfellow, and Oberon.

Ob. Welcome good Robin:
Seeſt thou this ſweet ſight?
Her dotage now I doe begin to pitty.
For meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking ſweet ſavors for this hatefull foole,
I did upbraid her, and fall out with her.
For ſhe his hairy temples then had rounded,
With coronet of freſh and fragrant flowers.
And that ſame dew which ſometime on the buds,
Was wont to ſwell like round and orient pearles;
Stood now within the pretty flouriets eyes,
Like teares that did their owne diſgrace bewaile.
When I had at my pleaſure taunted her,
And ſhe in milde termes beg'd my patience,
I then did aske of her, her changeling child,
Which ſtraight ſhe gave me, and her Fairy ſent
To beare him to my Bower in Fairy Land.
And now I have the Boy, I will undoe
This hatefull imperfection of her eyes,
And gentle Pucke, take this transformed ſcalpe,
From off the head of this Athenian ſwaine;
That he awaking when the other doe,
May all to Athens backe againe repaire,
And thinke no more of this nights accidents,
But as the fierce vexation of a dreame.
But firſt I will releaſe the Fairy Queene.

Be thou as thou waſt wont to be;
See as thou waſt wont to ſee.
Dians bud, or Cupids flower,
Hath ſuch force and bleſſed power.

Now my Titania wake you my ſweet Queene:

Tita. My Oberon, what viſions have I ſeene!
Me-thought I was enamoured of an Aſſe.

Ob. There lyes your love.

Tita. How came theſe things to paſſe?
Oh, how mine eyes doe loath this viſage now!

Ob. Silence a while. Robin take off his head:
Titania, muſicke call, and ſtrike more dead
Then cammon ſleepe; of all theſe, fine the ſenſe.

Tita. Muſicke, ho muſicke, ſuch as charmeth ſleepe.

Muſicke ſtill.

Rob. When thou awak'ſt, with thine owne fooles eyes peepe.

Ob. Sound muſicke; come my Queene, take hands with (me
And rocke the ground whereon theſe ſleepers be.
Now thou and I are new in amity,
And will to morrow midnight, ſolemnly
Dance in Duke Theſeus houſe triumphantly,
And bleſſe it to all faire poſterity.
There ſhall theſe paires of faithfull Lovers be
Wedded, with Theſeus, all in jollity.

Rob. Faire King attend, and marke,
I doe heare the morning Larke.

Ob. Then my Queene in ſilence ſad,
Trip we after the nights ſhade;
We the Globe can compaſſe ſoone,
Swifter then the wandring Moone.

Tita. Come my Lord, and in our flight,
Tell me how it came this night,
That I ſleeping heere was found,

Sleepers lye ſtill.

With theſe mortalls on the ground. Exeunt.

Winde Hornes.

Enter Theſeus, Egeus, Hippolita and all his traine.

Theſ. Goe one of you, find out the Forreſter,
For now our obſervation is perform'd;
And ſince we have the vaward of the day,
My Love ſhall heare the muſicke of my hounds.
Vncouple in the Weſterne valley, let them goe;
Diſpatch I ſay, and find the Forreſter.
We will faire Queene, up to the Mountaines top,
And marke the muſicall confuſion
Of hounds and eccho in conjunction.

Hip. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Creete they bayed the Beare
With hounds of Sparta; never did I heare
Such gallant chiding. For beſides the groves,
The skies, the fountaines, every region neere,
Seem'd all one mutuall cry. I never heard
So muſicall a diſcord, ſuch ſweet thunder.

Theſ. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, ſo ſanded, and their heads are hung
With eares that ſweepe away the morning dew,
Crooke-kneed, and dew-lapt, like Theſſalian Buls,
Slow in purſuit, but match'd in mouth like bels,
Each under each. A cry more tuneable
Was never hollawed to, nor cheer'd with horne,
In Creete, in Sparta, nor in Theſſaly;
Iudge when you heare. But ſoft, what nimphs are theſe?

Ega. My Lord, this is my daughter here aſleepe,
And this Lyſander, this Demetrius is,
This Helena, old Nedars Helena,
I wonder of this being heere together.

The. No doubt they roſe up early, to obſerve
The right of May; and hearing our intent,
Came heere in grace of our ſolemnity.
But ſpeake Egeus, is not this the day
That Hermia ſhould give anſwer of her choice?

Ega. It is my Lord.

Theſ. Goe bid the hunts-men wake them with their hornes.

Hornes and they wake.

Shout within, they all ſtart up.

Theſ. Good morrow friends: Saint Valentine is paſt,
Begin theſe wood-birds but to couple now?

Lyſ. Pardon my Lord.

Theſ. I pray you all ſtand up.
I know you two are Rivall enemies.
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is ſo farre from jealouſie,
To ſleepe by hate, and feare no enmity.

Lyſ. My Lord, I ſhall reply amazedly,
Halfe ſleepe, halfe waking. But as yet, I ſweare,
I cannot truly ſay how I came heere.
But as I thinke (for truly would I ſpeake)
And now I doe bethinke me, ſo it is;
I came with Hermia hither. Our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the perill of the Athenian Law.

Ega. Enough, enough, my Lord: you have enough;
I beg the Law, the Law, upon his head:
They would have ſtolne away, they would Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated you and me:
You of your wife, and me of my conſent;
Of my conſent, that ſhe ſhould be your wife.

Dem. My Lord, faire Helen told me of their ſtealth,
Of this their purpoſe hither, to this wood,
And I in fury hither followed them;
Faire Helena, in fancy followed me.
But my good Lord, I wot not by what power,
(But by ſome power it is) my love
To Hermia (melted as the ſnow)
Seemes to me now as the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon:
And all the faith, the vertue of my heart,
The object and the pleaſure of mine eye,
Is onely Helena. To her, my Lord,
Was I betroth'd, ere I ſee Hermia,
But like a ſickeneſſe did I loath this food:
But as in health, come to my naturall taſte,
Now doe I wiſh it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.

Theſ. Faire Lovers, you are fortunately met;
Of this diſcourſe we ſhall heare more anon.
Egeus, I will over-beare your will;
For in the Temple, by and by with us,
Theſe couples ſhall eternally be knit.
And for the morning now is ſomething worne,
Our purpos'd hunting ſhall be ſet aſide.
Away, with us to Athens; three and three,
We'll hold a feaſt in great ſolemnity.
Come Hippolita. Exit Duke and Lords.

Dem. Theſe things ſeeme ſmall and undiſtinguiſhable,
Like farre off mountaines turned into Clouds.

Her. Me-thinkes I ſee theſe things with parted eye,
When every things ſeemes double.

Hel. So me-thinkes:
And I have found Demetrius, like a jewell,
Mine owne, and not mine owne.

Dem. It ſeemes to me,
That yet we ſleepe, we dreame. Doe not you thinke,
The Duke was heere, and bid us follow him?

Her. Yea, and my Father.

Hel. And Hippolita.

Lyſ. And he bid us follow to the Temple.

Dem. Why then we are awake; lets follow him, and by the way let us recount our dreames.

Bottome wakes. Exit Lovers.

Clo. When my cue comes, call me, and I will anſwer. My next is, moſt faire Piramus, Hey ho. Peter Quince? Flute the bellowes-mender? Snout the tinker? Starveling? Gods my life! Stolne hence, and left me aſleepe: I have had a moſt rare viſion. I had a dreame, paſt the wit of man, to ſay, what dreame it was. Man is but an Aſſe, if he goe about to expound this dreame. Me-thought I was, there is no man can tell what. Me thought I was, and me-thought I had. But man is but a patch'd foole, if he will offer to ſay, what me-thought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the eare of man hath not ſeene, mans hand is not able to taſte, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dreame was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballet of this dreame, it ſhall be called Bottomes Dreame, becauſe it hath no bottome; and I will ſing it in the latter end of a play, before the Duke. Peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I ſhall ſing it at her death. Exit.

Enter Quince, Flute, Thisby, Snout, and Starveling.

Qui. Have you ſent to Bottomes houſe? Is he come home yet?

Sta. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is tranſported.

Thiſ. If he come not, then the play is mar'd. It goes not forward, doth it?

Qui. It is not poſſible: you have not a man in all Athens, able to diſcharge Piramus but he.

Thiſ. No, he hath ſimply the beſt wit of any handy-craft man in Athens.

Qui. Yea, and the beſt perſon too, and he is a very Paramour, for a ſweet voyce.

Thiſ. You muſt ſay, Paragon. A Paramour is (God bleſſe us) a thing of naught.

Enter Snug the Ioyner.

Snug. Maſters, the Duke is comming from the Temple, and there is two or three Lords and Ladies more married. If our ſport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Thiſ. O ſweet bully Bottome: thus hath he loſt ſixpence a day, during his life; he could not have ſcaped ſixpence a day. And the Duke had not given him ſixpence a day for playing Piramus, Ile be hang'd. He would have deſerved it. Sixpence a day in Piramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottome.

Bot. Where are theſe Lads? Where are theſe hearts?

Qui. Bottome, O moſt couragious day! O moſt happy houre!

Bot. Maſters, I am to diſcourſe wonders; but aske me not what. For if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing as it fell out.

Qui. Let us heare, ſweet Bottome.

Bot. Not a word of me: all that I will tell you, is, that the Duke hath dined. Get your apparell together, good ſtrings to your beards, new ribbands to your pumps, meete preſently at the Palace, every man looke ore his part: for the ſhort and the long is, our play is preferred: In any caſe let Thisby have cleane linnen: and let not him that playes the Lion, paire his nailes, for they ſhall hang out for the Lions clawes. And moſt deare Actors, eate no Onions, nor Garlicke; for we are to utter ſweet breath, and I doe not doubt but to heare them ſay, it is a ſweet Comedy. No more words: away, goe away.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Theſeus, Hippolita, Egeus and his Lords.

Hip. 'Tis ſtrange my Theſeus, that theſe lovers ſpeake of Theſ. More ſtrange then true. I never may beleeve
Theſe anticke fables, nor theſe Fairy toyes,
Lovers and mad men have ſuch ſeething braines,
Such ſhaping phantaſies, that apprehend more
Then coole reaſon ever comprehends.
The Lunaticke, the Lover, and the Poet,
Are of imagination all compact.
One ſees more divels then vaſte hell can hold;
That is the mad man. The Lover, all as franticke,
Sees Helens beauty in a brow of Egypt.
The Poets eye in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven.
And as imagination bodies forth the formes of things
Vnknowne; the Poets pen turnes them to ſhapes,
And gives to ayre nothing, a locall habitation,
And a name. Such tricks hath ſtrong imagination,
That if it would but apprehend ſome joy,
It comprehends ſome bringer of that joy.
Or in the night, imagining ſome feare
How eaſie is a buſh ſuppos'd a Beare?

Hip. But all the ſtory of the night told over,
And all their minds transfigur'd ſo together,
More witneſſeth than fancies images,
And growes to ſomething of great conſtancy;
But howſoever, ſtrange, and admirable.

Enter Lovers, Lyſander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

The. Heere come the lovers, full of joy and mirth:
Ioy, gentle friends, joy and freſh dayes of love
Accompany your hearts.

Lyſ. More then to us,
Waite in your royall walkes, your boord, your bed.

Theſ. Come now, what maskes, what dances ſhall we have,
To weare away this long age of three houres:
Betweene our after ſupper, and bed-time?
Where is our uſuall manager of mirth?
What Revels are in hand? Is there no play,
To eaſe the anguiſh of a torturing houre?
Call Egeus.

Ege. Heere mighty Theſeus.

The. Say, what abridgement have you for this evening?
What maske? What muſicke? How ſhall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with ſome delight?

Ege. There is a brieſe how many ſports are riſe:
Make choiſe of which your Highneſſe will ſee first.

Lyſ. The battell with the Centaurs to be ſung
By an Athenian Eunuch, to the Harpe.

The. We'll none of that. That have I told my love
In glory of my kinſman Hercules.

Lyſ. The riot of the tipſie Bachanals,
Tearing the Thracian ſinger, in their rage?

Theſ. That is an old device, and it was plaid
When I from Thebes came laſt a Conqueror.

Lyſ. The thrice three Muſes, mourning for the death of learning, late deceaſt in beggery.

Theſ. That is ſome Satire keene and criticall,
Not ſorting with a nuptiall ceremony.

Lyſ. A tedious brieſe Scene of yong Piramus,
And his love Thisby; very tragicall mirth.

The. Merry and tragicall? Tedious, and brieſe? That is, hot ice, and wondrous ſtrange ſnow. How ſhall we find the concord of this diſcord?

Ege. A play there is my Lord, ſome ten words long,
Which is as brieſe, as I have knowne a play;
But by ten words, my Lord, it is too long;
Which makes it tedious. For in all the play,
There is not one word apt, one Player fitted.
And tragicall my noble Lord it is:
For Piramus therein doth kill himſelfe.
Which when I ſaw rehearſt, I muſt confeſſe,
Made mine eyes water: but more merry teares,
The paſſion of loud laughter never ſhed.

Theſ. What are they that doe play it?

Ege. Hard handed men, that worke in Athens heere,
Which never labour'd in their minds till now;
And now have toyled their unbreathed memories
With this ſame play, againſt your nuptialls

The. And we will heare it.

Phi. No, my noble Lord, it is not for you. I have heard
It over, and it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Vnleſſe you can find ſport in their intents,
Extreamely ſtretcht, and cond with cruell paine,
To doe you ſervice.
Theſ. I will heare that play. For never any thing,
Can be amiſſe, when ſimpleneſſe and duty tender it.
Goe bring them in, and take your places, Ladies.
Hip. I love not to ſee wretchedneſſe orecharged;
And duty in his ſervice periſhing.
Theſ. Why gentle ſweet, you ſhall ſee no ſuch thing.
Hip. He ſayes, they can doe nothing in this kind.
Theſ. The kinder we, to give them thankes for nothing:
Our ſport ſhall be, to take what they miſtake;
And what poore duty cannot doe, noble reſpect
Takes it in might, not merrit.
Where I have come, great Clearkes have purpoſed
To greete me with premeditatd welcomes;
Where I have ſeene them ſhiver and looke pale,
Make periods in the midſt of ſentences,
Throttle their practiz'd accent in their feares,
And in concluſion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Truſt me ſweet,
Out of this ſilence yet, I pickt a welcome:
And in the modeſty of fearefull duty,
I reade as much, as from the ratling tongue
Of ſaucy and audacious eloquence.
Love therefore, and tongue-tide ſimplicity,
In leaſt, ſpeake moſt, to my capacity.
Ege. So pleaſe your Grace, the Prologue is addreſt.
Duk. Let him approach. Flor. Trum.

Enter the Prologue. Quince.

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you ſhould thinke, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To ſhew our ſimple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Conſider then, we come but in deſpight.
We doe not come, as minding to content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight,
We are not heere. That you ſhould here repent you,
The Actors are at hand; and by their ſhow,
You ſhall know all, that you are like to know.
Theſ. This fellow doth not ſtand upon points.
Lyſ. He hath rid his Prologue, like a rough Colt: he knowes not the ſtop. A good morall my Lord. It is not enough to ſpeake, but to ſpeake true.
Hip. Indeed he hath plaid on his Prologue, like a child on the Recorder, a ſound, but not in government.
Theſ. His ſpeech was like a tangled chaine: nothing impaired, but all diſordered. Who is the next?

Tawyer with a Trumpet before them.

Enter Pyramus, and Thisby, Wall, Moone-ſhine, and Lyon.

Pro. Gentles, perchance you wonder at this ſhow,
But wonder on, till truth make all things plaine.
This man is Piramus, if you would know;
This beauteous Lady, Thisby is certaine.
This man with lyme and rough-caſt, doth preſent
Wall, the vile wall, which did theſe lovers ſunder:
And through walls chinke (poore ſoules) they are content
To whiſper. At the which, let no man wonder.
This man, with Lanthorne, dog, and buſh of thorne,
Preſenteth moone-ſhine. For if you will know,
By moone-ſhine did theſe Lovers thinke no ſcorne
To meet at Ninus toombe, there, there to wooe:
This grizly beaſt (which Lyon hight by name)
The truſty Thisby, comming firſt by night,
Did ſcarre away, or rather did affright:
And as ſhe fled, her mantle ſhe did fall;
Which Lyon vile with bloody mouth did ſtaine.
Anon comes Piramus, ſweet youth and tall,
And finds his gentle Thisbies Mantle, ſlaine;
Whereat, with blade, with bloody blamefull blade,
He bravely broacht his boiling bloudy breaſt,
And Thisby, tarrying in Mulberry ſhade,
His dagger drew, and died. For all the reſt,
Let Lyon, Moone-ſhine, Wall, and Lovers ſwaine,
At large diſcourſe, while here they doe remaine.

Exit all but Wall.

Theſ. I wonder if the Lion be to ſpeake.
Dem. No wonder, my Lord: one Lion may, when many Aſſes doe.

Exit Lyon, Thisby, and Mooneſhine.

Wall. In this ſame Interlude, it doth befall,
That I, one Snowt (by name) preſent a wall:
And ſuch a wall, as I would have you thinke,
That had in it a crannied hole or chinke:
Through which the Lovers, Piramus and Thisby
Did whiſper often, very ſecretly.
This loame, this rough-caſt, and this ſtone doth ſhew,
That I am that ſame Wall; the truth is ſo.
And this the cranny is, right and ſiniſter,
Through which the fearefull Lovers are to whiſper.
Theſ. Would you deſire Lime and Haire to ſpeake better?
Dem. It is the wittieſt partition, that ever I heard diſcourſe, my Lord.
Theſ. Piramus drawes neere the Wall, ſilence.

Enter Pyramus.

Pir. O grim lookt night, O night with hue ſo blacke,
O night, which ever art, when day is not:
O night, O night, alacke, alacke, alacke,
I feare my Thisbies promiſe is forgot.
And thou O wall, thou ſweet and lovely wall,
That ſtandes betweene her fathers ground and mine,
Thou wall, O wall, O ſweet and lovely wall,
Shew me thy chinke, to blinke through with mine eyne.
Thankes courteous wall. Iove ſhield thee well for this.
But what ſee I? No Thisby doe I ſee.
O wicked wall, through whom I ſee no bliſſe,
Curſt be thy ſtones for thus deceiving me.
Theſ. The wall me-thinkes being ſenſible, ſhould curſe againe.
Pir. No in truth ſir, he ſhould not. Deceiving me,
Is Thisbies cue; ſhe is to enter, and I am to ſpy
Her through the wall. You ſhall ſee it will fall.

Enter Thisbie.

Pat as I told you; yonder ſhe comes.
Thiſ. O wall, full often haſt thou heard my mones,
For parting my faire Piramus, and me.
My cherry lips have often kiſt thy ſtones;
Thy ſtones with Lime and Haire knit up in thee.
Pyra. I heare a voyce; now will I to the chinke,
To ſpy and I can ſee my Thisbies face. Thisby?
Thiſ. My love thou art, my Love I thinke.
Pir. Thinke what thou wilt, I am thy Lovers grace,
And like Limander am I truſty ſtill.
Thiſ. And I like Helen till the Fates me kill.
Pir. Not Shafalus to Procrus, was ſo true.
Thiſ. As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you.

Pir. O kiſſe me through the hole of this vile wall.
Thiſ. I kiſſe the wals hole, not your lips at all.
Pir. Wilt thou at Ninnies tombe meete me ſtraight way?
Thiſ. Tide life, tide death, I come without delay.
Wall. Thus have I Wall, my part diſcharged ſo;
And being done, thus Wall away doth goe. Exit Clow.

Duk. Now is the morall downe betweene the two Neighbours.

Dem. No remedy my Lord, when Wals are ſo wilfull, to heare without warning.

Dut. This is the ſillieſt ſtuffe that ere I heard.

Duk. The beſt in this kind are but ſhadowes, and the worſt are no worſe if imagination amend them.

Dut. It muſt be your imagination then, and not theirs.

Duk. If we imagine no worſe of them then they of themſelves, they may paſſe for excellent men. Here comes two noble beaſts, in a man and a Lion.

Enter Lyon, and Moone ſhine.

Lyon. You Ladyes, you (whoſe gentle hearts do feare
The ſmalleſt monſtrous mouſe that creepes on floore)
May now perchance, both quake and tremble heere,
When Lion rough in wildeſt rage doth roare.
Then know that I, one Snug the Ioyner am
A Lion fell, nor elſe no Lions damme:
For if I ſhould as Lion come in ſtrife
Into this place, 'twere pitty of my life.

Du. A very gentle beaſt, and of a good conſcience.

Dem. The very beſt at a beaſt, my Lord, that ere I ſaw.

Liſ. This Lion is a very Fox for his valor.

Du. True, and a Gooſe for his diſcretion.

Dem, Not ſo my Lord: for his valor cannot carry his diſcretion, and the Fox carries the Gooſe.

Du. His diſcretion I am ſure cannot carry his valor: for the Gooſe carries not the Fox. It is well; leave it to his diſcretion, and let us hearken to the Moone.

Moon. This Lanthorne doth the horned Moone preſent.

De. He ſhould have worne the hornes on his head.

Du. He is no creſcent, and his hornes are inviſible, within the circumference.

Moon. This lanthorne doth the horned Moone preſent: My ſelfe, the man i'th Moone doth ſeeme to be.

Du. This is the greateſt error of all the reſt; the man ſhould be put into the Lanthorne. How is it elſe the man i'th Moone?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle.
For you ſee, it is already in ſnuffe.

Dut. I am weary of this Moone; would he would change.

Du. It appeares by his ſmall light of diſcretion, that he is in the wane: but yet in courteſie, in all reaſon, we muſt ſtay the time.

Lyſ. Proceed Moone.

Moon. All that I have to ſay, is to tell you, that the Lanthorne is the Moone; I, the man in the Moone; this thorne buſh, my thorne buſh; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why all theſe ſhould be in the Lanthorne: for they are in the Moone. But ſilence, heere comes Thisby.

Enter Thisby.

Thiſ. This is old Ninnies tombe: where is my love?

Lyon. Oh.

The Lion roares, Thisby runnes off.

Dem. Well roar'd Lion.

Du. Well run Thisby.

Dut. Well ſhone Moone.
Truly the Moone ſhines with a good grace.

Du. Well mouz'd Lion.

Dem. And then came Piramus.

Lyſ. And ſo the Lion vaniſht.

Enter Piramus.

Pyr. Sweet Moone, I thanke thee for thy ſunny beames,
I thanke thee Moone, for ſhining now ſo bright:
For by thy gracious, golden, glittering ſtreames,
I truſt to taſte of trueſt Thisbies ſight.
But ſtay: O ſpight! but marke, poore Knight,
What dreadfull dole is heere?
Eyes doe you ſee! How can it be!
O dainty Ducke: O Deere!
Thy mantle good; what ſtaind with blood!
Approch you Furies fell:
O Fates! come, come: Cut thred and thrum,
Quaile, cruſh, conclude, and quell.

Du. This paſſion, and the death of a deare friend,
Would goe neere to make a man looke ſad.

Dut. Beſhrew my heart, but I pitty the man.

Pir. O wherefore Nature, did'ſt thou Lions frame?
Since Lion vild hath heere deflour'd my deere:
Which is: no, no, which was the faireſt Dame
That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheere.
Come teares, confound: Out ſword, and wound
The pap of Piramus:
I, that left pap, where heart doth hop;
Thus dye I, thus, thus, thus.
Now am I dead, now am I fled, my ſoule is in the sky,
Tongue loſe thy light, Moone take thy flight,
Now, dye, dye, dye, dye, dye.

Dem. No dye, but an ace for him: for he is but one.

Lyſ. Leſſe then an ace man. For he is dead, he is nothing.

Du. With the helpe of a Surgeon, he might yet recover, and prove an Aſſe.

Dut. How chance Moone-ſhine is gone before?
Thisby comes backe, and finds her Lover.

Enter Thisby.

Duk. She will find him by ſtarre-light.
Heere ſhe comes, and her paſſion ends the play.

Dut. Me thinkes ſhe ſhould not uſe a long one for ſuch a Piramus: I hope ſhe will be briefe.

Dem. A Moth will turne the ballance, which Piramus, which Thisby is the better. (eyes.

Lyſ. She hath ſpyed him already, with thoſe ſweet

Dem. And thus ſhe meanes, videlicet.

This. Aſleepe my Love? What, dead my Dove?
O Piramus ariſe:
Speake, ſpeake. Quite dumbe? Dead, dead? A tombe
Muſt cover thy ſweet eyes.
Theſe Lilly Lips, this cherry noſe,
Theſe yellow Cowſlip cheekes
Are gone, are gone: Lovers make mone:
His eyes were greene as Leekes.
O ſisters three, come, come to mee,
With hands as pale as Milke,
Lay them in gore, ſince you have ſhore
With ſheeres, his thred of ſilke.
Tongue not a word: Come truſty ſword:
Come blade; my breſt imbrue:

And farewell friends, thus Thisby ends ;
Adieu, adieu, adieu.

Duk. Moon-ſhine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Deme. I, and Wall too.

Bot. No, I aſſure you, the wall is downe, that parted their Fathers. Will it pleaſe you to ſee the Epilogue, or to heare a Bergomaske dance, betweene two of our company ?

Duk. No Epilogue, I pray you ; for your play needs no excuſe. Never excuſe ; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it had plaid Piramus, and hung himſelfe in Thisbies garter, it would have beene a fine Tragedy : and ſo it is truely, and very notably diſcharg'd. But come, your Burgomaske ; let your Epilogue alone.
The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve.
Lovers to bed, 'tis almoſt Fairy time.
I feare we ſhall out-ſleepe the comming morne,
As much as we this night have over-watcht.
This palpable groſſe play hath well beguil'd
The heavy gate of night. Sweet friends to bed.
A fortnight hold we this ſolemnity,
In nightly Revels ; and new iollity. Exeunt.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. Now the hungry Lyons rores,
And the Wolfe beholds the Moone :
Whileſt the heavy ploughman ſnores,
All with weary taske fore-done.
Now the waſted brands doe glow,
Whil'ſt the ſcritch-owle, ſcritching loud,
Puts the wretch that lyes in woe,
In remembrance of a ſhrowd.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his ſpright,
In the Church-way paths to glide,
And we Fairies, that doe runne,
By the triple Hecates teame,
From the preſence of the Sunne,
Following darkeneſſe like a dreame,
Now are frollicke ; not a Mouſe
Shall diſturbe this hallowed houſe,
I am ſent with broome before,
To ſweep the duſt behind the doore.

Enter King and Queene of Fairies, with their traine.

Ob. Through the houſe give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowſie fier,
Every Elfe and Fairy ſpright,
Hop as light as bird from brier,
And this Ditty after me, ſing and dance it trippinglye.

Tita. Firſt rehearſe this ſong by roate,
To each word a warbling note.
Hand in hand, with Fairy grace,
Will we ſing and bleſſe this place.

The Song.

Now untill the breake of day,
Through this houſe each Fairy ſtray.
To the beſt Bride-bed will we;
Which by us ſhall bleſſed be :
And the iſſue there create,
Ever ſhall be fortunate :
So ſhall all the couples three,
Ever true in loving be :
And the blots of Natures hand,
Shall not in their iſſue ſtand,
Never mole, harelip, nor ſcarre,
Nor marke prodigious, ſuch as are
Deſpiſed in Nativity,
Shall upon their children be.
With this field dew conſecrate,
Every Fairy take his gate,
And each ſeverall chamber bleſſe,
Through this Pallace with ſweet peace,
Ever ſhall in ſafety reſt,
And the owner of it bleſt.
Trip away, make no ſtay ;
Meet me all by breake of day.

Robin. If we ſhadowes have offended,
Thinke but this (and all is mended)
That you have but ſlumbred here,
While theſe viſions did appeare.
And this weake and idle theame,
No more yeelding but a dreame,
Gentles, doe not reprehend.
If you pardon, we will mend.
And as I am an honeſt Pucke,
If we have unearned lucke,
Now to ſcape the Serpents tongue,
We will make amends ere long :
Elſe the Pucke a lyar call.
So good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin ſhall reſtore amends.

FINIS.

The Merchant of Venice.

Actus Primus.

Enter Anthonio, Salarino, and Salanio.

Anthonio.

IN ſooth I know not why I am ſo ſad,
It wearies me: you ſay it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
What ſtuffe 'tis made of, whereof it is borne,
I am to learne: and ſuch a Want-wit ſadneſſe makes of me,
That I have much adoe to know my ſelfe.

Sal. Your mind is toſſing on the Ocean,
There where your Argoſies with portly ſaile
Like Signiors and rich Burgers on the flood,
Or as it were the Pageants of the ſea,
Doe over-peere the petty Traffiquers
That curtſie to them, doe them reverence
As they flye by them with their woven wings.

Sala. Beleeve me ſir, had I ſuch venture forth,
The better part of my affections, would
Be with my hopes abroad. I ſhould be ſtill
Plucking the graſſe to know were ſits the winde,
Peering in Maps for ports, and peers, and rodes:
And every object that might make me feare
Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt
Would make me ſad.

Sal. My winde cooling my broth,
Would blow me to an Ague, when I thought
What harme a wind too great might doe at ſea.
I ſhould not ſee the ſandie houre-glaſſe runne,
But I ſhould thinke of ſhallowes, and of flats,
And ſee my wealthy Andrew docks in ſand,
Vailing her high top lower then her ribs
To kiſſe her buriall; ſhould I goe to Church
And ſee the holy edifice of ſtone,
And not bethinke me ſtraight of dangerous rockes,
Which touching but my gentle Veſſels ſide
Would ſcatter all her ſpices on the ſtreame,
Enrobe the roring waters with my ſilkes,
And in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shall I have the thought
To thinke on this, and ſhall I lacke the thought
That ſuch a thing bechanc'd would make me ſad?
But tell not me, I know Anthonio
Is ſad to thinke upon his merchandize.

Anth. Beleeve me no, I thanke my fortune for it,
My ventures are not in one bottome truſted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole eſtate
Vpon the fortune of this preſent yeere:
Therefore my merchandize makes me not ſad:

Sola. Why then you are in love.

Anth. Fie, fie.

Sola. Not in love neither! then let us ſay you are ſad
Becauſe you are not merry; and 'twere as eaſie
For you to laugh and leape, and ſay you are merry
Becauſe you are not ſad. Now by two-headed Ianus,
Nature hath fram'd ſtrange fellowes in her time:
Some that will evermore peepe through their eyes,
And laugh like Parrats at a bag-piper.
And other of ſuch vinegar aſpect,
That they'ill not ſhew their teeth in way of ſmile,
Though Neſtor ſweare the jeſt be laughable.

Enter Baſſanio, Lorenſo, and Gratiano.

Sola. Heere comes Baſſanio,
Your moſt noble Kinſman,
Gratiano, and Lorenſo. Faryewell,
We leave you now with better company.

Sala. I would have ſtaid till I had made you merry,
If worthier friends had not prevented me,

Anth. Your worth is very deere in my regard.
I take it your owne buſines calls on you,
And you embrace th'occaſion to depart.

Sal. Good morrow my good Lords. (when?

Baſſ. Good ſigniors both, when ſhall we laugh? ſay,
You grow exceeding ſtrange: muſt it be ſo?

Sal. Wee'll make our leyſures to attend on yours.

Exeunt Salarino, and Solanio.

Lord. My Lord Baſſanio, ſince you have found Anthonio
We two will leave you, but at dinner time
I pray you have in mind where we muſt meete,

Baſſ. I will not faile you.

Grat. You looke not well ſignior Anthonio,
You have too much reſpect upon the world:
They looſe it that doe buy it with much care,
Beleeve me you are marvellouſly chang'd.

Anth. I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano,
A ſtage, where every man muſt play a part,
And mine a ſad one.

Grati. Let me play the foole,
With mirth and laughter: let old wrinckles come,
And let my Liver rather heate with wine,
Then my heat coole with mortifying grones.
Why ſhould a man whoſe bloud is warme within,
Sit like his Grandſire, cut in Alablaſter?
Sleepe when he wakes? and creepe into the Iaundies

By being peeviſh? I tell thee what Anthonio,
I love thee, and it is my love that ſpeakes:
There are a ſort of men, whoſe viſages
Doe creame and mantle like a ſtanding pond,
And doe a willfull ſtilneſſe entertaine,
With purpoſe to be dreſt in an opinion
Of wiſedome, gravity, profound conceit,
As who ſhould ſay, I am ſir an Oracle,
And when I ope my lips, let no dogge barke.
O my Anthonio, I doe know of theſe
That therefore onely are reputed wiſe,
For ſaying nothing; when I am very ſure
If they ſhould ſpeake, would almoſt damme thoſe eares
Which hearing them would call their brothers fooles:
Ile tell thee more of this another time.
But fiſh not with this malancholly baite
For this foole Gudgion, this opinion:
Come good Lorenzo, faryewell a while,
Ile end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner time.
I muſt be one of theſe ſame dumbe wiſe men,
For Gratiano never let's me ſpeake.

Gra. Well, keepe me company but two yeares mo,
Thou ſhalt not know the ſound of thine owne tongue.

Ant. Fare you well, Ile grow a talker for this geare.

Gra. Thankes iſaith, for ſilence is onely commendable
In a neats tongue dri'd, and a maid not vendible. Exit.

Ant. It is that any thing now.

Baſ. Gratiano ſpeakes an infinite deale of nothing, more then any man in all Venice, his reaſons are two graines of wheate hid in two buſhels of chaffe: you ſhall ſeeke all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the ſearch.

Ant. Well: tell me now, what Lady is the ſame
To whom you ſwore a ſecret Pilgrimage
That you to day promis'd to tell me of?

Baſ. Tis not unknowne to you Anthonio
How much I have diſabled mine eſtate,
By ſomething ſhewing a more ſwelling port
Then my faint meanes would grant continuance:
Nor doe I now make mone to be abridg'd
From ſuch a noble rate, but my cheife care
Is to come fairely off from the great debts
Wherein my time ſomething too prodigall
Hath left me gag'd: to you Anthonio
I owe the moſt in mony, and in love,
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburthen all my plots and purpoſes,
How to get cleere of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you good Baſſanio let me know it,
And if it ſtand as you your ſelfe ſtill doe,
Within the eye of honour, be aſſur'd
My purſe, my perſon, my extreameſt meanes
Lye all unlock'd to your occaſions.

Baſſ. In my ſchoole dayes, when I had loſt one ſhaft
I ſhot his fellow of the ſelfeſame flight
The ſelfeſame way, with more adviſed watch
To find the other forth, and by adventuring both,
I oft found both. I urge this child-hood prooſe,
Becauſe what followes is pure innocence.
I owe you much, and like a willfull youth,
That which I owe is loſt: but if you pleaſe
To ſhoote another arrow that ſelfe way
Which you did ſhoot the firſt, I doe not doubt,
As I will watch the ayme: Or to find both,
Or bring your latter hazard backe againe,
And thankfully reſt debter for the firſt.

Ant. You know me well, and herein ſpend but time
To wind about my love with circumſtance,
And out of doubt you doe to me more wrong
In making queſtion of my uttermoſt,
Than if you had made waſte of all I have:
Then doe but ſay to me what I ſhould doe
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am preſt unto it: therefore ſpeake.

Baſſ. In Belmont is a Lady richly left,
And ſhe is faire, and fairer then that word,
Of wondrous vertues: ſometimes from her eyes,
I did receive faire ſpeechleſſe meſſages:
Her name is Portia, nothing undervallewd
To Cato's daughter, Brutus Portia,
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the foure windes blow in from every coaſt
Renowned ſutors, and her ſunny lockes
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece,
Which makes her ſeat of Belmont Cholchos ſtrond,
And many Iaſons come in queſt of her.
O my Anthonio, had I but the meanes
To hold a rivall place with one of them,
I have a mind preſages me ſuch thrift,
That I ſhould queſtionleſſe be fortunate.

Ant. Thou knowſt that all my fortunes are at ſea,
Neither have I mony, nor commdity
To raiſe a preſent ſumme, therefore goe forth
Try what my credit can in Venice doe,
That ſhall be rackt even to the uttermoſt,
To furniſh thee to Belmont to faire Portia.
Goe preſently enquire, and ſo will I
Where money is, and I no queſtion make
To have it of my truſt, or for my ſake. Exeunt.

Enter Portia with her waiting woman Neriſſa.

Porti. By my troth Nerriſſa, my little body is a weary of this great world.

Ner. You would be, ſweet Madam, if your miſeries were in the ſame abundance as your good fortunes are: and yet for ought I ſee, they are as ſicke that ſurfet with too much, as they that ſtarve with nothing; it is no ſmall happineſſe therefore to be ſeated in the meane, ſuperfluity comes ſooner by white haires, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good ſentences, and well pronounc'd.

Ner. They would be better if well followed.

Por. If to doe were as eaſie as to know what were good to doe, Chappels had beene Churches, and poore mens cottages Princes Pallaces: it is a good Divine that followes his owne inſtructions; I can eaſier teach twenty what were good to be done, then be one of the twenty to follow mine owne teaching: the braine may deviſe lawes for the blood, but a hot temper leapes ore a cold decree, ſuch a hare is madneſſe the youth, to ſkip ore the meſhes of good counſaile the cripple; but this reaſon is not in faſhion to chooſe me a husband: O me, the word chooſe, I may neither chooſe whom I would, nor refuſe whom I diſlike, ſo is the will of a living daughter curb'd by the will of a dead father: is it not hard Nerriſſa, that I cannot chooſe one, nor refuſe none?

Ner. Your father was ever vertuous, and holy men at their death have good inſpirations, therefore the lottery that he hath deviſed in theſe three cheſts of Gold, Silver, and Lead, whereof who chooſes his meaning, chooſes

chooſes you, will no doubt never be choſen by any rightly, but one who you ſhall rightly love: but what warmth is there in your affection towards any of theſe Princely ſuters that are already come?

Por. I pray thee over-name them, and as thou nameſt them, I will deſcribe them, and according to my deſcription levell at my affection.

Ner. Firſt there is the Neapolitane Prince.

Por. I that's a colt indeed, for he doth nothing but talke of his horſe, and he makes it a great appropriation to his owne good parts that he can ſhoo him himſelfe: I am much afraid my Lady his mother plaid falſe with a Smyth.

Ner. Then is there the County Palentine.

Por. He doth nothing but frowne (as who ſhould ſay, and you will not have me, chooſe: he heares merry tales and ſmiles not, I feare he will prove the weeping Philoſopher when he growes old, being ſo full of unmannerly ſadneſſe in his youth.) I had rather to be married to a deaths head with a bone in his mouth, then to either of theſe: God defend me from theſe two.

Ner. How ſay you by the French Lord, Mounſier Le Bonne?

Pro. God made him, and therefore let him paſſe for a man, in truth I know it is ſinne to be a mocker, but he! why he hath a horſe better then the Neapolitans, a better bad habite of frowning then the Count Palentine, he is every man in no man, if a Tarſell ſing, he fals ſtraight a capring, he will fence with his owne ſhadow. If I ſhould marry him, I ſhould marry twenty husbands: if he would deſpiſe me, I would forgive him, for if he love me to madneſſe, I ſhould never requite him.

Ner. What ſay you then to Fauconbridge, the yong Baron of England?

Por. You know I ſay nothing to him, for he underſtands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latine, French, nor Italian, and you will come into the Court and ſweare that I have a poore penny-worth in the Engliſh: he is a proper mans picture, but alas who can converſe with a dumbe ſhow? how odly he is ſuited, I thinke he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hoſe in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour every where.

Ner. What thinke you of the other Lord his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a boxe of the eare of the Engliſhman, and ſworne he would pay him againe when he was able. I thinke the Frenchman became his ſurety, and ſeald under for another.

Ner. How like you the yong Germaine, the Duke of Saxonies Nephew?

Por. Very vildely in the morning when he is ſober, and moſt vildely in the afternoone when he is drunke: when he is beſt, he is a little worſe then a man, and when he is worſt, he is little better then a beaſt: and the worſt fall that ever fell, I hope I ſhall make ſhift to goe without him.

Ner. If he ſhould offer to chooſe, and chooſe the right Caſket, you ſhould refuſe to performe your Fathers will, if you ſhould refuſe to accept him.

Por. Therefore for feare of the worſt, I pray thee ſet a deepe glaſſe of Reiniſh-wine on the contrary Caſket, for if the divell be within, and that temptation without, I know he will chooſe it. I will doe any thing Nerriſſa ere I will be married to a ſpunge.

Ner. You need not feare Lady the having any of theſe Lords, they have acquainted me with their determinations, which is indeed to returne to their home, and to trouble you with no more ſuite, unleſſe you may be wone by ſome other ſort then you Fathers impoſition, depending on the Caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibilla, I will dye as chaſte as Diana: unleſſe I be obtained by the manner of my Fathers will: I am glad this parcell of wooers are ſo reaſonable, for there is not one among them but I doate on his very abſence: and I wiſh them a faire departure.

Ner. Doe you not remember Lady in your Fathers time, a Venetian, a Scholler and a Souldier that came hither in company of the Marqueſſe of Mountferrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Baſſanio, as I thinke, ſo was hee call'd.

Ner. True Madam, he of all the men that ever my fooliſh eyes look'd upon, was the beſt deſerving a faire Lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praiſe.

Enter a Serving-man.

Ser. The foure ſtrangers ſeeke you Madam to take their leave: and there is a fore-runner come from a fift, the Prince of Morocco, who brings word the Prince his Maſter will be here to night.

Por. If I could bid the fift welcome with ſo good heart as I can bid the other foure farewell, I ſhould be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a Saint, and the complexion of a divell, I had rather he ſhould ſhrive me then wive me. Come Nerriſſa, ſirra goe before; whiles we ſhut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the doore. Exeunt.

Enter Baſſanio with Shylocke the Iew.

Shy. Three thouſand ducates, well.

Baſſ. I ſir, for three months.

Shy. For three mouths, well.

Baſſ. For the which, as I told you,
Anthonio ſhall be bound.

Shy. Anthonio ſhall become bound, well.

Baſſ. May you ſted me? Will you pleaſure me?
Shall I know your anſwer.

Shy. Three thouſand ducats for three moneths,
And Anthonio bound.

Baſſ. Your anſwer to that.

Shy. Anthonio is a good man.

Baſſ. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary.

Shy. No, no, no, no, no: my meaning in ſaying he is a good man, is to have you underſtand me that he is ſufficient, yet his meanes are in ſuppoſition: he hath an Argoſie bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies, I underſtand moreover upon the Ryalto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures hee hath ſquandred abroad, but ſhips are but boords, Saylers but men, there be land rats, and water rats, water theeves, and land theeves, I meane Pyrats, and then there is the perrill of waters, windes, and rocks: the man is notwithſtanding ſufficient, three thouſand ducates, I thinke I may take his bond.

Baſ. Be aſſured you may.

Iew. I will be aſſured I may: and that I may bee aſſured, I will bethinke mee, may I ſpeake with Anthonio.

Baſ. If it pleaſe you to dine with us.

Iew. Yes, to ſmell porke, to eate of the habitation which your Prophet the Nazarite conjured the divell into: I will buy with you, ſell with you, talke with you, walke with you, and ſo following: but I will not eate with you, drinke with you, nor pray with you.
What newes on the Ryalto, who is he comes here?

Enter Anthonio.

Baſ. This is ſignior Anthonio.

Iew. How like a fawning publican he lookes.
I hate him for he is a Chriſtian:
But more, for that in low ſimplicity
He lends out money gratis, and brings downe
The rate of uſance here with us in Venice,
If I can catch him once upon the hip,
I will feede fat the ancient grudge I beare him.
He hates our ſacred Nation, and he railes
Even there were Merchants moſt doe congregate
On me, my bargaines, and my well-worne thrift,
Which he calls interreſt: Curſed be my Trybe
If I forgive him.

Baſ. Shylocke, doe you heare.

Shy. I am debating of my preſent ſtore,
And by the neere geſſe of my memory
I cannot inſtantly raiſe up the groſſe
Of full three thouſand ducats: what of that?
Tuball a wealthy Hebrew of my Tribe
Will furniſh me; but ſoft, how many months
Doe you deſire? Reſt you faire good ſignior,
Your worſhip was the laſt man in our mouthes.

Anth. Shylocke, albeit I neither lend nor borrow
By taking, nor by giving of exceſſe,
Yet to ſupply the ripe wants of my friend,
Ile breake a cuſtome: is he yet poſſeſt
How much he would?

Shy. I, I, three thouſand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot, three months, you told me ſo.
Well then, your bond: and let me ſee, but heare you,
Me thoughts you ſaid, you neither lend nor borrow
Vpon advantage.

Anth. I doe never uſe it.

Shy. When Iacob graz'd his Vncle Labans ſheepe,
This Iacob from our holy Abram was
(As his wiſe mother wrought in his behalfe)
The third poſſeſſer; I, he was the third.

Ant. And what of him, did he take interreſt?

Shy. No, not take intereſt, not as you would ſay
Directly intereſt, marke what Iacob did,
When Laban and himſelfe were comprimyz'd
That all the eanelings which were ſtreakt and pied
Should fall as Iacobs hier, the Ewes being rancke,
In end of Autumne turned to the Rammes,
And when the worke of generation was
Betweene theſe woolly breeders in the act,
The skilfull ſhepheard pil'd me certaine wands,
And in the dooing of the deed of kind,
He ſtucke them up before the fulſome Ewes,
Who then conceaving, did in eaning time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and thoſe were Iacobs.
This was a way to thrive, and he was bleſt:
And thrift is bleſſing if men ſteale it not.

Anth. This was a venture ſir that Iacob ſerv'd for,
A thing not in his power to bring to paſſe,
But ſway'd and faſhion'd by the hand of heaven.
Was this inſerted to make interreſt good?
Or is your Gold and Silver Ewes and Rams?

Shy. I cannot tell, I make it breeds as faſt,
But note me ſignior.

Ant. Marke you this Baſſanio,
The divell can cite Scripture for his purpoſe,
An evill ſoule producing holy witneſſe,
Is like a villaine with a ſmiling cheeke,
A goodly apple rotten at the heart.
O what a goodly outſide falſehood hath.

Shy. Three thouſand ducats, 'tis a good round ſumme.
Three months from twelve, then let me ſee the rate.

Ant. Well Shylocke, ſhall we be beholding to you?

Shy. Signior Anthonio, many a time and oft
In the Ryalto you have rated me
About my monyes and my uſances:
Still have I borne it with a patient ſhrug,
(For ſuffrance is the badge of all our Tribe.
You call me misbeleever, cut-throate dog,
And ſpet upon my Iewiſh gaberdine,
And all for uſe of that which is mine owne.
Well then, it now appeares you need my helpe:
Goe to then, you come to me, and you ſay,
Shylocke, we would have moneyes, you ſay ſo:
You that did voide your rheume upon my beard,
And foote me as you ſpurne a ſtranger curre
Over your threſhold, moneyes is your ſuite.
What ſhould I ſay to you? Should I not ſay,
Hath a dog money? is it poſſible
A curre ſhould lend three thouſand ducats? or Shall I bend low, and in a bond-mans key
With bated breath, and whiſpring humbleneſſe,
Say this: Faire ſir, you ſpet on me on Wedneſday laſt;
Your ſpurn'd me ſuch a day; another time
You cald me dog: and for theſe curteſies
Ile lend you thus much moneyes.

Ant. I am as like to call thee ſo againe,
To ſpet on thee againe, to ſpurne thee too.
If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friend, for when did friendſhip take
A breed of barraine mettall of his friend?
But lend it rather to thine enemye,
Who if he breake, thou maiſt with better face
Exact the penalties.

Shy. Why looke you how you ſtorme,
I would be friends with you, and have your love,
Forget the ſhames that you have ſtained me with,
Supplie your preſent wants, and take no doite
Of uſance for my monyes, and youle not heare me,
This is kind I offer.

Baſ. This were kindneſſe.

Shy. This kindneſſe will I ſhowe,
Goe with me to a Notary, ſeale me there
Your ſingle bond, and in a merry ſport
If you repay me not ou ſuch a day,
In ſuch a place, ſuch ſum or ſums as are
Expreſt in the condition, let the forfeite
Be nominated for an equall pound
Of your faire fleſh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body it pleaſeth me.

Ant. Content infaith, Ile ſeale to ſuch a bond,
And ſay there is much kindneſſe in the Iew.

Baſ. You ſhall not ſeale to ſuch a bond for me,
Ile rather dwell in my neceſſity.
Ant. Why feare not man, I will not forfeite it,
Within theſe two months, that's a month before
This bond expires, I doe expect returne
Of thrice three times the valew of this bond.
Shy. O father Abram, what theſe Chriſtians are,
Whoſe owne hard dealing teaches them ſuſpect
The thoughts of others: Pray you tell me this,
If he ſhould breake his day, what ſhould I gaine
By the exaction of the forfeiture?
A pound of mans fleſh taken from a man,
Is not ſo eſtimable, profitable neither
As fleſh of Muttons, Beefes, or Goates. I ſay
To buy his favour, I extend this friendſhip,
If he will take it, ſo: if not adiew,
And for my love I pray you wrong me not.
Ant. Yes Shylocke, I will ſeale unto this bond.
Shy. Then meete me forthwith at the Notaries,
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will goe and purſe the ducats ſtraite:
See to my houſe left in the fearefull guard
Of an unthrifty knave: and preſently
Ile be with you. Exit.
Ant. Hye thee gentle Iew. This Hebrew will turne
Chriſtian, he growes kind.
Baſ. I like not faire tearmes and, a villaines mind.
Ant. Come on, in this there can be no diſmay,
My Shippes come home a month before the day.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Morochius a tawny Moore all white, and three or foure followers accordingly, with Portia, Nerriſſa, and their traine.
Flo. Cornets.

Mor. Miſlike me not for my complexion,
The ſhadowed liverie of the burniſht ſunne,
To whom I am a neighbour, and neere bred.
Bring me the faireſt creature Northward borne,
Where Phœbus fire ſcarce thawes the yſicles,
And let us make inciſion for your love,
To prove whoſe blood is reddeſt, his or mine.
I tell thee Lady this aſpect of mine
Hath feard the valiant, (by my love I ſweare)
The beſt regarded Virgins of our Clyme
Have lov'd it too: I would not change this hue,
Except to ſteale your thoughts my gentle Queene.
Por. In tearmes of choiſe I am not ſoly led
By nice direction of a maidens eyes;
Beſides, the lottry of my deſteny
Bars me the right of voluntary chooſing:
But if my father had not ſcanted me,
And hedg'd me by his wit to yeeld my ſelfe
His wife, who wins me by that meanes I told you,
Your ſelfe (renowned Prince) then ſtood as faire
As any commer I have look'd on yet
For my affection.
Mor. Even for that I thanke you,
Therefore I pray you leade me to the Caskets
To try my fortune: By this Symitar
That ſlew the Sophy, and a Perſian Prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Solyman,
I would ore-ſtare the ſterneſt eyes that looke:
Out-brave the heart moſt daring on the earth:
Plucke the yong ſucking Cubs from the ſhe Beare,
Yea, mocke the Lion when he rores for prey
To win the Lady. But alas the while,
If Hercules and Lychas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turne by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his rage,
And ſo may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miſſe that which one unworthier may attaine,
And dye with grieving.
Port. You muſt take your chance,
And either not attempt to chooſe at all,
Or ſweare before you chooſe, if you chooſe wrong
Never to ſpeake to Lady afterward
In way of marriage, therefor be advis'd.
Mor. Nor will not, come bring me unto my chance.
Por. Firſt forward to the temple, after dinner
Your hazard ſhall be made.
Mor. Good fortune then, Cornets.
To make me bleſt or curſed'ſt among men. Exeunt.

Enter the Clowne alone.

Clo. Certainely, my conſcience will ſerve me to runne from this Iew my Maſter: the fiend is at mine elbow, and tempts me, ſaying to me, Iobbe, Launcelet Iobbe, good Launcelet, or good Iobbe, or good Launcelet Iobbe, uſe your legs, take the ſtart, runne away: my conſcience ſayes no; take heed honeſt Launcelet, take heed honeſt Iobbe, or as afore-ſaid honeſt Launcelet Iobbe, doe not runne, ſcorne running with thy heeles; well, the moſt couragious fiend bids me packe, fia ſayes the fiend, away ſayes the fiend, for the heavens rouſe up a brave minde ſayes the fiend, and runne; well, my conſcience hanging about the necke of my heart, ſayes very wiſely to me: my honeſt friend Launcelet, being an honeſt mans ſonne, or rather an honeſt womans ſonne, for indeed my father did ſometing ſmacke, ſomething grow too; he had a kind of taſte; wel, my conſcience ſayes Launcelet bouge not, bouge ſayes the fiend, bouge not ſayes my conſcience, conſcience ſay I you counſaile well, fiend ſay I you counſaile well, to be rul'd by my conſcience I ſhould ſtay with the Iew my Maſter, who (God bleſſe the marke) is a kind of divell; and to runne away from the Iew I ſhould be ruled by the fiend, who ſaving your reverence is the divell himſelfe: certainely the Iew is the very divell incarnation, and in my conſcience, my conſcience is a kind of hard conſcience, to offer to counſaile me to ſtay with the Iew; the fiend gives the more friendly counſaile: I will runne fiend, my heeles are at your commandement, I will runne.

Enter old Gobbo with a Baſket.

Gob. Maſter yong-man, you I pray you, which is the way to Maſter Iewes?

Laun. O heavens, this is my true begotten father, who being more then ſand-blind, high gravell blind, knowes me not, I will try confuſions with him.

Gob. Maiſter yong Gentleman, I pray you which is the way to Maſter Iewes.

Laun. Turne upon your right hand at the next turning, but at the next turning of all on your left; marry at the very next turning, turne of no hand, but turne downe indirectly to the Iewes houſe.

Gob. Be Gods ſonties 'twill be a hard way to hit, can you tell me whether one Launcelet that dwells with him, dwell with him or no.

Laun. Talke you of yong Maſter Launcelet, marke me now, now will I raiſe the waters; talke you of yong Maſter Launcelet?

Gob. No Maſter ſir, but a poore mans ſonne; his Father though I ſay't is an honeſt exceeding poore man, and God be thanked well to live.

Laun. Well, let his Father be what a will, we talke of yong Maſter Launcelet.

Gob. Your worſhips friend and Launcelet.

Laun. But I pray you ergo old man, ergo I beſeech you, talke you of yong Maſter Launcelet.

Gob. Of Launcelet, ant pleaſe your maſterſhip.

Laun. Ergo Maſter Launcelet, talke not of maſter Launcelet Father, for the yong gentleman according to fates and deſtinies, and ſuch odde ſayings, the ſiſters three, and ſuch branches of learning, in indeed deceaſed, or as you would ſay in plaine tearmes, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry God forbid, the boy was the very ſtaffe of my age, my very prop.

Laun. Doe I looke like a cudgell or a hovell-poſt, a ſtaffe or a prop: doe you know me Father.

Gob. Alacke the day, I know you not yong Gentleman, but I pray you tell me, is my boy God reſt his ſoule alive or dead.

Laun. Doe you not know me Father,

Gob. Alacke ſir I am ſand blind, I know you not.

Laun. Nay, indeed if you had your eyes you might faile of the knowing me: it is a wiſe Father that knowes his owne child. Well, old man, I wil tell you news of your ſonne, give me your bleſſing, truth will come to light, murder cannot be hid long, a mans ſonne may, but in the end truth will not.

Gob. Pray you ſir ſtand up, I am ſure you are not Launcelet my boy.

Laun. Pray you let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your bleſſing: I am Launcelet your boy that was your ſonne that is, your child that ſhall be.

Gob. I cannot thinke you are my ſonne.

Laun. I know not what I ſhall thinke of that: but I am Launcelet the Iewes man, and I am ſure Margery your wife is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery indeed, Ile be ſworne if thou be Launcelet, thou art mine owne fleſh and blood: Lord worſhipt might he be, what a beard haſt thou got; thou haſt got more haire on thy chin, then Dobbin my philhorſe has on his taile.

Laun. It ſhould ſeeme then that Dobbins taile growes backeward. I am ſure he had more haire of his taile then I have of my face when I laſt ſaw him.

Gob. Lord how art thou chang'd: how dooſt thou and thy Maſter agree, I have brought him a preſent; how gree you now?

Laun. Well, well, but for mine owne part, as I have ſet up my reſt to run away, ſo I will not reſt till I have run ſome ground; my Maſter's a very Iew, give him a preſent, give him a halter, I am famiſht in his ſervice. You may tell every finger I have with my ribs: father I am glad you are come, give me your preſent to one Maſter Baſſanio, who indeed gives rare new Liveries, if I ſerve not him, I will runne as farre as God has any ground. O rare fortune, here comes the man, to him Father, for I am a Iew if I ſerve the Iew any longer.

Enter Baſſanio with a follower or two.

Baſſa. You may doe ſo, but let it be ſo haſted that ſupper be ready at the fartheſt by five of the clocke: ſee theſe Letters delivered, put the Liveries to making, and deſire Gratiano to come anone to my lodging.

Laun. To him Father.

Gob. God bleſſe your worſhip.

Baſſ. Gramercy, would'ſt thou ought with me.

Gob. Here's my ſonne ſir, a poore boy.

Laun. Not a poore boy ſir, but the rich Iewes man that would ſir as my Father ſhall ſpecifie.

Gob. He hath a great infection ſir, as one would ſay to ſerve.

Laun. Indeed the ſhort and the long is, I ſerve the Iew, and have a deſire as my Father ſhall ſpecifie.

Gob. His Maſter and he (ſaving your worſhips reverence) are ſcarce catercoſins.

Laun. To be briefe, the very truth is, that the Iew having done me wrong, doth cauſe me as my Father being I hope an old man ſhall frutifie unto you.

Gob. I have here a diſh of Doves that I would beſtow upon your worſnip, and my ſuite is.

Laun. In very briefe, the ſuite is impertinent to my ſelfe, as your worſhip ſhall know by this honeſt old man, and though I ſay it, though old man, yet poore man my Father.

Baſſ. One ſpeake for both, what would you?

Laun. Serve you ſir.

Gob. That is the very defect of the matter ſir.

Baſſ. I know thee well, thou haſt obtain'd thy ſuite,
Shylocke thy Maſter ſpoke with me this day,
And hath perfer'd thee, if it be preferment
To leave a rich Iewes ſervice, to become
The follower of ſo poore a Gentleman.

Clo. The old proverbe is very well parted betweene my Maſter Shylocke and you ſir, you have the grace of God ſir, and he hath enough.

Baſſ. Thou ſpeak'ſt it well; goe Father with thy ſonne,
Take leave of thy old Maſter, and enquire
My lodging out, give him a Livery
More garded then his fellowes: ſee it done.

Clo. Father in, I cannot get a ſervice, no, I have ne're a tongue in my head, well: if any man in Italy have a fairer table which doth offer to ſweare upon a booke, I ſhall have good fortune; goe too, here's a ſimple line of life, here's a ſmall trifle of wives, alas, fifteene wives is nothing, a leven widdowes and nine maides is a ſimple comming in for one man, and then to ſcape drowning thrice, and to be in perill of my life with the edge of a featherbed, here are ſimple ſcapes: well, if Fortune be a woman, ſhe's a good wench for this gere: Father come, Ile take my leave of the Iew in the twinkling.

Exit Clowne.

Baſſ. I pray thee good Leonardo thinke on this,
Theſe things being bought and orderly beſtowed
Returne in haſte, for I doe feaſt to night
My beſt eſteemd acquaintance, hie thee gon.

Leon. My beſt endevours ſhall be done herein.

Exit Leonardo.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where's your Maſter.

Leon. Yonder ſir he walkes.
Gra. Signior Baſſanio.
Baſ. Gratiano.
Gra. I have a ſuite to you.
Baſ. You have obtain'd it.
Gra. You muſt not denie me, I muſt go with you to Belmont.
Baſ. Why then you muſt: but heare thee Gratiano,
Thou art too wilde, too rude, and bold of voice,
Parts that become thee happily enough,
And in ſuch eyes as ours appeare not faults;
But where they are not knowne, why there they ſhow
Something too liberall, pray thee take paine
To allay with ſome cold drops of modeſtie
Thy skipping ſpirit, leaſt through thy wilde behauiour
I be miſconſterd in the place I go to,
And looſe my hopes.
Gra. Signior Baſſanio, heare me,
If I do not put on a ſober habite,
Talke with reſpect, and ſweare but now and then,
Weare prayer bookes in my pocket, looke demurely,
Nay more, while grace is ſaying, hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and ſigh and ſay Amen:
Vſe all the obſervance of civility
Like one well ſtudied in a ſad oſtent
To pleaſe his Grandam, never truſt me more.
Baſ. Well, we ſhall ſee your bearing.
Gra. Nay but I barre to night, you ſhall not gage me
By what we do to night.
Baſ. No that were pitty,
I would intreate you rather to put on
Your boldeſt ſuite of mirth, for we have friends
That purpoſe merriment: but fare you well,
I have ſome buſineſſe.
Gra. And I muſt to Lorenzo and the reſt,
But we will viſite you at ſupper time. Exeunt

Enter Ieſſica and the Clowne.

Ieſ. I am ſorry thou wilt leave my Father ſo,
Our houſe is hell, and thou a merry divell
Didſt rob it of ſome taſte of tediousneſſe;
But fare thee well, there is a ducat for thee,
And Lancelet, ſoone at ſupper ſhalt thou ſee
Lorenzo, who is thy new Maiſters gueſt,
Give him this Letter, do it ſecretly,
And ſo farewell: I would not have my Father
See mee talke with thee.
Clo. Adue, teares exhibit my tongue, moſt beautifull Pagan, moſt ſweete Iew, if a Chriſtian did not play the knave and get thee, I am much deceived; but adue, theſe fooliſh drops do ſomewhat drowne my manly ſpirit: adue. Exit.
Ieſ. Farewell good Lancelet.
Alacke, what hainous ſinne is it in me
To be aſhamed to be my Fathers childe,
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners: O Lorenzo,
If thou keepe promiſe I ſhall end this ſtriſe,
Become a Chriſtian, and thy loving wife.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salarino, and Solania

Lo. Nay, we will ſlinke away in ſupper time,
Diſguiſe us at my lodging, and returne all in an houre.
Gra. We have not made good preparation.
Sal. We have not ſpoke us yet of Torch-bearers.
Sol. 'Tis vile vnleſſe it may be quaintly ordered,
And better in my minde not vndertooke.
Lor. 'Tis now but foure of clock, we have two houres
To furniſh us; friend Lancelet what's the newes?

Enter Lancelet with a Letter.

Lan. And it ſhall pleaſe you to breake up this, it ſhall ſeeme to ſignifie.
Lo. I know the hand, in faith 'tis a faire hand,
And whither then the paper it writ on,
I the faire hand that writ.
Gra. Love-newes in faith.
La. By your leave ſir.
Lor. Whither goeſt thou?
La. Marry ſir to bid my old Maiſter the Iew to ſup to night with my new Maiſter the Chriſtian.
Lor. Hold here, take this, tell gentle Ieſſica
I will not faile her, ſpeake it privately:
Go Gentlemen, will you prepare you for this Maske to night?
I am provided of a Torch-bearer. Exit. Clowne.
Sal. I marry, ile be gone about it ſtrait.
Sol. And ſo will I.
Lor. Meete me and Gratiano at Gratianos lodging
Some houre hence.
Sal. 'Tis good wee do ſo. Exit.
Gra. Was not that Letter from faire Ieſſica?
Lo. I muſt needes tell thee all, ſhe hath directed
How I ſhall take her from her Fathers houſe,
What gold and iewels ſhe is furniſht with,
What Pages ſuite ſhe hath in readineſſe:
If ere the Iew her Father come to heaven,
It will be for his gentle daughters ſake;
And never dare miſfortune croſſe her foote,
Vnleſſe ſhe do it vnder this excuſe,
That ſhe is iſſue to a faithleſſe Iew;
Come go with me, peruſe this as thou goeſt,
Faire Ieſſica ſhall be my Torch-bearer. Exit.

Enter Iew, and his man that was the Clowne.

Iew. Well, thou ſhall ſee, thy eyes ſhall be thy judge,
The difference of old Shylocke and Baſſanio;
What Ieſſica, thou ſhalt not gurmandize
As thou haſt done with me: what Ieſſica?
And ſleepe, and ſnore, and rend apparrell out.
Why Ieſſica I ſay.
Clo. Why Ieſſica.
Shy. Who bids thee call? I do not bid thee call.
Clo. Your worſhip was wont to tell me
I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Ieſſica.

Ieſ. Call you? what is your will?
Shy. I am bid forth to ſupper Ieſſica,
There are my Keyes: but wherefore ſhould I go?
I am not bid for love, they flatter me,
But yet Ile go in hate, to feede upon
The prodigall Chriſtian. Ieſſica my girle,
Looke to my houſe, I am right loath to go,
There is ſome ill a bruing towards my reſt,
For I did dreame of money bags to night.
Clo. I beſeech you ſir go, my yong Maiſter
Doth expect your reproach.
Shy. So do I his.
Clo. And they have conſpired together, I will not ſay you ſhall ſee a Maske, but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my noſe fell a bleeding on blacke monday laſt, laſt, at ſix a clocke ith morning, falling out that yeere on aſh wenſday was foure yeere in th'afternoone.

Shy. What are their maskes? heare you me Ieſſica,
Lock up my doores, and when you heare the drum
And the vile ſquealing of the wry-neckt Fiſe,
Clamber not you up to the caſements then,
Nor thruſt your head into the publicke ſtreete
To gaze on Chriſtian fooles with varniſht faces:
But ſtop my houſes eares, I meane my caſements,
Let not the ſound of ſhallow fopperie enter
My ſober houſe. By Iacobs ſtaffe I ſweare,
I have no minde of feaſting forth to night:
But I will go; go you before me ſirra,
Say I will come.
Clow. I will go before ſir.
Miſtris looke out at window for all this;
There will come a Chriſtian by,
Will be worth a Iewes eye.
Shy. What ſaies that foole of Hagars off-ſpring? ha.
Ieſ. His words were farewell miſtris, nothing elſe.
Shy. The patch is kinde enough, but a huge feeder:
Snaile-ſlow in profit, but ſleepes by day
More then the wilde-cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him, and part with him
To one that I would have him helpe to waſte
His borrowed purſe. Well Ieſsica go in,
Perhaps I will returne immediately;
Doe as I bid you, ſhut dores after you, faſt binde, faſt finde,
A proverbe never ſtale in thrifty minde. Exit.
Ieſ. Farewell, and if my fortune be not croſt,
I have a Father, you a daughter loſt. Exit.

Enter the Maskers, Gratiano and Salino.

Gra. This is the penthouſe under which Lorenzo
Deſired us to make a ſtand.
Sal. His houre is almoſt paſt.
Gra. And it is mervaile he out-dwels his houre,
For lovers ever run before the clocke.
Sal. O ten times faſter Venus Pidgions flye
To ſteale loves bonds new made, then they are wont
To keepe obliged faith unforfaited.
Gra. That ever holds, who riſeth from a feaſt
With that keene appetite that he ſits downe?
Where is the horſe that doth untread againe
His tedious meaſures with the unbated fire,
That he did pace them firſt: all things that are,
Are with more ſpirit chaſed then enjoy'd.
How like a yonger or a prodigall
The skarfed barke puts from her native bay,
Hug'd and embraced by the ſtrumpet winde:
How like a prodigall doth ſhe returne
With over-wither'd ribs and ragged ſailes,
Leane, rent, and begger'd by the ſtrumpet winde?

Enter Lorenzo.

Salino. Heere comes Lorenzo, more of this hereafter.
Loren. Sweete friends, your patience for my long abode,
Not I, but my affaires have made you wait:
When you ſhall pleaſe to play the theeves for wives
Ile watch as long for you then: approach
Here dwels my father Iew. Hoa, who's within?

Ieſsica above.

Ieſ. Who are you? tell me for more certainty,
Albeit Ile ſweare that I do know your tongue.
Lor. Lorenzo, and thy Love.
Ieſ. Lorenzo certaine, and my love indeed,
For who love I ſo much? and now who knowes
But you Lorenzo, whether I am yours?
Lo. Heaven and thy thoughts are witneſs that thou art.
Ieſ. Heere, catch this casket, it is worth the paines,
I am glad 'tis night, you do not looke on me,
For I am much aſham'd of my exchange:
But love is blinde, and lovers cannot ſee
The pretty follies that themſelves commit,
For if they could, Cupid himſelfe would bluſh
To ſee me thus transformed to a boy.
Lor. Deſcend, for you muſt be my torch-bearer.
Ieſ. What, muſt I hold a Candle to my ſhame?
They in themſelves goodſooth are too too light.
Why, 'tis an office of diſcovery Love,
And I ſhould be obſcur'd.
Lor. So you are ſweet,
Even in the lovely garniſh of a boy: but come at once,
For the cloſe night doth play the run-away,
And we are ſtaid for at Baſſanio's feaſt.
Ieſ. I will make faſt the doores and guild my ſelfe
With ſome more ducats, and be with you ſtraight.
Gra. Now by my hood, a gentile, and no Iew.
Lor. Beſhrew me but I love her heartily.
For ſhe is wiſe, if I can judge of her,
And faire ſhe is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true ſhe is, as ſhe hath prov'd her ſelfe:
And therefore like her ſelfe, wiſe, faire, and true,
Shall ſhe be placed in my conſtant ſoule.

Enter Ieſsica.

What, art thou come? on gentlemen, away,
Our masking mates by this time for us ſtay. Exit.

Enter Anthonio.

Ant. Who's there?
Gra. Signior Anthonio.
Ant. Fie, fie, Gratiano, where are all the reſt?
'Tis nine a clocke, our friends all ſtay for you,
No maske to night, the winde is come about,
Baſſanio preſently will go aboord,
I have ſent twenty out to ſeeke for you.
Gra. I am glad on't, I deſire no more delight
Then to be under ſaile, and gone to night. Exeunt.

Enter Portia with Morrocho, and both their traines.

Por. Go, draw aſide the curtaines, and diſcover
The ſeverall Caskets to this noble Prince:
Now make your choyſe.
Mor. The firſt of gold, who this inſcription beares,
Who chooſeth me, ſhall gaine what men deſire.
The ſecond ſilver, which this promiſe carries,
Who chooſeth me, ſhall get as much as he deſerves.
This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt,
Who chooſeth me, muſt give and hazard all he hath.
How ſhall I know if I do chooſe the right?

Po. The

How ſhall I know if do chooſe the right.

Por. The one of them containes my picture Prince,
If you chooſe that, then I am yours withall.

Mor. Some God direct my judgement, let me ſee,
I will ſurvay the inſcriptions, backe againe:
What ſayes this leaden casket?
Who chooſeth me, muſt give and hazard all he hath.
Muſt give, for what? for lead, hazard for lead?
This casket threatens men that hazard all,
Do it in hope of faire advantages:
A golden minde ſtoopes not to ſhowes of droſſe,
Ile then nor give nor hazard ought for lead.
What ſaies the Silver with her virgin hue?
Who chooſeth me, ſhall get as much as he deſerves.
As much as he deſerves; pauſe there Morocho,
And weigh thy value with an even hand,
If thou beeſt rated by thy eſtimation
Thou dooſt deſerve enough, and yet enough
May not extend ſo farre as to the Lady:
And yet to be afeard of my deſerving,
Were but a weake diſabling of my ſelfe.
As much as I deſerve, why that's the Lady.
I do in birth deſerve her, and in fortunes,
In graces, and in qualities of breeding:
But more then theſe, in love I do deſerve.
What if I ſtrai'd no farther, but choſe here?
Let's ſee once more this ſaying grav'd in gold.
Who chooſeth me ſhall gaine what many men deſire:
Why that's the Lady, all the world deſires her:
From the foure corners of the earth they come
To kiſſe this ſhrine, this mortall breathing Saint.
The Hircanian deſerts, and the vaſte wildes
Of wide Arabia are as throughfares now
For Princes to come view faire Portia.
The waterie Kingdome, whoſe ambitious head
Spets in the face of heaven, is no barre
To ſtop the fortaine ſpirits, but they come
As ore a brooke to ſee faire Portia.
One of theſe three containes her heavenly picture.
Is't like that Lead containes her? twere damnation
To thinke ſo baſe a thought, it were too groſſe
To rib her ſearecloath in the obſcure grave:
Or ſhall I thinke in Silver ſhe's immur'd
Being ten times vndervalued to tride gold;
O ſinfull thought, never ſo rich a Iem
Was ſet in worſe then gold! They have in England
A coyne that beares the figure of an Angell
Stampt in gold, but that's inſculpt upon:
But here an Angell in a golden bed
Lies all within. Deliver me the key;
Here do I chooſe, and thrive I as I may.

Por. There take it Prince, and if my forme lye there
Then I am yours.

Mor. O hell! what have we here, a carrion death,
Within whoſe empty eye there is a written ſcroule;

All that gliſters is not gold,
Often have you heard that told;
Many a man his life hath ſold
But my outſide to behold;
Guilded timber do wormes infold:
Had you beene as wiſe as bold,
Yong in limbs, in judgement old,
Your anſwere had not beene inſcrold
Fareyouwell, your ſuite is cold,

Mor. Cold indeede, and labour loſt,
Then farewell heate, and welcome froſt:
Portia adew, I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus looſers part.

Por. A gentle riddance: draw the curtaines, go;
Let all of his complexion chooſe me ſo. Exe[illegible]

Enter Salarino and Solanio.

Flo: Cornets.

Sal. Why man I ſaw Baſſanio vnder ſayle,
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ſhip I am ſure Lorenzo is not.

Sol. The villaine Iew with outcries raiſ'd the Duke,
Who went with him to ſearch Baſſanios ſhip.

Sal. He comes too late, the ſhip was vnderſaile;
But there the Duke was given to underſtand
That in a Gondilo were ſeene together
Lorenzo and his amorous Ieſſica.
Beſides, Anthonio certified the Duke
They were not with Baſſanio in his ſhip.

Sol. I never heard a paſſion ſo confus'd,
So ſtrange, outragious, and ſo variable,
As the dogge Iew did utter in the ſtreets;
My daughter, O my ducats, O my daughter,
Fled with a Chriſtian, O my Chriſtian ducats!
Iuſtice, the law, my ducats, and my daughter;
A ſealed bag, two ſealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, ſtolne from me by my daughter,
And jewels, two rich and precious ſtones,
Stolne by my daughter: juſtice, finde the girle,
She hath the ſtones upon her, and the ducats.

Sal. Why all the boyes in Venice follow him,
Crying his ſtones, his daughter, and his ducats,

Sol. Let good Anthonio looke he keepe his day
Or he ſhall pay for this.

Sal. Marry well remembred,
I reaſon'd with a Frenchman yeſterday,
Who told me, in the narrow ſeas that part
The French and Engliſh, there miſcaried
A veſſell of our countrey richly fraught:
I thought upon Anthonio when he told me,
And wiſht in ſilence that it were not his.

Sol. You were beſt to tell Anthonio what you heare,
Yet do not ſuddainely, for it may grieve him.

Sal. A kinder Gentleman treads not the earth,
I ſaw Baſſanio and Anthonio part,
Baſſanio told him he would make ſome ſpeede
Of his returne: he anſwered, do not ſo,
Slubber not buſineſſe for my ſake Baſſanio,
But ſtay the very riping of the time,
And for the Iewes bond which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your minde of love:
Be merry, and imploy your chiefeſt thoughts
To courtſhip, and ſuch faire oſtents of love
As ſhall conveniently become you there;
And even there his eye being big with teares,
Turning his face, he put his hand behinde him,
And with affection wondrous ſencible
He wrung Baſſanios hand, and ſo they parted.

Sal. I thinke he onely loves the world for him,
I pray thee let vs go and finde him out
And quicken his embraced heavineſſe
With ſome delight, or other.

Sal. Do we ſo. Exeunt.

Enter Nerriſſa and a Serviture.

Ner. Quick, quick I pray thee, draw the curtain ſtrait,

The Prince of Arragon hath tane his oath,
And comes to his election preſently.

Enter Arragon, his traine, and Portia.
Flor. Cornets.

Por. Behold, there ſtand the caskets noble Prince,
If you chooſe that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight ſhall our nuptiall rights be ſolemniz'd:
But if thou faile, without more ſpeech my Lord,
You muſt be gone from hence immediately.
Ar. I am enjoynd by oath to obſerve three things;
Firſt, never to vnfold to any one
Which casket 'twas I choſe; next, if I faile
Of the right casket, never in my life
To wooe a maide in way of marriage:
Laſtly, if I do faile in fortune of my choyſe,
Immediately to leave you, and be gone.
Por. To theſe injunctions every one doth ſweare
That comes to hazard for my worthleſſe ſelfe.
Ar. And ſo have I addreſt me, fortune now
To my hearts hope: gold, ſilver, and baſe lead.
Who chooſeth me muſt give and hazard all he hath.
You ſhall looke fairer ere I give or hazard.
What ſayes the golden cheſt, ha, let me ſee?
Who chooſeth me, ſhall gaine what many men deſire:
What many men deſire, that many may be meant
By the foole multitude that chooſe by ſhow,
Not learning more then the fond eye doth teach,
Which pries not to th'interior, but like the Martlet
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and rode of caſualty.
I will not chooſe what many men deſire,
Becauſe I will not jumpe with common ſpirits,
And ranke me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why then to thee thou Silver treaſure houſe,
Tell me once more, what title thou dooſt beare;
Who chooſeth me ſhall get as much as he deſerves:
And well ſaid too; for who ſhall go about
To coſen Fortune, and be honourable
Without the ſtampe of merit, let none preſume
To weare an undeſerved dignity:
O that eſtates, degrees, and offices,
Were not deriv'd corruptly, and that cleare honour
Were purchaſt by the merrit of the wearer;
How many then ſhould cover that ſtand bare?
How many be commanded that command?
How much low pleaſantry would then be gleaned
From the true ſeede of honor? And how much honor
Pickt from the chaffe and ruine of the times,
To be new varniſht: Well, but to my choiſe.
Who chooſeth me ſhall get as much as he deſerves.
I will aſſume deſert; give me a key for this,
And inſtantly vnlocke my fortunes here.
Por. Too long a pauſe for that which you finde there.
Ar. What's heere, the portrait of a blinking idiot
Preſenting me a ſcedule, I will reade it:
How much vnlike art thou to Portia?
How much vnlike my hopes and my deſervings?
Who chooſeth me, ſhall have as much as he deſerves.
Did I deſerve no more then a fooles head,
Is that my prize, are my deſerts no better?
Po. To offend and judge are diſtinct offices,
And of oppoſed natures.
Ar. What is here?

The fier ſeaven times tried this,
Seaven times tried that judgement is,
That did never chooſe amis,
Some there be that ſhadowes kiſſe,
Such have but a ſhadowes bliſſe:
There be fooles alive Iwis
Silver'd o're, and ſo was this:
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head:
So be gone ſir, you are ſped.

Ar. Still more foole I ſhall appeare
By the time I linger here,
With one fooles head I came to woo,
But I go away with two.
Sweet adue, Ile keepe my oath,
Patiently to beare my wroath.
Por. Thus hath the candle ſing'd the moath:
O theſe deliberate fooles when they do chooſe,
They have the wiſdome by their wit to looſe.
Ner. The ancient ſaying is no hereſie,
Hanging and wiving goes by deſtiny.
Por. Come draw the curtaine Nerriſſa.

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſ. Where is my Lady?
Por. Here, what would my Lord?
Meſ. Madam, there is a-lighted at your gate
A yong Venetian, one that comes before
To ſignifie th'approaching of his Lord,
From whom he bringeth ſenſible regreets;
To wit (beſides commends and curteous breath)
Gifts of rich value; yet I have not ſeene
So likely an Embaſſador of love.
A day in Aprill never came ſo ſweete
To ſhow how coſtly Sommer was at hand,
As this fore-ſpurrer comes before his Lord,
Por. No more I pray thee, I am halfe a-feard
Thou wilt ſay anone he is ſome kin to thee,
Thou ſpend'ſt ſuch high-day wit in praiſing him:
Come-come Nerriſſa, for I long to ſee
Quicke Cupids Poſt, that comes ſo mannerly.
Ner. Baſſanio Lord, love if thy will it be. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Solanio and Salarino.

Sol. Now, what newes on the Ryalto?

Sal. Why yet it lives there uncheckt, that Anthonio hath a ſhip of rich lading wrackt on the narrow Seas; the Goodwins I thinke they call the place, a very dangerous flat, and fatall, where the carcaſſes of many a tall ſhip, lye buried, as they ſay, if my goſſips report be an honſt woman of her word.

Sol. I would ſhe were as lying a goſſip in that, as ever knapt Ginger, or made her neighbours beleeve ſhe wept for the death of a third husband: but it is true, without any ſlips of prolixity, or croſſing the plaine high-way of talke, that the good Anthonio, the honeſt Antho. O that I had a title good enough to keepe his name company!

Sal. Come, the full ſtop.

Sol. Ha, what ſayeſt thou, why the end is, he hath loſt a ſhip.

Sal. I would it might prove the end of his loſſes.

Sol. Let me ſay Amen betimes, leaſt the divell croſſe my prayer, for here he comes in the likeneſſe of a Iew. How now Shylocke, what newes among the Merchants?

Enter Shylocke.

Shy. You knew, none ſo well, none ſo well as you, of my daughters flight.

Sal. That's certaine, I for my part knew the Tailor that made the wings ſhe flew withall.

Sol. And Shylocke for his owne part knew the bird was fledg'd, & then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damn'd for it.

Sal. That's certaine, if the divell may be her Iudge.

Shy. My owne fleſh and blood to rebell.

Sol. Out upon it old carrion, rebels it at theſe yeeres.

Shy. I ſay my daughter is my fleſh and bloud.

Sal. There is more difference betweene thy fleſh and hers, then betweene Iet and Iuorie, more betweene your bloods, then there is betweene red wine and renniſh: but tell us, doe you heare whether Anthonio have had any loſſe at ſea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match, a bankrout, a prodigall, who dare ſcarce ſhew his head on the Ryalta, a begger that was vſd to come ſo ſmug upon the Mart: let him look to his bond, he was wont to call me Vſurer, let him looke to his bond, he was wont to lend money for a Chriſtian curtſie, let him looke to his bond.

Sal. Why I am ſure if he forfaite, thou wilt not take his fleſh, what's that good for?

Shy. To baite fiſh withall, if it will feede nothing elſe, it will feede my revenge; he hath diſgrac'd me, and hindred me halfe a million, laught at my loſſes, mockt at my gaines, ſcorned my Nation, thwarted my bargaines, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies, and what's the reaſon? I am a Iew: Hath not a Iew eyes? hath not a Iew hands, organs, dimentions, ſences, affections, paſſions, fed with the ſame foode, hurt with the ſame weapons, ſubject to the ſame diſeaſes, healed by the ſame meanes, warmed and cooled by the ſame Winter and Sommer as a Chriſtian is? if you pricke us, do we not bleede? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poiſon us, do we not die? and if you wrong us ſhall we not revenge? if we are like you in the reſt, we will reſemble you in that. If a Iew wrong a Chriſtian, what is his humility, revenge? If a Chriſtian wrong a Iew what ſhould his ſufferance be by Chriſtian example? why revenge. The villany you teach me I will execute, and it ſhall go hard but I will better the inſtruction.

Enter a man from Anthonio.

Gentlemen, my maiſter Anthonio is at his houſe, and deſires to ſpeake with you both.

Sal. We have beene up and downe to ſeeke him.

Enter Tuball.

Sol. Here comes another of the Tribe, a third cannot be matcht, vnleſſe the divell himſelfe turne Iew.

Exeunt Gentlemen.

Shy. How now Tuball, what newes from Genowa? haſt thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did heare of her, but cannot finde her.

Shy. Why there, there, there, there, a diamond gone coſt me two thouſand ducats in Franckford, the curſe never fell upon our Nation till now, I never felt it till now, two thouſand ducats in that, and other precious, precious jewels: I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her eare: would ſhe were hearſt at my foote, and the duckets in her coffin: no newes of them, why ſo? & I know not how much is ſpent in the ſearch: why then loſſe upon loſſe, the theefe gone with ſo much, and ſo much to finde the theefe, and no ſatisfaction, no revenge, nor no ill lucke ſtirring but what lights a my ſhoulders, no ſighes but a my breathing, no teares but a my ſhedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill lucke too, Anthonio as I heard in Genowa,

Shy. What, what, what, ill lucke, ill lucke.

Tub. Hath an Argoſie caſt away comming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thanke God, I thanke God, is it true, is it true?

Tu. I ſpoke with ſome of the Saylers that eſcaped the wracke.

Shy. I thanke thee good Tuball, good newes, good newes: ha, ha, here in Genowa.

Tu. Your daughter ſpent in Genowa, as I heard, one night fourescore ducats.

Shy. Thou ſtick'ſt a dagger in me, I ſhall never ſee my gold againe, fourescore ducats at a ſitting, fourescore ducats.

Tu. There came divers of Anthonios creditors in my company to Venice, that ſweare he cannot chooſe but breake.

Shy. I am very glad of it, ile plague him, ile torture him, I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them ſhewed me a ring that hee had of your daughter for a Monkie.

Shy. Out upon her, thou tortureſt me Tuball, it was my Turkis, I had it of Leah when I was a Batcheler: I would not have given it for a wilderneſſe of Monkies.

Tub. But Anthonio is certainely undone

Shy. Nay, that's true, that's very true, go Tuball, fee me an Officer, beſpeake him a fortnight before; I will have the heart of him if he forfeit, for were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandize I will: go Tuball, and meet me at our Sinagogue, go good Tuball, at our Sinagogue Tuball. Exeunt.

Enter Baſſanio, Portia, Gratiano, and all their traine.

Por. I pray you tarrie, pauſe a day or two
Before you hazard, for in chooſing wrong
I loſe your company; therefore forbeare a while,
There's ſomething tels me (but it is not love)
I would not loſe you, and you know your ſelfe,
Hate counſailes not in ſuch a quallity;
But leaſt you ſhould not underſtand me well,
And yet a maiden hath no tongue, but thought,
I would detaine you here ſome month or two
Before you venture for me. I could teach you
How to chooſe right, but then I am forſworne;
So will I never be, ſo may you miſſe me,
But if you do, youle make me wiſh a ſinne,
That I had beene forſworne: Beſhrow your eyes,
They have ore-lookt me and devided me,
One halfe of me is yours, the other halfe
Mine owne I would ſay: but firſt mine, then yours,
And ſo all yours; O theſe naughty times
Put bars betweene the owners and their rights.
And ſo though yours, not yours (prove it ſo)
Let fortune go to hell for it, not I.
I ſpeake too long, but 'tis to peize the time,
To ich it, and draw it out in length,
To ſtay you from election.

Baſ. Let me chooſe,
For as I am, I live upon the racke.
Por. Vpon the racke Baſſanio, then confeſſe
What treaſon there is mingled with your love.
Baſ. None but that uglie treaſon of miſtruſt,
Which makes me feare the enjoying of my love:
There may as well be amitie and life,
'Tweene ſnow and fire, as treaſon and my love,
Por. I, but I feare you ſpeake vpon the racke,
Where men enforced doe ſpeake any thing.
Baſ. Promiſe me life, and ile confeſſe the truth.
Por. Well then, confeſſe and live.
Baſ. Confeſſe and love
Had beene the very ſum of my confeſſion:
O happy torment, when my torturer
Doth teach me anſwers for deliverance:
But let me to my fortune and the caskets.
Por. Away then, I am lockt in one of them,
If you do love me, you will finde me out.
Nerriſſa and the reſt, ſtand all aloofe,
Let muſicke ſound while he doth make his choiſe,
Then if he looſe he makes a Swan-like end,
Fading in muſique. That the compariſon
May ſtand more proper, my eye ſhall be the ſtreame
And watrie death-bed for him: he may win,
And what is muſique then? Then muſique is
Even as the flouriſh, when true ſubjects bowe
To a new crowned Monarch: Such it is,
As are thoſe dulcet ſounds in breake of day,
That creepe into the dreaming bride-groomes eare,
And ſummon him to marriage. Now he goes
With no leſſe preſence, but with much more love
Then yong Alcides, when he did redeeme
The virgine tribute, paied by howling Troy
To the Sea-monſter: I ſtand for ſacrifice,
The reſt aloofe are the Dardanian wives:
With bleared viſages come forth to view
The iſſue of th'exploit: Goe Hercules,
Live thou, I live with much much more diſmay
I view the fight, then thau that mak'ſt the fray.

Here muſicke.

A Song the whilſt Baſſanio comments on the Caskets to himſelfe.

Tell me where is fancie bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head:
How begot, how nouriſhed. Replie, replie.
It is engendred in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and Fancie dies,
In the cradle where it lies:
Let us all ring Fancies knell.
Ile begin it.
Ding dong, bell,
All. Ding, dong, bell.

Baſſ. So may the outward ſhowes be leaſt themſelves,
The world is ſtill deceiv'd with ornament.
In Law, what Plea ſo tainted and corrupt,
But being ſeaſon'd with a gracious voice,
Obſcures the ſhow of evill? In Religion,
What damned error, but ſome ſober brow
Will bleſſe it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the groſſeneſſe with faire ornament:
There is no vice ſo ſimple, but aſſumes
Some marke of vertue on his outward parts;
How many cowards, whoſe hearts are all as falſe
As ſtayres of ſand, weare yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars?
Who inward ſearcht, have lyvers white as milke,
And theſe aſſume but valors excrement,
To render them redoubted. Looke on beauty,
And you ſhall ſee 'tis purchaſt by the weight,
Which therin workes a miracle in nature,
Making them lighteſt that weare moſt of it:
So are thoſe criſped ſnakie golden locks
Which makes ſuch wanton gambols with the winde
Vpon ſuppoſed faireneſſe, often knowne
To be the dowrie of a ſecond head;
The ſcull that bred them in the Sepulcher.
Thus ornament is but the guilded ſhore
To a moſt dangerous ſea: the beautious ſcarfe
Vailing an Indian beauty; In a word,
The ſeeming truth which cunning times put on
To intrap the wiſeſt. Therefore thou gaudy gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee,
Nor none of thee thou pale and common drudge
'Tweene man and man: but thou, thou meager lead
Which rather threatneſt than doſt promiſe ought,
Thy paleneſſe moves me more than eloquence,
And here chooſe I, joy be the conſequence.
Por. How all the other paſſions fleet to ayre,
As doubtfull thoughts, and raſh imbrac'd deſpaire:
And ſhuddring feare, and greene-eyed jealouſie.
O love be moderate, allay thy extaſie,
In meaſure raine thy joy, ſcant this exceſſe,
I feele too much thy bleſſing, make it leſſe,
For feare I ſurfeit.
Baſ. What finde I here?
Faire Portias counterfeit. What demie god
Hath come ſo neere creation? move theſe eies?
Or whether riding on the bals of mine
Seeme they in motion? Here are ſever'd lips
Parted with ſuger breath, ſo ſweet a barre
Should ſunder ſuch ſweet friends: here in her haires
The Painter plaies the Spider and hath woven
A golden meſh t'intrap the hearts of men
Faſter then gnats in cobwebs: but her eyes,
How could he ſee to do them? having made one,
Me thinkes it ſhould have power to ſteale both his
And leave it ſelfe vnfurniſht: Yet looke how farre
The ſubſtance of my praiſe doth wrong this ſhadow
In vnderpriſing it, ſo farre this ſhadow
Doth limpe behinde the ſubſtance. Here's the ſcroule,
The continent, and ſummary of my fortune.

You that chooſe not by the view,
Chance as faire, and chooſe as true,
Since this fortune fals to you,
Be content, and ſeeke no new.
If you be well pleaſed with this,
And hold your fortune for your bliſſe,
Turne you where your Lady is,
And claime her with a loving kiſſe.

Baſ. A gentle ſcroule; Faire Lady, by your leave,
I come by note to give, and to receive,
Like one of two contending in a prize
That thinks he hath done well in peoples eyes:
Hearing applauſe and univerſall ſhout,
Giddy in ſpirit, ſtill gazing in a doubt
Whether thoſe peales of praiſe be his or no.

So thrice faire Lady ſtand I even ſo,
As doubtfull whether what I ſee be true,
Vntill confirm'd, ſign'd, ratified by you.
Por. You ſee my Lord Baſſiano where I ſtand,
Such as I am; though for my ſelfe alone
I would not be ambitious in my wiſh,
To wiſh my ſelfe much better, yet for you,
I would be trebled twenty times my ſelfe,
A thouſand times more faire, ten thouſand times
More rich, that to ſtand high in your account,
I might in vertues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full ſumme of me
Is ſum of nothing: which to terme in groſſe,
Is an vnleſſoned girle, vnſchool'd, vnpractiz'd,
Happy in this, ſhe is not yet ſo old
But ſhe may learne: happier then in this
Shee is not bred ſo dull but ſhe can learne;
Happieſt of all, is that her gentle ſpirit
Commits it ſelfe to yours to be directed,
As from her Lord, her Governour, her King.
My ſelfe, and what is mine, to you and yours
Is now converted. But now I was the Lord
Of this faire manſion, maiſter of my ſervants,
Queene ore my ſelfe: and even now, but now.
This houſe, theſe ſervants, and this ſame my ſelfe
Are yours, my Lord, I give them with this ring,
Which when you part from, looſe, or give away,
Let it preſage the ruine of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaime on you.
Baſ. Maddam, you have bereft me of all words,
Onely my bloud ſpeakes to you in my veines,
And there is ſuch confuſion in my powers,
As after ſome oration fairely ſpoke
By a beloved Prince, there doth appeare
Among the buzzing pleaſed multitude,
Where every ſomething being blent together,
Turnes to a wilde of nothing, ſave of joy
Expreſt, and not expreſt: but when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence,
O then be bold to ſay Baſſanio's dead.
Ner. My Lord and Lady, it is now our time
That have ſtood by and ſeene our wiſhes proſper,
To cry good joy, good joy my Lord and Lady.
Gra. My Lord Baſſanio, and my gentle Lady,
I wiſh you all the joy that you can wiſh:
For I am ſure you can wiſh none from me;
And when your Honours meane to ſolemnize
The bargaine of your faith: I do beſeech you
Even at that time I may be married too.
Baſ. With all my heart, ſo thou canſt get a wife.
Gra. I thanke your Lordſhip, you haue got me one.
My eyes my Lord can looke as ſwift as yours:
You ſaw the miſtres, I beheld the maid:
You lov'd, I lov'd for intermiſſion,
No more pertaines to me my Lord than you;
Your fortune ſtood upon the caskets there,
And ſo did mine too, as the matter falls:
For wooing heere vntill I ſwet againe,
And ſwearing till my very rough was dry
With oathes of love, at laſt, if promiſe laſt,
I got a promiſe of this faire one heere
To have her love: provided that your fortune
Atchiev'd her miſtreſſe.
Por. Is this true Nerriſſa.
Ner. Madam it is ſo, ſo you ſtand pleas'd withall,
Baſ. And do you Gratiano meane good faith?
Gra. Yes faith my Lord.
Baſ. Our feaſt ſhall be much honored in your marriage.
Gra. Weele play with them the firſt boy for a thouſand ducats.
Ner. What and ſtake downe?
Gra. No, we ſhall ne're win at that ſport, and ſtake downe.
But who comes heere? Lorenzo and his Infidell?
What and my old Venetian friend Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Ieſſica, and Salerio.

Baſ. Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hither,
If that the youth of my new intereſt heere
Have power to bid you welcome: by your leave
I bid my very friends and Countrimen
Sweet Portia welcome.
Pon. So do I my Lord, they are intirely welcome.
Lor. I thanke your honor; for my part my Lord,
My purpoſe was not to have ſeene you heere,
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did intreate mee paſt all ſaying nay
To come with him along.
Sal. I did my Lord,
And have reaſon for it, Signior Anthonio
Commends him to you.
Baſ. Ere I ope his Letter
I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.
Sal. Not ſicke my Lord, vnleſſe it be in minde,
Nor well, vnleſſe in minde: his Letter there
Will ſhew you his eſtate.

Opens the Letter.

Gra. Nerriſſa, cheere yond ſtranger, bid her welcome.
Your hand Salerio, what's the newes from Venice?
How doth that royall Merchant good Anthonio;
I know he will be glad of our ſucceſſe,
We are the Iaſons, we have won the fleece.
Sal. I would you had won the fleece that he hath loſt.
Por. There are ſome ſhrewd contents in yond ſame Paper,
That ſteales the colour from Baſſianos cheeke,
Some deere friend dead, elſe nothing in the world
Could turne ſo much the conſtitution
Of any conſtant man. What, worſe and worſe?
With leave Baſſanio I am halfe your ſelfe,
And muſt freely have the halfe of any thing
That this ſame paper brings you.
Baſ. O ſweet Portia,
Heere are a few of the vnpleaſant'ſt words
That ever blotted paper. Gentle Lady
When I did firſt impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had
Ran in my veines: I was a Gentleman,
And then I told you true: and yet deere Lady,
Rating my ſelfe at nothing, you ſhall ſee
How much I was a Braggart, when I told you
My ſtate was nothing, I ſhould then have told you
That I was worſe than nothing: for indeede
I have ingag'd my ſelfe to a deere friend,
Ingag'd my friend to his meere enemy
To feede my meanes. Heere is a Letter Lady,
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound
Iſſuing life blood. But is it true Salerio,

Hath all his ventures faild! what not one hit!
From Tripolis, from Mexico and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India,
And not one veſſell ſcape the dreadfull touch
Of Merchant-marring rocks?
Sal. Not one my Lord.
Beſides, it ſhould appeare, that if he had
The preſent money to diſcharge the Iew,
He would not take it: never did I know
A creature that did beare the ſhape of man
So keene and greedy to confound a man.
He plyes the Duke at morning and at night,
And doth impeach the freedome of the ſtate
If they deny him juſtice. Twenty Merchants,
The Duke himſelfe, and the Magnificoes
Of greateſt port have all perſwaded with him,
But none can drive him from the envyous plea
Of forfeiture, of juſtice, and his bond.
Ieſ. When I was with him, I have heard him ſweare
To Tuball and to Chus, his Countri-men,
That he would rather have Anthonio's fleſh,
Then twenty times the value of the ſumme
That he did owe him: and I know my Lord,
If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poore Anthonio.
Por. Is it your deere friend that is thus in trouble?
Baſ. The deereſt friend to me, the kindeſt man,
The beſt condition'd, and vnwearied ſpirit
In doing curteſies: and one in whom
The ancient Romane honour more appeares
Then any that drawes breath in Italy.
Por. What ſumme owes he the Iew?
Baſ. For me three thouſand ducats.
Por. What, no more?
Pay him ſixe thouſand, and deface the bond:
Double ſixe thouſand, and then treble that,
Before a friend of this deſcription
Shall loſe a haire through my Baſſanio's fault.
Firſt go with me to Church, and call me wife
And then away to Venice to your friend:
For never ſhall you lie by Portias ſide
With an vnquiet ſoule. You ſhall have gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times over.
When it is payd, bring your true friend along,
My maid Nerriſſa, and my ſelfe meane time
Will live as maids and widdowes; come away,
For you ſhall hence upon your wedding day:
Bid your friends welcome, ſhow a merry cheere,
Since you are deere bought, I will love you deere.
But let me heare the letter of your friend.

Sweet Baſſanio, my ſhips have all miſcarried, my Creditors grew cruell, my eſtate is very low, my bond to the Iew is forfeit, and ſince in paying it, it is impoſſible I ſhould live, all debts are cleerd betweene you and I, if I might ſee you at my death: notwithſtanding, vſe your pleaſure, if your loue do not perſwade you to come, let not my letter.

Por. O love! diſpatch all buſines and be gone.
Baſ. Since I have your good leave to go away,
I will make haſt; but till I come againe,
No bed ſhall ere be guilty of my ſtay,
Nor reſt be interpoſer twixt us twaine. Exeunt.

Enter the Iew, and Solanio, and Anthonio, and the Iaylor.

Iew. Iaylor, looke to him, tell not me of mercy,
This is the foole that lends out money gratis.
Iaylor, looke to him.
Ant. Heare me yet good Shylok.
Iew. Ile have my bond, ſpeake not againſt my bond,
I have ſworne an oath that I will have my bond:
Thou call'dſt me dog before thou hadſt a cauſe,
But ſince I am a dog, beware my phangs,
The Duke ſhall grant me juſtice: I do wonder
Thou naughty Iaylor, that thou art ſo fond
To come abroad with him at his requeſt.
Ant. I pray thee heare me ſpeake.
Iew. Ile have my bond, I will not heare thee ſpeake,
Ile have my bond, and therefore ſpeake no more.
Ile not be made a ſoft and dull-ey'd foole,
To ſhake the head, relent, and ſigh, and yeeld
To Chriſtian interceſſors: follow not,
Ile have no ſpeaking, I will have my bond. Exit Iew.
Sol. It is the moſt impenetrable curre
That ever kept with men.
Ant. Let him alone,
Ile follow him no more with bootleſſe prayers:
He ſeekes my life, his reaſon well I know;
I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures
Many that have at times made mone to me,
Therefore he hates me.
Sol. I am ſure the Duke will never grant this forfeiture to hold.
An. The Duke cannot deny the courſe of law;
For the commodity that ſtrangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much impeach the juſtice of the State,
Since that the trade and profit of the citty
Conſiſteth of all Nations. Therefore go,
Theſe greefes and loſſes have ſo bated mee,
That I ſhall hardly ſpare a pound of fleſh
To morrow, to my bloudy Creditor.
Well Iaylor, on, pray God Baſſanio come
To ſee me pay his debt, and then I care not. Exeunt.

Enter Portia, Nerriſſa, Lorenzo, Ieſſica, and a man of Portias.

Lor. Madam, although I ſpeake it in you preſence.
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity, which appeares moſt ſtrongly
In bearing thus the abſence of your Lord.
But if you knew to whom you ſhew this honour,
How true a Gentleman you ſend releefe,
How deere a lover of my Lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the worke
Then cuſtomary bounty can enforce you.
Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor ſhall not now: for in companions
That do converſe and waſte the time together,
Whoſe ſoules do beare an egal yoke of love,
There muſt be needs a like proportion
Of lyniaments, of manners and of ſpirit,
Which makes me thinke that this Anthonio
Being the boſome lover of my Lord,
Muſt needs be like my Lord. If it be ſo,
How little is the coſt I have beſtowed
In purchaſing the ſemblance of my ſoule,
From out the ſtate of helliſh cruelty.
This comes too neere the praiſing of my ſelfe,
Therefore no more of it: heere other things
Lorenzo I commit into your hands,

The husbandry and mannage of my houſe,
Vntill my Lords returne; for mine owne part
I have toward heaven breath'd a ſecret vow,
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Onely attended by Nerriſſa heere,
Vntill her husband and my Lords returne:
There is a monaſtery too miles off,
And there we will abide. I do deſire you
Not to denie this impoſition,
The which my love and ſome neceſſity
Now layes upon you.
Lor. Madame, with all my heart,
I ſhall obey you in all faire commands.
Por. My people do already know my minde,
And will acknowledge you and Ieſſica
In place of Lord Baſſanio and my ſelfe.
So fare you well till we ſhall meete againe.
Lor. Faire thoughts & happy houres attend on you;
Ieſ. I wiſh your Ladiſhip all hearts content.
Por. I thanke you for your wiſh, and am well pleas'd
To wiſh it backe on you: faryouwell Ieſſica. Exeunt.
Now Balthazar, as I have ever found thee honeſt true,
So let me finde thee ſtill: take this ſame letter,
And uſe thou all the indeavor of a man,
In ſpeed to Mantua, ſee thou render this
Into my coſins hand, Doctor Bellario,
And looke what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them I pray thee with imagin'd ſpeed
Vnto the Tranect, to the common Ferrie
Which trades to Venice; waſt no time in words,
But get hee gone, I ſhall be there before thee.
Bal. Madam, I go with all convenient ſpeed.
Po. Come on Nerriſſa, I have worke in hand
That you yet know not of; wee'll ſee our husbands
Bafore they thinke of us?
Ner. Shal they ſee us?
Por. They ſhall Nerriſſa: but in ſuch a habit,
That they ſhall thinke we are accompliſhed
With that we lacke; Ile hold thee any wager
When we are both accoutered like yong men,
Ile prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And weare my dagger with the braver grace,
And ſpeake betweene the change of man and boy,
With a reede voyce, and turne two minſing ſteps
Into a manly ſtride; and ſpeake of frayes
Like a fine bragging youth: and tell quaint lyes
How honourable Ladies ſought my love,
Which I denying, they fell ſicke and died.
I could not do withall: then Ile repent,
And wiſh for all that, that I had not kil'd them;
And twenty of theſe puny lies Ile tell
That men ſhall ſweare I have diſcontinued ſchoole
Above a twelve moneth: I have within my minde
A thouſand raw tricks of theſe bragging Iacks,
Which I will practiſe.
Ner. Why, ſhall wee turne to men?
Por. Fie, what a queſtions that,
If thou wert nere a lewd interpreter?
But come, Ile tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which ſtayes for us
At the Parke gate; and therefore haſte away,
For we muſt meaſure twenty miles to day. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne and Ieſſica.

Clowne. Yes truly; for looke you, the ſinnes of the Father are to be laid upon the children, therefore I promiſe you, I feare you, I was alwaies plaine with you, and ſo now I ſpeake my agitation of the matter: therefore be of good cheere, for truly I thinke you are damn'd, there is but one hope in it that can do you any good, and that is but a kinde of baſtard hope neither.

Ieſ. And what hope is that I pray thee?

Clow. Marry you may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Iewes daughter.

Ieſ. That were a kinde of baſtard hope indeed, ſo the ſins of my mother ſhould be viſited upon me.

Claw. Truly then I feare you are damned both by father and mother, thus when I ſhun Stilla your father, I fall into Charibdis your mother; well, you are gone both waies.

Ieſ. I ſhall be ſav'd by my husband, he hath made me a Chriſtian.

Clow. Truly the more to blame he, we were Chriſtians enow before, e'ne as many as could well live one by another: this making of Chriſtians will raiſe the price of Hogs; if wee grow all to be porke-eaters, wee ſhall not ſhortly have a raſher on the coales for money.

Enter Lorrenzo.

Ieſ. Ile tell my husband Launcelet what you ſay, heere he comes.

Lor. I ſhall grow jealous of you ſhortly Lancelet, if you thus get my wife into corners?

Ieſ. Nay, you need not feare us Lorenzo, Lancelet and I are out, he tells me flatly there is no mercy for mee in heaven, becauſe I am a Iewes daughter: and hee ſaies you are no good member of the common wealth, for in converting Iewes to Chriſtians, you raiſe the price of Pork.

Lor. I ſhall anſwere that better to the Commonwealth than you can the getting up of the Negroes belly: the Moore is with childe by you Launcelet.

Clow. It is much that the Moore ſhould be more then reaſon: but if ſhe be leſſe then an honeſt woman, ſhe is indeed more then I tooke her for.

Lor. How every foole can play upon the word, I think the beſt grace of witte will ſhortly turne into ſilence, and diſcourſe grow commendable in none onely but Parrats: go in ſirra, bid them prepare for dinner?

Clow. That is done ſir, they have all ſtomacks?

Lor. Goodly Lord, what a witte-ſnapper are you, then bid them prepare dinner.

Clow. That is done too ſir, onely cover is the word.

Lor. Will you cover than ſir?

Clow. Not ſo ſir neither, I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occaſion, wilt thou ſhew the whole wealth of thy wit in an inſtant; I pray thee vnderſtand a plaine man in his plaine meaning: goe to thy fellowes, bid them cover the table, ſerve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Clow. For the table ſir, it ſhall be ſerv'd in, for the meat ſir, it ſhall be covered, for your comming in to dinner ſir, why let it be as humors and conceits ſhall governe.

Exit Clowne.

Lor. O deare diſcretion, how his words are ſuted,
The foole hath planted in his memory
An Army of good words, and I do know
A many fooles that ſtand in better place,
Garniſht like him, that for a trickſie word
Defie the matter: how cheer'ſt thou Ieſſica,
And now good ſweet ſay thy opinion,

Now

How doſt thou like the Lord Baſſiano's wife?
Ieſ. Paſt all expreſſing,it is very meete
The Lord Baſſianio live an upright life
For having ſuch a bleſſing in his Lady,
He findes the joyes of heaven heere on earth,
And if on earth he do not meane it,it
Is reaſon he ſhould never come to heaven?
Why, if two gods ſhould play ſome heavenly match,
And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one:there muſt be ſomething elſe
Paund with the other,for the poore rude world
Hath not her fellow.
Lo. Even ſuch a husband
Haſt thou of me, as ſhe is for a wiſe.
Ieſ. Nay, but aske my opinion too of that?
Lor. I will anone,firſt let us go to dinner?
Ieſ. Nay, let me praiſe you while I have a ſtomacke?
Lor. No pray thee,let it ſerue for table talke,
Then how ſom ere thou ſpeakſt 'mong other things,
I ſhall digeſt it?
Ieſ. Well, Ile ſet you forth. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes, Anthonio, Baſſanio, and Gratiano

Duke. What, is Anthonio heere?
Ant. Ready,ſo pleaſe your grace?
Du. I am ſorry for thee,thou art come to anſwere
A ſtony adverſary, an inhumane wretch,
Vncapable of pitty,voyd, and empty
From any dram of mercy.
Ant. I have heard
Your grace hath tane great paines to qualifie
His rigorous courſe:but ſince he ſtands obdurate,
And that no lawfull meanes can carry me
Out of his envies reach,I do oppoſe
My patience to his fury,and am arm'd
To ſuffer with a quietneſſe of ſpirit,
The very tiranny and rage of his.
Du. Go one and call the Iew into the Court.
Sal. He is ready at the doore,he comes my Lord.

Enter Shylocke.

Du. Make roome,and let him ſtand before our face.
Shylocke,the world thinkes, and I thinke ſo too
That thou but leadſt this faſhion of thy mallice
To the laſt houre of act, and then 'tis thought
Thou'lt ſhew thy mercy and remorſe more ſtrange,
Than is thy ſtrange apparant cruelty,
And where thou now exact'ſt the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poore Merchants fleſh,
Thou wilt not onely looſe the forfeiture,
But touch'd with humane gentleneſſe and love,
Forgive a moyty of the principall,
Glancing an eie of pitty on his loſſes
That have of late ſo hudled on his backe,
Enow to preſſe a royall Merchant downe;
And plucke commiſeration of his ſtate
From braſſie boſomes,and rough hearts of flint,
From ſtubborne Turkes and Tarters never traind
To offices of tender curteſie,
We all expect a gentle anſwer Iew?
Iew. I have poſſeſt your grace of what I purpoſe,
And by our holy Sabbath have I ſworne
To have the due and forfeit of my bond.
If you deny it,let the danger light
Vpon your Charter,and your Cities freedome.
You'l aske me why I rather chooſe to have
A weight of carrion fleſh, then to receive
Three thouſand Ducats ? Ile not anſwer that:
But ſay it is my humor ; Is it anſwered?
What if my houſe be troubled with a Rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thouſand Ducates
To have it bain'd? What,are you anſwer'd yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping Pigge:
Some that are madde,if they behold a Cat:
And others, when the bag-pipe ſings i'th noſe,
Cannot containe their Vrine for affection.
Maiſters of paſſion ſwayes it to the moode
Of what it likes or loaths,now for your anſwer:
As there is no firme reaſon to be rendred
Why he cannot abide a gaping Pigge?
Why he a harmleſſe neceſſary Cat?
Why he a woollen bag-pipe:but of force
Muſt yeeld to ſuch inevitable ſhame,
As to offend himſelfe being offended:
So can I give no reaſon, nor I will not,
More then a lodg'd hate, and a certaine loathing
I beare Anthonio,that I follow thus
A looſing ſuite againſt him? Are you anſwered?
Baſ. This is no anſwer thou vnfeeling man,
To excuſe the currant of thy cruelty.
Iew. I am not bound to pleaſe thee with my anſwer.
Baſ. Do all men kil the thing they do not love?
Iew. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
Baſ. Every offence is not a hate at firſt.
Iew: What wouldſt thou have a Serpent ſting thee twice?
Ant. I pray you thinke you queſtion with the Iew:
You may as well go ſtand upon the beach,
And bid the maine flood bate his vſuall height,
Or even as well vſe queſtion with the Wolfe,
The Ewe bleate for the Lambe : when you behold,
You may as well forbid the Mountaine Pines
To wagge their high tops,and to make no noiſe
When they are fretted with the guſts of heaven:
You may as well do any thing moſt hard,
As ſeeke to ſoften that,than which what harder?
His Iewiſh heart. Therefore I do beſeech you
Make no more offers,vſe no farther meanes,
But with all briefe and plaine conveniency
Let me have judgement, and the Iew his will.
Baſ. For thy three thouſand Ducates heere is ſix.
Iew. If every Ducat in ſixe thouſand Ducates
Were in ſixe parts, and every part a Ducate,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond?
Du. How ſhalt thou hope for mercy,rendring none?
Iew. What judgement ſhall I dread doing no wrong?
You have among you many a purchaſt ſlaue,
Which like you Aſſes,and your Dogs and Mules,
You vſe in abject and in ſlaviſh part,
Becauſe your bought them. Shall I ſay to you,
Let them be free,marry them to your heires?
Why ſweate they under burthens? Let their beds
Be made as ſoft as yours : and let their pallats
Be ſeaſon'd with ſuch Viands : you will anſwer

The ſlaves are ours. So do I anſwer you.
The pound of fleſh which I demand of him
Is deerely bought,'tis mine,and I will have it.
If you deny me; fie upon your Law,
There is no force in the decrees of Venice;
I ſtand for judgement,anſwer,Shall I have it?
Du. Vpon my power I may diſmiſſe this Court,
Vnleſſe Bellario a learned Doctor,
Whom I have ſent for to determine this,
Come heere to day.
Sal. My Lord,heere ſtayes without
A Meſſenger with Letters from the Doctor,
New come from Padua.
Du. Bring us the Letters, Call the Meſſengers.
Baſ. Good cheere Anthonio. What man, corage yet:
The Iew ſhall have my fleſh, blood,bones,and all,
Ere thou ſhalt looſe for me one drop of blood.
Ant. I am a tainted Weather of the flocke,
Meeteſt for death, the weakeſt kinde of fruite
Drop's earlieſt to the ground, ſo let me;
You cannot better be employ'd Baſſanio,
Then to live ſtill,and write mine Epitaph.

Enter Nerriſſa.

*Du.*Came you from Padua from Bellario?
Ner. From both.
My Lord Bellario greets your Grace.
Baſ. Why doſt thou whet thy knife ſo earneſtly?
Iew. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrout there.
Gra. Not on thy ſoale: but on thy ſoule harſh Iew
Thou mak'ſt thy knife keene: but no mettall can,
No, not the hangmans Axe beare halfe the keenneſſe
Of thy ſharpe envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?
Iew. No,none that thou hoaſt wit enough to make.
Gra. O be thou damn'd,inexecrable dogge,
And for thy life let juſtice be accus'd:
Thou almoſt mak'ſt me waver in my faith;
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That ſoules of animals infuſe themſelves
Into the trunkes of men. Thy curriſh ſpirit
Govern'd a Wolfe, who hang'd for humane ſlaughter,
Even from the gallowes did his fell ſoule fleet;
And whil'ſt thou layeſt in thy unhallowed dam,
Infus'd it ſelfe in thee: For thy deſires
Are Wolviſh,bloody,ſterv'd,and ravenous.
Iew. Till thou canſt raile the ſeale from off my bond
Thou but offend'ſt thy Lungs to ſpeale ſo loud:
Repaire thy wit good youth,or it will fall
To endleſſe ruine. I ſtand heere for Law.
Du. This Letter from Bellario doth commend
A yong and Learned Doctor in our Court;
Where is he?
Ner. He attendeth heere hard by
To know your anſwer,whether you'l admit him.
Du. With all my heart. Some three or four of you
Go give him curteous conduct to this place,
Meane time the Court ſhall heare Bellarioes Letter.

YOur Grace ſhall underſtand, that at the receite of your Letter I am very ſicke: but in the inſtant that your meſſenger came, in loving viſitation, was with me a young Doctor of Rome, his name is Balthaſar: I acquainted him with the cauſe in Controverſie, betweene the Iew and Anthonio the Merchant: We turn'd ore many Bookes together: hee is furniſhed with my opinion, which bettred with his owne learning, the greatneſſe whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him at my importunity, to fill up your Graces requeſt in my ſtead. I beſeech you, let his lacke of years be no impediment to let him lacke a reverend eſtimation: for I never knewe ſo yong a body, with ſo old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whoſe trial ſhall better publiſh his commendation.

Enter Portia for Balthazar.

Du. You heare the learn'd Bellario what he writes,
And heere(I take it)is the Doctor come.
Give me your hand: Came you from old Bellario?
Por. I did my Lord.
Du. You are welcome:take your place;
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this preſent queſtion in the Court.
Por. I am enformed throughly of the cauſe.
Which is the Merchant heere? and which the Iew?
Du. Anthonio and old Shylocke,both ſtand forth.
Por. Is your name Shylocke.
Iew. Shylocke is my name.
Por. Of a ſtrange nature is the ſute you follow,
Yet in ſuch rule,that the Venetian Law
Cannot impugne you as you do proceed.
You ſtand within his danger,do you not?
Ant. I, ſo he ſayes.
Po. Do you confeſſe the bond?
An. I do.
Por. Then muſt the Iew be mercifull.
Iew. On what compulſion muſt I? Tell me that.
Por. The quality of mercy is not ſtrain'd,
It droppeth as the gentle raine from heaven
Vpon the place beneath. It is twice bleſt,
It bleſſeth him that gives,and him that takes,
'Tis mightieſt in the mightieſt, it becomes
The throned Monarch better then his Crowne.
His Scepter ſhewes the force of temporall power,
The attribute to awe and Majeſty,
Wherein doth ſit the dread and feare of Kings:
But mercy is aboue this ſceptred ſway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of Kings,
It is an attribute to God himſelfe;
And earthly power doth then ſhew likeſt Gods
When mercy ſeaſons Iuſtice. Therefore Iew,
Though Iuſtice be thy plea, conſider this,
That in the courſe of Iuſtice, none of us
Should ſee ſalvation:we do pray for mercy,
And that ſame prayer,doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have ſpoke thus much
To mittigate the juſtice of thy plea:
Which if thou follow, this ſtrict courſe of Venice
Muſt needes give ſentence gainſt the Merchant there.
Shy. My deeds upon my head,I crave the Law,
The penalty and forfeite of my bond.
Por. Is he not able to diſcharge the money?
Baſ. Yes,heere I tender it for him in the Court,
Yea,twice the ſumme,if that will not ſuffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times ore,
On forfeit of my hands,my head,my heart:
If this will not ſuffice it muſt appeare
That malice beares downe truth. And I beſeech you
Wreſt once the Law to your authority.
To do a great right, do a little wrong.
And curbe this cruell divell of his will.
Por. It muſt not be,there is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree eſtabliſhed:
'Twill be recorded for a Preſident,

And many an error by the ſame example,
Will ruſh into the ſtate: It cannot be.
Iew. A Daniel come to judgement, yea a Daniel.
O wiſe young Iudge, how do I honour thee.
Por. I pray you let me looke upon the bond.
Iew. Heere 'tis moſt reverend Doctor, heere it is.
Por. Shylocke, there's thrice thy mony offered thee.
Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven:
Shall I lay perjury upon my ſoule?
No not for Venice.
Por. Why this bond is forfeit,
And lawfully by this the Iew may claime
A pound of fleſh, to be by him cut off
Neereſt the Merchants heart; be mercifull,
Take thrice thy money, bid me teare the bond.
Iew. When it is paid according to the tenure.
It doth appeare you are a worthy Iudge:
You know the Law, your expoſition
Hath beene moſt ſound. I charge you by the Law,
Whereof you are a well-deſerving pillar,
Proceede to judgement: By my ſoule I ſweare,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me: I ſtay heere on my bond.
An. Moſt heartily I do beſeech the Court
To give the judgement.
Por. Why then thus it is:
You muſt prepare your boſome for his knife.
Iew. O noble Iudge, O excellent yong man.
Por. For the intent and purpoſe of the Law
Hath full relation to the penalty,
Which heere appeareth due upon the bond.
Iew. 'Tis very true: O wiſe and upright Iudge,
How much more elder art thou then thy lookes?
Por. Therefore lay bare your boſome.
Iew. I, his breſt,
So ſayes the bond, doth it not noble Iudge?
Neereſt his heart, thoſe are the very words.
Por. It is ſo: Are there ballance heere to weigh the fleſh?
Iew. I have them ready.
Por. Have by ſome Surgeon Shylock on your charge
To ſtop his wounds, leaſt he ſhould bleede to death.
Iew. It is not nominated in the bond?
Por. It is not ſo expreſt: but what of that?
'Twere good you do ſo much for charity.
Iew. I cannot finde it, 'tis not in the bond.
Por. Come Merchant, have you any thing to ſay?
Ant. But litle: I am arm'ed and well prepar'd
Give me your hand Baſſanio, fare you well.
Greeve not that I am falne to this for you:
For heerein fortune ſhewes her ſelfe more kinde
Then is his cuſtome. It is ſtill her uſe
To let the wretched man out-live his wealth,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty. From which lingring penance
Of ſuch a miſery, doth ſhe cut me off:
Commend me to your honourable Wife,
Tell her the proceſſe of Anthonio's end:
Say how I lov'd you; ſpeake me faire in death:
And when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Baſſanio had not once a Love:
Repent not you that you ſhall looſe your friend,
And he repents not that he payes your debt.
For if the Iew do cut but deepe enough,
Ile pay it inſtantly, with all my heart.
Baſ. Anthonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as deere to me as life it ſelfe,
But life it ſelfe, my wife and all the world,
Are not with me eſteem'd above thy life.
I would looſe all, I ſacrifice them all
Heere to this devill, to deliver you.
Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for that,
If ſhe were by to heare you make the offer.
Gro. I have a wife whom I proteſt I love,
I would ſhe were in heaven, ſo ſhe could
Intreat ſome power to change this curriſh Iew.
Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behinde her backe,
The wiſh would make elſe an vnquiet houſe.
Iew. Theſe be the Chriſtian husbands: I have a daughter
Would any of the ſtocke of Barrabas
Had beene her husband, rather then a Chriſtian.
We trifle time, I pray thee purſue ſentence.
Por. A pound of that ſame merchants fleſh is thine,
The Court awards it, and the law doth give it.
Iew. Moſt rightfull Iudge.
Por. And you muſt cut this fleſh from off his breaſt,
The Law allowes it, and the Court awards it.
Iew. Moſt learned Iudge, a ſentence, come prepare.
For. Tarry a little, there is ſomething elſe,
This bond doth give thee heere no jot of bloud,
The words expreſly are a pound of fleſh:
Then take thy bond, take thou thy pound of fleſh,
But in the cutting it, if thou doſt ſhed
One drop of Chriſtian bloud, thy lands and goods
Are by the Lawes of Venice confiſcate
Vnto the ſtate of Venice.
Gra. O upright Iudge,
Marke Iew, O learned Iudge.
Shy. Is that the law?
Por. Thy ſelfe ſhalt ſee the Act:
For as thou urgeſt juſtice, be aſſur'd
Thou ſhalt have juſtice more then thou deſireſt.
Gra. O learned Iudge, marke Iew, a learned Iudge.
Iew. I take this offer then, pay the bond thrice,
And let the Chriſtian go.
Baſ. Heere is the mony.
For. Soft, the Iew ſhall have all juſtice, ſoft, no haſte,
He ſhall have nothing but the penalty.
Gra. O Iew, an upright Iudge, a learned Iudge.
Por. Therefore prepare thee to cut off the fleſh,
Shed thou no bloud, nor cut thou leſſe nor more
But juſt a pound of fleſh: if thou tak'ſt more
Or leſſe then a juſt pound, be it ſo much
As makes it light or heavy in the ſubſtauce,
Or the deviſion of the twentieth part
Of one poore ſcruple, nay if the ſcale do turne
But in the eſtimation of a hayre,
Thou dieſt, and all thy goods are confiſcate.
Gra. A ſecond Daniel, a Daniel Iew,
Now infidell I have thee on the hip.
Por. Why doth the Iew pauſe, take thy forfeiture.
Shy. Give me my principall, and let me go.
Baſ. I have it ready for thee, heere it is.
Por. He hath refus'd it in the open Court,
He ſhall have meerly juſtice and his bond.
Gra. A Daniel ſtill ſay I, a ſecond Daniel,
I thanke thee Iew for teaching me that word.
Shy. Shall I not have barely my principall?
Por. Thou ſhalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be taken ſo at thy perill Iew.
Shy. Why then the Devill give him good of it:
Ile ſtay no longer queſtion.

Por. Tarry Iew,
The Law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the Lawes of Venice,
If it be proved againſt an Alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts
He ſeeke the life of any Citizen,
The party 'gainſt the which he doth contrive,
Shall ſeaze one halfe his goods, the other halfe
Comes to the privy coffer of the State,
And the offenders life lyes in the mercy
Of the Duke onely, 'gainſt all other voyce.
In which predicament I ſay thou ſtandſt:
For it appeares by manifeſt proceeding,
That indirectly, and directly too
Thou had contriv'd againſt the very life
Of the defendant: and thou haſt incur'd
The danger formerly by me rehearſt.
Downe therefore, and beg mercy of the Duke.
Gra. Beg that thou maiſt have leave to hang thy ſelfe,
And yet thy wealth being forfeit to the ſtate,
Thou haſt not left the value of a cord,
Therefore thou muſt be hang'd at the ſtates charge.
Duk. That thou ſhalt ſee the difference of our ſpirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou aske it:
For halfe thy wealth, it is Anthonio's,
The other halfe comes to the generall ſtate,
Which humbleneſſe may drive unto a fine.
Por. I for the ſtate, not for Anthonio.
Shy. Nay, take my life and all, pardon not that,
You take my houſe, when you doe take the prop
That doth ſuſtaine my houſe: you take my life
When you doe take the meanes whereby I live.
Por. What mercy can you render him Anthonio?
Gra. A halter Gratis, nothing elſe for Gods ſake.
Ant. So pleaſe my Lord the Duke, and all the Court
To quite the fine for one halfe of his goods,
I am content: ſo he will let me have
The other halfe in uſe, to render it
Vpon his death, unto the Gentleman
That lately ſtole his daughter.
Two things provided more, that for this favour
He preſently become a Chriſtian:
The other, that he doe record a gift
Heere in the Court of all he dyes poſſeſt
Vnto his ſonne Lorenzo, and his daughter.
Duk. He ſhall doe this, or elſe I doe recant
The pardon that I late pronounced heere.
Por. Art thou contented Iew? what doſt thou ſay?
Shy. I am content.
Por. Clarke, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. I pray you give me leave to goe from hence,
I am not well, ſend the deed after me,
And I will ſigne it.
Duk. Get thee gone, but doe it.
Gra. In chriſtning thou ſhalt have two godfathers,
Had I beene judge, thou ſhouldſt have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallowes, not to the font. Exit.
Duk. Sir I intreat you with me home to dinner.
Por. I humbly doe deſire your Grace of pardon,
I muſt away this night toward Padua,
And it is meete I preſently ſet forth.
Duk. I am ſorry that your leyſure ſerves you not:
Anthonio greatifie this gentleman,
For in my mind, you are much bound to him.
Exit Duke and his traine.
Baſſ. Moſt worthy gentleman, I and my freind
Have by your wiſedome beene this day acquitted
Of greevous penalties, in lieu whereof,
Three thouſand Ducats due unto the Iew
We freely cope your curteous paines withall.
Ant. And ſtand indebted over and above
In love and ſervice to you evermore.
Por. He is well paid that is well ſatisfied,
And I delivering you, am ſatisfied,
And therein doe account my ſelfe well paid,
My mind was never yet more mercinary.
I pray you know me when we meete againe,
I wiſh you well, and ſo I take my leave.
Baſſ. Deare ſir, of force I muſt attempt you further,
Take ſome remembrance of us as a tribute,
Not as a fee: grant me two things, I pray you
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.
Por. You preſſe me farre, and therefore I will yeeld,
Give me your gloves, Ile weare them for your ſake,
And for your love Ile take this ring from you,
Doe not draw backe your hand, ile take no more,
And you in love ſhall not deny me this?
Baſſ. This ring good ſir, alas it is a trifle,
I will not ſhame my ſelfe to give you this.
Por. I will have nothing elſe but onely this,
And now methinkes I have a mind to it.
Baſ. There's more depends on this then on the valew,
The deareſt ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation,
Onely for this I pray you pardon me.
Por. I ſee ſir you are liberall in offers,
You taught me firſt to beg, and now me thinkes
You teach me how a begger ſhould be anſwer'd.
Baſ. Good ſir, this ring was given me by my wife,
And when ſhe put it on, ſhe made me vow
That I ſhould neither ſell, nor give, nor loſe it.
Por. That ſcuſe ſerves many men to ſave their gifts,
And if your wife be not a mad woman,
And know how well I have deſerv'd this ring,
Shee would not hold out enemy for ever
For giving it to me: well, peace be with you. Exeunt.
Ant. My Lord Baſſanio, let him have the ring,
Let his deſervings and my love withall
Be valued againſt your wives commandement.
Baſ. Goe Gratiano, run and over-take him,
Give him the ring, and bring him if thou canſt
Vnto Anthonios houſe, away, make haſte. Exit Grati.
Come, you and I will thither preſently,
And in the morning early will we both
Flye toward Belmont, come Anthonio. Exeunt.

Enter Portia, and Nerriſſa.

Por. Enquire the Iewes houſe out, give him this deed,
And let him ſigne it; we'll away to night,
And be a day before our husbands home:
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Faire ſir, you are well ore-tane:
My L. Baſſanie upon more advice,
Hath ſent you heere this ring, and doth intreat
Your company at dinner.
Por. That cannot be;
His ring I doe accept moſt thankefully,
And ſo I pray you tell him: furthermore,
I pray you ſhew my youth old Shylockes houſe.
Grati. That will I doe.
Ner. Sir, I would ſpeake with you:

Ile ſee if I can get my husbands ring
Which I did make him ſweare to keepe for ever.
Por. Thou maiſt I warrant, we ſhall have old ſwearing
That they did give the rings away to men;
But weele out-face them, and out-ſweare them too:
Away, make haſte, thou know'ſt where I will tarry.
Ner. Come good ſir, will you ſhew me to this houſe.
Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Lorenzo and Ieſſica.

Lor. The moone ſhines bright. In ſuch a night as this,
When the ſweet winde did gently kiſſe the trees,
And they did make no noyſe, in ſuch a night
Troylus me thinkes mounted the Troian wall,
And ſigh'd his ſoule toward the Grecian tents
Where Creſſed lay that night.
Ieſ. In ſuch a night.
Did Thisby fearefully ore-trip the dewe,
And ſaw the Lyons ſhadow ere himſelfe,
And ranne diſmayed away.
Loren. In ſuch a night
Stood Dido with a Willow in her hand
Vpon the wilde ſea bankes, and waft her Love
To come againe to Carthage.
Ieſ. In ſuch a night
Medea gathered the inchanted hearbs
That did renew old Eſon.
Loren. In ſuch a night
Did Ieſſica ſteale from the wealthy Iewe,
And with an Vnthrift Love did runne from Venice,
As farre as Belmont.
Ieſ. And in ſuch a night.
Did young Lorenzo ſweare he lov'd her well,
Stealing her ſoule with many vowes of faith,
And ne're a true one.
Loren. And in ſuch a night
Did pretty Ieſſica (like a little ſhrow)
Slander her Love, and he forgave it her.
Ieſ. I would out-night you did no body come:
But harke, I heare the footing of a man.

Enter Meſſenger.

Lor. Who comes ſo faſt in ſilence of the night?
Meſ. A friend. (friend?
Loren. A friend, what friend? your name I pray you
Meſ. Stephano is my name, and I bring word
My Miſtreſſe will before the breake of day
Be heere at Belmont, ſhe doth ſtray about
By holy croſſes where ſhe kneeles and prayes
For happy wedlocke houres.
Loren. Who comes with her?
Meſ. None but a holy Hermit and her maid:
I pray you is my Maſter yet return'd?
Loren. He is not, nor we have not heard from him,
But go we in I pray thee Ieſſica,
And ceremoniouſly let us prepare
Some welcome for the Miſtreſſe of the houſe.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. Sola, ſola: wo ha ho, ſola, ſola.
Loren. Who calls?
Clo. Sola, did you ſee M. Lorenzo, and M. Lorenza, ſola,
Lor. Leave hollowing man, here. (ſola.
Clo. Sola, where, where?
Lor. Heere?
Clo. Tell him ther's a Poſt come from my Maſter, with his horne full of good newes, my Maſter will be here ere morning ſweet love.
Loren. Let's in, and there expect their comming.
And yet no matter: why ſhould we goe in?
My friend Stephano ſignifie pray you
Within the houſe, your Miſtreſſe is at hand,
And bring your muſique forth into the ayre.
How ſweet the moone-light ſleepes upon this banke,
Heere will we ſit, and let the ſounds of Muſicke
Creepe in our eares; ſoft ſtilnes, and the night
Become the tutches of ſweet harmony:
Sit Ieſſica, looke how the floore of heaven
Is thicke inlayed with patterns of bright gold,
There's not the ſmalleſt orbe which thou beholdſt
But in his motion like an Angell ſings,
Still quiring to the young eyed Cherubins;
Such harmony is in immortall ſoules,
But whilſt this muddy veſture of decay
Doth groſly cloſe in it, we cannot heare it:
Come hoe, and wake Diana with a hymne,
With ſweeteſt tutches pearce your Miſtreſſe eare,
And draw her home with muſicke.
Ieſſi. I am never merry when I heare ſweet muſique.
Play muſicke.
Lor. The reaſon is, your ſpirits are attentive:
For doe but note a wilde and wanton heard
Or race of youthfull and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their bloud,
If they but heare perchance a trumpet ſound,
Or any ayre of muſicke touch their eares,
You ſhall perceive them make a mutuall ſtand,
Their ſavage eyes turn'd to a modeſt gaze,
By the ſweet power of muſicke: therefore the Poet
Did faine that Orpheus drew teares, ſtones, and floods.
Since naught ſo ſtockiſh, hard, and full of rage,
But muſicke for the time doth change his nature,
The man that hath no muſicke in himſelfe,
Nor is not moved with concord of ſweet ſounds,
Is fit for treaſons, ſtratagems, and ſpoyles,
The motions of his ſpirit are dull as night,
And his affections darke as Erebus,
Let no ſuch man be truſted: marke the muſicke.

Enter Portia and Nerriſſa.

Por. That light we ſee is burning in my hall:
How farre that little candell throwes his beames,
So ſhines a good deed in a naughty world. (dle?
Ner. When the moone ſhone we did not ſee the can-
Por. So doth the greater glory dim the leſſe,
A ſubſtitute ſhines brightly as a King
Vntill a King be by, and then his ſtate
Empties it ſelfe, as doth an inland brooke
Into the maine of waters: muſique, harke. Muſicke.
Ner. It is your muſicke Madam of the houſe.
Por. Nothing is good I ſee without reſpect,
Methinkes it ſounds much ſweeter then by day?
Ner. Silence beſtowes that vertue on it Madam,
Por. The Crow doth ſing as ſweetly as the Larke

When neither is attended : and I thinke
The Nightingale if ſhe ſhould ſing by day
When every Gooſe is cackling, would be thought
No better a Muſitian then the Wren?
How many things by ſeaſon, ſeaſon'd are
To their right praiſe, and true perfection:
Peace, how the Moone ſleepes with Endimion,
And would not be awak'd

Muſicke ceaſes.

Lor. That is the voyce,
Or I am much deceiu'd of Portia.
Por. He knowes me as the blind man knowes the Cuckow by the bad voyce?
Lor. Deere Lady welcôme home?
Por. We have beene praying for our husbands welfare
Which ſpeed we hope the better for our words,
Are they return'd?
Lor. Madam, they are not yet:
But there is come a Meſſenger before
To ſignifie rheir comming.
Por. Goe in Nerriſſa,
Give order to my ſervants, that they take
No note at all of our being abſent hence,
Nor you Lorenzo, Ieſſica nor you.

A Tucket ſounds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand, I heare his Trumpet,
We are no tell-tales Madam, feare you not.
Por. This night me thinkes is but the daylight ſicke,
It lookes a little paler, 'tis a day:
Such as the day is, when the Sun is hid.

Enter Baſſanio, Anthonio, Gratiano, and their Followers.

Baſ. We ſhould hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walke in abſence of the ſunne.
Bor. Let me give light, but let me not be light,
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband,
And never be Baſſanio ſo from me,
But God ſort all : you are welcome home my Lord.
Baſ. I thanke you Madam, give welcome to my friend
This is the man, this is Anthonio,
To whom I am ſo infinitely bound.
Por. You ſhould in all ſence be much bound to him,
For as I heare he was much bound for you.
Ant. No more then I am well acquitted of.
Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our houſe:
It muſt appeare in other wayes then words,
Therefore I ſcant this breathing curteſie.
Gra. By yonder Moone I ſweare you doe me wrong,
Infaith I gave it to the Iudges Clearke,
Would he were gelt that had it for my part,
Since you doe take it Love ſo much at heart.
Por. A quarrell hoe already, what's the matter?
Gra. Abont a hoope of Gold, a paltry Ring
That ſhe did give me, whoſe Poeſie was
For all the world like Cutlers Poetry
Vpon a knife; Love me, and leave me not.
Ner. What talke you of the Poeſie or the valew:
You ſwore to me when I did give it you,
That you would weare it till the houre of death,
And that it ſhould lye with you in your grave,
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You ſhould have beene reſpective and have kept it.
Gave it a Iudges Clearke : but well I know
The Clearke will ne're weare haire on's face that had it.
Gra. He will, and if he live to be a man.
Ner. If, if a Woman live to be a man.
Gra. Now by this hand I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little ſcrubbed boy,
No higher then thy ſelfe, the Iudges Clearke,
A prating boy that begg'd it as a Fee,
I could not for my heart deny it him.
Por. You were too blame, I muſt be plaine with you,
To part ſo ſlightly with your wives firſt gift,
A thing ſtucke on with oathes upon your finger,
And ſo riveted with faith unto your fleſh.
I gave my Love a Ring, and made him ſweare
Never to part with it, and heere he ſtands:
I dare be ſworne for him, he would not leave it,
Nor plucke it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world maſters. Now in faith Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind a cauſe of griefe,
And 'twere to me I ſhould be mad at it.
Baſ. Why I were beſt to cut my left hand off,
And ſweare I loſt the Ring defending it.
Gra. My Lord Baſſanio gave his Ring away
Vnto the Iudge that begg'd it, and indeed
Deſerv'd it too : and then the Boy his Clearke
That tooke ſome paines in writing, he begg'd mine,
And neither man nor maſter would take ought
But the two Rings.
Por. What Ring gave you my Lord?
Not that I hope which you receiv'd of me.
Baſ. If I could adde a lye unto a fault,
I would deny it : but you ſee my finger
Hath not the Ring upon it, it is gone.
Por. And even ſo voide is your falſe heart of truth.
By heaven I will ne're come in your bed
Vntill I ſee the Ring.
Ner. Nor I in yours, till I againe ſee mine.
Baſ. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the Ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the Ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the Ring,
And how unwillingly I left the Ring,
When nought would be accepted but the Ring,
You would abate the ſtrength of your diſpleaſure?
Por. If you had knowne the vertue of the Ring,
Or halfe her worthineſſe that gave the Ring,
Or your owne honour to containe the Ring,
Your would not then have parted with the Ring:
What man is there ſo much unreaſonable,
If you had pleas'd to have defended it
With any termes of Zeale : wanted the modeſty
To urge the thing held as a ceremony:
Nerriſſa teaches me what to beleeve,
Ile dye for't, but ſome Woman had the Ring?
Baſ. No by mine honor Madam, by my ſoule
No Woman had it, but a civill Doctor,
Which did refuſe three thouſand Ducates of me,
And begg'd the Ring; the which I did deny him,
And ſuffer'd him to goe diſpleas'd away:
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my deere friend. What ſhould I ſay ſweet Lady?
I was inforc'd to ſend it after him,
I was beſet with ſhame and curteſie,
My honor would not let ingratitude
So much beſmeare it. Pardon me good Lady,
And by theſe bleſſed Candles of the night,
Had you beene there, I thinke you would have begg'd
The Ring of me, to give thee worthy Doctor.

Por. Let not that Doctor ere come neere my houſe,
Since he hath got the jewell that I loved,
And that which you did ſweare to keepe for me,
I will become as liberall as you,
Ile not deny him any thing I have,
No, not my body, nor my husbands bed:
Know him I ſhall, I am well ſure of it.
Lye not a night from home. Watch me like Argus,
If you doe not, if I be left alone,
Now by mine honor which is yet mine owne,
Ile have the Doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his Clarke: therefore be well adviſ'd
How you doe leave me to mine owne protection.

Gra. Well, doe you ſo: let not me take him then,
For if I doe, ile mar the yong Clarkes pen.

Ant. I am th'unhappy ſubject of theſe quarrels.

Por. Sir, grieve not you,
You are welcome notwithſtanding.

Baſ. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong,
And in the hearing of theſe many friends
I ſweare to thee, even by thine owne faire eyes
Wherein I ſee my ſelfe.———

Por. Marke you but that?
In both mine eyes he doubly ſees himſelfe:
In each eye one, ſweare by your double ſelfe,
And there's an oath of credit.

Baſ. Nay, but heare me.
Pardon this fault, and by my ſoule I ſweare
I never more will breake an oath with thee.

Anth. I once did lend my body for thy wealth,
Which but for him that had your husbands ring
Had quite miſcarried. I dare be bound againe,
My ſoule upon the forfeit, that your Lord
Will never more breake faith adviſedly.

Por. Then you ſhall be his ſurety: give him this,
And bid him keepe it better then the other.

Ant. Heere Lord Baſſanio, ſwear to keepe this ring.

Baſſ. By heaven it is the ſame I gave the Doctor.

Por. I had it of him: pardon Baſſanio,
For by this ring the Doctor lay with me.

Ner. And pardon me my gentle Gratiano,
For that ſame ſcrubbed boy the Doctors Clarke
In liew of this, laſt night did lye with me.

Gra. Why this is like the mending of high wayes
In Sommer, where the wayes are faire enough:
What, are we Cuckolds ere we have deſerv'd it?

Por. Speake not ſo groſſely, you are all amaz'd;
Heere is a letter, reade it at your leyſure,
It comes from Padua from Bellario.
There you ſhall find that Portia was the Doctor,
Nerriſſa there her Clarke. Lorenzo heere
Shall witneſſe I ſet forth as ſoone as you,
And but ev'n now return'd: I have not yet
Entred my houſe. Anthonio you are welcome,
And I have better newes in ſtore for you
Than you expect: unſeale this letter ſoone,
There you ſhall find three of your Argoſies
Are richly come to harbour ſodainly.
You ſhall not know by what ſtrange accident
I chanced on this letter.

Anth. I am dumbe.

Baſ. Were you the Doctor, and I knew you not?

Gra. Were you the Clarke that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. I, but the Clarke that never meanes to doe it,
Vnleſſe he live untill he be a man.

Baſ. (Sweet Doctor) you ſhall be my bedfellow,
When I am abſent, then lye with my wife.

Ant. (Sweet Lady) you have given me life and living;
For heere I reade for certaine that my ſhips
Are ſafely come to Rodes.

Por. How now Lorenzo?
My Clarke hath ſome good comforts too for you.

Ner. I, and Ile give them him without a fee.
There doe I give to you and Ieſſica
From the rich Iew, a ſpeciall deed of gift
After his death, of all he dyes poſſeſſ'd of.

Loren. Faire Ladies you drop Manna in the way
Of ſtarved people.

Por. It is almoſt morning,
And yet I am ſure you are not ſatisfied.
Of theſe events at full. Let us goe in,
And charge us there upon intergatories,
And we will anſwer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be ſo, the firſt intergatory
That my Nerriſſa ſhall be ſworne on, is,
Whether till the next night ſhe had rather ſtay,
Or goe to bed, now being two houres to day,
But were the day come, I ſhould wiſh it darke,
Till I were couching with the Doctors Clarke.
Well, while I live, Ile feare no other thing
So ſore, as keeping ſafe Nerriſſas ring.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

As you like it.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orlando.

AS I remember Adam, it was upon this faſhion bequeathed me by will, but a poore thouſand Crownes, and as thou ſaiſt, charged my brother on his bleſſing to breed me well: and there begins my ſadneſſe: My brother Iaques he keepes at ſchoole, and report ſpeakes goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keepes me ruſtically at home, or (to ſpeake more properly) ſtayes me heere at home unkept: for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the ſtalling of an Oxe? his horſes are bred better, for beſides that they are faire with their feeding, they are taught their mannage, and to that end Riders deerely hir'd: but I (his brother) gaine nothing under him but growth, for the which his Animals on his dunghils are as much bound to him as I: beſides this nothing that he ſo plentifully gives me, the ſomething that nature gave me, his countenance ſeemes to take from me: he lets me feede with his Hindes, barres me the place of a brother, and as much as in him lyes, mines my gentility with my education. This is it Adam that grieves me, and the ſpirit of my Father, which I thinke is within me, begins to mutiny againſt this ſervitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wiſe remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adam. Yonder comes my Maſter, your brother.

Orlan. Goe apart Adam, and thou ſhalt heare how he will ſhake me up.

Oli. Now Sir, what make you heare?

Orla. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Oli. What marre you then ſir?

Orla. Marry ſir, I am helping you to marre that which God made, a poore unworthy brother of yours with idleneſſe.

Oli. Marry ſir be better employed, and be naught a while.

Orla. Shall I keepe your hogs, and eat huskes with them? what prodigall portion have I ſpent, that I ſhould come to ſuch penury?

Oli. Know you where you are ſir?

Orla. O ſir, very well: heere in your Orchard.

Oli. Know you before whom ſir?

Orla. I, better then him I am before, knowes me: I know you are my eldeſt brother, and in the gentle condition of bloud you ſhould ſo know me: the courteſie of nations allowes you my better, in that you are the firſt borne, but the ſame tradition takes not away my bloud, were there twenty brothers betwixt us: I have as much of my father in me; as you, albeit I confeſſe your comming before me is neerer to his reverence.

Oli. What Boy.

Orla. Come, come elder brother, you are too yong in (this.

Oli. Wilt thou lay hands on me villaine?

Orla. I am no villaine: I am the yongeſt ſonne of ſir Rowland de Boyes, he was my father, and he is thrice a villaine that ſayes ſuch a father begot villaines: wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other had puld out thy tongue, for ſaying ſo, thou haſt raild on thy ſelfe,

Adam, Sweet Maſter be patient, for your Fathers remembrance, be at accord.

Oli. Let me goe I ſay.

Orla. I will not till I pleaſe: you ſhall heare me: my father charg'd you in his will to give me good education: you have train'd me like a pezant, obſcuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities: the ſpirit of my father growes ſtrong in me, and I will no longer endure it: therefore allow me ſuch exerciſes as may become a gentleman, or give me the poore allottery my father left me by teſtament, with that I will goe buy my fortunes.

Oli. And what wilt thou doe? beg when that is ſpent? Well ſir, get you in. I will not long be troubled with you: you ſhall have ſome part of your will, I pray you leave me.

Orla. I will no further offend you, then becomes me for my good.

Oli. Get you with him, you old dogge.

Adam. Is old dogge my reward: moſt true, I have loſt my teeth in your ſervice: God be with my old maſter, he would not have ſpoke ſuch a word. Ex. Orl. Ad.

Oli. Is it even ſo, begin you to grow upon me? I will phyſicke your ranckeneſſe, and yet give no thouſand crownes neither: holla Dennis.

Enter Dennis.

Den. Calls your worſhip.

Oli. Was not Charles thr Dukes Wraſtle heere to ſpeake with me?

Den. So pleaſe your, he is heere at the doore, and importunes acceſſe to you.

Oli. Call him in: 'twill be a good way: and to morrow the wraſtling is.

Enter Charles.

Char. Good morrow to your worſhip.

Oli. Good Mounſieur Charles: what's the new newes at the new Court?

Char. There's no newes at the Court ſir, but the old newes: that is, the old Duke is baniſhed by his yonger brother the new Duke, and three or foure loving Lords have put themſelves into voluntary exile with him, whoſe lands and revenues enrich the new Duke, therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell if Roſalind the Dukes daughter be baniſhed with her Father?

Cha. O no; for the Dukes daughter her Coſen ſo loves her, being ever from their Cradles bred together, that he would have followed her exile, or have died to ſtay behind her; ſhe is at the Court, and no leſſe beloved of her Vncle, then his owne daughter, and never two Ladies loved as they doe.

Oli. Where will the old Duke live?

Cha. They ſay he is already in the Forreſt of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England: they ſay many yong Gentlemen flocke to him every day, and fleet the time careleſly as they did in the golden world.

Oli. What, you wraſtle to morrow before the new Duke?

Charl. Marry doe I ſir: and I came to acquaint you with a matter: I am given ſir ſecretly to underſtand, that your yonger brother Orlando hath a diſpoſition to come in diſguis'd againſt me to try a fall: to morrow ſir I wraſtle for my credit, and he that eſcapes me without ſome broken limbe, ſhall acquit him well: your brother is but young and tender, and for your love I would bee loth to foyle him, as I muſt for my owne honour if he come in: therefore out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withall, that either you might ſtay him from his intendment, or brooke ſuch diſgrace well as he ſhall runne into, in that it is a thing of his owne ſearch, and altogether againſt my will.

Oli. Charles, I thanke thee for thy love to me, which thou ſhalt find I will moſt kindly requite: I had my ſelfe notice of my Brothers purpoſe heerein, and have by under-hand meanes laboured to diſſwade him from it; but he is reſolute. Ile tell thee Charles, it is the ſtubborneſt yong fellow of France, full of ambition, an envious emulator of every mans good parts, a ſecret and villanous contriver againſt me his naturall brother: therefore uſe thy diſcretion, I had as liefe thou didſt breake his necke as his finger. And thou wert beſt looke to't; for if thou doſt him any ſlight diſgrace, or if he doe not mightily grace himſelfe on thee, he will practiſe againſt thee by poyſon, entrap thee by ſome treacherous deviſe, and never leave thee till he hath tane thy life by ſome indirect meanes or other: for I aſſure thee, (and almoſt with teares I ſpeake it) there is not one ſo young, and ſo villanous this day living. I ſpeake but brotherly of him, but ſhould I anathomize him to thee, as he is, I muſt bluſh, and weepe, and thou muſt looke pale and wonder.

Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you: if hee come to morrow, Ile give him his payment: if ever he goe alone againe, Ile never wraſtle for prize more: and ſo God keepe your worſhip. Exit.

Oli. Farewell good Charles. Now will I ſtirre this Gameſter: I hope I ſhall ſee an end of him; for my ſoule (yet I know not why) hates nothing more then he: yet he's gentle, never ſchool'd, and yet learned, full of noble deviſe, of all ſorts enchantingly beloved, and indeed ſo much in the heart of the world, and eſpecially of my owne people, who beſt know him, that I am altogether miſpriſed: but it ſhall not be ſo long, this wraſtler ſhall cleare all: nothing remaines, but that I kindle the boy thither, which now Ile goe about. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Roſalind, and Celia.

Cel. I pray thee Roſalind, ſweet my Coz, be merry.

Roſ. Deere Celia; I ſhow more mirth then I am miſtreſſe of, and would you yet were merrier: unleſſe you could teach me to forget a baniſhed father, you muſt not learne mee how to remember any extraordinary pleaſure.

Cel. Heerein I ſee thou lov'ſt mee not with the full waight that I love thee; if my Vncle thy baniſhed father had baniſhed thy Vncle the Duke my Father, ſo thou hadſt beene ſtill with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine; ſo wouldſt thou, if the truth of thy love to me were ſo righteouſly temper'd, as mine is to thee.

Roſ. Well, I will forget the condition of my eſtate, to rejoyce in yours.

Cel. You know my Father hath no child, but I, nor none is like to have; and truely when he dies, thou ſhalt be his heire? for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee againe in affection: by mine honour I will, and when I breake that oath, let me turne monſter: therefore my ſweet Roſe, my deare Roſe, be merry.

Roſ. From henceforth I will Coz, and deviſe ſports: let me ſee, what thinke you of falling in Love?

Cel. Marry I prethee doe, to make ſport withall: but love no man in good earneſt, nor no further in ſport neyther, then with ſafety of a pure bluſh, thou maiſt in honor come off againe.

Roſ. What ſhall be our ſport then?

Cel. Let us ſit and mocke the good houſwife Fortune from her wheele, that her gifts may henceforth be beſtowed equally.

Roſ. I would we could doe ſo: for her benefits are mightily miſplaced, and the bountifull blind woman doth moſt miſtake in her gifts to women.

Cel. 'Tis true, for thoſe that ſhe makes faire, ſhe ſcarce makes honeſt, and thoſe that ſhe makes honeſt, ſhe makes very ill favouredly.

Roſ. Nay now thou goeſt from Fortunes office to Natures: Fortune reignes in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of Nature.

Enter Clowne.

Cel. No; when Nature hath made a faire creature, may ſhe not by Fortune fall into the fire? though nature hath given us wit to flout at Fortune, hath not Fortune ſent in this foole to cut off the argument?

Roſ. Indeed there is fortune too hard for nature, when fortune makes natures naturall, the cutter off of natures wit.

Cel. Peradventure this is not Fortunes worke neither, but Natures, who perceiving our naturall wits too dull to reaſon of ſuch goddeſſes, hath ſent this Naturall for our whetſtone: for alwayes the dulneſſe of the foole, is the whetſtone of the wits. How now Witte, whither wander you?

Clow. Miſtreſſe, you muſt come away to your father,

Cel. Were you made the meſſenger?

Clo. No by mine honour, but I was bid to come for you

Roſ. Where learned you that oath foole?

Clo. Of a certaine Knight, that ſwore by his Honour they were good Pancakes, and ſwore by his Honour the Muſtard was naught: Now Ile ſtand to it, the Pancakes were naught, and the Muſtard was good, and yet was not the Knight forſworne.

Cel. How prove you that in the great heape of your knowledge?

Roſ. I marry, now unmuzzle you wiſedome.

Clo. Stand you both forth now: ſtroke your chinnes, and ſweare by your beards that I am a knave.

Cel. By our beards (if we had them) thou art.

Clo. By my knavery (if I had it) then I were: but if you ſweare by that that is not, you are not forſworne: no more was this knight ſwearing by his Honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had ſworne it away, before ever he ſaw thoſe Pancakes, or that Muſtard.

Cel. Prethee, who is't that thou means't?

Clo. One that old Ferdericke your Father loves.

Roſ. My Fathers love is enough to honor him enough; ſpeake no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation, one of theſe dayes.

Clo. The more pitty that fooles may not ſpeake wiſely, what Wiſemen doe fooliſhly.

Cel. By my troth thou ſaieſt true: For, ſince the little wit that fooles have was ſilenced, the little foolery that wiſe men have makes a great ſhew; Here comes Mounſieur Le Beu.

Enter Le Beu.

Roſ. With his mouth full of newes.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as Pigeons feed their young.

Roſ. Then ſhall we be newes-cram'd.

Cel. All the better: we ſhallbe the more marketable. Boon-jour Mounſier le Beu, what the newes?

Le Beu. Faire Princeſſe,
You have loſt much good ſport.

Cel. Sport: of what colour?

Le Beu. What colour Madam? How ſhall I anſwer you?

Roſ. As wit and fortune will.

Clo. Or as the deſtinies decrees.

Cel. Well ſaid, that was laid on with a trowell.

Clo. Nay, if I keepe not my ranke,

Roſ. Thou looſeſt thy old ſmell.

Le Beu. You amaze me Ladies: I would have told you of good wraſtling, which you have loſt the ſight of.

Roſ. Yet tell us the manner of the Wraſtling.

Le Beu. I will tell you the beginning: and if it pleaſe your Ladiſhips, you may ſee the end, for the beſt is yet to doe, and heere where you are, they are comming to performe it.

Cel. Well, the beginning that is dead and buried.

Le Beu. There comes an old man, and his three ſons.

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beu. Three proper yong men, of excellent growth and preſence.

Roſ. With bils on their neckes: Be it knowne unto all men by theſe preſents.

Le Beu. The eldeſt of the three, wraſtled with Charles the Dukes Wraſtler, which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribbes, that there is little hope of life in him: So he ſerv'd the ſecond, and ſo the third: yonder they lye, the poore old man their Father, making ſuch pittifull dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Roſ. Alas.

Clo. But what is the ſport Mounſieur, that the Ladies have loſt?

Le Beu. Why this that I ſpeake of.

Clo. Thus men may grow wiſer every day. It is the firſt time that ever I heard breaking of ribbes was ſport for Ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promiſe thee.

Roſ. But is there any elſe longs to ſee this broken Muſicke in his ſides? Is there yet another doates upon ribbreaking? Shall we ſee this wraſtling Coſin?

Le Beu. You muſt if you ſtay heere, for heere is the place appointed for wraſtling, and they are ready to performe it.

Cel. Yonder ſure they are comming. Let us now ſtay and ſee it.

Flouriſh. Enter Duke, Lords, Orlando, Charles and Attendants.

Duk. Come on, ſince the youth will not be intreated,
His owne perill on his forwardneſſe.

Roſ. Is yonder the man?

Le Beu. Even he, Madam.

Cel. Alas, he is too yong: yet he lookes ſucceſſefully.

Du. How now daughter, and Coſin:
Are you crept hither to ſee the wraſtling?

Roſ. I my Liedge, ſo pleaſe you give us leave.

Du. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is ſuch oddes in the man: In pitty of the challengers youth, I would faine diſſwade him, but he will not be entreated. Speake to him Ladies, ſee if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hither good Mounſieur Le Beu.

Duk. Doe ſo: Ile not be by.

Le Beu. Mounſieur the Challenger, the Princeſſe calls for you.

Orla. I attend them with all reſpect and duty.

Roſ. Young man, have you challeng'd Charles the Wraſtler?

Orl. No faire Princeſſe: he is the generall challenger, I come but as others doe, to try with him the ſtrength of my youth.

Cel. Yong Gentleman, your ſpirits are too bold for your yeares: you have ſeene cruell proofe of this mans ſtrength, if you ſaw your ſelfe with your eyes, or knew your ſelfe with your judgement, the feare of your adventure would counſell you to a more equall enterpriſe. We pray you for your owne ſake to embrace your owne ſafety, and give over this attempt.

Roſ. Doe yong Sir, your reputation ſhall not therefore be miſpriſed: we will make it our ſuite to the Duke, that the wraſtling might not goe forward.

Orl. I beſeech you, puniſh me not with your harde thoughts, wherein I confeſſe me much guilty to deny ſo faire and excellent Ladies any thing. But let your faire eyes, and gentle wiſhes goe with me to my triall; wherein if I be foil'd, there is but one ſham'd that was never gracious: if kil'd, but one dead that is willing to be ſo: I ſhall doe my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me; the world no injury, for in it I have nothing: onely in the world I fill up a place, which may be better ſupplyed, when I have made it empty.

Roſ. The little ſtrength that I have, I would it were with you.

Cel. And mine to eeke out hers.
Roſ. Fare you well: pray heaven I be deceiv'd in you.
Cel. Your hearts deſires be with you.
Char. Come, where is this yong gallant, that is ſo deſirous to lye with his mother earth?
Orla. Ready ſir, but his will hath in it a more modeſt working.
Duk. You ſhall try but one fall.
Cha. No, I warrant your Grace you ſhall not entreat him to a ſecond, that have ſo mightily perſwaded him from a firſt.
Orla. You meane to mocke me after: you ſhould not have mockt me before: but come your wayes.
Roſ. Now Hercules, be thy ſpeede yong man.
Cel. I would I were inviſible, to catch the ſtrong fellow by the legge. Wraſtle.
Roſ. Oh excellent yong man.
Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who ſhould downe. Shout.
Duk. No more, no more.
Orla. Yes I beſeech your Grace, I am not yet well breath'd.
Duk. How do'ſt thou Charles?
Le Beu. He cannot ſpeake my Lord.
Duk. Beare him away:
What is thy name yong man?
Orla. Orlando my Liege, the yongeſt ſonne of Sir Rowland de Boyes.
Duk. I would thou hadſt beene ſonne to ſome man elſe,
The world eſteem'd thy father honourable,
But I did find him ſtill mine enemy:
Thou ſhould'ſt have better pleas'd me with this deed,
Hadſt thou deſcended from another houſe:
But fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth,
I would thou had'ſt told me of another Father.
Exit. Duk.
Cel. Were I my Father (Coze) would I doe this?
Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Rowlands ſonne,
His yongeſt ſonne, and would not change that calling
To be adopted heire to Fredricke.
Roſ. My Father lou'd Sir Rowland as his ſoule,
And all the world was of my Fathers mind,
Had I before knowne this yong man his ſonne,
I ſhould have given him teares unto entreaties,
Ere he ſhould thus have ventur'd.
Cel. Gentle Coſen,
Let us goe thanke him, and encourage him:
My Fathers rough and envious diſpoſition
Stickes me at heart: Sir, you have well deſerv'd,
If you doe keepe your promiſes in love,
But juſtly as you have exceeded all in promiſe,
Your Miſtris ſhall be happy.
Roſ. Gentleman,
Weare this for me: one out of ſuites with fortune
That could give more, but that her hand lackes meane.
Shall we goe Coze?
Cel. I: fare you well faire Gentleman.
Orla. Can I not ſay, I thanke you? My better parts
Are all throwne downe, and that which here ſtands up
Is but a quintine, a meere liveleſſe blocke.
Roſ. He calls us backe: my pride fell with my fortunes
Ile aske him what he would: Did you call Sir?
Sir, you have wraſtled well, and overthrowne
More then your enemies.
Cel. Will you goe Coze?
Roſ. Have with you: fare you well. Exit.

Or. What paſſion hangs theſe waights upon my tongue?
I cannot ſpeake to her, yet ſhe urg'd conference.

Enter Le Beu.

O poore Orlando! thou art overthrowne
Or Charles, or ſomething weaker maſters thee.
Le Beu. Good ſir, I doe in friendſhip counſaile you
To leave this place; Albeit you have deſerv'd
High commendation, true applauſe, and love;
Yet ſuch is now the Dukes condition,
That he miſconſters all that you have done:
The Duke is humorous, what he is indeed
More ſuites you to conceive, then I to ſpeake of.
Orla. I thanke you ſir; and pray you tell me this,
Which of the two was daughter of the Duke,
That heere was at the Wraſtling?
Le Beu. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners,
But yet indeed the taller is his daughter,
The other is daughter to the baniſh'd Duke,
And heere detain'd by her uſurping Vncle
To keepe his daughter company, whoſe loves
Are deerer then the naturall bond of Siſters:
But I can tell you, that of late this Duke
Hath tane diſpleaſure 'gainſt his gentle Neece,
Grounded upon no other argument,
But that the people praiſe her for vertues,
And pitty her, for her good fathers ſake;
And on my life his malice 'gainſt the Lady
Will ſodainely breake forth: Sir, fare you well,
Hereafter in a better world then this,
I ſhall deſire more love and knowledge of you.
Orl. I reſt much bounden to you: fare you well.
Thus muſt I from the ſmoake into the ſmother,
From tyrant Duke, unto a tyrant Brother.
But heavenly Roſaline. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Celia, and Roſaline.

Cel. Why Coſn, why Roſaline: Cupid have mercy, Not a word?
Roſ. Not one to throw at a dog.
Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be caſt away upon curs, throw ſome of them at me; come, lame me with reaſons.
Roſ. Then there were two Coſens laid up, when the one ſhould be lam'd with reaſons, and the other mad without any.
Cel. But is all this for your Father?
Roſ. No, ſome of it is for my childes Father: Oh how full of briers is this working day world.
Cel. They are but burs, Coſen, throwne upon thee in holiday foolery, if we walke not in the trodden paths, our very petty-coates will catch them.
Roſ. I could ſhake them off my coate, theſe burs are in my heart.
Cel. Hem them away.
Roſ. I would try if I could cry hem, and have him.
Cel. Come, come, wraſtle with thy affections.
Roſ. O they take the part of a better wraſtler then my ſelfe.
Cel. O, a good wiſh upon you: you will try in time in deſpight of a fall: but turning theſe jeſts out of ſervice, let us take in good earneſt: Is it poſſible on ſuch a ſodaine, you ſhould fall into ſo ſtrong a liking with old Sir Roulands yongeſt ſonne?

Roſ. The Duke my Father lov'd his Father deerely.

Cel. Doth it therefore enſue that you ſhould love his Sonne deerely? By this kind of chaſe, I ſhould hate him, for my father hated his father deerely; yet I hate not Orlando.

Roſ. No faith, hate him nor for my ſake.

Cel. Why ſhould I not? doth he not deſerve well?

Enter Duke with Lords.

Roſ. Let me love him for that, and doe you love him
Becauſe I doe. Looke, here comes the Duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Duk. Miſtris, diſpatch you with your ſafeſt haſte,
And get you from our Court.

Roſ. Me Vnckle!

Duk. You Coſen,
Within theſe ten dayes if that thou beeſt found
So neere our publike Court as twenty miles,
Thou dieſt for it.

Roſ. I doe beſeech your Grace
Let me the knowledge of my fault beare with me:
If with my ſelfe I hold intelligence,
Or have acquaintance with mine owne deſires,
If that I doe not dreame, or be not franticke,
(As I doe truſt I am not) then deere Vncle,
Never ſo much as in a thought unborne,
Did I offend your highneſſe.

Duke. Thus doe all Traitors,
If their purgation did conſiſt in words,
They are as innocent as grace it ſelfe;
Let it ſuffice thee that I truſt thee not.

Roſ. Yet your miſtruſt cannot make me a Traitor;
Tell me whereon the likelihood depends?

Duk. Thou art thy Fathers daughter, there's enough.

Roſ So was I when your highneſſe tooke his Dukdome,
So was I when your highneſſe baniſht him;
Treaſon is not inherited my Lord,
Or if we did derive it from our friends,
What's that to me, my Father was no Traitor:
Then good my Leige, miſtake me not ſo much,
To thinke my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Deere Soveraigne heare me ſpeake.

Duk. I Celia, we ſtaid her for your ſake,
Elſe had ſhe with her Father rang'd along.

Cel. I did not then intreat to have her ſtay.
It was your pleaſure, and your owne remorſe,
I was too yong that time to value her,
But now I know her: if ſhe be a Traitor,
Why ſo am I; we ſtill have ſlept together,
Roſe at an inſtant, learn'd, plaid, eate together,
And whereſoere we went, like Iunos Swans,
Still we went coupled and inſeparable.

Duk. Shee is too ſubtile for thee, and her ſmoothnes
Her very ſilence, and her patience,
Speake to the people, and they pitty her:
Thou art a foole, ſhe robs thee of thy name,
And thou wilt ſhow more bright, and ſeeme more vertuous
When ſhe is gone: then open not thy lips,
Firme, and irrevocable is my doombe,
Which I have paſt upon her, ſhe is baniſh'd.

Cel. Pronounce that ſentence then on me my Leige,
I cannot live out of her company.

Duk. You are a foole: you Neice provide your ſelfe,
If you out-ſtay the time, upon mine honor,
And in the greatneſſe of my word you dye.

Exit Duke, &c.

Cel. O my poore Roſaline, whither wilt thou goe?
Wilt thou change father? I will give thee mine:
I charge thee be not thou more grieu'd then I am.

Roſ. I have more cauſe.

Cel. Thou haſt not Coſen,
Prethee be cheerefull; know'ſt thou not the Duke
Hath baniſh'd me his daughter?

Roſ. That he hath not.

Cel. No, hath not? Roſaline lackes then the love
Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one,
Shall we be ſundred? ſhall we part ſweet girle?
No, let my Father ſeeke another heire:
Therefore deviſe with me how we may flye
Whither to goe, and what to beare with us,
And doe not ſeeke to take your charge upon you,
To beare your griefes your ſelfe, and leave me out:
For by this heaven (now at our ſorrowes pale;)
Say what thou canſt, Ile goe along with thee.

Roſ. Why, whither ſhall we goe?

Cel. To ſeeke my Vncle in the Forreſt of Arden.

Roſ. Alas, what danger will it be to us,
(Maides as we are) to travell forth ſo farre?
Beauty provoketh theeves ſooner then gold.

Cel. Ile put my ſelfe in poore and meane attire,
And with a kind of vmber ſmitch my face,
The like doe you, ſo ſhall we paſſe along,
And never ſtir aſſailants.

Roſ. Were it not better,
Becauſe that I am more then common tall,
That I did ſuite me all points like a man,
A gallant curtelax upon my thigh,
A bore-ſpeare in my hand, and in my heart
Lye there what hidden womans feare there will,
Weele have a ſwaſhing and a marſhall outſide,
As many other manniſh cowards have,
That doe outface it with their ſemblances.

Cel. What ſhall I call thee when thou art a man?

Roſ. Ile have no worſe a name then Ioves owne Page,
And therefore looke you call me Ganimed,
But what will you be call'd?

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my ſtate:
No longer Celia, but Aliena.

Roſ. But Coſen, what if we aſſaid to ſteale
The clowniſh Foole out of your Fathers Court:
Would he not be a comfort to our travaile?

Cel. Heele goe along ore th[illegible] wide world with me,
Leaue me alone to wooe him; Let's away
And get our Iewels and our wealth together;
Deviſe the fitteſt time, and ſafeſt way
To hide us from purſuite that will be made
After my flight: now goe we in content
To liberty, and not to baniſhment.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Duke Senior: Amyens, and two or three Lords like Forreſters.

Duk. Sen. Now my Coe-mates, and brother in exile:
Hath not old cuſtome made this life more ſweet

Then that of painted pompe? Are not theſe woods
More free from perill then the envious Court?
Heere feele we not the penalty of Adam,
The ſeaſons difference, as the Icie phange
And churliſh chiding of the winters winde,
Which when it bites and blowes upon my body
Even till I ſhrinke with cold, I ſmile, and ſay
This is no flattery: theſe are counſellors
That feelingly perſwade me what I am:
Sweet are the vſes of adverſity
Which like the toad, ougly and venemous,
Weares yet a precious Iewell in his head:
And this our life exempt from publike haunt,
Findes tongues in trees, bookes in the running brookes,
Sermons in ſtones, and good in every thing.
Amien. I would not change it, happy is your Grace
That can tranſlate the ſtubbornneſſe of fortune
Into ſo quiet and ſo ſweet a ſtile.
Duk. Sen. Come, ſhall we goe and kill us veniſon?
And yet it irkes me the poore dapled fooles
Being native Burgers of this deſert City,
Should in their owne confines with forked heads
Have their round hanches goard.
1. Lord. Indeed my Lord
The melancholy Iaques grieves at that,
And in that kind ſweares you doe more uſurpe
Then doth your brother that hath baniſh'd you:
To day my Lord of Amiens, and my ſelfe,
Did ſteale behind him as he lay along
Vnder an oake, whoſe anticke roope peepes out
Vpon the brooke that brawles along this wood,
To the which place a poore ſequeſtred Stag
That from the Hunters ayme had tane a hurt,
Did come to languiſh; and indeed my Lord
The wretched animall heav'd forth ſuch groanes
That their diſcharge did ſtretch his leatherne coat
Almoſt to burſting, and the big round teares
Cours'd one another downe his innocent noſe
In pitteous chaſe: and thus the hairy foole,
Much marked of the melancholly Iaques,
Stood on th'extremeſt verge of the ſwift brooke,
Augmenting it with teares.
Duk. Sen. But what ſaid Iaques?
Did he not moralize this ſpectacle?
1. Lord. O yes, into a thouſand ſimilies.
Firſt, for his weeping into the needleſſe ſtreame;
Poore Deere quoth he, thou mak'ſt a teſtament
As worldlings doe, giving thy ſum of more
To that which had too much: then being alone,
Left and abandoned of his velvet friend;
'Tis right quoth he, thus miſery doth part
The Fluxe of company: anon a careleſſe Heard
Full of the paſture, jumps along by him
And never ſtayes to greet him: I quoth Iaques,
Sweepe on you fat and greazy Cittizens,
'Tis juſt the faſhion; wherefore doe you looke
Vpon that poore and broken bankrupt there?
Thus moſt invectively he pierceth through
The body of the Country, City, Court,
Yea, and of this our life, ſwearing that we
Are meere uſurpers, tyrants, and whats worſe
To fright the Animals, and to kill them up
In their aſſign'd and native dwelling place.
Du. Sen. And did you leave him in this contemplation?
2. Lord. We did my Lord, weeping and commenting Vpon the ſobbing Deere.
Duk. Sen. Show me the place,
I love to cope him in theſe ſullen fits,
For then he's full of matter.
1. Lor. Ile bring you to him ſtrait. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Duke, with Lords.

Duk. Can it be poſſible that no man ſaw them?
It cannot be, ſome villaines of my Court
Are of conſent and ſufferance in this.
1. Lord, I cannot heare of any that did ſee her,
The Ladies her attendants of her chamber
Saw her a bed, and in the morning early,
They found the bed untreaſur'd of their Miſtris.
2. Lord. My Lord, the royniſh Clowne, at whom ſo oft,
Your Grace was wont to laugh, is alſo miſſing:
Hiſperia the Princeſſe Gentlewoman
Confeſſes that ſhe ſecretly ore-heard
Your daughter and her Coſen much commend
The parts and graces of the Wraſtler
That did but lately foile the ſynowy Charles,
And ſhe beleeves where ever they are gone
That youth is ſurely in their company.
Duk. Send to his brother, fetch that gallant hither,
If he be abſent, bring his Brother to me,
Ile make him find him: doe this ſodainely;
And let not ſearch and inquiſition quaile,
To bring againe theſe fooliſh runawayes. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Orlando, and Adam.

Orl. Who's there?
Ad. What my yong maſter, oh my gentle maſter,
Oh my ſweet maſter, O you memory
Of old Sir Rowland? why, what make you here?
Why are you vertuous? Why doe people love you?
And wherefore are you gentle, ſtrong, and valiant?
Why would you be ſo fond to overcome
The bonny priſer of the humorous Duke?
Your praiſe is come too ſwiftly home before you.
Know you not Maſter, to ſome kind of men,
Their graces ſerve them but as enemies,
No more doe yours: your vertues gentle Maſter
Are ſanctified and holy traitors to you:
Oh what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that beares it?
Orl. Why, what's the matter?
Ad. O unhappy youth,
Come not with theſe doores: within this roofe
The enemy of all your graces lives
Your brother, no, no brother, yet the ſonne
(Yet not the ſon, I will not call him ſon)
Of him I was about to call his Father,
Hath heard your praiſes, and this night he meanes,
To burne the lodging where you uſe to lye,
And you within it: if he faile of that

He will have other meanes to cut you off;
I overheard him: and his practiſes:
This is no place, this houſe is but a butchery;
Abhorre it, feare it, doe not enter it.

Orl. Why whither Adam would'ſt thou have me goe?

Ada. No matter whither, for you come not here.

Orl. What, would'ſt thou have me goe and beg my (food,
Or with a baſe and boiſtrous Sword enforce
A theeviſh living on the common rode?
This I muſt doe, or know not what to doe:
Yet this I will not doe, doe how I can,
I rather will ſubject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood, and bloudy brother.

Ada. But doe not ſo: I have five hundred Crownes,
The thrifty hire I ſaved under you father,
Which I did ſtore to be my foſter Nurſe,
When ſervice ſhould in my old limbes lye lame,
And unregarded age in corners throwne,
Take that, and he that doth the Ravens feede,
Yea providently caters for the Sparrow,
Be comfort to my age: here is the gold,
All this I give you, let me be your ſervant,
Though I looke old, yet I am ſtrong and luſty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot, and rebellious liquors in my bloud,
Nor did not with unbaſhfull forehead woe,
The meanes of weakeneſſe and debility,
Therefore my age is as a luſty winter,
Froſty, but kindly; let me goe with you,
Ile doe the ſervice of a younger man
In all your buſineſſe and neceſſities.

Orl. Oh good old man, how well in thee appeares
The conſtant ſervice of the antique world,
When ſervice ſweate for duty, not for meede:
Thou art not for the faſhion of theſe times,
Where none will ſweate, but for promotion,
And having that doe choake their ſervice up,
Even with the having, it is not ſo with thee:
But poore old man, thou prun'ſt a rotten tree,
That cannot ſo much as a bloſſome yeeld,
In lieu of all thy paines and husbandry,
But come thy wayes, weele goe along together,
And ere we have thy youthfull wages ſpent,
Weele light upon ſome ſetled low content.

Ada. Maſter goe on, and I will follow thee
To the laſt gaſpe with truth and loyalty,
From ſeventy yeeres, till now almoſt fourſcore
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At ſeventeene yeeres, many their fortunes ſeeke
But at fourſcore, it is too late a weeke,
Yet fortune cannot recompence me better
Then to dye well, and not my Maſters debter. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Roſaline for Ganimed, Celia for Aliena, and Clowne, alias Touchſtone.

Roſ. O Iupiter, how merry are my ſpirits?

Clo. I care not for my ſpirits, if my legges were not weary.

Roſ. I could find in my heart, to diſgrace my mans apparell, and to cry like a woman: but I muſt comfort the weaker veſſell, as doublet and hoſe ought to ſhow it ſelfe coragious to petty-coate; therefore courage, good Aliena.

Cel. I pray you beare with me, I can goe no further.

Clo. For my part, I had rather beare with you, then beare you: yet I ſhould beare no croſſe if I did beare you, for I thinke you have no money in your purſe.

Roſ. Well, this is the Forreſt of Arden.

Clo. I, now am I in Arden, the more foole I, when I was at home I was in a better place, but Travellers muſt be content.

Enter Corin, and Silvius.

Roſ. I, be ſo good Touchſtone: looke you, who comes here, a yong man and an old in ſolemne talke.

Cor. That is the way to make her ſcorne you ſtill.

Sil. Oh Corin, that thou knew'ſt how I doe love her.

Cor. I partly gueſſe: for I have lov'd ere now.

Sil. No Corin, being old, thou canſt not gueſſe,
Though in thy youth thou waſt as true a lover,
As ever ſigh'd upon a midnight pillow:
But if thy love were ere like to mine,
As ſure I thinke did never man love ſo:
How many actions moſt ridiculous,
Haſt thou beene drawne to by thy fantaſie?

Cor. Into a thouſand that I have forgotten.

Sil. Oh thou didſt then never love ſo hartily,
If thou remembreſt not the ſlighteſt folly,
That ever love did make thee runne into,
Thou haſt not lov'd.
Or if thou haſt not ſate as I doe now,
Wearying thy hearer in thy Miſtris praiſe,
Thou haſt not lov'd.
Or if thou haſt not broke from company,
Abruptly as my paſſion now makes me,
Thou haſt not lov'd.
O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe. Exeunt.

Roſ. Alas poore Shepheard! ſearching of their wound,
I have by hard adventure found mine owne.

Clo. And I mine: I remember when I was in love, I broke my ſword upon a ſtone, and bid him take that for comming a nights to Iane Smile, and I remember the kiſſing of her batlet, and the Cowes dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milk'd; and I remember the wooing of a peaſcod inſtead of her, from whom I tooke two cods, and giving her them againe, ſaid with weeping teares, weare theſe for my ſake: we that are true Lovers, runne into ſtrange capers; but as all is mortall in nature, ſo is all nature in love, mortall in folly.

Roſ. Thou ſpeak'ſt wiſer then thou art ware of.

Clo. Nay, I ſhall ne're be ware of mine owne wit, till I breake my ſhins againſt it.

Roſ. Iove, Iove, this Shepheards paſſion,
Is much upon my faſhion.

Clo. And mine, but it growes ſomething ſtale with me.

Cel. I pray you, one of you queſtion yon'd man,
If he for gold will give us any foode,
I faint almoſt to death.

Clo. Holla; you Clowne.

Roſ. Peace foole, he's not thy kinſman.

Cor. Who cals?

Clo. Your betters Sir.

Cor. Elſe are they very wretched.

Roſ. Peace I ſay; good even to you friend.
Cor. And to you gentle Sir, and to you all.
Roſ. I prethee Shepheard, if that love or gold
Can in this deſert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may reſt our ſelves, and feed:
Here's a yong maid with travaile much oppreſſed,
And faint's for ſuccour.
Cor. Faire Sir, I pitty her,
And wiſh for her ſake more then for mine owne,
My fortunes were more able to releeve her:
But I am ſhepheard to another man,
And doe not ſheere the Fleeces that I graze:
My maſter is of churliſh diſpoſition,
And little wreakes to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hoſpitality.
Beſides his Coate, his Flockes, and bounds of feede
Are now on ſale, and at our ſheep-coat now
By reaſon of his abſence there is nothing
That you will feed on: but what is, come ſee,
And in my voyce moſt welcome ſhall you be.
Roſ. What is he that ſhall buy his flocke and paſture?
Cor. That yong Swaine that you ſaw heere but erewhile.
That little cares for buying any thing.
Roſ. I pray thee, if it ſtand with honeſty,
Buy thou the Cottage, paſture, and the flocke,
And thou ſhalt have to pay for it of us.
Cel. And we will mend thy wages:
I like this place, and willingly could
Waſte my time in it.
Cor. Aſſuredly the thing is to be ſold:
Goe with me, if you like upon report,
The ſoile, the profit, and this kind of life,
I will your very faithfull Feeder be,
And buy it with your gold right ſodainely. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter, Amyens, Iaques, and others.

Song.

Vnder the greene wood tree,
who loves to lye with me,
And turne his merry Note,
unto the ſweet Birds thr ote:
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Heere ſhall he ſee no enemy,
But Winter and rough Weather.

Iaq. More, more, I prethee more.
Amy. It will make you melancholly Mounſieur Iaques
Iaq. I thanke it: More, I prethee more,
I can ſucke melancholly out of a ſong,
As a Weazel ſuckes egges: More, I prethee more.
Amy. My voyce is ragged, I know I cannot pleaſe you.
Iaq. I doe not deſire you to pleaſe me,
I doe deſire you to ſing:
Come, more, another ſtanzo: Call you'em ſtanzo's?
Amy. What you will Mounſieur Iaques.
Iaq. Nay, I care not for their names, they owne me nothing. Will you ſing.
Aym. More at your requeſt, then to pleaſe my ſelfe.
Iaq. Well then, if ever I thanke any man, Ile thanke you: but that they call complement is like th'encounter of two dog-Apes. And when a man thankes me hartily, me thinkes I have given him a peny, and he renders me the beggerly thankes. Come ſing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.
Amy. Well, Ile end the ſong. Sirs, cover the while, the Duke will drinke under this tree; he hath beene all this day to looke you.
Iaq. And I have beene all this day to avoyd him:
He is too diſputeable for my company:
I thinke of as many matters as he, but I give
Heaven thankes, and make no boaſt of them.
Come, warble, come.

Song. Altogether heere.

Who doth ambition ſhunne,
and loves to live i'th Sunne,
Seeking the food he eates,
and pleas'd with what he gets:
Come hither, come hither, come hither,
Heere ſhall he ſee, &c.

Iaq. Ile give you a verſe to this note,
That I made yeſterday in deſpight of my invention.
Aym. And ile ſing it.
Iaq. Thus it goes.
If it doe come to paſſe, that any man turne Aſſe:
Leaving his wealth and eaſe,
A ſtubborne will to pleaſe,
Ducdame, ducdame, ducdame:
Heere ſhall he ſee, groſſe fooles as he,
And if he will come to me.
Aym. What's that Ducdame?
Iaq. 'Tis a Greeke invocation, to call fooles into a circle. Ile goe ſleepe if I can: if I cannot, Ile raile againſt all the firſt borne of Egypt.
Aym. And Ile goe ſeeke the Duke,
His banket is prepar'd. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Orlando, and Adam.

Adam. Deere Maſter, I can goe no further:
O I dye for food. Heere lye I downe,
And meaſure out my grave. Farwell kind maſter.
Orl. Why how now Adam? No greater heart in thee!
Live a little, comfort a little, cheere thy ſelfe a little.
If this uncouth Forreſt yeeld any thing ſavage,
I will either be food for it, or bring it for foode to thee:
Thy conceite is neerer death, then thy powers.
For my ſake be comfortable, hold death a while
At the armes end: I will heere be with thee preſently,
And if I bring thee not ſomething to eate,
I will give thee leave to dye: but if thou dieſt
Before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour.
Well ſaid, thou look'ſt cheerely,
And Ile be with thee quickly: yet thou lieſt
In the bleake ayre. Come, I will beare thee
To ſome ſhelter, and thou ſhalt not dye
For lacke of a dinner,
If there live any thing in this Deſert.
Cheerely good Adam. Exeun

Scæ

Scæna Septima.

Enter Duke Sen. & Lord, like out-lawes.

Du. Sen. I thinke he be transform'd into a beaſt,
For I can no where finde him, like a man.
1. Lord. My Lord, he is but even now gone hence,
Heere was he merry, hearing of a Song.
Du. Sen. If he compact of iarres, grow Muſicall,
We ſhall have ſhortly diſcord in the Spheares:
Go ſeeke him, tell him I would ſpeake with him.

Enter Iaques.

1. Lord. He ſaves my labor by his owne approach.
Du. Sen. Why how now Monſieur, what a life is this
That your poore friends muſt wooe your companie,
What, you looke merrily.
Iaq. A Foole, a foole: I met a foole i'th Forreſt,
A motley Foole (a miſerable world:)
As I do live by food, I met a foole,
Who laid him downe, and bask'd him in the Sun,
And rail'd on Lady Fortune in good termes,
In good ſet termes, and yet a motley foole.
Good morrow foole (quoth I:) no Sir, quoth he,
Call me not foole, till heaven hath ſent me fortune,
And then he drew a diall from his poake,
And looking on it, with lacke-luſtre eye,
Sayes, very wiſely, it is ten a clocke:
Thus we may ſee (quoth he) how the world wagges:
'Tis but an houre agoe, ſince it was nine,
And after one houre more, 'twill be eleven,
And ſo from houre to houre, we ripe, and ripe,
And then from houre to houre, we rot, and rot,
And thereby hangs a tale. When I did heare
The motley Foole, thus morall on the time,
My Lungs began to crow like Chanticleere,
That Fooles ſhould be ſo deepe contemplative:
And I did laugh, ſans intermiſſion
An houre by his diall. Oh noble foole,
A worthy foole: Motley's the onely weare.
Du. Sen. What foole is this?
Iaq. O worthie foole: One that hath bin a Courtier
And ſayes, if Ladies be but young, and faire,
They have the gift to know it: and in his braine,
Which is as dry as the remainder bisket
After a voyage: He hath ſtrange places cram'd
With obſervation, the which he vents
In mangled formes. O that I were a foole,
I am ambitious for a motley coat.
Du. Sen. Thou ſhalt have one.
Iaq. It is my onely ſuite,
Provided that you weed your better judgements
Of all opinion that growes ranke in them,
That I am wiſe. I muſt have liberty
Withall, as large a Charter as the winde,
To blow on whom I pleaſe, for ſo fooles have:
And they that are moſt galled with my folly,
They moſt muſt laugh: And why ſir muſt they ſo?
The why is plaine, as way to Pariſh Church:
He, that a foole doth very wiſely hit,
Doth very fooliſhly, although he ſmart
Seeme ſenſeleſſe of the bob. If not,
The Wiſe-mans folly is anathomiz'd
Even by the ſquandring glances of the foole.
Inveſt me in my motley: Give me leave
To ſpeake my minde, and I will through and through
Cleanſe the foule body of th' infected world,
If they will patiently receive my medicine.
Du. Sen. Fie on thee. I can tell what thou wouldſt do.
Iaq. What, for a Counter, would I do, but good?
Du. Sen. Moſt miſcheeuous foule ſin, in chiding ſin:
For thou thy ſelfe haſt ben a Libertine,
As ſenſuall as the brutiſh ſting it ſelfe,
And all th'imboſſed ſores, and headed evils,
That thou with licenſe of free foot haſt caught,
Would'ſt thou diſgorge into the generall world.
Iaq. Why who cries out on pride,
That can therein taxe any private partie:
Doth it not flow as hugely as the Sea,
Till that the wearie verie meanes do ebbe.
What woman in the Citie do I name,
When that I ſay the Cittie woman beares
The coſt of Princes on unworthie ſhoulders?
Who can come in, and ſay that I meane her,
When ſuch a one as ſhe, ſuch is her neighbour?
Or what is he of baſeſt function,.
That ſayes his braverie is not on my coſt,
Thinking that I meane him, but therein ſuites
His folly to the mettle of my ſpeech,
There then, how then, what then, let me ſee wherein
My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himſelfe: if he be free,
Why then my taxing like a wild-gooſe flies
Vnclaim'd of any man. But who comes here?

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Forbeare, and eate no more.
Iaq. Why I have eate none yet.
Orl. Nor ſhalt not, till neceſſitie be ſeru'd.
Iaq. Of what kinde ſhould this Cocke come of?
Du. Sen. Art thou thus bolden'd man by thy diſtres?
Or elſe a rule deſpiſer of good manners,
That in ciuility thou ſeem'ſt ſo emptie?
Orl. You touch'd my veine at firſt, the thornie point
Of bare diſtreſſe, that hath tane from me the ſhew
Of ſmooth civilitie: yet am I in-land bred,
And know ſome nourture: But forbeare, I ſay,
He dies that touches any of this fruite,
Till I, and my affaires are anſwered.
Iaq. And you will not be anſwer'd with reaſon,
I muſt dye.
Du. Sen. What would you have?
Your gentleneſſe ſhall force, more then your force
Move us to gentleneſſe.
Orl. I almoſt die for food, and let me have it.
Du. Sen. Sit downe and feed, & welcome to our table
Orl. Speake you ſo gently? Pardon me I pray you,
I thought that all things had beene ſavage heere,
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of ſterne command'ment. But what ere you are
That in this deſert inacceſſible,
Vnder the ſhade of melancolly boughes,
Looſe, and neglect the creeping houres of time:
If ever you have look'd on better dayes:
If ever beene where bels have knoll'd to Church:
If ever ſate at any good mans feaſt:
If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a teare,
And know what 'tis to pittie, and be pittied:
Let gentleneſſe my ſtrong enforcement be,
In the which hope, I bluſh, and hide my Sword.

Du. Sen. True is it, that we haue ſeene better dayes,
And haue with holy bell bin knowld to Church,
And ſat at good mens feaſts, and wip'd our eyes
Of drops, that ſacred pitty hath engendred:
And therefore ſit you downe in gentleneſſe,
And take vpon command, what helpe we haue
That to your wanting may be miniſtred,

Orl. Then but forbeare your food a little while:
Whiles (like a Doe) I go to finde my Fawne,
And giue it food. There is an old poore man,
Who after me, hath many a wearie ſteppe
Limpt in pure loue: till he be firſt ſuffic'd,
Oppreſt with two weake euils, age, and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.

Du. Sen. Go finde him out,
And we will nothing waſte till you returne.

Orl. I thanke ye, and be bleſt for your good comfort.

Du. Sen. Thou ſeeſt, we are not all alone vnhappie:
This wide and vniuerſall Theater
Preſents more wofull Pageants then the Sceane
Wherein we play in.

Ia. All the world's a ſtage,
And all the men and women, meerely Players;
They haue their Exits and their Entrances,
And one man in his time plaies many parts,
His Acts being ſeuen ages. At firſt the Infant,
Mewling, and puking in the Nurſes armes:
Then, the whining Schoole-boy with his Satchell
And ſhining morning face, creeping like ſnaile
Vnwillingly to ſchoole. And then the Louer,
Sighing like Furnace, with a wofull ballad
Made to his Miſtreſſe eye-brow. Then a Soldier,
Full of ſtrange oathes, and bearded like the Pard,
Ielous in honor, ſodaine, and quicke in quarrell,
Seeking the bubble Reputation
Euen in the Canons mouth: And then, the Iuſtice
In faire round belly, with good Capon lin'd,
With eyes ſeuere, and beard of formall cut,
Full of wiſe ſawes, and moderne inſtances,
And ſo he playes his part. The ſixt age ſhifts
Into the leane and ſlipper'd Pantaloone,
With ſpectacles on noſe, and pouch on ſide,
His youthfull hoſe well ſau'd, a world too wide,
For his ſhrunke ſhanke, and his bigge manly voyce,
Turning againe toward childiſh trebble pipes,
And whiſtles in his ſound. Laſt Scene of all,
That ends this ſtrange euentfull hiſtorie,
Is ſecond childiſhneſſe, and meere obliuion,
Sans teeth, ſans eyes, ſans taſte, ſans euery thing.

Enter Orlando with Adam.

Du. Sen. Welcome: ſet downe your venerable burthen, and let him feed.

Orl. I thanke you moſt for him.

Ad. So had you neede,
I ſcarce can ſpeake to thanke you for my ſelfe.

Du. Sen. Welcome, fall too: I will not trouble you,
As yet to queſtion you about your fortunes:
Giue vs ſome muſicke, and good Cozen, ſing.

Song.

Blow, blow, thou winter winde,
Thou art not ſo vnkinde, as mans ingratitude
Thy tooth is not ſo keene, becauſe thou art not ſeene, although thy breath be rude.
Heigh ho, ſing heigh ho, vnto the greene holly,
Moſt friendſhip, is fayning; moſt Louing, meere folly:
The heigh ho, the holly,
This Life is moſt iolly,

Freize, freize, thou bitter skie that doſt not bight ſo nigh
as benefitts forgot:
Though thou the waters warpe, thy ſting is not ſo ſharpe,
as friend remembred not.
Heigh ho, ſing &c.

Duke Sen. If that you were the good Sir Rowlands ſon,
As you haue whiſper'd faithfully you were,
And as mine eye doth his effigies witneſſe,
Moſt truely limn'd, and liuing in your face,
Be truely welcome hither: I am the Duke
That lou'd your Father: the reſidue of your fortune,
Go to my Caue, and tell me. Good old man,
Thou art right welcome, as thy Maſter is:
Support him by the arme: giue me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes vnderſtand. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Duke, Lords, & Oliuer.

Du. Not ſee him ſince? Sir, ſir, that cannot be:
But were I not the better part made mercie,
I ſhould not ſeeke an abſent argument
Of my reuenge, thou preſent: but looke to it,
Finde out thy brother whereſoere he is,
Seeke him with Candle: bring him dead, or liuing
Within this tweluemoneth, or turne thou no more
To ſeeke a liuing in our Territorie.
Thy Lands and all things that thou doſt call thine,
Worth ſeizure, do we ſeize into our hands,
Till thou canſt quit thee by thy brothers mouth,
Of what we thinke againſt thee.

Ol. Oh that your Highneſſe knew my heart in this:
I neuer lou'd my brother in my life.

Duke. More villaine thou. Well, puſh him out of dores
And let my officers of ſuch a nature
Make an extent vpon his houſe and Lands:
Do this expediently, and turne him going. Exeunt

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Hang there my verſe, in witneſſe of my loue,
And thou thrice crowned Queene of night ſuruey
With thy chaſte eye, from thy pale ſpheare aboue
Thy Huntreſſe name, that my full life doth ſway.
O Roſalind, theſe Trees ſhall be my Bookes,
And in their barkes my thoughts Ile charracter,
That euerie eye, which in this Forreſt lookes,
Shall ſee thy vertue witneſt euery where.
Run, run Orlando, carue on euery Tree,
The faire, the chaſte, and vnexpreſſiue ſhee. Exit

Enter Corin & Clowne.

Co. And how like you this ſhepherds life M^r Touchſtone?

Clow. Truely Shepheard, in reſpect of it ſelfe, it is a good life; but in reſpect that it is a ſhepheards life, it is naught. In reſpect that it is ſolitary, I like it very well: but in reſpect that it is private, it is a very vild life. Now in reſpect it is in the fields, it pleaſeth me well: but in reſpect it is not in the Court, it is tedious. As it is a ſpare life (looke you) it fits my humor well: but as there is no more plentie in it, it goes much againſt my ſtomacke. Has't any Philoſophie in thee ſhepheard?

Cor, No more, but that I know the more one ſickens, the worſe at eaſe he is: and that hee that wants mony, meanes, and content, is without three good friends. That the propertie of raine is to wet, and fire to burne: That good paſture makes fat ſheepe: and that a great cauſe of the night, is lacke of the Sunne: That hee that hath learned no wit by Nature, nor Art, may complaine of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Clo. Such a one is a naturall Philoſopher: Was't ever in Court, Shepheard?

Cor. No truly.

Clo. Then thou art damn'd.

Cor. Nay, I hope.

Clo. Truly thou art damn'd; like an ill roaſted Egge, all on one ſide.

Cor. For not being at Court? your reaſon.

Col. Why, if thou never was't at Court, thou never ſaw'ſt good manners: if thou never ſaw'ſt good manners, then thy manners muſt be wicked, and wickednes is ſin, and ſinne is damnation: Thou art in a parlous ſtate ſhepheard.

Cor. Not a whit Touchſtone, thoſe that are good maners at the Court, are as ridiculous in the Countrey, as the behaviour of the Countrie is moſt mockeable at the Court. You told me, you ſalute not at the Court, but you kiſſe your hands; that courteſie would be uncleanly if Courtiers were ſhepheards.

Clo. Inſtance, briefly: come, inſtance.

Cor. Why we are ſtill handling our Ewes, and their Fels you know are greaſie.

Clo. Why doe not your Courtiers hands ſweate? and is not the greaſe of Mutton, as wholeſome as the ſweat of a man? Shallow, ſhallow: A better inſtance I ſay: Come.

Cor. Beſides, our hands are hard.

Clo. Your lips will feele them the ſooner. Shallow agen: a more ſounder inſtance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarr'd over, with the ſurgery of our ſheepe: and would you have us kiſſe Tarre? The Courtiers hands are perfumed with Civet.

Clo. Moſt ſhallow man: Thou wormes meate in reſpect of a good peece of fleſh indeed: learne of the wiſe and perpend: Civet is of a baſer birth then Tarre, the verie uncleanly fluxe of a Cat. Mend the inſtance Shepheard.

Cor. You have too Courtly a wit, for me, Ile reſt.

Clo. Wilt thou reſt damn'd? God helpe thee ſhallow man: God make inciſion in thee, thou art raw.

Cor. Sir, I am a true Labourer, I earne that I eate: get that I weare; owe no man hate, envie no mans happineſſe: glad of other mens good, content with my harme: and the greateſt of my pride, is to ſee my Ewes graze, and my Lambes ſucke.

Clo. That is another ſimple ſinne in you, to bring the Ewes and the Rammes together, and to offer to get your living, by the copulation of Cattle, to be bawd to a Belweather, and to betray a ſhee-Lambe of a twelvemonth to a crooked-pated olde Cuckoldly Ramme, out of all reaſonable match. If thou bee'ſt not damn'd for this, the divell himſelfe will have no ſhepheards, I cannot ſee elſe how thou ſhouldſt ſcape.

Cor. Heere comes young M. Ganimed, my new Miſtriſſes Brother.

Enter Roſalind.

Roſ. From the east to weſterne Inde,
no jewell is like Roſalinde,
Hir worth being mounted on the winde,
through all the World beares Roſalinde.
All the pictures faireſt Linde,
are but blacke to Roſalinde:
Let no face be kept in minde,
but the faire of Roſalinde.

Clo. Ile rime you ſo, eight yeares together; dinners, and ſuppers, and ſleeping houres excepted: it is the right Butter-womens ranke to Market.

Roſ. Out Foole.

Clo. For a taſte.

If a Hart doe lacke a Hinde.
Let him ſeeke out Roſalinde:
If the Cat will after kinde,
ſo be ſure will Roſalinde:
Wintred garments muſt be linde,
ſo muſt ſlender Roſalinde:
They that reap muſt ſheaſe and binde,
then to cart with Roſalinde.
Sweeteſt nut, hath ſowreſt rinde,
ſuch a nut is Roſalinde.
He that ſweeteſt roſe will finde,
muſt finde Loves pricke, & Roſalinde.

This is the very falſe gallop of Verſes, why doe you infect your ſelfe with them?

Roſ. Peace you dull foole, I found them on a tree.

Clo. Truely the tree yeelds bad fruite.

Roſ. Ile graffe it with you, and then I ſhall graffe it with a Medler: then it will be the earlieſt fruit i'th country: for you'l be rotten ere you be halfe ripe, and that's the right vertue of the Medler.

Clo. You have ſaid: but whether wiſely or no, let the Forreſt judge.

Enter Celia with a writing.

Roſ. Peace, here comes my ſiſter reading, ſtand aſide.

Cel. Why ſhould this Deſert bee,
for it is unpeopled? Noe:
Tonges Ile hang on every tree,
that ſhall civill ſayings ſhoe.
Some, how briefe the Life of man
runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the ſtretching of a ſpan,
buckles in his ſumme of age.
Some of violated vowes,
twixt the ſoules of friend, and friend,
But upon the faireſt bowes,
or at every ſentence end;
Will I Roſalinda write,
teaching all that reade, to know
The quinteſſence of every ſprite, heaven would in little ſhow.
Therefore heaven Nature charg'd,
that one body ſhould be fill'd
With all Graces wide enlarg'd, nature preſently diſtill'd

Helens cheeke, but not his heart,
Cleopatra's Majeſtie :
Attalanta's better part,
ſad Lucrecia's Modeſtie.
Thus Roſalinde of many parts,
by Heavenly Synode was deviſ'd,
Of manie faces, eyes, and hearts,
to have the touches deereſt pris'd.
Heaven would that ſhe theſe gifts ſhould have,
and I to live and die her ſlave.

Roſ. O moſt gentle Iupiter, what tedious homilie of Love have you wearied your pariſhioners withall, and never cride, have your pariſhiones withall, and never cri'de, have patience good people.

Cel. How now ! backe friends: Shepheard go off a little: go with him. ſirrah.

Clo. Come ſhepheard, let us make an honourable retreit, though not with bagge and baggage, yet with ſcrip and ſcrippage. Exit.

Cel. Didſt thou heare theſe verſes?

Roſ. O yes, I heard them all, and more too, for ſome of them had in them more feete then the Verſes would beare.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might beare the Verſes.

Roſ. I, but the feet were lame, and could not beare themſelves without the verſe, and therefore ſtood lamely in the verſe.

Cel. But didſt thou heare without wondring, how thy name ſhould be hang'd and carved upon theſe trees?

Roſ. I was ſeaven of the nine dayes out of wonder, before you came: for looke heere what I found on a Palme tree; I was never ſo berim'd ſince Pythagoras time that I was an Iriſh Rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Tro you, who hath done this?

Roſ. Is it a man?

Cel. And a chaine that you once wore, about his neck: change you colour?

Roſ. I pre'thee who?

Cel. O Lord, Lord, it is a hard matter for friends to meete; but Mountaines may be remoov'd with Earthquakes, and ſo encounter.

Roſ. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it poſſible?

Roſ. Nay, I pre'thee now, with moſt petitionary vehemence, till me who it is.

Cel. O wonderfull, wonderfull, and moſt wonderfull wonderfull, and yet againe wonderfull, and after that out of all hooping.

Roſ. Good my complection, doſt thou thinke though I am capariſon'd like a man, I have a doublet and a hoſe in my diſpoſition? One inch of delay more, is a South-ſea of diſcoverie. I pre'thee tell me, who is it quickely, and ſpeake apace: I would thou couldſt ſtammer, that thou might'ſt powre this conceal'd man out of thy mouth, as Wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bottle: either too much at once, or none at all. I pre'thee take the Corke out of thy mouth, that I may drinke thy tydings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.

Roſ. Is he of Gods making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat? Or his chin worth a beard?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.

Roſ. Why God will ſend more, if the man will bee thankefull; let me ſtay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando, that tript up the Wraſtlers heeles, and your heart, both in an inſtant.

Roſ. Nay, but the divell take mocking: ſpeake ſadde brow, and true maid:

Cel. I'faith (Coz) tis he,

Roſ. Orlando?

Cel. Orlando.

Roſ. Alas the day, what ſhall I do with my doublet an hoſe? What did he when thou ſaw'ſt him? What ſayde he? How look'd he? Wherein went he? What makes he heere? Did he aske for me? Where remaines he? How parted he with thee? And when ſhalt thou ſee him againe? Anſwer me in one word.

Cel. You muſt borrow me Gargantuas mouth firſt; t'is a Word too great for any mouth of this Ages ſize, to ſay I and no, to theſe particulars, is more then to anſwer in a Catechiſme.

Roſ, But doth he know that I am in this Forreſt, and in mans apparrell? Looks he as freſhly, as he did the day he Wraſted?

Cel. It is as eaſie to count Atomies as to reſolve the propoſitions of a Lover: but take a taſte of my finding him, and relliſh it with good obſervance. I found him under a tree like a drop'd Acorne.

Roſ. It may well be cal'd Ioves tree, when it droppes forth ſuch fruite.

Cel. Give me audience, good Madam.

Roſ. Proceed.

Cel. There lay hee ſtretch'd along like a Wounded knight.

Roſ. Though it be pittie to ſee ſuch a ſight; it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry holla, to the tongue, I prethee: it curuettes unſeaſonably. He was furniſh'd like a Hunter.

Roſ. O ominous, he comes to kill my Hart.

Cel. I would ſing my ſong without a burthen, thou bring'ſt me out of tune.

Roſ. Do you not know I am a woman, when I thinke, I muſt ſpeake: ſweet, ſay on.

Enter Orlando & Iaques.

Cel. You bring me out. Soft, comes he not neere?

Roſ. 'Tis he, ſlinke by, and note him.

Iaq. I thanke you for your companie, but good faith I had as liefe have beene my ſelfe alone.

Orl. And ſo had I: but yet for faſhion ſake
I thanke you too, for your ſocietie.

Iaq. God buy you, let's meet as little as we can.

Orl. I do deſire we may be better ſtrangers.

Iaq. I pray you marre no more trees with Writing Love-ſongs in their barkes.

Orl. I pray you marre no more of my verſes with reading them ill-favouredly.

Iaq. Roſalinde is your loves name? Orl. Yes, Iuſt.

Iaq. I do not like her name.

Orl. There was no thought of pleaſing you when ſhe was chriſten'd.

Iaq. What ſtature is ſhe of?

Orl. Iuſt as high as my heart.

Iaq. You are full of prety anſwers: have you not bin acquainted with goldſmiths wives, & cond the out of rings.

Orl. Not ſo: but I anſwer you right painted cloath, from whence you have ſtudied you queſtions.

Iaq. You have a nimble wit; I thinke 'twas made of Attalanta's heeles. Will you ſitte downe with me, and wee two will raile againſt our Miſtris the world, and all our miſerie.

Orl. I will chide no breather in the world but my ſelfe againſt whom I know no faults.

Iaq. The worſt fault you have, is to be in love.

Orl. 'Tis a fault I will not change, for your beſt vertue: I am wearie of you.

Iaq. By my troth, I was ſeeking for a Foole, when I found you.

Orl. He is drown'd in the brooke, looke but in, and you ſhall ſee him.

Iaq. There I ſhall ſee mine owne figure.

Orl. Which I take to be either a foole, or a Cipher.

Iaq. Ile tarrie no longer with you, farewell good ſignior Love.

Orl. I am glad of your departure: Adieu good Monſieur Melancholie.

Roſ. I wil ſpeake to him like a ſawcie Lackie, and under that habit play the knaue with him: do you heare Forreſter.

Orl. Verie wel, what would you?

Roſ. I pray you, what i'ſt a clocke?

Orl. You ſhould aske me what time o'day: ther's no clocke in the Forreſt.

Roſ. Then there is no true Lover in the Forreſt, elſe ſighing every minute, and groaning every houre would detect the lazie foote of time, as wel as a clocke.

Orl. And why not the ſwift foote of time? Had not that bin as proper?

Roſ. By no meanes ſir; Time travels in divers paces, with diverſe perſons: Ile tell you who Time ambles withall, who Time trots withall, who time gallops withall, and who he ſtands ſtill withall.

Orl. I prethee, whom doth he trot withall?

Roſ. Marry he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is ſolemnizd: if the interim be but a ſennight, Times pace is ſo hard, that it ſeemes the length of ſeaven yeare.

Orl. Who ambles time withall?

Roſ. With a Prieſt that lackes Latine, and a rich man that hath not the Gowt: for the one ſleepes eaſily becauſe he cannot ſtudy, and the other lives merrily, becauſe he feeles no paine: the one lacking the burthen of leane and waſtefull Learning; the other knowing no burthen of heavie tedious penurie. Theſe time ambles withall.

Orl. Whom doth he gallop withall?

Roſ. With a theefe to the gallowes: for though hee goe as ſoftly as foot can fall, he thinkes himſelfe too ſoone there:

Orl. Whom ſtaies it ſtill withall?

Roſ. With Lawiers in the vacation: for they ſleepe betweene Terme and Terme, and then they perceive not how time moves.

Orl. Where dwell you pretty youth?

Roſ. With this Shepheardeſſe my ſiſter: heere in the skirts of the forreſt, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place?

Roſ. As the Connie that you ſee dwell where ſhee is kindled.

Orl. Your accent is ſomething finer, than you could purchaſe in ſo removed a dwelling.

Roſ. I have bin told ſo of many: but indeed, an old religious Vnckle of mine taught me to ſpeake, who was in his youth an inland man, one that knew Courtſhip too well: for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many Lecturs againſt it, and I thanke God, I am not a Woman to be touch'd with ſo many giddie offences as he hath generally tax'd their whole ſex withall,

Orl. Can you remember any of the principall evils, that he laid to the charge of women?

Roſ. There were none principall, they were all like one another, as halfe pence are, every one fault ſeeming monſtrous, till his fellow-fault came to match it.

Orl. I prethee recount ſome of them.

Roſ. No: I will not caſt away my phyſick, but on thoſe that are ſicke. There is a man haunts the Forreſt, that abuſes our yong plants with carving Roſalind on their borkes; hangs Odes upon Hauthornes, and Elegies on brambles; all (forſooth) deifying the name of Roſalind. If I could meet that Fancie-monger, I would give him ſome good counſell, for he ſeemes to have the Quotidian of Love upon him.

Orl. I am he that is ſo Love-ſhak'd, I pray you tell me your remedie.

Roſ. There is none of my Vnckles markes upon you: he taught me how to know a man in love: in which cage of ruſhes, I am ſure you are not priſoner.

Orl. What were his markes?

Roſ. A leane cheeke, which you have not: a blew eye and ſunken, which you have not: an unqueſtionable ſpirit, which you have not: a beard neglected, which you have not: (but I pardon you for that, for ſimply your having no beard, is a younger brothers revennew) then your hoſe ſhould be ungarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, your ſleeve unbutton'd, your ſhooe unti'de, and every thing about you, demonſtrating a careleſſe deſolation: but you are no ſuch man; you are rather point device in your accouſtrements, as loving your ſelfe, than ſeeming the Lover of any other.

Orl. Faire youth, I would I could make thee beleeve I Love.

Roſ. Me beleeve it? You may aſſoone make her that you Love beleeve it, which I warrant ſhe is apter to do, than to confeſſe ſhe do's: that is one of the points, in the which women ſtill give the lie to their conſciences. But in good ſooth, are you he that hangs the verſes on the Trees, wherein Roſalind is ſo admired?

Orl. I ſweare to thee youth, by the white hand of Roſalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Roſ. But are you ſo much in love, as your rimes ſpeake?

Orl. Neither rime nor reaſon can expreſſe how much.

Roſ. Love is meerely a madneſſe, and I tell you, deſerves as well a darke houſe, and a whip, as madmen do: and the reaſon why they are not ſo puniſh'd and cured, is that the Lunacie is ſo ordinarie, that the whippers are in love too: yet I profeſſe curing it by counſell.

Orl. Did you ever cure any ſo?

Roſ. Yes one, and in this manner. He was to imagine me his Loue, his Miſtris: and I ſet him every day to wooe me. At which time would I, being but a mooniſh youth, greeve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking, proud, fantaſticall, apiſh, ſhallow, inconſtant, full of teares, full of ſmiles; for every paſſion ſomething, and for no paſſion truly any thing, as boyes and women are for the moſt part, cattle of this colour: would now like him, now loath him: then entertaine him, then forſweare him: now weepe for him, then ſpit at him; that I drave my Suter from his mad humor of love, to a living humor of madnes, which was to forſweare the full ſtreame of the world, and to live in a nooke meerly Monaſtick: and thus I cur'd him, and this way will I take upon me to waſh your Liver as cleare as a ſound ſheeps heart, that there ſhal not be one ſpot of loue in't.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Roſ. I would cure you, if you would but call me Roſalind, and come euery day to my Coat, and wooe me.

Orlan. Now by the faith of my love, I will; Tell mee where it is.

Roſ. Go with me to it, and Ile ſhew it you: and by the way, you ſhall tell me, where in the Forreſt you live: Will you goe?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth.

Roſ. Nay, you muſt call me Roſalind: Come ſiſter will you goe? Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Clowne, Audrey, & Iaques.

Clo. Come apace good Audrie, I will fetch up your Goates, Audrey: and how Awdrie am I the man yet? Doth my ſimple feature content you?

Aud. Your features, Lord warrant us: what features?

Clo. I am heere with thee, and thy Goates, as the moſt capricious Poet honeſt Ovid was among the Gothes.

Iaq. O knowledge ill inhabited, worſe then Iove in a thatch'd houſe.

Clo. When a mans verſes cannot be underſtood, nor a mans good wit ſeconded with the forward childe, underſtanding: it ſtrikes a man more dead then a great reckoning in a little roome: truly, I would the Gods had made thee poeticall.

Aud. I do not know what Poeticall is: is it honeſt in deed and word: is it a true thing?

Clo. No truly: for the trueſt poetrie is the moſt faining, and Lovers are given to Poetrie: and what they ſweare in Poetrie, may be ſaid as Lovers, they do feigne.

Aud. Do you wiſh then that the Gods had made mee Poeticall?

Clow. I do truly: for thou ſwear'ſt to me thou art honeſt: Now if thou wert a Poet, I might have ſome hope thou didſt feigne.

Aud. Would you not have me honeſt?

Clo. No truly, unleſſe thou wert hard favour'd: for honeſtie coupled to beautie, is to have Honie a ſawce to Sugar.

Iaq. A materiall foole.

Aud. Well, I am not faire, and therefore I pray the Gods make me honeſt.

Clo. Truly, and to caſte away honeſtie upon a foule ſlut, were to put good meate into an uncleane diſh.

Aud. I am not a ſlut, though I thanke the Goddes I am foule.

Clo. Well, praiſed be the Gods, for thy fouleneſſe; ſluttiſhneſſe may come hereafter. But be it, as it may bee, I will marrie thee: and to that end, I have beene with Sir Oliver Mar-text, the Vicar of the next village, who hath promis'd to meete me in this place of the Forreſt, and to couple us.

Iaq. I would faine ſee this meeting.

Aud. Well, the Gods give us joy.

Clo. Amen. A man may if he weare of a fearfull heart, ſtagger in this attempt: for heere wee have no Temple but the wood, no aſſembly but horne-beaſts. But what though? Courage. As hornes are odious, they are neceſſarie. It is ſaid, many a man knowes no end of his goods; right: Many a man has good Hornes, and knowes no end of them. Well, that is the dowrie of his wife, 'tis none of his owne getting; hornes, even ſo poore men alone: No, no, the nobleſt Deere hath them as huge as the Raſcall: Is the ſingle man therefore bleſſed? No, as a wall'd Towne is more worthier then a village, ſo is the forehead of a married man, more honourable then the bare brow of a Batcheller: and by how much defence is better then no skill, by ſo much is a horne more precious then to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Heere comes Sir Oliver: Sir Oliver Mar-text you are well met. Will you diſpatch us heere under this tree, or ſhall we goe with you to your Chappell?

Ol. Is there none here to give the woman?

Clo. I will not take her on guift of any man.

Ol. Truely ſhe muſt bee given, or the marriage is not lawfull.

Iaq. Proceed, proceede: Ile give her.

Clo. Good even good M. what ye cal't: how doe you Sir, you are verie well met: godild you for your laſt companie, I am verie glad to ſee you, even a toy in hand heere Sir: Nay, pray be cover'd.

Iaq. Wil you be married, Motley?

Clo. As the Oxe hath his bow ſir, the horſe his curb, and the Falkon her bels, ſo man hath his deſires, and as Pigeons bill, ſo wedlocke would be nibling.

Iaq. And will you (being a man of your breeding) bee married under a buſh like a begger? Get you to Church, and have a good Prieſt that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but joyne you together, as they joyne Wainſcot, then one of you will prove a ſhrunke pannell, and like greene timber, warpe, warpe.

Clo. I am not in the minde, but I were better to be married of him then of another, for he is not like to marrie me well: and not being well married, it will be a good excuſe for me hereafter, to leave my wife.

Iaq. Goe thou with me.
And let me counſell thee.

Clo. Come ſweete Audrie,
We muſt be married, or we muſt live in baudrey:
Farewell good M. Oliver: Not O ſweet Oliver, O brave
Oliver leave me not behind thee: But winde away, be gone
I ſay, I will not to wedding with thee.

Ol. 'Tis no matter; Ne're a fantaſticall knave of them all ſhall flout me out of my calling. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Roſalind & Celia.

Roſ. Never talke to me, I will weepe.

Cel. Do I prethee, but yet haue the grace to conſider, that teares do not become a man.

Roſ. But have I not cauſe to weepe?

Cel. As good cauſe as one would deſire,
Therefore weepe.

Roſ. His very haire
Is of the diſſembling colour.

Cel. Something browner then Iudaſſes:
Marrie his kiſſes are Iudaſſes owne children.

Roſ. I'faith his haire is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour:
Your Cheſſenut was ever the onely colour:

Roſ. And his kiſſing is as full of ſanctitie,
As the touch of holy bread.

Cel. Hee hath bought a paire of chaſt lips of Diana: a Nun of winters ſiſterhood kiſſes not more religiouſlie, the very yce of chaſtitie is in them.

Roſa. But wy did he ſweare he would come this morning, and comes not?

Cel. Nay certainly, there is no truth in him.

Roſ. Doe you thinke ſo?

Cel. Yes, I thinke he is not a picke purſe, nor a horſe-ſtealer, but for his verity in love, I do thinke him as concave as a covered goblet, or a Worme-eaten nut.

Roſ. Not true in love?

Cel. Yes, when he is in, but I thinke he is not in.

Roſ. You have heard him ſweare downeright he was.

Cel. Was, is not is: beſides, the oath of a Lover is no ſtronger then the word of a Tapſter, they are hoth the confirmer of falſe reckonings, he attends here in the forreſt on the Duke your father.

Roſ. I met the Duke yeſterday, and had much queſtion with him: he askt me of what parentage I was; I told him of as good as he, ſo he laugh'd and let mee goe. But what talke we of Fathers, when there is ſuch a man as Orlando?

Cel. O that's a brave man, he writes brave verſes, ſpeakes brave words, ſweares brave oathes, and breakes them bravely, quite travers athwart the heart of his lover, as a puiſny Tilter, that ſpurres his horſe but on one ſide, breakes his ſtaffe like a noble gooſe; but all's brave that youth mounts, and folly guides: who comes heete?

Enter Corin.

Corin. Miſtreſſe and Maſter, you have oft enquired
After the Shepheard that complain'd of love,
Whom you ſaw ſitting by me on the Turffe,
Prayſing the proud diſdainefull Shepherdeſſe
That was his Miſtreſſe.

Cel. Well: and what of him?

Cor. If you will ſee a pageant truely plaid
Betweene the pale complection of true Love,
And the red glow of ſcorne and prowd diſdaine,
Goe hence a little and I ſhall conduct you
If you will marke it.

Roſ. O come, let us remove,
The ſight of Lovers feedeth thoſe in love:
Bring us to this ſight, and you ſhall ſay
Ile prove a buſie actor in their play. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Sil. Sweet Phebe doe not ſcorne me, do not Phebe
Say that you love me not, but ſay not ſo
In bitterneſſe; the common executioner
Whoſe heart th'accuſtom'd ſight of death makes hard
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But firſt begs pardon: will you ſterner be
Then he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter Roſalind, Celia, and Corin.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner,
I flie thee, for I would not injure thee:
Thou tellſt me there is murther in mine eye,
'Tis pretty ſure, and very probable,
That eyes that are the frailſt, and ſofteſt things,
Who ſhut their coward gates on atomyes,
Should be called tyrants, butchers, murtherers.
Now I do frowne on thee with all my heart,
And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee:
Now counterfeit to ſwound, why now fall downe,
Or if thou canſt not, oh for ſhame, for ſhame,
Lye not, to ſay mine eyes are murtherers:
Now ſhew the wound mine eye hath made in thee,
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remaines
Some ſcarre of it: Leane but upon a ruſh,
The Cicatrice and capable impreſſure
Thy Palme ſome moment keepes: but now mine eyes
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor I am ſure there is no force in eyes
That can doe hurt.

Sil. O deere Phebe,
If ever (as that ever may be neere)
You met in ſome freſh cheeke the power of fancie,
Then ſhall you know the wounds inviſible
That Loves keene arrowes make.

Phe. But till that time
Come not thou neere me: and when that time comes,
Afflict me with thy mockes, pitty me not,
As till that time I ſhall not pitty thee.

Roſ. And why I pray you? who might bee your mother
That you inſult, exult, and all at once
Over the wretched? what though you have no beauty
As by my faith, I ſee no more in you
Then without Candle may goe darke to bed:
Muſt you be therefore proud and pittileſſe?
Why what meanes this? why do you looke on me?
I ſee no more in you then in the ordinarie
Of natures ſale-worke? 'ods my little life,
I thinke ſhe meanes to tangle mine eyes too:
No faith proud miſtreſſe, hope not after it,
'Tis not your inkie browes, your blacke ſilke haire,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheeke of creame
That can entame my ſpirits to your worſhip:
You fooliſh Shepheard, wherefore do you follow her
Like foggy South, puffing with winde and raine,
You are a thouſand times a properer man
Then ſhe a woman. 'Tis ſuch fooles as you
That makes the world full of ill-favourd children:
'Tis not her glaſſe, but you that flatters her,
And out of you ſhe ſees her ſelfe more proper
Then any of her lineaments can ſhow her:
But Miſtris, know your ſelfe, downe on your knees
And thanke heaven, faſting for a good mans love;
For I muſt tell you friendly in your eare,
Sell when you can, you are not for all markets:
Cry the man mercie, love him, take his offer,
Foule is moſt foule, being foule to be a ſcoffer.
So take her to thee Shepheard, fare you well.

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a yeere together,
I had rather heare you chide, then this man wooe.

Roſ. Hees falne in love with your fouleneſſe, & ſhee'll
Fall in love with my anger. It it be ſo, as faſt
As ſhe anſweres thee with frowning lookes, ile ſauce
Her with bitter words: why looke you ſo upon me?

Phe. For no ill will I beare you.

Roſ. I pray you do not fall in love with me,
For I am falſer then vowes made in wine:
Beſides, I like you not: if you will know my houſe,
'Tis at the tufft of Olives, here hard by:
Will you goe Siſter? Shepheard ply her hard:

Come Siſter : Shepheardeſſe, looke on him better
And be not proud, though all the world could ſee,
None could be ſo abus’d in ſight as he.
Come, to our flocke, Exit.
Phe. Deed Shepheard, now I find thy ſaw of might,
Who ever lov’d, that lov’d not at firſt ſight?
Sil. Sweet Phebe.
Phe. Hah : what ſayſt thou Silvius?
Sil. Sweet Phebe pitty me.
Phe. Why I am ſorry for thee gentle Silvius.
Sil. Where ever ſorrow is, reliefe would be :
If you doe ſorrow at my griefe in love ,
By giving love your ſorrow, and my griefe
Were both extermin’d.
Phe. Thou haſt my love, is not that neighborly?
Sil. I would have you.
Phe. Why that were covetouſneſſe :
Silvius; the time was, that I hated thee;
And yet it is not, that I beare thee love,
But ſince that thou canſt talke of love ſo well,
Thy company, which earſt was irkeſome to me
I will endure; and Ile employ thee too :
But doe not looke for further recompence
Then thine owne gladneſſe, that thou art employd.
Sil. So holy, and ſo perfect is my love,
And in ſuch a poverty of grace,
That I ſhall thinke it a moſt plentious crop
To gleane the broken eares after the man
That the maine harveſt reapes: looſe now and then
A ſcattered ſmile, and that Ile live upon.
Phe. Knowſt thou the youth that ſpoke to mee yerewhile?
Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft,
And he hath bought the Cottage and the bounds
That the old Carlot once was Maſter of.
Phe. Thinke not I love him, though I a ske for him,
’Tis but a peeviſh boy, yet hee talkes well,
But what care I for words? yet words do well
When he that ſpeakes them pleaſes thoſe that heare :
It is a pretty youth, not very pretty,
But ſure hee’s proud, and yet his pride becomes him;
Hee’ll make a proper man: the beſt thing in him
Is his complexion : and faſter then his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heale it up :
He is not very tall, yet for his yeares hee’s tall:
His leg is but ſo ſo, and yet ’tis well :
There was a pretty redneſſe in his lip,
A little riper, and more luſtie red
Then that mixt in his cheeke : ’twas juſt the difference
Betwixt the conſtant red, and mingled Damaske.
There be ſome women Silvius, had they markt him
In parcells as I did, would have gone neere
To fall in love with him : but for my part
I love him not, nor hate him not : and yet
I have more cauſe to hate him then to love him,
For what had he to doe to chide at me?
He ſaid mine eyes were blacke and my haire blacke,
And now I am remembred, ſcorn’d at me :
I marvell why I anſwer’d not againe,
But that’s all one : omittance is no quittance :
Ile write to him a very tanting Lettter,
And thou ſhalt beare it, wilt thou Silvius?
Sil. Phebe, with all my heart.
Phe. Ile write it ſtrait :
The matter’s in my head, and in my heart,
I will be bitter with him, and paſſing ſhort;
Goe with me Silvius. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Roſalind, and Celia, and Iaques.

Iaq. I prethee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Roſ. They ſay you are a melancholly fellow.

Iaq. I am ſo : I doe love it better then laughing.

Roſ. Thoſe that are in extremity of either, are abhominable fellowes, and betray themſelves to every moderne cenſure, worſe then drunkards.

Iaq. Why, ’tis good to be ſad and ſay nothing.

Roſ. Why then ’tis good to be a poſte.

Iaq. I have neither the Schollers melancholy, which is emulation : nor the Muſitians, which is fantaſticall; nor the Courtiers, which is proud : nor the Souldiers, which is ambitious: nor the Lawiers, which is politicke: nor the Ladies, which is nice : nor the Lovers, which is all theſe : but it is a melancholy of mine owne, compounded of many ſimples, extracted from many objects, and indeed the ſundrie contemplation of my travells, in which my often rumination, wraps me in a moſt humorous ſadneſſe.

Roſ. A Traveller : by my faith you have great reaſon to be ſad : I feare you have ſold your owne Lands, to ſee other mens; then to have ſeene much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poore hands.

Iaq. Yes, I have gain’d my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Roſ. And your experience makes you ſad: I had rather have a foole to make me merrie, then experience to make me ſad, and to travaile for it too.

Orl. Good day, and happineſſe, deere Roſalind.

Orl. Nay then God buy you, and you talke in blanke verſe. Exit.

Roſ. Farewell Mounſier Travellor : looke you liſpe, and weare ſtrange ſuites; diſable all the benefits of your own Countrie: be out of love with your nativity, & almoſt chide God for making you that countenance you are; or I will ſcarce thinke you have ſwam in a Gundello. Why how now Orlando, where have you bin all this while? you a lover? and you ſerve me ſuch another tricke, never come in my ſight more.

Orl. My faire Roſalind, I come within an houre of my promiſe.

Roſ. Breake an houres promiſe in love? he that will divide a minute into a thouſand parts, and breake but a part of the thouſand part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be ſaid of him that Cupid hath clapt him oth’ ſhoulder, but Ile warrant him heart hole.

Orl. Pardon me deere Roſalind.

Roſ. Nay, and you be ſo tardy, come no more in my ſight, I had as leiſe be woo’d of a Snaile.

Orl. Of a Snaile?

Roſ. I, of a Snaile : for though he comes ſlowly, hee carries his houſe on his head; a better joynture I thinke then you make a woman : beſides, hee brings his deſtinie with him.

Orl. What’s that?

Roſ. Why hornes: which ſuch as you are faine to be beholding to your wives for: but he come armed in his fortune, and prevents the ſlander of his wife.

Orl. Vertue is no horne-maker: and my Roſalind is vertuous.

Roſ. And I am your Roſalind.

Cel. It pleaſes him to call you ſo: but he hath a Roſalind of a better leere then you.

Roſ. Come, wooe me, wooe mee: for now I am in a holy-day humor, and like enough to conſent: What would you ſay to me now, and I were your very, verie Roſalinde?

Orl. I would kiſſe before I ſpoke.

Orl. Nay, you were better ſpeake firſt, and when you were gravel'd, for lacke of matter, you might take occaſion to kiſſe: verie good Orators when they are out, they will ſpit, and for lovers, lacking (God warne us) matter, the cleanlieſt ſhiſt is to kiſſe.

Orl. How if the kiſſe be denide?

Roſ. Then ſhe puts you to entreatie, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could bee out, being before his beloved Miſtris?

Roſ. Marrie that ſhould you if I were your Miſtris, or I ſhould thinke my honeſtie ranker then my wit.

Orl. What, of my ſuite?

Roſ. Not out of your apparrell, and yet out of your ſuite.

Am not I your Roſalinde?

Orl. I take ſome joy to ſay you are, becauſe I would be talking of her.

Roſ. Well, in her perſon, I ſay I will not have you.

Orl. Then in mine owne perſon, I doe.

Roſ. No faith, die by Attorney: the poore world is almoſt ſix thouſand yeeres old, and in all this time there was not any man dyed in his owne perſon (videlicet) in a love cauſe: Troilus had his braine daſh'd out with a Grecian club, yet hee did what hee could to die before, and he is one of the patternes of love. Leander, he would have liv'd many a faire yeere though Hero had turn'd Nun; if it had not beene for a hot Midſomer-night, for (good youth) hee went but forth to waſh in the Helleſpont, and being taken with the crampe, was droun'd, and the fooliſh Chroniclers of that age, found it was Hero of Seſtos. But theſe are all lies, men have dyed from time to time, and wormes have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Roſalind of this mind, for I proteſt her frowne might kil me.

Roſ. By this hand, it will not kill a flie: but come, now I will be your Roſalind in a more comming-on diſpoſition: and aske me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me Roſalind.

Roſ. Yes faith will I, Fridayes and Saterdayes, and all.

Orl. And wilt thou have me?

Roſ. I, and twentie ſuch.

Orl. What ſayeſt thou?

Roſ. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope ſo.

Roſalind. Why then, can one deſire too much of a good thing: Come ſiſter, you ſhall bee the Prieſt, and marrie us: give me your hand Orlando: What doe you ſay ſiſter?

Orl. Pray thee marry us.

Cel. I cannot ſay the words.

Roſ. You muſt begin, will you Orlando.

Cel. Goe too: will you Orlando, have to wife this Roſalind?

Orl. I will.

Roſ. I, but when?

Orl. Why now, as faſt as ſhe can marrie us.

Roſ. Then you muſt ſay, I take thee Roſalind for wiſe.

Orl. I take thee Roſalind for wiſe.

Roſ. I might aske you for your Commiſſion,
But I doe take thee Orlando for my husband: there's a girle goes before the Prieſt, and certainely a Womans thought runnes before her actions.

Orl. So do all thoughts, they are wing'd.

Roſ. Now tell me how long you would have her, after you have poſſeſt her?

Orl. For ever, and a day.

Roſ. Say a day, without the ever: No, no Orlando, men are Aprill when they wooe, December when they wed: Maides are May when they are maides, but the sky changes when they are wives: I will be more jealous of thee, then a Barbary cocke-pidgeon over his hen, more clamorous then a Parrat againſt raine, more new-fangled then an ape, more giddy in my deſires, then a monkey: I will weepe for nothing, like Diana in the Fountaine, and I will doe that when you are diſpos'd to bee merry: I will laugh like a Hyen, and that when thou art inclin'd to ſleepe.

Orl. But will my Roſalind doe ſo?

Roſ. By my life, ſhe will doe as I doe.

Orl. O but ſhe is wiſe.

Roſ. Or elſe ſhe could not have the wit to doe this: the wiſer, the waywarder: make the doores upon a womans wit, and it will out at the caſement: ſhut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole: ſtop that, 'twill flie with the ſmoake out at the chimney.

Orl. A man that had a wife with ſuch a wit, he might ſay, wit whither wil't?

Roſ. Nay, you might keepe that checke for it, till you met your wives wit going to your neighbours bed,

Orl. And what wit could wit have, to excuſe that?

Roſ. Marry to ſay, ſhe came to ſeeke you there: you ſhall never take her without her anſwer, unleſſe you take her without her tongue: O that woman that cannot make her fault her husbands occaſion, let her never nurſe her childe her ſelfe, for ſhe will breed it like a foole.

Orl. For theſe two houres Roſalind I will leave thee.

Roſ. Alas, deere love, I cannot lacke thee two houres.

Orl. I muſt attend the Duke at dinner, by two a clocke I will be with thee againe.

Rſo. I, goe your wayes, goe your wayes: I knew what you would prove, my freinds told me as much, and I thought no leſſe: that flattering tongue of yours wonne mee: 'tis but one caſt away, and ſo come death: two o' clocke is your howre.

Orl. I ſweet Roſalind.

Roſ. By my troth, and in good earneſt, and ſo God mend mee, and by all pretty oathes that are not dangerous, if you breake one jot of your promiſe, or come one minute behinde your houre, I will thinke you the moſt patheticall breake-promiſe, and the moſt hollow lover, and the moſt unworthy of her you call Roſalinde, that may bee choſen out of the groſſe band of the unfaithfull: therefore beware my cenſure, and keepe your promiſe.

Orl. With no leſſe religion, then if thou wert indeed my Roſalind: ſo adieu.

Roſ. Well, Time is the olde Iuſtice that examines all ſuch offenders, and let time try: adieu. Exit.

Cel. You have ſimply miſus'd our ſexe in your love-prate:

prate; we muſt have your doublet and hoſe pluckt over your head, and ſhew the world what the bird hath done to her owne neſt.

Roſ. O coz, coz, coz: my pretty little coz, that thou didſt know how many fathome deepe I am in love: but it cannot be ſounded: my affection hath an unknowne bottome, like the Bay of Portugall.

Cel. Or rather bottomleſſe, that as faſt as you poure affection in, it runs out.

Roſ. No, that ſame wicked Baſtard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceiv'd of ſpleene, and borne of madneſſe, that blinde raſcally boy, that abuſes every ones eyes, becauſe his owne are out, let him be judge, how deepe I am in love: ile tell thee Aliena, I cannot be out of the ſight of Orland: Ile goe finde a ſhaddow, and ſigh till he come,

Cel. And Ile ſleepe. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Iaques and Lords, Forreſters.

Iaq. Which is he that killed the Deare?

Lord. Sir, it was I.

Iaq. Let's preſent him to the Duke like a Romane Conquerour, and it would do well to ſet the Deares hornes upon his head, for a branch of victorie; have you no ſong Forreſter for this purpoſe?

Lord. Yes Sir.

Iaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it be in tune, ſo it make noyſe enough.

Muſicke, Song.

What ſhall he have that kild the Deare?
His Leather skin, and hornes to weare:
Then ſing him home, the reſt ſhall beare this burthen;
Take thou no ſcorne to weare the horne,
It was a creſt ere thou waſt borne,
Thy fathers father wore it,
And thy father bore it,
The horne, the horne, the luſtly horne,
Is not a thing to laugh to ſcorne. Exeunt.

Seæna Tertia.

Enter Roſalind and Celia.

Roſ. How ſay you now, is it not paſt two a clocke? And heere much Orlando.

Cel. I warrant you with pure love, & troubled braine.

Enter Silvius.

He hath t'ane his bow and arrowes, and is gone forth
To ſleepe: looke who comes here.

Sil. My errand is to you, faire youth,
My gentle Phebe, bid me give you this:
I knew not the contents, but as I gueſſe
By the ſterne brow, and waſpiſh action
Which ſhe did uſe, as ſhe was writing of it,
It beares an angry tenure; pardon me,
I am but as a guiltleſſe meſſenger.

Roſ. Patience her ſelfe would ſtartle at this letter,
And play the ſwaggerer, beare this, beare all:
Shee ſaies I am not faire, that I lacke manners,
She calls me proud, & that ſhe could not love me
Were man as rare as Phenix: 'od's my will,
Her love is not the Hare that I did hunt,
Why writes ſhe ſo to me? well Shepheard, well,
This is a Letter of your owne device.

Sil. No, I proteſt, I know not the contents,
Phebe did write it.

Roſ. Come, come, you are a foole,
And turn'd into the extremitie of love.
I ſaw her hand, ſhe has a leatherne hand,
A freeſtone coloured hand: I verily did thinke
That her old gloves were one, but twas her hands:
She has a huſwifes hand, but that's no matter:
I ſay ſhe never did invent this letter,
This is a mans invention, and his hand.

Sil. Sure it is hers.

Roſ. Why, tis a boyſterous and a cruell ſtile,
A ſtile for challengers: why, ſhe defies me,
Like Turke to Chriſtian: womens gentle braine
Could not drop forth ſuch giant rude invention,
Such Ethiop words, blacker in their effect
Then in their countenance: will you heare the letter?

Sil. So pleaſe you, for I never heard it yet:
Yet heard too much of Phebes crueltie.

Rvſ. She Phebes me: marke how the tyrant writes.
Read. Art thou god, to ſheapheard turn'd?
That a maidens heart hath burn'd?
Can a woman raile thus.

Sil. Call you this railing?

Roſ. Read. Why, thy godhead laid apart,
War'ſt thou with a womans heart?
Did you ever heare ſuch railing?
Whiles the eye of man did wooe me,
That could do no vengance to me.
Meaning me a beaſt.
If the ſcorne of your bright eine
Have power to raiſe ſuch love in mine,
Alacke, in me, what ſtrange effect
Would they worke in milde aſpect?
Whiles you chid me, I did love,
How then might your prayers move?
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knowes this love in me:
And by him ſeale up thy minde,
Whether that thy youth and kinde
Will the faithfull offer take
Of me, and all that I can make,
Or elſe by him my love denie,
And then Ile ſtudie how to die.

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Cel. Alas poore Shepheard,

Roſ. Doe you pitty him? No, he deſerves no pitty: wilt thou love ſuch a woman? what to make thee an inſtrument, and play falſe ſtrings upon thee? not to be endur'd. Well, goe your way to her; (for I ſee Love hath made thee a tame ſnake) and ſay this to her; That if ſhe love me, I charge her to love thee: if ſhe will not, I will never have her, unleſſe thou intreat for her: if you bee a true lover hence, and not a word; for here comes more company. Exit. Sil.

Enter Oliver.

Oliv. Good morrow, faire ones: pray you, (if you know)
Where in the Purlews of this Forreſt, ſtands.

A ſheep-coat, fenc'd about with Olive-trees.
Cel. Weſt of this place, downe in the neighbor bottome
The ranke of Oziers, by the murmuring ſtreame
Left on your right hand, bring you to the place:
But at this houre, the houſe doth keepe it ſelfe,
There's none within.
Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then ſhould I know you by deſcription,
Such garments, and ſuch yeeres: the boy is faire,
Of femall favour, and beſtowes himſelfe
Like a ripe ſiſter: But the woman low
And browner then her brother: are not you
The owner of the houſe I did enquire for?
Cel. It is no boaſt, being ask'd, to ſay we are.
Orl. Orlando doth commend him to you both,
And to that youth he calls his Roſalind,
He ſends this bloudy napkin; are you he?
Roſ. I am: what muſt we underſtand by this?
Orl. Some of my ſhame, if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkercher was ſtain'd.
Cel. I pray you tell it.
Oli. When laſt the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a promiſe to returne againe
Within an houre, and pacing through the Forreſt,
Chewing the food of ſweet and bitter fancie,
Loe what befell: he threw his eye aſide,
And marke what object did preſent it ſelfe
Vnder an old Oake, whoſe bows were moſs'd with age,
And high top bald with drie antiquitie:
A wretched ragged man, ore-growne with haire
Lay ſleeping on his backe; about his necke
A greene and guilded ſnake had wreath'd it ſelfe,
Who with her head, nimble in threates approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but ſodainely
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd it ſelfe,
And with indented glides, did ſlip away
Into a buſh, under whoſe buſhes ſhade
A Lyoneſſe, with udders all drawne drie,
Lay cowching head on ground, with catlike watch
When that the ſleeping man ſhould ſtirre; for 'tis
The royall diſpoſition of that beaſt
To prey on nothing, that doth ſeeme as dead:
This ſeene, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.
Cel. O I have heard him ſpeake of that ſame brother,
And he did render him the moſt unnaturall
That liv'd amongſt men.
Oli. And well he might ſo doe,
For well I know he was unnaturall.
Roſ. But to Orlando: did he leave him there
Food to the ſuck'd and hungry Lyoneſſe?
Oli. Twice did he turne his backe and purpos'd ſo:
But kindneſſe, nobler ever then revenge,
And Nature ſtronger then his juſt occaſion,
Made him give battle to the Lyoneſſe:
Who quickly fell before him, in which hurtling
From miſerable ſlumber I awaked.
Cel. Are you his brother?
Roſ. Was't you he reſcu'd?
Cel. Was't you that did ſo oft contrive to kill him?
Oli. 'Twas I: but 'tis not I: I doe not ſhame
To tell you what I was, ſince my converſion
So ſweetly taſtes, being the thing I am.
Roſ. But for the bloody napkin?
Oli. By and by:
When from the firſt to laſt betwixt us two,
Teares our recountments had moſt kindely bath'd,
As how I came into that Deſert place.
In briefe, he led me to the gentle Duke,
Who gave me freſh array, and entertainement,
Committing me unto my brothers love:
Who led me inſtantly unto his Cave,
There ſtript himſelfe, and heere upon his arme
The Lyoneſſe had torne ſome fleſh away,
Which all this while had bled; and now he fainted,
And cride in fainting upon Roſalinde.
Breefe, I recover'd him, bound up his wound,
And after ſome ſmall ſpace, being ſtrong at heart,
He ſent me hither, ſtranger as I am
To tell this ſtorie, that you might excuſe
His broken promiſe, and to give this napkin
Died in his blood, unto the Shepheard youth,
That he in ſport doth call his Roſalind.
Cel. Why how now Ganimed, ſweet Ganimed.
Oli. Many will ſwoon when they do looke on bloud.
Cel There is more in it; Coſen Ganimed.
Oli. Looke, he recovers.
Roſ. I would I were at home.
Cel. Wee'll leade you thither:
I pray you will you take him by the arme.
Oli. Be of good cheere youth: you a man?
You lacke a mans heart.
Roſ. I doe ſo, I confeſſe it:
Ah, ſirra, a body would thinke this was well counterfeited, I pray you tell your brother how well I counterfeited: heigh-ho.

Oli. This was not counterfeit, there is too great teſtimony in your complexion, that it was paſſion of earneſt.

Roſ. Counterfeit, I aſſure you.

Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.

Roſ. So I doe: but yfaith, I ſhould have beene a woman by right.

Cel. Come, you looke paler and paler: pray you draw homewards: good ſir, goe with us.

Oli. That will I: for I muſt beare anſwere backe
How you excuſe my brother, Roſalind.

Roſ. I ſhall deviſe ſomething: but I pray you commend my counterfeting to him: will you goe?

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Clowne and Awdrie.

Clo. We ſhall finde a time Awdrie, patience gentle Awdrie.

Awd. Faith the Prieſt was good enough, for all the old gentlemans ſaying.

Clow. A moſt wicked Sir Oliver, Awdrie, a moſt vile Mar-text. But Awdrie, there is a youth heere in the Forreſt layes claime to you.

Awd. I, I know who 'tis: he hath no intereſt in me in the world: here comes the man you meane.

Enter William.

Clo. It is meat and drinke to me to ſee a Clowne, by my troth, we that have good wits, have much to anſwer for: we ſhall be flouting: we cannot hold.

Will. Good eu'n Audrey.

Aud. God ye good eu'n William.

Will. And good eu'n to you Sir.

Clo. Good eu'n gentle friend. Cover thy head, cover thy head: Nay prethee be couer'd. How olde are you Friend?

Will. Five and twenty Sir.

Clo. A ripe age: Is thy name William?

Will. William, ſir.

Clo. A faire name. Was't borne i'th Forreſt heere?

Will. I ſir, I thanke God.

Clo. Thanke God: A good anſwer:
Art rich?

Will. 'Faith ſir, ſo, ſo.

Clo. So, ſo is good, very good, very excellent good: and yet it is not, it is but ſo, ſo:
Art thou wiſe?

Will. I ſir, I have a prettie wit.

Clo. Why, thou ſayeſt well. I do now remember a ſaying: The foole doth thinke he is wiſe, but the wiſeman knowes himſelfe to be a Foole. The Heathen Philoſopher, when he had a deſire to eate a Grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby, that Grapes were made to eate, and lippes to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do ſir.

Clo. Give me your hand: Art thou Learned?

Will. No ſir.

Col. Then learne this of me, To have, is to have. For it is a figure in Rhetoricke, that drinke being powr'd out of a cup into a glaſſe, by filling the one, doth empty the other. For all your Writers do conſent, that ipſe is hee: now you are not ipſe for I am he.

Will. Which he ſir?

Col. He ſir, that muſt marrie this woman: Therefore you Clowne, abandon: which is in the vulgar, leave the ſocietie: which in the booriſh, is companie, of this female: which in the common, is woman: which together, is, abandon the ſociety of this Female, or Clowne thou periſheſt: or to thy better underſtanding, dyeſt; or (to wit) I kill thee, make thee away, tranſlate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage: I will deale in poyſon with thee, or in baſtinado, or in ſteele: I will bandy with thee in faction, I will ore-run thee with policy: I will kill thee a hundred and fifty wayes, therefore tremble and depart.

Aud. Do good William.

Will. God reſt yov merry ſir. Exit.

Enter Corin.

Cor. Our Maſter and Miſtreſſe ſeekes you: come away, away.

Clo. Trip Audry, trip Audry, I attend,
I attend. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Orlando & Oliver.

Orl. Is't poſſible, that on ſo little acquaintance you ſhould like her? that, but ſeeing, you ſhould love her? And loving woo? and wooing, ſhe ſhould graunt? And will you perſever to enjoy her?

Ol. Neither call the giddineſſe of it in queſtion; the povertie of her, the ſmall acquaintance, my ſodaine wooing, nor ſodaine conſenting: but ſay with me, I love Aliena: ſay with her, that ſhe loves me; conſent with both, that we may enjoy each other: it ſhall be to your good: for my fathers houſe, and all the revennew, that was old Sir Rowlands, will I eſtate upon you, and heere live and die a Shepheard.

Enter Roſalind.

Orl. You have my conſent.
Let your wedding be to morrow: thither will I
Invite the Duke, and all's contented followers:
Go you, and prepare Aliena; for looke you,
Heere comes my Roſalinde.

Roſ. God ſave you brother.

Ol. And you faire ſiſter.

Roſ. Oh my deere Orlando, how it greeves me to ſee thee weare thy heart in a ſcarfe.

Orl. It is my arme.

Roſ. I thought thy heart had beene wounded with the clawes of a Lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a Lady.

Roſ. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeyted to ſound, when he ſhew'd me your handkercher?

Orl. I, and greater wonders then that.

Roſ. O, I know where you are: nay, tis true: there was never any thing ſo ſodaine, but the fight of two Rammes, and Cæſars Thraſonicall bragge, of, I came, ſaw, and overcame. For your brother, and my ſiſter, no ſooner met, but they look'd: no ſooner look'd, but they lov'd; no ſooner lov'd, but they ſigh'd: no ſooner ſigh'd but they ask'd one another the reaſon: no ſooner knew the reaſon, but they ſought the remedie: and in theſe degrees, have they made a paire of ſtaires to marriage, which they will climbe incontinent, or elſe be incontinent before marriage; they are in the verie wrath of love, and they will together. Clubbes cannot part them.

Orl. They ſhall be married to morrow: and I will bid the Duke to the Nuptiall. But O, how bitter a thing it is, to looke into happines through another mans eyes: by ſo much the more ſhall I to morrow be at the height of heart heavineſſe, by how much I ſhall thinke my brother happie, in having what he wiſhes for.

Roſ. Why then to morrow, I cannot ſerve your turne for Roſalind?

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Roſ. I will wearie you then no longer with idle talking. Know of me then (for now I ſpeake to ſome purpoſe) that I know you are a Gentlemen of good conceit: I ſpeake not this, that you ſhould beare a good opinion of my knowledge: inſomuch (I ſay) I know you are: neither doe I labor for a greater eſteeme then may in ſome little meaſure draw a beleefe from you, to doe your ſelfe good, and not to grace me. Beleeve then, if you pleaſe, that I can doe ſtrange things; I have ſince I was three yeare old converſt with a Magitian, moſt profound in his Art, and yet not damnable. If you do love Roſalinde ſo neere the heart, as your geſture cries it out: when your brother marries Aliena, ſhall you marrie her. I know into what ſtraights of fortune ſhe is driven, and it is not impoſſible to me, if it appeare not inconvenient to you, to ſet her before your eyes to morrow, humane as ſhe is, and without any danger.

Orl. Speak'ſt thou in ſober meanings?

Roſ. By my life I do, which I tender deerly, though I ſay I am a Magitian: Therefore put you in your beſt aray, bid your friends: for if you will be married to morrow, you ſhall: and to Roſalind if you will.

Enter Silvius & Phebe.

Looke, here comes a Lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phe. Youth, you haue done me much vngentleneſſe,
To ſhew the letter that I writ to you.

Roſ. I care not if I have: it is my ſtudie
To ſeeme deſpightfull and vngentle to you:
You are there followed by a faithfull ſhepheard,
Looke vpon him, love him: he worſhips you.

Phe. Good ſhepheard, tell this youth what 'tis to love

Sil. It is to be all made of ſighes and teares,
And ſo am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganimed.

Or. And I for Roſalind.

Roſ. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and ſervice,
And ſo am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganimed.

Or. And I for Roſalind.

Roſ. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantaſie,
All made of paſſion, and all made of wiſhes,
All adoration, duty and obſerbance,
All humbleneſſe, all patience, and impatience,
All purity, all triall, all obſervance:
And ſo am I for Phebe.

Phe. And ſo am I for Ganimed.

Or. And ſo am I for Roſalind.

Roſ. And ſo am I for no woman.

Phe. If this be ſo, why blame you me to love you?

Sil. If this be ſo, why blame you me to love you?

Or. If this be ſo, why blame you me to love you?

Roſ. Why do you ſpeake too, Why blame you mee to love you.

Orl. To her, that is not heere, nor doth not heare.

Roſ. Pray you no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Iriſh Wolves againſt the Moone: I will helpe you if I can: I would love you if I could: To morrow meet me altogether: I will marry you, if ever I marry Woman, and Ile be married to morrow: I will ſatisfie you, if ever I ſatisfi'd man, and you ſhall be married to morrow. I will content you, if what pleaſes you contents you, and you ſhall be married to morrow: As you love Roſalind meet, as you love Phebe meet, and as I love no woman, Ile meet: ſo fare you well: I have left you commands

Sil. Ile not faile, if I live.

Phe. Nor I.

Or. Nor I. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Clowne and Audrey.

Clo. To morrow is the joyfull day Audrey, to morow will we be married.

Au. I do deſire it with all my heart: and I hope it is no diſhoneſt deſire, to deſire to be a woman of the world? Heere come two of the baniſh'd Dukes Pages.

Enter two Pages.

1. Pa. Wel met honeſt Gentleman.

Clo. By my troth well met: come, ſit, ſit, and a ſong.

2. Pa. We are for you, ſit i'th middle.

1. Pa. Shal we clap into't roundly, without hauking, or ſpitting, or ſaying we are hoarſe, which are the onely prologues to a bad voice.

2. Pa. I faith, y'faith, and both in a tune like two gipſies on a horſe.

Song.

It was a Lover, and his laſſe,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o're the greene corne feild did paſſe,
In the ſpring time, the onely pretty rang time,
When Birds do ſing, hey ding a ding, ding.
Sweet Lovers love the ſpring,
And therefore take the preſent time,
With a hey, & a ho, and a hey nonino,
For love is crowned with the prime.
In ſpring time, &c.

Betweene the acres of the Rie,
With a hey, and a ho, & a hey nonino:
Theſe pretty Country folks would ly.
In ſpring time, &c.

This Carroll they began that houre,
With a hey and a ho, & a hey nonino,
How that a life was but a Flower,
In ſpring time, &c.

Clo. Truly young Gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very vntunable.

1. Pa. you are deceiv'd Sir, we kept time, we loſt not our time.

Clo. By my troth yes: I count it but time loſt to heare ſuch a fooliſh ſong. God buy you, and God mend your voices. Come Audrie. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Duke Senior, Amyens, Iaques, Orlando, Oliver, Celia.

Du. Sen. Doſt thou beleeve Orlando, that the boy
Can do all this that he hath promiſed?

Or. I ſometimes do beleeve, and ſometimes do not,
As thoſe that feare they hope, and know they feare.

Enter Roſalinde, Silvius, & Phebe.

Roſ. Patience once more, whiles our compact is vrg'd:
You ſay, if I bring in your Roſalinde,
You will beſtow her on Orlando heere?

Du. Se. That would I, had I kingdomes to give with (hir.

Roſ. And you ſay you will have her, when I bring hir?

Or. That would I, were I of all kingdomes King.

Roſ. You ſay, you'l marry me, if I be willing.

Phe. That will I, ſhould I dy the houre after.

Ro. But if you do refuſe to marry me,
You'l give your ſelfe to this moſt faithfull Shepheard.

Phe. So is the bargaine.

Roſ. You ſay that you'l have Phebe if ſhe will.

Sil. Though to have her and death, were both one thing.

Roſ. I have promis'd to make all this matter even:
Keepe you your word, O Duke, to give your daughter,
You yours Orlando, to receive his daughter:
Keepe you your word Phebe, that you'l marry me,
Or elſe refuſing me, to wed this ſhepheard:
Keepe your word Siluius, that you'l marry her
If ſhe refuſe me, and from hence I go
To make theſe doubts all even. Exit Roſ. and Celia.

Du. Se. I do remember in this ſhepheard boy,
Some lively touches of my daughters favour.

Or. My Lord, the firſt time that I ever ſaw him,
Me thought he was a brother to your daughter:
But my good Lord, this Boy is Forreſt borne,
And hath bin tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many deſperate ſtudies, by his vnckle,
Whom he reports to be a great Magitian.

Enter Clowne and Audrey.

Obſcured in the circle of this Forteſt.

Iaq. There is ſure another flood toward, and theſe couples are comming to the Arke. Here comes a payre of very ſtrange beaſts, which in all tongues, are call'd Fooles.

Clo. Salutation and greeting to you all.

Iaq. Good my Lord, bid him welcome: This is the Motley-minded Gentleman, that I have ſo often met in the Forreſt: he hath bin a Courtier he ſweares.

Clo. If any man doubt that, let him put mee to my purgation, I have trod a meaſure, I have flattred a Lady, I have bin politicke with my friend, ſmooth with mine enemie, I have vndone three Tailors, I have had foure quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Iaq. And how was that tane up?

Clo. Faith we met, and found the quarrel was upon the ſeventh cauſe.

Iaq. How ſeventh cauſe? Good my Lord, like this fellow.

Du. Se. I like him very well.

Clo. God'ild you ſir, I deſire you of the like: I preſſe in heere ſir, amongſt the reſt of the Country copulatives to ſweare, and to forſweare, according as marriage binds and blood breakes: a poore virgin ſir, an il favor'd thing ſir, but mine owne, a poore humour of mine ſir, to take that that no man elſe will: rich honeſty dwels like a miſer ſir, in a poore houſe, as your Pearle in your foule oyſter.

Du. Sen. By my faith, he is very ſwift, and ſententious

Clo. According to the fooles bolt ſir, and ſuch dulcet diſeaſes.

Iaq. But for the ſeventh cauſe. How did you finde the quarrell on the ſeventh cauſe?

Clo. Vpon a lye, ſeven times removed: (beare your body more ſeeming Audry) as thus ſir: I did diſlike the cut of a certaine Courtiers beard: he ſent me word, if I ſaid his beard was not cut well, hee was in the minde it was: this is call'd the retort courteous. If I ſent him word againe, it was not well cut, he wold ſend me word he cut it to pleaſe himſelfe: this is call'd the quip modeſt. If againe, it was not well cut, he diſabled my judgment: this is called, the reply churliſh. If againe it was not wel cut, he would anſwer I ſpake not true: this is call'd the reproofe valiant. If againe, it was not well cut, he wold ſay, I lie: this is call'd the counter-checke quarrelſome: and ſo to the lie circumſtantiall, and the lie direct.

Iaq. And how oft did you ſay his beard was not well cut?

Clo. I durſt go no further then the lye circumſtantiall: nor he durſt not give me the lie direct: and ſo wee meaſur'd ſwords, and parted.

Iaq. Can you nominate in order now, the degrees of the lie.

Clo. O ſir, we quarrell in print, by the booke: as you have bookes for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The firſt, the Retort courteous: the ſecond, the Quip-modeſt: the third, the reply Churliſh: the fourth, the Reproofe valiant: the fift, the Countercheck e quarrelſome: the ſixt, the Lye with circumſtance: the ſeaventh, the Lye direct: all theſe you may avoyd, but the Lye direct: and you may avoide that too, with an If. I knew when ſeven Iuſtices could not take up a Quarrell, but when the parties were met themſelves, one of them thought but of an If; as if you ſaide ſo, then I ſaide ſo: and they ſhooke hands, and ſwore brothers. Your If, is the onely peace-maker: much vertue in if.

Iaq. Is not this a rare fellow my Lord? He's as good at any thing, and yet a foole.

Du. Se. He uſes his folly like a ſtalking-horſe, and under the preſentation of that he ſhoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, Roſalind, and Celia.
Still Muſicke.

Hymen. Then is there mirth in heaven,
When earthly things made eaven
attone together.
Good Duke receive thy daughter,
Hymen from Heaven brought her,
Yea brought her hether.
That thou mightſt joyne his hand with his,
Whoſe heart within his boſome is.

Roſ. To you I give my ſelfe, for I am yours.
To you I give my ſelfe, for I am yours.

Du. Se. If there be truth in ſight, you are my daughter.

Or. If there be truth in ſight, you are my Roſalind.

Phe. If ſight & ſhape be true, why then my love adiev.

Roſ. Ile have no Father, if you be not he:
Ile have no Husband, if you be not he:
Nor ne're wed woman, if you be not ſhe.

Hy. Peace hoa: I barre confuſion,
'Tis I muſt make concluſion
Of theſe moſt ſtrange events:
Here's eight that muſt take hands,
To joyne in Hymens bands,
If truth holds true contents.
You and you, no croſſe ſhall part;
You and you, are heart in heart;
You, to his love muſt accord,
Or have a Woman to your Lord.
You and you, are ſure together,
As the Winter to fowle Weather:
Whiles a Wedlocke Hymne we ſing,
Feede your ſelves with queſtioning:
That reaſon, wonder may diminiſh
How thus we met, and theſe things finiſh.

Song.

Wedding is great Iunos crowne,
O bleſſed bond of boord and bed:
'Tis Hymen peoples every towne,
High wedlocke then be honored:
Honor, high honor and renowne
To Hymen, God of every Towne.

Du. Se. O my deere Neece, welcome thou art to me,
Even daughter welcome, in no leſſe degree.

Phe. I will not eate my word, now thou art mine,
Thy faith, my fancie to thee doth combine.

Enter ſecond Brother.

2. Bro. Let me have audience for a word or two:
I am the ſecond ſonne of old Sir Rowland,
That bring theſe tidings to this faire aſſembly.
Duke Fredericke hearing how that every day,
Men of great worth reſorted to this forreſt,
Addreſt a mighty power, which were on foote
In his owne conduct, purpoſely to take
His brother heere, and put him to the ſword:
And to the skirts of this wilde Wood he came;
Where, meeting with an old Religious man,
After ſome queſtion with him, was converted
Both from his enterprize, and from the world:
His crowne bequeathing to his baniſh'd Brother,
And all their Lands reſtor'd to him againe
That were with him exil'd. This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Du.Se. Welcome yong man:
Thou offer'ſt fairely to thy brothers wedding:
To one his lands with-held, and to the other
A land it ſelfe at large, a potent Dukedome.
Firſt, in this Forreſt, let us do thoſe ends
That heere were well begun, and well begot:
And after, every of this happie number
That have endur'd ſhrew'd daies, and nights with us,
Shal ſhare the good of our returned fortune,
According to the meaſure of their ſtates.
Meane time, forget this new-falne dignity,
And fall into our Ruſticke Revelry:
Play Muſicke, and you Brides and Bride-groomes all,
With meaſure heap'd in joy, to th' Meaſures fall.

Iaq. Sir, by your patience: if I heard you rightly,
The Duke hath put on a Religious life,
And throwne into neglect the pompous Court.

2. Bro. He hath.

Iaq. To him will I: out of theſe convertites,
There is much matter to be heard, and learn'd:
You to your former Honor, I bequeath;
Your patience, and your vertue, well deſerves it.
You to a love, that your true faith doth merit:
You to your land, and love, and great allies:
You to a long, and well-deſerved bed:
And you to wrangling, for thy loving voyage
Is but for two moneths victuall'd: So to your pleaſures,
I am for other, then for dancing meazures.

Du. Se. Stay, Iaques, ſtay.

Iaq. To ſee no paſtime, I: what you would have,
Ile ſtay to know, at your abandon'd cave. Exit.

Du. Se. Proceed, proceed, we will begin theſe rights,
As we do truſt, they'l end in true delights.

Roſ. It is not the faſhion to ſee the Lady the Epilogue: but it is no more unhandſome, then to ſee the Lord the Prologue. If it be true, that goood wine needs no buſh, 'tis true, that a good play needes no Epilogue. Yet to good wine they do uſe good buſhes: & good plaies prove the better by the helpe of good Epilogues: What a caſe am I in then, that am neither a good Epilogue, nor cannot inſinuate with you in the behalfe of a good play? I am not furniſh'd like a Begger, therefore to begge will not become mee. My way is to conjure you, and Ile begin with the Women. I charge you (O women) for the love you beare to men, to like as much of this Play, as pleaſe you: And I charge you (O men) for the love you beare to women (as I perceive by your ſimpring, none of you hates them) that betweene you, and the women, the play may pleaſe. If I were a Woman, I would kiſſe as many of you as had beards that pleas'd me, complexions that lik'd me, and breaths that I defi'de not: And I am ſure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or ſweet breaths, will for my kind offer, when I make curt'ſie, bid me farewell. Exeunt.

FINIS.

THE

Taming of the Shrew.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Begger and Hoſteſſe, Chriſtophero Sly.

Begger.

ILe pheeze you infaith.

Hoſt. A paire of ſtokes you rogue.

Beg. Y'are a baggage, the Slies are no Rogues. Looke in the Chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror: therefore Paucas pallabris, let the world ſlide: Seſſa.

Hoſt. You will not pay for the glaſſes you haue burſt?

Beg. No, not a deniere: go by S. Ieronimy, goe to thy cold bed, and warme thee.

Hoſt. I know my remedy, I muſt go fetch the Headborough.

Beg. Third, or fourth, or fift Borough, Ile anſwere him by Law. Ile not budge an inch boy: Let him come, and kindly. Falles aſleepe.

Winde hornes. Enter a Lord from hunting, with his traine.

Lo. Huntſman I charge thee, tender wel my hounds,
Brach Meriman, the poore Curre is imboſt,
And couple Clowder with the deepe-mouth'd brach,
Saw'ſt thou not boy how Silver made it good
At the hedge corner, in the couldeſt fault,
I would not loſe the dogge for twenty pound.

Hun. Why Belman is as good as he my Lord,
He cried upon it at the meereſt loſſe,
And twice to day pick'd out the dulleſt ſent,
Truſt me, I take him for the better dogge.

Lord. Thou art a foole, if Eccho were as fleete,
I would eſteeme him worth a dozen ſuch:
But ſup them well, and looke unto them all,
To morrow I intend to hunt againe.

Hun. I will my Lord.

Lord. What's heere? One dead, or drunke? See doth he breathe?

2. Hun. He breath's my Lord. Were he not warm'd with Ale, this were a bed but cold to ſleep ſo ſoundly.

Lord. Oh monſtrous beaſt, how like a ſwine he lyes.
Grim death, how foule and loathſome is thine image!
Sirs, I will practiſe on this drunken man.
What thinke you, if he were convey'd to bed,
Wrap'd in ſweet cloathes: Rings put upon his fingers:
A moſt delicious banquet by his bed,
And brave attendants neere him when he wakes,
Would not the begger then forget himſelfe?

1. Hun. Beleeve me Lord, I thinke he cannot chooſe.

2. H. It would ſeem ſtrange unto him when he wak'd

Lord. Even as a flatt'ring dreame, or worthles fancie.
Then take him up, and manage well the jeſt:
Carry him gently to my faireſt Chamber,
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures:
Balme his foule head in warme diſtilled waters,
And burne ſweet Wood to make the Lodging ſweete:
Procure me Muſicke ready when he wakes,
To make a dulcet and a heavenly ſound:
And if he chance to ſpeake, be ready ſtraight
(And with a low ſubmiſſive reverence)
Say, what is it your Honor will command:
Let one attend him with a ſilver Baſon
Full of Roſe-water, and beſtrew'd with Flowers,
Another beare the Ewer: the third a Diaper,
And ſay wilt pleaſe your Lordſhip coole your hands.
Some one be ready with a coſtly ſuite,
And aske him what apparel he will weare:
Another tell him of his Hounds and Horſe,
And that his Lady mournes at his diſeaſe,
Perſwade him that he hath bin Lunaticke,
And when he ſayes he is, ſay that he dreames,
For he is nothing but a mighty Lord:
This do, and do it kindly, gentle ſirs,
It wil be paſtime paſſing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modeſty.

1. Hun. My Lord I warrant you we wil play our part
As he ſhall thinke by our true diligence
He is no leſſe then what we ſay he is.

Lor. Take him up gently, and to bed with him,
And each one to his office when he wakes.

Sound trumpets.

Sirrah, go ſee what Trumpet 'tis that ſounds,
Belike ſome Noble Gentleman that meanes
(Travelling ſome journey) to repoſe him heere.

Enter Servingman.

How now? who is it?

Ser. An't pleaſe your Honor, Players
That offer ſervice to your Lordſhip.

Enter Players.

Lor. Bid them come neere:
Now fellowes, you are welcome.

Pla. We thanke your Honor.

Lor. Do you intend to ſtay with me to night?

2. Pla. So pleaſe your Lordſhip to accept our duty.

Lor. With all my heart. This fellow I remember,
Since once he plaide a Farmers eldeſt ſonne,
'Twas where you woo'd the Gentlewoman ſo well:
I have forgot your name: but ſure that part

Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd

Sim. I think 'twas Soto that your Honour meanes.

Lord. 'Tis very true, thou didſt it excellent:
Well you are come to me in happy time,
The rather for I have ſome ſport in hand,
Wherein your cunning can aſſiſt me much.
There is a Lord will hear you play to night;
But I am doubtfull of your modeſties,
Leaſt (over-eying of his odde behaviour,
For yet his Honour never heard a Play)
You break into ſome merry paſſion,
And ſo offend him: for I tell you ſirs,
If you ſhould ſmile, he growes impatient.

Plu. Fear not my Lord, we can contain our ſelves,
Were he the verieſt antick in the world.

Lord. Go ſirra, take them to the Buttery,
And give them friendly welcome every one,
Let them want nothing that my houſe affords.

Exit one with the Players.

Sirra go you to Barthol'mew my Page,
And ſee him dreſt in all ſuits like a Lady:
That done, conduct him to the Drunkards chamber,
And call him Madam, doe him obeiſance:
Tell him from me (as he will win my love)
He bear himſelf with honourable action
Such as he hath obſerv'd in noble Ladies
Unto their Lords, by them accompliſhed,
Such duty to the Drunkard let him doe:
With ſoft low tongue, and lowly courteſie,
And ſay: What is't your Honour will command,
Wherein your Lady, and your humble Wife,
May ſhew her duty, and make known her love.
And then with kind embracements, tempting kiſſes,
And with declining head into his boſome
Bid him ſhed teares, as being over-joyed
To ſee her noble Lord reſtor'd to health,
Who for this ſeven yeares hath eſteemed him
No better then a poor and loathſome beggar:
And if the boy have not a womans gift
To rain a ſhower of commanded teares,
An Onion will doe well for ſuch a ſhift,
Which in a Napkin (being cloſe convey'd)
Shall in deſpight enforce a watry eye:
See this diſpatch'd with all the haſt thou canſt,
Anon I'le give thee more inſtructions.

Exit a Servingman.

I know the boy will well uſurpe the grace,
Voyce, gate, and action of a Gentlewoman.
I long to hear him call the Drunkard, Husband,
And how my men will ſtay themſelves from laughter,
When they doe homage to this ſimple peaſant,
I'le in to counſell them: haply my preſence
May well abate the over-merry ſpleen,
Which otherwiſe would grow into extreames.

Enter aloft the Drunkard with attendants, ſome with apparel, Baſon & Ewer, & other appurtenances, & Lord.

Beg. For Gods ſake a pot of ſmall Ale.

1. Ser. Wil't pleaſe your Lordſhip drink a cup of ſack?

2. Ser. Wil't pleaſe your Honour taſte of theſe Conſerves?

3. Ser. What raiment will your Honour wear to day.

Beg. I am Chriſtophero Slie, call not me Honour nor Lordſhip: I ne're drank ſack in my life: and if you give me any Conſerves, give me Conſerves of Beef: ne're ask me what raiment I'le wear, for I have no more Doublets then Backs: no more Stockings then Legges: nor no more Shooes then Feet, nay ſometimes more Feet then Shooes, or ſuch Shooes as my Toes look through the over-leather.

Lor. Heaven ceaſe this idle humour in your Honour.
Oh that a mighty man of ſuch deſcent,
Of ſuch poſſeſſions, and ſo high eſteem,
Should be infuſed with ſo foul a ſpirit.

Beg. What, would you make me mad? Am not I Chriſtophero Slie, old Slie's ſon of Burton-heath, by birth a Pedler, by education a Card-maker, by tranſmutation a Bear-heard, and now by preſent profeſſion a Tinker. Ask Marrian Hacket the fat Ale-wife of Wincot, if ſhe know me not: if ſhe ſay I am not xiv.d. on the ſcore for ſheere Ale, ſcore me up for the lyingſt knave in Chriſtendome.
What I am not beſtraught: here's-------

1. Man. Oh this it is that makes your Lady mourn.

2. Man. Oh this is it that makes your ſervants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred ſhuns your houſe.
As beaten hence by your ſtrange Lunacy.
Oh Noble Lord, bethink thee of thy birth,
Call home thy ancient thoughts from baniſhment,
And baniſh hence the abject lowly dreames:
Look how thy ſervants doe attend on thee,
Each in his office ready at thy beck.
Wilt thou have Muſick? Heark, Apollo playes, Muſick.
And twenty caged Nightingales do ſing.
Or wilt thou ſleep? We'l have thee to a Couch,
Softer and ſweeter then the luſtfull bed
On purpoſe trimm'd up for Semiramis.
Say thou wilt walk: we will beſtrow the ground.
Or wilt thou ride? thy horſes ſhall be trapp'd,
Their harneſſe ſtudded all with Gold and Pearl.
Doſt thou love hawking? thou haſt Hawkes will ſoare
Above the morning Larke. Or wilt thou hunt,
Thy Hounds ſhall make the Welkin anſwer them,
And fetch ſhrill ecchoes from the hollow earth.

1. Man. Say thou wilt courſe, thy Gray-hounds are as ſwift
As breathed Stags: I, fleeter then the Roe.

2. M. Doſt thou love pictures? we will fetch thee ſtraight
Adonis painted by a running brook,
And Citherea all in ſedges hid,
Which ſeem to move, and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving ſedges play with winde.

Lord. We'l ſhew thee Jo, as ſhe was a Maid,
And how ſhe was beguiled and ſurpriz'd,
As lively painted, as the deed was done.

3. Man. Or Daphne roming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her Legs, that one ſhall ſwear ſhe bleeds,
And at that ſight ſhall ſad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and teares are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a Lord, and nothing but a Lord:
Thou haſt a Lady far more beautifull,
Then any woman in this waining age.

1 Man. And till the teares that ſhe hath ſhed for thee,
Like envious flouds, o're-run her lovely face,
She was the faireſt creature in the world,
And yet ſhe is inferiour to none.

Beg. Am I a Lord, and have I ſuch a Lady?
Or doe I dream? or have I dream'd till now?
I doe not ſleep: I ſee, I hear, I ſpeak:
I ſmell ſweet ſavours, and I feel ſoft things:
Upon my life I am a Lord indeed,
And not a Tinker, nor Chriſtophero Slie.
Well, bring our Lady hither to our ſight,
And once again a pot o'th' ſmalleſt Ale.

2. Man. Wil't pleaſe your Mightineſſe to waſh your hands?
Oh how we joy to ſee your wits reſtor'd,
Oh that once more you knew but what you are:
Theſe fifteen yeares you have bin in a dream,
Or when you wak'd, ſo wak'd as if you ſlept.
Beg. Theſe fifteen yeares, by my ſay, a goodly nap,
But did I never ſpeak of all that time?
1. Man. Oh yes, my Lord, but very idle words,
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you ſay, ye were beaten out of door,
And rail upon the Hoſteſſe of the Houſe,
And ſay you would preſent her at the Leet,
Becauſe ſhe brought Stone-Jugs, and no ſeal'd quarts:
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.
Beg. I, the womans maid of the houſe.
3 Ma. Why ſir, you know no houſe, nor no ſuch maid,
Nor no ſuch men as you have reckon'd up,
As Stephen Sle, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turph, and Henry Pimpernell,
And twenty more ſuch names and men as theſe,
Which never were, nor no man ever ſaw.
Beg. Now Lord be thanked for my good amends.
All. Amen.

Enter Lady with Attendants.

Beg. I thank thee, thou ſhalt not loſe by it.
Lady. How fares my noble Lord?
Beg. Marry I fare well, for here is cheer enough.
Where is my Wife?
La. Here noble Lord, what is thy will with her?
Beg. Are you my Wife, and will not call me Husband?
My men ſhould call me Lord, I am your good-man.
La. My Husband and my Lord, my Lord and Husband,
I am your Wife in all obedience.
Beg. I know it well, what muſt I call her?
Lord. Madam,
Beg. Alce Madam, or Jone Madam?
Lord. Madam, and nothing elſe, ſo Lords call Ladies.
Beg. Madam Wife, they ſay that I have dream'd,
And ſlept about ſome fifteen year or more.
Lady. I, and the time ſeems thirty unto me,
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.
Beg. 'Tis much, ſervants leave me and her alone:
Madam undreſſe you, and come now to bed.
La. Thrice noble Lord, let me entreat of you
To pardon me yet for a night or two:
Or if not ſo, untill the Sun be ſet.
For your Phyſicians have expreſſely charg'd,
In perill to incurre your former malady,
That I ſhould yet abſent me from your bed:
I hope this reaſon ſtands for my excuſe.
Beg. I, it ſtands ſo that I may hardly tarry ſo long:
But I would be loth to fall into my dreames again: I will therefore tarry in deſpight of the fleſh and the blood.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Your Honours Players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleaſant Comedy,
For ſo your Doctours hold it very meet,
Seeing too much ſadneſſe hath congeal'd your blood,
And melancholly is the Nurſe of frenzy,
Therefore they thought it good you hear a Play,
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which barres a thouſand harmes, and lengthens life.
Beg. Marry I will, let them play, it is not a Comonty, a Chriſtmas gambold, or a tumbling trick?
Lady. No my good Lord, it is more pleaſing ſtuffe.
Beg. What, houſholdſtuffe?
Lady. It is a kind of hiſtory.
Beg. Well, we'l ſee't:
Come Madam Wife, ſit by my ſide,
And let the world ſlip, we ſhall ne're be younger.

Flouriſh. Enter Lucentio, and his man Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, ſince for the great deſire I had
To ſee fair Padua, nurſery of Arts,
I am arriv'd for fruitfull Lumbardy,
The pleaſant garden of great Italy,
And by my fathers love and leave am arm'd
With his good will, and thy good company.
My truſty ſervant well approv'd in all,
Here let us breathe, and happly inſtitute
A courſe of Learning, and ingenious ſtudies.
Piſa renowned for grave Citizens
Gave me my being, and my father firſt
A Merchant of great Traffick through the world:
Vincentio's come of the Bentivolii,
Vincentio's ſon, brought up in Florence,
It ſhall become to ſerve all hopes conceiv'd
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I ſtudy,
Virtue and that part of Philoſophy
Will I apply, that treats of happineſſe,
By virtue ſpecially to be atchiev'd.
Tell me thy minde, for I have Piſa left,
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A ſhallow plaſh, to plunge him in the deep,
And with ſatiety ſeeks to quench his thirſt.
Tra. Me Pardonato, gentle maſter mine:
I am in all affected as your ſelf,
Glad that you thus continue your reſolve,
To ſuck the ſweets of ſweet Philoſophy.
Onely (good maſter) while we doe admire
This virtue, and this morall diſcipline,
Let's be no Stoicks, nor no ſtocks I pray;
Or ſo devote to Ariſtotles checks,
As Ovid be an out-caſt quite abjur'd:
Balke Logick with acquaintance that you have,
And practice Rhetorick in your common talke,
Muſick and Poeſie uſe, to quicken you,
The Mathematicks, and the Metaphyſicks,
Fall to them as you find your ſtomack ſerves you:
No profit growes, where is no pleaſure tane:
In brief ſir, ſtudy what you moſt affect.
Luc. Gramercies Tranio, well doſt thou adviſe,
If Biondello thou wert come aſhore,
We could at once put us in readineſſe,
And take a Lodging fit to entertain
Such friends (as time) in Padua ſhall beget.
But ſtay a while, what company is this?
Tra. Maſter ſome ſhew to welcome us to Town.

Enter Baptiſta with his two daughters, Katherina and Bianca, Gremio a Pantalowne, Hortenſio a Suitor to Bianca, Lucen. Tranio, ſtand by.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,
For how I firmly am reſolv'd you know:
That is, not to beſtow my youngeſt daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder;
If either of you both love Katherina,

Becauſe I know you well, and love you well,
Leave ſhall you have to court her at your pleaſure.

Gre. To cart her rather. She's too rough for me,
There, there Hortentio, will you any Wife?

Kat. I pray you ſir, is it your will
To make a ſtale of me among'ſt thoſe mates?

Hor. Mates maid, how mean you that?
No mates for you,
Unleſſe you were of gentler milder mould.

Kat. I'faith ſir, you ſhall never need to fear,
I-wis it is not halfe way to her heart:
But if it were, doubt not, her care ſhall be,
To combe your noddle with a three-legg'd ſtoole,
And paint your face, and uſe you like a foole.

Hor. From all ſuch devils, good Lord deliver us.

Gre. And me too, good Lord.

Tra. Huſh'd maiſter, heres ſome good paſtime toward,
That wench is ſtark mad or wonderfull froward.

Luc. But in the others ſilence do I ſee,
Maids milde behaviour and ſobrietie.
Peace Tranio.

Tra. Well ſaid Maiſter, mum, and gaze your fill.

Bap. Gentlemen, that I may ſoon make good
What I have ſaid, Bianca get you in,
And let it not diſpleaſe thee, good Bianca,
For I will love thee ne're the leſſe my girle.

Kat. A pretty peat, it is beſt put finger in the eye, and ſhe knew why.

Bian. Siſter content you, in my diſcontent.
Sir, to your pleaſure humbly I ſubſcribe:
My books and inſtruments ſhall be my company,
On them to look, and practiſe by my ſelf.

Luc. Heark Tranio, thou maiſt hear Minerva ſpeak.

Hor. Signior Baptiſta, will you be ſo ſtrange,
Sorry am I that our good will effects
Bianca's grief.

Gre. Why will you mew her up
(Signior Baptiſta) for this fiend of hell,
And make her bear the penance of her tongue?

Bap. Gentlemen content ye: I am reſolv'd:
Go in Bianca.
And for I know ſhe taketh moſt delight
In Muſick, Inſtruments, and Poetry,
Schoolemaiſters will I keep within my houſe,
Fit to inſtruct her youth. If you Hortentio,
Or ſignior Gremio you know any ſuch,
Preferre them hither: for to cunning men,
I will be very kinde and liberall,
To mine own children, in good bringing up,
And ſo farewell: Katherina you may ſtay,
For I have more to commune with Bianca. Exit.

Kat. Why, and I truſt I may go too, mey I not?
What ſhall I be appointed houres, as though (Belike) I knew not what to take,
And what to leave? Ha. Exit.

Gre. You may go to the devils dam: your gifts are ſo good, here's none will hold you: Our love is not ſo great Hortentio, but we may blow our nails together, and faſt it fairly out. Our cake's dow on both ſides. Farewy a: yet for the love I bear my ſweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein ſhe delights, I will wiſh him to her father.

Hor. So will I Signior Gremis: but a word I pray: Though the nature of our quarrell yet never brook'd parlee, know now upon advice, it toucheth us both: that we may yet again have acceſſe to our fair Miſtris, and be happy rivals in Bianca's love, to labour and effect one thing ſpecially.

Gre. What's that I pray?

Hor. Marry ſir, to get a husband for her ſiſter,

Gru. A husband: a devill.

Hor. I ſay a husband.

Gre. I ſay a devill: Think'ſt thou, Hortentio, though her father be very rich, any man is ſo very a foole to be married to hell?

Hor. Tuſh Gremio; though it paſſe your patience and mine to endure her lewd alarums, why man, there be good fellowes in the world, and a man could light on them, Would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Gre. I cannot tell: but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition; To be whipt at the high croſſe every morning.

Hor. Faith (as you ſay) there's ſmall choice in rotten apples: come, ſince this bar in law makes us friends, it ſhall be ſo forth friendly maintain'd, till by helping Baptiſta's eldeſt daughter to a husband, we ſet his youngeſt free for a husband, and then have too't afreſh: Sweet Bianca, happy man be his dole: he that runnes faſteſt, gets the Ring: How ſay you ſignior Gremio?

Grem. I am agreed, and would I had given him the beſt horſe in Padua to begin his wooing that would throughly wooe her, wed her, and bed her, and rid the houſe of her. Come on.

Exeunt ambo. Manet Tranio and Lucentio.

Tra. I pray ſir tell me, is it poſſible
That love ſhould on a ſudden take ſuch hold.

Luc. Oh Tranio, till I found it to be true,
I never thought it poſſible or likely.
But ſee, while idely I ſtood looking on,
I found the effect of Love in idleneſſe,
And now in plainneſſe to confeſſe to thee
That art to me as ſecret and as dear
As Anna to the Queen of Carthage was:
Tranio I burn, I pine, I periſh Tranio,
If I atchieve not this young modeſt girle:
Councell me Tranio, for I know thou can'ſt:
Aſſiſt me Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Maſter, it is no time to chide you now.
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love touch'd you, nought remains but ſo,
Redime te captum quam queas minimo.

Luc. Gramercies Lad: go forward, this contents,
The reſt will comfort, for thy counſel's ſound.

Tra. Maſter, you look'd ſo longly on the maid
Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.

Luc. Oh yes, I ſaw ſweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agenor had,
That made great Jove to humble him to her hand,
When with his knees he kiſt the Cretan ſtrond.

Tra. Saw you no more? mark'd you not how her ſiſter,
Began to ſcold, and raiſe up ſuch a ſtorm?
That mortall ears might hardly endure the din,

Luc. Tranio, I ſaw her corrall lips to move;
And with her breath ſhe did perfume the aire,
Sacred and ſweet was all I ſaw in her.

Tra. Nay, then 'tis time to ſtir him from his trance:
I pray awake ſir: if you love the Maid;
Bend thoughts and wits to atchieve her. Thus it ſtands:
Her eldeſt ſiſter is ſo curſt and ſhrew'd,
That till the father rid his hands of her,
Maſter, your love muſt live a maid at home,
And therefore has he cloſely meu'd her up,

Becauſe ſhe will not be annoy'd with ſuters.

Luc. Ah Tranio, what a cruell Fathers he:
But art thou not adviſ'd, he took ſome care
To get her cunning Schoolemaſters to inſtruct her.

Tra, I marry am I ſir, and now 'tis plotted.

Luc. I have it Tranio.

Tra. Maiſter, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.

Luc. Tell me thine firſt.

Tra. You will be ſchoole-maiſter,
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That's your device.

Luc. It is: May it be done?

Tra. Not poſſible: for who ſhall bear your part,
And be in Padua here Vincentio's ſon,
Keep houſe, and ply his book, welcome his friendes,
Viſit his Countreymen, and banquet them?

Luc. Baſta, content thee: for I have it full.
We have not yet been ſeen in any houſe,
Nor can we be diſtinguiſh'd by our faces,
For man or maiſter: then it follows thus;
Thou ſhalt be maiſter, Tranio in my ſted:
Keep houſe, and port, and ſervants, as I ſhould,
I will ſome other be, ſome Florentine,
Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Piſa.
'Tis hatch'd, and ſhall be ſo: Tranio at once
Uncaſe thee: take my colour'd hat and cloak,
When Biondello comes, he waits on thee,
But I will charm him firſt to keep his tongue.

Tra. So had you need:
In brief Sir, ſith it your pleaſure is,
And I am tyed to be obedient,
For ſo your father charg'd me at our parting:
Be ſerviceable to my ſon (quoth he)
Although I think 'twas in another ſence,
I am content to be Lucentio,
Becauſe ſo well I love Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio be ſo, becauſe Lucentio loves,
And let me be a ſlave, t'atchieve that maid,
Whoſe ſudden ſight hath thral'd my wounded eye.

Enter Biondello.

Here comes the rogue. Sirra, where have you been?

Bion. Where have I been? Nay how now, where are you? Maiſter, ha's my fellow Tranio ſtol'n your cloathes, or you ſtol'n his, or both? Pray what's the news?

Luc. Sirrah come hither, 'tis no time to jeſt.
And therefore frame your manners to the time.
Your fellow Tranio here to ſave my life,
Puts my apparell, and my count'nance on,
And I for my eſcape have put on his:
For in a quarrell ſince I came aſhore,
I kill'd a man, and fear I am deſcried:
Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes:
While I make way from hence to ſave my life:
You underſtand me?

Bion I ſir, ne're a whit.

Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth,
Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him, would I were ſo too.

Tra. So would I, 'faith boy, to have the next wiſh after, that Lucentio indeed had Baptiſta's youngeſt daughter. But ſirra, not for my ſake, but your maiſters, I adviſe you uſe your manners diſcreetly in all kind of companies: When I am alone, why then I am Tranio: but in all places elſe, your maiſter Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio let's go:
One thing more reſts, that thy ſelf execute,
To make one 'mong theſe wooers: if thou ask me why,
Sufficeth my reaſons are both good and weighty.

1. Man. My Lord you nod, you do not mind the play.

Beg. Yes by Saint Anne do I, a good matter ſurely: Comes there any more of it?

Lad. My Lord, 'tis but begun.

Beg. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, Madam Lady: would 'twere done. They ſit and marke.

Enter Petruchio, and his man Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for for a while I take my leave,
To ſee my friends in Padua; but of all
My beſt beloved and approued friend
Hortentio: and I trow this is the houſe:
Here ſirra Grumio, knock I ſay.

Gru. Knock ſir? whom ſhould I knock? Is there any man ha's rebus'd your worſhip?

Pet. Villain I ſay, knock me here ſoundly.

Gru. Knock you here ſir? Why ſir, what am I ſir, that I ſhould knock you here ſir?

Pet. Villain I ſay knock me at this gate,
And rap me well, or I'le knock your knaves pate.

Gru. My Maiſter is grown quarrelſome:
I ſhould knock you firſt,
And then I know after, who comes by the worſt.

Pet. Will it not be?
Faith ſirra, and you'll not knock, I'le ring it,
I'le try how you can Sol, Fa, and ſing it.

He rings him by the ears.

Gru. Help miſtris help, my maiſter is mad.

Pet. Now knock when I bid you: ſirra villain.

Enter Hortentio

Hor. How now, what's the matter? My old friend Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio? How do you all at Verona?

Pet. Signior Hortentio, come you to part the fray?
Contutti le core bene trovatto, may I ſay.

Hor. Alla noſtra caſa ben venuto multo honorato ſignior mio Petruchio.
Riſe Grumio, we will compound this quarrell.

Gru. Nay 'tis no matter ſir, what he leges in Latine. If this be not a lawfull cauſe for me to leave his ſervice, look you ſir: He bid me knock him, and rap him ſoundly ſir. Well, was it fit for a ſervant to uſe his maſter ſo, being perhaps (for ought I ſee) two and thirty, a peep out? Whom would to God I had well knock't at firſt, then had not Grumio come by the worſt.

Pet. A ſenceleſſe villain: good Hortentio,
I bad the raſcall knock upon your gate,
And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Gru. Knock at the gate? O heavens: ſpeak you not theſe words plain? Sirra, Knock me here: rap me here: knock me well, and knock me ſoundly? And come you now with knocking at the gate?

Pet. Sirra, be gone, or talk not I adviſe you.

Hor. Petruchio patience, I am Grumio's pledge:
Why this a heavy chance 'twixt him and you,
Your ancient truſty pleaſant ſervant Grumio:
And tell me now (ſweet friend) what happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as ſcatters young men through the world,

To ſeeke their fortunes farther than at home,
Where ſmall experience growes but in a few.
Signior Hortenſio, thus it ſtands with me,
Antonio my father is deceaſt,
And I have thruſt my ſelfe into this maze,
Happily to wive and thrive, as beſt I may:
Crownes in my purſe I have, and goods at home,
And ſo am come abroad to ſee the world.

Hor. Petruchio. ſhall I then come roundly to thee,
And wiſh thee to a ſhrew'd ill-favour'd wife?
Thou'dſt thanke me but a little for my counſell:
And yet Ile promiſe thee ſhe ſhall be rich,
And very rich: but th'art too much my friend,
And Ile not wiſh thee to her.

Pet. Signior Hortenſio, 'twixt ſuch friends as wee,
Few words ſuffice: and therefore, if thou know
One rich' enough to be Petruchio's wife:
(As wealth is burthen of my wooing dance)
Be ſhe as foule as was Florentius Love,
As old as Sibell, and as curſt and ſhrow'd
As Secrates Zantippe, or a worſe:
She moves me not, or not removes at leaſt
Affections edge in time. Were ſhe as rough
As are the ſwelling Adriaticke ſeas.
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Gru. Nay looke you ſir, hee tels you flatly what his minde is: why give him Gold enough, and marrie him to a Puppet or an Aglet babie, or an old trot with ne're'a tooth in her head, though ſhe have as many diſeaſes as two and fifty horſes. Why nothing comes amiſſe, ſo mony comes withall.

Hor. Petruchio, ſince we are ſtept thus farre in,
I will continue that I broach'd in jeſt,
I can Petruchio helpe thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and yong and beautious.
Brought up as beſt becomes a Gentlewoman.
Her onely fault, and that is fault enough,
Is, that ſhe is intollerable curſt,
And ſhrew'd, and froward, ſo beyond all meaſure,
That were my ſtate farre worſer then it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of Gold.

Pet. Hortenſio peace: thou knowſt not golds effect,
Tell me her fathers name, and 'tis enough:
For I will boord her, though ſhe chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in Autumne cracke.

Hor. Her father is Baptiſta Minola,
An affable and courteous Gentleman,
Her name is Katherina Minola,
Renown'd in Padua for her ſcolding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her,
And he knew my deceaſed father well:
I will not ſleepe Hortenſio til I ſee her,
And therefore let me be thus bold with you,
To give you over at this firſt encounter,
Vnleſſe you will accompany me thither.

Gru. I pray you Sir let him go while the humor laſts. A my word, and ſhe knew him as wel as I do, ſhe would tkinke ſcolding would do little good upon him. Shee may perhaps call him halfe a ſcore Knaves, or ſo: Why that's nothing; and he begin once, hee'l raile in his rope trickes. Ile tell you what ſir, and ſhe ſtand him but a litle, he wil throw a figure in her face, and ſo disfigure hir with it, that ſhee ſhall have no more eyes to ſee withall then a Cat: you know him not ſir.

Hor. Tarry Petruchio, I muſt go with thee,
For in Baptiſtas keepe my treaſure is:
He hath the Jewell of my life in hold,
His yongeſt daughter, beautifull Bianca,
And her with-holds hee from me. Other more
Suters to her, and rivals in my Love:
Suppoſing it a thing impoſſible,
For thoſe defects I have before rehearſt,
That ever Katherina will be woo'd:
Therefore this order hath Baptiſta tane,
That none ſhal have acceſſe vnto Bianca,
Till Katherine the Curſt, have got a husband.

Gru. Katherine the curſt,
A title for a maide, of all titles the worſt.

Hor. Now ſhall my friend Petruchio do me grace,
And offer me diſguis'd in ſober robes,
To old Baptiſta as a ſchoole-maiſter
Well ſeene in Muſicke, to inſtruct Bianca,
That ſo I may by this device at leaſt
Have leave and leiſure to make love to her,
And vnſuſpected court her by her ſelfe.

Enter Gremio and Lucentio diſguiſed.

Gru. Heere's no knavery. See, to beguile the old folkes how the young folkes lay theirs head together. Maiſter, maiſter, looke about you: Who goes there? ha.

Hor. Peace Grumio, it is the rivall of my Love.
Petruchio ſtand by a whilt.

Gru. A proper ſtripling, and an amourous.

Gre. O very well, I have perus'd the note.
Hearke you ſir, Ile have them very fairely bound,
All bookes of Love, ſee that at any hand,
And ſee you reade no other Lectnres to her:
You underſtand me. Over and beſide
Signior Baptiſtas liberality
Ile mend it with a Largeſſe. Take your paper too,
And let me have them very wel perfum'd,
For ſhe is ſweeter then perfume it ſelfe
To whom they go to: what will you reade to her?

Luc. What ere I reade to her, Ile pleade for you,
As for my patron, ſtand you ſo aſſur'd;
As firmely as your ſelfe were ſtill in place,
Yea and perhaps with more ſucceſſefull words
Then you; vnleſſe you were a ſcholler ſir.

Gre. Oh this learning, what a thing it is.

Gru. Oh this Woodcocke, what an Aſſe it is.

Pet. Peace ſirra.

Hor. Gru. mum: God ſave you ſignior Gremio.

Gre. And you are well met, Signior Hortenſio.
Trow you whither I am going? To Baptiſta Minola,
I promiſt to enquire carefully
About a ſchoolemaſter for the faire Bianca,
And by good fortune I have lighted wel
On this yong man: For learning and behauiour
Fit for her turne, well read in Poetrie
And other boookes, good ones, I warrant ye.

Hor. 'Tis well: and I have met a Gentleman
Hath promiſt me to helpe one to another,
A fine Muſitian to inſtruct our Miſtris,
So ſhal I no whit be behinde in duty
To faire Bianca, ſo beloved of me.

Gre. Beloved of me, and that my deeds ſhal prove.

Gru. And that his bags ſhal prove.

Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no tiuie to vent our love,
Liſten to me, and if you ſpeake me faire,
Ile tell you newes indifferent good for either.
Heere is a Gentle nan whom by chance I met

Vpon agreement from us to his liking,
Will undertake to woo curſt Katherine,
Yea, and to marry her, if her dowrie pleaſe,
Gre. So ſaid, ſo done, is well:
Hortenſio, have you told him all her faults?
Pet. I know ſhe is an irkeſome brawling ſcold:
If that be all Maiſters, I heare no harme.
Gre. No, ſayſt me ſo, friend? What Countreyman?
Pet. Borne in Verona, old Butonios ſonne:
My father dead, my fortune lives for me,
And I do hope, good dayes and long, to ſee.
Gre. Oh ſir, ſuch a life with ſuch a wife, were ſtrange:
But if you have a ſtomacke, too't a Gods name,
You ſhall haue me aſſiſting you in all.
But will you woo this Wilde-cat?
Pet. Will I live?
Gru. Will he woo her? I: or Ile hang her,
Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent?
Thinke you, a little dinne can daunt mine eares?
Have I not in my time heard Lions rore?
Have I not heard the ſea, puft up with windes,
Rage like an angry Boare, chafed with ſweat?
Have I not heard great Ordnance in the field?
And heavens Artillerie thunder in the ſkies?
Have I not in a pitched battell heard
Loud larums, neighing ſteeds, & trumpets clangue?
And do you tell me of a womans tongue?
That gives not halfe ſo great a blow to heare,
As will a Cheſſe-nut in a Farmers fire;
Tuſh, tuſh, feare boyes with bugs.
Gru. For he feares none.
Gre. Hortenſio hearke:
This Gentleman is happily arriv'd,
My minde preſumes for his owne good, and yours.
Hor. I promiſt we would be Contributors,
And beare his charge of wooing whatſoere.
Gre. And ſo we will, provided that he win her.
Gru. I would I were as ſure of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio brave, and Biondello.

Tra. Gentlemen God ſave you. If I may be bold,
Tell me I beſeech you, which is the readieſt way
To the houſe of Signior Baptiſta Minola?
Bio. He that ha's the two faire daughters: iſt he you meame?
Tra. Even he Biondello.
Gre. Hearke you ſir, you meane not her to——
Tra. Perhaps him and her ſir, what have you to do?
Pet. Not her that chides ſir, at any hand I pray.
Tra. I love no chiders ſir: Biondello, let's away.
Luc. Well begun Tranio.
Hor. Sir, a word ere you go:
Are you a ſutor to the Maid you talke of, yea or no?
Tra. And if I be ſir, is it any offence?
Gre. No: if without more words you will get you hence.
Tra. Why ſir, I pray are not the ſtreets as free
For me, as for you?
Gree. But ſo is not ſhe.
Trr. For what reaſon I beſeech you.
Gre. For this reaſon if you'l kno,
That ſhe's the choiſe love of Signior Gremio.
Hor. That ſhe's the choſen of ſignior Hortenſio.
Tra. Softly my Maiſters: If you be Gentlemen
Do me this right: heare me with patience.
Baptiſta is a noble Gentleman,
To whom my Father is not all unknowne,
And were his daughter fairer then ſhe is,
She may more ſutore have, and me for one.
Faire Ladaes daughter had a thouſand wooers,
Then well one more may faire Bianca have;
And ſo ſhe ſhall. Lucentio ſhall make one,
Though Paris came, in hope to ſpeed alone.
Gre. What, this Gentleman will out-talke us all.
Lu. Sir give him head, I know hee'l prove a Iade.
Pet. Hortenſio, to what end are all theſe words?
Hor. Sir, let me be ſo bold as to aske you,
Did you yet ever ſee Baptiſtas daughter?
Tra. No ſir, but heare I do that he hath two:
The one, as famous for a ſcolding tongue,
As is the other, for beauteous modeſtie.
Pet. Sir, ſir, the firſt's for me, let her go by.
Gre. Yea, leave that labour to great Hercules,
And let it be more then Alcides twelve.
Pet. Sir underſtand you this of me (inſooth)
The yongeſt daughter whom you hearken for,
Her father keepes from all acceſſe of ſutors,
And will not promiſe her to any man,
Vntill the elder ſiſter firſt be wed.
The yonger then is free, and not before.
Tra. If it be ſo ſir, that you are the man
Muſt ſteed us all, and me amongſt the reſt:
And if you breake the ice, and do this ſeeke,
Atchieve the elder: ſet the yonger free,
For our acceſſe, whoſe hap ſhall be to have her,
Will not ſo graceleſſe be, to be ingrate.
Hor. Sir you ſay well, and well you do conceive,
And ſince you do profeſſe to be a ſutor,
You muſt as we do, gratifie this Gentleman,
To whom we all reſt generally beholding.
Tra. Sir, I ſhall not be ſlacke, in ſigne wherof,
Pleaſe ye we may contrive this afternoone,
And quaffe carowſes to our Miſtreſſe health,
And do as adverſaries do in law,
Strive mightily, hut eate and drinke as friends.
Gru. Bion. Oh excellent motion: fellowes let's be gon.
Hor. The motion's good indeed, and be it ſo,
Petruchio, I ſhall be your Ben venuto. Exeunt.

Enter Katherina and Bianca.

Bia. Good ſiſter wrong me not, nor wrong your ſelfe,
To make a bondmaide and a ſlave of me,
That I diſdaine: but for theſe other goods,
Vnbinde my hands, Ile pull them off my ſelfe,
Yea all my raiment, to my petticoate,
Or what you will command me, will I do,
So well I know my dutie to my elders.
Kate. Of all thy ſuters heere I charge thee tell
Whom thou lov'ſt beſt: ſee thou diſſemble not.
Bianca. Beleeve me ſiſter, of all the men alive,
I never yet beheld that ſpeciall face,
Which I could fancie, more then any other.
Kate. Minion thou lyeſt, Is't not Hortenſio?
Bian. If you affect him ſiſter, heere I ſweare
Ile pleade for you my ſelfe, but you ſhall have him.
Kate Oh then belike you fancie riches more,
You will have Gremio to keepe you faire.
Bian. Is it for him you do envie me ſo?
Nay then you jeſt, and now I well perceive
You have but jeſted with me all this while;
I prethee ſiſter Kate untie my hands.
Ka. If that be jeſt, then all the reſt was ſo. Strikes her.

Enter Baptiſta.

Bap. Why how now Dame, whence growes this inſolence?

Bianca ſtand aſide, poore gyrle ſhe weepes:
Go ply thy Needle, meddle not with her.
For ſhame thou Hilding of a divelliſh ſpirit,
Why doſt thou wrong her, that did ne're wrong thee?
When did ſhe croſſe thee with a bitter word?

Kat. Her ſilence flouts me, and Ile be reueng'd,
Flies after Bianca

Bap. What in my ſight? Bianca get thee in. Exit.

Kat. What will you not ſuffer me: Nay now I ſee
She is your treaſure, ſhe muſt have a husband,
I muſt dance bare-foot on her wedding day,
And for your love to her, leade Apes in hell.
Talke not to me, I will goe ſit and weepe,
Till I can finde occaſion of revenge.

Bap. Was never Gentleman thus greev'd as I?
But who comes here.

Enter Gremio, Lucentio, in the habit of a meane man,
Petruchio with Tranio, with his boy bearing a Lute and Bookes.

Gre. Good morrow neighbour Baptiſta.

Bap. Good morrow neighbour Gremio: God ſave you Gentlemen.

Pet. And you good ſir: pray have you not a daughter, cal'd Katerina, faire and vertuous?

Bap. I have a daughter ſir, cal'd Katerina,

Gre. You are too bluut, go to it orderly.

Pte. You wrong me ſignior Gremio, give me leave.
I am a gentleman of Verona ſir,
That hearing of her beauty, and her wit,
Her affability and baſhfull modeſtie:
Her, wondrous qualities, and milde behaviour,
Am bold to ſhew my ſelfe a forward gueſt
Within your houſe, to make mine eye the witneſſe
Of that report, which I ſo oft have heard,
And for an entrance to my entertainement,
I do preſent you with a man of mine
Cunning in Muſicke, and the Mathematickes,
To inſtruct her fully in thoſe ſciences,
Whereof I know ſhe is not ignorant:
Accept of him, or elſe you do me wrong,
His name is Licio, borne in Mantua.

Bap. Y'are welcome ſir, and he for your good ſake.
But for my daughter Katerine, this I know,
She is not for your turne, the more my greefe.

Pet. I ſee you do not meane to part with her.
Or elſe you like not of my company.

Bap. Miſtake me not, I ſpeake but what I finde,
Whence are you ſir? What may I call your name.

Pet. Petruchio is my name, Antonio's ſonne,
A man well knowne throughout all Italy.

Bap. I know him well: you are welcome for his ſake.

Gre. Saving your tale Petruchio, I pray let us that are poore petitioners ſpeake too? Baccare, you are mervaylous forward.

Pet. Oh, Pardon me ſignior Gremio, I would faine bee doing.

Gre. I doubt it not ſir. But you will curſe
Your wooing neighbours: this is a guift
Very gratefull, I am ſure of it, to expreſſe
The like kindneſſe my ſelfe, that have beene
More kindely beholding to you then any:
Freely give unto this yong Scholler, that hath
Beene long ſtudying at Rhemes, as cunning
In Greeke, Latine, and other Languages,
As the other in Muſicke and Mathematickes:
His name is Cambio: pray accept his ſeruice.

Bap. A thouſand thankes ſignior Gremio:
Welcome good Cambio. But gentle ſir,
Me thinkes you walke like a ſtranger,
May I be ſo bold, to know the cauſe of your comming?

Tra. Pardon me ſir, the boldneſſe is mine owne,
That being a ſtranger in this Cittye here,
Do make thy ſelfe a ſuitor to your daughter,
Vnto Bianca, faire and vertuous:
Nor is your firme reſolue unknowne to me,
In the preferment of the eldeſt ſiſter.
This liberty is all that I requeſt,
That upon knowledge of my parentage,
I may have welcome 'mongſt the reſt that woo,
And free acceſſe and fauour as the reſt.
And toward the education of your daughters,
I heere beſtow a ſimple inſtrument,
And this ſmall packet of Greeke and Latine bookes,
If you accept them, then their worth is great:

Bap. Lucentio is your name, of whence I pray.

Tra. Of Piſa ſir, ſonne to Vinſencio.

Bap. A mightie man of Piſa by report,
I know him well: you are very welcom[illegible]r:
Take you the Lute, and you the ſet of bookes,
You ſhall go ſee your Pupils preſently.
Holla, within.

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, leade theſe Gentlemen
To my two daughters, and then tell them both
Theſe are their Tutors, bid them uſe them well,
We will go walke a little in the Orchard,
And then to dinner: you are paſſing welcome,
And ſo I pray you all to thinke yonr ſelves.

Pet. Signior Baptiſta, my buſineſſe asketh haſte,
And everie day I cannot come to wooe,
You know my father well, and in him me,
Left ſolie heire to al his Lands and goods,
Which I have bettered rather then decreaſt,
Then tell me, if I get your daughters love,
What dowrie ſhall I have with her to wife.

Bap. After my death, the one halfe of my Lands,
And in poſſeſsion twentie thouſand Crownes.

Pet. And for that dowrie, Ile aſſure her of
Her widdow-hood, be it that ſhe ſurvive me
In all my Lands and Leaſes whoſoever,
Let ſpecialties be therefore drawne betweene us,
That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. I, when the ſpeciall thing is well obtain'd,
That is her love: for that is all in all.

Pet. Why that is nothing: for I tell you father,
I am as peremptorie as ſhe proud minded:
And where two raging fires meete together,
They do conſume the thing that feedes their furie.
Though little fire growes great with little winde,
Yet extreame guſts will blow out fire and all:
So I to her, and ſo ſhe yeelds to me,
For I am rough, and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well maiſt thou woo, and happy bee thy ſpeed:
But be thou arm'd for ſome unhappie words.

Pet. I to the proofe, as Mountaines are for windes,
That ſhake not, though they blow perpetually.

Enter Hortenſio with his head broke.

Bap. How now my friend, why doſt thou looke ſo pale?
Hor. For feare I promiſe you, if I looke pale.
Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good Muſitian?
Hor. I thinke ſhe'l ſooner prove a ſouldier,
Iron may hold with her, but never Lutes.
Bap. Why then thou canſt not break her to the Lute?
Hor. Why no, for ſhe hath broke the Lute to me:
I did but tell her ſhe miſtooke her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering,
When (with a moſt impatient divelliſh ſpirit)
Frets call you theſe? (quoth ſhe) Ile fume with them:
And with that word ſhe ſtroke me on the head,
And through the inſtrument my pate made way,
And there I ſtood amazed for a while,
As on a Pillorie, looking through the Lute,
While ſhe did call me Raſcall, Fidler,
And twangling Iacke, with twenty ſuch vilde tearmes,
As had ſhe ſtudied to miſuſe me ſo.
Pet. Now by the world, it is a luſty Wench
I love her ten times more then ere I did,
Oh how I long to have ſome chat with her.
Ba. Wel go with me, and be not ſo diſcomfited.
Proceed in practiſe with my yonger daughter,
She's apt to learne, and thankefull for good turnes:
Signior Petruchio; will you go with us,
Or ſhall I ſend my daughter Kate to you.

Exit. Manet Petruchio.

Pet. I pray you do. I will attend her heere.
And woo her with ſome ſpirit when ſhe comes.
Say that ſhe raile, why then Ile tell her plaine,
She ſings as ſweetly as a Nightinghale:
Say that ſhe frowne, Ile ſay ſhe lookes as cleere
As morning Roſes newly waſht with dew:
Say ſhe be mute, and will not ſpeake a word,
Then Ile commend her volubility,
And ſay ſhe vttereth piercing eloquence:
If ſhe do bid me packe, Ile give her thankes,
As though ſhe bid me ſtay by her a weeke:
If ſhe deny to wed, Ile crave the day
When I ſhall aske the banes, and when be married.
But heere ſhe comes, and now Petruchio ſpeake.

Enter Katerina.

Good morrow Kate, for thats your name I heare.
Kat. Well have you heard, but ſomething hard of hearing:
They call me Katerine, that do talke of me.
Pet. You lye infaith, for you are call'd plaine Kate,
And bony Kate, and ſometimes Kate the curſt:
But Kate, the prettieſt Kate in Chriſtendome,
Kate of Kate-hall, my ſuper-dainty Kate,
For dainties are all Kates, and therefore Kate
Take this of me, Kate of my conſolation,
Hearing thy mildneſſe prais'd in euery Towne,
Thy vertues ſpoke of, and thy beauty ſounded,
Yet not ſo deepely as to thee belongs,
My ſelfe am moou'd to woo thee for my wife.
Kat. Mov'd, in good time, let him that mov'd you hether
Remove you hence: I knew you at the firſt
You were a mouable.
Pet. Why, what's a mouable?
Kat. A joyn'd ſtoole.
Pet. Thou haſt hit it: come ſit on me.
Kat. Aſſes are made to beare, and ſo are you.
Pet. Women are made to beare, and ſo are you.
Kat. No ſuch Iade ſir as you, if me you meane.
Pet. Alas good Kate, I will not burthen thee,
For knowing thee to be but yong and light.
Kat. To light for ſuch a ſwaine as you to catch,
And yet as heavy as my waight ſhould be.
Pet. Should be, ſhould: buzze.
Kat. Well tane, and like a buzzard.
Pet, Oh ſlow-wing'd Turtle, ſhal a buzzard take thee?
Kat. I for a Turtle, as he takes a buzard.
Pet. Come, come you Waſpe, y'faith you are too angry.
Kat. If I be waſpiſh, beſt beware my ſting.
Pet. My remedy is then to plucke it out.
Kat. I, if the foole could finde it where it lies.
Pet. Who knowes not where a Waſpe does weare his ſting? In his taile.
Kat. In his tongue?
Pet. Whoſe tongue.
Kat. Yours if you talke of tales, and ſo farewell.
Pet. What with my tongue in your taile.
Nay, come againe, good Kate, I am a Gentleman,
Kat. That Ile trie. ſhe ſtrikes him
Pet. I ſweare Ile cuffe you, if you ſtrike againe.
Kat. So may you looſe your armes,
If you ſtrike me, you are no Gentleman,
And if no Gentleman, why then no armes.
Pet. A Herald Kate? Oh put me in thy bookes.
Kat. What is your Creſt, a Coxcombe?
Pet. A combleſſe Cocke, ſo Kate will be my Hen.
Kat. No Cocke of mine, you crow too like a craven
Pet. Nay come Kate; come; you muſt not looke ſo ſowre.
Kat. It is my faſhion when I ſee a Crab.
Pet. Why heere's no crab, and therefore looke not ſowre.
Kat. There is, there is.
Pet. Then ſhew it me.
Kat. Had I a glaſſe, I would.
Pet. What, you meane my face.
Kat Well aym'd of ſuch a yong one.
Pet. Now by S. George I am too yong for you.
Kat. Yet you are wither'd.
Pet. 'Tis with cares.
Kat. I care not.
Pet. Nay heare you Kate. Inſooth you ſcape not ſo.
Kat. I chafe you if I tarrie. Let me go.
Pet. No, not a whit, I finde you paſſing gentle:
'Twas told me you were rough, and coy, and ſullen,
And now I finde report a very liar,
For thou art pleaſant, gameſome, paſſing courteous,
But ſlow in ſpeach, yet ſweet as ſpring-time flowers.
Thou canſt not frowne, thou canſt not looke a ſcance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will,
Nor haſt thou pleaſure to be croſſe in talke:
But thou with mildneſſe entertain'ſt thy wooers,
With gentle conference, ſoft, and affable.
Why does the world report that Kate doth limpe?
Oh ſland'rous world: Kate like the hazle twig
Is ſtraight, and ſlender, and as browne in hue
As hazle nuts, and ſweeter then the kernels:
Oh let me ſee thee walke: thou doſt not halt.
Kat. Go foole, and whom thou keep'ſt command.
Pet. Did ever Dian ſo become a Grove
As Kate this chamber with her princely gate;
O be thou Dian, and let her be Kate,

And then let Kate be chaſte, and Dian ſportfull.
Kate. Where did you ſtudy all this goodly ſpeech ?
Pet. It is extempore, from my mother wit.
Kate. A witty mother, witleſſe elſe her ſonne.
Pet. Am I not wiſe ?
Kat. Yes, keepe you warme.
Pet. Marry ſo I meane ſweet Katherine in thy bed :
And therefore ſetting all this chat aſide,
Thus in plaine termes : your father hath conſented
That you ſhall be my wife : your dowry greed on,
And will you, nill you, I will marry you.
Now Kate, I am a husband for your turne,
For by this light, whereby I ſee thy beauty,
Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well,
Thou muſt be married to no man but me,

Enter Baptiſta, Gremio, Trayno.

For I am he am borne to tame you Kate,
And bring you from a wild Kat to a Kate
Conformable as other houſhold Kates :
Heere comes your father, never make deniall,
I muſt, and will have Katherine to my wife. (daughter ?
Bap. Now Signior Petruchio, how ſpeed you with my
Pet. How but well ſir ? how but well ?
It were impoſſible I ſhould ſpeed amiſſe. (dumps ?
Bap. Why how now daughter Katherine, in your
Kat. Call you me daughter ? now I promiſe you
You have ſhewd a tender fatherly regard,
To wiſh me wed to one halfe Lunaticke;
A mad-cap ruffian, and a ſwearing Iacke,
That thinkes with oathes to face the matter out.
Pet. Father, 'tis thus, your ſelfe and all the world
That talk'd of her, have talk'd amiſſe of her :
If ſhe be curſt, it is for pollicy,
For ſhe's not froward, but modeſt as the Dove,
Shee is not hot, but temperate as the morne;
For patience ſhe will prove a ſecond Griſſel,
And Roman Lucrece for her chaſtity :
And to conclude, we have greed ſo well together,
That upon ſonday is the wedding day.
Kat. Ile ſee thee hang'd on ſonday firſt. (firſt.
Gre. Harke Petruchio, ſhe ſayes ſhe'il ſee thee hang'd
Tra. Is this your ſpeeding? nay then godnight our part.
Pet. Be patient gentlemen, I chooſe her for my ſelfe,
If ſhe and I be pleas'd, what's that to you ?
'Tis bargain'd twixt us twaine being alone,
That ſhe ſhall ſtill be curſt in company.
I tell you 'tis incredible to beleeve
How much ſhe loves me : oh the kindeſt Kate,
Shee hung about my necke, and kiſſe on kiſſe
Shee vi'd ſo faſt, proteſting oath on oath,
That in a twinke ſhe won me to her love.
Oh you are novices, 'tis a world to ſee
How tame when men and women are alone,
A meacocke wretch can make the curſteſt ſhrew :
Give me thy hand Kate, I will unto Venice
To buy apparell 'gainſt the wedding day;
Provide the feaſt father, and bid the gueſts,
I will be ſure my Katherine ſhall be fine.
Bap. I know not what to ſay, but give me your hands,
God ſend you joy, Petruchio, 'tis a match.
Gre. Tra. Amen ſay we, we will be witneſſes.
Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen adieu,
I will to Venice, ſonday comes apace,
We will have rings, and things, and fine array,
And kiſſe me Kate, we will be married a ſonday.
Exit Petruchio, and Katherine.
Gre. Was ever match clapt up ſo ſodainely ?
Bap. Faith Gentlemen now I play a merchants part,
And venture madly on a deſperate Mart.
Tra. Twas a commodity lay fretting by you,
'Twill bring you gaine, or periſh on the ſeas.
Bap. The gaine I ſeeke, is quiet me the match.
Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch:
But now Baptiſta, to your yonger daughter,
Now is the day we long have looked for,
I am your neighbour, and was ſuter firſt.
Tra. And I am one that love Bianca more
Then words can witneſſe, or your thoughts can gueſſe,
Gre. Yongling, thou canſt not love ſo deare as I
Tra. Gray-beard thy love doth freeze.
Gre. But thine doth fry,
Skipper ſtand backe, 'tis age that nouriſheth.
Tra. But youth in Ladies eyes that floriſheth.
Bap. Content you gentlemen, I will compound this
'Tis deeds muſt win the prize, and he of both (ſtrife,
That can aſſure my daughter greateſt dower,
Shall have Biancas love.
Say ſignior Gremio, what can you aſſure her ?
Gre. Firſt, as you know, my houſe within the City
Is richly furniſhed with plate and gold,
Baſons and ewers to lave her dainty hands :
My hangings all of tirian tapeſtry :
In Iuory coſers I have ſtuft my crownes :
In Cypres cheſts my arras counterpoints,
Coſtly apparell, tents, and Canopies,
Fine Linnen, Turky cuſhions boſt with pearle,
Vallens of Venice gold, in needle worke :
Pewter and braſſe, and all things that belongs
To houſe or houſe-keeping : then at my farme
I have a hundred milch-kine to the paile,
Sixe-ſcore fat Oxen ſtanding in my ſtalls,
And all things anſwerable to this portion.
My ſelfe am ſtrooke in yeeres I muſt confeſſe,
And if I dye to morrow this is hers,
If whil'ſt I live ſhe will be onely mine.
Tra. That onely came well in : ſir, liſt to me,
I am my Fathers heyre and onely ſonne,
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
Ile leave her houſes three or foure as good
Within rich Piſa walls, as any one
Old Signior Gremio has in Padua,
Beſides, two thouſand Duckets by the yeere
Of fruitfull land, all which ſhall be her joynter.
What, have I pincht you Signior Gremio ?
Gre. Two thouſand Duckets by the yeere of land,
My Land amounts not to ſo much in all :
That ſhe ſhall have, beſides an Argoſie
That now is lying in Marſellis roade :
What, have I choakt you with an Argoſie ?
Tra. Gremio, 'tis knowne my father hath no leſſe
Then three great Argoſies, beſides two Galliaſſes
And twelve tite Gallies, theſe I will aſſure her,
And twice as much what ere thou offreſt next.
Gre. Nay, I have offred all, I have no more,
And ſhe can have no more then all I have,
If you like me, ſhe ſhall have me and mine.
Tra. Why then the maid is mine from all the world
By your firme promiſe, Gremio is out vied.
Bap. I muſt confeſſe your offer is the beſt,
And let your father make her the aſſurance,

She is your owne, elſe you muſt pardon me :
If you ſhould dye before him, where's her dower ?
Tra. That's but a cavill : he is old, I young.
Gre. And may not yong men dye as well as old ?
Bap. Well gentlemen, I am thus reſolv'd,
On ſonday next, you know
My daughter Katherine is to be married :
Now on the ſonday following, ſhall Bianca
Be Bride to you, if you make this aſſurance :
If not, to Signior Gremio :
And ſo I take my leave, and thanke you both. Exit.
Gre. Adieu good neighbour : now I feare thee not :
Sirra, yong gameſter, your father were a foole
To give thee all, and in his wayning age
Set foot under thy table : tut, a toy,
An old Italian foxe is not ſo kind my boy. Exit.
Tra. A vengeance on your crafty withered hide,
Yet I have fac'd it with a card of ten :
'Tis in my head to doe my maſter good :
I ſee no reaſon but ſuppos'd Lucentio
Muſt get a father, call'd ſuppos'd Vincentio,
And that's a wonder : fathers commonly
Do get their children : but in this caſe of wooing,
A child ſhall get a ſire, if I faile not of my cunning. Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Lucentio, Hortentio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fidler forbeare, you grow too forward Sir,
Have you ſo ſoone forgot the entertainment
Her ſiſter Katherine welcom'd you withall?
Hort. But wrangling pedant, this is
The patroneſſe of heavenly harmony :
Then give me leave to have prerogative,
And when in Muſicke we have ſpent an houre,
Your Lecture ſhall have leiſure for as much.
Luc. Prepoſterous Aſſe that never read ſo farre,
To know the cauſe why muſicke was ordain'd :
Was it not to refreſh the mind of man
After his ſtudies, or his uſuall paine ?
Then give me leave to reade Philoſophy,
And while I pauſe, ſerve in your harmony.
Hort. Sirra, I will not beare theſe braves of thine.
Bian. Why gentlemen, you doe me double wrong,
To ſtrive for that which reſteth in my choyce :
I am no breeching ſcholler in the ſchooles,
Ile not be tied to houres, nor pointed times,
But learne my Leſſons as I pleaſe my ſelfe,
And to cut off all ſtrife : heere ſit we downe,
Take you your inſtrument, play you the whiles,
His Lecture will be done ere you have tun'd.
Hort. You'll leave his Lecture when I am in tune?
Luc. That will be never, tune your inſtrument.
Bian. Where left we laſt ?
Luc. Heere Madam : Hic Ibat Simois, hic eſt ſigeia tellus, hic ſteterat Priami regia Celſa ſenis.
Bian. Conſter them.
Luc. Hic Ibat, as I told you before, Simois, I am Lucentio, hic eſt, ſonne unto Vincentio of Piſa, Sigeia tellus, diſguiſed thus to get your love, hic ſteterat, and that Lucentio that comes a wooing, priami, is my man Tranio, regia, bearing my port, celſa ſenis that we might beguile the old Pantaloune.
Hort. Madam, my inſtruments' in tune.
Bian. Let's heare, oh fie, the treble jarres.
Luc. Spit in the hole man, and tune againe.
Bian. Now let me ſee if I can conſter it. Hic ibat ſimois, I know you not, hic eſt ſigeia tellus, I truſt you not, hic ſteterat priami, take heed he heare us not, regia preſume not, Celſa ſenis, deſpaire not.
Hort. Madam, 'tis now in tune.
Luc. All but the baſe.
Hort. The baſe is right, 'tis the baſe knave that jars.
Luc. How fiery and forward our Pedant is,
Now for my life that knave doth court my love,
Pedaſcule, Ile watch you better yet :
In time I may beleeve, yet I miſtruſt.
Bian. Miſtruſt it not, for ſure Æacides
Was Ajax cald ſo from his grandfather.
Hort. I muſt beleeve my Maſter, elſe I promiſe you,
I ſhould be arguing ſtill upon that doubt,
But let it reſt, now Litio to you :
Good maſter take it not unkindly pray
That I have beene thus pleaſant with you both.
Bian. You may goe walke, and give me leave a while,
My Leſſons make no muſicke in three parts.
Luc. Are you ſo formall ſir, well I muſt waite
And watch withall, for but I be deceiv'd,
Our fine Muſitian groweth amorous.
Hor. Madam, before you touch the inſtrument,
To learne the order of my fingering,
I muſt begin with rudiments of Art,
To teach you gamoth in a briefer ſort,
More pleaſant, pithy, and effectuall,
Then hath beene taught by any of my trade,
And there it is in writing fairely drawne.
Bian. Why, I am paſt my gamoth long agoe.
Hor. Yet reade the gamoth of Hortenſio.
Bian. Gamoth I am, the ground of all accord :
Are, to plead Hortenſio's paſſion :
Beeme, Bianca take him for thy Lord
Cfavt, that loves with all affection :
D ſol re, one Cliffe, two notes have I,
Ela mi, ſhow pitty or I dye.
Call you this gamoth ? tut I like it not,
Old faſhions pleaſe me beſt, I am not ſo nice
To change true rules for old inventions.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Nicke. Miſtreſſe, your father prayes you leave your (bookes,
And helpe to dreſſe your ſiſters chamber up,
You know to morrow is the wedding day.
Bian. Farewell ſweet maſters both, I muſt be gone.
Luc. Faith Miſtreſſe then I have no cauſe to ſtay.
Hor. But I have cauſe to pry into this pedant,
Methinkes he lookes as though he were in love:
Yet if thy thoughts Bianca be ſo humble
To caſt thy wandring eyes on every ſtale :
Seize thee that Liſt, if once I find thee ranging,
Hortenſio will be quit with thee by changing. Exit.

Enter Baptiſta, Gremio, Tranio, Katherine, Bianca, and others, attendants.

Bap. Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day
That Katherine and Petruckio ſhould be married,
And yet we heare not of our ſonne in Law :
What will be ſaid, what mockery will it be ?
To want the Bride-groome when the Prieſt attends
To ſpeake the ceremoniall rites of marriage?
What ſayes Lucentio to this ſhame of ours?

Kate. No ſhame but mine, I muſt forſooth be forſt
To give my hand oppos'd againſt my heart
Vnto a mad-braine rudesby, full of ſpleene,
Who woo'd in haſte, and meanes to wed at leyſure:
I told you I, he was a franticke foole,
Hiding his bitter jeſts in blunt behaviour,
And to be noted for a merry man;
He'll wooe a thouſand, point the day of marriage,
Make friends, invite, yes and proclaime the banes,
Yet never meanes to wed where he hath woo'd:
Now muſt the world point at poore Katherine,
And ſay, loe, there is mad Petruchio's wife
If it would pleaſe him come and marry her.
Tra. Patience good Katherine and Baptiſta too,
Vpon my life Petruchio meanes but well,
What ever fortune ſtayes him from his word,
Though he be blunt, I know him paſſing wiſe,
Though he be merry, yet withall he's honeſt.
Kate. Would Katherine had never ſeene him though.
Exit weeping.
Bap. Goe girle, I cannot blame thee now to weepe,
For ſuch an injury would vexe a ſaint,
Much more a ſhrew of thy impatient humour.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. Maſter, maſter, newes, and ſuch newes as you never heard of.
Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?
Bio. Why, is it not newes to heare of Petruchio's com-
Bap. Is he come? (ming?
Bio. Why no ſir.
Bap. What then?
Bio. He is comming.
Bap. When will he be heere?
Bio. When he ſtands where I am, and ſees you there.
Tra. But ſay, what to thine old newes?
Bio. Why Petruchio is comming, in a new hat and an old jerkin, a paire of old breeches thrice turn'd; a paire of bootes that have beene candle-caſes, one buckled, another lac'd: an old ruſty ſword tane out of the Towne Armory, with a broken hilt, and chapeleſſe: with two broken points: his horſe hip'd with an old mothy ſaddle, the ſtirrops of no kindred: beſides poſſeſt with the glanders, and like to moſe in the chine, troubled with the Lampaſſe, infected with the faſhions, full of Windegalls ſped with Spavins, raied with the Yellowes, paſt cure of the Fives, ſtarke ſpoyl'd with the Staggers, begnawne with the Bots, Waid in the backe, and ſhoulder-ſhotten, neere leg'd before, and with a halfe-chekt Bitte, and a headſtall of ſheepes leather, which being reſtrain'd to keepe him from ſtumbling, hath beene often burſt, and now repaired with knots: one girth ſixe times peec'd, and a womans Crupper of velure, which hath two letters for her name, fairely ſet dowee in ſtuds, and heere and there peec'd with packthred.
Bap. Who comes with him?
Bio. Oh ſir, his Lackey, for all the world Capariſon'd like the horſe: with a linnen ſtocke on one leg, and a kerſey boot-hoſe on the other, gartred with a red and blew liſt; an old hat, and the humor of forty fancies prickt in't for a feather: a monſter, a very monſter in apparell, and not like a Chriſtian foot-boy, or a gentlemans Lacky.
Tra. 'Tis ſome odde humor pricks him to this faſhion,
Yet oftentimes he goes but meane apparel'd.
Bap. I am glad he's come, howſoever he comes.
Bion. Why ſir, he comes not.
Bap. Didſt thou not ſay he comes?
Bion. Who, that Petruchio came?
Bap. I, that Petruchio came (backe.
Bion. No ſir, I ſay his horſe comes with him on his
Bap. Why that's all one.
Bion. Nay by S. Iamy, I hold you a penny, a horſe and a man is more then one, and yet not many.

Enter Petruchio, and Grumio.

Pet. Come, where be theſe gallants? who's at home?
Bap. You are welcome ſir.
Pet. And yet I come not well.
Bap. And yet you halt not.
Tra. Not ſo well apparell'd as I wiſh you were.
Pet. Were it better I ſhould ruſh in thus:
But where is Kate? where is my lovely Bride?
How does my father? gentles methinkes you frowne,
And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they ſaw ſome wondrous monument,
Some Commet, or unuſuall prodigy?
Bap. Why ſir, you know this is your wedding day:
Firſt were we ſad, fearing you would not come,
Now ſadder that you come ſo unprovided:
Fye, doffe this habit, ſhame to your eſtate,
An eye-ſore to our ſolemne feſtivall.
Tra. And tell us what occaſion of import
Hath all ſo long detain'd you from your wife:
And ſent you hither ſo unlike your ſelfe?
Pet. Tedious it were to tell, and harſh to heare,
Sufficeth I am come to keepe my word,
Though in ſome part inforced to digreſſe,
Which at more leyſure I will ſo excuſe,
As you ſhall well be ſatisfied with all.
But where is Kate? I ſtay too long from her.
The morning weares, 'tis time we were at Church.
Tra. See not your Bride in theſe unreverent robes,
Goe to my chamber, put on clothes of mine.
Pet. Not I, beleeve me, thus Ile viſit her.
Bap. But thus I truſt you will not marry her. (words.
Pet. Good ſooth even thus: therefore ha done with
To me ſhe's married, not unto my cloathes:
Could I repaire what ſhe will weare in me,
As I can change theſe poore accoutrements,
'Twere well for Kate, and better for my ſelfe.
But what a foole am I to chat with you,
When I ſhould bid good morrow to my Bride?
And ſeale the title with a lovely kiſſe. Exit.
Tra. He hath ſome meaning in his mad attire,
We will perſwade him be it poſſible,
To put on better ere he goe to Church.
Bap. Ile after him, and ſee the event of this. Exit.
Tra. But ſir, Love concerneth us to adde
Her fathers liking, which to bring to paſſe
As before I imparted to your worſhip,
I am to get a man what ere he be,
It skills not much, weele fit him to our turne,
And he ſhall be Vincentio of Piſa,
And make aſſurance heere in Padua
Of greater ſummes then I have promiſed,
So ſhall you quietly enjoy your hope,
And marry ſweet Bianca with conſent.
Luc. Were it not that my fellow ſchoolemaſter
Doth watch Bianca's ſteps ſo narrowly:
'Twere good me-thinkes to ſteale our marriage,
Which once perform'd, let all the world ſay no,
Ile keepe mine owne deſpight of all the world.
Tra. That by degrees we meane to looke into,

And watch our vantage in this buſineſſe,
We'll over-reach the grey-beard Gremio,
The narrow prying father Minola,
The quaint Muſician, amorous Litio,
All for my Maſters ſake Lucentio.

Enter Gremio.

Signior Gremio, came you from the Church?
Gre. As willingly as ere I came from ſchoole.
Tra. And is the Bride and Bridegroom comming home?
Gre. A bridegroome ſay you? 'tis a groome indeed,
A grumbling groome, and that the girle ſhall find.
Tra. Curſter then ſhe, why 'tis impoſſible.
Gre. Why hee's a devill, a devill, a very fiend.
Tra. Why ſhe's a devill, a devill, the devils damme.
Gre. Tut, ſhe's a Lambe, a Dove, a foole to him:
Ile tell you ſir Lucentio; when the Prieſt
Should aske if Katherine ſhould be his wife,
I, by goggs woones quoth he, and ſwore ſo loud,
That all amaz'd the Prieſt let fall the booke,
And as he ſtoop'd againe to take it up,
This mad-brain'd bridegroome tooke him ſuch a cuffe,
That downe fell Prieſt and booke, and booke and Prieſt,
Now take them up quoth he, if any liſt.
Tra. What ſaid the wench when he roſe up againe?
Gre. Trembled and ſhooke: for why, he ſtamp'd and ſwore.
As if the Vicar meant to cozen him:
But after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine, a health quoth he, as if
He had beene aboord carowſing to his Mates
After a ſtorme, quaft off the Muſcadell,
And threw the ſops all in the Sextons face:
Having no other reaſon, but that his beard
Grew thinne and hungerly, and ſeem'd to aske
Him ſops as he was drinking: This done, he tooke
The Bride about the necke, and kiſt her lips
With ſuch a clamorous ſmacke, that at the parting,
All the Church did eccho: and I ſeeing this,
Came thence for very ſhame, and after me,
I know the rout is comming; ſuch a mad marryage
Never was before: harke, harke, I heare the minſtrels play. Muſicke playes.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Bianca, Hortenſio, Baptiſta.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thanke you for your
I know you thinke to dine with me to day, (paines,
And have prepar'd great ſtore of wedding cheere,
But ſo it is, my haſte doth call me hence,
And therefore heere I meane to take my leave.
Bap. Is't poſſible you will away to night?
Pet. I muſt away to day before night come,
Make it no wonder: if you knew my buſineſſe,
You would intreat me rather goe then ſtay:
And honeſt company, I thanke you all,
That have beheld me give away my ſelfe
To this moſt patient, ſweet, and vertuous wife,
Dine with my father, drinke a health to me,
For I muſt hence, and farewell to you all.
Tra. Let us intreat you ſtay till after dinner.
Pet. It may not be.
Gre. Let me intreat you.
Pet. It cannot be.
Kat. Let me intreat you.
Pet. I am content.
Kat. Are you content to ſtay?
Pet. I am content you ſhall entreat me ſtay,
But yet not ſtay, entreat me how you can.
Kate. Now if you love me ſtay.
Pet. Grumio, my horſe.
Gru. I ſir, they be ready; the Oates have eaten the horſes.
Kate. Nay then,
Doe what thou canſt, I will not goe to day,
No, nor to morrow, not till I pleaſe my ſelfe,
The dore is open ſir, there lyes your way,
You may be jogging whiles your bootes are greene:
For me, Ile not be gone till I pleaſe my ſelfe,
'Tis like you'll prove a jolly ſurly groome,
That take it on you at the firſt ſo roundly.
Pet. O Kate content thee, prethee be not angry.
Kat. I will be angry, what haſt thou to doe?
Father, be quiet, he ſhall ſtay my leiſure.
Gre. I marry ſir, now it begins to worke.
Kat. Gentlemen, forward to the bridall dinner.
I ſee a woman may be made a foole
If ſhe had not a ſpirit to reſiſt.
Pet. They ſhall goe forward Kate at thy command,
Obey the Bride you that attend on her.
Goe to the feaſt, revell and domineere,
Carowſe full meaſure to her maiden-head,
Be madde and merry, or goe hang you ſelves:
But for my bonny Kate, ſhe muſt with me:
Nay, looke not big, nor ſtampe, nor ſtare, nor fret,
I will be maſter of what is mine owne,
Shee is my goods, my chattels, ſhe is my houſe,
My houſhold-ſtuffe, my field, my barne,
My horſe, my oxe, my aſſe, my any thing,
And heere ſhe ſtands, touch her who ever dare,
Ile bring mine action on the proudeſt he,
That ſtops my way in Padua: Grumio
Draw forth thy weapon, we are beſet with theeves,
Reſcue thy Miſtreſſe if thou be a man:
Feare not ſweet wench, they ſhall not touch thee Kate,
Ile buckler thee againſt a Million. Exeunt. P. Ka.
Bap. Nay, let them goe, a couple of quiet ones. (ing
Gre. Went they not quickly, I ſhould dye with laugh-
Tra. Of all mad matches never was the like.
Luc. Miſtreſſe, what's your opinion of your ſiſter?
Bian. That being mad her ſelfe, ſhe's madly mated.
Gre. I warrant him Petruchio is Kated.
Bap. Neighbours and friends, though Bride and Bride-
For to ſupply the places at the table, (groome wants
You know there wants no junkets at the feaſt:
Lucentio, you ſhall ſupply the Bridegroomes place,
And let Bianca take her ſiſters roome.
Tra. Shall ſweet Bianca practiſe how to bride it?
Bap. She ſhall Lucentio: come gentlemen lets goe.
Exeunt.

Enter Grumio.

Gru. Fye, fie on all tired Iades, on all mad Maſters, and all foule wayes: was ever man ſo beaten? was ever man ſo raide? was ever man ſo weary? I am ſent before to make a fire, and they are comming after to warme them: now were not I a little pot, and ſoone hot; my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roofe of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I ſhould come by a fire to thaw me, but I with blowing the fire ſhall warme my ſelfe: for conſidering the weather, a taller man then I will take cold: Holla, hoa Curtis.

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that calls ſo coldly?
Gru. A piece of Ice: if thou doubt it, thou maiſt ſlide from my ſhoulder to my heele, with no greater

grater a run but my head and my necke. A fire good Curtis.

Cur. Is my Maſter and his wife comming Grumio?

Gru. Oh I Curtis I, and therefore fire; fire, caſt on no water.

Cur. Is ſhe ſo hot a ſhrew as ſhe's reported.

Gru. She was good Curtis before this froſt: but thou know'ſt winter tames man, woman, and beaſt: for it hath tam'd my old maſter, and my new miſtris, and my ſelfe fellow Curtis.

Cur. Away you three inch foole, I am no beaſt.

Gru. Am I but three inches? Why thy horne is a foot and ſo long am I at the leaſt. But wilt thou make a fire, or ſhall I complaine on thee to our miſtris, whoſe hand (ſhe being now at hand) thou ſhalt ſoone feele, to thy cold comfort, for being ſlow in thy hot office.

Cur. I prethee good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Gru. A cold world Curtis in every office but thine, and therefore fire: doe thy duty, and have thy duty, for my Maſter and miſtris are almoſt frozen to death.

Cur. There's fire ready, and therefore good Grumio the newes.

Gru. Why Iacke boy, ho boy, and as much newes as thou wilt.

Cur. Come, you are ſo full of conicatching.

Gru. Why therefore fire, for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the Cooke, is ſupper ready, the houſe trim'd, ruſhes ſtrew'd, cobwebs ſwept, the ſerving men in their new fuſtian, the white ſtockings, and every officer his wedding garment on? Be the Iackes faire within, the Gills faire without, the Carpets laid, and every thing in order?

Cur. All ready: and therefore I pray thee what newes.

Gru. Firſt know my horſe is tired, my maſter and miſtris falne out. Cur. How?

Gru. Out of their ſaddles into the durt, and thereby hangs a tale.

Cur. Let's ha't good Grumio.

Gru. Lend thine eare.

Cur. Heere.

Gru. There.

Cur. This 'tis to feele a tale, not to heare a tale.

Gru. And therefore 'tis cal'd a ſenſible tale: and this Cuffe was but to knocke at your eare, and beſeech liſtning: now I begin, Inprimis we came downe a foule hill, my Maſter riding behinde my Miſtris.

Cur. Both of one horſe?

Gru. What's that to thee?

Cur. Why a horſe.

Gru. Tell thou the tale: but hadſt thou not croſt me, thou ſhouldſt have heard how her horſe fell, and ſhe under her horſe: thou ſhouldſt have heard in how miery a place, how ſhe was bemoil'd, how he left her with the horſe upon her, how he beat me becauſe her horſe ſtumbled, how ſhe waded through the durt to plucke him off me: how he ſwore, how ſhe prai'd, that never prai'd before: how I cryed, how the horſes ranne away, how her bridle was burſt: how I loſt my crupper, with many things of worthy memory, which now ſhall dye in oblivion, and thou returne unexperienc'd to thy grave.

Cur. By this reckning he is more ſhrew than ſhe.

Gru, I, and that thou and the proudeſt of you all ſhall find when he comes home. But what talke I of this? Call forth Nathaniel, Ioſeph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugerſop and the reſt: let their heads bee ſlickely comb'd, their blew coats bruſh'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit, lot them curtſie with their left legges, and not preſume to touch a haire of my Maſters horſe-taile, till they kiſſe their hands. Are they all ready?

Cur. They are.

Gru. Call them forth.

Cur. Doe you heare ho? you muſt meet my maiſter to countenance my Miſtris.

Gru. Why ſhe hath a face of her owne.

Cur. Who knowes not that?

Gru. Thou it ſeemes, that calls for company to countenance her.

Cur. I call them forth to credit her.

Enter foure or five ſerving men.

Gru. Why ſhe comes to borrow nothing of them.

Nat. Welcome home Grumio.

Phil. How now Grumio.

Ioſ. What Grumio.

Nick. Fellow Grumio.

Nath. How now old lad.

Gru. Welcome you: how now you: what you: fellow you: and thus much for greeting. Now my ſpruce companions, is all ready, and all things neate?

Nat. All things are ready, how neere is our maſter?

Gre. E'ne at hand, alighted by this: and therefore be not——Cockes paſſion, ſilence, I heare my Maſter.

Enter Petruchio and Kate.

Pet. Where be theſe knaves? What no man at doore
To hold my ſtirrop, nor to take my horſe?
Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?

All ſer. Heere; heere ſir, heere ſir.

Pet. Heere ſir, heere ſir, heere ſir, heere ſir.
You logger-headed and unpolliſht groomes:
What? no attendance? no regard? no duty?
Where is the fooliſh knave I ſent before?

Gru. Heere ſir, as fooliſh as I was before.

Pet. You pezant, ſwaine, yon horſon malt-horſe drudge,
Did I not bid thee meete me in the Parke,
And bring along the raſcall knaves with thee?

Gru. Nathaniels coate ſir was not fully made,
And Gabriels pumpes were all unpinkt i'th heele:
There was no Linke to colour Peters hat,
And Walters dagger was not come from ſheathing:
There were none fine, but Adam, Rafe, and Gregory,
The reſt were ragged, old, and beggerly,
Yet as they are, they come to meete you.

Pet. Goe raſcalls, goe and fetch my ſupper in. Ex. Ser.
Where is the life that late I led?
Where are thoſe? Sit downe Kate.
And welcome. Soud, ſoud, ſoud, ſoud.

Enter ſervants with ſupper.

Why when I ſay? Nay good ſweet Kate be merry.
Off with my boots, you rogues: you villaines, when?
It was the Friar of Orders gray,
As he forth walked on his way.
Out you rogue, you plucke my foote awry,
Take that, and mend the plucking of the other.
Be merry Kate: Some water heere: what hoa.

Enter one with water.

Where's my Spaniel Troilus? Sirra, get you hence,
And bid my cozen Ferdinand come hither:
One Kate that you muſt kiſſe, and be acquainted with.
Where are my Slippers? Shall I have ſome water?
Come Kate and waſh, and welcome heartily:
You horſon villaine, will you let it fall?

Kate. Patience I pray you, 'twas a fault unwilling.
Pet. A horſon beetle-headed flap-ear'd knave:
Come Kate ſit downe, I know you have a ſtomacke,
Will you give thankes, ſweet Kate, or elſe ſhall I?
What's this, Mutton?
1. Ser. I.
Pet. Who brought it?
Ser. I.
Pet. 'Tis burnt, and ſo is all the meate:
What dogges are theſe? Where is the raſcall Cooke?
How durſt you villaines bring it from the dreſſer
And ſerve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all:
You heedleſſe jolt-heads, and unmanner'd ſlaves.
What, doe you grumble? Ile be with you ſtraight.
Kate. I pray you husband be not ſo diſquiet;
The meate was well, if you were ſo contented.
Pet. I tell thee Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away,
And I expreſſely am forbid to touch it:
For it engenders choller, planteth anger,
And better 'twere that both of us did faſt,
Since of our ſelves, our ſelves are chollericke,
Then feede it with ſuch over-roſted fleſh:
Be patient, to morrow't ſhall be mended,
And for this night we'l faſt for company.
Come I will bring thee to thy Bridall chamber. Exeunt.

Enter Servants ſeverally.

Nath. Peter didſt ever ſee the like?
Peter. He kils her in her owne humor.
Gru. Where is he?

Enter Curtis a Servant.

Cur. In her chamber, making a ſermon of continency to her, and railes, and ſweare, and rates, that ſhe (poore ſoule) knowes not which way to ſtand, to looke, to ſpeake, and ſits as one new riſen from a dreame. Away, away, for he is comming hither.

Enter Petruchio.

Pet. Thus have I politickely begun my reigne,
And 'tis my hope to end ſucceſſefully:
My Faulcon now is ſharpe, and paſſing empty,
And till ſhe ſtoope, ſhe muſt not be full gorg'd,
For then ſhe never lookes upon her lure.
Another way I have to man my Haggard,
To make her come, and know her Keepers call:
That is, to watch her, as we watch theſe Kites,
That baite, and beate, and will not be obedient:
She eate no meate to day, nor none ſhall eate.
Laſt night ſhe ſlept not, nor to night ſhe ſhall not:
As with the meate, ſome undeſerved fault
Ile find about the making of the bed,
And heere Ile fling the pillow, there the boulſter,
This way the Coverlet, another way the ſheetes:
I, and amid this hurly I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her,
And in concluſion, ſhe ſhall watch all night,
And if ſhe chance to nod, Ile raile and brawle,
And with the clamor keepe her ſtill awake:
This is a way to kill a Wife with kindneſſe,
And thus Ile curbe her mad and headſtrong humor:
He that knowes better how to tame a ſhrew,
Now let him ſpeake, 'tis charity to ſhew. Exit.

Enter Tranio, and Hortenſio.

Tra. Is't poſſible friend Liſio, that miſtris Bianca
Doth fancy any other but Lucentio,
I tell you ſir, ſhe beares me faire in hand.
Hor. Sir, to ſatisfie you in what I have ſaid,
Stand by, and marke the manner of his teaching.

Enter Bianca.

Luc. Now Miſtris, profit you in what you reade?
Bian. What Maſter reade you firſt, reſolve me that?
Luc. I reade, that I profeſſe the Art to love.
Bian. And may you prove ſir Maſter of your Art.
Luc. While you ſweet deere prove Miſtreſſe of my heart.
Hor. Quicke proceeders marry, now tell me I pray, you that durſt ſweare that your miſtris Bianca
Lov'd me in the World ſo well as Lucentio.
Tra. Oh deſpightfull Love, unconſtant womankind,
I tell thee Liſio this is wonderfull.
Hor. Miſtake no more, I am not Liſio,
Nor a Muſitian as I ſeeme to be,
But one that ſcorne to live in this diſguiſe,
For ſuch a one as leaves a Gentleman,
And makes a God of ſuch a Cullion;
Know ſir, that I am cal'd Hortenſio.
Tra. Signior Hortenſio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca,
And ſince mine eyes are witneſſe of her lightneſſe,
I will with you, if you be ſo contented,
Forſweare Bianca, and her love for ever.
Hor. See how they kiſſe and court: Signior Lucentio,
Heere is my hand, and heere I firmely vow
Never to wooe her more, but doe forſweare her
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd them withall.
Tra. And heere I take the like unfained oath,
Never to marry with her, though ſhe would intreat,
Fye on her, ſee how beaſtly ſhe doth court him.
Hor. Would all the world but he had quite forſworne
For me, that I may ſurely keepe mine oath.
I will be married to a wealthy Widdow,
Ere three dayes paſſe, which hath as long lov'd me,
As I have lov'd this proud diſdainefull Haggard,
And ſo farewell ſigniot Lucentio,
Kindneſſe in women, not their Beauteous lookes
Shall win my love, and I take my leave,
In reſolution, as I ſwore before.
Tra. Miſtris Bianca, bleſſe you with ſuch grace,
As longeth to a Lovers bleſſed caſe:
Nay, I have tane you napping gentle Love,
And have forſworne you with Hortenſio.
Bian. Tranio you jeſt, but have you both forſworne me?
Tra. Miſtris we have.
Luc. Then we are rid of Liſio.
Tra. I'faith he'll have a luſty Widdow now,
That ſhall be woo'd, and wedded in a day.
Bian. God give him joy.
Tra. I, and he'll tame her.
Bian. He ſayes ſo Tranio.
Tra. Faith he is gone unto the taming ſchoole.
Bian. The taming ſchoole: what is there ſuch a place?
Tra. I miſtris, and Petruchio is the maſter,
That teacheth trickes eleven and twenty long,
To tame a ſhrew, and charme her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. Oh Maſter, maſter, I have watcht ſo long,
That I am dogge-weary, but at laſt I ſpied
An ancient Angell comming downe the hill,
Will ſerve the turne.
Tra. What is he Biondello.
Bio. Maſter, a Marcantant, or a pedant,

I know not what, but formall in apparell,
In gate and countenance ſurly like a father.

Luc. And what of him Tranio?

Tra. If he be credulous, and truſt my tale,
Ile make him glad to ſeeme Vincentio,
And give aſſurance to Baptiſta Minola,
As if he were the right Vincentio.
Take me your love, and then let me alone.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God ſave you ſir.

Tra. And you ſir, you are welcome.
Travaile you farre on, or are you at the fartheſt?

Ped. Sir at the fartheſt for a weeke or two,
But then up farther, and as farre as Rome,
And ſo to Tripoly, if God lend me life.

Tra. What Countreyman I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua Sir, marry God forbid,
And come to Padua, careleſſe of your life?

Ped. My life ſir? how I pray? for that goes hard.

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua
To come to Padua, know you not the cauſe?
Your ſhips are ſtaid at Venice, and the Duke
For private quarrell 'twixt your Duke and him,
Hath publiſh'd and proclaim'd it openly:
'Tis marvaile, but that you are but newly come,
You might have heard it elſe proclaim'd about.

Ped. Alas ſir, it is worſe for me then ſo,
For I have bils for mony by exchange
From Florence, and muſt heere deliver them.

Tra. Well ſir, to doe you courteſie,
This will I doe, and this I will adviſe you.
Firſt tell me, have you ever beene at Piſa?

Ped. I ſir, in Piſa have I often beene,
Piſa renowned for grave Cittizens.

Tra. Among them know you one Vincentio?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him:
A Merchaut of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father ſir, and ſooth to ſay,
In countnance ſomewhat doth reſemble you.

Bion. As much as an apple doth an oyſter, and all one.

Tra. To ſave your life in this extremity,
This favor will I doe you for his ſake,
And thinke it not the worſt of all your fortunes
That you are like to Sir Vincentio.
His name and credite ſhall you undertake,
And in my houſe you ſhall be friendly lodg'd,
Looke that you take upon you as you ſhould,
You underſtand me ſir: ſo ſhall you ſtay
Till you have done your buſineſſe in the City:
If this be court'ſie ſir, accept of it.

Ped. Oh ſir I doe, and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then goe with me, to make the matter good,
This by the way I let you underſtand,
My father is heere look'd for every day,
To paſſe aſſurance of a dowre in marriage
'Twixt me, and one Baptiſtas daughter heere:
In all theſe circumſtances Ile inſtruct you,
Goe with me ſir to cloath you as becomes you. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Katherina, and Grumio.

Gru. No, no forſooth I dare not for my life.

Kat. The more my wrong, the more his ſpite appeares.
What, did he marry me to famiſh me?
Beggers that come unto my fathers doore,
Vpon intreaty have a preſent almes,
If not, elſewhere they meete with charity:
But I, who never knew how to intreate,
Nor never needed that I ſhould intreate,
Am ſtarv'd for meate, giddy for lacke of ſleepe:
With oathes kept waking, and with brawling fed,
And that which ſpights me more then all theſe wants,
He does it under name of perfect love:
As who ſhould ſay, if I ſhould ſleepe or eate
'Twere deadly ſickneſſe, or elſe preſent death.
I prethee goe, and get me ſome repaſt,
I care not what, ſo it be holſome foode.

Gru. What ſay you to a Neats foote?

Kat. 'Tis paſſing good, I prethee let me have it.

Gru: I feare it is too phlegmaticke a meate.
How ſay you to a fat Tripe finely broyl'd?

Kate. I like it well, good Grumio fetch it me.

Gru. I cannot tell, I feare 'tis chollericke.
What ſay you to a peece of Beefe and Muſtard?

Kate. A diſh that I doe love to feede upon.

Gru. I, but the Muſtard is too hot a little.

Kate: Why then the Beefe, and let the Muſtard reſt.

Gru. Nay then I will not, you ſhall have the Muſtard
Or elſe you get no beefe of Grumio.

Kate. Then both or one, or any thing thou wilt.

Gru. Why then the Muſtard without the beefe.

Kate. Goe get thee gone, thou falſe deluding ſlave.
Beats him.
That feed'ſt me with the very name of meate,
Sorrow on thee, and all the packe of you
That triumph thus upon my miſery:
Goe get thee gone, I ſay.

Enter Petruchio, and Hortenſio with meate.

Petr. How fares my Kate, what ſweeting all a mort?

Hor. Miſtris, what cheere?

Kate. Faith as cold as can be.

Pet. Plucke up thy ſpirits, looke cheerefully upon me.
Heere Love, thou ſeeſt how diligent I am,
To dreſſe thy meate my ſelfe, and bring it thee.
I am ſure ſweet Kate, this kindneſſe merites thankes.
What, not a word? Nay then, thou lou'ſt it not:
And all my paines is ſorted to no proofe.
Heere take away this diſh.

Kate. I pray you let it ſtand.

Pet. The pooreſt ſervice is repaide with thankes,
And ſo ſhall mine before you touch the meate.

Kate. I thanke you ſir.

Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie you are too blame:
Come Miſtris Kate, Ile beare you company.

Pet. Eate it up all Hortenſio, if thou loveſt me:
Much good doe it unto thy gentle heart;
Kate eate apace; and now my hony Love,
Will we returne unto thy Fathers houſe,
And revell it as bravely as the beſt,
With ſilken coats and caps, and golden Rings,
With Ruffes and Cuffes, and Fardingales, and things:
With Scarfes, and Fannes, and double change of brau'ry,
With Amber Bracelets, Beades, and all this knau'ry.
With haſt thou din'd? The Tailor ſtaies thy leaſure,
The decke thy body with his ruffling treaſure.

Enter Tailor.

Come Tailor, let us ſee theſe ornaments.
Enter Haberdaſher.
Lay forth the gowne. What newes with you ſir?
Fel. Heere is the cap your Worſhip did beſpeake.
Pet. Why this was moulded on a porrenger,
A Veluet diſh: Fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy,
Why 'tis a cockle or a walnut-ſhell,
A knacke, a toy, a tricke, a babies cap:
Away with it, come let me have a bigger.
Kate. Ile have no bigger, this doth fit the time,
And Gentlewomen weare ſuch caps as theſe.
Pet. When you ate gentle, you ſhall have one too,
And not till then.
Hor. That will not be in haſt.
Kate. Why ſir I truſt I may have leave to ſpeake,
And ſpeake I will. I am no child, no babe,
Your betters have indur'd me ſay my minde,
And if you cannot, beſt you ſtop your eares.
My tongue will tell the anger of my heart,
Or elſe my heart concealing it will breake,
And rather then it ſhall, I will be free,
Even to the uttermoſt as I pleaſe in words.
Pet. Why thou ſaiſt true, it is a paltry cap,
A cuſtard coffen, a bauble, a ſilken pye,
I love thee well in that thou lik'ſt it not.
Kate. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap,
And it I will have, or I will have none.
Pet. Thy gowne, why I: come Tailor let us ſee't,
Oh mercy God, what masking ſtuffe is heere?
What this? a ſleeve? 'tis like a demi cannon,
What, up and downe caru'd like an apple-Tart?
Heeres ſnip, and nip, and cut, and ſliſh and ſlaſh,
Like to a Cenſor in a barbers ſhoppe:
Why what a devils name Tailor cal'ſt thou this?
Hor. I ſee ſhees like to have neither cap nor growne.
Tai. You bid me make it orderly and well,
According to the faſhion, and the time.
Pet. Marry and did: but if you be remembred,
I did not bid you marre it to the time.
Goe hop me over every kennell home,
For you ſhall hop without my cuſtome ſir:
Ile none of it: hence, make your beſt of it.
Kate. I never ſaw a better faſhion'd gowne,
More queint, more pleaſing, nor more commendable:
Belike you meane to make a puppet of me.
Pet. Why true, he meanes to make a puppet of thee.
Tai. She ſayes your Worſhip meanes to make a puppet of her.
Pet. Oh moſt monſtrous arrogance:
Thou lyeſt, thou thred, thou thimble,
Thou yard, three quarters, halfe yard, quarter, naile,
Thou Flea, thou Nit, thou winter cricket thou:
Brav'd in mine owne houſe with a skeine of thred:
Away thou Ragge, thou quantity, thou remnant,
Or I ſhall ſo be-mete thee with thy yard,
As thou ſhalt thinke on prating whil'ſt thou liv'ſt:
I tell thee I, that thou haſt marr'd her gowne.
Tail. Your worſhip is deceiv'd, the gowne is made
Iuſt as my Maſter had direction:
Grumio gave order how it ſhould be done.
Gru. I gave him no order, I gave him the ſtuffe.
Tail. But how did you deſire it ſhould be made?
Gru. Marry ſir with needle and thred.
Tail. But did you not requeſt to have it cut?
Gru. Thou haſt fac'd many things.
Tail. I have.
Gru. Face not me: thou haſt brav'd many men, brave not me; I will neither be fac'd nor brav'd. I ſay unto the, I bid thy Maſter cut out the gowne, but I did not bid him cut it to peeces. Ergo thou lieſt.
Tai. Why here is the note of the faſhion to teſtifie.
Pet. Reade it.
Gru. The note lyes in's throate if he ſay I ſaid ſo.
Tail. Inprimis, a looſe bodied gowne.
Gru. Maſter, if ever I ſaid looſe-bodied gowne, ſow me in the skirts of it, and beate me to death with a bottome of browne thred: I ſaid a gowne.
Pet. Proceed.
Tai. With a ſmall compaſt cape.
Gru. I confeſſe the cape.
Tai. With a trunke ſleeve
Gru. I confeſſe two ſleeves.
Tail. The ſleeves curiouſly cut.
Pet. I there's the villany.
Gru. Error i'th bill ſir, error i'th bill? I commanded the ſleeves ſhould be cut out, and ſow'd up againe, and that Ile prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.
Tai. This is true that I ſay, and I had thee in place where thou ſhould know it.
Gru. I am for thee ſtraight: take thou the bill, give me thy mete-yard, and ſpare not me.
Hor. God-a-mercy Grumio, then he ſhall have no oddes.
Pet. Well ſir in breefe the gowne is not for me.
Gru. You are i'th right ſir, 'tis for my miſtris.
Pet. Goe take it up unto thy maſters uſe.
Gru. Villaine, not for thy life: Take up my Miſtreſſe gowne for thy maſters uſe.
Pet. Why ſir, what's your conceit in that?
Gru. Oh ſir, the conceit is deeper then you thinke for:
Take up my Miſtris gowne to his maſters uſe.
Oh fie, fie, fie.
Pet. Hortenſio, ſay thou wilt ſee the Tailor paide:
Goe take it hence, be gon, and ſay no more.
Hor. Tailor, Ile pay thee for thy gowne to morrow,
Take no unkindneſſe of his haſty words:
Away I ſay, commend me to thy Maſter. Exit Tail.
Pet. Well, come my Kate, we will unto your fathers,
Even in theſe honeſt meane habiliments:
Our purſes ſhalll be proud, our garments poore:
For 'tis the minde that makes the body rich.
And as the Sunne breakes through the darkeſt clouds,
So honor peereth in the meaneſt habit.
What is the Iay more precious then the Larke,
Becauſe his feathers are more beautifull?
Or is the Adder better then the Eele,
Becauſe his painted skin contents the eye?
Oh no good Kate: neither art thou the worſe
For this poore furniture, and meane array.
If thou accountedſt it ſhame, lay it on me,
And therefore frolicke, we will hence forthwith:
To feaſt and ſport us at thy fathers houſe,
Goe call my men, and let us ſtraight to him,
And bring our horſes unto Long-lane end,
There will we mount, and thither walke on foote.
Let's ſee, I thinke 'tis now ſome ſeven a clocke,
And well we may come there by dinner time.
Kate. I dare aſſure you ſir, 'tis almoſt two,
And 'twill be ſupper time ere you come there.
Pet. It ſhall be ſeven ere I goe to horſe:
Looke what I ſpeake, or doe, or thinke to doe,

You are ſtill croſſing it, ſirs let't alone,
I will not goe to day, and ere I doe,
It ſhall be what a clocke I ſay it is.
Hor. Why ſo: this gallant will command the ſunne.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant dreſt like Vincentio.

Tra. Sirs, this is the houſe, pleaſe it you that I call.
Ped. I what elſe, and but I be deceived,
Signior Baptiſta may remember me
Neere twenty yeeres a goe in Genoa.
Tra. Where we were lodgers, at the Pegaſus,
Tis well, and hold your owne in any caſe
With ſuch auſterity as longeth to a father.

Enter Biondello.

Ped. I warrant you: but ſir here comes your boy,
'Twere good he were ſchool'd.
Tra. Feare you not him: ſirra Biondello,
Now doe your duty throughly I adviſe you:
Imagine 'twere the right Vincentio.
Bion. Tut, feare not me.
Tra. But haſt thou done thy errand to Baptiſta?
Bion. I told him that your father was at Venice,
And that you look't for him this day in Padua.
Tra. Th'art a tall fellow, hold thee that to drinke,
Heere comes Baptiſta: ſet your countenance ſir.

Enter Baptiſta and Lucentio: and Pedant booted and bare headed.

Tra. Signior Baptiſta you are happily met:
Sir, this is the gentleman I told you of,
I pray you ſtand good father to me now,
Give me Bianca for my patrimony.
Ped. Soft ſon: ſir by your leave, having come to Padua
To gather in ſome debts, my ſon Lucentio
Made me acquainted with a waighty cauſe
Of love betweene your daughter and himſelfe:
And for the good report I heare of you,
And for the love he beareth to your daughter,
And ſhe to him; to ſtay him not too long,
I am content in a good fathers care
To have him matcht, and if you pleaſe to like
No worſe then I ſir upon ſome agreement
Me ſhall you find moſt ready and moſt willing
With one conſent to have her ſo beſtowed:
For curious I cannot be with you
Signior Baptiſta, of whom I heare ſo well.
Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to ſay,
Your plainneſſe and your ſhortneſſe pleaſe me well:
Right true it is your ſonne Lucentio here
Doth love my daughter, and ſhe loveth him,
Or both diſſemble deepely their affections:
And therefore if you ſay no more then this,
That like a Father you will deale with him,
And paſſe my daughter a ſufficient dower,
The match is made, and all is done,
Your ſonne ſhall have my daughter with conſent.
Tra. I thanke you ſir, where then doe you know beſt
We be affied and ſuch aſſurance tane,
As ſhall with either parts agreement ſtand.
Bap. Not in my houſe Lucentio, for you know
Pitchers have eares, and I have many ſervants,
Beſides old Gremio is harkning ſtill,
Ann haply we might be interrupted.
Tra. Then at my lodging, and it like you ſir
There doth my father ly: and there this night
Weele paſſe the buſineſſe privately and well:
Send for your daughter by your ſervant here,
My Boy ſhall fetch the Scrivener preſently,
The worſt is this that at ſo ſlender warning,
You are like to have a thin and ſlender pittance.
Bap. It likes me well:
Cambio hye you home, and bid Bianca make her ready
ſtraight:
And if you will tell what hath hapned,
Lucentios Father is arrived in Padua,
And how ſhe's like to be Lucentios wife.
Bion. I pray the gods ſhe may with all my heart: Exit.
Tra. Dally not with the gods, but get thee gone.

Enter Peter.

Signior Baptiſta, ſhall I leade the way,
We come, one meſſe is like to be your cheere,
Come ſir, we will better it in Piſa.
Bap. I follow you. Exeunt.

Enter Lucentio and Biondello.

Bion. Cambio.

Luc. What ſaiſt thou Biondello?

Biond. You ſaw my Maſter winke and laugh upon you?

Luc. Biondello, what of that?

Biond. Faith nothing: but has left me here behind to expound the meaning or morrall of his ſignes and tokens.

Luc. I pray thee moralize them.

Bion. Then thus: Baptiſta is ſafe talking with the deceiving Father of a deceitfull ſonne.

Luc. And what of him?

Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the ſupper.

Luc. And then?

Bion. The old Prieſt at Saint Lukes Church is at your command at all houres.

Luc. And what of all this?

Bion. I cannot tell, except they are buſied about a counterfeit aſſurance: take you aſſurance of her, Cum privilegio ad Imprimendum ſolum, to th' Church take the Prieſt, Clarke, and ſome ſufficient honeſt witneſſes:
If this be not that you looke for, I have no more to ſay,
But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.

Luc. Hear'ſt thou Biondello.

Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wench married in an afternoone as ſhe went to the Garden for Parſeley to ſtuffe a Rabit, and ſo may you ſir: and ſo adew ſir, my Maſter hath appointed me to goe to Saint Lukes to bid the Prieſt be ready to come againſt you come with your appendix. Exit.

Luc. I may and will, if ſhe be ſo contented:
She will be pleas'd, then wherefore ſhould I doubt:
Hap what hap may, Ile roundly goe about her:
It ſhall goe hard if Cambio goe without her. Exit.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Hortenſio.

Pet. Come on a Gods name, once more toward our fathers:
Good Lord how bright and goodly ſhines the Moone:
Kate. The Moone, the Sunne: it is not Moonelight now.
Pet. I ſay it is the Moone that ſhines ſo bright.
Kat. I know it is the Sunne that ſhines ſo bright.
Pet. Now by my mothers ſonne, and that's my ſelfe,

It ſhall be moone, or ſtarre, or what I I liſt,
Or ere I journey to your Fathers houſe:
Goe on, and fetch our horſes backe againe,
Evermore croſt and croſt, nothing but croſt.
Hor. Say as he ſayes, or we ſhall never goe,
Kat. Forward I pray, ſince we have come ſo farre,
And be it moone, or ſunne, or what your pleaſe:
And if you pleaſe to call it a ruſh Candle,
Henceforth I vowe it ſhall be ſo for me.
Pet. I ſay it is the Moone.
Kat. I know it is the Moone.
Pet. Nay then you lye: it is the bleſſed Sunne.
Kate. Then God be bleſt, it is the bleſſed ſunne,
But ſunne it is not, when you ſay it is not.
And the Moone changes even as your mind:
What you will have it nam'd, even that it is,
And ſo it ſhall be ſo for Katherine.
Hort. Petruchio, goe thy wayes, the field is won.
Pet. Well, forward, forward, thus the bowle ſhould (run,
And not unluckily againſt the Bias:
But ſoft, Company is comming here.

Enter Vincentio.

Good morrow gentle Miſtris, where away:
Tell me ſweet Kate, and tell me truely too,
Haſt thou beheld a freſher Gentlewoman:
Such warre of white and red within her cheekes:
What ſtarres doe ſpangle heaven with ſuch beauty,
As thoſe two eyes become that heavenly face?
Faire lovely Maide, once more good day to thee:
Sweet Kate embrace her for her beauties ſake.
Hort. A will make the man mad to make a woman of him.
Kat. Yong budding Virgin, faire, and freſh, and ſweet,
Whither away, or where is thy aboad?
Happy the Parents of ſo faire a child;
Happier the man whom favourable ſtars
Alots thee for his lovely bedfellow.
Pet. Why how now Kate, I hope thou art not mad,
This is a man old, wrinckled, faded, withered,
And not a Maiden, as thou ſaiſt he is.
Kate. Pardon old father my miſtaking eyes,
That have beene ſo bedazled with the ſunne,
That every thing I looke on ſeemeth greene:
Now I perceive thou art a reverent Father:
Pardon I pray thee for my mad miſtaking.
Pet. Doe good old grandſire, and withall make known
Which way thou travelleſt, if along with us,
We ſhall be joyfull of thy company.
Vin. Faire Sir, and you my merry Miſtris,
That with your ſtrange encounter much amaſde me:
My name is call'd Vincentio, my dwelling Piſa,
And bound I am to Padua, there to viſite
A ſonne of mine, which long I have not ſeene.
Pet. What is his name?
Vin. Lucentio gentle ſir.
Pet. Happily met, the happier for thy ſonne:
And now by Law, as well as reverent age,
I may intitle thee my loving father;
The ſiſter to my wife, this Gentlewoman,
Thy Sonne by this hath married: wonder not,
Nor be not grieved, ſhe is of good eſteeme,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;
Beſide, ſo qualified, as may beſeeme
The Spouſe of any noble Gentleman:
Let me imbrace with old Vincentio,
And wander we to ſee thy honeſt ſonne,
Who will of thy arrivall be full joyous.
Vin. But is this true, or is it elſe your pleaſure,
Like pleaſant travailors to breake a jeſt
Upon the company you overtake?
Hor. I doe aſſure thee father ſo it is.
Pet. Come goe along and ſee the truth hereof.
For our firſt merriment hath made thee jealous. Exeunt.
Hor. Well Petruchio, this has put me in heart:
Have to my Widdow, and if ſhe be froward,
Then haſt thou taught Hortenſio to be untoward. Exit.

Enter Biondello, Lucentio and Bianca, Gremio is out before.

Bion. Softly and ſwiftly ſir, for the Prieſt is ready.

Luc. I flye Biondello, but they may chance to need thee at home, therefore leave us. Exit.

Bion. Nay faith, Ile ſee the Church a your backe, and then come backe to my miſtris as ſoone as I can.

Gre. I marvaile Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Vincentio, Grumio with Attendants.

Pet. Sir heeres the doore, this is Lucentios houſe,
My Fathers beares more toward the Market-place,
Thither muſt I, and here I leave you ſir.
Vin. You ſhall not chooſe but drinke before you goe,
I thinke I ſhall command your welcome here?
And by all likelyhood ſome cheere is toward. Knocke.
Grem. They're buſie within, you were beſt knocke lowder.

Pedant lookes out of the window.

Ped. What's he that knockes as he would beat downe the gate?

Vin. Is Signior Lucentio within ſir?

Ped. He's within ſir, but not to be ſpoken withall.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merry withall.

Ped. Keepe your hundred pounds to your ſelfe, he ſhall need none ſo long as I live.

Petr. Nay, I told you your ſonne was well beloved in Padua: doe you heare ſir, to leave frivolous circumſtances, I pray you tell ſignior Lucentio that his Father is come from Piſa, and is here at the doore to ſpeake with him.

Ped. Thou lieſt, his Father is come from Padua, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. I ſir, ſo his mother ſayes, if I may beleeve her.

Pet. Why how now gentleman: why this is flat knavery to take upon you another mans name.

Peda. Lay hands on the villaine, I beleeve a meanes to coſen ſome body in this City under my countenance.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. I have ſeene them in the Church together, God ſend'em good ſhipping: but who is heere? mine old Maſter Vincentio: now we are undone and brought to nothing.

Vin. Come hither crackhempe.

Bion. I hope I may chooſe Sir.

Vin. Come hither you rogue, what have you forgot me?

Bion. Forgot you, no ſir: I could not forget you, for I never ſaw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villaine, didſt thou never ſee thy Maſters father, Vincentio?

Bion. What my old worſhipfull old maſter? yes marry ſir, ſee where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Iſt ſo indeed? He beates Biondello.

Bion. Helpe, helpe, helpe, here's a mad man will murder me.

Peda. Helpe, ſonne, helpe ſignior Baptiſta.

Pet. Prethee Kate let's ſtand aſide and ſee the end of this controverſie.

Enter Pedant with ſervants, Baptiſta, Tranio.

Tra. Sir, what are you that offer to beate my ſervant?

Vin. What am I ſir: nay what are you ſir: oh immortall Goddes: oh fine villaine, a ſilken doublet, a velvet hoſe, a ſcarlet cloake, and a copataine hat: oh I am undone, I am undone: while I play the good husband at home, my ſonne and my ſervant ſpend all at the vniverſity.

Tra. How now, what's the matter?

Bap. What is the man lunaticke?

Tra. Sir, you ſeeme a ſober ancient Gentleman by your habit: but your words ſhew you a mad man: why ſir, what concernes it you, if I weare Pearle and gold: I thanke my good father, I am able to maintaine it.

Vin. Thy father! oh villaine, he is a Saile-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You miſtake ſir, you miſtake ſir, pray what doe you thinke is his name?

Vin. His name, as if I knew not his name: I have brought bim up ever ſince he was three yeeres old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away mad aſſe, his name is Lucentio, and he is mine onely ſonne and heire to the Lands of me ſignior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! oh he hath murdred his Maſter; lay hold on him I charge you in the Dukes name: oh my ſonne, my ſonne: tell me thou villaine, where is my ſon Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer: Carry this mad knave to the Iaile: father Baptiſta, I charge you ſee that he bee forth comming.

Vin. Carry me to the Iaile?

Gre. Stay officer, he ſhall not goe to priſon.

Bap. Talke not ſignior Gremio: I ſay he ſhall goe to priſon.

Gre. Take heede ſignior Baptiſta, leaſt you be conicatcht in this buſineſſe: I dare ſweare this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Sweare if thou dar'ſt.

Gre. Nay, I dare not ſweare it.

Tra. Then thou wert beſt ſay that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be ſignior Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard, to the Iaile with him.

Enter Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca.

Vin. Thus ſtrangers may be haild and abuſd: oh monſtrous villaine.

Bion. Oh we are ſpoil'd, and yonder he is, deny him, forſweare him, or elſe we are all done.

Exit Biondello, Tranio, and Pedant as faſt as may be.

Luc. Pardon ſweet father.

Vin. Lives my ſweet ſonne?

Bia. Pardon deere father.

Bap. How haſt thou offended, where is Lucentio.

Luc. Here's Lucentio, right ſonne to the right Vincentio.
That have by marriage made thy daughter mine.
While counterfeit ſuppoſes bleer'd thine eine.

Gre. Here's packing with a witneſſe to deceive us all.

Vin. Where is that damned villaine Tranio,
That fac'd and braved me in this matter ſo?

Bap. Why, tell me is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrought theſe miracles. Biancas love
Made me exchangr my ſtate with Tranio,
While he did beare my countenance in the towne,
And happily I have arriv'd at laſt
Vnto the wiſhed haven of my bliſſe:
What Tranio did, my ſelfe enforſt him to;
Then pardon him ſweet Father for my ſake.

Vin. Ile ſlit the villaines noſe that would have ſent me to the Iaile.

Bap. But do you heare ſir, have you married my daughter without asking my good will?

Vin. Feare not Baptiſta, we will content you, goe to: but I will in to be reveng'd for this villanie. Exit.

Bap. And I to ſound the depth of this knauery. Exit.

Luc. Looke not pale Bianca, thy father will not frowne
Exeunt

Gre. My cake is dough, but Ile in among the reſt,
Out of hope of all, but my ſhare of the feaſt.

Kat. Husband let's follow, to ſee the end of this adoe.

Pet. Firſt kiſſe me Kate, and we will.

Kat. What in the midſt of the ſtreete?

Pet. What art thou aſham'd of me?

Kate. No ſir, God forbid, but aſham'd to kiſſe.

Pet. Why then le'ts home againe: Come Sirra let's away.

Kat. Nay, I will give thee a kiſſe, now pray thee Love ſtay.

Pet. Is not this well? come my ſweet Kate.
Better once then never, for never too late. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Baptiſta, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, and Bianca, Tranio, Biondello, Grumio, and Widdow;
The Serving men with Tranio bringing in a Banquet.

Luc. At laſt, though long, our jarring notes agree,
And time it is when raging warre is come,
To ſmile at ſcapes and perils overblowne:
My faire Bianca bid my father welcome,
While I with ſelfe ſame kindneſſe welcome thine:
Brother Petruchio, ſiſter Katerina,
And thou Hortentio with thy loving Widdow:
Feaſt with the beſt, and welcome to my houſe,
My Banket is to cloſe our ſtomackes up
After our great good cheere: pray you ſit downe,
For now we ſit to chat as well as eate.

Pet. Nothing but ſit and ſit, and eate and eate.

Bap. Padua affords this kindneſſe, ſonne Petruchio.

Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hor. For both our ſakes I would that word were true.

Pet. Now for my life Hortentio feares his Widow.

Hor. Then never truſt me if I be affeard.

Pet. You are very ſencible, and yet you miſſe my ſence:
I meane Hortentio is afeard of you.

Wid. He that is giddy thinkes the world turnes round.
Pet. Roundly replied.
Kat. Miſtris, how meane you that?
Wid. Thus I conceive by him.
Pet. Conceives by me, how likes Hortentio that?
Hor. My Widdow ſayes, thus ſhe conceives her tale.
Petr. Very well mended: kiſſe him for that good Widdow.
Kat. He that is giddy thinkes the world turnes round.
I pray you tell me what you meant by that.
Wid. Your husband being troubled with a ſhrew,
Meaſures my husbands ſorrow by his woe:
And now you know my meaning.
Kate. A very meane meaning.
Wid. Right, I meane you.
Kat. And I am meane indeed, reſpecting you.
Pet. To her Kate.
Hor. To her Widdow.
Pet. A hundred markes, my Kate doe put her downe.
Hor. That's my office.
Pe.. Spoke like an Officer: ha to thee lad.

Drinkes to Hortentio.

Bap. How likes Gremio theſe quicke witted folkes?
Gre. Beleeve me ſir, they But together well:
Bian. Head, and but an haſty witty body,
Would ſay your Head and But were head and horne.
Vin. I Miſtris Bride, hath that awakened you?
Bian. I, but not frighted me, therefore Ile ſleepe againe.
Petr. Nay that you ſhall not ſince you have begun:
Have at you for a better jeſt or too.
Bian. Am I your Bird, I meane to ſhift my buſh,
And then purſue me as you draw your Bow.
You are welcome all. Exit Bianca.
Pet. She hath prevented me, here ſignior Tranio,
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not,
Therefore a health to all that ſhot and miſt.
Tri. Oh ſir, Lucentio ſlipt me like his Gray-hound,
Which runnes himſelfe, and catches for his Maſter,
Pet. A good ſwift ſimile, but ſomething curriſh.
Tra. 'Tis well ſir that you hunted for your ſelfe:
'Tis thought your Deere does hold you at a bay.
Bap. Oh, oh Petruchio, Tranio hits you now.
Luc. I thanke thee for that gird good Tranio.
Hor. Confeſſe, confeſſe, hath he not hit you here?
Pet. A has a little gald me I confeſſe:
And as the Ieſt did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you too out right.
Bap. Now in good ſadneſſe ſonne Petruchio,
I thinke thou haſt the verieſt ſhrew of all.
Pet. Well, I ſay no: and therefore for aſſurance,
Let's each one ſend unto his wife,
And he whoſe wife is moſt obedient,
To come at firſt when he doth ſend for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propoſe.
Hor: Content, what's the wager?
Luc. Twenty crownes.
Pet. Twenty crownes.
Ile venture ſo much of my Hawke or Hound,
But twenty times ſo much upon my Wife.
Luc. A hundred then.
Hor. Content.
Pet. A match, 'tis done.
Hor. Who ſhall begin?
Luc. That will I.
Goe Biondello, bid your Miſtris come to me.
Bio. I goe. Exit.
Bap. Sonne, Ile be your halfe, Bianca comes.
Luc. Ile have no halves: Ile beare it all my ſelfe,

Enter Biondello.

How now, what newes?
Bio. Sir, my Miſtris ſends you word
That ſhe is buſie, and ſhe cannot come.
Pet. How? ſhe's buſie, and ſhe cannot come: is that an anſwer?
Gre. I, and a kinde one too:
Pray God ſir your wife ſend you not a worſe.
Pet. I hope better.
Hor. Sirra Biondello, goe and intreat my wife to come to me forthwith. Exit Biondello.
Petr. Oh ho, intreate her, nay then ſhe muſt needes come.
Hor. I am affraid ſir, do what you can,

Enter Biondello.

Yours will not be entreated: Now, where's my wife?
Bion. She ſayes you have ſome goodly Ieſt in hand,
She will not come: ſhe bids you come to her.
Pet. Worſe and worſe, ſhe will not come:
Oh vild, intollerable, not to be indur'd:
Sirra Grumio, goe to your Miſtris,
Say I command her come to me. Exit.
Hor. I know her anſwer.
Pet. What?
Hor. She will not.
Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter Katerina.

Bap. Now by my hollidam heere comes Katerina,
Kat. What is your will ſir, that you ſend for me?
Pet. Where is your ſiſter, and Hortenſios wife?
Kate. They ſit conferring by the Parlor fire.
Pet. Goe fetch them hither, if they denie to come,
Swinge me them ſoundly forth unto their husbands:
Away I ſay, and bring then hither ſtraight.
Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talke of a wonder.
Hor. And ſo it is: I wonder what it boads.
Pet. Marry peace it boads, and love, and quiet life,
An awfull rule, and right ſupremacy:
And to be ſhort, what not, that's ſweet and happy.
Bap. Now faire befall thee good Petruchio;
The wager thou haſt won, and I will adde
Vnto their loſſes twenty thouſand crownes,
Another dowry to another daughter,
For ſhe is chang'd as ſhe had never beene.
Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet,
And ſhow more ſigne of her obedience,
Her new built vertue and obedience.

Enter Kate, Bianca, and Widdow.

See where ſhe comes, and brings your froward Wives
As priſoners to her womanly perſwaſion:
Katerine, that Cap of yours becomes you not,
Off with that bable, throw it underfoote.
Wid. Lord let me never have a cauſe to ſigh,
Till I be brought to ſuch a ſilly paſſe.
Bian. Fye what a fooliſh duty call you this?
Luc. I would your duty were as fooliſh too:
The wiſdome of your duty faire Bianca,
Hath coſt me five hundred crownes ſince ſupper time.
Bian. The more foole you for laying on my duty.
Pet. Katherine I charge thee tell theſe head-ſtrong women, what duty they doe owe their Lords and husbands.

Wid. Come, come, your mocking: we will have no telling.

Pet. Come on I ſay, and firſt begin with her.

Wid. She ſhall not.

Pet. I ſay ſhe ſhall, and firſt begin with her.

Kate. Fie, fie, unknit that threating unkinde brow,
And dart not ſcornefull glances from thoſe eyes,
To wound thy Lord, thy King, thy governour.
It blots thy beauty, as froſts bite the meads,
Confounds thy fame, as whirlewinds ſhake faire buds,
And in no ſence is meet or amiable.
A woman mov'd, is like a fountaine troubled,
Muddie, ill ſeeming, thicke, bereft of beauty,
And while it is ſo, none ſo dry or thirſtie
Will daigne to ſip, or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy Lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy ſoveraigne: One that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance. Commits his body
To painfull labour, both by ſea and land:
To watch the night in ſtormes, the day in cold
Whil'ſt thou ly'ſt warme at home, ſecure and ſafe,
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, faire lookes, and true obedience;
Too little payment for ſo great a debt.
Such dutie as the ſubject owes the Prince,
Even ſuch a woman oweth to her husband:
And when ſhe is froward, peeviſh, ſullen, ſowre,
And not obedient to his honeſt will,
What is ſhe but a foule contending Rebell,
And graceleſſe Traitor to her loving Lord?
I am aſham'd that women are ſo ſimple,
To offer warre,, where they ſhould kneele for peace:
Or ſeeke for rule, ſupremacie, and ſway,
When they are bound to ſerve, love, and obay.
Why are our bodies ſoft, and weake, and ſmooth,
Vnapt to toyle and trouble in the world,
But that our ſoft conditions, and our hearts,
Should well agree with our externall parts?
Come, come, you froward and unable wormes,
My minde hath bin as bigge as one of yours,
My heart is great, my reaſon haply more,
To bandie word for word, and frowne for frowne;
But now I ſee our Launces are but ſtrawes:
Our ſtrength as weake, our weakeneſſe paſt compare,
That ſeeming to be moſt, which we indeed leaſt are.
Then vale your ſtomackes; for it is no boote,
And place your hands below your husbands foote:
In token of which duty, if he pleaſe,
My hand is readie, may it do him eaſe.

Pet. Why there's a weach: Come on, and kiſſe me Kate.

Luc. Well go thy wayes old lad, for thou ſhalt ha't.

Vin. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.

Luc. But a harſh hearing, when women are froward.

Pet. Come Kate, wee'le to bed,
We three are married, but you two are ſped.
'Twas I wonne the wager, though you hit the white,
And being a winner, God give you good night.

Exit Petruchio.

Horten. Now goe thy wayes, thou haſt tam'd a curſt Shrow.

Luc. Tis a wonder, by your leave, ſhe will be tam'd ſo.

FINIS.

ALL'S VVell, that Ends VVell:

Actus primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter young Bertram Count of Roſſillion, his Mother, and Helena, Lord Lafew, all in blacke.

Mother.

IN delivering my ſonne from me, I burie a ſecond husband.

Roſ. And in going Madam, weepe ore my fathers death anew; but I muſt attend his majeſties command, to whom I am now in Ward, evermore in ſubjection.

Laf. You ſhall find of the King a husband Madame, you ſir a father. He that ſo generally is at all times good, muſt of neceſſitie hold his vertue to you, whoſe worthineſſe would ſtirre it up where it wanted, rather then lacke it where there is ſuch abundance.

Mo. What hope is there of his Majeſties amendment?

Laf. He hath abandon'd his Phiſitions Madam, under whoſe practiſes he hath perſecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the proceſſe, but onely the loſing of hope by time.

Mo. This young Gentlewoman had a Father, O that had! how ſad a paſſage tis, whoſe skill was almoſt as great as his honeſtie, had it ſtretch'd ſo far, would have made nature immortall, and death ſhould have play for lacke of worke. Would for the Kings ſake hee were living, I thinke it would be the death of the Kings diſeaſe.

Laf. How call'd you the man you ſpeake of Madam?

Mo. He was famous ſir in his profeſſion, and it was his great right to be ſo: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed Madam, the King very lately ſpoke of him admiringly, and mourningly: he was skilfull enough to have liv'd ſtill, if knowledge could be ſet up againſt mortallitie.

Roſ. What is it (my good Lord) the King languiſhes of?

Laf. A Fiſtula my Lord.

Roſ. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this Gentlewoman the Daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Mo. His ſole childe my Lord, and bequeathed to my over looking. I have thoſe hopes of her good, that her education promiſes her diſpoſitions ſhe inherits, which makes faire gifts fairer: for where an uncleane mind carries vertuous qualities, there commendations goe with pitty, they are vertues and traitors too: in her they are the better for their ſimpleneſſe; ſhe derives her honeſtie, and atcheeves her goodneſſe.

Lafew. Your commendations Madam get from her teares.

Mo. 'Tis the beſt brine a Maiden can ſeaſon her praiſe in. The remembrance of her father never approches her heart, but the tirany of her ſorrowes takes all livelihood from her cheeke. No more of this Helena, goe too, no more leaſt it be rather thought you affect a ſorrow, then to have——

Hel. I doe affect a ſorrow indeed, but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentations is the right of the dead, exceſſive greefe the enemie to the living.

Mo. If the living be enemy to the greefe, the exceſſe makes it ſoone mortall.

Roſ. Madam I deſire your holy wiſhes.

Laf. How underſtand we that?

Mo. Be thou bleſt Bertrame, and ſucceed thy father
In manners as in ſhape: thy blood and vertue
Contend for Empire in thee, and thy goodneſſe
Share with thy birth-right. Love all, truſt a few,
Doe wrong to none: be able for thine enemie
Rather in power then uſe: and keepe thy friend
Vnder thy owne lifes key. Be checkt for ſilence,
But never tax'd for ſpeech. What heaven more will,
That thee may furniſh, and my prayers plucke downe,
Fall on thy hand. Farewell my Lord,
'Tis an unſeaſon'd Courtier, good my Lord
Aduiſe him.

Laf. He cannot want the beſt
That ſhall attend his love.

Mo. Heaven bleſſe him: Farwell Bertram. Exit.

Roſ. The beſt wiſhes thrt can be forg'd in your thoughts be ſervants to you: be comfortable to my mother, your Miſtris, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell prettie Lady, you muſt hold the credit of your father.

Hell. O were that all, I thinke not on my father,
And theſe great teares grace his remembrance more
Then thoſe I ſhed for him. What was he like?
I have forgot him. My imagination
Carries no favour in't but Bertrams.
I am undone, there is no liuing, none,
If Bertram be away. 'Twere all one,
That I ſhould love a bright particular ſtarre,
And thinke to wed it, he is ſo above me
In his bright radience and collaterall light,

Muſt I be comforted, not in his ſphere;
Th'ambition in my love thus plagues it ſelfe:
The hinde that would be mated by the Lion
Muſt die for love. 'I was pretty, though a plague
To ſee him every houre to ſit and draw
His arched browes, his hawking eye, his curles
In our hearts table: heart too capable
Of every line and tricke of his ſweet favour.
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancie
Muſt ſanctifie his Reliques. Who comes here?

Enter Parrolles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his ſake,
And yet I know him a notorious Liar,
Thinke him a great way foole, ſolie a coward,
Yet theſe fixt evils ſit ſo fit in him,
That they take place, when Vertues ſteely bones
Lookes bleake i'th cold wind: withall, full oft we ſee
Cold wiſedome waiting on ſuperfluous follie.

Par. Save you faire Queene.

Hel. And you Monarch.

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginitie?

Hel. I: you have ſome ſtaine of ſouldier in you: Let me aske you a queſtion. Man is enemie to virginitie, how may we barrocado it againſt him?

Par. Keepe him out.

Hel. Bnt he aſſailes, and our virginitie though valiant, in the defence yet is weake: unfold us ſome warlike reſiſtance.

Par. There is none: Man ſetting downe before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.

Hel. Bleſſe our poore Virginity from Vnderminers, and blowers up. Is there no Military policy how Virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blowne downe, Man will quicklier be blowne up: marry in blowing him downe againe, with the breach your ſelves made, you loſe your City. It is not politicke, in the common-wealth of Nature, to preſerve virginitie. Loſſe of Virginite, is rationall encreaſe, and there was never virgin got, till virginitie was firſt loſt. That you were made of, is mettall to make Virgins. Virginitie; by being once loſt, may bee ten tines found: by being ever kept it is ever loſt: 'tis too cold a companion: Away with't.

Hel. I will ſtand for't a little, though therefore I die a Virgin.

Par. There's little can be ſaid in't, 'tis againſt the rule of Nature. To ſpeake on the part of virginitie, is to accuſe your Mothers; which is moſt infallible diſobedience. He that hangs himſelfe is a Virgin: Virginitie murthers it ſelfe, and ſhould be buried in highwayes out of all ſanctified limit, as a deſperate Offendreſſe againſt Nature. Virginitie breedes mites, much like a Cheeſe, conſumes it ſelfe to the very payring, and ſo dyes with feeding his owne ſtomacke. Beſides, Virginitie is peeuiſh, proud, ydle, made of ſelfe-love, which is the moſt inhabited ſinne in the Cannon. Keepe it not, you cannot chooſe but looſe by't. Out with't: within ten yeares it will make it ſelfe two, which is a goodly increaſe, and the principall it ſelfe not much the worſe. A way with't.

Hel. How might one doe ſir, to looſe it to her owne liking?

Par. Let me ſee. Marry ill, to like him that ne're it likes. 'Tis a commoditie will loſe the gloſſe with lying: The longer kept, the leſſe worth: Off with't while 'tis vendible. Anſwer the time of requeſt, Virginitie like an olde Courtier, weares her cap out of faſhion, richly ſuted, but unſuteable, juſt like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which were not now: your Date is better in your Pye and your Porredge, then in your cheeke: and your virginitie, your old virginitie, is like one of our French wither'd peares, it lookes ill, it eates drily, marry 'tis a wither'd peare: it was formerly better, marry yet 'tis a wither'd peare, Will you any thing with it?

Hel. Not my virginitie yet:
There ſhall your maſter have a thouſand loves,
A Mother, and a Miſtriſſe, and a friend,
A Phenix, Captaine, and an enemy,
A guide, a Goddeſſe, and a ſoveraigne,
A Counſellor, a Traitreſſe, and a Deare:
His humbleſt ambition, proud humility:
His Iarring, concord: and his diſcord, dulcet:
His faith, his ſweet diſaſter: with a world
Of pretty fond adoptious chriſtendomes
That blinking Cupid goſſips. Now ſhall he:
I know not what he ſhall, God ſend him well,
The Courts a learning place, and he is one.

Par. What one yfaith?

Hel. That I wiſh well, 'tis pitty.

Par. What's pitty?

Hel. That wiſhing well had not a body in't,
Which might be felt, that we poorer borne,
Whoſe baſer ſtarres do ſhut us up in wiſhes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And ſhew what we alone muſt thinke, which never
Returnes us thankes.

Page. Monſieur Parrolles,
My Lord cals for you.

Par. Little Hellen farewell, if I can remember thee, I will thinke of thee at Court.

Hel. Monſier Parolles, you were borne under a charitable ſtarre.

Par. Vnder Mars I.

Hel. I eſpecially thinke, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars?

Hel. The warres hath ſo kept you under, that you muſt needes be borne under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde I thinke rather.

Par. Why thinke you ſo?

Hel. You go ſo much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away,
When feare propoſes the ſafety:
But the compoſition that your valour and feare makes in you, is a vertue of a good wing, and I like the weare well.

Paroll. I am ſo full of buſineſſes, I cannot anſwere thee acutely: I will returne perfect Courtier, in the which my inſtruction ſhall ſerve to naturalize thee, ſo thou wilt be capeable of the Courtiers counſell, and underſtand what advice ſhall thruſt upon thee, elſe thou dyeſt in thine unthankefulnes, and thine ignorance makes thee away, farewell: When thou haſt leyſure, ſay thy praiers: when thou haſt none, remember thy Friends:

Get thee a good husband, and uſe him as he uſes thee:
So farewell. Exit.
Hel. Our remedies oft in our ſelves do lye,
Which we aſcribe to heaven: the fated skye
Giues us free ſcope, onely doth backward pull
Our ſlow deſignes, when we our ſelves are dull.
What power is it, which mounts my love ſo hye,
That makes me ſee, and cannot feede mine eye?
The mightieſt ſpace in fortune, Nature brings
To joyne like, likes; and kiſſe like native things.
Impoſſible be ſtrange attempts to thoſe
That weigh their paines in ſence, and do ſuppoſe
What hath beene, cannot be. Who ever ſtroue
To ſhew her merit, that did miſſe her love?
(The Kings diſeaſe) my project may deceive me,
But my intents are fixt, and will not leave me. Exit

Flouriſh Cornets.
Enter the King of France with Letters, and divers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by th'eares,
Have fought with equall fortune, and continue
A braving warre.
1. Lo.G. So tis reported ſir.
Kin. Nay tis moſt credible, we heere receive it,
A certainty vouch'd from our Coſin Auſtria,
With caution, that the Florentine will move us
For ſpeedy aide: wherein our deereſt friend
Prejudicates the buſineſſe, and would ſeeme
To have us make deniall.
1. Lo. G. His love and wiſedome
Approv'd ſo to your Majeſty, may pleade
For ampleſt credence.
Kin. He hath arm'd our anſwer,
And Florence is deni'de before he comes:
Yet for our Gentlemen that meane to ſee
The Tuſcan ſervice, freely have they leave
To ſtand on either part.
2. Lo. E. It well may ſerue
A nurſſery to our Gentry, who are ſicke
For breathing, and exploit.
King. What's he comes heere.

Enter Bertram, Lafew, and Parolles.

1. Lo. G. It 'tis the Count Roſillion my good Lord,
Yong Bertram.
King. Youth, thou bear'ſt thy Fathers face,
Franke Nature rather curious then in haſt.
Hath well compos'd thee: Thy Fathers morall parts
Maiſt thou inherit too: Welcome to Paris.
Ber. My thankes and duty are your Majeſties.
Kin. I would I had that corporall ſoundneſſe now,
As when thy father, and my ſelfe, in friendſhip
Firſt tride our ſouldierſhip: he did looke farre
Into the ſervice of the time, and was
Diſcipled of the braveſt. He laſted long,
But on us both did haggiſh Age ſteale on,
And wore us out of act: It much repaires me:
To talke of your good father; in his youth
He had the wit, which I can well obſerve
To day in our yong Lords: but they may jeſt
Till their owne ſcorne returne to them unnoted
Ere they can hide their levitie in honour:
So like a Courtier, contempt nor bitterneſſe
Were in his pride, or ſharpneſſe; if they were,
His equall had awak'd them, and his honour
Clocke to it ſelfe, knew the true minute when
Exception bid him ſpeake, and at this time
His tongue obey'd his hand. Who were below him,
He us'd as creatures of another place,
And bow'd his eminent top to their low rankes,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poore praiſe he humbled: Such a man
Might be a copie to theſe yonger times;
Which followed well, would demonſtrate them now
But goers backward.
Ber. His good remembrance ſir
Lies richer in your thoughts, then on his tombe:
So in approofe lives not his Epitaph,
As in your royall ſpeech.
King. Would I were with him: he would alwaies ſay,
(Me thinkes I heare him now) his plauſive words
He ſcatter'd not in eares, but grafted them
To grow there and to beare: Let me not live,
This his good melancholly oft began
On the Cataſtrophe and heele of paſtime
When it was out: Let me not live (quoth hee)
After my flame lackes oyle, to be the ſnuffe
Of yonger ſpirits, whoſe apprehenſive ſenſes
All but new things diſdaine; whoſe judgements are
Meere fathers of their garments: whoſe conſtancies
Expire before their faſhions: this he wiſh'd.
I after him, do after him wiſh too:
(Since I nor wax nor honie can bring home,)
I quickly were diſſolved from my hive
To give ſome Labourers roome.
L.2.E. You'r loved Sir,
They that leaſt lend it you ſhall lacke you firſt.
Kin. I fill a place I know't, how long iſt Count
Since the Phyſitian at your fathers died?
He was much fam'd.
Ber. Some ſix moneths ſince my Lord.
Kin. If he were living, I would try him yet.
Lend me an arme: the reſt have worne me out
With ſeverall applications: Nature and ſickneſſe
Debate it at their leiſure. Welcome Count,
My ſonne's no deerer.
Ber, Thanke your Majeſty. Exit.

Flouriſh.

Enter Counteſſe, Steward, and Clowne.

Cou. I will now heare, what ſay you of this gentlewoman.

St. Maddam the care I have had to even your content, I wiſh might be found in the Kalender of my paſt endevours, for then we wound our Modeſtie, and make foule the clearneſſe of our deſervings, when of our ſelves we publiſh them.

Cou. What doe's this knave heere? Get you gone ſirra: the complaints I have heard of you I do not all beleeve, 'tis my ſlowneſſe that I do not: For I know you lacke not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make ſuch knaveries yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknowne to you Madam, I am a poore fellow.

Cou. Well ſir.

Clo. No maddam,
'Tis not ſo well that I am poore, though manie

of the rich are damn'd, but if I have your Ladiſhips good will to goe to the world, Isbell the woman and I will doe as we may.

Coun. Wilt thou needes be a begger?

Clo. I doe beg your good will in this caſe.

Con. In what caſe?

Clo. In Isbels caſe and mine owne: ſervice is no heritage, and I thinke I ſhall never have the bleſſing of God, till I have iſſue a my bodie: for they ſay bearnes are bleſſings.

Cou. Tell me thy reaſon why thou wilt marrie?

Clo. My poore body Madam requires it, I am driven on by the fleſh, and he muſt needes goe that the divell drives.

Cou. Is this all your worſhips reaſon?

Clo. Faith Madam I have other holie reaſons, ſuch as they are.

Cou. May the world know them?

Clo. I have beene Madam a wicked creature, as you and all fleſh and blood are, and indeede I doe marrie that I may repent.

Cou. Thy marriage ſooner then thy wickedneſſe.

Clo. I am out a friends Madam, and I hope to have friends for my wives ſake.

Cou. Such friends are thine enemies knave.

Clo. Y'are ſhallow Madam in great friends, for the knaves come to doe that for me which I am a wearie of: he that eares my Land, ſpares my teame, and gives mee leave to Inne the crop: if I bee his Cuckold, hee's my drudge; he that comforts my wife, is the cheriſher of my fleſh and blood; he that cheriſheth my fleſh and blood, loves my fleſh and blood; he that loves my fleſh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kiſſes my wife is my friend: if men could bee contented to be what they are, there were no feare in marriage, for yong Charbon the Puritan, and olde Poyſam the Papiſt, how ſomere their hartes are ſeuer'd in Religion, their heades are both one, they may joule hornes together like any Deare i'th Herd.

Cou. Wilt thou ever be a foule mouth'd and calumnious knaue?

Clo. A prophet I Madam, and I ſpeake the truth the next way, for I the Ballad will repeate, which men full true ſhall finde, your marriage comes by deſtiny, your Cuckow ſings by kinde.

Cou. Get you gone ſir, Ile talke with you more anon.

Stew. May it pleaſe you Madam, that hee bid Hellen come to you, of her I am to ſpeake.

Cou. Sirra tell my gentlewoman I would ſpeake with her, Hellen I meane.

Clo. Was this faire face the cauſe, quoth ſhe,
Why the Grecians ſacked Troy,
Fond done, done, fond was this King Priams joy,
With that ſhe ſighed as ſhe ſtood, bis
And gaue this ſentence then, among nine bad if one be good, among nine bad if one be good, there's yet one good in ten.

Cou. What, one good in tenne? you corrupt the ſong ſirra.

Clo. One good woman in ten Madam, which is a purifying ath'ſong: would God would ſerue the world ſo all the yeere, weed finde no fault with the tithe woman if I were the Parſon, one in ten quoth a? and wee might have a good woman borne but ore every blazing ſtarre, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the Lotterie well, a man may draw his heart out ere a plucke one.

Cou. Youle be gone ſir knave, and doe as I command you?

Clo. That man ſhould be at a womans command, and yet no hurt done, though honeſtie be no Puritan, yet it will doe no hurt, it will weare the Surplis of humilitie over the blacke-Gowne of a bigge heart: I am going forſooth, the buſineſſe is for Hellen to come hither.

Exit.

Cou. Well now.

Stew. I know Madam you love your Gentlewoman intirely.

Cou. Faith I doe: her Father bequeath'd her to me, and ſhe her ſelfe without other advantage, may lawfullie make title to as much love as ſhe findes, there is more owing her then is paid; and more ſhall be paid her then ſheele demand.

Stew. Madam, I was verie late more neere her then I thinke ſhe wiſht me, alone ſhe was, and did communicate to her ſelfe her owne words to her owne eares, ſhee thought, I dare vow for her, they toucht not any ſtranger ſence, her matter was, ſhe loved your Sonne; Fortune ſhe ſayd wasno goddeſſe, that had put ſuch difference betwixt their two eſtates: Love no god, that would not extend his might onely, where qualities were levell, Queene of Virgins, that would ſuffer her poore Knight ſurpris'd without reſcue in the firſt aſſault or ranſome afterward: This ſhe deliver'd in the moſt bitter touch of ſorrow that ere I heard Virgin exclaime in, which I held my dutie ſpeedily to acquaint you withall, ſithence in the loſſe that may happen, it concernes you ſomething to know it.

Cou. You have diſcharg'd this honeſtlie, keepe it to your ſelfe, manie likelihoods inform'd mee of this before, which hung ſo tottring in the ballance, that I could never beleeve nor miſdoubt: pray you leave mee, ſtall this in your boſome, and I thanke you for your honeſt care: I will ſpeake with you further anon.

Exit Steward.

Enter Hellen.

Old. Cou. Even ſo it was with me when I was young:
If ever we are natures theſe are ours, this thorne
Doth to our Roſe of youth rightlie belong
Our bloud to us, this to our blood is borne,
It is the ſhow, and ſeale of natures truth,
Where loves ſtrong paſſion is impreſt in youth,
By our remembrances of daies forgon,
Such were our faults, or then we thought them none,
Her eie is ſicke on't, I obſerve her now.

Hel. What is your pleaſure Madam?

Ol. Cou. You know Hellen I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honorable Miſtris.

Ol. Cou. Nay a mother, why not a mother? when I ſed a mother.
Me thought you ſaw a ſerpent, what's in mother
That you ſtart at it? I ſay I am your mother,
And put you in the Catalogue of thoſe
That were enwombed mine, 'tis often ſeene
Adoption ſtrives with nature, and choiſe breedes
A natiue ſlip to us from forraine ſeedes:
You ne're oppreſt me with a mothers groane,
Yet I expreſſe to you a mothers care,
(Gods mercie maiden) dos it curd thy blood
To ſay I am thy mother? what's the matter,
That this dſtempered meſſenger of wet,

The manie colour'd Iris rounds thine eye?
——— Why, that you art my daughter?
Hell. That I am not.
Old.Con. I ſay I am your Mother.
Hell. Pardon Madam.
The Count Roſillion cannot be my brother:
I am from humble, he from honoured name:
No note upon my Parents, his all noble,
My Maſter, my deere Lord he is, and I
His ſervant live, and will his vaſſall die:
He muſt not be my brother.
Ol.Con. Nor I your Mother.
Hel. You are my mother Madam, would you were
So that my Lord your ſonne were not my brother,
Indeed my mother, or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for, then I doe for heaven,
So I were not his ſiſter, cant no other,
But I your daughter, he muſt be my brother.
Old.Con. Yes Hellen, you might be my daughter in law,
God ſhield you meane it not, daughter and mother
So ſtrive upon your pulſe; what pale agen?
My feare hath catcht your fondneſſe! now I ſee
The miſtrie of your lovelineſſe, and finde
Your ſalt teares head, now to all ſence 'ts groſſe:
You love my ſonne, invention is aſham'd
Againſt the proclamation of thy paſſion
To ſay thou doſt not: therefore tell me true,
But tell me then 'tis ſo, for looke, thy cheekes
Confeſſe it 'ton to th'other, and thine eyes
See it is ſo groſſely ſhowne in thy behaviors,
That in their kinde they ſpeake it, onely ſinne
And helliſh obſtinacie tye thy tongue
That truth ſhould be ſuſpected, ſpeake, iſt ſo?
If it be ſo, you haue wound a goodly clewe:
If it be not, forſweare't how ere I charge thee,
As heaven ſhall worke in me for mine availe
To tell me truely.
Hell. Good Madam pardon me.
Con. Do you lioue my Sonne?
Hell. Your pardon noble Miſtris.
Con. Love you my Sonne?
Hell. Doe not you love him Madam?
Con. Goe not about; my love hath in't a bond
Whereof the world takes note: Come, come, diſcloſe:
The ſtate of your affection, for your paſſions
Have to the full appeach'd.
Hell. Then I confeſſe
Here on my knee, before high heavens and you,
That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your Sonne:
My frinds were poore but honeſt, ſo's my love:
Be not offended, for it hurts not him
That he is lov'd of me; I follow him not
By any token of preſumptuous ſuite,
Nor would I have him, till I doe deſerve him,
Yet never know how that deſert ſhould be:
I know I love in vaine, ſtrive againſt hope:
Yet in this captious, and intenible Sive.
I ſtill poure in the waters of my love
And lacke not to looſe ſtill; thus Indian like
Religious in mine error, I adore
The Sunne that lookes upon his worſhipper,
But knowes of him no more. My deereſt Madam,
Let not your hate incounter with my love
For loving where you doe; but if your ſelfe,
Whoſe aged honor cites a vertuous youth,
Did ever, in ſo true a flame of living,
Wiſh chaſtly, and love deerely, that your Dian
Was both her ſelfe and love, O then give pitty
To her whoſe ſtate is ſuch, that cannot chooſe
But lend and give where ſhe is ſure to looſe;
That ſeekes not to finde that, ſearch implies,
But riddle like, lives ſweetely where ſhe dies.
Con. Had you not lately an intent, ſpeake truely,
To goe to Paris?
Hell. Madame I had.
Con. Wherefore? tell true.
Hell. I will tell true, by grace it ſelfe I ſweare:
You know my Father left me ſome preſcriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects, ſuch as his reading
And manifeſt experience, had collected
For generall ſoveraigntie: and that he will'd me
In heedefull'ſt reſervation to beſtow them,
As notes, whoſe faculties incluſive were,
More then they were in note: Amongſt the reſt,
There is a remedie, approv'd, ſet downe,
To cure the deſperate languiſhings whereof
The King is render'd loſt.
Con. This was your motive for Paris, was it, ſpeake?
Hell. My Lord, your ſonne, made me to thinke of this;
Elſe Paris, and the medicine, and the King,
Had from the converſation of my thoughts,
Happily beene abſent then.
Con. But thinke you Hellen,
If you ſhould tender your ſuppoſed aide,
He would receive it? He and his phiſitions
Are of a minde; he, that they cannot helpe him:
They, that they cannot helpe, how ſhall they credit
A poore unlearned Virgin, when the Schooles
Embowel'd of their doctrine, have lef off
The danger to it ſelfe.
Hell. There's ſomething in't
More then my Fathers skill, which was the great'ſt
Of his profeſſion, that his good receipt,
Shall for my legacie be ſanctified
Byth' luckieſt ſtars in heaven, and would your honor
But give me leave to ſucceſſe, I'de venture
The well loſt life of mine, on his Graces cure,
by ſuch a day, and houre.
Con. Doo'ſt thou beleeve't?
Hel. I Madam knowingly.
Con. Why Hellen thou ſhalt have my leave and love,
Meanes and attendants, and my loving greetings
To thoſe of mine in Court, Ile ſtay at home
And pray Gods bleſſing into thy attempt:
Begon to morrow, and be ſure of this;
What I can helpe thee to, thou ſhalt not miſſe. Exeunt.

Actus Sæcundus.

Enter the King with divers young Lords, taking leave for the Florentine warre: Count Roſſe, and Parrolles. Floriſh Cornets.

King. Farewell yong Lords, theſe warlike principles
Doe not throw from you, and you my Lords farewell:
Share the advice betwixt you, if both gaine, all
The guift doth ſtretch it ſelfe as 'tis receiv'd,
And is enough for both.
Lord.G. 'Tis our hope ſir,

Aſke

After wellentred ſouldiers, to returne
And finde your grace in health.
King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confeſſe he owes the mallady
That doth my life beſiege: farwell yong Lords,
Whether I live or die, be you the ſonnes
Of worthy French men: let higher Italy
(Thoſe bated that inherit but the fall
Of the laſt Monarchy) ſee that you come
Not to wooe honour, but to wed it, when
The braveſt queſtion ſhrinkes: finde what you ſeeke,
That fame may cry you loud: I ſay farewell.
L.G. Health at your bidding ſerue your Maieſty.
King. Thoſe girles of Italy, take heed of them,
They ſay our French, lacke language to deny
If they demand: beware of being Captiues
Before you ſerue.
Bo. Our hartes receiue your warnings.
King. Farewell, come hether to me. (ns.
1.Lo.G. Oh my ſweet Lord that you will ſtay behind
Parr. 'Tis not his fault the ſparke.
2.Lo.E. Oh'tis braue warres.
Parr. Moſt admirable, I haye ſeene thoſe warres.
Roſſill. I am commanded here, and kept acoyle with,
Too young, and the next yeere, and'tis too early.
Parr. And thy minde ſtand too't boy,
Steale away brauely.
Roſſill. I ſhall ſtay here the for-horſe to a ſmocke,
Creeking my ſhooes on the plaine Maſonry,
Till honour be bought up, and no ſword worne
But one to dance with: by heauen, Ile ſteale away.
1.Lo.G. There's honour in the theft.
Parr. Commit it Count.
2.Lo.E. I am your acceſſary, and ſo farewell.
Roſ. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortur'd body.
1.Lo.G. Farewell Captaine.
2.Lo.E. Sweet Monſier Parolles.

Par. Noble Heroes; my ſword and yours are kinne, good ſparkes and luſtrous, a word good mettals. You ſhall finde in the Regiment of the Spinij, one Captaine Spurio his Cicatrice, with an Embleme of warre heere on his ſiniſter cheeke; it was this very ſword entrench'd it: ſay to him I live, and obſerue his reports for me.

Lo.G. We ſhall noble Captaine.

Par. Mars doate on you for his novices, what will ye doe?

Roſſ. Stay: the King.

Par. Vſe a more ſpacious ceremonie to the Noble Lords, you have reſtrain'd your ſelfe within the Liſt of too cold an adieu: be more expreſſive to them; for they weare themſelves in the cap of the time, there do muſter true gate; eat, ſpeake, and more under the influence of the moſt receiv'd ſtarre, and though the divell leade the meaſure, ſuch are to be followed: after them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Roſſ. And I will doe ſo.

Par. Worthy felllowes, and like to proove moſt ſinewie ſword-men. Exeunt.

Enter Lafew.

L.Laf. Pardon my Lord for me and for my tidings.
King. Ile ſee thee to ſtand up. (pardon,
L.Laf. Then heres a man ſtands that hath brought his
I would you had kneel'd my Lord to aske me mercy,
And that at my bidding you could ſo ſtand up.
King. I would I had, ſo I had broke thy pate
And askt thee mercy for't.
Laf. Goodfaith a-croſſe, but my good Lord 'tis thus,
Will you be cur'd of your infirmity?
King. No.
Laf. O will you eate no grapes my royall foxe?
Yes but you will, my noble grapes, and if
My royall foxe could reach them: I have ſeene a medicine
That's able to breathe life into a ſtone,
Quicken a rocke, and make you dance Canary
With ſprightly fire and motion, whoſe ſimple touch
Is powerfull to arayſe King Pippen, nay
To give great Charlemaine a pen in's hand
And write to her a love-line.
Kin. What her is this?
Laf. Why doctor ſhe: my Lord, there's one arriv'd,
If you will ſee her: now by my faith and honour,
If ſeriouſly I may convoy my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have ſpoke
With one, that in her ſexe, her yeeres, profeſſion,
Wiſedome and conſtancy, hath amaz'd me more
Then I dare blame my weakeneſſe: wil you ſee her?
For that is her demand, and know her buſineſſe?
That done, laugh well at me.
King. Now good Lafew.
Bring in the admiration, that we with thee
May ſpend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wondring how thou took'it it.
Laf. Nay, Ile fit you,
And not be all day neither.
King. Thus he his ſpeciall nothing ever prologues.
Laf. Nay, come your wayes.

Enter Hellen.

King. This haſte hath wings indeed.
Laf. Nay, come your wayes,
This is his Majeſtie, ſay your minde to him,
A traitor you doe looke like, but ſuch traitors
His Majeſtie ſeldome feares, I am Creſſeds Vncle,
That dare leave two together, fare you well. Exit.
King. Now faire one, do's your buſines follow us?
Hel. I my good Lord.
Gerard de Narbon was my father,
In what he did profeſſe, well found.
King. I knew him.
Hel. The rather will I ſpare my praiſes towards him,
Knowing him is enough: on's bed of death,
Many receits he gave me, chieflie one,
Which as the deareſt iſſue of his practice
And of his old experience, th'onelie darling,
He bad me ſtore up, as a triple eye,
Safer then mine owne two: more deare I have ſo,
And hearing your high Majeſtie is toucht
With that malignant cauſe, wherein the honour
Of my deere fathers gift, ſtands cheefe in power,
I come to tender it, and my appliance,
With all bound humbleneſſe.
King. We thanke you maiden,
But may not be ſo credulous of cure,
When our moſt learned Doctors leave us, and
The congregated Colledge have concluded,
That labouring art can never ranſome nature
From her inaydible eſtate: I ſay we muſt not
So ſtaine our judgement, or corrupt our hope,
To proſtitute our paſt-cure malladie
To empericks, or to diſſever ſo
Our great ſelfe and our credit, to eſteeme
A ſenceleſſe helpe, when helpe paſt ſence we deeme.

Hel. My

Hell. My dutie then ſhall pay me for my paines:
I will no more enforce my office on you,
Humbly intreating from your royall thoughts,
A modeſt one to beare me backe againe.
King. I cannot give thee leſſe to be cal'd gratefull:
Thou thoughtſt to helpe me, and ſuch thankes I give,
As one neer death to thoſe that wiſh him live:
But what at full I know, thou knowſt no part,
I knowing all my perill, thou no Art.
Hell. What I can doe, can doe no hurt to try,
Since you ſet up your reſt 'gainſt remedie:
He that of greateſt workes is finiſher.
Oft does them by the weakeſt miniſter:
So holy Writ, in babes hath judgement ſhowne,
When Iudges have bin babes; great flouds have flowne
From ſimple ſources: and great Seas have dried
When Miracles have by the great'ſt beene denied.
Oft expectation failes, and moſt oft there
Where moſt it promiſes: and oft it hits,
Where hope is coldeſt, and deſpaire moſt ſhifts.
King. I muſt not heare thee, fare thee well kind maide,
Thy paines not us'd, muſt by thy ſelfe be paid,
Proffers not tooke, reape thankes for their reward.
Hell. Inſpired Merit ſo by breath is bard,
It is not ſo with him that all things knowes
As 'tis with us, that ſquare our gueſſe by ſhowes:
But moſt it is preſumption in us, when
The helpe of heaven we count the act of men.
Deare ſir, to my endeavors give conſent,
Of heaven, not me, make an experiment.
I am not an Impoſtrue, that proclaime
My ſelfe againſt the levill of mine aime,
But know I thinke, and thinke I know moſt ſure,
My Art is not paſt power, nor you paſt cure.
King. Art thou ſo confident? Within what ſpace
Hop'ſt thou my cure?
Hel. The greateſt grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horſes of the ſunne ſhall bring
Their firie torcher his diurnall ring.
Ere twice in murke and occidentall dampe
Moiſt Heſperus hath quench'd her ſleepy Lampe:
Or foure and twentie times the Pylots glaſſe
Hath told the theeviſh minutes, how they paſſe:
What is infirme, from your ſound parts ſhall flie,
Health ſhall live free, and ſickneſſe freely dye.
King. Vpon thy certainety and confidence,
What dar'ſt thou venture?
Hel. Taxe of impudence,
A ſtrumpets boldneſſe, a divulged ſhame
Traduc'd by odious ballads: my maidens name
Seard otherwiſe, no worſe of worſt extended
With vildeſt torture, let my life be ended.
Kin. Me thinkes in thee ſome bleſſed ſpirit doth ſpeak
His powerfull ſound, wherein an organ weake:
And what impoſſibility would ſlay
In common ſenſe, ſence ſaves another way:
Thy life is deere, for all that life can rate
Worth name of life, in thee hath eſtimate:
Youth, beauty, wiſedome, courage, all
That happineſſe and prime, can happie call;
Thou this to hazard, needs muſt intimate
Skill infinite, or monſtrous deſperate:
Sweet practiſer, thy Phyſicke I will try,
That miniſters thine owne death if I die.
Hel. If I breake time, or flinch in propertie
Of what I ſpoke, unpittied let me die,
And well deſeru'd: not helping, death's my fee,
But if I helpe, what doe you promiſe me.
Kin. Make thy demand.
Hel. But will you make it even?
Kin. I by my Scepter, and my hopes of helpe.
Hel. Then ſhalt thou give me with thy kingly hand
What huband in thy power I will command.:
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To chooſe from forth the royall bloud of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy ſtate:
But ſuch a one thy vaſſall, whom I know
Is free for me to aske, thee to beſtow.
Kin. Here is my hand, the premiſes obſerv'd,
Thy will by my performance ſhall be ſerv'd:
So make the choice of thine owne time, for I
Thy reſolv'd Patient, on thee ſtill relye:
More ſhould I queſtion thee, and more I muſt,
Though more to know, could not be more to truſt:
From whence thou cam'ſt, how tended on, but reſt
Vnqueſtion'd welcome, and undoubted bleſt.
Give me ſome helpe here hoa, if thou proceed,
As high as word, my deed ſhall match thy deed.
Exeunt.

Enter Counteſſe and Clowne.

Lady. Come on ſir, I ſhall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clown. I will ſhew my ſelfe highly fed, and lowly taught, I know my buſineſſe is but to the Court.

Lady. To the Court, why what place make you ſpeciall, when you put off that with ſuch contempt, but to the Court?

Clo. Truly Madam, if God have lent a man any manners, hee may eaſilie put it off at Court: he that cannot make a legge, put off's cap, kiſſe his hand, and ſay nothing, has neither legge, hands, lippe, nor cap; and indeed ſuch a fellow, to ſay preciſely, were not for the Court, but for me, I have an anſwere will ſerve all men.

Lady. Marry that's a bountifull anſwere that fits all queſtions.

Clo. It is like a Barbers chaire that fits all buttockes, the pin buttocke, the quatch-buttocke, the brawn buttocke, or any buttocke.

Lady. Will your anſwere ſerve fit to all queſtions?

Clo. As fit as ten groates is for the hand of an Atturney, as your French Crowne for your taffety punke, as Tibs ruſh for Toms forefinger, as a pancake for Shrovetueſday, a Morris for May-day, as the naile to his hole, the Cuckold to his horne, as a ſcolding queane to a wrangling knave, as the Nuns lip to the Friers mouth, nay as the pudding to his skin.

Lady. Have you, I ſay, an anſwer of ſuch fitneſſe for all queſtions?

Clo. From below your Duke, to beneath your Conſtable, it will fit any queſtion.

Lady. It muſt bee an anſwere of moſt monſtrous ſize, that muſt fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither in good faith, if the learned ſhould ſpeake truth of it: heere it is, and all that belongs to't. Aske mee if I am a Courtier, it ſhall doe you no harme to learne.

Lady. To bee young againe if we could: I will bee a foole in queſtion, hoping to bee the wiſer by your anſwer.

La. I pray you ſir, are you a Courtier?

Clo. O Lord ſir theres a ſimple putting off: more, more, a hundred of them.

La. Sir I am a poore friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord ſir, thicke, thicke, ſpare not me.

La. I thinke ſir, you can eate none of this homely meate.

Clo. O Lord ſir; nay put me too't, I warrant you.

La. You were lately whipt ſir as I thinke.

Clo. O Lord ſir, ſpare not me.

La. Doe you cry O Lord ſir at your whipping, and ſpare not me? Indeed your O Lord ſir, is very ſequent to your whipping: you would anſwere very well to a whipping if you were but bound too't.

Clo. I ne're had worſe lucke in my life in my O Lord ſir: I ſee things may ſerue long, but not ſerve ever.

La. I play the noble huſwife with the time, to entertaine it ſo merrily with a foole.

Clo. O Lord ſir, why there't ſerves well agen.

La. And end ſir to your buſineſſe: give Hellen this,
And urge her to a preſent anſwer backe,
Commend me to my kinſmen, and my ſonne,
This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

La. Not much imployment for you, you underſtand me.

Clo. Moſt fruitfully, I am there, before my legges.

La. Haſt you agen. Exeunt.

Enter Count, Laſew, and Parolles.

Ol.Laf. They ſay miracles are paſt, and we have our Philoſophicall perſons, to make moderne and familiar things ſupernaturall and cauſeleſſe. Hence is it, that wee make trifles of terrours, enſconcing our ſelves into ſeeming knowledge, when we ſhould ſubmit our ſelves to an unknowne feare.

Par. Why 'tis the rareſt argument of wonder, that hath ſhot out in our latter times.

Roſ. And ſo 'tis.

Ol. Laf. To be relinquiſht of the Artiſts.

Par. So I ſay both of Galen and Paracelſus.

Ol.Fal. Of all the learned and authenticke fellowes.

Par. Right ſo I ſay.

Ol.Laf. That gave him out incureable.

Par. Why there 'tis, ſo ſay I too.

Ol.Laf. Not to be help'd.

Par. Right, as 'twere a man aſſur'd of a———

Ol. Laf. Vncertaine life, and ſure death.

Par. Iuſt you ſay well: ſo would I have ſaid.

Ol.Laf. I may truely ſay, it is a noveltie to the world.

Par. It is indeed if you will have it in ſhewing, you ſhall reade it in what do ye call there.

Ol. Laf. A ſhewing of a heavenly effect in an earthly Actor.

Par. That's it, I would have ſaid, the very ſame.

Ol.Laf. Why your Dolphin is not luſtier: for mee I ſpeake in reſpect———

Par. Nay 'tis ſtrange, 'tis very ſtrange, that is the breefe and the tedious of it, and he's of a moſt facinerious ſpirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the———

Ol.Laf. Very hand of heaven.

Par. I, ſo I ſay.

Ol.Laf. In a moſt weake———

Par. And debile miniſter great power, great trancendence, which ſhould indeed give us a further uſe to be made, then onely the recou'ry of the king, as to be———

Ol.Laf. Generally thankefull.

Enter King, Hellen, and attendants.

Par. I would have ſaid it, you ſaid well: heere comes the King.

Ol.Laf. Luſtique, as the Dutchman ſayes: Ile like a maide the better while I have a tooth in my head: why he's able to leade her a Carranto.

Par. Mor du vinager, is not this Helen?

Ol. Laf. Fore God I thinke ſo.

King. Goe call before me all the Lords in Court,
Sit my preſeruer by thy patients ſide,
And with this healthfull hand whoſe baniſht ſence
Thou haſt repeal'd, a ſecond time receyue
The confirmation of my promis'd guift,
Which but attends thy naming.

Enter 3 or 4 Lords.

Fairs Maide ſend forth thine eye, this youthfull parcell
Of Noble Batchellors, ſtand at my beſtowing,
Ore whom both Soueraigne power, and fathers voice
I have to vſe; thy franke election make,
Thou haſt power to chooſe, and they none to forſake.

Hel. To each of you, one faire and vertuous Miſtris;
Fall when love pleaſe, marry to each but one.

Old Fal. I'de give bay curtall, and his furniture,
My mouth no more were broken then theſe boyes,
And writ as little beard.

King. Peruſe them well:
Not one of thoſe, but had a Noble father.

She addreſſes her to a Lord.

Hel. Gentlemen, heaven hath through mee, reſtor'd the king to health.

All. We underſtand it, and thanke heaven for you.

Hel. I am a ſimple Maide, and therein wealthieſt
That I proteſt, I ſimply am a maide:
Pleaſe it your majeſtie, I have done already:
The bluſhes in my cheekes thus whiſper me,
We bluſh that thou ſhouldſt chooſe, but be refuſed;
Let the white death ſit on thy cheeke for ever,
Wee'l neere come there againe.

King. Make choiſe and ſee,
Who ſhuns thy love, ſhuns all his love in me.

Hel. Now Dian from thy Altar do I fly,
And to imperiall Iove, that God moſt high
Do my ſighes ſtreame: Sir, will you heare my ſuite?

1. Lo. And graunt it.

Hel. Thankes ſir, all the reſt is mute.

Ol.Laf. I had rather be in this choiſe, then throw
A deauſ-ace for my life.

Hel. The honour ſir that flames in your faire eyes,
Before I ſpeake too threatingly replyes:
Love make your fortunes twentie times above
Her that ſo wiſhes, and her humble love.

2. Lo. No better if you pleaſe.

Hel. My wiſh receive,
Which great love grant, and ſo I take my leave.

Ol.Laf. Do all they denie her? And they were ſons of mine, I'de have them whip'd, or I would ſend them to'th Turke to make Eunuches of.

Hel. Be not afraid that I your hand ſhould take,
Ile never do you wrong for your owne ſake:
Bleſſing upon your vowes, and in your bed
Finde fairer fortune, if you ere wed.

Old Laf. Theſe boyes are boyes of Ice, they'le none have her: ſure they are baſtards to the Engliſh, the French ne're got em.

La. You are to young, too happie, and too good
To make your ſelfe a ſonne out of my blood.

4. Lord. Faire one, I thinke not ſo.

Ol. Lord. There's one grape yet, I am ſure my father drunke wine. But if thou be'ſt not an aſſe, I am a youth of fourteene: I have knowne thee already.

Hel. I dare not ſay I take you, but I give Me and my ſervice, ever whilſt I live
Into your guiding power: This is the man.

King. Why then young Bertram take her ſhee's thy wife.

Ber. My wife my Leige? I ſhall beſeech your highneſſe
In ſuch a buſines, give me leave to uſe
The helpe of mine owne eyes.

King. Know'ſt thou not Bertram what ſhee ha's done for me?

Ber. Yes my good Lord, but never hope to know why I ſhould marrie her.

King. Thou know'ſt ſhee ha's rais'd mee from my sickly bed.

Ber. But followes it my Lord, to bring me downe
Muſt anſwer for your raiſing? I know her well:
Shee had her breeding at my fathers charge:
A poore Phyſitians daughter my wife? Diſdaine
Rather corrupt me ever.

King. Tis onely title thou diſdainſt in her, the which
I can build up: ſtrange is it that our bloods
Of colour, waight, and heat; pour'd all together,
Would quite confound diſtinction: yet ſtands off
In differences of mightie. If ſhe be
All that is vertuous (ſave what thou diſlik'ſt)
A poore phyſitians daughter, thou diſlik'ſt
Of vertue for the name: but doe not ſo:
From loweſt place, whence vertuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by th'doers deede.
Where great addition ſwell's, and vertue none,
It is a drupſied honour, Good a lone,
Is good without a name? Vileneſſe is ſo:
The propertie by what it is, ſhould go,
Not by the title. She is young, wiſe, faire,
In theſe, to Nature ſhe's immediate heire:
And theſe breed honour: that is honours ſcorne,
Which challenges it ſelfe as honours borne,
And is not like the ſire: Honours beſt thriue,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Then our fore-goers: the meere word's a ſlave
Deboſh'd on every tombe, on every grave:
A lying Trophee, and as oft is dumbe,
Where duſt, and damn'd oblivion is the Tombe.
Of honour'd bones indeed, what ſhould be ſaid?
If thou canſt like this creature, as a maide,
I can create the reſt: Vertue, and ſhee
Is her owne dower: Honour and wealth, from me.

Ber. I cannot love her, nor will ſtrive to doo't.

King. Thou wrong'ſt thy ſelfe, if thou ſhould'ſt ſtrive to chooſe.

Hel. That you are well reſtor'd my Lord, I'me glad;
Let the reſt go.

King. My Honor's at the ſtake, which to defeate
I muſt produce my power. Heere, take her hand,
Proud ſcornefull boy, unworthie this good gift,
That doſt in vile miſpriſion ſhackle up
My love, and her deſert: that canſt not dreame,
We poizing us in her defective ſcale,
Shall weigh thee to the beame: That wilt not know,
It is in Vs to plant thine Honour, where
We pleaſe to have it grow. Checke thy contempt:
Obey Our will, which travailes in thy good:
Beleeve not thy diſdaine, but preſently
Do thine owne fortunes that obedient right
Which both thy dutie owes, and our power claimes.
Or I will through thee from my care for ever
Into the ſtaggers and careleſſe lapſe
Of youth and ignorance: both my revenge and hate
Looſing upon thee, in the name of juſtice,
Without all termes of pitty. Speake, thine anſwer.

Ber. Pardon my gracious Lord: for I ſubmit
My fancie to your eyes, when I conſider
What great creation, and what dole of honour
Flies where you bid it: I finde that ſhe which late
Was in my nobler thoughts, moſt baſe: is now
The praiſed of the King, who ſo ennobled,
Is as 'twere borne ſo.

King. Take her by the hand.
Aud tell her ſhe is thine: to whom I promiſe
A counterpoize: If not in thy eſtate,
A ballance more repleat.

Ber. I take her hand.

Kin. Good fortune, and the favour of the King
Smile upon the contract: whoſe Ceremonie
Shall ſeeme expedient on the now borne briefe,
And be perform'd to night: the ſolemne Feaſt
Shall more attend upon the coming ſpace,
Expecting abſent friends. As thou lov'ſt her,
Thy love's to me Religious: elſe, do's erre Exeunt.

Parolles and Lafew ſtay behind, commenting of this wedding.

Laf. Doe you heare Monſieur? A word with you.

Par. Your pleaſure ſir.

Laf. Your Lord and Maſter did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation? My Lord? my maſter?

Laf. I: Is it not a Language I ſpeake?

Par. A moſt harſh one, and not to be underſtood without bloudie ſucceeding. My Maſter?

Laf. Are you companion to the count Roſillion?

Par. To any Count, to all Counts: to what is man.

Laf. To what is counts man: Counts maiſter is of another ſtile.

Par. You are too old ſir: Let it ſatisfie you, you are too old.

Laf. I muſt tell thee ſirrah, I write Man: to which title age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did thinke thee for two ordinaries: to bee a pretie wiſe fellow, thou didſt make tollerable vent of thy travel, it might paſſe: yet the ſcarffes and the bannerets about thee, did manifoldly diſſwade me from beleeving thee a veſſell of too great a burthen. I have now found thee, when I loſe thee againe, I care not: yet art thou good for nothing but taking up, and that th'ourt ſcarce worth.

Par. Hadſt thou not the priviledge of Antiquitie upon thee,

Laf. Doe not plunge thy ſelfe too farre in anger, leaſt thou haſten thy triall: which if, Lord have mercie on thee for a hen, ſo my good window of Lattice fare thee well, thy caſement I neede not open, for I looke through the. Give me thy hand.

Par. My Lord, you give me moſt egregious indignity.

Laf. I with all my heart, and thou art worthy of it.

Par. I have not my Lord deſerv'd it.

Laſ. Yes good faith, ev'ry dramme of it, and I will not bate thee a ſcruple.

Par. Well, I ſhall be wiſer.

Laf. Ev'n as ſoone as thou can'ſt, for thou haſt to pull at a ſmacke a'th contrarie. If ever thou bee'ſt bound in thy skarfe and beaten, thou ſhalt finde what it is to be proud of thy bondage, I have a deſire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may ſay in the default, he is a man I know.

Par. My Lord you do me moſt inſupportble vexation.

Laf. I would it were hell paines for thy ſake, and my poore doing eternall: for doing I am paſt, as I will by thee, in what motion age will giue me leave. Exit.

Par. Well, thou haſt a ſonne ſhall take this diſgrace off me; ſcuruy, old, filthy, ſcuruy Lord: Well, I muſt be patient, there is no fettering of authoritie. Ile beate him (by my life) if I can meete him with any convenience, and he were double and double a Lord. Ile have no more pittie of his age then I would have of ——Ile beate him, and if I could but meet him agen.

Enter Lafew.

Laf. Sirra, your Lord and Maſter's married, there's newes for you: you have a new Miſtris.

Par. I moſt unfainedly beſeech your Lordſhippe to make ſome reſervation of your wrongs. He is my good Lord, whom I ſerue above is my Maſter.

Laf. Who? God.

Par. I ſir.

Laf. The divell it is, that's thy maſter. Why dooeſt thou garter up thy armes a this faſhion? Doſt make hoſe of thy ſleeves? Do other ſervants ſo? Thou wert beſt ſet thy lower part where thy noſe ſtands. By mine Honour, if I were but two houres yonger, I'de beate thee: meethink'ſt thou art a generall offence, and every man ſhould beate thee: I thinke thou waſt created for men to breathe themſelves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeſerved meaſure my Lord.

Laf. Go to ſir, you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernell out of a Pomgranat, you are a vagabond, and no true traveller: you are more ſawcie with Lords and honourable perſonages, then the Commiſſion of your birth and vertue gives you Heraldry. You are not worth another word, elſe I'de call you knave. I leave you. Exit.

Enter Count Roſſillion.

Par. Good, very good, it is ſo then: good, very good, let it be conceal'd awhile.

Roſ. Vndone, and forfeited to cares for ever.

Par. What's the matter ſweet-heart?

Roſſill. Although before the ſolemne Prieſt I have ſworne, I will not bed her.

Par. What? what ſweet heart?

Roſ. O my Parrolles, they have married me:
Ile to the Tuſcan warres, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits,
The tread of a mans foot: too'th warres.

Roſ. There's letters from my mother: What th'import is, I know not yet.

Par. I that would be knowne: too'th warres my boy, too'th warres:
He weares his honour in a boxe unſeene,
That hugges his kickſie wickſie here at home,
Spending his manlie marrow in her armes
Which ſhould ſuſtaine the bound and high curvet
Of Marſes fierie ſteed: to other Regions,
France is a ſtable, we that dwell in't Iades,
Therefore too'th warre.

Roſ. It ſhall be ſo, Ile ſend her to my houſe,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,
And wherefore I am fled: Write to the King
That which I durſt not ſpeake. His preſent gift
Shall furniſh me to thoſe Italian fields
Where noble fellowes ſtrike: Warre is no ſtrife
To the darke houſe, and the detected wife.

Par. Will this Caprichio hold in thee, art ſure?

Roſ. Go with me to my chamber, and advize me.
Ile ſend her ſtraight away: To morrow;
Ile to the warres, ſhe to her ſingle ſorrow.

Par. Why theſe bals bound, ther's noiſe in it. Tis hard
A young man married, is a man that's mard:
Therefore away, and leave her bravely: go,
The King ha's done you wrong: but huſh 'tis ſo, Exit.

Enter Helena and Clowne.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly, is ſhe well?

Clo. She is not well, but yet ſhe has her health, ſhe's very merrie, but yet ſhe is not well: but thankes be given ſhe's very well, and wants nothing i'th world: but yet ſhe is not well.

Hel. If ſhe be very well, what do's ſhe ayle, that ſhe's not very well?

Clo. Truly ſhe's very well indeed, but for two things.

Hel. What two things?

Clo. One that ſhe is not in heaven, whither God ſend her quickly: the other, that ſhe's in earth, from whence God ſend her quickly.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Bleſſe you my fortunate Ladie.

Hel. I hope ſir I have your good will to have mine owne good fortune.

Par. You had my prayers to leade them on, and to keepe them on, have them ſtill. O my knaue, how do's my old Ladie?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles and I her money,
I would ſhe did as you ſay.

Par. Why I ſay nothing.

Clo. Marry you are the wiſer man: for many a mans tongue ſhakes out his maſters undoing: to ſay nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title, which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away, th'art a knaue.

Clo. You ſhould have ſayd ſir before a knave, th'art a knave, that's before me th'art a knaue: this had beene truth ſir.

Par. Go to, thou art a wittie foole, I have found thee.

Clo. Did you finde me in your ſelfe ſir, or were you taught to finde me?

Clo. The ſearch ſir was profitable, and much Foole may you find in you, even to the worlds pleaſure, and the encreaſe of laughter.

Par. A good knave i faith, and well fed.
Madam, my Lord will go away to night,

A verie ſerrious buſineſſe call's on him:
The great prerogative and rite of love,
Which as your due time claimes, he do's acknowledge,
But puts it off to a compell'd reſtraint:
Whoſe want, and whoſe delay, is ſtrew'd with ſweets
Which they diſtill now in the curbed time,
To make the comming houre oreflow with joy,
And pleaſure drowne the brim.
Hel. What's his will elſe?
Par. That you will take your inſtant leave a'th king,
And make this haſt as your owne good proceeding,
Strengthned with what Apologie you thinke
May make it probable neede.
Hel. What more commands hee?
Par. That having this obtain'd, you preſently
Attend his further pleaſure.
Hel. In every thing I waite upon his will.
Par. I ſhall report it ſo. Exit Par.
Hell. I pray you come ſirrah. Exit.

Enter Lafew and Bertram.

Laf. But I hope your Lordſhippe thinkes not him a ſouldier.

Ber. Yes my Lord, and of verie valiant approofe.

Laf. You have it from his owne deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted teſtimonie.

Laf. Then my Diall goes not true, I tooke this Larke for a bunting.

Ber. I do aſſure you my Lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then ſinn'd againſt his experience, and tranſgreſt againſt his valour, and my ſtate that way is dangerous, ſince I cannot find in my hart to repent: Heere he comes, I pray you make us friends, I will purſue the amitie.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Theſe things ſhalll be done ſir.

Laf. Pray you ſir who's his Tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O I know him well, I ſir, he ſir's a good workeman, a very good Tailor.

Ber. Is ſhe gone to the king?

Par. Shee is.

Ber. Will ſhe away to night?

Par. As you'le have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, casketted my treaſure,
Given order for our horſe, and to night,
When I ſhould take poſſeſſion of the Bride,
And ere I do begin.

Laf. A good travailer is ſome thing at the latter end of a dinner, but on that lies three thirds, and uſes a knowne truth to paſſe a thouſand nothings with, ſhould be once heard, and thrice beaten. God ſave your Captaine.

Ber. Is there any unkindneſſe betweene my Lord and you Monſieur?

Par. I know not how I have deſerved to run into my Lords diſpleaſure.

Laf. You have made ſhift to run into't, bootes and ſpurres and all: like him that leapes into the Cuſtard, and out of it you'le runne againe, rather then ſuffer queſtion for your reſidence.

Ber. It may be you have miſtaken him my Lord.

Laf. And ſhall doe ſo ever, though I tooke him at's prayers. Fare you well my Lord, and beleeve this of me, there can be no kernell in this light Nut: the ſoule of this man is his cloathes: Truſt him not in matter of heavie conſequence: I have kept of them tame, and know their natures. Farewell Monſieur, I have ſpoken better of you, then you have or will deſerve at my hand, but we muſt do good againſt evill.

Par. An idle Lord, I ſweare.

Ber. I thinke ſo.

Par. Why do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well, and common ſpeech
Gives him a worthy paſſe. Here comes my clog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have ſir as I was commanded from you
Spoke with the King, and have procur'd his leave
For preſent parting, onely he deſires
Some private ſpeech with you.
Ber. I ſhall obay his will.
You muſt muſt not mervaile Helen at my courſe,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The miniſtration, and required office
On my particular. Prepar'd I was not
For ſuch a buſineſſe, therefore am I found
So much unſetled: This drives me to intreate you,
That preſently you take your way for home,
And rather muſe then aske why I intreate you,
For my reſpects are better then they ſeeme,
And my appointments have in them a neede
Greater then ſhewes it ſelfe at the firſt view,
To you that know them not. This to my mother,
'Twill be two daies ere I ſhall ſee you, ſo
I leave you to your wiſedome.
Hel. Sir, I can nothing ſay,
But that I am your moſt obedient ſervant.
Ber. Come, come, no more of that.
Hel. And ever ſhall
With true obſervance ſeeke to eeke out that
Wherein toward me my homely ſtarres have faild
To equall my great fortune.
Ber. Let that goe: my haſte is very great. Farewell:
Hie home.
Hel. Pray ſir your Pardon.
Ber. Well, what would you ſay?
Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,
Nor dare I ſay 'tis mine: and yet it is,
But like a timorous theefe, moſt faine would ſteale
What law does vouch mine owne.
Ber. What would you have?
Hel. Something, and ſcarſe ſo much: nothing indeed,
I would not tell you what I would my Lord: Faith yes,
Strangers and foes doe ſunder, and not kiſſe.
Ber. I pray you ſtay not, but in haſt to horſe,
Hel. I ſhall not breake your bidding, good my Lord:
Where are my other men? Monſieur: farewell. Exit.
Ber. Go thou toward home, where I will never come,
Whil'ſt I can ſhake my ſword, or heare the drumme:
A way, and for our flight.
Par. Bravely, Coragio.

Actus Tertius.

Flouriſh. Enter the Duke of Florence, the two Frenchmen, with a troope of Souldiers.

Duke. So that from point to point, now have you heard

The fundamentall reaſons of this warre,
Whoſe great deciſion hath much blood let forth
And more thirſts after.

1. Lord. Holy ſeemes the quarrell
Vpon your Graces part: blacke and fearefull
On the oppoſer.

Duk. Therefore we mervaile much our Coſin France
Would in ſo juſt a buſineſſe, ſhut his boſome
Againſt our borrowing prayers.

French E. Good my Lord,
The reaſons of our ſtate I cannot yeelde,
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a Counſaile frames,
By ſelfe unable motion, therefore dare not
Say what I thinke of it, ſince I have found
My ſelfe in my incertaine grounds to faile
As often as I gueſt.

Du. Be it his pleaſure.

Fre. G. But I am ſure the yonger of our nature,
That ſurfet on their eaſe, will day by day
Come heere for Phyſicke.

Du. Welcome ſhall they bee:
And all the honors that can flye from us,
Shall on them ſettle: you know your places well,
When better fall, for your availes they fell.
To morrow to the field.

Enter Counteſſe and Clowne.

Count. It hath happen'd all, as I would have had it, ſave that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth I take my young Lord to be a very melancholly man.

Cou. By what obſervance I pray you?

Clo. Why he will looke upon his boote, and ſing: mend the Ruffe and ſing, aske queſtions and ſing, picke his teeth, and ſing: I know a man that had this tricke of melancholy hold a goodly Mannor for a ſong.

Lad. Let me ſee what he writes, and when he meanes to come.

Clo. I have no mind to Isbell ſince I was at Court. Our old Ling and our Isbels a'th Country, are nothing like your old Ling & your Isbels a'th Court: the brains of my Cupid's knock'd out, and I beginne to love, as an old man loves money, with no ſtomacke.

Lad. What have we heere?

Clo. In that have you there. Exit.

A Letter.

I have ſent you a daughter-in-Law, ſhee hath recovered the King, and vndone me: I have wedded her, not bedded her, and ſworne to make the not eternall. You ſhall heare I am runne away, know it before the report come. If there be bredth enough in the world, I will hold a long diſtance. My duty to you.

Your vnfortunate ſonne,
Bertram.

This is not well (raſh and vnbridled boy,)
To flye the favours of ſo good a King,
To plucke his indignation on thy head,
By the miſpriſing of a Maide too vertuous
For the contempt of Empire.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. O Madam, yonder is heavy newes within between two ſouldiers, and my yong Lady.

La. What is the matter.

Clo. Nay there is ſome comfort in the newes, ſome comfort, your ſonne wil not be kild ſo ſoone as I thought he would.

La. Why ſhould he be kill'd?

Clo. So ſay I Madame, if he runne away, as I heare he does, the danger is in ſtanding too't, that's the loſſe of men, though it be the getting of children. Heere they come will tell you more. For my part I onely heare your ſonne was run away.

Enter Hellen and two Gentlemen.

French E. Save you good Madam.

Hel. Madam, my Lord is gone, for ever gone.

Fren. G. Do not ſay ſo.

La. Thinke upon patience, pray you Gentlemen,
I have felt ſo many quirkes of joy and greefe,
That the firſt face of neither on the ſtart
Can woman me vntoo't. Where is my ſonne I pray you?

Fren. G. Madam he's gone to ſerve the Duke of Florence,
We met him thitherward, for thence we came:
And after ſome diſpatch in hand at Court,
Thither we bend againe.

Hel. Looke on his Letter Madam, here's my Paſport.

When thou canſt get the Ring upon my finger, which never ſhall come off, and ſhew me a childe begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband: but in ſuch a (then) I write a Never.

This is a dreadfull ſentence.

La. Brought you this Letter Gentlemen?

1. G. I Madam, and for the Contents ſake are ſorry for our paines.

Old. La. I prethee Lady have a better cheere,
If thou engroſſeſt, all the greefes are thine,
Thou robſt me of a moity: He was my ſonne,
But I do waſh his name out of my blood,
And thou art all my childe. Towards Florence is he?

Fren. G. I Madam.

La. And to be a ſouldier!

Fren. G. Such is his noble purpoſe, and beleev't
The Duke will lay upon him all the honor
That good convenience claimes.

La. Returne you thither?

Fren. E. I Madam, with the ſwifteſt wing of ſpeed.

Hel. Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France,
'Tis better.

La. Finde you that there?

Hel. I Madame.

Fren. E. 'Tis but the boldnes o'his hand happily, which his heart was not conſenting too.

Lad. Nothing in France, untill he have no wife:
There's nothing heere that is too good for him
But onely ſhe, and ſhe deſerves a Lord
That twenty ſuch rude boyes might tend upon,
And call her hourely Miſtris. Who was with him?

Fren. E. A ſervant onely, and a Gentleman: which I have ſometime knowne.

La. Parolles was it not?

Fren. E. I my good Lady, hee.

La. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedneſſe,
My ſonne corrupts a well derived nature
With his inducement.

Fren. E. Indeed good Lady the fellow has a deale of that, too much, which holds him much to have.

La. Y'are welcome Gentlemen, I will intreate you when you ſee my ſonne, to tell him that his ſword can never winne the honor that he looſes: more Ile intreate you written to beare along.

Fren. G. We ſerve you Madam in that and all your worthieſt affaires.

La. Not ſo,but as we change our courteſies,
Will you draw neere? Exit.

Hel. Till I have no wiſe I have nothing in France.
Nothing in France untill he has no wife:
Thou ſhalt have none Roſſillion,none in France,
Then haſt thou all againe:poore Lord, is't I
That chaſe thee from thy Countrie, and expoſe
Thoſe tender limbes of thine, to the event
Of the none-ſparing warre? And is it I,
That drive thee from the ſportive Court,where thou
Was't ſhot at with faire eyes,to be the marke
Of ſmoakie Muskets? O you leaden meſſengers,
That ride upon the violent ſpeede of fire,
Fly with falſe ayme,move the ſtill-piercing aire
That ſtings with piercing, do not touch my Lord:
Who ever ſhoots at him, I ſet him there.
Who ever charges on his forward breſt,
I am the Caitiffe that do hold him too't,
And though I kill him not, I am the cauſe
His death was ſo effected:Better'twere
I met the ravine Lyon when he roar'd
With ſharpe conſtraint of hunger:better'twere,
That all the miſeries which nature owes
Were mine at once. No come thou home Roſſillion,
Whence honor but of danger winnes a ſcarre,
As oft it looſes all. I will be gone:
My being heere it is, that holds thee hence,
Shall I ſtay heere to doo't? No, no, although
The ayre of Paradiſe did fan the houſe,
And Angels offic'd all:I will be gone,
That pittifull rumour may report my flight
To conſolats thine eare. Come night, end day,
For with the darke(poore theefe)Ile ſteale away. Exit.

Flouriſh. Enter the Duke of Florence, Roſſillion, drum and trumpets,ſoldiers, Parrolles.

Duke. The Generall of our horſe thou art,and we
Great in our hope, lay our beſt love and credence
Vpon thy promiſing fortune.

Ber. Sir it is
A charge too heavy for my ſtrength, but
Wee'l ſtrive to beare it for your worthy ſake,
To th'extreme edge of hazard.

Du. Then go thou forth,
And fortune play upon thy proſperous helme
As thy auſpicious miſtris.

Ber. This very day
Great Mars I put my ſelfe into thy file,
Make me but like my thoughts, and I ſhall prove
A lover of thy drumme, hater of love. Exeunt omnes

Enter Counteſſe & Steward.

La. Alas!and would you take the letter of her:
Might you not know ſhe would do,as ſhe has done,
By ſending me a Letter. Reade it agen.

Letter.

I am S. Iaques Pilgrim,thither gone:
Ambitious love hath ſo in me offended,
That bare-foot plod I the cold ground upon
With ſainted vow my faults to have amended.
Write,write,that from the bloody courſe of warre,
My deereſt Maiſter your deare ſonne may hie,
Bleſſe him at home in peace. Whilſt I from farre,
His name with zealous fervour ſanctifie:
His taken labours bid him me forgive:
I his deſpightfull Iuno ſent him forth,
From Courtly friends,with Camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dogs the heeles of worth.
He is too good and faire for death,and me,
Whom I my ſelfe embrace,to ſet him free.

Ah what ſharpe ſtings are in her mildeſt words?
Rynardo, you did never lacke advice ſo much,
As letting her paſſe ſo:had I ſpoke with her,
I could have well diverted her intents,
Which thus ſhe hath prevented.

Ste. Pardon me Madam,
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have beene ore-tane:and yet ſhe writes
Purſuite would be but vaine.

La. What Angell ſhall
Bleſſe this unworthy husband,he cannot thrive,
Vnleſſe her prayers,whom heaven delights to heare
And loves to grant, repreeve him from the wrath
Of greateſt Iuſtice. Write, and write Rynaldo,
To this unworthy husband of his wife,
Let every word waigh heavy of her worth,
That he does waigh too light:my greateſt greefe,
Though little he doe feele it,ſet downe ſharpely.
Diſpatch the moſt convenient meſſenger,
When haply he ſhall heare that ſhe is gone,
He will returne, and hope I may that ſhee
Hearing ſo much,will ſpeed her foote againe,
Led hither by pure love:which of them both
Is deereſt to me,I have no skill in ſence
To make diſtinction:provide this Meſſenger:
My heart is heavy, and mine age is weake,
Greefe would have teares,and ſorrow bids me ſpeake.
Exeunt.

A Tucket afarre off.

Enter old Widdow of Florence, her daughter, Violenta and Mariana, with other Citizens.

Widdow. Nay come,
For if they do approach the Citty,
We ſhall looſe all the ſight.

Dia. They ſay,the French Count has done
Moſt honourable ſervice.

Wid. It is reported,
That he has taken their great'ſt Commander,
And that with his owne hand he ſlew
The Dukes brother : we haue loſt our labour,
They are gone a contrary way: harke,
You may know by their Trumpets.

Maria. Come lets returne againe,
And ſuffice our ſelves with the report of it.
Well Diana, take heed of this French Earle,
The honor of a Maide is her name,
And no Legacie is ſo rich
As honeſty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour
How you have beene ſolicited by a Gentleman
His Companion.

Maria. I know that knave, hang him, one Parrolles a filthy Officer he is in thoſe ſuggeſtions for the young Earle, beware of them Diana; their promiſes, entiſements, oathes, tokens, and all theſe engines of luſt, are not the things they go under: many a maide hath beene ſeduced by them, and the miſery is example, that ſo terrible ſhewes in the wracke of maiden-hood, cannot for all that diſſwade ſucceſſion, but that they are limed with the twigges that threatens them. I hope I neede not to adviſe you further, but I hope your owne grace will keepe you where you are, though there were no further danger knowne, but the modeſtie which is ſo loſt.

Dia. You ſhall not neede to feare me.

Enter Hellen.

Wid. I hope ſo: looke here comes a pilgrim, I know ſhe will lye at my houſe, thither they ſend one another, Ile queſtion her. God ſave you pilgrim, whither are you bound?

Hel. To S. Iaques la grand.
Where do the Palmers lodge, I do beſeech you?
Wid. At the S. Francis heere beſide the Port.
Hel. Is this the way? A march afarre.
Wid. I marry iſt. Harke you, they come this way:
If you will tarry holy Pilgrime,
But till the the troopes come by,
I will conduct you where you ſhall be lodg'd,
The rather for I thinke I know your hoſteſſe
As ample as my ſelfe.
Hel. Is it your ſelfe?
Wid. If you ſhall pleaſe ſo Pilgrime.
Hel. I thanke you, and will ſtay upon your leiſuure.
Wid. You came I thinke from France?
Hel. I did ſo.
Wid. Heere you ſhall ſee a Countriman of yours
That has done worthy ſervice.
Hel. His name I pray you?
Dia. The Count Roſſillion: know you ſuch a one?
Hel. But by the eare that heares moſt nobly of him:
His face I know not.
Dia. What ſomere he is
He's bravely taken heere. He ſtole from France
As 'tis reported: for the King had married him
Againſt his liking. Thinke you it is ſo?
Hel. I ſurely, meere the truth, I know his Lady.
Dia. There is a Gentleman that ſerves the Count,
Reports but courſely of her.
Hel. What's his name?
Dia. Monſieur Parrolles.
Hel. Oh I beleeve with him,
In argument of praiſe, or to the worth
Of the great Count himſelfe, ſhe is too meane
To have her name repeated, all her deſerving
Is a reſerved honeſty, and that
I have not heard examin'd.
Dia. Alas poore Lady,
'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife
Of a deteſting Lord.
Wid. I right good creature, whereſoere ſhe is,
Her hart waighes ſadly: this yong maid might do her
A ſhrewd turne if ſhe pleas'd.
Hel. How do you meane?
May be, the amorous Count ſolicites her
In the unlawfull purpoſe.
Wid. He does indeede,
And brokes with all that can in ſuch a ſuite
Corrupt the tender honour of a Maide:
But ſhe is arm'd for him, and keepes her guard
In honeſteſt defence.

Drumme and Colours.

Enter Count Roſſillion, Parrolles, and the whole Army.

Ma. The goddes forbid elſe.
Wid. So, now they come:
That is Antonio the Dukes eldeſt ſonne,
That Eſcalus.
Hel. Which is the Frenchman?
Dia. Hee,
That with the plume, 'tis a moſt gallant fellow,
I would he lov'd his wife: if he were honeſter
He were much goodlier. Is't not a handſome Gentleman?
Hel. I like him well.
Dia. 'Tis pitty he is not honeſt: yonds that ſame knave
That leades him to theſe places: were I his Lady,
I would poiſon that vile Raſcall.
Hel. Which is he?
Dia. That Iacke an-apes with ſcarfes. Why is he melancholly?
Hel. Perchance he s'hurt i'th battaile.
Par. Looſe our drum? Well.
Mar. He's ſhrewdly vext at ſomething. Looke he has ſpyed us.
Wid. Marry hang you.
Mar. And your curteſie, for a ring-carrier. Exit.
Wid. The troope is paſt: Come pilgrim, I wil bring
You, Where you ſhall hoſt: Of injoyn'd penitents
There's foure or five, to great S. Iaques bound,
Already at my houſe.
Hel. I humbly thanke you:
Pleaſe it this Matron, and this gentle Maide
To eate with us to night, the charge and thanking
Shall be for me, and to requite you further,
I will beſtow ſome precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note.
Both. Wee'l take your offer kindly. Exeunt.

Enter Count Roſſillion and the Frenchmen, as at firſt.

Cap. E. Nay good my Lord put him toot't: let him have his way.

Cap. G. If your Lordſhip finde him not a Hilding, hold me no more in your reſpect,

Cap. E. On my life my Lord a bubble.

Ber. Do you thinke I am ſo farre
Deceived in him?

Cap. E. Beleeve it my Lord, in mine owne direct knowledge, without any malice, but to ſpeake of him as my kinſman, hee's a moſt notable Coward, an infinite and endleſſe Lyar, an hourely promiſe-breaker, the owner of no one good quality, worthy your Lordſhips entertainement.

Cap. G. It were fit you knew him, leaſt repoſing too farre in his vertue which he hath not, he might at ſome great and truſtie buſineſſe, in a maine daunger, fayle you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

Cap. G. None better then to let him fetch off his drumme, which you heare him ſo confidently undertake to do.

G. E. I with a troop of Florentines will ſodainly ſurprize him ; ſuch I will have whom I am ſure he knowes not from the enemie : wee will binde and hoodwinke him ſo, that he ſhall ſuppoſe no other but that he is carried into the Leager of the adverſaries, when we bring him to our owne tents : bee but your Lordſhip preſent at his examination, if he do not for the promiſe of his life, and in the higheſt compulſion of baſe feare, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power againſt you, and that with the divine forfeite of his ſoule upon oath, never truſt my judgement in any thing.

Cap.G. O for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drumme, he ſayes he has a ſtratagem for't : when your Lordſhip ſees the bottome of this ſucceſſe in't, and to what mettle this counterfeyt lump of ours will be melted, if you give him not Iohn drummes entertainement, your inclining cannot be removed. Heere he comes.

Enter Parolles.

Cap. E. O for the love of laughter hinder not the honor of his deſigne, let him fetch off his drumme in any hand.

Ber. How now Monſieur? This drumme ſticks ſorely in yout diſpoſition.

Cap. G. A pox on't, let it go, 'tis but a drumme.

Par. But a drumme! Iſt but a drumme? A drum ſo loſt. There was excellent command, to charge in with our horſe upon our owne wings, and to rend our owne ſouldiers.

Cap. G. That was not to be blam'd in the command of the ſervice : it was a diſaſter of warre that Caſar himſelfe could not have prevented, if he had beene there to command.

Ber. Well, wee cannot greatly condemne our ſucceſſe: ſome diſhonor wee had in the loſſe of that drum, but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have beene recovered.

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered, but that the merit of ſervice is ſildome attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drumme or another, or hic jacet.

Ber. Why if you have a ſtomacke:too't Monſieur : if you thinke your myſterie in ſtratagem, can bring this inſtrument of honour againe into his native quarter, bee magnanimous in the enterprize and go on, I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit : if you ſpeede well in it, the Duke ſhall both ſpeake of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatneſſe, even to the vtmoſt ſyllable of your worthineſſe.

Par. By the hand of a ſouldier I will undertake it.

Ber. but you muſt not now ſlumber in it.

Par. Ile about it this evening, and I will preſently pen downe my dilemma's, encourage my ſelfe in my certainty, put my ſelfe into my mortall preparation:and by midnight looke to heare further from me.

Ber. May I bee bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it.

Par. I know not what the ſucceſſe will be my Lord, but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know th'art valiant,
And to the poſſibility of thy ſouldierſhip,
Will ſubſcribe for thee : Farewell.

Par. I love not many words. Exit.

Cap. E. No more then a fiſh loves water. Is not this a ſtrange fellow my Lord, that ſo confidently ſeemes to undertake this buſineſſe, which he knowes is not to bee done, damnes himſelfe to do, & dares better be damnd, then to doo't.

Cap. G. You do not know him my Lord as wee doe, certaine it is that he will ſteale himſelfe into a mans favour, and for a weeke eſcape a great deale of diſcoveries, but when you finde him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why do you thinke hee will make no deede at all of this that ſo ſeriouſly hee dooes addreſſe himſelfe unto?

Cap. E. None in the world, but returne with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies: but wee have almoſt imboſt him, you ſhall ſee his fall to night ; for indeede hee is not for your Lordſhippes reſpect.

Cap. G. Weele make you ſome ſport with the Foxe ere wee caſe him. He was firſt ſmoak'd by the old Lord Lafew; when his diſguiſe and he is parted, tell me what a ſprat you ſhall finde him, which you ſhall ſee this very night.

Cap. F. I muſt go looke my twigges,
He ſhall be caught.

Ber. Your brother he ſhall go along with me.

Cap. G. As't pleaſe your Lordſhip, Ile leave you.

Ber. Now will I leade you to the houſe, and ſhew you
The Laſſe I ſpoke of.

Cap. E. But you ſay ſh's honeſt.

Ber. That's all the fault : I ſpoke with hir but once,
And found her wondrous cold, but I ſent to her
By this ſame Coxcombe that we have i'th winde
Tokens and Letters, which ſhe did reſend,
And this is all I have done:She's a faire creature,
Will you go ſee her?

Cap. E. With all my heart my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Hellen, and Widdow.

Hel. If you miſdoubt me that I am not ſhee,
I know not how I ſhall aſſure you further,
But I ſhall looſe the grounds I worke upon.

Wid. Though my eſtate be falne, I was well borne,
Nothing acquainted with theſe buſineſſes,
And would not put my reputation now
In any ſtaining act.

Hel. Mor would I wiſh you.
Firſt give me truſt, the Count he his my husband,
And what to your ſworne counſaile I have ſpoken,
Is ſo from word to word:and then you cannot
By the good ayde that I of you ſhall borrow,
Erre in beſtowing it.

Wid. I ſhould beleeve you,
For you have ſhew'd me that which well approves
Y'are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purſe of Gold,
And let me buy your friendly helpe thus farre,
Which I will over-pay, and pay againe
When I have found it. The Count he wooes your danghter,
Layes downe his wanton ſiedge before her beauty,
Reſolves to carry her:let her in fine conſent
As wee'l direct her how 'tis beſt to beare it:
Now his important blood will naught deny,
That ſhee'l demand:a ring the County weares,
That downward hath ſucceeded in his houſe
From ſonne to ſonne, ſome foure or five deſcents,

Since the firſt father wore it. This Ring he holds
In moſt rich choice:yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will,it would not ſeeme too deere,
How ere repented after.

Wid. Now I ſee the bottome of your purpoſe.

Hel. You ſee it lawfull then, it is no more,
But that your daughter ere ſhe ſeemes as wonne,
Deſires this Ring; appoints him an encounter,
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Her ſelfe moſt chaſtly abſent:after this
To marry her, Ile adde three thouſand Crownes
To what is paſt already.

Wid. I have yeelded:
Inſtruct my daughter how ſhe ſhall perſever,
That time and place with this deceit ſo lawfull
May prove coherent. Every night he comes
With Muſickes of all ſorts,and ſongs compos'd
To her vnworthineſſe:It nothing ſteeds us
To chide him from our eeves,for he perſiſts
As if his life lay on't.

Hel. Why then to night
Let us aſſay our plot, which if it ſpeed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawfull deede;
And lawfull meaning in a lawfull act,
Where both not ſinne,and yet a ſinfull fact.
But let's about it.

Actus Quartus.

Enter one of the Frenchemen, with five or ſix other ſouldiers in ambuſh.

1. Lord E. He can come no other way but by this hedge corner: when you ſally upon him, ſpeake what terrible Language you will: though you underſtand it not your ſelves, no matter: for we muſt not ſeeme to underſtand him, unleſſe ſome one among us,whom we muſt produce for an Interpreter.

1. Sol. Good Captaive,let me be th'Interpreter.

Lor. E. Art not acquainted with him? knowes he not thy voice?

1. Sol. No ſir I warrant you.

Lo. E. But what linſie wolſy haſt thou to ſpeake to us againe?

1. Sol. E'n ſuch as you ſpeake to me.

Lo. E. He muſt thinke us ſome band of ſtrangers,i'th adverſaries entertainement. Now he hath a ſmacke of all neighbouring Languages: therefore we muſt every one be a man of his owne fancy,not to know what we ſpeake one to another:ſo we ſeeme to know,is to know ſtraight our purpoſe: Choughs language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you interpreter, you muſt ſeeme very politicke. But couch hoa,heere he comes,to beguile two houres in a ſleepe, and then to returne & ſweare the lies he forges.

Enter Parrolles.

Par. Ten a clocke: Within theſe three houres 'twill be time enough to goe home. What ſhall I ſay I have done? It muſt bee a very plauſive invention that carries it. They beginne to ſmoake mee, and diſgraces have of late, knock'd too often at my doore: I finde my tongue is too foole-hardy, but my heart hath the feare of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

Lo. E. This is the firſt truth that ere thine own tongue was guilty of.

Par. What the divell ſhould move mee to undertake the recovery of this drumme, being not ignorant of the impoſſibility, and knowing I had no ſuch purpoſe? I muſt give my ſelfe ſome hurts, and ſay I got them in exploit: yet ſlight ones will not carry it. They will ſay, came you off with ſo little? And great ones I dare not give, wherefore what's the inſtance. Tongue,I muſt put you into a Butter-womans mouth, and buy my ſelfe another of Bajazeths Mule, if you prattle mee into theſe perils.

Lo. E. Is it poſſible he ſhould know what he is,and be that he is.

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would ſerve the turne,or the breaking of my Spaniſh ſword.

Lo. E. We cannot affoord you ſo.

Par. Or the baring of my beard, and to ſay it was in ſtratagem.

Lo. E. 'Twould not do.

Par. Or to drowne my cloathes,and ſay I was ſtript.

Lo. E. Hardly ſerve.

Par. Though I ſwore I leapt from the window of the Citadell.

Lo. E. How deepe?

Par. Thirty fadome.

Lo. E. Three great oathes would ſcarſe make that be beleeved.

Pa. I would I had any drumme of the enemies,I would ſweare I recover'd it.

Lo. E. You ſhall heare one anon.

Par. A drumme now of the enemies.

Alarum within.

Lo. E. Throca movouſus, cargo,cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo,cargo, villianda par corbo,cargo.

Par. O ranſome,ranſome,
Do not hide mine eyes.

Inter. Baskos thromuldo beskos.

Par. I know you are the Muskos Regiment,
And I ſhall looſe my life for want of language.
If there be heere German or Dane, Low Dutch,
Italian,or French,let him ſpeake to me,
Ile diſcover that, which ſhall undo the Florentine.

Int. Boskos vauvado, I underſtand thee, and can ſpeake thy tongue: Kerelybonto ſir, betake thee to thy faith, for ſeventeene ponyards are at thy boſome.

Par. Oh.

Int. Oh pray,pray,pray,
Manchà revanta dulche.

Lo. E. Oſceorbidulchos volivorco.

Int. The Generall is content to ſpare thee yet,
And hoodwinkt as thou art, will leade thee on
To gather from thee. Haply thou mayſt informe
Something to ſave thy life.

Par. O let me live,
And all the ſecrts of our campe Ile ſhew,
Their force, their purpoſes: Nay, Ile ſpeake that,
Which you will wonder at.

Int. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damne me.

Int. Acordo linta.
Come on,thou are granted ſpace. Exit.

A ſhort Alarum within.

L. E. Go tell the Count Roſſillion and my brother,
We have caught the woodcocke, and will keepe him
Till we do heare from them. (mufled
Sol. Captaine I will.
L. E. A will betray us all unto our ſelves,
Informe on that.
Soe. So I will ſir.
L. E. Till then Ile keepe him darke and ſafely lockt.
Exit.

Enter Bertram, and the Maid called Diana.

Ber They told me that your name was Fontybell.
Dia. No my good Lord, Diana.
Ber. Titled Goddeſſe,
And worth it with addition: but faire ſoule,
In your fine frame hath love no quality?
If the quicke fire of youth light not your minde,
You are no Maiden but a monument:
When you are dead you ſhould be ſuch a one
As you are now: for you are cold and ſterne,
And now you ſhould be as your mother was
When your ſweet ſelfe was got.
Dia. She then was honeſt.
Ber. So ſhould you be.
Dia. No:
My mother did but duty, ſuch (my Lord)
As you owe to your wife.
Ber. No more a'that:
I prethee do not ſtrive againſt my vowes:
I was compell'd to her, but I love thee
By loves owne ſweet conſtraint, and will for ever
Do thee all rights of ſeruice.
Dia. I ſo you ſerve us
Till we ſerve you: But when you have our Roſes,
You barely leave our thornes to pricke our ſelves,
And mocke us with our bareneſſe.
Ber. How have I ſworne.
Dia. 'Tis not the many oathes that make the truth,
But the plaine ſingle vow, that is vow'd true:
What is not holy, that we ſweare not by,
But take the high'ſt to witneſſe: then pray you tell me,
If I ſhould ſweare by Ioves great attribute,
I lov'd you deerely, would you beleeve my oathes,
When I did love you ill? This ha's no holding
To ſweare by him whom I proteſt to love
That I will worke againſt him. Therefore your oathes
Are words and poore conditions, but unſeal'd
At leaſt in my opinion.
Ber. Change it, change it:
Be not ſo holy cruell: Love is holy,
And my integrity ne're knew the crafts
That you do charge men with: Stand no more off,
But give thy ſelfe unto my ſicke deſires,
Who then recovers. Say thou art mine, and ever
My love as it beginnes, ſhall ſo perſever.
Dia. I ſee that men make rope's in ſuch a ſcarre,
That wee'l forſake our ſelves. Give me that Ring.
Ber. Ile lend it thee my deere, but have no power
To give it from me.
Dia. Will you not my Lord?
Ber. It is an honour longing to our houſe,
Bequeathed downe from many Anceſtors,
Which were the greateſt obloquy i'th world,
In me to looſe.
Dia. Mine Honors ſuch a Ring,
My chaſtities the Iewell of our houſe,
Bequeathed downe from many Anceſtors,
Which were the greateſt obloquie i'th world,
In mee to looſe. Thus your owne proper wiſedome
Brings in the Champion honor on my part,
Againſt your vaine aſſault.
Ber. Heere, take my Ring,
My houſe, mine honor, yea my life be thine,
And Ile be bid by thee.
Dia. When midnight comes, knocke at my chamber window:
Ile order take, my mother ſhall not heare.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you have conquer'd my yet maiden-bed,
Remaine there but an houre, nor ſpeake to me:
My reaſons are moſt ſtrong, and you ſhall know them,
When backe againe this Ring ſhall be deliver'd:
And on your finger in the night, Ile put
Another Ring, that what in time proceeds,
May token to the future, our paſt deeds.
Adieu till then, then faile not: you have wonne
A wife of me, though there my hope be done.
Be. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee. Ex.
Di. For which, live long to thanke both heaven & me,
You may ſo in the end.
My mother told me juſt how he would woo,
As if ſhe ſate in's heart. She ſayes, all men
Have the like oathes: He had ſworne to marry me
When his wife's dead: therefore Ile lye with him
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are ſo braide,
Marry that will, I live and die a Maid:
Onely in this diſguiſe, I think't no ſinne,
To coſen him that would unjuſtly winne. Exit.

Enter the two French Captaines, and ſome two or three Souldiours.

Cap. G. You have not given him his mothers letter.

Cap. E. I have deliv'red it an houre ſince, there is ſom thing in't that ſtings his nature: for on the reading it, he chang'd almoſt into another man.

Cap. G. He has much worthy blame laid upon him, for ſhaking off ſo good a wife, and ſo ſweet a Lady.

Cap. E. Eſpecially, hee hath incurred the everlaſting diſpleaſure of the King, who had even tun'd his bounty to ſing happineſſe to him. I will tell you a thing, but you ſhall let it dwell darkly with you.

Cap. G. When you have ſpoken it 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

Cap. E. Hee hath peruerted a young Gentlewoman heere in Florence, of a moſt chaſte renown, and this night he fleſhes his will in the ſpoyle of her honour: hee hath given her his monumentall Ring, and thinkes himſelfe made in the unchaſte compoſition.

Cap. G. Now God delay our rebellion as we are our ſelves, what things are we.

Cap. E. Meerely our owne traitours. And as in the common courſe of all treaſons, we ſtill ſee them reveale themſelves, till they attaine to their abhorr'd ends: ſo he that in this action contrives againſt his owne Nobility in his proper ſtreame, ore-flowes himſelfe.

Cap. G. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be Trumpeters of our unlawfull intents? We ſhall not then have his company to night?

Cap, E. Not till after midnight: for hee is dieted to his houre.

Cap. G. That approaches apace: I would gladly have him ſee his company anathomiz'd, that hee might take a meaſure of his owne judgements, wherein ſo curiouſly he had ſet this counterfeit.

Cap. E. We wil not meddle with him till he come; for his preſence muſt be the whip of the other.

Cap. G. In the meane time, what heare you of thoſe Warres?

Cap. E. I heare there is an overture of peace.

Cap. G. Nay, I aſſure you a peace concluded.

Cap. E. What will Count Roſſillion do then? Will hee travaile higher, or returne againe into France?

Cap. G. I perceive by this demand, you are not altogether of his councell.

Cap. E. Let it be forbid ſir, ſo ſhould I be a great deale of his act.

Cap. G. Sir, his wife ſome two months ſince fledde from his houſe, her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Iaques le grand; which holy undertaking, with moſt auſtere ſanctimony ſhe accompliſht: and there reſiding, the tenderneſſe of her Nature, became as a prey to her greefe: in fine; made a groane of her laſt breath, & now ſhe ſings in heaven.

Cap. E. How is this juſtified?

Cap. G. The ſtronger part of it by her owne Letters, which makes her ſtory true, even to the poynt of her death: her death is ſelfe, which could not be her office to ſay, is come: was faithfully confirm'd by the Rector of the place.

Cap. E. Hath the Count all this intelligence?

Cap. G. I, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

Cap. E. I am heartily ſorry that hee'l bee gladde of this.

Cap. G. How mightily ſometimes, we make us comforts of our loſſes.

Cap. E. And how mightily ſome other times, wee drowne our gaine in teares, the great dignity that his valour hath here acquir'd for him, ſhall at home be encountred with a ſhame as ample.

Cap. G. The webbe of our life, is of a mingled yarne, good and ill together: our vertues would bee proud, if our faults whipt them not, and our crimes would deſpaire if they were not cheriſh'd by our vertues.

Enter a Meſſenger.

How now? Where's your maiſter?

Ser. He met the Duke in the ſtreet ſir, of whom hee hath taken a ſolemne leave: his Lordſhippe will next morning for France. The Duke hath offered him Letters of commendations to the King.

Cap. E. They ſhall bee no more then needfull there, if they were more then they can commend.

Enter Count Roſſillion.

Ber. They cannot be too ſweete for the Kings tartneſſe, heere's his Lordſhip now. How now my Lord, i'ſt not after midnight?

Ber. I have to night diſpatch'd ſixteene buſineſſes, a moneths lenght a peece, by an abſtract of ſucceſſe: I have congied with the Duke, done my adieu with his neereſt; buried a wife, morn'd fot her, writ to my Lady mother, I am returning, entertain'd my Convoy, and betweene theſe maine parcels of diſpatch, affected many nicer needs: the laſt was the greateſt, but that I have not ended yet.

Cap. E. If the buſineſſe bee of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haſt of your Lordſhip.

Ber. I meane the buſineſſe is not ended, as fearing to heare of it hereafter: but ſhall we have this dialogue betweene the Foole and the Soldiour. Come, bring forth this counterfet module, has deceiv'd mee, like a double-meaning Propheſier.

Cap. E. Bring him forth, ha's ſate i'th ſtockes all night poore gallant knave.

Ber. No matter, his heeles have deſerv'd it, in uſurping his ſpurres ſo long. How does he carry himſelfe?

Cap. E. I have told your Lordſhip already: The ſtocks carrie him. But to anſwer you as you would be under ſtood, he weepes like a wench that had ſhed her milke, he hath confeſt himſelfe to Morgan, whom hee ſuppoſes to be a Friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very inſtant diſaſter of his ſetting i'th ſtockes: and what thinke you he hath confeſt?

Ber. Nothing of me, ha's a?

Cap. E. His confeſſion is taken, and it ſhall be read to his face, if your Lordſhip be in't, as I beleeve you are, you muſt have the patience to heare it.

Enter Parrolles with his Interpreter.

Ber. A plague upon him, muffeld; he can ſay nothing of me: huſh.

Cap. G. Hoodman comes: Portotartaroſſa.

Int. He calles for the tortures, what will you ſay without em.

Par. I will confeſſe what I know without conſtraint,
If ye pinch me like a Paſty, I can ſay no more.

Int. Bosko Chimurcho.

Cap. Boblibindo chicurmurco.

Int. You are a mercifull Generall: Our Generall bids you anſwer to what I ſhall aske you out of a Note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

Int. Firſt demand of him, how many horſe the Duke is ſtrong. What ſay you to that?

Par. Five or ſixe thouſand, but very weake and unſerviceable: the troopes are all ſcattered, and the Commanders very poore rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

Int. Shall I ſet downe your anſwer ſo?

Par. Do, Ile take the Sacrament on't, how and which way you will: all's one to him.

Ber. What a paſt-ſaving ſlave is this?

Cap. G. Y'are deceiv'd my Lord, this is Monſieur Parrolles the gallant militariſt, that was his owne phraſe, that had the whole theorick of warre in the knot of his ſcarfe and the practiſe in the chape of his dagger.

Cap. E. I will never truſt a man againe, for keeping his ſword cleane, nor beleeve hee can have every thing in him, by wearing his apparell neatly.

Int. Well, that's ſet downe.

Par. Five or ſix thouſand horſe I ſed, I will ſay true, or thereabouts ſet downe, for Ile ſpeake truth.

Cap. G. He's very neere the truth in this.

Ber. But I con him no thankes for't in the nature hee delivers it.

Par. Poore rogues, I pray you ſay.

Int. Well, that's ſet downe.

Par. I humbly thanke you ſir, a truth's a truth, the Rogues are marvailous poore.

Int. Demaund of him of what ſtrength they are a foot. What ſay you to that?

Par. By my troth ſir, if I were to live this preſent houre, I will tell true. Let me ſee, Spurio a hundred and fifty, fifty , Sebaſtian ſo many , Corambus ſo many , Iaques ſo many : Guiltian,Coſmo,Lodowicke , and Gratij , two hundred fifty each : Mine owne Company , Chitopher , Vaumond, Bentij, two hundred fifty each : ſo that the muſter file, rotten and ſound , upon my life amounts not to fifteene thouſand pole , halfe of the which , dare not ſhake the ſnow from off their Caſſocks, leaſt they ſhake themſelves to peeces.

Ber. What ſhall be done to him?

Cap. G. Nothing , but let him have thankes. Demand of him my conditions:and what credite I have with the Duke.

Int. Well that's ſet downe:you ſhall demaund of him, whether one Captaine Dumaine be it'h Campe, a Frenchman : what his reputation is with the Duke , what his valour,honeſty,and expertneſſe in warres:or whether he thinkes it were not poſſible with-wellwaighing ſummes of gold to corrupt him to a revolt. What ſay you to this? What do you know of it?

Par. I beſeech you let me anſwer to the particular of theintergatories. Demand them ſingly.

Int. Do you know this Captaine Dumaine?

Par. I know him , a was a Botchers Prentize in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the Shrieves fool with childe, a dumbe innocent that could not ſay him nay.

Ber. Nay, by your leave hold your hands , though I know his braines are forfeite to the next tile that fals.

Inter. Well, is this Captaine in the Duke of Florences campe?

Par. Vpon my knowledge he is, and lowſie.

Cap. G. Nay looke not ſo upon me:we ſhall heare of your Lord anon.

Int. What is his reputation with the Duke?

Par. The Duke knowes him for no other, but a poore Officer of mine , and writ to me this other day , to turne him out a'th band. I thinke I have his Letter in my pocket.

Int. Marry we'll ſearch.

Par. In good ſadneſſe I do not know,either it is there, or it is upon a file with the Dukes other Letters , in my Tent.

Int. Heere 'tis,heere's a paper , ſhall I reade it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

Ber. Our Interpreter do's it well.

Cap. G. Excellently.

Int. Dian,the Counts a foole,and full of gold.

Par. That is not the Dukes letter ſir : that is an advertiſement to a proper maide in Florence, one Diana,to take heede of the allurement of one Count Roſſillion,a fooliſh idle boy : but for all that very ruttiſh. I pray you ſir put it up againe.

Int. Nay,Ile reade it firſt by your favour.

Par. My meaning in't I proteſt was very honeſt in the behalfe of the maid : for I knew the young Count to be a dangerous amd laſcivious boy , who is a whale to Virginity, and devours up all the fry it finds.

Ber. Damnable both-ſides rogue.

Int. Let.When he ſweares oathes , bid him drop gold , and take it:
After he ſcores , he never payes the ſcore:
Halfe won is match well made,match and well make it,
He nere payes after-debts,take it before,
And ſay a ſouldier (Dian) told thee this:
Men are to mell with, boyes are not to kis.
For count of this,the Count a Foole I know it,
Who payes before,but not when he does owe it.
Thine as he vow'd to thee in thine eare,
Parrolles.

Ber. He ſhall bee whipt through the Amy with this rime in's forehead.

Cap. E. This is your devoted friend ſir , the manifold Linguiſt, and the army-potent ſouldier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before but a Cat , and he's a Cat to me.

Int. I perceive ſir by your Generals lookes , wee ſhall be faine to hang you.

Par. My life ſir in any caſe : Not that I am afraide to dye, but that my offences beeing many , I would repent out the remainder of Nature. Let me live ſir in a dungeon, i'th ſtockes,or any where, ſo I may live.

Int. Wee'le ſee what may bee done , ſo you confeſſe freely : therefore once more to this Captaine Dumaine: you have anſwer'd to his reputation with the Duke , and to his valour. What is his honeſty?

Par. He will ſteale ſir an Egge out of a Cloiſter : for rapes and raviſhments he paralels Neſſus. Hee profeſſes not keeping of oaths , breaking em he is ſtronger then Hercules. He will lye ſir, with ſuch volubility , that you would thinke truth were a foole:drunkenneſſe is his beſt vertue, for he will be ſwine-drunke , and in his ſleepe he does little harme , ſave to his bed-cloathes about him: but they know his conditions , and lay him in ſtraw. I have but little more to ſay ſir of his honeſty, he ha's everie thing that an honeſt man ſhould not have ; what an honeſt man ſhould have,he has nothing.

Cap. G. I begin to love him for this.

Ber. For this deſcription of thine honeſty ? A pox upon him for me,he's more and more a Cat.

Int. What ſay you to his expertneſſe in warre?

Par. Faith ſir , ha's led the drumme before the Engliſh Tragedians : to belie him I will not , and more of his ſouldierſhip I know not, except in that Country , he had the honour to be the Officer at a place there called Mileend, to inſtruct for the doubling of files. I would doe the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certaine.

Cap. G. He hath out-villain'd villany ſo farre, that the raritie redeemes him.

Ber. A pox on him, he's a Cat ſtill.

Int. His qualities being at this poore price , I neednot to aske you, if Gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir , for a Cardecue he will ſell the fee-ſimple of his ſalvation,the inheritance of it, and cut th'intaile from all remainders , and a perpetuall ſucceſſion for it perpetually.

Int. What's his Brother , the other Captain Dumaine?

Cap. E. Why do's he aske him of me?

Int. What's he?

Par. E'ne a Crow a'th ſame neſt : not altogether ſo great as the firſt in goodneſſe, but greater a great deale in evill. He excels his Brother for a coward,yet his Brother is reputed one of the beſt that is. In a retreate hee outrunnes any Lackey , marry in comming on , hee ha's the Crampe.

Int. If your life be ſaved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. I, and the Captaine of his horſe, Count Roſſillion.

Int. Ile whiſper with the Generall , and knowe his pleaſure.

Par. Ile no more drumming , a plague of all drummes, onely to ſeeme to deſerve well, and to beguile the ſuppoſition of that laſcivious yong boy the Count, have I run into this danger: yet who would have ſuſpected an ambuſh where I was taken?

Int. There is no remedy ſir, but you muſt dye: the Generall ſayes, you that have ſo traitorouſly diſcovered the ſecrets of your army, and made ſuch peſtiferous reports of men very nobly held, can ſerve the world for no honeſt uſe: therefore you muſt dye. Come headeſman, off with his head.

Par. O Lord ſir let me live, or let mee ſee my death.

Int. That ſhall you, and take your leave of all your friends:
So looke about you, know you any heere?

Coun. Good morrow noble Captaine.

Lo. E. God bleſſe you Captaine Parolles.

Cap. G. God ſave you noble Captaine.

Lo. E. Captaine, what greeting will you to my Lord Lafew? I am for France.

Cap. G. Good Captaine will you give me a Copy of the ſonnet you writ to Diana in behalfe of the Count Roſſillion, and I were not a very Coward, I'de compell it of you, but fare you well. Exeunt.

Int. You are undone Captaine all but your ſcarfe, that has a knot on't yet.

Par. Who cannot be cruſh'd with a plot?

Int. If you could finde out a Country where but women were that had received ſo much ſhame, you might begin an impudent Nation. Fare yee well ſir, I am for France too, we ſhall ſpeake of you there. Exit.

Par. Yet am I thankfull: if my heart were great
'Twould burſt at this: Captaine Ile be no more,
But I will eate, and drinke, and ſleepe as ſoft
As Captaine ſhall. Simply the thing I am
Shall make me live: who knowes himſelfe a braggart
Let him feare this; for it will come to paſſe,
That every braggart ſhall be found an Aſſe.
Ruſt ſword, coole bluſhes, and Parrolles live
Safeſt in ſhame: being fool'd, by fool'ry thrive;
There's place and meanes for every man alive.
Ile after them.

Enter Hellen, Widdow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,
One of the greateſt in the Chriſtian world
Shall be my ſurety: fore whoſe throne 'tis needfull
Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneele.
Time was I did him a deſired office
Deere almoſt as his life, which gratitude
Through flinty Tartars boſome would peepe forth,
And anſwer thankes. I duly am inform'd,
His grace it Marſellis, to which place
We have convenient convoy: you muſt know
I am ſuppoſed dead, the Army breaking,
My husband hies him home, where heaven ayding,
And by the leave of my good Lord the King,
Wee'l be before our welcome.

Wid. Gentle Madam,
You never had a ſervant to whoſe truſt
Your buſines was more welcome.

Hel. Nor your Miſtris
Ever a friend, whoſe thoughts more truly labour
To recompence your love: Doubt not but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughters dower,
As it hath fated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband. But O ſtrange men,
That can ſuch ſweet uſe make of what they hate,
When ſawcy truſting of the coſin'd thoughts
Defiles the pitchy night, ſo luſt doth play
With what it loathes, for that which is away,
But more of this heereafter: you Diana,
Vnder my poore inſtructions yet muſt ſuffer
Something in my behalfe.

Dia. Let death and honeſty
Go with your impoſitions, I am yours
Vpon your will to ſuffer.

Hel. Yet I pray you:
But with the word the time will bring on ſummer,
When Briars ſhall have leaves as well as thornes,
And be as ſweet as ſharpe: we muſt away,
Our Wagon is prepar'd, and time revives us,
All's well that ends well, ſtill that fines the Crowne;
What ere the courſe, the end is the renowne. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne, old Lady, and Lafew.

Laf. No, no, no, your ſonne was miſled with a ſnipt taffata fellow there, whoſe villanous ſaffron would have made all the unbak'd and dowy youth of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had beene alive at this houre, and your ſonne heere at hom, more aduanc'd by the King, then by that red-tail'd humble Bee I ſpeake of.

La. I would I had not knowne him, it was the death of the moſt vertuous gentlewoman, that ever Nature had praiſe for creating. If ſhe had partaken of my fleſh and coſt mee the deereſt groanes of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

La. Twas a good Lady, 'twas a good Lady. We may picke a thouſand ſallets ere wee light on ſuch another hearbe.

Clo. Indeed ſir ſhe was the ſweete Margerom of the ſallet, or rather the hearbe of grace.

Laf. They are not hearbes you knave, they are noſe-hearbes.

Clo. I am no great Nabuchadnezar ſir, I have not much skill in grace.

La. Whether doeſt thou profeſſe thy ſelfe, a knave or a foole?

Clo. A foole ſir at a womans ſervice, and a knave at a mans.

La. Your diſtinction.

Clo. I would couſen the man of this wife, and do his ſervice.

La. So you were a knave at his ſervice indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble ſir to do her ſervice.

La. I will ſubſcribe for thee, thou art both knave and foole.

Clo. At your ſervice.

La. No, no, no.

Clo. Why ſir, if I cannot ſerve you, I can ſerve as great a prince as you are.

La. Whoſe that, a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith ſir a has an Engliſh maine, but his fiſnomy is more hotter in France then there.

La. What prince is that?

Clo. The blacke prince ſir, alias the prince of darkeneſſe alias the divell.

La. Hold thee, there's my purſe, I give thee not this to ſuggeſt thee from thy maſter thou talk'ſt off, ſerve him ſtill.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow ſir, that alwaies loved a great fire, and the maiſter I ſpeake of ever keeps a good fire, but ſure he is the Prince of the world, let his Nobilitie remaine in's Court. I am for the houſe with the narrow gate, which I take to bee too little for pompe to enter: ſome that humble themſelves may, but the many will be too chill and tender, and theyle bee for the flowrie way that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

La. Go thy waies, I begin to bee a weary of thee and I tell thee ſo before, becauſe I would not fall out with thee. Go thy wayes, let my horſes be well look'd to, without any trickes.

Clo. If I put any trickes upon em ſir, they ſhall bee Iades trickes, which are their owne right by the law of Nature. Exit.

Laf. A ſhrewd knave and an unhappy.

Lady. So a is. My Lord that's gone made himſelfe much ſport out of him, by his authority hee remaines heere, which he thinkes is a pattent for his ſawcineſſe, and indeed he has no pace, but runnes where he will.

Laf. I like him well, 'tis not amiſſe: and I was about to tell you, ſince I heard of the good Ladies death, and that my Lord your ſonne was upon his returne home. I moved the King my maiſter to ſpeake in the behalfe of my daughter, which in the minority of them both, his Majeſty out of a ſelfe gracious remembrance did firſt propoſe, his Highneſſe hath promis'd me to doe it, and to ſtoppe up the diſpleaſure he hath conceived againſt your ſonne, there is no fitter matter. How do's your Ladyſhip like it?

La. With very much content my Lord, and I wiſh it happily effected.

La. His Highneſſe comes poſt from Marſellis, of as able body as when he number'd thirty, a will be heere to morrow, or I am deceiv'd by him that in ſuch intelligence hath ſeldome fail'd.

La. I rejoyces me, that I hope I ſhall ſee him ere I die. I have letters that my ſonne will be heere to night: I ſhal beſeech your Lordſhip to remaine with mee, till they meete together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking with what Manners I might ſafely be admitted.

La. You neede but pleade your honourable priviledge.

La. Lady of that I have made a bold charter, but I thanke my God, it holds yet.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. O Madam, yonders my Lord your ſonne with a patch of veluet on's face, whether there be a ſcar under't or no, the Velnet knowes, but 'tis a goodly patch of Velvet, his left cheeke is a cheeke of two pile and a halfe, but his right cheeke is worne bare.

La. A ſcarre nobly got:
Or a noble ſcarre, is a good liv'ry of honor,
So belike is that.

Clo. But it is your carbinado'd face.

La. Let us go ſee
Your ſonne I pray you, I long to talke
With the yong noble ſouldier.

Clo. Faith there's a dozen of em, with delicate fine hats, and moſt courteous feathers, which bow the head, and nod at every man.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus,

Enter Hellen, Widdow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding poſting day and night,
Muſt wear your ſpirits low, we cannot helpe it.
But ſince you have made the daies and nights as one,
To weare your gentle limbes in my affaires,
Be bold you do ſo grow in my requitall,
As nothing can unroote you. In happy time,

Enter a gentle Aſtranger.

This man may helpe me to his Majeſties eare,
If he would ſpend his power. God ſave you ſir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have ſeene you in the Court of France.

Gent. I have beene ſometimes there.

Hel. I do preſume ſir, that you are not falne
From the report that goes upon your goodneſſe,
And therefore goaded with moſt ſharpe occaſions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The uſe of your owne vertues, for the which
I ſhall continue thankefull.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will pleaſe you
To give this poore petition to the King,
And ayde me with that ſtore of power you have
To come into his preſence.

Gen. The Kings not heere.

Hel. Not heere ſir?

Gen. Not indeed,
He hence remov'd laſt night, and with more haſt
Then is his uſe.

Wid. Lord how we looſe our paines.

Hel. All's well that ends well yet,
Though time ſeeme ſo adverſe, and meanes unfit:
I do beſeech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marrie as I take it to Roſſillion,
Whither I am going.

Hel. I do beſeech you ſir,
Since you are like to ſee the King before me,
Commend the paper to his gracious hand,
Which I preſume ſhall render you no blame,
But rather make you thanke your paines for it:
I will come after you with what good ſpeede
Our meanes will make us meanes.

Gent. This Ile do for you.

Hel. And you ſhall finde your ſelfe to be well thankt what e're falles more. We muſt to horſe againe, Go, go, provide. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne and Parrolles.

Par. Good M. Luvatch give my Lord Lafew this letter, I have ere now ſir beene better knowne to you, when I have held familiaritie with freſher cloathes: but I am now ſir muddied in fortunes mood, and ſmell ſomewhat ſtrong of her ſtrong diſpleaſure.

Col. Truely, Fortunes diſpleaſure is but ſluttiſh if it ſmell ſo ſtrongly as thou ſpeak'ſt of: I will hencefoorth eate no Fiſh of Fortunes butt'ring. Prethee allow the winde.

Par. Nay you neede not to ſtop your noſe ſir: I ſpeake but by a Metaphor.

Clo. Indeed ſir, if your Metaphor ſtinke, I will ſtop my noſe, or againſt any mans Metaphor. Prethee get thee further.

Par. Pray you ſir deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh, prethee ſtand away: a paper from fortunes cloſe-ſtoole, to give to a Nobleman. Looke heere hee comes himſelfe.

Enter Lafew.

Clo. Heere is a purſe of Fortunes ſir, or of Fortunes Cat, but not a Muſcat; that ha's falne into the uncleane fiſh-pond of her diſpleaſure, and as he ſayes is muddied withall. Pray you ſir, uſe the Carpe as you may, for hee lookes like a poore decayed, ingenious, fooliſh, raſcally knave. I do pittie his diſtreſſe in my ſmiles of comfort, and leave him to your Lordſhip.

Par. My Lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly ſcratch'd.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? 'Tis too late to paire her nailes now. Wherein have you played the knave with fortune that ſhe ſhould ſcratch you, who of her ſelfe is a good Lady, & would not have knaves thriue long under her? There's a Cardecue for you: Let the Iuſtices make you and fortune friends; I am for other buſineſſe.

Par. I beſeech your honour to heare mee one ſingle word.

Laf. You begge a ſingle peny more: Come you ſhall ha't, ſave your word.

Par. My name my good Lord is Parolles.

Laf. You begge more then word then. Cox my paſſion, give me your hand: How does your drumme?

Par. O my good Lord, you were the firſt that found mee.

Laf. Was I inſooth? And I was the firſt that loſt thee.

Par. It lies in you my Lord to bring me in ſome grace for you did bring me out.

Laf. Out upon thee knave, doeſt thou put upon mee at once both the office of God and the divel: one brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. The King's comming I know by his Trumpets. Sirrah, inquire further after me, I had talke of you laſt night, though you are a foole and a knave, you ſhall eate, go to, follow.

Par. I praiſe God for you.

Flouriſh. Enter King, old Lady, Lafew, the two French Lords, with attendants.

Kin. We loſt a Iewell of her, and our eſteeme
Was made much poorer by it: but your ſonne,
As mad in folly, lack'd the ſence to know
Her eſtimation home.

Old La. 'Tis paſt my Liege,
And I beſeech your Majeſty to make it
Naturall rebellion, done i'th blade of youth,
When oyle and fire, too ſtrong for reaſons force,
Ore-beares it, and burnes on.

Kin. My honour'd Lady,
I haue forgiven and forgotten all,
Though my revenges were high bent upon him,
And watch'd the time to ſhoote.

Laf. This I muſt ſay,
But firſt I begge my pardon: the yong Lord
Did to his Majeſty, his Mother, and his Lady,
Offence of mighty note; but to himſelfe
The greateſt wrong of all. He loſt a wife,
Whoſe beauty did aſtoniſh the ſurvey
Of richeſt eyes: whoſe words all eares tooke captive,
Whoſe deere perfection, hearts that ſcorn'd to ſerve,
Humbly call'd Miſtris.

Kin. Praiſing what is loſt,
Makes the remembrance deere. Well, call him hither,
We are reconcil'd, and the firſt view ſhall kill
All repetition: Let him not aske our pardon,
The nature of his great offence is dead,
And deeper then oblivion, we do burie
Th'incenſing reliques of it. Let him approach
A ſtranger, no offender; and informe him
So 'tis our will he ſhould

Gent. I ſhall my Liege.

Kin. What ſayes he to your daughter,
Have you ſpoke?

Laf. All that he is, hath reference to your Highnes.

Kin. Then ſhall we have a match. I have letters ſent me, that ſets him high in fame.

Enter Count Bertram.

Laf. He lookes well on't

Kin. I am not a day of ſeaſon,
For thou maiſt ſee a ſun-ſhine, and a haile
In me at once: But to the brighteſt beames
Diſtracted clouds give way, ſo ſtand thou forth,
The time is faire againe.

Ber. My high repented blames
Deere Soveraigne pardon to me.

Kin. All is whole,
Not one word more of the conſumed time,
Let's take the inſtant by the forward top:
For we are old, and on our quick'ſt decrees
Th'inaudible, and noiſeleſſe foot of time
Steales, ere we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this Lord?

Ber. Admiringly my Liege, at firſt
I ſtucke my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durſt make too bold a herauld of my tongue:
Where the impreſſion of mine eye enfixing,
Contempt his ſcornfull Perſpective did lend me,
Which warpt the line of every other favour,
Scorn'd a faire colour, or expreſt it ſtolne,
Extended or contracted all proportions
To a moſt hideous object. Thence it came,
That ſhe whom all men prais'd, and whom my ſelfe,
Since I have loſt, have lov'd, was in mine eye
The duſt that did offend it.

Kin. Wel excus'd:
That thou didſt love her, ſtrikes ſome ſcores away
From the great compt: but love that comes too late,
Like a remorſefull pardon ſlowly carried
To the great ſender, turnes a ſowre offence,
Crying, that's good that's gone: Our raſh faults,
Make triuiall price of ſerious things we have,
Not knowing them, untill we know their grave.
Oft our diſpleaſures to our ſelves unjuſt,
Deſtroy our friends, and after weepe their duſt:
Our owne love waking, cries to ſee what's done,
While ſhamefull hate ſleepes out the afternoone.
Be this ſweet Helens knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for faire Maudlin,
The maine conſents are had, and heere wee'l ſtay
To ſee our widdowers ſecond marriage day:
Which better then the firſt, O deere heaven bleſſe,
Or, ere they meete in me, O Nature ceaſſe.

Laf. Come on my ſonne, in whom my houſes name
Muſt be diſgeſted: give a favour from you
To ſparkle in the ſpirits of my daughter,

That ſhe may quickly come. By my old beard,
And ev'ry haire that's on't, Helen that's dead
Was a ſweet creature: ſuch a ring as this,
The laſt that ere I tooke her leave at Court,
I ſaw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

Kin. Now pray you let me ſee it. For mine eye,
While I was ſpeaking, oft was faſten'd too't:
This Ring was mine, and when I gave it Hellen,
I bad her if her fortunes ever ſtoode
Neceſſitied to helpe, that by this token
I would releeve her. Had you that craft to reave her
Of what ſhould ſtead her moſt?

Ber. My gracious Soveraigne,
How ere it pleaſes you to take it ſo,
The ring was never hers.

Old La. Sonne, on my life
I have ſeene her weare it, and ſhe reckon'd it
At her lives rate.

Laf. I am ſure I ſaw her weare it.

Ber. You are deceiv'd my Lord, ſhe never ſaw it:
In Florence was it from a caſement throwne mee,
Wrap'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it: Noble ſhe was, and thought
I ſtood ingag'd, but when I had ſubſcrib'd
To mine owne fortune, and inform'd her fully,
I could not anſwer in that courſe of Honour
As ſhe had made the overture, ſhe ceaſt
In heauy ſatisfaction, and would never Receive the Ring againe.

Kin. Platus himſelfe,
That knowes the tinct and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in natures myſterie more ſcience,
Then I have in this Ring. 'Twas mine, 'twas Helens,
Who ever gave it you: then if you know
That you are well acquainted with your ſelfe,
Confeſſe 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She call'd the Saints to ſurety,
That ſhe would never put it from her finger,
Vnleſſe ſhe gave it to you ſelfe iu bed,
Where you have never come: or ſent it us
Vpon her great diſaſter.

Ber. She never ſaw it.

Kin. Thou ſpeak'ſt it falſely: as I love mine Honor,
And mak'ſt conjecturall feares to come into me,
Which I would faine ſhut out, if it ſhould prove
That thou art ſo inhumane, 'twill not prove ſo.
And yet I know not, thou didſt hate her deadly,
And ſhe is dead, which nothing but to cloſe
Her eyes my ſelfe, could win me to beleeve,
More then to ſee this Ring. Take him away,
My fore-paſt proofes, how ere the matter fall
Shal taxe my feares of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too littſe. Away with him,
Wee'l ſift this matter further.

Ber. If you ſhall prove
This Ring was ever hers, you ſhall as eaſie
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet ſhe never was.

Enter a Gentleman.

Kin. I am wrap'd in diſmall thinkings.

Gen. Gracious Soveraigne.
Whether I have beene too blame or no, I know not,
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath for foure or five removes come ſhort,
To tender it her ſelfe. I undertooke it,
Vanquiſh'd thereto by the faire grace and ſpeech
Of the poore ſuppliant, who by this I know
Is heere attending: her buſineſſe lookes in her
With an importing viſage, and ſhee told me
In a ſweet verball breefe, it did concerne
Your Highneſſe with her ſelfe.

A Letter.

Upon his many proteſtations to marry mee when his wife was dead, I bluſh to ſay it, he wonne me. Now is the Count Roſſillion a Widdower, his vowes are forfeited to mee, and my honors payed to him. He ſtole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his Corntrey for Iuſtice: Grant it me, O King, in you it beſt lies, otherwiſe a ſeducer flouriſhes, and a poore Maid is vndone.

Diana Capilet.

Laf. I will buy me a ſonne in Law in a feare, and toule him for this. Ile none of him.

Kin. The heavens have thought well on thee Lafew,
To bring forth this diſcou'ry, ſeeke theſe ſutors:
Go ſpeedily, and bring againe the Count.

Enter Bertram.

I'am a-feard the life of Hellen (Lady)
Was fowly ſnatcht.

Old La. Now juſtice on the doers.

Kin. I wonder ſir, wives are ſuch monſters to you,
And that you flye them as you ſweare them Lordſhip,
Yet you deſire to marry. What woman's that?

Enter Widdow, Diana, and Parrolles.

Dia I am my Lord a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capilet,
My ſuite, as I do underſtand, you know,
And therefore know how farre I may be pittied

Wid. I am her Mother ſir, whoſe age and honour
Both ſuffer under this complaint we bring,
And both ſhall ceaſe, without your remedie.

Kin. Come hither Count, do you know theſe Women?

Ber. My Lord, I neither can nor will denie,
But that I know them, do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you looke ſo ſtrange upon your wife?

Ber. She's none of mine my Lord.

Dia. If you ſhall marrie
You give away this hand, and that is mine,
You give away heavens vowes, and thoſe are mine:
You give away my ſelfe, which is knowne mine:
For I by vow am ſo embodied yours,
That ſhe which marries you, muſt marrie me,
Either both or none.

Laf. Your reputation comes too ſhort for my daughter, you are no husband for her.

Ber. My Lord, this is a fond and deſperate creature,
Whom ſometime I have laugh'd with: Let your highnes
Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour,
Then for to thinke that I would ſinke it heere.

Kin. Sir for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend,
Till your deeds gaine them fairer: prove your honor,
Then in my thought it lies.

Dian. Good my Lord,
Aske him upon his oath, if be do's thinke
He had not my virginity.

Kin. What ſaiſt thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent my Lord,
And was a common gameſter to the Campe.

Dia. He do's me wrong my Lord: If I were ſo,
He might have bought me at a common price.

Doe not beleeve him. O behold this Ring,
Whoſe high reſpect and rich validity
Did lacke a Paralell: yet for all that
He gave it to a Commoner a'th Campe
If I be one.
Boun. He bluſhes, and 'tis hit:
Of ſixe preceding Anceſtors, that Iemme
Confer'd by teſtament to 'th ſeqvent iſſue
Hath it beene owed and worne. This is his wife,
That Rings's a thouſand proofes.
Kin. Me thought you ſaid
You ſaw one heere in Court could witneſſe it.
Dia. I did my Lord, but loath am to produce
So bad an inſtrument, his name's Parrolles.
Laf. I ſaw the man to day, if man he be.
Kin. Find him, and bring him hither.
Roſ. What of him?
He's quoted for a moſt perfidious ſlave
With all the ſpots a'th world, taxt and deboſh'd,
Whoſe nature ſickens: but to ſpeake a truth,
Am I, or that or this, fot what he'll utter,
That will ſpeake any thing.
Kin. She hath that Ring of yours.
Roſ. I thinke ſhe has; certaine it is I lik'd her,
And boorded her i'th wanton way of youth:
She knew her diſtance, and did angle of me,
Madding my eagerneſſe with her reſtraint,
As all impediments in fancies courſe
Are motives of more fancy, and in fine,
Her inſuit comming with her moderne grace,
Subdu'd me to her rate, ſhe got the Ring
And I had that which any inferiour might
At Market price have bought.
Dia. I muſt be patient:
You that have turn'd off a firſt ſo noble wife,
May juſtly dyet me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lacke vertue, I will loſe a husband)
Send for your Ring, I will returne it home,
And give me mine againe.
Roſ. I have it not.
Kin. What Ring was yours I pray you?
Dian. Sir much like the ſame upon your finger.
Kin. Know you this Ring, this Ring was his of late.
Dia. And this was it I gave him being a bed.
Kin. The ſtory then goes falſe, you threw it him
Out of a Caſement.
Dia. I have ſpoke the truth. Enter Parolles.
Roſ. My Lord, I doe confeſſe the ring was hers.
Kin. You boggle ſhrewdly, every feather ſtarts you:
Is this the man you ſpeake of?
Dia. I, my Lord.
Kin. Tell me ſirrah, but tell me true I charge you,
Not fearing the diſpleaſure of your maſter:
(Which on your juſt proceeding, Ile keepe off)
By him and by this woman heere, what know you?
Par. So pleaſe your Majeſty, my maſter hath beene an honorable Gentlemen. Trickes hee hath had in him, which Gentlemen have.
Kin. Come, come, to'th'purpoſe: Did he love this woman?
Par. Faith ſir he did love her, but how!
Kin. How I pray you?
Par. He did love her ſir, as a Gent. loves a Woman.
Kin. How is that?
Par. He lov'd her ſir, and lov'd her not.
Kin. As thou art a Knave and no Knave, what an equivocall Companion is this?
Par. I am a poore man, and at your Majeſties command.
Laf. He's a good drumme my Lord, but a naughty Orator.
Dia. Doe you know he promiſt me marriage?
Par. Faith I know more then Ile ſpeake.
Kin. But wilt thou not ſpeake all thou know'ſt?
Par. Yes ſo pleaſe your Majeſty: I did goe betweene them as I ſaid, but more then that he loved her, for indeed he was madde for her, and talkt of Sathan, and of Limbo, and of Furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promiſing her marriage, and things which would derive me ill will to ſpeake of, therefore I will not ſpeake what I know.
Kin. Thou haſt ſpoken all already, unleſſe thou canſt ſay they are married, but thou art too fine in thy evidence, therefore ſtand aſide. This Ring you ſay was yours.
Dia. I my good Lord.
Kin. Where did you buy it? Or who gave it you?
Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.
Kin. Who lent it you?
Dia. It was not lent me neither.
Kin. Where did you find it then?
Dia. I found it not.
Kin. If it were yours by none of all theſe wayes,
How could you give it him?
Dia. I never gave it him.
Laf. This woman's an eaſie glove my Lord, ſhe goes off and on at pleaſure.
Kin. This Ring was mine, I gave it his firſt wife.
Dia. It might be yours or hers for ought I know.
Kin. Take her away, I doe not like her now,
To priſon with her: and away with him,
Vnleſſe thou telſt me where thou hadſt this Ring,
Thou dieſt within this houre.
Dia. Ile never tell you.
Kin. Take her away.
Dia. Ile put in baile my liedge.
Kin. I thinke thee now ſome common Cuſtomer.
Dia. By Iove if ever I knew man 'twas you.
Kin. Wherefore haſt thou accuſde him all this while?
Dia. Becauſe he's guilty, and he is not guilty:
He knowes I am no Maid, and he'l ſweare too't:
Ile ſweare I am a Maid, and he knowes not.
Great King I am no ſtrumpet, by my life,
I am either Maid, or elſe this old mans wife.
Kin. She does abuſe our eares, to priſon with her.
Dia. Good mother fetch my bayle. Stay Royall ſir,
The Ieweller that owes the Ring is ſent for,
And he ſhall ſurety me. But for this Lord,
Who hath abus'd me as he knowes himſelfe,
Though yet he never harm'd me, heere I quit him.
He knowes himſelfe my bed he hath defil'd,
And at that time he got his wife with child:
Dead though ſhe be, ſhe feeles her yong one kicke:
So there's my riddle, one that's dead is quicke,
And now behold the meaning.

Enter Hellen and Widdow.

Kin. Is there no exorciſt
Beguiles the truer Office of mine eyes?
Is't reall that I ſee?
Hel. No my good Lord,

'Tis but the ſhadow of a wife you ſee,
The name, and not the thing.
Roſ. Both, both, O pardon.
Hel. Oh my good Lord, when I was like this Maid,
I found you wondrous kind, there is your Ring,
And looke you, heere's your letter: this it ſayes,
When from my finger you can get this Ring,
And is by me with child, &c. This is done,
Will you be mine now you are doubly wonne?
Roſ. If ſhe my Liege can make me know this clearely,
Ile love her dearely, ever, ever dearely.
Hel. If it appeare not plaine, and prove untrue,
Deadly divorce ſtep betweene me and you.
O my deere mother, doe I ſee you living?
Laf. Mine eyes ſmell Onions, I ſhall weepe anon:
Good Tom Drumme lend me a handkercher.
So I thanke thee, waite on me home, Ile make ſport with thee: Let thy curtſies alone, they are ſcurvy ones.
King. Let us from point to point this ſtory know,
To make the even truth in pleaſure flow:
If thou beeſt yet a freſh uncropped flower,
Chooſe thou thy husband, and Ile pay thy dower.
For I can gueſſe, that by thy honeſt ayde,
Thou keeptſt a wife her ſelfe, thy ſelfe a Maide.
Of that and all the progreſſe more and leſſe,
Reſoldv'dly more leaſure ſhall expreſſe:
All yet ſeemes well, and if it end ſo meete,
The bitter paſt, more welcome is the ſweet.
Flouriſh.

THe Kings a Begger, now the play is done.
All is well ended, if this ſuite be wonne,
That you expreſſe Content: which we will pay,
With ſtrife to pleaſe you, day exceeding day:
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts,
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts. Exeunt omn.

FINIS.

Tvvelfe Night, Or vvhat you will.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Orſino Duke of Illyria, Curio, and other Lords.

Duke.
IF Muſicke be the food of Loue, play on,
Give me exceſſe of it: that ſurfetting,
The appetite may ſicken, and ſo dye.
That ſtraine agen, it had a dying fall:
O, it came ore my eare, like the ſweet ſound
That breathes upon a banke of Violets;
Stealing, and giving Odour. Enough, no more,
'Tis not ſo ſweet now, as it was before.
O ſpirit of Love, how quicke and freſh art thou,
That notwithſtanding thy capacity,
Receiveth as the Sea. Nought enters there,
Of what validity, and pitch ſo ere,
But falles into abatement, and low price,
Even in a minute; ſo full of ſhapes is fancy,
That it alone is high fantaſticall.
Cur. Will you goe hunt my Lord?
Du. What Curio?
Cur. The Hart.
Du. Why ſo I doe, the Nobleſt that I have:
O when mine eyes did ſee Olivia firſt,
Me thought ſhe purg'd the ayre of peſtilence;
That inſtant was I turn'd into a Hart,
And my deſires like fell and cruell hounds,
Ere ſince purſue me. How now what newes from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So pleaſe my Lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid doe returne this anſwer:
The Element it ſelfe, till ſeven yeares heate,
Shall not behold her face at ample view:
But like a Cloyſtreſſe ſhe will vailed walke,
And water once a day her Chambers round
With eye-offending brine: all this to ſeaſon
A brothers dead love, which ſhe would keepe freſh
And laſting, in her ſad remembrance.
Du. O ſhe that hath a heart of that fine frame
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will ſhe love, when the rich golden ſhaft
Hath kill'd the flocke of all affections elſe
That live in her. When Liver, Braine, and Heart,
Theſe ſoveraigne thrones, are all ſupply'd and fill'd
Her ſweet perfections with one ſelfe ſame king:
Away before me, to ſweet beds of Flowres,
Love-thoughts lye rich, when canopy'd with bowres.
Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Viola, a Captaine, and Saylors.

Vio. What Country (Friends) is this?
Cap. This is Illyria Lady.
Vio. And what ſhould I doe in Illyria?
My brother he is in Elizium,
Perchance he is not drown'd: What thinke you ſaylors?
Cap. It is perchance that you your ſelfe were ſaved.
Vio. O my poore brother, and ſo perchance may he be.
Cap. True Madam, and to comfort you with chance.
Aſſure your ſelfe, after our ſhip did ſplit,
When you, and thoſe poore number ſaved with you,
Hung on our driving boate: I ſaw your brother
Moſt provident in perill, binde himſelfe,
(Courage and hope both teaching him the practiſe)
To a ſtrong Maſte, that liv'd upon the ſea:
Where like Orion on the Dolphines backe,
I ſaw him hold acquaintance with the waves,
So long as I could ſee.
Vio. For ſaying ſo, there's Gold:
Mine owne eſcape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereto thy ſpeech ſerves for authority
The like of him. Know'ſt thou this Country?
Cap. I Madam well, for I was bred and borne
Not three houres travaile from this very place?
Vio. Who governs heere?
Cap. A noble Duke in nature, as in name.
Vio. What is his name?
Cap. Orſino.
Vio. Orſino! I have heard my father name him.
He was a Batchellor then.
Cap. And ſo is now, or was ſo very late:
For but a moneth ago I went from hence,
And then 'twas freſh in murmure (as you know
What great ones doe, the leſſe will prattle of)
That he did ſeeke the love of faire Olivia.
Vio. What's ſhe?
Cap. A vertuous maid, the daughter of a Count,
That di'd ſome twelvemonth ſince, then leaving her
In the protection of his ſonne, her brother,
Who ſhortly alſo di'd: for whoſe deere love
(They ſay) ſhe had abjur'd the ſight
And company of men.
Vio. O that I ſerv'd that Lady,
And might not be delivered to the world

Till I had made mine owne occaſion mellow
What my eſtate is.
Cap. That were hard to compaſſe,
Becauſe ſhe will admit no kind of ſuite,
No not the Dukes.
Vio. There is a faire behaviour in thee Captaine,
And though that nature, with a beauteous wall
Doth oft cloſe in pollution: yet of thee
I will beleeve thou haſt a mind that ſuites
With this thy faire and outward character.
I prethee (and Ile pay thee bounteouſly)
Conceale me what I am, and be my ayde,
For ſuch diſguiſe as haply ſhall become
The forme of my intent. Ile ſerve this Duke,
Thou ſhalt preſent me as an Eunuch to him,
It may be worth thy paines: for I can ſing,
And ſpeake to him in many ſorts of Muſicke,
That will allow me very worth his ſervice.
What elſe may hap, to time I will commit,
Onely ſhape thou thy ſilence to my wit.
Cap. Be you his Eunuch, and your Mute Ile be,
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not ſee.
Vio. I thanke thee: Lead me on. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Sir Toby, and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague meanes my Neece to take the death of her brother thus? I am ſure care's an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth ſir Toby, you muſt come in earlyer a nights: youe Coſin, my Lady, takes great exceptions to your ill houres.

To. Why let her except, before excepted.

Mar. I, but you muſt confine your ſelfe within the modeſt limits of order.

To. Confine? Ile confine my ſelfe no finer then I am: theſe cloathes are good enough to drinke in, and ſo be theſe boots too: and they be not, let them hang themſelves in their owne ſtraps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undoe you: I heard my Lady talke of it yeſterday: and of a fooliſh knight that you brought in one night here, to be her (wooer.

To. Who, Sir Andrew Ague-cheeke?

Ma. I he.

To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Ma. What's that to th'purpoſe?

To. Why he ha's three thouſand ducats a yeere.

Ma. I, but he'll have but a yeare in all theſe ducates: He's a very foole, and a prodigall.

To Fye, that you'll ſay ſo: he playes o'th Viol-de-gamboys, and ſpeakes three or foure languages word for word without booke, & hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath indeed, almoſt naturall: for beſides that he's a foole, he's a great quarreller: and but that he hath the gift of a Coward, to allay the guſt he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Tob. By this hand they are ſcoundrels and ſubſtractors that ſay ſo of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that adde moreover, he's drunke nightly in your company.

To. With drinking healths to my Neece: Ile drinke to her as long as there is a paſſage in my throat, and drink in Illyria: he's a Coward and a Coyſtrill that will not drinke to my Neece, till his braines turne o'th toe, like a pariſh top. What wench? Caſtiliano vulgo: for here comes Sir Andrew Agueface.

Enter Sir Andrew.

And. Sir Toby Belch. How now Sir Toby Belch?

To. Sweet ſir Andrew.

And. Bleſſe you faire Shrew.

Mar. And you too ſir.

Tob. Accoſt Sir Andrew, accoſt.

And. What's that?

To. My Neeces Chamber-maid.

An. Good Miſtris accoſt, I deſire better acquaintance.

Ma. My name is Mary ſir.

And. Good miſtris Mary, accoſt.

To. You miſtake knight: Accoſt, is front her, boord her, wooe her, aſſayle her.

An. By my troth I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of Accoſt?

Mar. Far you well Gentlemen.

To. And thou let part ſo Sir Andrew, would thou mightſt never draw ſword agen.

And. And you part ſo miſtris, I would I might never draw ſword agen; Faire Lady, doe you thinke you have fooles in hand?

Ma. Sir, I have not you by'th hand.

An. Marry but you ſhall have, and heeres my had.

Mar. Now ſir, thought is free: I pray you bring your hand to'th Buttry barre, and let it drinke.

An. Wherefore (ſweet-heart?) What's your Metaphor?

Mar. It's dry ſir.

An. Why I thinke ſo: I am not ſuch an aſſe, but I can keepe my hand dry. But what's your jeſt?

Ma. A dry jeſt Sir.

And. Are you full of them?

Ma. I Sir, I have them at my fingers ends: marry now I let goe your hand, I am barren. Exit Maria.

Tob. O knight, thou lack'ſt a cup of Canary: when did I ſee thee ſo put downe?

And. Never in your life I thinke, unleſſe you ſee Canary put downe: me thinkes ſometimes I have no more wit then a Chriſtian, or an ordinary mans ha's: but I am a great eater of beefe, and I beleeve that does harme to my wit.

To. No queſtion.

An. And I thought that, I'de forſweare it. Ile ride home to morrow ſir Toby.

To. Pur-quoy my deere knight?

An. What is purquoy? Doe, or not doe? I would I had beſtowed that time in the tongues, that I have in fencing dancing, and beare-bayting: O had I but followed the Arts.

To. Then hadſt thou had an excellent head of haire.

An. Why, would that have mended my haire?

To. Paſt queſtion, for thou ſeeſt it will not coole my (nature.

An. But it becomes me well enough, doſt not?

To. Excellent, it hangs like flax on a diſtaffe: and I hope to ſee a huſwife take thee between her legs, & ſpin it off.

An. Faith Ile home to morrow ſir Toby, your niece will not be ſeene, or if ſhe be it's four to one, ſhe'l none of me: the Count himſelfe here hard by, wooes her.

To. She'll none o'th Count, ſhe'l not match above her degree, neither in eſtate, yeares, nor wit: I have heard her ſweare. Tut there's life in't man.

And. Ile ſtay a moneth longer. I am a fellow o'th ſtrangeſt mind i'th world: I delight in Maskes and Revells ſometimes altogether.

To. Art thou good at theſe kicke-chawſes Knight?

And. As any man in Illyria, whatſoever he be, under the degree of my betters, and yet I will not compare with an old man.

To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

And. Faith, I can cut a caper.

To. And I can cut the Mutton too't.

And. And I thinke I have the backe-tricke, ſimply as ſtrong as any man in Illyria.

To. Wherefore are theſe things hid? Wherefore have theſe gifts a Curtaine before 'em? Are they like to take duſt, like Miſtris Mals picture? Why doſt thou not goe to Church in a Galliard, and come home in a Carranto? My very walke ſhould be a Iigge: I would not ſo much as make water but in a Sinke-a-pace: What dooeſt thou meane? Is it a world to hide vertues in? I did thinke by the excellent conſtitution of thy legge, it was form'd under the ſtarre of a Galliard.

And. I, 'tis ſtrong, and it does indifferent well in a dam'd colour'd ſtocke. Shall we ſit about ſome Revels?

To. What ſhall we doe elſe: were we not borne under Taurus?

And. Taurus? That ſides and heart.

To. No ſir, it is leggs and thighes: let me ſee thee caper. Ha, higher: ha, ha, excellent. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in mans attire.

Val. If the Duke continue theſe favours towards you Ceſario, you are like to be much advanc'd, he hath known you but three dayes, and already you are no ſtranger.

Vio. You either feare his humour, or my negligence, that you call in queſtion the continuance of his love. Is he inconſtant ſir, in his favours?

Val. No beleeve me.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Vio. I thanke you: here comes the Count.

Duk. Who ſaw Ceſario hoa?

Vio. On your attendance my Lord heere.

Du. Stand you a-while aloofe. Ceſario,
Thou knowſt no leſſe, but all: I have unclaſp'd
To thee the booke even of my ſecret ſoule.
Therefore good youth, addreſſe thy gate unto her,
Be not deni'd acceſſe, ſtand at her doores,
And tell them, there thy fixed foot ſhall grow
Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure my Noble Lord,
If ſhe be ſo abandon'd to her ſorrow
As it is ſpoke, ſhe never will admit me.

Du. Be clamorous, and leape all civill bounds,
Rather then make unprofited returne.

Vio. Say I doe ſpeake with her (my Lord) what then?

Duk. O then, unfold the paſſion of my love,
Surprize her with diſcourſe of my deere faith;
It ſhall become thee well to act my woes:
She will attend it better in thy youth,
Then in a Nuntio's of more grave aſpect.

Vio. I thinke not ſo, my Lord:

Duk. Deere Lad, beleeve it;
For they ſhall yet belye thy happy yeeres,
That ſay thou art a man: Dianas lip
Is not more ſmooth, and rubious: thy ſmall pipe
Is as the maidens organ, ſhrill, and ſound,
And all is ſemblative a womans part.
I know thy conſtellation is right apt
For this affaire: ſome foure or five attend him,
All if you will: for I my ſelfe am beſt
When leaſt in company: proſper well in this,
And thou ſhalt live as freely as thy Lord,
To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. Ile doe my beſt
To wooe your Lady: yet a barrefull ſtrife,
Who ere I wooe, my ſelfe would be his wife. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Maria, and Clowne.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou haſt bin, or I will not open my lips ſo wide as a briſtle may enter, in way of thy excuſe: my lady wil hang thee for thy abſence.

Clo. Let her hang me: he that is well hang'de in this world, needs to feare no colours.

Ma. Make that good.

Clo. He ſhall ſee none to feare.

Mar. A good lenton anſwer: I can tell thee where that ſaying was borne, of I feare no colours.

Clo. Where good miſtris Mary?

Mar. In the warres, and that may you be bold to ſay in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wiſedome that have it: and thoſe that are fooles, let them uſe their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hang'd for being ſo long abſent, or be turn'd away: is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging, prevents a bad marriage: and for turning away, let ſummer beare it out.

Mar. Your are reſolute then?

Clo. Not ſo neither, but I am reſolv'd on two points.

Mar. That if one breake, the other will hold: or if both breake, your gaskins fall.

Clo. Apt in good faith, very apt: well goe thy way, if ſir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eves fleſh, as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace you rogue, no more o'that: here comes my Lady: make your excuſe wiſely, your were beſt.

Enter Lady Olivia, with Malvolio.

Clo. Wit, and't be thy will, put me into good fooling: thoſe wits that thinke they have thee, do very oft prove fooles: and I that am ſure I lacke thee, may paſſe for a wiſe man. For what ſayes Quinapalus, Better a witty foole, then a fooliſh wit. God bleſſe thee Lady.

Ol. Take the foole away.

Clo. Doe you not heare fellowes, take away the Lady.

Ol. Goe too, y'are a dry foole: Ile no more of you: beſides you grow diſ-honeſt.

Clo. Two faults Madona, that drinke and good counſell will amend: for give the dry foole drinke, then is the foole not dry: bid the diſhoneſt man mend himſelfe, if he mend, he is no longer diſhoneſt; if he cannot, let the Botcher mend him: any thing that's mended, is but patch'd: vertue that tranſgreſſes, is but patcht with ſinne, and ſin that amends, is but patcht with vertue. If that this ſimple Sillogiſme will ſerve, ſo: if it will not, what remedy?

As there is no true Cuckold but calamity, ſo beautie's a flower; The Lady bad take away the foole, therefore I ſay againe, take her away.

Ol. Sir, I bad them take away you.

Clo. Miſpriſion in the higheſt degree. Lady, Cucullus non facit monachum : that's as much to ſay, as I weare not motley in my braine: good Madona, give me leave to prove you a foole.

Ol. Can you doe it?

Clo. Dexteriouſly, good Madona.

Ol. Make your proofe.

Clo. I muſt catechize you for it Madona, Good my Mouſe of vertue anſwer me.

Ol. Well ſir, for want of other idleneſſe, Ile bide your proofe.

Clo. Good Madona, why mournſt thou?

Ol. Good foole, for my brothers death.

Clo. I thinke his ſoule is in hell, Madona.

Ol. I know his ſoule is in heaven, foole.

Clo. The more foole (Madona) to mourne for your Brothers ſoule, being in heaven. Take away the foole, Gentlemen.

Ol. What thinke you of this foole Malvolio, doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and ſhall doe, till the pangs of death ſhake him: Infirmity that decaies the wiſe, doth ever make the better foole.

Clo. God ſend you ſir, a ſpeedy Infirmity, for the better increaſing your folly: Sir Toby will be ſworne that I am no Fox, but he will not paſſe his word for twopence that you are no foole.

Ol. How ſay you to that Malvolio?

Mal. I marvell your Ladyſhip takes delight in ſuch a barren raſcall: I ſaw him put downe the other day, with an ordinary foole, that has no more braine then a ſtone. Looke you now, he's out of his gard already: unleſſe you laugh and miniſter occaſion to him, he is gag'd. I proteſt I take theſe Wiſemen, that crow ſo at theſe ſet kind of fooles, no better then the fooles Zanies.

Ol. O you are ſicke of ſelfe-love Malvolio, and taſte with a diſtemper'd appetite. To be generous, guiltleſſe, and of free diſpoſition, is to take thoſe things for Bird-bolts, that you deeme Cannon bullets: There is no ſlander in an allow'd foole, though he doe nothing but rayle; nor no rayling, in a knowne diſcreet man, though he doe nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury indue thee with leaſing, for thou ſpeak'ſt well of fooles.

Enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate, a young Gentleman, much deſires to ſpeake with you.

Ol. From the Count Orſino, is it?

Ma. I know not (Madam) 'tis a faire young man, and well attended.

Ol. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Ma. Sir Toby Madam, your kinſman.

Ol. Fetch him off I pray you, he ſpeakes nothing but madman: Fye on him. Goe you Malvolio; If it be a ſuite from the Count, I am ſicke, or not at home. What you will, to diſmiſſe it. Exit Malvo.

Now you ſee ſir, how your fooling growes old, and people diſlike it.

Clo. Thou haſt ſpoke for us (Madona) as if thy eldeſt ſonne ſhould be a foole: whoſe ſcull, Iove cramme with braines, for heere he comes. Enter Sir Toby.

One of thy kin has a moſt weake Pia-mater.

Ol. By mine honor halfe drunke. What is he at the gate Coſin?

To. A Gentleman.

Ol. A Gentleman? What Gentleman?

To. 'Tis a Gentleman here. A plague o'theſe pickle herring: How now Sot.

Clo. Good Sir Toby.

Ol. Coſin, Coſin, how have you come ſo earely by this Lethargy?

Tob. Letchery, I defie Letchery: there's one at the gate.

Ol. I marry, what is he?

To, Let him be the divell and he will, I care not: give me faith ſay I. Well, it's all one. Exit.

Ol. What's a drunken man like, foole?

Clo. Like a drown'd man, a foole, and a madman: One draught above heate, makes him a foole, the ſecond maddes him, and a third drownes him.

Ol. Goe thou and ſeeke the Crowner, and let him ſit o'my Coz: for he's in the third degree of drinke: he's drown'd: goe looke after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet Madona, and the foole ſhall looke to the madman.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, yond young fellow ſweares hee will ſpeake with you. I told him you were ſicke, he takes on him to underſtand ſo much, and therfore comes to ſpeake with you. I told him you were aſleepe, he ſeemes to have a fore knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to ſpeake with you. What is to be ſaid to him Lady, he's fortified againſt any deniall.

Ol. Tell him, he ſhall not ſpeake with me.

Mal. Ha's beene told ſo: and he ſayes he'll ſtand at your doore like a Sheriffes poſt, and be the ſupporter to a bench, but he'll ſpeake with you.

Ol. What kind o'man is he?

Mal. Why of mankind.

Ol. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner: he'll ſpeake with you, will you, or no.

Ol, Of what perſonage, and yeeres is he?

Mal, Not yet old enough for a man, nor yong enough for a boy: as a ſquaſh is before tis a peſcod, or a Codling when tis almoſt an Apple: Tis with him in ſtanding water, betweene boy and man. He is very well-favour'd, and he ſpeakes very ſhrewiſhly: One would thinke his mothers milke were ſcarſe out of him.

Ol. Let him approach: Call in my Gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my Lady calls. Exit.

Enter Maria.

Ol. Give me my vaile: come throw it ore my face,
We'll once more heare Orſinos Embaſſie.

Enter Viola.

Vio. The honorable Lady of the houſe, which is ſhe?

Ol. Speake to me, I ſhall anſwer for her: your will.

Vio. Moſt radiant, exquiſite, and unmatchable beauty. I pray you tell me if this be the Lady of the houſe, for I never ſaw her. I would be loath to caſt away my ſpeech: for beſides that it is excellently well pend, I have taken great paines to con it. Good Beauties, let me ſuſtaine no ſcorne; I am very comptible, even to the leaſt ſiniſter vſage.

Ol. Whence came you ſir?

Vio. I can ſay little more then I have ſtudied, and that queſtion's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modeſt aſſurance, if you be the Lady of the houſe, that

I may proceede in my ſpeech.

Ol. Are you a Comedian?

Vio. No my profound heart: and yet (by the very phangs of malice, I ſweare) I am not that I play. Are you the Lady of the houſe?

Ol. If I doe not uſurpe my ſelfe, I am.

Vio. Moſt certaine, if you are ſhe, you doe uſurp your ſelfe: for what is yours to beſtow, is, not yours to reſerve. But this is from my Commiſſion: I will on with my ſpeech in your praiſe, and then ſhew you the heart of my meſſage.

Ols Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praiſe.

Vio. Alas, I tooke great paines to ſtudy it, and tis Pöeticall.

Ol. It is the more like to be feigned, I pray you keepe it in. I heard you were ſawcy at my gates, and allowd your approach rather to wonder at you, then to heare you. If you be not mad, be gon: if you have reaſon, be breefe: 'tis not that time of Moone with me, to make one in ſo skipping a dialogue.

Ma. Will you hoyſt ſayle ſir, here lyes your way.

Vio. No good ſwabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Some mollification for your Giant, ſweet Lady; tell me your mind, I am a meſſenger.

Ol. Sure you have ſome hiddeous matter to deliver, when the curteſie of it is ſo fearefull. Speake your office.

Vio. It alone concernes your eare: I bring no overture of warre, no taxation of homage; I hold the Olyffe in my hand: my words are as full of peace, as matter.

Ol. Yet you began rudely. What are you?
What would you?

Vio. The rudeneſſe that hath appear'd in me, have I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as ſecret as a maiden-heard: to your eares, Divinity; to any others, prophanation.

Ol. Give us the place alone.
We will heare this divinity. Now ſir, what is your text?

Vio. Moſt ſweet Lady.

Ol. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be ſaid of it. Where lyes your Text?

Vio. In Orſinoes boſome.

Ol. In his boſome? In what chapter of his boſome?

Vio. To anſwer by the method, in the firſt of his heart.

Ol. O, I have read it: it is hereſie. Have you no more to ſay?

Vio. Good Madam, let me ſee your face.

Ol. Have you any Commiſſion from your Lord, to negotiate with my face: you are now out of your Text: but we will draw the Curtaine, and ſhew you the picture. Looke you ſir, ſuch a one I was this preſent: Iſt not well done?

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Ol. 'Tis in graine ſir, 'twill endure winde and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blent, whoſe red and white,
Natures owne ſweet, and cunning hand laid on:
Lady, you are the cruell'ſt ſhe alive,
If you will leade theſe graces to the grave,
And leave the world no copy.

Ol. O ſir, I will not be ſo hard-hearted: I will give out divers ſcedules of my beauty. It ſhall be Inventoried and every particle and vtenſile labell'd to my will: As, Item two lippes indifferent red, Item two grey eyes, with lids to them: Item one necke, one chin, and ſo forth. Were you ſent hither to praiſe me?

Vio. I ſee you what you are, you are too proud:
But if you were the divell, you are faire:
My Lord, and maſter loves you: O ſuch love
Could be but recompenc'd, though you were crown'd
The non-pareill of beauty.

Ol. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, fertill teares,
With groanes that thunder love, with ſighes of fire.

Ol. Your Lord does know my mind, I cannot loue him
Yet I ſuppoſe him vertuous, know him noble,
Of great eſtate, of freſh and ſtainleſſe youth;
In voyces well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant,
And in dimenſion, and the ſhape of nature,
A gracious perſon; But yet I cannot love him:
He might haue tooke his anſwer long agoe.

Vio. If I did love you in my maſters flame,
With ſuch a ſuffring, ſuch a deadly life:
In your deniall, I would find no ſence,
I would not underſtand it.

Ol. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow Cabine at your gate,
And call upon my ſoule within the houſe,
Write loyall Cantons of contemned love,
And ſing them lowd even in the dead of night:
Hollaw your name to the reverberate hilles,
And make the babling Goſſip of the ayre,
Cry out Olivia: O you ſhould not reſt
Betweene the elements of ayre, and earth,
But you ſhould pitty me.

Ol. You might doe much:
What is your Parentage?

Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my ſtate is well:
I am a Gentleman.

Ol. Get you to your Lord:
I cannot love him: let him ſend no more,
Vnleſſe (perchance) you come to me againe,
To tell me how he takes it; Fare you well:
I thanke you for your paines: ſpend this for me.

Vio. I am no feede-poaſt, Lady; keepe your purſe,
My Maſter, not my ſelfe, lackes recompence.
Love make his heart of flint, that you ſhall love.
And let your fervour like my Maſters be,
Plac'd in contempt: Farwell fayre cruelty. Exit.

Ol. What is your Parentage?
Above my fortunes, yet my ſtate is well:
I am a Gentleman. Ile be ſworne thou art,
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbes, actions, and ſpirit,
Doe give thee five-fold blazon: not too faſt: ſoft, ſoft,
Vnleſſe the Maſter were the man. How now?
Even ſo quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinkes I feele this youths perfections
With an inviſible, and ſubtle ſtealth
To creepe in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.
What hoa, Malvolio.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. Heere Madam, at your ſervice.

Ol. Runne after that ſame peeviſh Meſſenger
The Counts man: he left this Ring behind him,
Would I, or not: tell him, Ile none of it.
Deſire him not to flatter with his Lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes, I am not for him:
If that the youth will come this way to morrow,
Ile give him reaſons for't: hye thee Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will. Exit.

Ol. I doe I know not what, and feare to find
Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind:

Fate, ſhew thy force, our ſelves we doe not owe.
What is decreed, muſt be: and be this ſo.

Finis, Actus primi.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Antonio, and Sebaſtian.

An. Will you ſtay no longer: nor will you not that I goe with you?

Seb. By your patience, no: my ſtarres ſhine darkely over me; the malignancy of my fate, might perhaps diſtemper yours, therefore I ſhall crave of you your leave, that I may beare my evills alone. It were a bad recompence for your love, to lay any of them on you.

An. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No ſooth ſir, my determinate voyage is meere extravagancy. But I perceive in you ſo excellent a touch of modeſty, that you will not extort from me, what I am willing to keepe in: therefore it charges me in manners, the rather to expreſſe my ſelfe: you muſt know of mee then Antonio, my name is Sebaſtian (which I call'd Roderigo) my father was that Sebáſtian of Meſſaline, whom I know you have heard of. He left behind him, my ſelfe, and a ſiſter, both borne in an houre: if the Heavens had beene pleaſ'd, would we had ſo ended. But you ſir, alter'd that, for ſome houre before you tooke me from the breach of the ſea, was my ſiſter drown'd.

An. Alas the day!

Seb. A Lady ſir, though it was ſaid ſhe much reſembled me, was yet of many accounted beautifull: but though I could not, with ſuch eſtimable wonder over-farre beleeve that, yet thus farre I will boldly publiſh her, ſhe bore a mind that envy could not but call faire: Shee is drown'd already ſir with ſalt water, though I ſeeme to drowne her remembrance againe with more.

Ant. Pardon me ſir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murther me for my love, let me be your ſervant.

Seb. If you will not undoe what you have done, that is kill him, whom you have recouer'd, deſire it not. Fare ye well at once, my boſome is full of kindneſſe, and I am yet ſo neere the manners of my mother, that upon the leaſt occaſion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me: I am bound to the Count Orſino's Court, farewell. Exit.

An. The gentleneſſe of all the gods goe with thee:
I have many enemies in Orſino's Court,
Elſe would I very ſhortly ſee thee there:
But come what may, I doe adore thee ſo,
That danger ſhall ſeeme ſport, and I will goe: Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Viola, and Malvolio, at ſeverall doores.

Mal. Were not you eu'n now, with the Counteſſe Olivia?

Vio. Even now ſir, on a moderate pace, I have ſince ariv'd but hither.

Mal. She returnes this Ring to you (ſir) you might have ſaved me my paines, to have taken it away your ſelfe. She adds moreover, that you ſhould put your Lord into a deſperate aſſurance, ſhe will none of him. And one thing more, that you be never ſo hardy to come againe in his affaires, unleſſe it be to report your Lords taking of this: receive it ſo.

Vio. She tooke the Ring of me, Ile none of it.

Mal. Come ſir, you peeviſhly threw it to her: and her will is, it ſhould be ſo return'd: If it be worth ſtooping for, there it lyes, in your eye: if not, be it his that finds it. Exit.

Vio. I left no Ring with her: what meanes this Lady?
Fortune forbid my out-ſide have not charm'd her:
She made good view of me, indeed ſo much,
That ſure me thought her eyes had loſt her tongue,
For ſhe did ſpeake in ſtarts diſtractedly.
She loves me ſure, the cunning of her paſſion
Invites me in this churliſh meſſenger:
None of my Lords Ring? Why he ſent her none?
I am the man, if it be ſo as tis,
Poore Lady, ſhe were better love a dreame:
Diſguiſe, I ſee thou art a wickedneſſe,
Wherein the pregnant enemy does much.
How eaſie is it, for the proper falſe
In womens waxen hearts to ſet their formes:
Alas, our frailty is the cauſe, not we,
For ſuch as we are made, if ſuch we be:
How will this fadge? My maſter loves her deerely,
And I (poore monſter) fond aſmuch on him:
And ſhe (miſtaken) ſeemes to dote on me:
What will become of this? As I am man,
My ſtate is deſperate for my maiſters love;
As I am woman (now alas the day)
What thriftleſſe ſighes ſhall poore Olivia breathe?
O time, thou muſt untangle this, not I,
It is too hard a knot for me t'unty.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Tob. Approach Sir Andrew: not to be a bed after midnight, is to be up betimes, and Diliculo ſurgere, thou know'ſt.

And. Nay by my troth I know not: but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

To. A falſe concluſion: I hate it as an unfill'd Canne, To be up after midnight, and to goe to bed then is early: ſo that to goe to bed after midnight, is to goe to bed betimes. Does not our lives conſiſt of the foure Elements?

An. Faith ſo they ſay, but I thinke it rather conſiſts of eating and drinking.

To. Th'art a ſcholler; let us therefore eate and drinke, Marian I ſay, a ſtoope of wine.

Enter Clowne.

And. Heere comes the foole yfaith.

Clo. How now my hearts: Did you never ſee the Picture of we three?

To. Welcome aſſe, now let's have a catch.

And. By my troth the foole has an excellent breaſt. I had rather then forty ſhillings I had ſuch a legge, and ſo ſweet a breath to ſing, as the foole has. Inſooth thou waſt in very gracious fooling laſt night, when thou ſpok'ſt of Pigrogromitus, of the Vapians paſſing the Equinoctiall of Queubus: 'twas very good yfaith: I ſent thee ſixepence for thy Lemon, hadſt it?

Clo. I did impeticos thy gratillity: for Malvolios noſe is no Whip-ſtocke. My Lady has a white hand, and the Mermidons are no bottle-ale houſes.

An. Excellent: Why this is the beſt fooling, when all is done. Now a ſong.

To. Come on, there is ſixe pence for you. Let's have a ſong.

An. There's a teſtrill of me too: if one knight give a-

Clo. Would you have a love-ſong, or a ſong of good life?

To. A love ſong, a love ſong.

An. I, I. I care not for good life.

Clowne ſings.

O Miſtris mine where are you roming?
O ſtay and heare, your true loves coming,
That can ſing both high and low.
Trip no further pretty ſweeting.
Iourneys end in lovers meeting.
Every wiſe mans ſonne doth know.

An. Excellent good, ifaith.

To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love, 'tis not heereafter,
Preſent mirth, hath preſent laughter:
What's to come, is ſtill unſure.
In delay there lyes no plenty,
Then come kiſſe me ſweet and twenty:
Youths a ſtuffe will not endure.

An. A mellifluous voyce, as I am true knight.

To. A contagious breath.

An. Very ſweet, and contagious ifaith.

To. To heare by the noſe, it is dulcet in contagion. But ſhall we make the Welkin dance indeed? Shall we rowze the night-Owle in a Catch that will drawe three ſoules out of one Weaver? Shall we doe that?

And. And you love me, let's doo't: I am dogge at a Catch.

Clo. Byrlady ſir, and ſome dogs will catch well.

And. Moſt certaine: Let our Catch be, Thou Knave.

Clo. Hold thy peace, thou Knave knight. I ſhall be conſtrain'd in't, to call thee Knave, Knight.

An. 'Tis not the firſt time I have conſtrained one to call me knave. Begin foole: it begins, Hold thy peace.

Clo. I ſhall never begin if I hold my peace.

An. Good ifaith: Come begin. Catch ſung.

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a catterwalling doe you keepe heere? If my Lady have not call'd up her Steward Malvolio, and bid him turne you out of doores, never truſt me.

To. My Lady's a Catayan, we are politicians, Malvolios a Peg-a-ramſie, and Three merry men be we. Am not I conſanguinious? Am I not of her blood: tilly vally. Lady! There dwelt a man in Babylon, Lady, Lady.

Clo. Beſhrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

An. I, he do's well enough if he be diſpos'd, and ſo doe I too: he does it with a better grace, but I doe it more naturall.

To. O the twelfe day of December.

Mar. For the love o'God peace.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My maſters are you mad? Or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honeſty, but to gabble like Tinkers at this time of night? Doe yee make an Alehouſe of my Ladies houſe, that ye ſqueak out your Coziers Catches without any mitigation or remorſe of voyce? Is there no reſpect of place, perſons, nor time in you?

To. We did keepe time ſir in our Catches. Snecke up.

Mal. Sir Toby, I muſt be round with you. My Lady bad me tell you, that though ſhe harbors you as her kinſman, ſhe's nothing ally'd to your diſorders. If you can ſeparate your ſelfe and your miſdemeanors, you are welcome to the houſe: if not, and it would pleaſe you to take leave of her, ſhe is very willing to bid you farewell.

To. Farewell deere heart, ſince I muſt needs be gone.

Mar. Nay good Sir Toby.

Clo. His eyes doe ſhew his dayes are almoſt done.

Mal. Is't even ſo?

To. But I will never dye.

Clo. Sir Toby there you lye.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

To Shall I bid him goe?

Clo. What and if you doe?

To. Shall I bid him goe, and ſpare not?

Clo. O no, no, no, no, you dare not.

To. Out o'tune ſir, ye lye: Art any more then a Steward? Doſt thou thinke becauſe thou art vertuous, there ſhall be no more Cakes and Ale?

Clo. Yes by S. Anne, and Ginger ſhall be hot y'th mouth too.

To. Th'art i'th right. Goe ſir, rub your Chaine with crums. A ſtope of Wine Maria.

Mal. Miſtris Mary, if you priz'd my Ladyes favour at any thing more then contempt, you would not give meanes for this uncivill rule; ſhe ſhall know of it by this hand. Exit.

Mar. Goe ſhake your eares.

An. 'Twere as good a deed as to drinke when a mans a hungry, to challenge him the field, and then to breake promiſe with him, and make a foole of him.

To. Doo't knight, Ile write thee a Challenge: or Ile deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby be patient for to night; Since the youth of the Counts was to day with my Lady, ſhe is much out of quiet. For Mounſieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: If I doe not gull him into an ayword, and make him a common recreation, doe not thinke I have wit enough to lye ſtraight in my bed: I know I can doe it.

To. Poſſeſſe us, poſſeſſe us, tell us ſomething of him.

Mar. Marry ſir, ſometimes he is a kind of Puritane.

An. O, if I thought that, Ide beate him like a dogge.

To. What for being a Puritan, thy exquiſite reaſon, deere knight.

An. I have no exquiſite reaſon for't, but I have reaſon good enough.

Mar. The div'll a Puritane that he is, or any thing conſtantly but a time-pleaſer, an affection'd Aſſe, that Cons State without booke, and utters it by great ſwarths. The beſt perſwaded of himſelfe: ſo cram'd (as he thinkes) with excellencies, that it is his ground of faith, that all that looke on him, love him: and on that vice in him, will my revenge find notable cauſe to worke.

To. What wilt thou doe?

Mar. I will drop in his way ſome obſcure Epiſtles of love, wherein by the colour of his beard, the ſhape of his legge, the manner of his gate, the expreſſure of his eye, forehead, and complection, he ſhall find himſelfe moſt feelingly perſonated. I can write very like my Lady your Neece, on a forgotten matter we can hardly make diſtinction of our hands.

To. Excellent, I ſmell a device.

An. I hav't in my noſe too.

To. He ſhall thinke by the Letters that thou wilt d that they come from my Neece, and that ſhe's in love with him.

Mar. My purpoſe is indeed a horſe of that colour.

An. And your horſe now would make him an Aſſe.

Mar. Aſſe, I doubt not.

An. O twill be admirable.

Mar. Sport royall I warrant you: I know my Phyſicke will worke with him, I will plant you two, and let the Foole make a third, where he ſhall find the Letter: obſerve this conſtruction of it: For this night to bed, and dreame on the event. Farewell. Exit.

To. Good night Penthiſilea.

An. Before me ſhe's a good wench.

To. She's a beagle, true bred, and one that adores me; what o'that?

An. I was ador'd once too.

To. Let's to bed knight: Thou hadſt neede ſend for more money.

An. If I cannot recover your Neece, I am a foule way out.

To. Send for money knight, if thou haſt her not i'th end, call me Cut.

An. If I doe not, never truſt me, take it how you will.

To. Come, come, Ile goe burne ſome Sacke, tis too late to goe to bed now: Come knight, come knight.

Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Du. Give me ſome Muſicke; Now good morrow friends
Now good Ceſario, but that peece of ſong,
That old and Anticke ſong we heard laſt night;
Me thought it did releeve my paſſion much,
More then light ayres, and recollected termes
Of theſe moſt briſke and giddy-paced times.
Come, but one verſe.

Cu. He is not here (ſo pleaſe your Lordſhip) that ſhould ſing it.

Du. Who was it?

Cur. Feſte the Ieſter my Lord, a foole that the Lady Oliviaes Father tooke much delight in. He is about the houſe.

Duk. Seeke him out, and play the tune the while.

Muſicke playes.

Come hither Boy, if ever thou ſhalt love
In the ſweet pangs of it, remember me:
For ſuch as I am, all true Lovers are,
Vnſtaid and skittiſh in all motions elſe,
Save in the conſtant image of the creature
That is belov'd. How doſt thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very eccho to the ſeate
Where love is thron'd.

Du. Thou doſt ſpeake maſterly,
My life upon't, yong though thou art, thine eye
Hath ſtaid upon ſome favour that it loves:
Hath it not boy?

Vio. A little, by your favor.

Du. What kind of woman iſt?

Vio. Of your complection.

Du. She is not worth thee then. What yeares ifaith?

Vio. About your yeares my Lord.

Du. Too old by heaven: Let ſtill the woman take
An elder then her ſelfe, ſo weares ſhe to him;
So ſwayes ſhe levell in her husbands heart:
For boy, however we doe praiſe our ſelves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirme,
More longing, wavering, ſooner loſt and worne,
Then womens are.

Vio. I thinke it well my Lord.

Du. Then let thy Love be yonger then thy ſelfe,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent:
For women are as Roſes, whoſe faire flowre
Being once diſplaid, doth fall that very houre.

Vio. And ſo they are: alas, that they are ſo:
To dye, even when they to perfection grow.

Enter Curio, and Clowne.

Duk. O fellow come, the ſong we had laſt night:
Marke it Ceſario, it is old and plaine;
The Spinſters and the Knitters in the Sun,
And the free maids that weave their thred with bones,
Doe uſe to chant it: it is ſilly ſooth,
And dallies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.

Clo. Are you ready Sir?

Duk. I prethee ſing. Muſicke.

The Song.

Come away, come away death,
And in ſad cypreſſe let me be laid,
Fye away, fie away breath,
I am ſlaine by a faire cruell maid.
My ſhrowd of white, ſtucke all with Ew, O prepare it.
My part of death no one ſo true did ſhare it.

Not a flower, not a flower ſweet
On my blacke coffin, let there be ſtrewne:
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poore corpes, where my bones ſhall be throwne:
A thouſand thouſand ſighes to ſave, lay me O where
Sad true lover never find my grave, to weepe there.

Du. There's for thy paines.

Clo. No paines ſir, I take pleaſure in ſinging ſir.

Du. Ile pay thy pleaſure then.

Clo. Truely ſir, and pleaſure will be paid one time, or another.

Duk. Give me now leave, to leave thee.

Duk. Now the melancholly God protect thee, and the Tailor make thy doublet of changeable Taffata, for thy mind is a very Opall. I would have men of ſuch conſtancy put to Sea, that their buſineſſe might be every thing, and their intent every where, for that's it, that alwayes makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell. Exit.

Duk. Let all the reſt give place: Once more Ceſario,
Get thee to yond ſame ſoveraigne cruelty:
Tell her my love (more noble then the world)
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands,
The parts that fortune hath beſtow'd upon her,
Tell her I hold as giddily as Fortune:
But 'tis that miracle, and Queene of Iems
That nature prankes her in, attracts my ſoule.

Vio. But if ſhe cannot love you ſir.

Du. It cannot be ſo anſwer'd.

Vio. Sooth but you muſt.
Say that ſome Lady, as perhappes there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her:
You tell her ſo: Muſt ſhe not then be anſwer'd?

Duk. There is no womans ſides

Can bide the beating of ſo ſtrong a paſſion,
As love doth give my heart: no womans heart
So bigge, to hold ſo much, they lacke retention.
Alas, their love may be call'd appetite,
No motion of the Liver, but the Pallat,
That ſuffer ſurfet, cloyment, and revolt,
But mine is all as hungry as the Sea,
And can digeſt as much, make no compare
Betweene that love a woman can beare me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. I but I know.

Du. What doſt thou know?

Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith they are as true of heart, as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man
As it might be perhaps, were I a woman
I ſhould your Lordſhip.

Duk. And what's her hiſtory?

Vio. A blanke my Lord: ſhe never told her love,
But let concealment like a worme i'th budde
Feede on her damaske cheeke: ſhe pin'd in thought,
And with a greene and yellow melancholly,
She ſate like Patience on a Monument,
Smiling at greefe. Was not this love indeed?
We men may ſay more, ſweare more, but indeed
Our ſhewes are more then will: for ſtill we prove
Much in our vowes, but little in our love.

Du. But di'd thy ſiſter of her love my Boy?

Vio. I am all the daughters of my Fathers houſe,
And all the brothers too: and yet I know not.
Sir, ſhall I to this Lady?

Du. I that's the Theame,
To her in haſte: give her this Iewell: ſay,
Thy love can give no place, bide no denay. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

To. Come thy wayes Signior Fabian.

Fab. Nay Ile come: if I loſe a ſcruple of this ſport, let me be boyl'd to death with Melancholly.

To. Wouldſt thou not be glad to have the niggardly Raſcally ſheepe-biter, come by ſome notable ſhame?

Fa. I would exult man; you know he brought me out of favour with my Lady, about a Beare-baiting heere.

To. To anger him wee'll have the Beare againe, and we will foole him blacke and blew, ſhall we not ſir Andrew?

An. And we doe not, it is pitty of our lives.

Enter Maria.

To. Heere comes the little villaine: How now my Nettle of India?

Mar. Get ye all three into the box tree: Malvolio's comming downe this walke, he has beene yonder i'the Sunne practiſing behaviour to his owne ſhadow this halfe houre: obſerve him for the love of Mockery: for I know this Letter will make a contemplative Ideot of him. Cloſe in the name of jeaſting, lye thou there: for heere comes the Trowt, that muſt be caught with tickling. Exit.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but Fortune, all is fortune. Maria once told me ſhe did affect me, and I have heard her ſelfe come thus neere, that ſhould ſhe fancy, it ſhould be one of my complection. Beſides ſhe uſes me with a more exalted reſpect, then any one elſe that followes her. What ſhould I thinke on't?

To. Heere's an over-weening rogue.

Fa. Oh peace: Contemplation makes a rare Turkey Cocke of him, how he jets under his advanc'd plumes.

And. Slight I could ſo beate the Rogue.

To. Peace I ſay.

Mal. To be Count Malvolio.

To. Ah Rogue.

An. Piſtoll him, piſtoll him.

To. Peace, peace.

Mal. There is example for't: The Lady of the Strachy, married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

An. Fye on him Iezabel.

Fa. O peace, now he's deepely in: looke how imagination blowes him.

Mal. Having beene three moneths married to her, ſitting in my ſtate.

To. O for a ſtone-bow to hit him in the eye.

Mal. Calling my Officers about me, in my branch'd Velvet gowne: having come from a day bed, where I have left Olivia ſleeping.

To. Fire and Brimſtone.

Fa. O peace, peace.

Mal. And then to have the humor of ſtate: and after a demure travaile of regard: telling them I know my place, as I would they ſhould doe theirs: to aske for my kinſman Toby.

To. Boltes and ſhackles.

Fa. Oh peace, peace, peace, now, now.

Mal. Seaven of my people with an obedient ſtart, make out for him: I frowne the while, and perchance winde up my watch, or play with my ſome rich Iewell: Toby approaches; curtſies there to me.

To. Shall this fellow live?

Fa. Though our ſilence be drawne from us with cares, yet peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus: quenching my familiar ſmile with an auſtere regard of controll.

To. And do's not Toby take you a blow o'the lippes then?

Mal. Saying, Coſine Toby, my Fortunes having caſt me on your Neece, give me this prerogative of ſpeech:

To. What, what?

Mal. You muſt amend your drunkenneſſe.

To. Out ſcab.

Fab. Nay patience, or we breake the ſinewes of our plot?

Mal. Beſides you waſte the treaſure of your time, with a fooliſh knight.

Aud. That's me I warrant you:

Mal. One ſir Andrew.

And. I knew 'twas I, for many doe call me foole.

Mal. What employment have we heere?

Fa. Now is the Woodcocke neere the gin.

To. Oh peace, and the ſpirit of humors intimate reading aloud to him,

Mal. By my life this is my Ladies hand: theſe be her very C's, her V's, and her T's, and thus makes ſhe her great P's. It is in contempt of queſtion her hand.

An. Her C's, her V's, and her T's: why that?

Mal. To the unknowne belov'd, this, and my good Wiſhes: Her very Phraſes: By your leave wax. Soft, and the impreſſure her Lucrece, with which ſhe uſes to ſeale: tis my Lady: To whom ſhould this be?

Fab. This winnes him, Liver and all.

Mal. Iove knowes I love, but who, Lips doe not moove, no man muſt know. No man muſt know. What followes? The numbers alter'd: No man muſt know,
If this ſhould be thee Malvolio?

To. Marry hang thee brocke.

Mal. I may command where I adore, but ſilence like a Lucreſſe knife,
With bloodleſſe ſtroke my heart doth gore, M. O. A. I. doth ſway my life.

Fa. A fuſtian riddle.

To. Excellent Wench, ſay I.

Mal. M. O. A. I. doth ſway my life. Nay but firſt let me ſee, let me ſee, let me ſee.

Fab. What diſh a poyſon has ſhe dreſt him?

To. And with what wing the ſtallion checkes at it?

Mal. I may command, where I adore: Why ſhe may command me: I ſerve her, ſhe is my Lady. Why this is evident to any formall capacity. There is no obſtruction in this, and the end; What ſhould that Alphabeticall poſition portend, if I could make that reſemble ſomething in me? Softly, M. O. A. I.

To. O I, make up that, he is now at a cold ſent.

Fab. Sowter will cry upon't for all this, though it be as ranke as a Fox.

Mal. M. Malvolio, M. Why that begins my name.

Fab. Did not I ſay he would worke it out, the Curre is excellent at faults.

Mal. M. But then there is no conſonancy in the ſequell that ſuffers under probation: A. ſhould follow, but O. does.

Fa. And O ſhall end, I hope.

To. I, or Ile cudgell him, and make him cry O.

Mal. And then I. comes behind.

Fab. I, and you had any eye behind you, you might ſee more detraction at your heeles, then Fortunes before you.

Mal. M. O. A. I. This ſimulation is not as the former: and yet to cruſh this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of theſe Letters are in my name. Soft, here followes proſe: If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my Starres I am above thee, but be not affraid of greatneſſe: Some are become great, ſome atcheeve greatneſſe, and ſome have greatneſſe thruſt upon em. Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and ſpirit embrace them, and to inure thy ſelfe to what thou art like to be: caſt thy humble ſlough, and appeare freſh. Be oppoſite with a kinſman, ſurly with ſervants: Let thy tongue tang arguments of State; put thy ſelfe into the tricke of ſingularity. Shee thus adviſes thee, that ſighes for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow ſtockings, and wiſh'd to ſee thee ever croſſe garter'd: I ſay remember, goe too, thou art made if thou deſir'ſt to be ſo: If not, let me ſee thee a ſteward ſtill, the fellow of ſervants, and not worthy to touch Fortunes fingers Farwell. Shee that would alter ſervices with thee, the fortunate unhappy daylight and champian diſcovers not more: This is open, I will be proud, I will reade politicke Authors, I will baffle Sir Toby, I will waſh off groſſe acquaintance, I will be point deviſe, the very man. I doe now foole my ſelfe, to let imagination jade me; for every reaſon excites to this, that my Lady loves me. She did commend my yellow ſtockings of late, ſhe did praiſe my legge being croſſe-garter'd, and in this ſhe manifeſts her ſelfe to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to theſe habits of her liking. I thanke my ſtarres, I am happy: I will be ſtrange, ſtout, in yellow ſtocking, and croſſe garter'd even with the ſwiftneſſe of putting on. Iove, and my ſtarres be praiſed. Heere is yet a poſtſcript. Thou canſt not chooſe but know who I am. If thou entertainſt my love, let it appeare in thy ſmiling, thy ſmiles become thee well. Therefore in my preſence ſtill ſmile, deere my ſweet, I prethee. Iove I thanke thee, I will ſmile, I will doe every thing that thou wilt have me. Exit.

Fab. I will not give my part of this ſport for a penſion of thouſands to be paid from the Sophy.

To. I could marry this wench for this device.

An. So could I too.

To. And aske no other dowry with her, but ſuch another jeſt.

Enter Maria.

An. Nor I neither.

Fab. Heere comes my noble gull-catcher.

To. Wilt thou ſet thy foote o'my necke?

An. Or o'mine either?

To. Shall I play my fredome at tray-trip, and become thy bondſlave?

An. Ifaith, or I either?

Tob. Why, thou haſt put him in ſuch a dreame, that when the image of it leaves him, he muſt run mad.

Ma. Nay but ſay true, do's it worke upon him?

To. Like Aqua-vitæ with a Midwife.

Mar. If you will then ſee the fruits of the ſport, marke his firſt approach before my Lady: he will come to her in yellow ſtockings, and 'tis a colour ſhe abhorres, and croſſe garter'd, a faſhion ſhe deteſts: and he will ſmile upon her, which will now be ſo unſuteable to her diſpoſition, being addicted to a melancholly, as ſhe is, that it cannot but turne him into a notable contempt: if you will ſee it, follow me.

To. To the gates of Tartar, thou moſt excellent divell of wit.

And. Ile make one too. Exeunt.

Finis Actus Secundi.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Viola, and Clowne.

Vio. Save thee Friend and thy Muſicke: doſt thou live by the Tabor?

Clo. No ſir, I live by the Church.

Vio. Art thou a Churchman?

Clo. No ſuch matter ſir, I doe live by the Church: for, I doe live at my houſe, and my houſe doth ſtand by the Church.

Vio. So thou maiſt ſay the King lyes by a begger, if a begger dwell neer him: or the Church ſtands by thy Tabor, if thy Tabor ſtand by the Church.

Clo. You have ſaid ſir: To ſee this age! A ſentence is but a chev'rill glove to a good witte, how quickely the wrong ſide may be turn'd outward.

Vio. Nay that's certaine: they that dally nicely with words, may quickely make them wanton.

Clo. I would therefore my ſiſter had had no name Sir.

Vio. Why man?

Clo. Why ſir, her name's a word, and to dally with that word, might make my ſiſter wanton: But indeede, words are very Raſcals, ſince bonds diſgrac'd them.

Vio. Thy reaſon man?

Clo. Troth ſir, I can yeeld you none without words, and words are growne ſo falſe, I am loath to prove reaſon with them.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and car'ſt for nothing.

Clo. Not ſo ſir, I doe care for ſomething: but in my conſcience ſir, I doe not care for you: if that be to care for nothing ſir, I would it would make you inviſible.

Vio. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's foole?

Clo. No indeed ſir, the Lady Olivia has no folly, ſhee will keepe no foole ſir, till ſhe be married, and fooles are as like husbands, as Pilchers are to Herrings, the husbands the bigger, I am indeed not her foole, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I ſaw thee late at the Count Orſino's.

Clo Foolery ſir, does walke about the Orbe like the Sunne, it ſhines every where. I would be ſorry ſir, but the Foole ſhould be as oft with your Maſter, as with my Miſtris: I thinke I ſaw your wiſedome there.

Vio. Nay, and thou paſſe upon mee, Ile no more with thee. Hold there's expences for thee.

Clo. Now Iove in his next commodity of haire, ſend thee a beard.

Vio. By my troth Ile tell thee, I am almoſt ſicke for one, though I would not have it grow on my chinne. Is thy Lady within.

Clo. Would not a paire of theſe have bred ſir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together, and put to uſe.

Clo. I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia ſir, to bring a Creſsida to this Troylus.

Vio. I underſtand you ſir, 'tis well begg'd.

Clo. The matter I hope is not great ſir; begging, but a begger: Creſsida was a begger. My Lady is within ſir. I will conſter to them whence you come, who you are, and what you would is out of my Welkin, I might ſay Element, but the word is over-worne. Exit.

Vio. This fellow is wiſe enough to play the foole,
And to doe that well, craves a kinde of wit:
He muſt obſerve their mood on whom he jeſts,
The quality of perſons, and the time:
And like the Haggard, checke at every Feather
That comes before his eye. This is a practice,
As full of labour as a Wiſe-mans Art:
For folly that he wiſely ſhewes, is fit:
But Wiſe mens folly falne, quite taint their wit.

Enter ſir Toby and Andrew.

To. Save you Gentleman.

Vio. And you ſir.

And. Dien vou guard Mounſier.

Vio. Et vouz anſie voſtre ſerviteure.

And. I hope ſir, you are, and I am yours.

To. Will you encounter the houſe, my Neece is deſirous you ſhould enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your Neece ſir, I meane ſhe is the liſt of my voyage.

To. Taſte your legges ſir, put them to motion.

Vio. My legges doe better underſtand me ſir, then I underſtand what you meane by bidding me taſte my legges.

To. I meane to goe ſir, to enter.

Vio. I will anſwer you with gate and entrance, but wee are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Gentlewoman.

Moſt excellent accompliſh'd Lady, the heavens raine Odours on you.

And. That youth's a rare Courtier, raine Odours, well.

Vio. My matter hath no voyce Lady, but to your owne moſt pregnant and vouchſafed eare.

And. Odours, pregnant, and vouchſafed: Ile get 'em all three already.

Ol. Let the Garden doore be ſhut, and leave me to my hearing. Give me your hand ſir.

Vio. My duty Madam, and moſt humble ſervice.

Ol. What is your name?

Vio. Ceſario is your ſervants name, faire Princeſſe.

Ol. My ſervant ſir? 'Twas never merry world,
Since lowly feigning was call'd complement:
y'are ſervant to the Count Orſino (youth.)

Vio. And he is yours, and his muſt needs be yours;
your ſervants ſervant, is your ſervant Madam.

Ol. For him, I thinke not on him: for his thoughts,
Would they were blankes, rather then fill'd with me.

Vio. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts
On his behalfe.

Ol. O by your leave I pray you.
I bad you never ſpeake againe of him;
But would you undertake another ſuite
I had rather heare you, to ſolicit that,
Then Muſicke from the ſpheares.

Vio. Deere Lady.

Ol. Give me leave, beſeech you: I did ſend,
After the laſt enchantment you did heare,
A Ring in chace of you. So did I abuſe
My ſelfe, my ſervant, and I feare me you:
Vnder your hard conſtruction muſt I ſit,
To force that on you in a ſhamefull cunning
Which you knew none of yours. What might you think?
Have you not ſet mine Honor at the ſtake,
And baited it with all th'unmuzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can thinke? to one of your receiuing
Enough is ſhewne, a Cipreſſe, not a boſome,
Hides my poore heart: ſo let me heare you ſpeake.

Vio. I pitty you.

Ol. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No not a grice: for tis a vulgar proofe
That very oft we pitty enemies.

Ol. Why then me thinkes 'tis time to ſmile agen:
O world, how apt the poore are to be proud?
If one ſhould be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the Lion, then the Wolfe?

Clocke ſtrikes.

The clocke upbraides me with the waſte of time.
Be not affraid good youth, I will not have you;
And yet when wit and youth is come to harveſt,
Your wife is like to reape a proper man:
There lyes your way, due Weſt.

Vio. Then Weſtward hoe:
Grace and good diſpoſition attend your Ladyſhip:
You'l nothing Madame to my lord, by me:

Ol. Stay: I prethee tell me what thou thinkſt of me?

Vio. That you doe thinke you are not what you are.

Ol. If I thinke ſo, I thinke the ſame of you.

Vio. Then thinke you right: I am not what I am.

Ol. I would you were, as I would have you be.

Vio. Would it be better Madam, then I am?
I wiſh it might, for now I am your foole.

Ol. O what a deale of ſcorne, lookes beautifull?
In the contempt and anger of his lip,
A murdrous guilt ſhewes not it ſelfe more ſoone,
Then love that would ſeeme hid: Loves night, is noone.
Ceſario, by the Roſes of the Spring,
By maid-hood, honor, truth, and every thing.
I love thee ſo, that maugre all thy pride,

Nor wit, nor reaſon, can my paſſion hide:
Doe not extort thy reaſons from this clauſe,
For that I wooe, thou therefore haſt no cauſe:
But rather reaſon thus, with reaſon fetter;
Love ſought, is good: but given unſought, is better.

Vio. By innocence I ſweare, and by my youth,
I have one heart, one boſome, and one truth,
And that no woman has, nor never none
Shall miſtris be of it, ſave I alone.
And ſo adieu good Madam, never more,
Will I my Maſters teares to you deplore.

Ol. Yet come againe: for thou perhaps mayſt move
That heart which now abhorres, to like his love.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

And. No faith, Ile not ſtay a jot longer:

Tob. Thy reaſon deere venom, give thy reaſon.

Fabia. You muſt needs yeeld your reaſon, Sir Andrew.

And. Marry I ſaw your Neece doe more favours to the Counts Serving-man, than ever ſhe beſtow'd upon me: I ſaw't i'th Orchard.

Tob. Did ſhe ſee the while, old boy, tell me that?

And. As plaine as I ſee you now.

Fabi. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

And. S'light; will you make an Aſſe o'me?

Fabi. I prove it legitimate ſir, upon the Oathes of judgement, and reaſon.

Tob. And they have beene grand Iury men, ſince before Noah was a Saylor.

Fabi. Shee did ſhew favour to the youth in your ſight, onely to exaſperate you, to awake your dormouſe valour to put fire in your Heart, and brimſtone in your Liver: you ſhould then have accoſted her, and with ſome excellent jeſts (fire-new from the mint) you ſhould have bangd the youth into dumbeneſſe: this was look'd for at your hand, and this was baulkt: the double gilt of this opportunity you let time waſh off, and you are now ſaild into the North of my Ladies opinion, where you will hang like an yſickle on a Dutchmans beard, unleſſe you doe redeeme it, by ſome laudable attempt, either of valour or policy.

And. And't be any way, it muſt be with Valour, for policy I hate: I had as liefe be a Browniſt, as a Politician.

Tob. Why then build me thy fortunes upon the baſis of valour. Challenge me the Counts youth to fight with him hurt him in eleven places, my Neece ſhall take note of it, and aſſure thy ſelfe, there is no love-Broker in the world, can more prevaile in mans commendation with woman, than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this ſir Andrew.

And. Will either of you beare me a chalenge to him?

Tob. Go, write it in a martiall hand, be curſt and briefe: it is no matter how witty, ſo it be eloquent, and full of invention: taunt him with the licenſe of Inke: if thou thou'ſt him ſome thrice, it ſhall not be amiſſe, and as many Lyes, as will lye in thy ſheete of paper, although the ſheete were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, ſet 'em downe, goe about it. Let there be gall enough in thy inke, though thou write with a Gooſe-pen, no matter: about it.

And. Where ſhall I find you?

Tob. We'll call thee at the Cubiculo: Goe

Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a deere Manakin to you Sir Toby.

Tob. I have beene deere to him lad, ſome two thouſand ſtrong, or ſo.

Fa. We ſhall have a rare Letter from him; but you'le not deliver't.

Tob. Never truſt me then: and by all meanes ſtirre on the youth to an anſwer. I thinke Oxen and waine-ropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were open'd and you find ſo much blood in his Liver, as will clog the foot of a flea, Ile eate the reſt of th'anatomy.

Fab. And his oppoſite the youth beares in his viſage no great preſage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Tob. Looke where the yongeſt Wren of mine comes.

Mar. If you deſire the ſpleene, and will laugh your ſelves into ſtitches, follow me; yond gull Malvolio is turned Heathen, a very Renegatho; for there is no chriſtian that meanes to be ſaved by beleeving rightly, can ever beleeve ſuch impoſſible paſſages of groſſeneſſe. Hee's in yellow ſtockings.

Tob. And croſſe garter'd?

Mar. Moſt villanouſly: like a Pedant that keepes a Schoole i'th Church: I have dogg'd him like his murtherer. He does obey every point of the Letter that I dropt, to betray him: He does ſmile his face into more lynes, then is in the new Mappe, with the augmentation of the Indies: you have not ſeene ſuch a thing as tis: I can hardly forbeare hurling things at him, I know my Lady will ſtrike him: if ſhe doe, he'll ſmile, and take't for a great favour.

Tob. Come bring us, bring us where he is.

Exeunt Omnes.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Sbaſtian and Anthonio.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you,
But ſince you make your pleaſure of your paynes,
I will no further chide you.

Anth. I could not ſtay behind you: my deſire
(More ſharpe than filed ſteele) did ſpurre me forth,
And not all love to ſee you (though ſo much
As might have drawne one to a longer voyage)
But jealouſie, what might befall your travell,
Being skilleſſe in theſe parts: which to a ſtranger,
Vnguided, and unfriended, often prove
Rough, and unhoſpitable. My willing love,
The rather by theſe arguments of feare
Set forth in your purſuite.

Seb. My kind Anthonio,
I can no other anſwer make, but thankes,
But were my worth, as is my conſcience firme,

You ſhould find better dealing: what's to doe?
Shall we goe ſee the reliques of this Towne?
Ant. To morrow ſir, beſt firſt goe ſee your Lodging.
Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night,
I pray you let us ſatisfie our eyes
With the memorialls, and the things of fame
That doe renowne this City.
Ant. Would youl'd pardon me:
I doe not without danger walke theſe ſtreetes.
Once in a ſea-fight 'gainſt the Count his gallies,
I did ſome ſervice, of ſuch note indeed,
That were I tane heere, it would ſcarſe be anſwer'd.
Seb. Belike you ſlew great number of his people.
Ant. Th' offence is not of ſuch a bloody nature,
Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrell
Might well have given us bloody argument:
It might have ſince beene anſwer'd in repaying
What we tooke from them, which for Traffiques ſake
Moſt of our Citty did. Onely my ſelfe ſtood out,
For which if I be lapſed in this place
I ſhall pay deere.
Seb. Doe not then walke too open.
Ant. It doth not fit me: hold ſir, here's my purſe.
In the South Suburbes at the Elephant
Is beſt to lodge: I will beſpeake our dyet,
Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your knowledge
With viewing of the Towne, there ſhall you have me.
Seb. Why I your purſe?
Ant. Haply your eye ſhall light upon ſome toy
You have deſire to purchaſe: and your ſtore
I thinke is not for idle Markets, ſir.
Seb. Ile be your purſe-bearer, and leave you
For an houre.
Ant. To th' Elephant.
Seb. I doe remember. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Olivia, and Maria.

Ol. I have ſent after him, he ſayes he'll come:
How ſhall I feaſt him? What beſtow of him?
For youth is bought more oft, then begg'd, or borrow'd.
I ſpeake too loud: Where's Malvolio, he is ſad, and civill,
And ſuites well for a ſervant with my fortunnes,
Where is Malvolio?
Mar. He's comming Madam:
But in very ſtrange manner. He is ſure poſſeſt Madam.
Ol. Why what's the matter, does he rave?
Mar. No Madam, he does nothing but ſmile: your Ladyſhip were beſt to have ſome guard about you, if he come, for ſure the man is tainted in's wits.
Ol. Goe call him hither.

Enter Malvolio.

I am as mad as he,
If ſad and merry madneſſe equall bee.
Ol. How now Malvolio?
Mal. Sweet Lady, ha, ha.
Ol. Smil'ſt thou? I ſent for thee upon a ſad occaſion.
Mal. Sad Lady, I could be ſad:
This does make ſome obſtruction in the blood:
This croſſe-gartering, but what of that?
If it pleaſe the eye of one, it is with me as the very true Sonnet it: Pleaſe one, and pleaſe all.
Ol. Why how doeſt thou man?
What is the matter with thee?
Mal. Not blacke in my mind, though yellow in my legges: It did come to his hands, and Commands ſhall be executed. I thinke we doe know the ſweet Romane hand.
Ol. Wilt thou goe to bed Malvolio?
Mal. To bed? I ſweet heart; and Ile come to thee.
Ol. God comfort thee: Why doſt thou ſmile ſo, and kiſſe thy hand ſo oft?
Mar. How doe you Malvolio.
Mal. At your requeſt:
Yes Nightingales anſwer Dawes.
Mar. Why appeare you with this ridiculous boldneſſe before my Lady?
Mal. Be not afraid of greatneſſe: 'twas well writ.
Ol. What meaneſt thou by that Malvolio?
Mal. Some are borne great.
Ol. Ha?
Mal. Some atcheeve greatneſſe.
Ol. What ſayſt thou?
Mal. And ſome have greatneſſe thruſt upon them.
Ol. Heaven reſtore thee.
Mal. Remember who commended thy yellow ſtockings.
Ol. Thy yellow ſtockings?
Mal. And wiſh'd to ſee thee croſſe garter'd.
Ol. Croſſe garter'd?
Mal. Goe too, thou art made, if thou deſir'ſt to be ſo.
Ol. Am I made?
Mal. If not, let me ſee thee a ſervant ſtill.
Ol. Why this is very Midſommer madneſſe.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the yong Gentleman of the Count Orſino's is return'd, I could hardly entreate him backe: he attends your Ladyſhips pleaſure.
Ol. Ile come to him.
Good Maria, let this fellow be look'd too. Where's my Coſin Toby, let ſome of my people have a ſpeciall care of him, I would not have him miſcarry for the halfe of my Dowry. Exit.
Mal. Oh, ho, doe you come neere me now: no worſe man then ſir Toby to looke to me. This concurres directly with the Letter, ſhe ſends him on purpoſe, that I may appeare ſtubborne to him: for ſhe incites me to that in the Letter. Caſt thy humble ſlough ſayes ſhe: be oppoſite with a Kinſman, ſurly with ſervants, let thy tongue tang with arguments of ſtate, put thy ſelfe into the tricke of ſingularity: and conſequently ſets downe the manner how: as a ſad face, a reverend carriage, a ſlow tongue, in the habite of ſome Sir of note, and ſo forth. I have lymde her, but it is Ioves doing, and Iove make me thankefull. And when ſhe went away now, let this Fellow be look'd to: Fellow? not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but Fellow. Why every thing adheres together, that no dramme of a ſcruple, no ſcruple of a ſcruple, no obſtacle, no incredulous or unſafe circumſtance: What can be ſaid? Nothing that can be, can come betweene me, and the full proſpect of my hopes. Well Iove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Enter Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

To. Which way is he in the name of ſanctity? If all the divels of hell be drawne in little, and Legion himſelfe poſſeſt him, yet Ile ſpeake to him.

Fab. Heere he is, heere he is: how iſt with you ſir? How iſt with you man?

Mal. Goe off, I diſcard you: let me enjoy my private: goe off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend ſpeakes within him; did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my Lady prayes you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah ha, does ſhe ſo?

To. Goe to, goe to: peace, peace, we muſt deale gently with him: Let me alone. How doe you Malvolio? How iſt with you? What man, defie the divell: conſider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Doe you know what you ſay?

Mar. La you, and you ſpeake ill of the divell, how he takes it at heart. Pray God he be not bewitch'd.

Fab. Carry his water to th'wiſe woman.

Mar. Marry and it ſhall be done to morrow morning if I live. My Lady would not looſe him for more then ile ſay.

Mal. How now miſtris?

Mar. Oh Lord.

To. Prethee hold thy peace, this is not the way: Doe you not ſee you move him? Let me alone with him.

Fa. No way but gentleneſſe, gently, gently: the Fiend is rough, and will not be roughly us'd.

To. Why how now my bawcocke? how doſt thou chucke?

Mal. Sir.

To. I biddy, come with me. What man, tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with ſathan. Hang him foule Colliar.

Mar. Get him to ſay his prayers, good ſir Toby get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers Minx.

Mar. No I warrant you, he will not heare of godlyneſſe.

Mal. Goe hang your ſelves all: you are idle ſhallow things, I am not of your element, you ſhall know more hereafter. Exit.

To. Iſt poſſible?

Fab. If this were plaid upon a ſtage now, I could condemne it as an improbable fiction.

To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device man.

Mar. Nay purſue him now, leaſt the device take ayre, and taint.

Fa. Why we ſhall make him mad indeed.

Mar. The houſe well be the quieter.

To. Come, we'l have him in a darke roome and bound. My Neece is already in the beleife that he's mad: we may carry it thus for our pleaſure, and his pennance, till our very paſtime tyred out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him: at which time, we wil bring the device to the bar and crowne thee for a finder of madmen: but ſee, but ſee.

Enter Sir Andrew.

Fa. More matter for a May morning.

And. Heere's the Challenge, reade it: I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't.

Fab. Iſt ſo ſawcy?

And. I, iſt? I warrant him: doe but reade.

To. Give me.

Youth, whatſoever thou art, thou art but a ſcurvy fellow.

Fa. Good and valiant.

To. Wonder not, nor admire not in thy minde why I doe call thee ſo, for I will ſhew thee no reaſon for't.

Fa. A good note, that keepes you from the blow of the Law.

To. Thou comſt to the Lady Olivia, and in my ſight ſhe uſes thee kindly: but thou lyeſt in thy throat, that is not the matter I challenge thee for.

Fa. Very breefe, and to exceeding good ſence-leſſe.

To. I will way-lay thee going home, where if it be thy chance to kill me.

Fa. Good.

To. Thou kilſt me like a rogue and a villaine.

Fa. Still you keepe o'th windie ſide of the Law: good.

To. Fartheewell, and God have mercie upon one of our ſoules. He may have mercie upon mine, but my hope is better, and ſo looke to thy ſelfe. Thy friend as thou uſeſt him, and thy ſworne enemy, Andrew Ague-cheeke.

To. If this Letter move him not, his legges cannot: Ile giv't him.

Mar. You may have verie fit occaſion for't: hee is now in ſome commerce with my Lady, and will by and by depart.

To. Go ſir Andrew: ſcout mee for him at the corner of the Orchard like a bum-Baily: ſo ſoone as ever thou ſeeſt him, draw, and as thou draw'ſt ſweare horribly: for it comes to paſſe oft, that a terrible oath, with a ſwaggering accent ſharpely twang'd off, gives manhood more approbation, then ever proofe it ſelfe would have earn'd him. Away.

And. Nay let me alone for ſwearing. Exit.

To. Now will not I deliuer his Letter: for the behaviour of the yong Gentleman, gives him out to be of good capacity, and breeding: his employment betweene his Lord and my Neice, confirmes no leſſe. Therefore, this Letter being ſo excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will finde it comes from a Clodde-pole. But ſir, I will deliver his Challenge by word of mouth; ſet upon Ague-cheeke a notable report of valor, and drive the Gentleman (as I know his youth will aptly receive it) into a moſt hideous opinion of his rage, skill, furie, and impetuoſity. This will ſo fright them both, that they wil kill one another by the looke, like Cockatrices.

Enter Olivia and Viola.

F. Heere he comes with your Neice, give them way til he take leave, and preſently after him.

To. I wil meditate the while upon ſome horrid meſſage for a Challenge. Exeunt.

Ol. I have ſaid too much unto a heart of ſtone,
And laid mine honour too vnchary on't:
There's ſomething in me that reproves my fault:
But ſuch a head-ſtrong potent fault it is:
That it but mockes reproofe.

Vio. With the ſame haviour that your paſſion beares,
Goes on my Maiſters greefes.

Ol. Heere, weare this Iewell for me, tis my picture:
Refuſe it not, it hath no tongue, to vex you:
And I beſeech you come againe to morrow.
What ſhall you aske of me that Ile deny,
That honour (ſav'd) may upon asking give.

Vio. Nothing but this, your true love for my maiſter.

Ol. How with mine honor may I give him that,
Which I have given to you?

Vio. I will acquit you.

Ol. Well, come againe to morrow: fare-thee-well,
A Fiend like thee might beare my ſoule to hell. Exit.

Enter Toby and Fabian.

To. Gentleman, God ſave thee.

Vio. And you ſir.

To. That defence thou haſt, betake thee too't: of what nature the wrongs are thou haſt done him, I know not: but thy intercepter full of deſpight, bloody as the Hunter, attends thee at the Orchard end: diſmount thy tucke, be yare in thy preparation, for thy aſſaylant is quicke, ſkillfull, and deadly.

Vio. You miſtake ſir I am ſure, no man hath any quarrell to me: my remembrance is very free and cleere from any image of offence done to any man.

To. You'l find it otherwiſe I aſſure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your gard: for your oppoſite hath in him what youth, ſtrength, ſkill, and wrath, can furniſh man withall.

Vio. I pray you ſir what is he?

To. He is knight dubb'd with unhatch'd Rapier, and on carpet conſideration, but he is a divell in private brall, ſoules and bodies hath he divorc'd three, and his incenſement at this moment is ſo implacable, that ſatisfaction can be none, but by pangs of death and ſepulcher: Hob, nob, is his word: giv't or take't.

Vio. I will returne againe into the houſe, and deſire ſome conduct of the Lady. I am no fighter, I have heard of ſome kind of men, that put quarrells purpoſely on others, to taſte their valour: belike this is a man of that quirke.

To. Sir, no: his indignation derives it ſelfe out of a very computent injury, therefore get you on, and give him his deſire. Backe you ſhall not to the houſe, unleſſe you undertake that with me, which with as much ſafety you might anſwer him: therefore on, or ſtrippe your ſword ſtarke naked: for meddle you muſt that's certaine, or forſweare to weare iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivill as ſtrange. I beſeech you doe me this courteous office, as to know of the Knight what my offence to him is: it is ſomething of my negligence, nothing of my purpoſe.

To. I will doe ſo. Signiour Fabian, ſtay you by this Gentleman, till my returne, Exit Toby.

Vio. Pray you ſir, doe you know of this matter?

Fab. I know the knight is incenſt againſt you, even to a mortall arbitrement, but nothing of the circumſtance more.

Vio. I beſeech you what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderfull promiſe to read him by his forme, as you are like to find him in the proofe of his valour. He is indeed ſir, the moſt ſkillfull, bloudy, and fatall oppoſite that you could poſſibly have found in any part of Illyria: will you walke towards him, I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I ſhall be much bound to you for't: I am one, that had rather goe with ſir Prieſt, then ſir knight: I care not who knowes ſo much of my mettle. Exeunt.

Enter Toby, and Andrew.

Tob. Why man he's a very divell, I have not ſeene ſuch a firago: I had a paſſe with him, rapier, ſcabber'd, and all: and he gives me the ſtucke in with ſuch a mortall motion that it is ineuitable: and on the anſwer, he payes your as ſurely, as your feete hits the ground they ſtep on. They ſay, he has beene Fencer to the Sophy.

And. Pox on't, ile not meddle with him.

To. I but he will not now be pacified,
Fabian can ſcarſe hold him yonder.

An. Plague on't, and I thought he had beene valiant, and ſo cunning in Fence, I'de have ſeene him damn'd ere I'de have challeng'd him. Let him let the matter ſlip, and Ile give him my horſe, gray Capilet.

Tob. Ile make the motion: ſtand heere, make a good ſhew on't, this ſhall end without the perdition of ſoules, marry Ile ride your horſe as well as I ride you.

Enter Fabian, and Viola.

I have his horſe to take up the quarrell, I have perſwaded him the youths a divell.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him: and pants, and lookes pale, as if a Beare were at his heeles.

To. There's no remedy ſir, he will fight with you for's oath ſake: marry he hath better bethought him of his quarrell, and he finds that now ſcarſe to be worth talking of: therefore draw for the ſupportance of his vow, he proteſts he will not hurt you.

Vio. Pray God defend mee: a little thing would make me tell them how much I lacke of a man.

Fab. Give ground if you ſee him furious.

To. Come ſir Andrew, there's no remedy, the Gentleman will for his honors ſake have one bout with you: he cannot by the Duello avoid it: but he has promiſed me, as he is a Gentleman and a Soldiour, he will not hurt you. Come on, too't.

And. Pray God he keepe his oath.

Enter Antonio.

Vio. I doe aſſure you tis againſt my will.

Ant. Put up your ſword: if this yong Gentleman
Have done offence, I take the fault on me:
If you offend him, I for him defie you.

Tob. You ſir? Why, what are you?

Ant. One ſir, that for his love dares yet doe more
Then you have heard him brag to you he will.

Tob. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Enter Officers.

Fab. O good ſir Toby hold: heere come the Officers.

Tob. Ile be with you anon.

Vio. Pray ſir, put your ſword up if you pleaſe.

And. Marry will I ſir: and for that I promis'd you Ile be as good as my word. He will beare you eaſily, and raines well.

1. Off. This is the man, doe thy Office.

2. Off. Anthonio, I arreſt thee at the ſuit of Count Orſino.

Ant. You doe miſtake me ſir.

1. Off. No ſir, no jot: I know your favour well:
Though now you have no ſea-cap on your head:
Take him away, he knowes I know him well.

Ant. I muſt obey. This comes with ſeeking you:
But there's no remedy, I ſhall anſwer it:
What will you doe? now my neceſſity
Makes me to aske you for my purſe. It greeves me
Much more, for what I cannot doe for you,
Then what befals my ſelfe: you ſtand amaz'd,
But be of comfort.

2. Off. Come ſir away.

Ant. I muſt entreat of you ſome of that money.

Vio. What money ſir?
For the faire kindneſſe you have ſhew'd me here,
And part being prompted by your preſent trouble,
Out of my leane and low ability
Ile lend you ſomething: my having is not much,
Ile make diviſion of my preſent with you:
Hold, there's halfe my Coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now,
Iſt poſſible that my deſerts to you
Can lacke perſwaſion? Doe not tempt my miſery,
Leaſt that it make me ſo unſound a man
As to upbraid you with thoſe kindneſſes

That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none.
Nor know I you by voyce, or any feature:
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Then lying, vainneſſe, babling drunkenneſſe,
Or any taint of vice, whoſe ſtrong corruption
Inhabites our fraile blood.

Ant. Oh heavens themſelves!

2. Off. Come ſir, I pray you goe.

Ant. Let me ſpeake a little. This youth that you ſee
I ſnatch'd one halfe out of the jawes of death, (heere;
Releev'd him with ſuch ſanctity of love;
And to his image, which me thought did promiſe
Moſt venerable worth, did I devotion.

1. Off. What's that to us, the time goes by: Away.

Ant. But oh, how vilde an idoll proves this god:
Thou haſt Sebaſtian done good feature, ſhame,
In Nature, there's no blemiſh but the mind:
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind.
Vertue is beauty, but the beateous evill
Are empty trunkes, ore-flouriſh'd by the devill.

1. Off. The man growes mad, away with him:
Come, come ſir.

Ant. Leade me on. Exit.

Vio. Me thinkes his words doe from ſuch paſſion flye
That he beleeves himſelfe, ſo doe not I:
Prove true imagination, oh prove true,
That I deere brother, be now tane for you.

To. Come hither Knight, come hither Fabian: Well whiſper ore a couplet or two of moſt ſage ſawes.

Vio. He nam'd Sebaſtian: I my brother know
Yet living in my glaſſe: even ſuch, and ſo
In favour was my Brother, and he went
Still in this faſhion, colour, ornament,
For him I imitate: Oh if it prove,
Tempeſts are kind, and ſalt waves freſh in love. Exit.

Tob. A very diſhoneſt paltry boy, and more a coward then a Hare, his diſhoneſty appeares, in leaving his friend heere in neceſſity, and denying him: and for his cowardſhip aske Fabian.

Fab. A Coward, a moſt devout Coward, religious in it.

And. Slid Ile after him againe, and beate him.

To. Doe, cuffe him ſoundly, but never draw thy ſword

And. And I doe not.

Fab. Come, let's ſee the event.

Tob. I dare lay any mony, twill be nothing yet. Exit.

Actus Quartus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Sebaſtian, and Clowne.

Clo. Will you make me beleeve, that I am not ſent for you?

Seb. Goe to, goe to, thou art a fooliſh fellow,
Let me be cleere of thee.

Clo. Well held out yfaith: No, I doe not know you, nor I am not ſent to you by my Lady, to bid you come ſpeake with her: nor your name is not Maſter Ceſario, nor this is not my noſe neither: Nothing that is ſo, is ſo.

Seb. I prethee vent thy folly ſome-where elſe, thou know'ſt not me.

Clow. Vent my folly: He has heard that word of ſome great man, and now applyes it to a foole. Vent my folly: I am affraid this great lubber the World will prove a Cockney: I prethee now ungird thy ſtrangenes, and tell me what I ſhall vent to my Lady? Shall I vent to her that that art comming?

Seb. I prethee fooliſh greeke depart from me, there's money for thee, if you tarry longer, I ſhall give worſe paiment.

Clo. By my troth thou haſt an open hand: theſe Wiſemen that give fooles money, get themſelves a good report, after fourteene yeares purchaſe.

Enter Andrew, Toby, and Fabian.

And. Now ſir, have I met you againe: there's for you.

Seb. Why there's for thee, and there, and there,
Are all the people mad?

To. Hold ſir, or Ile throw your dagger ore the houſe.

Clo. This will I tell my Lady ſtraight, I would not be in ſome of your coats for two pence.

To. Come on ſir, hold.

And. Nay let him alone, Ile goe another way to worke with him: Ile have an action of Battery againſt him, if there he any law in Illyria: though I ſtroke him firſt, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let goe thy hand.

Tob. Come ſir, I will not let you go. Come my yong ſouldier put up your yron: you are well fleſh'd: Come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldſt thou now?
If thou dar'ſt tempt me further, draw thy ſword.

To. What, what? Nay then I muſt have an Ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.

Enter Olivia.

Ol. Hold Toby, on thy life I charge thee hold.

Tob. Madam.

Ol. Will it be ever thus? Vngracious wretch,
Fit for the Mountaines, and the barbarous Caves,
Where manners ne're were preach'd: out of my ſight.
Be not offended, deere Ceſario:
Rudesbey be gone. I prethee gentle friend,
Let thy faire wiſedome, not thy paſſion ſway
In this uncivill, and unjuſt extent
Againſt thy peace. Goe with me to my houſe,
And heare thou there how many fruitleſſe prankes
This Ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby
Maiſt ſmile at this: Thou ſhalt not choose but goe:
Doe not deny, beſhrew his ſoule for me,
He ſtarted one poore heart of mine, in thee.

Seb. What relliſh is in this? How runs the ſtreame?
Or I am mad, or elſe this is a dreame:
Let fancy ſtill my ſenſe in Lethe ſteepe,
If it be thus to dreame, ſtill let me ſleepe.

Ol. Nay come I prethee, would thoud'ſt be rul'd by me.

Seb. Madam, I will.

Ol. O ſay ſo, and ſo be. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Maria, and Clowne.

Mar. Nay, I prethee put on this gowne, and this beard, make him beleeve thou art ſir Topas the Curate, doe it quickly. Ile call ſir Toby the whilſt.

Clo. Well, Ile put it on, and I will diſſemble my ſelfe in't, and I would I were the firſt that ever diſſembled in ſuch a Gowne. I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor leane enough to be thought a good Student: but to be ſaid an honeſt man, and a good Houſekeeper goes as fairely, as to ſay, a carefull man, and a great Scholler. The Competitors enter.

Enter Tobie.

To. Iove bleſſe thee M. Parſon.

Clo. Bonos dies ſir Tobie: for as the old Hermit of Prage, that never ſaw Pen and Inke, very wittily ſaid to a Neece of King Gorbodacke, that that is, is: ſo I being M. Parſon, am M. Parſon; for what is that, but that? and is, but is?

To. To him ſir Topas.

Clow. What hoa, I ſay, Peace in this priſon.

To. The Knave counterfeits well: a good Knave.

Malvolio within.

Mal. Who cals there?

Clo. Sir Topas the Curate, who comes to viſite Malvolio the Lunaticke.

Mal. Sir Topas, ſir Topas, good ſir Topas goe to my Ladie.

Clo. Out hyperbolicall fiend, how vexeſt thou this man? Talkeſt thou nothing but of Ladies?

Tob. Well ſaid M. Parſon.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged, good ſir Topas doe not thinke I am mad: they have layde mee heere in hideous darkneſſe.

Clo. Fye, thou diſhoneſt Sathan: I call thee by the moſt modeſt termes, for I am one of thoſe gentle ones, that will uſe the Divell himſelfe with curteſie: ſayſt thou that houſe is darke?

Mal. As hell ſir Topas.

Clo. Why it hath bay Windowes tranſparant as Baricadoes, and the cleare ſtones toward the South North, are as luſtrous as Ebony: and yet complaineſt thou of obſtruction?

Mal. I am not mad ſir Topas, I ſay to you this houſe is darke,

Clo. Madman thou erreſt: I ſay there is no darkneſſe but ignorance, in which thou art more puzell'd then the Ægyptians in their fogge.

Mal. I ſay this houſe is as darke as ignorance, though Ignorance were as darke as hell; and I ſay there was never man thus abus'd, I am no more madde than you are, make the triall of it in any conſtant queſtion.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras, concerning Wilde-fowle?

Mal. That the ſoule of our Grandam, might happily inhabite a Bird.

Clo. What think'ſt thou of his opinion?

Mal. I thinke nobly of the ſoule, and no way approve his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well: remaine thou ſtill in darkeneſſe, thou ſhalt hold th'opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits, and feare to kill a Woodcocke, leſt thou diſpoſſeſſe the houſe of thy Grandam. Fare thee well.

Mal. Sir Topas, ſir Topas.

To. My moſt exquiſite ſir Topas.

Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.

Mar. Thou mightſt have done this without thy beard and gowne, he ſees thee not.

Tob. To him in thine owne voyce, and bring me word, how thou findſt him: I would wee were all rid of this knavery. If hee may be conveniently deliver'd, I would he were, for I am now ſo farre in offence with my Neece, that I cannot purſue with any ſafety this ſport the upſhot. Come by and by to my Chamber. Exit.

Clo. Hey Robin, jolly Robin, tell me how thy Lady does.

Mal. Foole.

Clo. My Lady is unkinde, perdie.

Mal. Foole.

Clo. Alas why is ſhe ſo.

Mal. Foole, I ſay.

Clo. She loves another. Who calls, ha?

Mal. Good Foole, as ever thou wilt deſerve well at my hand, helpe me to a Candle, and Pen, Inke, and Paper: as I am a Gentleman, I will live to bee thankefull to thee for't.

Clo. M. Malvolio?

Mal. I good Foole.

Clo. Alas ſir, how fell you beſides your five wits?

Mal. Foole, there was never man ſo notoriouſly abus'd: I am as well in my wits (foole) as thou art.

Clo. But as well: then you are mad indeed, if you bee no better in your wits then a foole.

Mal. They have here propertied me: keepe mee in darkeneſſe, ſend Miniſters to mee, Aſſes, and doe all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Adviſe you what you ſay: the Miniſter is here. Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens reſtore: endevour thy ſelfe to ſleepe, and leave thy vaine bibble babble.

Mal. Sir Topas.

Clo. Maintaine no words with him good fellow. Who I ſir, not I ſir. God buy you good ſir Topas: Marry Amen. I will ſir, I will ſir.

Mal. Foole, foole, foole I ſay.

Clo. Alas ſir be patient. What ſay you ſir, I am ſhent for ſpeaking to you.

Mal. Good foole helpe me to ſome light, and ſome Paper, I tell thee I am as well in my wits, as any man in Illyria,

Clo: Well-a-day, that you were ſir.

Mal: By this hand I am: good foole, ſome Inke, Paper, and Light: and convey what I will ſet downe to my Lady: it ſhall advantage thee more, then ever the bearing of Letter did.

Clo. I will helpe you too't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed, or doe you but counterfeit?

Mal. Beleeve me, I am not, I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, Ile ne're beleeve a madman till I ſee his braines, I will fetch you light, and paper, and inke.

Mal. Foole, Ile requite it in the higheſt degree: I prethee be gone.

Clo. I am gone ſir, and anon ſir,
Ile be with you againe:
In a trice, like to the old vice,
your neede to ſuſtaine.
Who with Dagger of Lath, in his rage and his wrath,
cryes ah ha, to the Divell:
Like a mad lad, paire thy nayles Dad,
Adieu good man Divell. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Sebaſtian.

Seb. This is the ayre, that is the glorious Sunne,
This Pearle ſhe gave me, I doe fee'l it, and ſee't,
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,

Yet 'tis not madneſſe. Where's Anthonio then?
I could not finde him at the Elephant,
Yet there he was, and there I found this credite,
That he did range the Towne to ſeeke me out,
His counſell now might doe me golden ſervice,
For though my ſoule diſputes well with my ſenſe,
That this may be ſome error, but no madneſſe,
Yet doth this accident and flood of Fortune,
So farre exceed all inſtance, all diſcourſe,
That I am ready to diſtruſt mine eyes,
And wrangle with my reaſon that perſwades me
To any other truſt, but that I am mad,
Or elſe the Ladies mad; yet if 'twere ſo,
She could not ſway her houſe, command her followers,
Take, and give backe affaires, and their diſpatch,
With ſuch a ſmooth, diſcreet, and ſtable-bearing
As I perceive ſhe do's: there's ſomething in't
That is deceiveable. But here the Lady comes.

Enter Olivia, and Prieſt.

Ol. Blame not this haſte of mine: if you meane well
Now goe with me, and with this holy-man
Into the Chantry by: there before him,
And underneath that conſecrated roofe,
Plight me the full aſſurance of your faith,
That my moſt jealous, and too doubtfull ſoule
May live at Peace. He ſhall conceale it,
Whiles you are willing it ſhall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keepe
According to my birth, what doe you ſay?

Seb. Ile follow this good man, and goe with you,
And having ſworne truth, ever will be true.

Ol. Then lead the way good father, and heavens ſo ſhine,
That they may fairely note this act of mine. Exeunt.

Finis Actus Quarti.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Clowne and Fabian.

Fab. Now as thou lov'ſt me, let me ſee this Letter.

Clow. Good M. Fabian grant me another requeſt.

Fab. Any thing.

Clow. Doe not deſire to ſee this Letter.

Fab. This is to give a Dog, and in recompence deſire my dogge againe.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?

Clow. I ſir, we are ſome of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well: how doeſt thou my good Fellow?

Clo. Truely ſir, the better for my foes, and the worſe for my friends.

Du. Iuſt the contrary: the better for thy friends.

Clo. No ſir, the worſe.

Du. How can that be?

Clo. Marry ſir, they praiſe me, and make an Aſſe of me, now my foes tell me plainely, I am an Aſſe: ſo that by my foes ſir, I profit in the knowledge of my ſelfe, and by my friends I am abuſed: ſo that concluſions to be as kiſſes, if your foure negatives make your two affirmatives, why then the worſe for my friends, and the better for my foes.

Du. Why this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth ſir, no: though it pleaſe you to bee one of my friends.

Du. Thou ſhalt not be the worſe for me, there's gold.

Clo. But that it would be double dealing ſir, I would you could make it another.

Du. O you give me ill counſell.

Clo. Put your Grace in your pocket ſir, for this once, and let your fleſh and blood obey it.

Du. Well, I will be ſo much a ſinner to be a double dealer: there's another.

Clo. Primo, ſecundo, tertio, is a good Play, and the olde ſaying is, the third Payes for all: the triplex ſir, is a good tripping meaſure, or the bels of S. Bennet ſir, may put you in minde, one, two, three.

Du. You can foole no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your Lady know I am here to ſpeake with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry ſir, lullaby to your bounty till I come agen. I goe ſir, but I would not have you to thinke, that my deſire of having is the ſinne of covetouſneſſe: but as you ſay ſir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. Exit.

Enter Anthonio and Officers.

Vio. Heere comes the man ſir, that did reſcue me.

Du. That face of his I doe remember well,
Yet when I ſaw it laſt, it was beſmear'd
As blacke as Vulcan, in the ſmoake of Warre:
A bawbling Veſſell was he Captain of,
For ſhallow draught and Bulke unprizable,
With which ſuch ſcathfull grapple did he make,
With the moſt noble bottome of our Fleet,
That very envy, and the tongue of loſſe
Cride' fame and honour on him: What's the matter?

1 Offi. Orſino, this is that Anthonio
That tooke the Phœnix, and her fraught from Candy,
And this is he that did the Tiger boord,
When your yong Nephew Titus loſt his legge;
Heere in the ſtreets, deſperate of ſhame and ſtate,
In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindneſſe ſir, drew on my ſide,
But in concluſion put ſtrange ſpeech upon me,
I know not what 't was, but diſtraction.

Du. Notable Pyrate, thou ſalt-water Theefe,
What fooliſh boldneſſe brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou in termes ſo bloudy, and ſo deere
Haſt made thine enemies?

Ant. Orſino: Noble ſir,
Be pleas'd that I ſhake off theſe names you give mee:
Anthonio never yet was Theefe, or Pyrate,
Though I confeſſe, on baſe and ground enough
Orſino's enemie. A witchcraft drew me hither:
That moſt ingratefull Boy there by your ſide,
From the rude ſeas enrag'd and foamy mouth
Did I redeeme: a wracke paſt hope he was:
His life I gave him, and did thereto adde
My love without retention, or reſtraint,
All this in dedication. For his ſake,
Did I expoſe my ſelfe (pure for his love)
Into the danger of this adverſe Towne,
Drew to defend him, when he was beſet:
Where being apprehended, his falſe cunning
(Not meaning to partake with me in danger)
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,

And grew a twenty yeeres removed thing,
While one would winke: denide me mine owne purſe,
Which I had recommended to his uſe,
Not halfe an houre before.
Vio. How can this be?
Du. When came he to this Towne?
Ant. To day my Lord: and for three monthes before,
No interim, not a minutes vacancie,
Both day and night did we keepe company.

Enter Olivia and attendants.

Du. Heere comes the Counteſſe, now heaven walkes on earth:
But for thee fellow; fellow thy words are madneſſe,
Three monthes this youth hath tended upon me,
But more of that anon. Take him aſide.
Ol. What would my Lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may ſeeme ſerviceable?
Ceſario, you doe not keepe promiſe with me.
Vio. Madam.
Du. Gracious Olivia.
Ol. What doe you ſay Ceſario? Good my Lord.
Vio. My Lord would ſpeake, my dutie huſhes me.
Ol. If it be ought to the old tune my Lord,
It is as fat and fulſome to mine eare
As howling after Muſicke.
Du. Still ſo cruell?
Ol. Still ſo conſtant Lord.
Du. What to perverſeneſſe? you uncivill Lady
To whoſe ingrate, and unauſpicious Altars
My ſoule the faithfull'ſt offerings have breath'd out
That ere devotion tender'd. What ſhall I doe?
Ol. Even what it pleaſe my Lord, that ſhall become (him.
Du. Why ſhould I not, (had I the heart to doe it)
Like to the Ægyptian Theefe, at point of death
Kill what I love: (a ſavage jealouſie,
That ſometime ſavours nobly) but heare me this:
Since you to non-regardance caſt my faith,
And that I partly know the inſtrument
That ſcrewes me from my true place in your favour:
Live you the Marble-breſted Tyrant ſtill.
But this your Minion, whom I know you love,
And whom, by heaven I ſweare, I tender deerely,
Him will I teare out of that cruell eye,
Where he ſits crowned in his Maſters ſpight.
Come Boy with me, my thoughts are ripe in miſchiefe:
Ile ſacrifice the Lambe that I doe love,
To ſpight a Ravens heart within a Dove.
Vio. And I moſt jocond, apt, and willingly,
To doe you reſt, a thouſand deathes would die.
Ol. Where goes Ceſario?
Vio. After him I love,
More then I love theſe eyes, more then my life,
More by all mores, then ere I ſhall love wife.
If I doe feigne, you witneſſes above
Puniſh my life, for tainting of my Love.
Ol. Aye me deteſted, how am I beguil'd?
Vir. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?
Ol. Haſt thou forgot thy ſelfe? Is it ſo long?
Call forth the holy Father.
Du. Come, away.
Ol. Whither my Lord? Ceſario, Husband, ſtay.
Du. Husband?
Ol. I Husband. Can he that deny?
Du. Her husband, ſirrah?
Vio. No my Lord, not I.
Ol. Alas, it is the baſeneſſe of thy feare,
That makes thee ſtrangle thy propriety:
Feare not Ceſario, take thy fortunes up,
Be that thou know'ſt thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'ſt.

Enter Prieſt.

O welcome Father:
Father, I charge thee by thy reverence
Here to unfold, though lately we intended
To keepe in darkeneſſe, what occaſion now
Reveales before 'tis ripe: what thou doeſt know
Hath newly paſt, betweene this youth, and me.
Prieſt. A Contract of eternall bond of love,
Confirm'd by mutuall joynder of your hands,
Atteſted by the holy cloſe of lippes,
Strengthened by enterchangement of your Rings,
And all the Ceremony of this compact
Seal'd in my function, by my teſtimony:
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave
I have travail'd but two houres.
Du. O thou diſſembling Cub: what wilt thou be
When time hath ſow'd a grizzle on thy caſe?
Or will not elſe thy craft ſo quickly grow,
That thine owne trip ſhall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her, but direct thy feet,
Where thou, and I (henceforth) may never meet.
Vio. My Lord, I doe proteſt.
Ol. O doe not ſweare,
How little faith, though thou haſt too much feare.

Enter Sir Andrew.

And. For the love of God a Surgeon, ſend one preſently to ſir Toby.

Ol. What's the matter?

And. H'as broke my head a-croſſe, and has given Sir Toby a bloody Coxecombe to: for the love of God your helpe, I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

Ol. Who has done this Sir Andrew?

And. The Counts Gentleman, one Ceſario: wee tooke him for a Coward, but he's the very Divell incardinate.

Du. My Gentleman Ceſario?

And. Odd's lifelings here he is: you broke my head for nothing, and that that I did, I was ſet on to doo't by ſir Toby.

Vio. Why doe you ſpeake to me, I never hurt you:
You drew your ſword upon me without cauſe,
But I beſpake you faire, and hurt you not.

Enter Toby and Clowne.

And. If a bloody Coxecombe be a hurt, you have hurt me: I thinke you ſet nothing by a bloody Coxecombe, Heere comes ſir Toby halting, you ſhall heare more: but if he had not beene in drinke, hee would have tickel'd you other gates then he did.

Du. How now Gentleman? how iſt with you?

To. That's all one, has hurt me, and there's th'end on't. Sot, didſt ſee Dicke Surgeon ſot?

Clo. O he's drunke ſir above an houre agone: his eyes were ſet at eight i'th morning.

To. Then he's a Rogue after a paſſy meaſures Pavin: I hate a drunken Rogue.

Ol. Away with him? Who hath made this havocke with them?

And. Ile helpe you Sir Toby, becauſe we'll be dreſt together.

To. Will you helpe an Aſſe-head, and a Coxecombe, and a Knave: a thinne-fac'd Knave, a Gull?

Ol. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

Enter Sebaſtian.

Seb. I am ſorry Madam I have hurt your kinſman:
But had it beene the brother of my blood,
I muſt have done no leſſe with wit and ſafety.
You throw a ſtrange regard upon me, and by that
I doe perceive it hath offended you:
Pardon me (ſweet one) even for the vowes
We made each other, but ſo late agoe.

Du. One face, one voyce, one habit, and two perſons,
A naturall Perſpective, that is, and is not.

Seb. Anthonio, O my deare Anthonio!
How have the houres rack'd, and tortu'rd me,
Since I have loſt thee?

Ant. Sebaſtian are you?

Seb. Fear'ſt thou that Anthonio?

Ant. How have you made diviſion of your ſelfe,
An Apple cleft in two, is not more twin
Then theſe two creatures. Which is Sebaſtian?

Ol. Moſt wonderfull.

Seb. Doe I ſtand there? I never had a brother:
Nor can there be a Deity in my nature
Of here, and every where. I had a ſiſter,
Whom the blinde waves and ſurges have devour'd:
Of charity, what kinne are you to me?
What Countreyman? What name? What Parentage?

Vio. Of Meſſaline: Sebaſtian was my Father,
Such a Sebaſtian was my brother to:
So went he ſuited to his watery tombe:
If ſpirits can aſſume both forme and ſuite,
You come to fright us.

Seb. A ſpirit I am indeed,
But am in that dimenſion groſly clad,
Which from the Wombe I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the reſt goe even,
I ſhould my teares let fall upon your cheeke,
And ſay, thrice welcome drowned Viola.

Vio. My Father had a Moale upon his brow.

Seb. And ſo had mine.

Vio. And di'd that day when Viola from her birth
Had numbred thirteene yeeres.

Seb. O that record is lively in my ſoule,
He finiſhed indeed his mortall acte
That day that made my ſiſter thirteene yeares.

Vio. If nothing lets to make vs happy both,
But this my maſculine uſurp'd attyre:
Doe not embrace me, till each circumſtance,
Of place, time, fortune, doe co-here and jumpe
That I am Viola, which to confirme,
Ile bring you to a Captaine in this Towne,
Where lye my Maiden weeds: by whoſe gentle helpe,
I was preſerv'd to ſerve this noble Count:
All the occurrence of my fortune ſince
Hath been between this Lady, and this Lord.

Seb. So comes it Lady, you have beene miſtooke:
But Nature to her bias drew in that.
You would have beene contracted to a Maid,
Nor are you therein (by my life) deceiv'd,
You are betroth'd both to a Maid and man.

Du. Be not amaz'd, right noble is his blood:
If this be ſo, as yet the glaſſe ſeemes true,
I ſhall have ſhare in this moſt happy wracke.
Boy, thou haſt ſaid to me a thouſand times,
Thou never ſhoulſt love woman like to me.

Vio. And all thoſe ſayings, will I over-ſweare,
And all thoſe ſwearings keepe as true in ſoule,
As doth that Orbed Continent, the fire,
That ſevers day from night.

Du. Give me thy hand,
And let me ſee thee in thy womans weeds.

Vio. The Captaine that did bring me firſt on ſhore,
Hath my Maides garments: he upon ſome Action
Is now in durance, at Malvolio's ſuite,
A Gentleman and follower of my Ladies.

Ol. He ſhall enlarge him: fetch Malvolio hither,
And yet alas, now I remember me,
They ſay, poore Gentleman, he's much diſtract.

Enter the Clowne with a Letter, and Fabian.

A moſt exacting frenzie of mine owne,
From my remembrance, clearely baniſh his.
How does he ſirrah?

Clo. Truely Madam, he holds Belzebub at the ſtaves end as well as a man in his caſe may doe: has heere wri a letter to you, I ſhould have given't you to day morning. But as a madmans Epiſtles are no Goſpels, ſo it skills not much when they are deliver'd.

Ol. Open't, and reade it.

Clo. Looke then to be well edified, when the Foole delivers the Madman. By the Lord Madam.

Ol. How now, art thou mad?

Clo. No Madam, I doe but reade madneſſe: and your Ladyſhip will have it as it ought to be, you muſt allow Vox.

Ol. Prethee reade i'thy right wits.

Clo. So I doe Madona: but to reade his right wits, i to reade thus: therefore, perpend my Princeſſe, and give eare.

Ol. Reade it you, ſirrah.

Fab. Reads. By the Lord Madam, you wrong me, and the world ſhall know it: Though you have put mee into darkeneſſe, and given your drunken Cozen rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my ſenſes as well as your Ladyſhip. I have your owne Letter, that induced me to the ſemblance I put on; with the which I doubt not, but to doe my ſelfe much right, or you much ſhame: Thinke of me as you pleaſe. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and ſpeake out of my injury. The madly us'd Malvolio.

Ol. Did he write this?

Clo. I Madame.

Du. This ſavours not much of diſtraction.

Ol. See him deliver'd Fabian, bring him hither:
My Lord, ſo pleaſe you, theſe things further thought on,
To thinke me as well a ſiſter, as a wife,
One day ſhall crowne th'alliance on't, ſo pleaſe you,
Here at my houſe, and at my proper coſt.

Du: Madam, I am moſt apt t'embrace your offer:
Your Maſter quits you: and for your ſervice done him,
So much againſt the mettle of your ſex,
So farre beneath your ſoft and tender breeding,
And ſince you call'd me Maſter, for ſo long:
Here is my hand, you ſhall from this time bee
Your Maſters Miſtris.

Ol. A ſiſter, you are ſhe.

Enter Malvolio.

Du. Is this the Madman?

Ol. I my Lord, this ſame: How now Malvolio?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Ol. Have I Malvolio? No.

Mal. Lady you have, pray you peruſe that Letter.
You muſt not now deny it is your hand,
Write from it if you can, in hand, or phraſe,

Or ſay, 'tis not your ſeale, not your invention:
You can ſay none of this. Well, grant it then,
And tell me in the modeſty of honour,
Why you have given me ſuch cleare lights of favour,
Bad me come ſmiling and croſſe-garter'd to to you,
To put on yellow ſtockings, and to frowne
Vpon ſir Toby, and the lighter people:
And acting this in an obedient hope,
Why have you ſuffer'd me to be impriſon'd,
Kept in a darke houſe, viſited by the Prieſt,
And made the moſt notorious gecke or gull,
That ere invention plaid on? Tell me why?

Ol. Alas Malvolio, this is not my writing,
Though I confeſſe, much like the Character:
But out of queſtion, tis Marias hand.
And now I doe bethinke me, it was ſhe
Firſt told me thou waſt mad; then cam'ſt in ſmiling,
And in ſuch formes, which here were preſuppos'd
Vpon thee in the Letter: prethee be content;
This practiſe hath moſt ſhrewdly paſt upon thee:
But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou ſhalt be both the Plaintiffe and the Iudge
Of thine owne cauſe.

Fab. Good Madam here me ſpeake,
And let no quarrell, nor no brawle to come,
Taint the condition of this preſent houre,
Which I have wondred at. In hope it ſhall not,
Moſt freely I confeſſe my ſelfe, and Toby
Set this device againſt Malvolio heere,
Vpon ſome ſtubborne and uncourteous parts
We had conceiv'd againſt him. Maria writ
The Letter, at ſir Tobyes great importance,
In recompence whereof, he hath marryed her:
How with a ſportfull malice it was follow'd,
May rather plucke on laughter than revenge,
If that the injuries be juſtly weigh'd,
That have on both ſides paſt.

Ol. Alas poore Foole how have they baffel'd thee?

Clo. Why ſome are borne great, ſome atchieve greatneſſe, and ſome have greatneſſe throwne upon them. I was one ſir, in this Enterlude, one ſir Topas ſir, but that's all one: By the Lord Foole, I am not mad: but doe you remember, Madam, why laugh you at ſuch a barren raſcal, and you ſmile not hee's gag'd: and thus the whirle-gigge of time, brings in his revenges

Mal. Ile be reveng'd on the whole packe of you.

Ol. He hath beene moſt notoriouſly abus'd.

Du. Purſue him, and entreat him to a peace:
He hath not told us of the Captaine yet,
When that is knowne, and golden time convents,
A ſolemne Combination ſhall be made
Of our deere ſoules. Meane time ſweet ſiſter,
We will not part from hence. Ceſario come
(For ſo you ſhall be while you are a man:)
But when in other habites you are ſeene,
Orſino's Miſtris, and his fancies Queene. Exeunt.

Clowne ſings.

When that I was and a little tine Boy,
with hey, ho, the winde and the raine:
A fooliſh thing was but a toy,
for the raine it raineth every day.

But when I came to mans eſtate
with hey, ho, &c.
Gainſt knaves and theeves men ſhut their gate,
for the raine, &c.

But when I came alas to wive,
with hey, ho, &c.
By ſwaggering could I never thrive,
for the raine, &c.

But when I came unto my beds,
with hey, ho, &c.
With Toſpots ſtill had drunken heads,
for the raine, &c.

A great while agoe the world begon,
with hey, ho, &c.
But that's all one, our Play is done,
and wee'l ſtrive to pleaſe you every day.

FINIS.

The VVinters Tale.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Eenter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch.

IF you ſhall chance (Camillo) to viſit Bohemia, on the like occaſion whereon my ſervices are now on-foot, you ſhall ſee (as I have ſaid) great difference betwixt our Bohemia, and your Sicilia.

Cam. I thinke, this common Summer, the King of Sicilia meanes to pay Bohemia the viſitation, which he juſtly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our Entertainement ſhall ſhame us: we will be juſtified in our Loves: for indeed——

Cam. 'Beſeech you——

Arch. Verely I ſpeake it in the freedome of my knowledge: we cannot with ſuch magnificence——in ſo rare—— I know not what to ſay.—— We will give you ſleepy Drinkes, that your Sences (un-intelligent of our inſufficience) may, though they cannot prayſe us, as little accuſe us.

Cam. You pay a great deale too deare, for what's given freely.

Arch. 'Beleeve me, I ſpeake as my underſtanding inſtructs me, and as mine honeſtie puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot ſhew himſelfe over-kind to Bohemia: They were trayn'd together in their Child-hoods; and there rooted betwixt them then ſuch an affection, which cannot chuſe but branch now. Since their more mature Dignities, and Royall Neceſſities, made ſeperation of their Societie, their encounters (though not Perſonall) have beene royally attornyed with enter-change of Gift, Letters, loving Embaſſies, that they have ſeem'd to be together, though abſent: ſhooke hands, as over a Vaſt Sea, and embrac'd as it were from the ends of oppoſed Winds. The Heavens continue their Loves.

Arch. I thinke there is not in the World, either Malice or Matter, to alter it. You have an unſpeakeable comfort of your young Prince Mamillius: it is a gentleman of the greateſt Promiſe, that ever came into my Note.

Cam. I very well agree with you, in the hopes of him: it is a gallant Child; one that (indeed) Phyſicks the Subject, makes old hearts freſh: they that went on Crutches ere he was borne, deſire yet their life, to ſee him a Man.

Arch. Would they elſe be content to dye?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuſe, why they ſhould deſire to live.

Arch. If the King had no Sonne, they would deſire to live on Crutches till he had one. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Leontes, Hermione, Mamillius, Polixenes, Camillo.

Pol. Nine Changes of the Watry-Starre hath beene
The Shepheards Note, ſince we have left our Throne
Without a Burthen: Time as long againe
Would be fill'd up (my Brother) with our Thankes,
And yet we ſhould, for perpetuitie,
Goe hence in debt: And therefore, like a Cypher
(Yet ſtanding in rich place) I multiply
With one we thanke you, many thouſands moe,
That goe before it.

Leo. Stay your Thankes a while,
And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to morrow:
I am queſtion'd by my feares of what may chance,
Or breed upon our abſence, that may blow
No ſneaping Winds at home, to make us ſay,
This is put forth too truly: beſides, I have ſtay'd
To tyre your Royaltie.

Leo. We are tougher (Brother)
Then you can put us to't.

Pol. No longer ſtay.

Leo. One Seve'night longer.

Pol. Very ſooth, to morrow.

Leo. Wee'le part the time betweene's then: and in that
Ile no gaine-ſaying.

Pol. Preſſe me not ('beſeech you) ſo:
There is no Tongue that moves; none, none i'th' World
So ſoone as yours, could win me: ſo it ſhould now,
Were there neceſſitie in your requeſt, although
'Twere needfull I deny'd it. My Affaires
Doe even drag me home-ward: which to hinder,
Were (in your Love) a Whip to me; my ſtay,
To you a Charge, and Trouble: to ſave both,
Farewell (our brother.)

Leo. Tongue-ty'd our Queene? ſpeake you.

Her. I had thought (Sir) to have held my peace, untill
You had drawne Oathes from him, not to ſtay: you (Sir)
Charge him too coldly. Tell him, you are ſure
All in Bohemia's well: this ſatisfaction,
The by-gone-day proclaim'd, ſay this to him,
He's beat from his beſt ward.

Leo. Well ſaid, Hermione.

Her. To tell, he longs to ſee his Sonne, were ſtrong:
But let him ſay ſo then, and let him goe;
But let him ſweare ſo, and he ſhall not ſtay,
Wee'l thwack him hence with Diſtaffes.
Yet of your royall preſence, Ile adventure
The borrow of a Weeke. When at Bohemia
You take my Lord, Ile give him my Commiſſion,
To let him there a Moneth, behind the Geſt
Prefix'd for's parting: yet (good-heed) Leontes,
I love thee not a Iarre o'th' Clock, behind

What Lady ſhe her Lord. You'le ſtay?
Pol. No, Madame.
Her. Nay, but you will?
Pol. I may not verily.
Her. Verily?
You put me off with limber Vowes: but I,
Though you would ſeek t'unſphere the Stars with Oaths,
Should yet ſay, Sir, no going: Verely
You ſhall not goe; a Ladyes Verely 'is
As potent as a Lords. Will you goe yet?
Force me to keepe you as a Priſoner,
Not like a Gueſt: ſo you ſhall pay your Fees
When you depart, and ſave your Thankes. How ſay you?
My Priſoner? or my Gueſt? by your dread verely,
One of them you ſhall be.
Pol. Your Gueſt then Madame:
To be your Priſoner, ſhould import offending;
Which is for me leſſe eaſie to commit,
Then you to puniſh.
Her. Not your Gaoler then,
But your kind Hoſteſſe, Come, Ile queſtion you
Of my Lords Tricks and yours, when you were Boyes:
You were pretty Lordings then?
Pol. We were (faire Queene)
Two Lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But ſuch a day to morrow, as to day,
And to be boy eternall.
Hel. Was not my Lord
The verier Wag o'th' two?
Pol. We were as twyn'd Lambs, that did friſk i'th' Sun
And bleat the one at th'other: what we chang'd,
Was Innocence, for innocence: we knew not
The Doctrine of ill-doing, no nor dream'd
That any did: Had we purſu'd that life,
And our weake Spirits ne're beene higher rear'd
With ſtronger blood, we ſhould have anſwer'd Heaven
Boldly, not guilty; the Impoſition clear'd,
Hereditarie ours.
Hel. By this we gather
You have tript ſince.
Pol. O my moſt ſacred Lady,
Temptations have ſince then beene borne to's: for
In thoſe unfledg'd dayes, was my Wife a Girle;
Your precious ſelfe had then not croſs'd the eyes
Of my young Play-fellow.
Her. Grace to boot:
Of this make no concluſion, leaſt you ſay
Your Queene and I are Devils: yet goe on,
Th' offences we have made you doe, wee'le anſwere,
If you firſt ſinn'd with us: and that with us
You did continue fault; and that you ſlipt not
With any, but with us.
Leo. Is he wonne yet?
Her. Hee'le ſtay, (my Lord.)
Leo. At my requeſt, he would not:
Hermione (my deareſt) thou never ſpoak'ſt
To better purpoſe,
Her. Never?
Leo. Never, but once.
Her. What? have I twice ſaid well? when was't before?
I prethee tell me: cram's with praiſe, and make's
As fat as tame things: One good deed, dying tonguleſſe,
Slaughters a thouſand, wayting upon that.
Our prayſes are our Wages, You may ride's
With one ſoft Kiſſe a thouſand Furlongs, ere
With Spur we heat an Acre. But to th' Goale:
My laſt good deed was to intreate his ſtay.
What was my firſt? it ha's an elder Siſter,
Or I miſtake you: O, would her name were Grace,
But once before I ſpoke to th' purpoſe? when?
Nay, let me have't: I long.
Leo. Why, that was when
Three crabbed Moneths had ſowr'd themſelves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white Hand:
And clap thy ſelfe, my Love; then didſt thou utter,
I am yours for ever.
Her. 'Tis Grace indeed.
Why lo-you now; I have ſpoke to th' purpoſe twice:
The one for ever earn'd a Royall Husband;
Th' other, for ſome while a Friend.
Leo. Too hot, too hot:
To mingle friendſhip farre, is mingling bloods.
I have Tremor Cordis on me: my heart daunces,
But not for joy; not joy. This entertainement
May a free face put on: derives a Libertie
From Heartineſſe, from Bountie, fertile Boſome,
And we'l become the Agent: 't may; I graunt:
But to be padling Palmes, and pinching fingers,
As now they are, and making practis'd Smiles
As in a Looking-Glaſſe: and then to ſigh, as 'twere
The Mort o'th' Deere: oh, that is entertainement
My Boſome likes not, nor my Browes. Mamillius,
Art thou my Boy?
Mam. I my good Lord.
Leo. I'fecks:
Why that's my Bawcock: what? has't ſmutch'd thy Noſe?
They ſay it is a Coppy out of mine. Come Captaine,
We muſt be neat; not neat, cleanly Captaine:
And yet the Steere, the Heycfer, and the Calfe,
Are all call'd Neate. Still Virginalling
Vpon his palme? How now (you wanton Calfe)
Art thou my Calfe?
Mam. Yes if you will (my Lord.)
Leo. Thou want'ſt a rough paſh, & the ſhootes that I have
To be full, like me: yet they ſay we are
Almoſt as like as Egges; Women ſay ſo,
(That will ſay any thing,) But were they falſe
As o're-dy'd Blackes, as Wind, as Waters; falſe
As Dice are to be wiſh'd, by one that fixes
No borne 'twixt his and mine; yet were it true,
To ſay this Boy were like me. Come (Sir Page)
Looke on me with your Welkin eye: ſweet Villaine.
Moſt dear'ſt, my Collop: Can thy Dam, may't be Affection? thy intention ſtabs the Center.
Thou do'ſt make poſſible things not be ſo held,
Communicat'ſt with Dreames (how can this be?)
With what's unreall: thou coactive art,
And fellow'ſt nothing. Then 'tis very credent,
Thou may'ſt co-joyne with ſomething, and thou do'ſt,
(And that beyond commiſſion) and I finde it,
(And that to the infection of my Braines,
And hardning of my Browes.)
Pol. What meanes Sicilia?
Her. He ſomething ſeemes unſetled.
Pol. How? my Lord?
Leo. What cheere? how is't with you, beſt Brother?
Her. You look as if you held a brow of much diſtraction,
Are you mov'd (my Lord?)
Leo. No, in good earneſt.
How ſometimes Nature will betray it's folly?
It's tenderneſſe? and make it ſelfe a Paſtime
To harder boſomes? Looking on the Lynes

Of my Boyes face, me thoughts I did requoyle
Twentie three yeares, and ſaw my ſelfe unbreech'd,
In my greene Velvet Coat; my Dagger muzzel'd,
Leaſt it ſhould bite it's Maſter, and ſo prove
(As Ornaments oft do's) too dangerous:
How like (me thought) I then was to this Kernell,
This Squaſh, this Gentleman. Mine honeſt frend,
Will you take egges for Money?

Mam. No (my Lord) Ile fight.

Leo. You will: why happy man be's dole. My Brother
Are you ſo fond of your young Prince, as we
Doe ſeeme to be of ours?

Pol. If at home (Sir)
Hee's all my Exerciſe, my Mirth, my Matter;
Now my ſworne Friend, and then mine Enemie;
My paraſite, my Souldier: Stateſ-man; all:
He makes a Iulyes day, ſhort as December,
And with his varying child-neſſe, cures in me
Thoughts, that ſhould thicke my blood.

Leo. So ſtands this Squire
Offic'd with me: We two will walke (my Lord)
And leave you to your graver ſteps. Hermione,
How thou lou'ſt, us, ſhew in our Brothers welcome;
Let what is deare in Sicily, be cheape:
Next to thy ſelfe, and my young Rover, hee's
Apparant to my heart.

Her. If you would ſeeke us,
We are yours i'th' Garden: ſhall's attend you there?

Leo. To your owne bents diſpoſe you: you'le be found,
Be you beneath the Sky: I am angling now,
(Though you perceive me not how I give Lyne)
Goe to, goe to.
How ſhe holds up the Neb? the Byll to him?
And armes her with the boldneſſe of a Wife
To her allowing Husband. Gone already,
Ynch-thicke, knee-deepe; ore head and eares a fork'd one.
Goe play (Boy) play: thy Mother playes, and I
Play too; but ſo diſgrac'd a part, whoſe iſſue
Will hiſſe me to my Grave: Contempt and Clamor
Will be my Knell. Goe play (Boy) play, there have been (Or I am much deceiv'd) Cuckolds ere now,
And many a man there is (even at this preſent,
Now, while I ſpeake this) holds his Wife by th' Arme,
That little thinkes ſhe ha's beene ſluyc'd in's abſence,
And his Pond fiſh'd by his next Neighbor (by Sir Smile, his Neighbor:) nay, there's comfort in't,
Whiles other men have Gates, and thoſe Gates open'd
(As mine) againſt their will. Should all deſpaire
That have revolted Wives, the tenth of Mankind
Would hang themſelves. Phyſicke for't, there's none:
It is a bawdy Planet, that will ſtrike
Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powrefull: thinke it:
From Eaſt, Weaſt, North, and South, be it concluded,
No Barricado for a Belly. Know't,
It wil let in and out the Enemie,
With bag and baggage: many thouſand on's
Have the Diſeaſe, and feele't not. How now Boy?

Mam. I am like you they ſay.

Leo. Why, that's ſome comfort.
What? Camillo there?

Cam. I, my good Lord.

Leo. Goe play (Mamillius) thou'rt an honeſt man:
Camillo, this great Sir will yet ſtay longer.

Cam. You had much adoe to make his Anchor hold,
When you caſt out, it ſtill came home.

Leo. Didſt note it?

Cam. He would not ſtay at your petitions, made
His buſineſſe more materiall.

Leo. Didſt perceive it?
They're here with me already; whiſp'ring, rounding:
Sicilia is a ſo-forth: 'tis farre gone,
When I ſhall guſt it laſt. How cam't (Camillo)
That he did ſtay?

Cam. At the good Queenes intreatie.

Leo. At the Queenes be't: Good ſhould be pertinent,
But ſo it is, it is not. Was this taken
By any underſtanding pate but thine?
For thy conceit is ſoaking, will draw in
More then the common Blocks. Not noted, is't,
But of the finer Natures? by ſome Severalls
Of Head-peece extraordinarie? Lower Meſſes
Parchance are to this buſineſſe purblind? ſay.

Cam. Buſineſſe, my Lord? I thinke moſt underſtand
Bohemia ſtayes heere longer.

Leo. Ha?

Cam. Stayes here longer.

Leo. I, but why?

Cam. To ſatisfie your Highneſſe, and the Entreaties
Of our moſt gracious Miſtris.

Leo. Satisfie?
Th'entreaties of your Miſtreſſe? Satisfie?
Let that ſuffice. I have truſted thee (Camillo)
With all the neereſt things to my heart, as well
My Chamber-Councels, wherein (Prieſt-like) thou
Haſt cleans'd my Boſome: I, from thee departed
Thy penitent reform'd: but we have beene
Deceiv'd in thy integritie, deceiv'd
In that which ſeemes ſo.

Cam. Be it forbid (my Lord.)

Leo. To bide upon't: thou art not honeſt: or
If thou inclinſt that way, thou art a Coward,
Which hoxes honeſtie behind, reſtrayning
From Courſe requir'd: or elſe thou muſt be counted
A Servant, grafted in my ſerious Truſt,
And therein negligent: or elſe a Foole,
That ſeeſt a Game plai'd home, the rich Stake drawne,
And tak'ſt it all for jeaſt.

Cam. My gracious Lord,
I may be negligent, fooliſh, and fearefull,
In every one of theſe, no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, feare,
Amongſt the infinite doing of the World,
Sometime puts forth in your affaires (my Lord.)
If ever I were wilfull-negligent,
It was my folly; if induſtriouſly
I plai'd the foole, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end: if ever fearefull
To doe a thing, where I the iſſue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Againſt the non-performance, 'twas a feare
Which oft infects the wiſeſt: theſe (my Lord)
Are ſuch allow'd Infirmities that honeſtie
Is never free of. But beſeech your Grace
Be plainer with me, let me know my treſpas
By it's owne viſage; if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine.

Leo. Ha' not you ſeene Camillo?
(But that's paſt doubt: you have, or your eye-glaſſe
Is thicker then a Cuckolds Horne) or heard?
(For to a Viſion ſo apparant, Rumor
Cannot be mute) or thought? (for Cogitation
Reſides not in that man, that do's not thinke)

My Wife is ſlipperie? If thou wilt confeſſe,
Or elſe be impudently negative,
To have nor Eyes, nor Eares, nor Thought, then ſay
My Wife's a Holy-Horſe, deſerves a Name
As ranke as any Flax-Wench, that puts to
Before her troth-plight: ſay't, and juſtify't.
Cam. I would not be a ſtander-by, to heare
My Soveraigne Miſtriſſe clouded ſo, without
My preſent vengeance taken: 'ſhrew my heart,
You never ſpoke what did become you leſſe
Then this; which to reiterate, were ſin
As deepe as that, though true.
Leo. Is whiſpering nothing?
Is leaning Cheeke to Cheeke? is meating Noſes?
Kiſſing with in-ſide Lip? ſtopping the Cariere
Of Laughter, with a ſigh? (a Note infallible
Of breaking honeſtie) horſing foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wiſhing Clocks more ſwift?
Houres, Minutes? the Noone, Mid-night? and all Eyes
Blind with the Pin and Web, but theirs; theirs onely,
That would unſeene be wicked? Is this nothing?
Why then the World, and all that's in't, is nothing,
The covering Skie is nothing, Bohemia nothing,
My Wife is nothing, nor Nothing have theſe Nothings,
If this be nothing.
Cam. Good my Lord, be cur'd
Of this diſeas'd Opinion, and betimes,
For 'tis moſt dangerous.
Leo. Say it be, 'tis true.
Cam. No, no, my Lord.
Leo. It is: you lye, you lye:
I ſay thou lyeſt Camillo, and I hate thee,
Pronounce thee a groſſe Lowt, a mindleſſe Slave;
Or elſe a hovering Temporizer, that
Canſt with thine eyes at once ſee good and evill,
Inclining to them both: were my wives Liver
Infected (as her life) ſhe would not live
The running of one Glaſſe.
Cam. Who do's infect her?
Leo. Why he that weares her like her Medull, hanging
About his necke (Bohemia) who, if I
Had Servants true about me, that bare eyes
To ſee alike mine Honor, as their profits,
(Their owne particular Thrifts) they would doe that
Which ſhould undoe more doing: I, and thou
His Cup-bearer, whom I from meaner forme
Have Bench'd, and rear'd to Worſhip, who may'ſt ſee
Plainely, as Heaven ſees Earth, and Earth ſees Heaven,
How I am gall'd, thou might'ſt be-ſpice a Cup,
To give mine Enemie a laſting Winke:
Which Draught to me, were cordiall,
Cam. Sir (my Lord)
I could doe this, and that with no raſh Potion,
But with a lingring Dram, that ſhould not worke
Maliciouſly, like Poyſon: But I cannot
Beleeve this Cracke to be in my dread Miſtreſſe
(So ſoveraignely being Honorable.)
I have lov'd thee.
Leo. Make that thy queſtion, and goe rot:
Do'ſt thinke I am ſo muddy, ſo unſetled,
To appoint my ſelfe in this vexation?
Sully the puritie and whiteneſſe of my Sheetes
(Which to preſerue, is Sleepe: which being ſpotted,
Is Goades, Thornes, Nettles, Tailes of Waſpes)
Give ſcandall to the blood o'th' Prince, my Sonne,
(Who I doe thinke is mine, and love as mine)
Without ripe moving to't? Would I doe this?
Could man ſo blench?
Cam. I muſt beleeve you (Sir)
I doe, and will fetch off Bohemia for't:
Provided, that when hee's remov'd, your Highneſſe
Will take againe your Queene, as yours at firſt,
Even for your Sonnes ſake, and thereby for ſealing
The Injurie of Tongues, in Courts and Kingdomes
Knowne, and ally'd to yours.
Leo. Thou do'ſt adviſe me,
Even ſo as I mine owne courſe have ſet downe:
Ile give no blemiſh to her Honor, none.
Cam. My Lord,
Goe then; and with a countenance as cleare
As Friendſhip weares at Feaſts, keepe with Bohemia,
And with your Queene: I am his Cup-bearer,
If from me he have wholeſome Beveridge,
Account me not your Servant.
Leo. This is all:
Do't, and [illegible]aſt the one halfe of my heart;
Do't not, thou ſplitt'ſt thine owne.
Cam. Ile do't, my Lord.
Leo. I will ſeeme friendly, as thou haſt advis'd me. Exit.
Cam. O miſerable Lady. But for me!
What caſe ſtand I in? I muſt be the poyſoner
Of good Polixenes, and my ground to do't,
Is the obedience to a Maſter; one,
Who in Rebellion with himſelfe, will have
All that are his, ſo too. To doe this deed,
Promotion followes: If I could find example
Of thouſand's that had ſtruck anoynted Kings,
And flouriſh'd after, Il'd not do't: But ſince
Nor Braſſe, nor Stone, nor Parchment beares not one,
Let Villany it ſelfe forſwer't. I muſt
Forſake the Court: to do't, or no, is certaine
To me a breake-necke. Happy Starre raigne now,
Here comes Bohemia Enter Polixenes.
Plo. This is ſtrange: Me thinkes
Me fauor here begins to warpe. Not ſpeake?
Good day Camllo.
Cam. Hoyle moſt royall Sir.
Pol. What is the Newes i'th' Court?
Cam. None rare (my Lord.)
Pol. The King hath on him ſuch a countenance,
As he had loſt ſome Province, and a Region
Lov'd, as he loves himſelfe: even now I met him
With cuſtomary complement, when he
Wafting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A Lippe of much contempt, ſpeedes from me, and
So leaves me, to conſider what is breeding,
That changes thus his Manners.
Cam. I dare not know (my Lord.)
Pol. How, dare not? doe not? doe you know, and dare not?
Be intelligent to me, 'tis thereabouts:
For to your ſelfe, what you doe know, you muſt,
And cannot ſay, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your chang'd complexions are to me a Mirror,
Which ſhewes me mine chang'd too: for I muſt be
A party in this alteration, finding
My ſelfe thus alter'd with't.
Cam. There is a ſicknes
Which puts ſome of vs in diſtemper, but
I cannot name the Diſeaſe, and it is caught
Of you, that yet are well.
Pol. How caught of me?
Make me not ſighted like the Baſiliſque.

I look'd on thouſands, who have ſped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none ſo : Camillo,
As you are certainely a Gentleman, thereto
Clerke-like expedienc'd, which no leſſe adornes
Our Gentry, then our Parents Noble Names,
In whoſe ſucceſſe we are gentle : I beſeech you,
If you know ought which do's behove my knowledge,
Thereof to be inform'd, impriſon't not
In ignorant concealement.

Cam. I may not anſwere.

Pol. A Sickneſſe caught of me, and yet I well ?
I muſt be anſwer'd. Do'ſt thou heare Camillo,
I conjure thee by all the parts of man,
Which honor do's acknowledge, whereof the leaſt
Is not this Suit of mine, that thou declare
What incidencie thou do'ſt geſſe of harme
Is creeping toward me; how farre off, how neere,
Which way to be prevented, if to be :
If not, how beſt to beare it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you,
Since I am charg'd in Honor, and by him
That I thinke Honorable: therefore marke my counſaile,
Which muſt be ev'n as ſwiftly followed, as
I meane to utter it; or both your ſelfe, and me,
Cry loſt, and ſo good night.

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I appointed him to murther you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo ?

Cam. By the King.

Pol. For what ?

Cam. He thinkes, nay with all confidence he ſweares,
As he had ſeen't, or beene an Inſtrument
To vice you to't, that you have toucht his Queene
Forbiddenly.

Pol. Oh then, my beſt blood turne
To an infected Gelly, and my Name
Be yoak'd with his, that did betray the Beſt :
Turne then my freſheſt Reputation to
A ſavour, that may ſtrike the dulleſt Noſthrill
Where I arrive, and my approach be ſhun'd,
Nay hated too, worſe then the great'ſt infection
That ere was heard, or read.

Cam. Sweare his thought over
By each particular Starre in Heaven, and
By all their influences; you may as well
Forbid the Sea for to obey the Moone,
As (or by Oath) remove, or (Counſaile) ſhake
The Fabrick of his Folly, whoſe foundation
Is pyl'd upon his Faith, and will continue
The ſtanding of his Body.

Pol. How ſhould this grow ?

Cam. I know not : but I am ſure 'tis ſafer to Avoid what's growne, then queſtion how 'tis borne.
If therefore you dare truſt my honeſtie,
That lyes encloſed in this Trunke, which you
Shall beare along impawnd, away to Night,
Your Followers I wil whiſper to the Buſineſſe,
And will by twoes, and threes, at ſeverall Poſternes,
Cleare them o'th' Citie : For my ſelfe, Ile put
My fortunes to your ſervice (which are here
By this diſcoverie loſt.) Be not uncertaine,
For by the honor of my Parents, I
Have uttered Truth : which if you ſeeke to prove,
I dare not ſtand by; nor ſhall you be ſafer,
Then one condemned by the Kings owne mouth:
Thereon his Execution ſworne.

Pol. I doe beleeve thee :
I ſaw his heart in's face. Give me thy hand.
Be Pilot to me, and thy places ſhall
Still neighbour mine. My Ships are ready, and
My people did expect my hence departure
Two dayes agoe. This iealouſie
Is for a precious Creature : as ſhee's rare,
Muſt it be great; and, as his Perſon's mightie,
Muſt it be violent : and, as he do's conceive,
He is diſhonor'd by a man, which ever
Profeſs'd to him: why his Revenges muſt
In that be made more bitter. Feare ore-ſhades me:
Good expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious Queene, part of his Theame; but nothing
Of his ill-ta'ne ſuſpition. Come Camillo,
I will reſpect thee as a Father, if
Thou bear'ſt my life off, hence : Let us avoid.

Cam. It is in mine authoritie to command
The Keyes of all the Poſternes: Pleaſe your Highneſſe
To take the urgent houre. Come Sir, away. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, Ladies: Leontes,
Antigonus, Lord.

Her. Take the Boy to you : he ſo troubles me,
'Tis paſt enduring.

Lady. Come (my gracious Lord)
Shall I be your play-fellow ?

Mam. No, Ile none of you.

Lady. Why (my ſweet Lord?)

Mam. You'le kiſſe me hard, and ſpeake to me, as if I were a Baby ſtill. I love you better.

2. Lady. And why ſo (my Lord?)

Mam. Not for becauſe
Your Browes are blacker (yet blacke-browes they ſay
Become ſome Women beſt, ſo that there be not
Too much haire there, but in a Semicircle,
Or a halfe-Moone, made with a Pen.)

2. Lady. Who taught this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of Womens faces: pray now,
What colour be your eye-browes ?

Lady. Blew (my Lord.)

Mam. Nay, that's a mock : I have ſeene a Ladies Noſe
That ha's beene blew, but not her eye-browes.

Lady. Hearke ye,
The Queene (your Mother) rounds apace: we ſhall
Preſent our ſervices to a fine new Prince
One of theſe dayes, and then youl'd wanton with us,
If we would have you.

2. Lady. She is ſpread of Late
Into a goodly Bulke (good time encounter her.)

Her. What wiſdome ſtirs amongſt you? Come Sir, now
I am for you againe : 'Pray you ſit by us,
And tell's a Tale.

Mam. Merry, or ſad, ſhal't, be?

Hel. As merry as you will.

Mam. A ſad Tale's beſt for Winter :
I have one of Sprights, and Goblins.

Hel. Let's have that (good Sir.)
Come-on, ſit downe, come-on, and doe your beſt,
To fright me with your ſprights : you're powrefull at it.

Mam. There was a man.
Her. Nay, come ſit downe: then on.
Mam. Dwelt by a Church-yard: I will tell it ſoftly,
Yond Crickets ſhall not heare it,
Her. Come on then, and giv't me in mine eare. Enter L.
Leon. Was he met there? his Traine? Camillo with him?
Lord. Behind the tuft of Pines I met them, never Saw I men ſcowre ſo on their way: I eyed them
Even to their Ships.
Leo. How bleſt am I
In my juſt Cenſure? in my true Opinion?
Alack, for leſſer knowledge, how accurs'd,
In being ſo bleſt? There may be in the Cup
A Spider ſteep'd, and one may drinke; depart,
And yet partake no venome; (for his knowledge
Is not infected) but if one preſent
Th'abhor'd Ingredient to his eye, make knowne
How he hath drunke, he cracks his gorge, his ſides
With violent Hefts: I have drunke, and ſeene the Spider.
Camillo was his helpe in this, his Pander:
There is a plot againſt my Life, my Crowne;
All's true that is miſtruſted: that falſe Villaine,
Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him:
He ha's diſcover'd my Deſigne, and I
Remaine a pinch'd Thing; yea, a very Tricke
For them to play at will: how came the Poſternes
So eaſily open?
Lord. By his great authoritie,
Which often hath no leſſe prevail'd, then ſo,
On your command.
Leo. I know't too well.
Give me the Boy, I am glad you did not nurſe him:
Though he do's beare ſome ſignes of me, yet you
Have too much blood in him.
Her. What is this? Sport?
Leo. Beare the Boy hence, he ſhall not come about her,
Away with him, and let her ſport her ſelfe
With that ſhe's big-with, for 'tis Polixenes
Ha's made thee ſwell thus.
Her. But Il'd ſay he had not;
And Ile be ſworne you would beleeve my ſaying,
How e're you leane to th'Nay-ward.
Leo. You (my Lords)
Looke on her, marke her well: be but about
To ſay ſhe is a goodly Lady, and
The juſtice of your hearts will thereto adde
'Tis pitty ſhe's not honeſt: Honorable;
Prayſe her but for this her without-dore-Forme,
(Which on my faith deſerves high ſpeech) and ſtraight
The Shrug, the Hum, or Ha, (theſe Petty-brands
That Calumnie doth uſe; Oh I am out,
That Mercy do's, for Calumnie will ſeare
Vertue it ſelfe) theſe Shrugs, theſe Hum's, and Ha's,
When you have ſaid ſhe's goodly, come betweene,
Ere you can ſay ſhe's honeſt: But be't knowne
(From him that ha's moſt cauſe to grieve it ſhould be)
She's an Adultreſſe.
Her. Should a Villaine ſay ſo,
(The moſt repleniſh'd Villaine in the World)
He were as much more Villaine: you (my Lord)
Doe but miſtake.
Leo. You have miſtooke (my Lady)
Polixenes for Leontes: O thou Thing,
(Which Ile not call a Creature of thy place,
Leaſt Barbariſme (making me the precedent)
Should a like Language uſe to all degrees,
And mannerly diſtinguiſhment leave out,
Betwixt the Prince and Begger:) I have ſaid
Shee's an Adultreſſe, I have ſaid with whom:
More; Shee's a Traytor, and Camillo is
A Federarie with her, and one that knowes
What ſhe ſhould ſhame to know her ſelfe,
But with her moſt vild Principall; that ſhe's
A Bed-ſwarver, even as bad as thoſe
That Vulgars give bold'ſt Titles; I, and privie
To this their late eſcape.
Her. No (by my life)
Privy to none of this: how will this grieve you,
When you ſhall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publiſh'd me? Gentle my Lord,
You ſcarce can right me throughly, then, to ſay
Vou did miſtake.
Leo. No: if I miſtake
In thoſe Foundations which I build upon,
The Centre is not bigge enough to beare
A Schoole-Boyes Top. Away with her, to Priſon:
He who ſhall ſpeake for her, is a farre-off guiltie,
But that he ſpeakes.
Her. Thsre's ſome ill planet raignes:
I muſt be patient, till the Heavens looke
With an aſpect more favorable. Good my Lords,
I am not prone to weeping (as our Sex
Commonly are) the want of which vaine dew
Perchance ſhall dry your pitties: but I have
That honorable Griefe lodg'd here, which burnes
Worſe then Teares drowne: 'beſeech you all (my Lords)
With thoughts ſo qualified, as your Charities
Shall beſt inſtruct you, meaſure me; and ſo
The Kings will be perform'd.
Leo. Shall I be heard?
Her. Who is't that goes with me? 'beſeech your Highnes
My women may be with me, for you ſee
My plight requires it. Doe not weepe (good Fooles)
There is no cauſe: When you ſhall know your Miſtris)
Ha's deſerv'd Priſon, then abound in Teares,
As I come out; this Action I now goe on,
Is for my better grace. Adieu (my Lord)
I never wiſh'd to ſee you ſorry, now
I truſt I ſhall: my Women come, you have leave.
Leo. Goe doe our bidding: hence.
Lord. Beſeech your Highneſſe call the Queene againe.
Ant. Be certaine what you do (Sir) leaſt your Iuſtice
Prove violence, in the which three great ones ſuffer,
Your Selfe, your Queene, your Sonne.
Lord. For her (my Lord)
I dare my life lay downe, and will do't (Sir)
Pleaſe you t'accept it, that the Queene is ſpotleſſe
I'th'eyes of Heaven, and to you (I meane
In this, which you accuſe her.)
Antig. If it prove
She's other wiſe, Ile keepe my Stables where
I lodge my Wife, Ile goe in couples with her:
Then when I feele, and ſee her, no further truſt her;
For every ynch of Woman in the World,
I, every dram of Womans fleſh is falſe,
If ſhe be.
Leo. Hold your peaces.
Lord. Good my Lord.
Antg. It is for you we ſpeake, not for our ſelves:
You are abus'd, by ſome putter on,
That will be damn'd for't: would I knew the Villaine,
I would

I would Land-damne him: be ſhe honor-flaw'd,
I have three daughters: the eldeſt is eleven:
The ſecond, and the third, nine: and ſonnes five:
If this prove true, they'l pay for't. By mine honor
Ile gell'd em all: fourteene they ſhall not ſee
To bring falſe generations: they are co-heires,
And I had rather glib my ſelfe, then they
Should not produce faire iſſue.
Leo. Ceaſe, no more:
You ſmell this buſineſſe with a ſence as cold
As is a dead-mans noſe: but I do ſee't, and feel't,
As you feele doing thus: and ſee withall
The Inſtruments that feele.
Ant. If it be ſo,
We neede no grave to burie honeſtie,
There's not a graine of it, the face to ſweeten
Of the whole dungy-earth.
Leo. What? lacke I credit?
Lord. I had rather you did lacke then I (my Lord)
Vpon this ground: and more it would content me
To have her Honor true, then your ſuſpition
Be blam'd for't how you might.
Leo. Why what neede we
Commune with you for this? but rather follow
Our forcefull inſtigation? Our prerogative
Cals not your Counſailes, but our naturall goodneſſe
Imparts this; which, if you, or ſtupified,
Or ſeeming ſo, in skill, cannot, or will not
Reliſh a truth, like us: informe your ſelves
We neede no more of your advice: the matter,
The loſſe, the gaine, the ord'ring on't,
Is all properly ours.
Ant. And I wiſh (my Liege)
You had onely in your ſilent judgement tride it,
Without more overture.
Leo. How could that be?
Either thou art moſt ignorant by age,
Or thou wer't borne a foole: Camillo's flight
Added to their Familiarity
(Which was as groſſe, as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd ſight onely, nought for approbation
But onely ſeeing, all other circumſtances
Made up to'th deed) doth puſh on this proceeding,
Yet, for a greater confirmation
(For in an act of this importance, 'twere
Moſt pittious to be wilde) I have diſpatch'd in poſt,
To ſacred Delphos, to Apollo's Temple,
Cleomines and Deon, whom you know
Of ſtuff'd-ſufficiency: Now, from the Oracle
They will bring al, whoſe ſpirituall counſaile had,
Shall ſtop, or ſpurre me. Have I done well?
Lord. Well done (my Lord.)
Leo. Though I am ſatisfyde, and neede no more
Then what I know, yet ſhall the Oracle
Give reſt to th' mindes of others; ſuch as he Whoſe ignorant credulity will not
Come up to th'truth. So have we thought it good
From our free perſon, ſhe ſhould be confinde,
Leaſt that the treachery of the two, fled hence,
Be left her to performe. Come follow us,
We are to ſpeake in publike: for this buſineſſe
Will raiſe us all.
Antig. To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth, were knowne. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Paulina, a Gentleman, Gaoler, Emilia.

Paul. The Keeper of the priſon, call to him:
Let him have knowledge whom I am. Good Lady,
No Court in Europe is too good for thee,
What doſt thou then in priſon? Now good Sir,
You know me, do you not?
Gao. For a worthy Lady,
And one, whom much I honour.
Pau. Pray you then,
Conduct me to the Queene.
Gao. I may not (Madam)
To the contrary I have expreſſe commandment.
Pau. Here's a-do, to locke up honeſtie and honor from
Th' acceſſe of gentle viſitors. Is't lawfull pray you
To ſee her Women? Any of them? Emilia?
Gao. So pleaſe you (Madam)
To put a-part theſe your attendants, I
Shall bring Emilia forth.
Pau. I pray you now call her:
With-draw your ſelves.
Gao. And Madam,
I muſt be preſent at your Conference.
Pau. Well: be't ſo: prethee. Enter Emilia.
Heere's ſuch a-doe, to make no ſtaine, a ſtaine,
As paſſes colouring. Deare Gentlewoman,
How fares one gracious Lady?
Emil. As well as one ſo great, and ſo forlorne
May hold together: On her frights, and greefes
(Which never tender Lady hath borne greater)
She is, ſomething before her time, deliver'd.
Pau. A boy?
Emil. A daughter, and a goodly babe,
Luſty, and like to live: the Queene receives
Much comfort in't: Sayes, my poore priſoner,
I am innocent as you,
Pau. I dare be ſworne:
Theſe dangerous, unſafe Lunes i'th' King, beſhrew them,
He muſt be told on't, and he ſhall: the office
Becomes a woman beſt. Ile take't upon me,
If I prove hony-mouth'd, let my tongue bliſter.
And never to my red-look'd Anger be
The Trumpet any more: pray you (Emilia)
Commend my beſt obedience to the Queene,
If ſhe dares truſt me with her little babe,
I'le ſhew't the King, and undertake to be
Her Advocate to'th lowd'ſt. We doe not know
How he may ſoften at the ſight o'th'Childe:
The ſilence often of pure innocence
Perſwades, when ſpeaking failes.
Emil. Moſt worthy Madam,
Your honour, and your goodneſſe is ſo evident,
That your free undertaking cannot miſſe
A thriving iſſue: there is no Lady living
So meete for this great errand; pleaſe your Ladiſhip
To viſit the next roome, Ile preſently
Acquaint the Queene of your moſt noble offer,
Who, but to day hammered of this deſigne,
But durſt not tempt a miniſter of honor
Leaſt ſhe ſhould be deny'd.

Paul. Tell her (Emilia)
Ile uſe that tongue I have: If wit flow from't
As boldneſſe from my boſome, le't not be doubted
I ſhall do good.
Emil. Now be you bleſt for it.
Ile to the Queene: pleaſe you come ſomething neerer.
Gao. Madam, if't pleaſe the Queene to ſend the babe,
I know not what I ſhall incurre, to paſſe it,
Having no warrant.
Pau. You need not feare it (ſir)
This Childe was priſoner to the wombe, and is
By Law and proceſſe of great Nature, thence Free'd, and enfranchis'd, not a partie to
The anger of the King, nor guilty of
(If any be) the treſpaſſe of the Queene.
Gao. I do beleeve it.
Paul. Do not you feare: upon mine honor, I
Will ſtand betwixt you, and danger. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Leontes, Seruants, Paulina, Antigonus, and Lords.

Leo. Nor night, nor day, no reſt: It is but weakneſſe
To beare the matter thus: meere weakneſſe, if
The cauſe were not in being: part o'th cauſe,
She, th' Adultreſſe; for the harlot-King
Is quite beyond mine arme, out of the blanke
And levell of my braine: plot-proofe: but ſhe,
I can hooke to me: ſay that ſhe were gone,
Given to the fire, a moity of my reſt
Might come to me againe. Whoſe there?
Ser. My Lord. Enter.
Leo. How do's the boy?
Ser. He tooke good reſt to night: 'tis hop'd
His ſickneſſe is diſcharg'd.
Leo. To ſee his Nobleneſſe,
Conceiving the diſhonour of his Mother,
He ſtraight declin'd, droop'd, tooke it deeply,
Faſten'd, and fix'd the ſhame on't in himſelfe:
Threw-off his Spirit, his Appetite, his Sleepe,
And down-right languiſh'd. Leave me ſolely: goe,
See how he fares: Fie, fie, no thought of him,
The very thought of my Revenges that way
Recoyle upon me: in himſelfe too mighty,
Vntill a time may ſerve. For preſent vengeance
Take it on her: Camillo, and Polixenes
Laugh at me; make their paſtime at my ſorrow:
They ſhould not laugh, if I could reach them, nor Shall ſhe, within my powre.
Enter Paulina.
Lord. You muſt not enter.
Paul: Nay rather (good my Lords) be ſecond to me:
Feare you his tyrannous paſſion more (alas)
Then the Queenes life? A gracious innocent ſoule,
More free, then he is iealous.
Antig. That's enough.
Ser. Madam; he hath not ſlept to night, commanded
None ſhould come at him.
Pau. Not ſo hot (good Sir)
I come to bring him ſleepe. 'Tis ſuch as you
That creepe like ſhadowes by him, and do ſighe
At each his needleſſe heavings: ſuch as you
Nouriſh the cauſe of his awaking. I
Do come with words, as medicinall, as true;
(Honeſt, as either;) to purge him of that humor,
That preſſes him from ſleepe.
Leo. What noyſe there, hoe?
Pau. No noyſe (my Lord) but needfull conference,
About ſome Goſſips for your Highneſſe.
Leo. How?
Away with that audacious Lady. Antigonus
I charg'd thee that ſhe ſhould not come about me,
I knew ſhe would.
Ant. I told her ſo (my Lord)
On your diſpleaſures perill and on mine,
She ſhould not viſit you.
Leo. What? canſt not rule her?
Paul. From all diſhoneſtie he can: in this (Vnleſſe he take the courſe that you have done)
Commit me, for committing honor, truſt it,
He ſhall not rule me:
Ant. La-you now, you heare,
When ſhe will take the raine, I let her run,
But ſhee'l not ſtumble.
Paul. Good my liege I come:
And I beſeech you heare me: who profeſſes
My ſelfe your loyall ſervant, your Phiſitian,
Your moſt obedient Counſailor: yet that dares
Leſſe appeare ſo, in comforting your Evilles,
Then ſuch as moſt ſeeme yours. I ſay, I come
From your good Queene.
Leo. Good Queene?
Paul. Good Queene (my Lord) good Queene,
I ſay good Queene,
And would by combate, make her good ſo, were I
A man, the worſt about you.
Leo. Force her hence.
Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes
Firſt hand me: on mine owne accord, Ile off,
But firſt; Ile do my errand. The good Queene
(For ſhe is good) hath brought you forth a daughter,
Heere 'tis: Commends it to your bleſſing.
Leo. Out:
A mankinde Witch? Hence with her, out o'dore:
A moſt intelligencing bawd.
Paul. Not ſo:
I am as ignorant in that, as you,
In ſo entit'ling me: and no leſſe honeſt
Then you are mad: which is enough, Ile warrant
(As this world goes) to paſſe for honeſt.
Leo. Traitors;
Will you not puſh her out? Give her the Baſtard,
Thou dotard, thou art woman-tyr'd: unrooſted
By thy dame Partlet heere. Take up the Baſtard,
Take't up, I ſay: give't to the Croane.
Paul. For ever
Vnvenerable be thy hands, if thou
Tak'ſt up the Princeſſe, by that forced baſeneſſe
Which he ha's put upon't.
Leo. He dreads his Wife.
Paul, So I would you did: then 'twere paſt all doubt
Youl'd call your children, yours.
Leo. A neſt of Traitors.
Ant. I am none, by this good light.
Paul. Nor I: nor any
But one that's heere: and that's himſelfe: for he,
The

The ſacred honor of himſelfe, his Queenes,
His hopefull Sonnes, his Babes, betrayes to ſlander,
Whoſe ſting is ſharper then the Swords; and will not
(For as the caſe now ſtands, it is a Curſe
He cannot be compell'd too't) once remove
The Root of his Opinion, which is rotten,
As ever Oake, or ſtone was found.
Leo. A Callat
Of boundleſſe tongue, who late hath beat her husband,
And now baits me: This Brat is none of mine,
It is the Iſſue of Polixenes.
Hence with it, and together with the Dam,
Commit them to the fire.
Paul. It is yours:
And might we lay th' old Proverb to your charge,
So like you, 'tis the worſe. Behold (my Lords)
Although the print be little, the whole Matter
And Coppy of the Father: (Eye, Noſe, Lippe,
The tricke of's Frowne, his Fore-head, nay, the Valley,
The pretty dimples of his Chin, and Cheeke; his Smiles:
The very Mold, and frame of hand, nayle, Finger.)
And thou good Goddeſſe Nature, which haſt made it
So like to him that got it, if thou haſt
The ordering of the Mind too, 'mongſt all Colours
No Yellow in't, leaſt ſhe ſuſpect, as he do's,
Her Children, not her Husbands.
Leo. A groſſe Hagge:
And Lozell, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not ſtay her Tongue.
Antig. Hang all the Husbands
That cannot doe that Feat, you'l leave your ſelfe
Hardly one ſubject.
Leo. Once more take her hence.
Paul. A moſt unworthy, and unnaturall Lord
Can doe no more.
Leo. Ile ha' thee burnt.
Paul. I care not:
It is an Heretique that makes the fire,
Not ſhe which burnes in't. Ile not call you Tyrant:
But this moſt cruell uſage of your Queene
(Not able to produce more accuſation
Then your owne weake-hindg'd Fancy) ſomething ſavors
Of Tyranny, and will ignoble make you,
Yea, ſcandalous to the World.
Leo. On your allegeance,
Out of the Chamber with her. Were I a Tyrant,
Where were her life? ſhe durſt not call me ſo,
If ſhe did know me one. Away with her.
Paul. I pray you doe not puſh me, Ile be gone.
Looke to your Babe (my Lord) 'tis yours: Iove ſend her
A better guiding Spirit. What neede theſe hands?
You that are thus ſo tender o're his Follyes,
Will never do him good, not one of you.
So, ſo: Farewell, we are gone. Exit.
Leo. Thou (Traytor) haſt ſet on thy Wife to this.
My Child? away with't? even thou, that haſt
A heart ſo tender o're it, take it hence,
And ſee it inſtantly conſum'd with fire.
Even thou, and none but thou. Take it up ſtraight:
Within this houre bring me word 'tis done.
(And by good teſtimonie) or Ile ſeize thy life,
With what thou elſe call'ſt thine: if thou refuſe,
And wilt encounter with my Wrath, ſay ſo;
The Baſtard-braines with theſe my proper hands
Shall I daſh out. Goe take it to the fire,
For thou ſett'ſt on thy Wife.
Antig. I did not, Sir:
Theſe Lords, my Noble Fellowes, if they pleaſe,
Can cleare me in't.
Lords. We can; my Royall Liege,
He is not guiltie of her comming hither.
Leo. You're lyers all.
Lord. Beſeech your Highneſſe, give us better credit:
We have alwayes truly ſerv'd you, and beſeech
So to eſteeme of us: and on our knees we begge,
(As recompence of our deare ſervices
Paſt, and to come) that you doe change this purpoſe,
Which being ſo horrible, ſo bloody, muſt
Leade on to ſome foule Iſſue. We all kneele.
Leo. I am a Feather for each Wind that blows:
Shall I live on, to ſee this Baſtard kneele,
And call me Father? better burne it now,
Then curſe it then. But be it: let it live.
It ſhall not neyther. You Sir, come you hither:
You that have beene ſo tenderly officious
With Lady Margerie, your Mid-wife there,
To ſave this Baſtards life; for 'tis a Baſtard,
So ſure as this Beard's gray. What will you adventure,
To ſave this Brats life?
Antig. Any thing (my Lord)
That my abilitie may undergoe,
And Nobleneſſe impoſe: at laſt thus much;
Ile pawne the little blood which I have left,
To ſave the innocent: any thing poſſible.
Leo. It ſhall be poſſible: Sweare by this Sword
Thou wilt performe my bidding.
Antig. I will (my Lord.)
Leo. Marke and performe it: ſeeſt thou? for the faile
Of any point in't, ſhall not onely be
Death to thy ſelfe, but to thy lewd-tongu'd Wife,
(Whom for this time we pardon) We enjoyne thee,
As thou art Liege-man to us, that thou carry
This female Baſtard hence, and that thou beare it
To ſome remote and deſart place, quite out
Of our Dominions; and that there thou leave it
(Without much mercy) to it owne protection,
And fauour of the Climate: as by ſtrange fortune,
It came to us, I doe in Iuſtice charge thee,
On thy Soules perill, and thy Bodies torture,
That thou commend it ſtrangely to ſome place,
Where Chance may nurſe, or end it: take it up.
Antig. I ſweare to doe this: though a preſent death
Had beene more mercifull. Come on (poore Babe)
Some powerfull Spirit inſtruct the Kytes and Ravens
To be thy Nurſes. Wolves and Beares, they ſay,
(Caſting their ſavageneſſe aſide) have done
Like offices of pitty. Sir, be proſperous
In more then this deed do's require; and bleſſing
Againſt this Crueltie, fight on thy ſide
(Poore Thing condemn'd to loſſe.) Exit.
Leo. No: Ile not reare
Anothers Iſſue. Enter a Servant.
Seru. Pleaſe' your Highneſſe, Poſts
From thoſe you ſent to th' Oracle, are come
An houre ſince: Cleomines and Dion,
Being well arriv'd from Delphos, are both landed,
Haſting to th' Court.
Lord. So pleaſe you (Sir) their ſpeed
Hath beene beyond accompt.
Leo. Twentie three dayes
They have beene abſent: 'tis good ſpeed: fore-tells
The great Apollo ſuddenly will have

The truth of this appeare: Prepare you Lords,
Summon a Seſſion, that we may arraigne
Our moſt diſloyall Lady: for as ſhe hath
Been publikely accus'd, ſo ſhall ſhe have
A juſt and open Triall. While ſhe lives,
My heart will be a burthen to me. Leave me,
And thinke upon my bidding. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scœna Prima.

Enter Cleomines and Dion.

Cle. The Clymat's delicate, the Ayre moſt ſweet,
Fertile the Iſle, the Temple much ſurpaſſing
The common prayſe it beares.
Dion. I ſhall report,
For moſt it caught me, the Celeſtiall Habits,
(Me thinkes I ſo ſhould terme them) and the reverence
Of the grave Wearers. O, the Sacrifice,
How ceremonious, ſolemne, and un-earthly
It was i'th' Offring?
Cleo. But of all, the burſt
And the eare-deaff'ning Voyce o'th' Oracle,
Kin to Ioves Thunder, ſo ſurpriz'd my Sence,
That I was nothing.
Dio. If th'event o'th' Iourney
Prove as ſucceſſefull to the Queene (O be't ſo)
As it hath beene to us, rare, pleaſant, ſpeedie,
The time is worth the uſe on't.
Cleo. Great Apollo
Turne all to th' beſt: theſe Proclamations,
So forcing faults upon Hermione,
I little like.
Dio. The violent carriage of it
Will cleare, or end the Buſineſſe, when the Oracle
(Thus by Apollo's great Divine ſeal'd up)
Shall the Contents diſcover: ſomething rare
Even then will ruſh to knowledge. Goe: freſh Horſes,
And gracious be the iſſue. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Leontes, Lords, Officers: Hermione (as to her Triall) Ladies: Cleomines, Dion.

Leo. This Seſſions (to our great griefe we pronounce)
Even puſhes 'gainſt our heart. The partie try'd,
The Daughter of a King, our Wife, and one
Of us too much belou'd. Let us be clear'd
Of being tyrannous, ſince we ſo openly
Proceed in Iuſtice, which ſhall have due courſe,
Even to the Guilt, or the Purgation:
Produce the Priſoner.
Officer. It is his Highneſſe pleaſure, that the Queene Appeare in perſon, here in Court. Silence. Enter
Leo. Reade the Indictment.
Officer. Hermione, Queene to the worthy Leontes, King of Sicilia, thou art here accuſed and arraigned of High Treaſon, in committing Adultery with Polixenes King of Bohemia, and conſpiring with Camillo to take away the Life of our Soveraigne Lord the King, thy royall husband: the pretence whereof being by circumſtance partly layd open, thou ( Hermione ) contrarie to the Faith and Allegeance of a true Subject, didſt counſaile and ayde them, for their better ſafetie, to flye away by Night.

Her. Since what I am to ſay, muſt be but that Which contradicts my Accuſation, and
The teſtimonie on my part, no other
But what comes from my ſelfe, it ſhall ſcarce boot me
To ſay, Not guiltie: mine integritie
Being counted Falſehood, ſhall (as I expreſſe it)
Be ſo receiv'd. But thus, if Powres divine
Behold our humane Actions (as they doe)
I doubt not then, but innocence ſhall make
Falſe Accuſations bluſh, and Tyrannie
Tremble at Patience. You (my Lord) beſt know
(Whom leaſt will ſeeme to doe ſo) my paſt life
Hath beene as continent, as chaſte, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Then hiſtorie can patterne, though devis'd,
And play'd, to take Spectators. For behold me,
A Fellow of the Royall Bed, which owe
A Moitie of the Throne: a great Kings Daughter,
The Mother to a hopefull Prince, here ſtanding
To prate and talke for Life, and Honor, fore
Who pleaſe to come and heare. For life, I prize it
As I weigh Griefe (which I would ſpare:) For Honor,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And onely that I ſtand for. I appeale
To your owne Conſcience (Sir) before Polixenes
Came to your Court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be ſo: Since he came,
With what encounter ſo uncurrant, I
Have ſtrayn'd t'appeare thus; if one jot beyond
The bound of honor, or in act, or will
That way enclining, hardened be the hearts
Of all that heare me, and my neer'ſt of Kin
Cry fie upon my grave.
Leo. I ne're heard yet,
That any of theſe bolder Vices wanted
Leſſe Impudence to gaine-ſay what they did,
Then to performe it firſt.
Her. That's true enough,
Though 'tis a ſaying (Sir) not due to me.
Leo. You will not owne it.
Her. More then Miſtreſſe of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I muſt not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes
(With whom I am accus'd) I doe confeſſe
I lov'd him, as in Honor he reqvir'd:
With ſuch a kind of Love, as might become
A Lady like me; with a Love, even ſuch,
So, and no other, as your ſelfe commanded:
Which, not to have done, I thinke had beene in me
Both Diſobedience, and ingratitude
To you, and toward your friends, whoſe love had ſpoke,
Even ſince it could ſpeake, from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now for Conſpiracie,
I know not how it taſtes, though it be diſh'd
For me to try how: All I know of it,
Is, that Camillo was an honeſt man;
And why he left your Court, the Gods themſelves
(Wotting no more then I) are ignorant.
Leo. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have underta'ne to doe in's abſence.

Her. Sir,
you ſpeake a Language that I vnderſtand not:
My Life ſtands in the levell of your Dreames,
Which Ile lay downe.
Leo. Your Actions are my Dreames.
You had a Baſtard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it: As you were paſt all ſhame,
(Thoſe of your Fact are ſo) ſo paſt all truth;
Which to deny, concernes more then availes: for as
Thy Brat hath beene caſt out, like to it ſelfe,
No Father owning it (which is indeed
More criminall in thee, then it) ſo thou
Shalt feele our Iuſtice; in whoſe eaſieſt paſſage,
Looke for no leſſe then death.
Her. Sir, ſpare your Threats:
The Bugge which you would fright me with, I ſeeke:
To me can Life be no commodity;
The crowne and comfort of my Life (your Fauor)
I doe giue loſt, for I doe feele it gone,
But know not how it went. My ſecond Ioy,
And firſt Fruits of my body, from his preſence
I am bar'd, like one infectious. My third comfort
(Star'd moſt vnluckily) is from my breaſt
(The innocent milke in it moſt innocent mouth)
Hal'd out to murther. My ſelfe on every Poſt
Proclaym'd a Strumpet: With immodeſt hatred
The Child-bed priviledge deny'd, which longs
To Women of all faſhion. Laſtly, hurried
Here, to this place, i'th' open ayre before
I have got ſtrength of limit. Now (my Liege
Tell me what bleſſings I have here alive,
That I ſhould feare to dye? Therefore proceed:
But yet heare this: miſtake me not: no Life,
(I prize it not a ſtraw) but for mine Honor,
Which I would free: if I ſhall be condemn'd
Vpon ſurmizes (all proofes ſleeping elſe,
But what your Iealouſies awake) I tell you
'Tis Rigor, and not Law. Your Honors all,
I doe referre me to the Oracle:
Apollo be my Iudge.
Lord. This your requeſt Enter Dion and Cleomines.
Is altogether juſt: therefore bring forth
(And in Apoll's Name) his Oracle.
Her. The Emperor of Ruſſia was my Father,
Oh that he were alive, and here beholding
His Daughters Tryall: that he did but ſee
The flatneſſe of my miſerie; yet with eyes
Of pitty, not Revenge.
Officer. You heere ſhall ſweare upon the Sword of Iuſtice,
That you (Cleomines and Dion) have
Beene both at Delphos, and from thence have brought
This ſeal'd-up Oracle, by the Hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's Prieſt; and that ſince then,
You have not dar'd to breake the holy Seale,
Nor read the Secrets in't.
Cleo. Dio. All this we ſweare.
Leo. Breake up the Seales, and reade.
Officer. Hermione is caſt, Polixenes blameleſſe, Camillo a true Subject, Leontes a jealous Tyrant, his innocent Babe truly begotten, and the King ſhall live without an Heire, if that which is loſt, be not found.
Lords. Now bleſſe[illegible] the great Apollo.
Her. Prayſed.
Leo. Haſt thou read truth?
Offic. I (my Lord) even ſo as it is here ſet downe.
Leo. There is no truth at all i'th' Oracle:
The Seſſions ſhall proceed: this is meere falſehood.
Ser My Lord the King: the King?
Leo. What is the buſineſſe?
Ser. O Sir I ſhall be hated to report it.
The Prince your Sonne, with meere conceit and feare
Of the Queenes ſpeed, is gone.
Leo. How? gone?
Ser. Is dead.
Leo. Apollo's angry, and the heavens themſelves
Doe ſtrike at my Injuſtice. How now there?
Paul. This newes is mortall to the Queene: Look downe
And ſee what death is doing.
Leo. Take her hence:
Her heart is but o're-charg'd: ſhe will recover.
I have too much beleev'd mine owne ſuſpition:
'Beſeech you tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life. Apollo pardon
My great prophaneſſe 'gainſt thine Oracle.
Ile reconcile me to Polixenes,
New wooe my Queene, recall the good Camillo
(Whom I proclaime a man of Truth, of Mercy:)
For being tranſported by my Iealouſies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I choſe
Camillo for the miniſter, to poyſon
My friend Polixenes: which had beene done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My ſwift command: though I with death, and with
Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he (moſt humane,
And fill'd with Honor) to my Kingly Gueſt
Vnclaſp'd my practiſe, quit his fortunes here
(Which you knew great) and to the certaine hazard
Of all Incertainties, himſelfe commended,
No richer then his Honor: How he gliſters
Through my darke Ruſt? and how his Pietie
Do's my deeds make the blacker?
Paul. Woe the while:
O cut my Lace, leaſt my heart (cracking it)
Breake too.
Lord. What fit is this? good Lady?
Paul. What ſtudied torments (Tyrant) haſt for me?
What Wheeles? Racks? Fires? What flaying? boyling? Burning,
In Leads, or Oyles? What old, or new torture
Muſt I receive? whoſe very word deſerves
To taſte of thy moſt worſt. Thy Tyranny
(Together working with thy Iealouſies,
Fancies too weake for boyes, too greene and idle
For Girles of Nine) O thinke what they have done,
And then run mad indeed: ſtarke-mad: for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but ſpices for it.
That thou betrayed'ſt Polixenes, 'twas nothing,
(That did but ſhew thee, of a Foole, inconſtant,
And damnable ingratefull:) Nor was't much
Thou would'ſt haue poyſon'd good Camillo's Honor,
To have him kill a King: poore Treſpaſſes,
More monſtrous ſtanding by: whereof I reckon
The caſting forth to Crowes, the Baby-daughter,
To be or none, or little; though a Devill
Would have ſhed water out of fire, ere don't:
Nor is't directly layd to thee, the death
Of the young Prince, whoſe honourable thoughts
(Thoughts high for one ſo tender) cleft the heart
That could conceive a groſſe and fooliſh Sire
Blemiſh'd his gracious Dam: this is not, no,
Layd to thy anſwer: but the laſt: O Lords,
When I have ſaid, cry woe: the Queene, the Queene,

The ſweet'ſt, deer'ſt creature's dead: & vengeance for't
Not drop'd downe yet.
Lord. The higher powres forbid.
Pau. I ſay ſhe's dead: Ile ſwear't. If word, nor oath
Prevaile not, go and ſee: if you can bring
Tincture, or luſtre in her lip, her eye
Heate outwardly, or breath within, Ile ſerve you
As I would do the Gods. But, O thou Tyrant,
Do'ſt not repent theſe things, for they are heavier
Then all thy woes can ſtirre: therefore betake thee
To nothing but diſpaire. A thouſand knees,
Ten thouſand yeares together, naked, faſting,
Vpon a barren Mountaine, and ſtill Winter
In ſtorme perpetuall, could not move the Gods
To looke that way thou wer't.
Leo. Go on, go on:
Thou canſt not ſpeake too much, I have deſerv'd
All tongues to talke their bittreſt.
Lord. Say no more,
How ere the buſineſſe goes you have made fault
I'th boldneſſe of your ſpeech.
Pau. I am ſorry for't,
All faults I make, when I ſhall come to know them,
I do repent: Alas, I have ſhew'd too much
The raſhneſſe of a woman: he is toucht
To th'Noble heart. What's gone, and what's paſt helpe
Should be paſt greefe: Do not receive affliction
At my petition, I beſeech you, rather
Let me be puniſh'd, that have minded you
Of what you ſhoold forget. Now (good my Liege)
Sir, Royall Sir, forgive a fooliſh woman:
The love I bore your Queene (Lo, foole againe)
Ile ſpeake of her no more, nor of your Children:
Ile not remember you of my owne Lord,
(Who is loſt too:) take your patience to you,
And Ile ſay nothing,
Leo. Thou didſt ſpeake but well,
When moſt the truth: which I receive much better,
Then to be pittied of thee. Prethee bring me
To the dead bodies of my Queene, and Sonne,
One grave ſhall be for both: Vpon them ſhall
The cauſes of their death appeare (unto
Our ſhame perpetuall) once a day, Ile viſit
The Chappell where they lye, and teares ſhed there
Shall be my recreation. So long as Nature
Will beare up with this exerciſe, ſo long
I dayly vow to uſe it. Come, and leade me
To theſe ſorrowes. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Antigonus, a Marriner, Babe, Sheepe-heard, and Clowne.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ſhip hath toucht upon
The Deſarts of Bohemia.
Mar. I (my Lord) and feare
We have Landed in ill time: the skies looke grimly,
And threaten preſent bluſters. In my conſcience
The heavens with that we have in hand, are angry,
And frowne upon's.
Ant. Their ſacred wil's be done: get a-boord,
Looke to thy barke, Ile not be long before
I call upon thee.
Mar. Make your beſte haſt, and go not
Too-farre i'th Land: 'tis like to be lowd weather,
Beſides this place is famous for the Creatures
Of prey, that keepe upon't,
Aniig. Go thou away,
Ile follow inſtantly.
Mar. I am glad at heart
To be ſo ridde o'th buſineſſe. Exit
Ant. Come, poore babe;
I have heard (but not beleeu'd) the Spirits o'th'dead
May walke againe: if ſuch thing be, thy Mother
Appear'd to me laſt night: for ne're was dreame
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head is on one ſide, ſome another,
I never ſaw a veſſell of like ſorrow
So fill'd, and ſo becomming: in pure white Robes
Like very ſanctity ſhe did approach
My Cabine where I lay: thrice bow'd before me,
And (gaſping to begin ſome ſpeech) her eyes
Became two ſpouts; the furie ſpent, anon
Did this breake from her. Good Antigonus,
Since Fate (againſt thy better diſpoſition)
Hath made thy perſon for the Thrower-out
Of my poore babe, according to thine oath,
Places remote enough are in Bohemia,
There weepe, and leave it crying: and for the babe
Is counted loſt for ever, Perdita
I prethee call't: For this ungentle buſineſſe
Put on thee, by my Lord, thou ne're ſhalt ſee
Thy Wife Paulina more: and ſo, with ſhrickes
She melted into Ayre. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect my ſelfe, and thought
This was ſo, and no ſlumber: Dreames, are toyes,
Yet for this once, yea ſuperſtitiouſly,
I will be ſquar'd by this. I do beleeve
Hermione hath ſuffer'd death, and that Apollo would (this being indeed the iſſue
Of King Polexenus) it ſhould heere be laide
(Either for life, or death) upon the earth
Of it's right Father. Bloſſome, ſpeed thee well,
There lye, and there thy character: there theſe,
Which may if Fortune pleaſe, both breed thee (pretty)
And ſtill reſt thine. The ſtorme beginnes, poore wretch,
That for thy mothers fault, art thus expos'd
To loſſe, and what may follow. Weepe I cannot,
But my heart bleedes: and moſt accurſt am I
To be by oath enjoyn'd to this. Farewell,
The day frownes more and more: thou'rt like to have
A lullabie too rough: I never ſaw
The heavens ſo dim, by day. A ſavage clamor?
Well may I get a-boord: This is the Chace,
I am gone for ever. Exit purſued by a Beare. Enter a Shep-

Shep. I would there were no age betweene ten and three and twentie, or that youth would ſleepe out the reſt: for there is nothing (in the betweene) but getting wenches with childe, wronging the Auncientry, ſtealing, fighting, harke you now: would any but theſe boyle-braines of nineteene, and two and twentie hunt this weather? They have ſcarr'd away two of my beſt Sheepe, which I feare the Wolfe will ſooner finde then the Maiſter; if any where I have them, [illegible] by the ſea-ſide, brouzing of Ivy. Good-lucke (and't be the will) what have we heere? Mercy on's, a Barne? A very pretty barne; A boy, or a Chide I wonder? (A pretty one, a very prettie one) ſure ſome Scape; Though I am not bookiſh, yet I can reade Waiting-Gentlewoman in the ſcape: this has beene ſome ſtaire-worke, ſome Trunke-worke, ſome behind-doore worke: they were warmer that got this, then the poore thing is here. Ile take it up for pity, yet Ile tarry til my ſonne come: he hallow'd but even now. Whoa-ho-hoa.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. Hilloa, loa.

Shep. What? art ſo neere? If thou'lt ſee a thing to talke on, when thou art dead and rotten, come hither: what ayl'ſt thou, man?

Clo. I have ſeene two ſuch ſights, by Sea and by Land: but I am not to ſay it is a Sea, for it is now the skye, betwixt the Firmament and it, you cannot thruſt a bodkins point.

Shep. Why boy, how is it?

Clo. I would you did but ſee how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the ſhore, but that's not to the point: Oh, the moſt pitteous cry of the poore ſoules, ſometimes to ſee'em, and not to ſee'em; Now the Shippe boaring the Moone with her maine Maſt, and anon ſwallowed with yeſt and froth, as you'ld thruſt a Corke into a hogſhead. And then for the Land-ſervice, to ſee how the Beare tore out his ſhoulder bone, how he cride to me for helpe, and ſaid his name was Antigonus a Nobleman: But to make an end of the Ship, to ſee how the Sea flapdragon'd it: but firſt, how the poore ſoules roared, and the ſea mock'd them: and how the poore Gentleman roared, and the Beare mock'd him, both roaring lowder then the ſea, or weather.

Shep. Name of mercy, when was this boy?

Clo. Now, now: I have not wink'd ſince I ſaw theſe ſights: the men are not yet cold under water, nor the Beare halfe din'd on the Gentleman: he's at it now.

Shep. Would I had beene by, to have help'd the old man.

Clo. I would you had beene by the ſhip ſide, to have help'd her; there your charity would have lack'd footing.

Shep. Heavy matters, heavy matters: but looke thee here boy. Now bleſſe thy ſelfe; thou met'ſt with things dying, I with things new borne. Here's a ſight for thee: Looke thee, a bearing-cloath for a Squires child: looke thee heere, take up, take up (Boy:) open't: ſo, let's ſee, it was told me I ſhould be rich by the Fairies. This is ſome Changeling: open't: what's within boy?

Clo. You're a mad old man; If the ſinnes of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold, all Gold.

Shep. This is Faiery Gold boy, and 'twill prove ſo: up with't, keepe it cloſe: home, home, the next way. We are lucky (boy) and to be ſo ſtill requires nothing but ſecrecy. Let my ſheepe goe: Come (good boy) the next way home.

Clo. Goe you the next way with your Findings, Ile go ſee if the Beare be gone from the Gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curſt but when they are hungry: if there be any of him left, Ile bury it.

Shep. That's a good deed: if thou mayeſt diſcerne by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to th'ſight of him.

Clo. 'Marry will I: and you ſhall helpe to put him i'th' ground.

Shep. 'Tis a lucky day, boy, and we'll doe good deeds on't. Exeunt

Actus Quartus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Tim. I that pleaſe ſome, try all: both joy and terror
Of good, and bad: that makes, and unfolds error.
Now take upon me (in the name of Time)
To uſe my wings: Impute it not a crime
To me, or my ſwift paſſage, that I ſlide
Ore ſixteene yeeres, and leave the growth untride
Of that wide gap, ſince it is in my powre
To orethrow Law, and in one ſelfe-borne houre
To plant, and ore-whelme Cuſtome. Let me paſſe
The ſame I am, ere ancient'ſt Order was,
Or what is now receiu'd. I witneſſe to
The times that brought them in, ſo ſhall I doe
To th'freſheſt things now reigning, and make ſtale
The gliſtering of this preſent, as my Tale
Now ſeemes to it: your patience this allowing,
I turne my glaſſe, and give my Scæne ſuch growing
As you had ſlept betweene: Leontes leaving
Th'effects of his fond jealouſies, ſo greeving
That he ſhuts up himſelfe, Imagine me
(Gentle Spectators) that I now may be
In faire Bohemia, and remember well,
I mention here a ſonne o'th'Kings, which Florizell
I now name to you: and with ſpeed ſo pace
To ſpeake of Perdita, now growne in grace
Equall with wond'ring. What of her inſues
I liſt not prophefie: but let Times newes (daughter
Be knowne when 'tis brought forth. A ſhepheards
And what to her adheres, which followes after,
Is th'argument of Time: of this allow,
If ever you have ſpent time worſe, ere now:
If never, yet that Time himſelfe doth ſay,
He wiſhes earneſtly, you never may. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Polixenes, and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee (good Camillo) be no more importunate: 'tis a ſickeneſſe denying thee any thing: a death to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteene yeeres ſince I ſaw my Countrey: though I have (for the moſt part) beene ayred abroad, I deſire to lay my bones there. Beſides, the penitent King (my Maſter) hath ſent for me, to whoſe feeling ſorrowes I might be ſome allay (or I oreweene to thinke ſo) which is another ſpurre to my departure.

Pol. As thou lov'ſt me (Camillo) wipe not out the reſt of thy ſervices, by leaving me now: the need I have of thee, thine owne goodneſſe hath made: better not to have had thee, then thus to want thee, thou having made me Buſineſſes, (which none (without thee) can ſufficiently manage) muſt either ſtay to execute them thy ſelfe, or take away with thee the very ſervices thou haſt done: which if I have not enough conſidered (as too much I cannot) to be more thankefull to thee, ſhall be my ſtudy, and my profit therein, the heaping friendſhippes. Of that fatall Countrey Sicilia, prethee ſpeake no more, whoſe very naming, puniſhes me with the remembrance of that penitent (as thou calſt him) and reconciled King my brother, whoſe loſſe of his moſt precious Queene and Children, are even now to bee a-freſh lamented. Say to me, when ſaw'ſt thou the Prince Florizell my ſon? Kings are no leſſe unhappy, their iſſue not being gracious, then they are in looſing them, when they have approved their Vertues.

Cam. Sir, it is three dayes ſince I ſaw the Prince: what his happier affayres may be, are to me unknowne: but I have (miſſingly) noted, he is of late much retyred from Court, and is leſſe frequent to his Princely exerciſes then formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have conſidered ſo much (Camillo) and with ſome care, ſo farre, that I have eyes under my ſervice, which looke upon his removedneſſe: from whom I have this Intelligence, that he is ſeldome from the houſe of a moſt homely ſhepheard: a man (they ſay) that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbors, is growne into an unſpeakable eſtate.

Cam. I have heard (Sir) of ſuch a man, who hath a daughter of moſt rare note: the report of her is extended more, then can be thought to begin from ſuch a cottage.

Pol. That's likewiſe part of my Intelligence: but (I feare) the Angle that pluckes our ſonne thither. Thou ſhalt accompany us to the place, where we will (not appearing what we are) have ſome queſtion with the ſhepheard; from whoſe ſimplicity, I thinke it not uneaſie to get the cauſe of my ſonnes reſort thither. Prethee be my preſent partner in this buſines, and lay aſide the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My beſt Camillo, we muſt diſguiſe our ſelves. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Autolicus ſinging.

When Daffadils begin to peere,
With heigh the Doxy over the dale,
Why then comes in the ſweet o'the yeere,
For the red blood raignes in the winters pale.

The white ſheete bleaching on the hedge,
With hey the ſweet birds, O how they ſing:
Doth ſet my pugging tooth an edge,
For a quart of Ale is a diſh for a King.

The Larke, that tirra-Lyra chaunts,
With heigh, with heigh the Thruſh and the Iay:
Are Summer ſongs for me and my Aunts
While we lye tumbling in the hay.

I have ſeru'd Prince Florizell, and in my time wore three pile, but now I am out of ſervice.

But ſhall I goe mourne for that (my deere)
the pale Moone ſhines by night:
And when I wander here, and there
I then doe moſt goe right.
If Tinkers may have leave to live,
and beare the Sow-skin Bowget,
Then my account I well may give,
and in the Stockes avouch-it.

My Trafficke is ſheets: when the Kite builds, looke to leſſer Linnen. My Father nam'd me Autolicus, who being (as I am) lytter'd under Mercury, was likewiſe a ſnapper-up of unconſidered trifles: With Dye and drab, I purchas'd Capariſon, and my Revennew is the ſilly Cheate. Gallowes, and Knocke, are too powerfull on the Highway. Beating and hanging are terrors to me: For the life to come, I ſleepe out the thought of it. A prize, a prize.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. Let me ſee, every Leaven-weather toddes, every told yeeldes pound and odde ſhilling: fifteene hundred ſhorne, what comes the wooll too?

Aut. If the ſprindge hold, the Cocke's mine.

Clo. I cannot do't without Compters. Let me ſee, what am I to buy for our Sheepe-ſhearing-Feaſt? Three pound of Sugar, fiue pound of Currence, Rice: What will this ſiſter of mine do with Rice? But my father hath made her Miſtris of the Feaſt, and ſhe layes it on. Shee hath made-me foure and twenty Noſe-gayes for the ſhearers (three-man ſong-men, all, and very good ones) but they are moſt of them Meanes and Baſes; but one Puritan amongſt them, and he ſings Pſalmes to horne-pipes. I muſt have Saffron to colour the Warden Pies, Mace: Dates, none: that's out of my note: Nutmegges, ſeven; a Race or two of Ginger, but that I may begge: Foure pound of Prewyns, and as many of Reyſons o'th Sunne.

Aut. Oh, that ever I was borne.

Clo. I'th'name of me.

Aut. Oh helpe me, helpe mee: plucke but off theſe ragges: and then, death, death.

Clo. Alacke poore ſoule, thou haſt need of more rags to lay on thee, rather then have theſe off.

Aut. Oh ſir, the loathſomneſſe of them offends mee, more then the ſtripes I have received, which are mighty ones and millions.

Clo. Alas poore man, a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Aut. I am rob'd ſir, and beaten: my money, and apparrell tane from me, and theſe deteſtable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horſe-man, or a foot-man?

Aut. A footman (ſweet ſir) a footman.

Clo. Indeed, he ſhould be a footman, by the garments he has left with thee: if this be a horſemans Coate, it hath ſeene very hot ſervice. Lend me thy hand, Ile helpe thee. Come lend me thy hand.

Aut. Oh good ſir, tenderly, oh.

Clo. Alas poore ſoule.

Aut. Oh good ſir, ſoftly, good ſir: I feare (ſir) my ſhoulder-blade is out.

Clo. How now? Canſt ſtand?

Aut. Softly, deere ſir: good ſir, ſoftly: you ha done me a charitable office.

Clo. Doeſt lacke any mony? I have a little mony for thee.

Aut. No, good ſweet ſir: no, I beſeech you ſir: I have a Kinſman not paſt three quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going: I ſhall there have money, or any thing I want: Offer me no money I pray you, that killes my heart.

Clo. What manner of Fellow was he that robb'd you?

Aut. A fellow (Sir) that I have knowne to goe about with Troll-my-dames: I knew him him once a ſervant of the Prince: I cannot tell good ſir, for which of his Vertues it was, but he was certainely Whipt out of the Court.

Clo. His vices you would ſay: there's no vertue whipt out of the Court: they cheriſh it to make it ſtay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

Aut. Vices I would ſay (Sir.) I know this man well, he hath beene ſince an Ape-bearer, then a Proceſſe-ſerver (a Bayliffe) then hee compaſt a Motion of the Prodigall ſonne, and married a Tinkers wife, within a Mile where my Land and living lyes;. and (having flowne over many knaviſh profeſſions) he ſetled only in Rogue: ſome call him Autolicus.

Clo. Out upon him: Prig, for my life Prig: he haunts Wakes, Faires, and Beare-baitings

Aut. Very true ſir: he ſir he: that's the Rogue that put me into this apparrell.

Clo. Not a more cowardly Rogue in all Bohemia; If you had but look'd bigge, and ſpit at him, hee'ld have runne.

Aut. I muſt confeſſe to you (ſir) I am no fighter: I am falſe of heart that way, and that he knew I warrant him.

Clo. How doe you now?

Aut. Sweet Sir, much better then I was: I can ſtand, and walke: I will even take my leave of you, and pace ſoftly towards my Kinſmans.

Clo. Shall I bring thee on the way?

Aut. No, good fac'd ſir, no ſweet ſir.

Clo. Then farewell, I muſt goe to buy Spices for our ſheepe-ſhearing. Exit.

Aut. Proſper you ſweet ſir. Your purſe is not hot enough to purchaſe your Spice: Ile be with you at your ſheepe-ſhearing too: If I make not this Cheat bring out another, and the ſheerers prove ſheepe, let me be unrold, and my name put in the booke of Vertue.

Song. Iog-on, Iog-on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hent the Stile-a.
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your ſad tyres in a Mile-a. Exit.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Florizell, Perdita, Shepherd, Clowne, Polixenes, Camillo, Mopſa, Dorcas, Servants, Autolicus.

Flo. Theſe your unuſuall weeds, to each part of you
Do's give a life: no Shepherdeſſe, but Flora
Peering in Aprils front. This your ſheepe-ſhearing,
Is as a merry meeting of the petty gods,
And you the Queene on't.

Per. Sir: my gracious Lord,
To chide at your extreames, it not becomes me:
(Oh pardon, that I name them:) your high ſelfe
The gracious marke o'th' Land, you have obſcur'd
With a Swaines wearing: and me (poore lowly Maide)
Moſt goddeſſe-like prank'd up: But that our Feaſts
In every Meſſe, have folly; and the Feeders
Diſgeſt it with a Cuſtome, I ſhould bluſh
To ſee you ſo attyr'd: ſworne I thinke,
To ſhew my ſelfe a glaſſe.

Flo. I bleſſe the time
When my good Falcon, made her flight a-croſſe
Thy fathers ground.

Per. Now Iove affoord you cauſe:
To me the difference forges dread (your Greatneſſe
Hath not beene us'd to feare:) even now I tremble
To thinke your Father, by ſome accident
Should paſſe this way, as you did: Oh the Fates,
How would he looke, to ſee his worke, ſo noble,
Vildely bound up? What would he ſay? Or how Should I (in theſe my borrowed Flaunts) behold
The ſternneſſe of his preſence?

Flo. Apprehend
Nothing but jollity: the Goddes themſelves
(Humbling their Deities to love) have taken
The ſhapes of Beaſts upon them. Iupiter,
Became a Bull, and bellow'd: the greene Neptune
A Ram, and bleated: and the Fire-roab'd-God
Golden Apollo, a poore humble Swaine,
As I ſeeme now. Their transformations,
Were never for a peece of beauty, rarer,
Nor in a way ſo chaſte: ſince my deſires
Runne not before mine honor: nor my Luſts
Burne hotter then my Faith.

Perd. O but deere ſir,
Yur reſolution cannot hold, when 'tis
Oppos'd (as it muſt be) by th'power of the King:
One of theſe two muſt be neceſſities,
Which then will ſpeake, that you muſt change this purpoſe,
Or I my life.

Flo. Thou deereſt Perdita,
With theſe forc'd thoughts, I prethee darken not
The Mirth o'th' Feaſt: Or Ile be thine (my Faire)
Or not my Fathers. For I cannot be Mine owne, nor any thing to any, if
I be not thine. To this I am moſt conſtant,
Though deſtiny ſay no. Be merry (Gentle)
Strangle ſuch thoughts as theſe, with any thing
That you behold the while. Your gueſts are comming:
Lift up your countenance, as it were the day
Of celebration of that nuptiall, which
We two have ſworne ſhall come.

Perd. O Lady Fortune,
Stand you auſpicious. Enter All.

Flo. See, your Gueſts approach,
Addreſſe your ſelfe to entertaine them ſprightly,
And let's be red with mirth.

Shep. Fye (daughter) when my old wife liv'd: upon
This day, ſhe was both Pantler, Butler, Cooke,
Both Dame and Servant: Welcom'd all: ſerv'd all,
Would ſing her ſong, and dance her turne: now heere
At upper end o'th Table; now, i'th middle:
On his ſhoulder, and his: her face o'fire
With labour, and the thing ſhe tooke to quench it
She would to each one ſip. You are retyred,
As if you were a feaſted one: and not
The Hoſteſſe of the meeting: Pray you bid
Theſe unknowne friends to's welcome, for it is
A way to make us better Friends, more knowne.
Come, quench your bluſhes, and preſent your ſelfe
That which you are, Miſtris o'th' Feaſt. Come on,
And bid us welcome to your ſheepe-ſhearing,
As your good flocke ſhall proſper.

Perd. Sir, welcome:
It is my Fathers will, I ſhould take on me
The Hoſteſſeſhip o'th'day, your're welcome ſir
Give me thoſe Flowres there (Dorcas.) Reverend Sirs,
For you, there's Roſemary, and Rue, theſe keepe
Seeming, and ſavour all the Winter long:
Grace, and Remembrance be to you both,
And welcome to our Shearing.

Pol. Shepherdeſſe,
(A faire one are you :) well you fit our ages
With flowres of Winter.
Perd. Sir, the yeare growing ancient,
Not yet on ſummers death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter, the fayreſt flowres o'th ſeaſon
Are our Carnations, and ſtreak'd Gilly-vors,
(Which ſome call Natures baſtards) of that kind
Our ruſticke Garden's barren, and I care not
To get ſlips of them.
Pol. Wherefore (gentle Maiden)
Doe you neglect them.
Perd. For I have heard it ſaid,
There is an Art, which in their pideneſſe ſhares
With great creating-Nature.
Pol. Say there be :
Yet Nature is made better by no meane,
But Nature makes that Meane : ſo over that Art,
(Which you ſay addes to Nature) is an Art
That Nature makes : you ſee (ſweet Maid) we marry
A gentler Sien, to the wildeſt Stocke,
And make conceive a barke of baſer kind
By bud of Nobler race. This is an Art
Which do's mend Nature : change it rather, but
The Art it ſelfe, is Nature.
Per. So it is.
Pol. Then make your Garden rich in Gilly'vors,
And doe not call them baſtards.
Per. Ile not put
The Dible in earth, to ſet one ſlip of them :
No more then were I painted, I would wiſh
This youth ſhould ſay 'twer well : and onely therefore
Deſire to breed by me. Here's flowres for you :
Hot Lavender, Mints, Savory, Mariorum,
The Mary-gold, that goes to bed with 'Sun,
And with him riſes, weeping : Theſe are flowres
Of middle ſummer, and I thinke they are given
To men of middle age. Y'are very welcome.
Cam. I ſhould leave grazing, were I of your flocke,
And onely live by gazing.
Per. Out alas :
You'ld be ſo leane, that blaſts of Ianuary (Friend,
Would blow you through and through. Now (my fairſt
I would I had ſome Flowres o'th Spring, that might Become your time of day : and yours, and yours,
That weare upon your Virgin-branches yet
Your Maiden-heads growing : O Proſerpina,
For the Flowers now, that (frighted) thou let'ſt fall
From Diſſes Waggon : Daffadils,
That come before the Swallow dares, and take
The windes of March with beauty : Violets (dim,
But ſweeter then the lids of Iuno's eyes,
Or Cytherea's breath) pale Prime-roſes,
That dye unmarried, ere they can behold
Bright Phœbus in his ſtrength (a Malady Moſt incident to Maids :) bold Oxlips, and
The Crowne Imperiall : Lillies of all kinds,
(The flowre-de-Luce being one.) O, theſe I lacke,
To make you Garlands of) and my ſweet friend,
To ſtrew him o're, and ore.
Flo. What? like a Coarſe?
Per. No, like a banke, for Love to lye, and play on :
Not like a Coarſe : or if : not to be buried,
But quicke, and in mine armes. Come, take your flouers,
Me thinkes I play as I have ſeene them doe
In Whitſon-Paſtorals : Sure this Robe of mine
Do's change my diſpoſition :
Flo. What you doe,
Still betters what is done. When you ſpeake (ſweet)
I'ld have you doe it ever : When you ſing,
I'ld have you buy, and ſell ſo : ſo give Almes,
Pray ſo : and for the ord'ring your Affayres,
To ſing them too. When you doe dance, I wiſh you
A wave o'th Sea, that you might ever doe
Nothing but that : move ſtill, ſtill ſo :
And owne no other Function. Each your doing,
(So ſingular, in each particular)
Crownes what you are doing, in the preſent deeds,
That all your Actes, are Queenes.
Perd. O Doricles,
Your praiſes are too large : but that your youth
And the true blood which peepes fairely through't,
Doe plainly give you out an unſtain'd Shepherd
With wiſedome, I might feare (my Doricles)
You woo'd me the falſe way.
Flo. I thinke you have
As little skill to feare, as I have purpoſe
To put you to't. But come, our dance I pray,
Your hand (my Perdita :) ſo Turtles paire
That never meane to part.
Perd. Ile ſweare for 'em.
Pol. This is the pretrieſt Low-borne Laſſe, that ever
Ran on the greene-ſord : Nothing ſhe do's, or ſeemes
But ſmackes of ſomething greater then her ſelfe,
Too Noble for this place.
Cam. He tels her ſomething
That makes her blood looke on't : Good ſooth ſhe is
The Queene of Curds and Creame.
Clo. Come on : ſtrike up.
Dor. Mopſa muſt be your Miſtris : marry Garlicke to mend her kiſſing with.
Mop. Now in good time,
Clo. Not a word, a word, we ſtand upon our manners,
Come, ſtrike up.

Heere a Daunce of Shepheards and Shepheardeſſes.

Pol. Pray good Shepheard, what faire Swaine is this,
Which dances with your daughter?
Shep. They call him Doricles, and boaſts himſelfe
To have a worthy Feeding; but I have it
Vpon his owne report, and I beleeve it :
He lookes like ſooth : he ſayes he loves my daughter,
I thinke ſo too; for never gaz'd the Moone
Vpon the water, as he'll ſtand and reade
As 'twere my daughters eyes : and to be plaine,
I thinke there is not halfe a kiſſe to chooſe
Who loves another beſt.
Pol. She dances featly.
Shep. So ſhe do's any thing, though I report it
That ſhould be ſilent : if yong Doricles
Doe light upon her, ſhe ſhall bring him that
Which he not dreames of. Enter Servant.

Ser. O Maſter : if you did but heare the Pedler at the doore, you would never dance againe after a Tabor and Pipe : no, the Bag-pipe could not move you : he ſings ſeverall Tunes, faſter then you'll tell money : he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all mens eares grew to his Tunes.

Clo. He could never come better : he ſhall come in : I love a ballad but even too well, if it be dolefull matter merrily ſet downe : or a very pleaſant thing indeed, and ſung lamentably.

Ser. He hath ſongs for man, or woman, of all ſizes: No Milliner can ſo fit his cuſtomers with Gloues: he has the pretrieſt Love ſongs for Maids, ſo without bawdry (which is ſtrange) with ſuch delicate burthens of Dildo's and Fadings: Iump-her, and thump-her; and where ſome ſtretch-mouth'd Raſcall, would (as it were) meane miſcheefe, and breake a foule gap into the Matter, he makes the maid to anſwer, Whoope, doe me no harme good man: put's him off, ſlights him, with Whoop, doe me no harme good man.

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Beleeve me, thou talkeſt of an admirable conceited fellow, has he any unbraided Warres:

Ser. He hath Ribbons of all the colours i'th Rainebow; Points, more then all the Lawyers in Bohemia, can learnedly handle, though they come to him by th'groſſe: Inckles, Caddyſſes, Cambrickes, Lawnes: why he ſings em over, as they were Gods, or Goddeſſes: you would thinke a Smocke were a ſhe-Angell, he ſo chants to the ſleeve-hand, and the worke about the ſquare on't.

Clo. Prethee bring him in, and let him approach ſinging,

Perd. Forewarne him, that he vſe no ſcurrilous words in's tunes.

Clo. You have of theſe Pedlers, that have more in them, then youl'd thinke (Siſter)

Per. I good brother, or goe about to thinke.

Enter Autolicus ſinging.

Lawne as white as driven Snow,
Cypreſſe blacke as ere was Crow,
Gloves as ſweet as Damaske Roſes,
Maskes for faces, and for noſes:
Bugle-bracelet, Necke-lace Amber.
Perfume for a Ladies Chamber:
Golden Quoifes, and Stomachers
For my Lads, to give their deers:
Pins, and poaking-ſtickes of ſteele.
What Maids lacke from head to heele:
Come buy of me, come: come buy, come buy.
Buy Lads, or elſe your Laſſes cry: Come buy.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopſa, thou ſhouldſt take no money of me, but being enthrall'd as I am, it will alſo be the bondage of certaine Ribbons and Gloves.

Mop. I was promis'd them againſt the Feaſt, but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promis'd you more then that, or there be lyars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promis'd you: 'May be he has paid you more, which will ſhame you to give him againe.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? Will they weare their plackets, where they ſhould bear their faces? Is there not milking-time? When you are going to bed? Or kill-hole? To whiſtle of theſe ſecrets, but you muſt be tittle-tatling before all our gueſts? Tis well they are whiſpring: clamor your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done; Come you promis'd me a tawdry-lace, and a paire of ſweet Gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee how I was cozen'd by the way, and loſt all my money?

Aut. And indeed Sir, there are Cozeners abroad, therefore it behooves men to be wary.

Clo. Feare not thou man, thou ſhalt loſe nothing here.

Aut. I hope ſo ſir, for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What haſt heere? Ballads?

Mop. Pray now buy ſome: I love a ballet in print, a life, for then we are ſure they are true.

Aut. Here's one, to a very dolefull tune, how a Vſurers wife was brought to bed of twenty money bagges at a burthen, and how ſhe long'd to eate Adders heads, and Toads carbonado'd.

Mop. Is it true, thinke you?

Aut. Very true, and but a moneth old.

Dor. Bleſſe me from marrying a Vſurer.

Aut. Here's the Midwives name to't: one Miſtris Tale-Porter, and five or ſix honeſt Wives, that were preſent. Why ſhould I carry lyes abroad?

Mop. 'Pray you now buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by: and let's firſt ſee moe Ballads: We'll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad of a Fiſh, that appeared upon the coaſt, on wenſday the fourescore of Aprill, forty thouſand fadom aboue water, and ſung this ballad againſt the hard hearts of maides: it was thought ſhe was a Woman, and was turn'd into a cold fiſh, for ſhe would not exchange fleſh with one that lov'd her: The Ballad is very pittifull, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, thinke you.

Auto, Five Iuſtices hands at it: and witneſſes more then my packe will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too; another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mop. Let's have ſome merry ones.

Aut. Why this is a paſſing merry one, and goes to the tune of two maids wooing a man: there's ſcarſe a Maide weſtward but ſhe ſings it: 'tis in requeſt, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both ſing it: if thou'lt beare a part, thou ſhalt heare, 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on't, a month agoe.

Aut. I can beare my part, you muſt know 'tis my occupation: Have at it with you:

Song Get you hence, for I muſt goe
Aut. Where it fits not you to know.
Dor. Whether?
Mop. O whether?
Dor. Whether?
Mop. It becomes thy oath full well,
Thou to me thy ſecrets tell.
Dor. Me too. Let me goe thether:
Mop. Or thou goeſt to th'Grange, or Mill,
Dor. If to either thou doſt ill,
Aut. Neither.
Dor. What neither?
Aut. Neither:
Dor. Thou haſt ſworne my Love to be,
Mop. Thou haſt ſworne it more to me.
Then whether goeſt? Say whether?

Clo. We'll have this ſong out anon by our ſelves: My father, and the Gent. are in ſad talke, and we'll not trouble them: Come bring away thy packe after me, Wenches Ile buy for you both: Pedler let's have the firſt choyce; fellow me girles. Aut. And you ſhall pay well for 'em.

Song. Will you buy any Tape, or Lace for your Cape?
My dainty Ducke, my deere-a?
Any Silke, any Thred, any Toyes for your head
Of the news't, and fins't, fins't weare-a.
Come to the Pedler, Money's a medler,
That doth utter all mens ware-a. Exit.

Ser. Maſter, there is three Carters, three Shepherds, three Neat-herds, three Swine-herds that have made themſelves all men of haire, they call themſelves Saltiers, and they have a Dance, which the Wenches ſay is a gally-maufry of Gambols, becauſe they are not in't: but they themſelves are o'th'mind (if it be not too rough for ſome, that know little but bowling) it will pleaſe plentifully.

Shep. Away: We'll none on't; heere has beene too much homely foolery already. I know (Sir) we weary you.

Pol. You weary thoſe that refreſh us: pray let's ſee theſe foure-threes of Heardſmen.

Ser. One three of them, by their owne report (Sir,) hath danc'd before the King: and not the worſt of the three, but jumpes twelve foote and a halfe by th'ſquire.

Shep. Leave your prating, ſince theſe good men are pleaſ'd, let them come in: but quickly now.

Ser. Why, they ſtay at doore Sir.

Heere a Dance of twelve Satires.

Pol. O Father, you'll know more of that heereafter:
Is it not too farre gone? 'Tis time to part them,
He's ſimple, and tels much. How now (faire ſhepheard)
Your heart is full of ſomething, that do's take
Your mind from feaſting. Sooth, when I was yong,
And handed love, as you doe; I was wont
To load my Shee with knackes: I would have ranſackt
The Pedlers ſilken Treaſury, and have powr'd it
To her acceptance: you have let him goe,
And nothing marted with him. If your Laſſe
Interpretation ſhould abuſe, and call this
Your lacke of love, or bounty, you were ſtraited
For a reply at leaſt, if you make a care
Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old Sir, I know
She prizes not ſuch trifles as theſe are:
The gifts ſhe lookes from me, are packt and lockt
Vp in my heart, which I have given already,
But not deliver'd. O heare me breath my life
Before this ancient Sir, who (it ſhould ſeeme)
Hath ſometime lov'd: I take thy hand, this hand,
As ſoft as Doves downe, and as white as it,
Or Ethyopians tooth, or the fan'd ſnow,
That's bolted by th'Northerne blaſt, twice ore.

Pol. What followes this?
How prettily th'yong Swaine ſeemes to waſh
The hand, was faire before? I have put you out,
But to your proteſtation: Let me heare
What you profeſſe.

Flo. Doe, and be witneſſe too't.

Plo. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. And he, and more
Than he, and men: the earth, the heavens, and all;
That were I crown'd the moſt Imperiall Monarch
Thereof moſt worthy: were I the fayreſt youth
That ever made eye ſwerve, had force and knowledge
More than was ever mans, I would not prize them
Without her Love; for her, employ them all,
Commend them, and condemne them to her ſervice,
Or to their owne perdition.

Plo. Fairely offer'd.

Cam. This ſhewes a ſound affection.

She. But my daughter,
Say you the like to him.

Per. I cannot ſpeake
So well, (nothing ſo well) no, nor meane better
By th'patterne of mine owne thoughts, I cut out
The purity of his.

Shep. Take hands, a bargaine;
And friends unknowne, you ſhall beare witneſſe to't:
I give my daughter to him, and will make
Her Portion, equall his.

Flo. O, that muſt be
I'th Vertue of your daughter: One being dead,
I ſhall have more then you can dreame of yet,
Enough then for your wonder: but come-on:
Contract us 'fore theſe Witneſſes.

Shep, Come, your hand:
And daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft Swaine a-while: beſeech you,
Have you a Father?

Fol. I have: but what of him?

Rol. Knowes he of this?

Fol. He neither do's, nor ſhall.

Pol. Me-thinkes a Father,
Is at the Nuptiall of his ſonne, a gueſt
That beſt becomes the Table: Pray you once more
Is not your Father growne incapeable
Of reaſonable affaires? Is he not ſtupid
With Age, and altring Rheumes? Can he ſpeake? heare?
Know man, from man? Diſpute his owne eſtate?
Lyes he not bed-rid? And againe, do's nothing
But what he did, being childiſh?

Flo. No good Sir:
He has his health, and ampler ſtrength indeed
Then moſt have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard,
You offer him (if this be ſo) a wrong
Something unfilliall: Reaſon my ſonne
Should chooſe himſelfe a wife, but as good reaſon
The Father (all whoſe joy is nothing elſe
But faire poſterity) ſhould hold ſome counſaile
In ſuch a buſineſſe.

Flo. I yeeld all this;
But for ſome other reaſons (my grave Sir)
Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this buſineſſe.

Plo. Let him know't.

Flo. He ſhall not.

Plo. Prethee let him.

Flo. No, he muſt not.

Shep. Let him (my ſonne) he ſhall not need to greeve
At knowing of thy choyce.

Flo. Come, come, he muſt not:
Marke our Contract.

Plo. Marke your divorce (yong Sir)
Whom ſonne I dare not call: Thou art too baſe
To be acknowledg'd. Thou a Scepters heire,
That thus affects a ſheepe-hooke? Thou old Traitor,
I am ſorry, that by hanging thee, I can
But ſhorten thy life one weeke. And thou, freſh peece
Of excellent Witchcraft, who of force muſt know
The royall Foole thou coap'ſt with.

Shep. Oh my heart.

Pol. Ile have thy beauty ſcratcht with briers and made
More homely then thy ſtate. For thee (fond boy)
If I may ever know thou doſt but ſigh,
That thou no more ſhalt never ſee this knacke (as never
I meane thou ſhalt) we'll barre thee from ſucceſſion,
Not hold thee of our blood, no not our Kin,
Farre than Deucalion off: (marke thou my words)
Follow us to the Court. Thou Churle, for this time
(Though full of our diſpleaſure) yet we free thee
From the dead blow of it. And you Enchantment,

Worthy enough a Heardſman: yea him too,
That makes himſelfe (but for our Honor therein)
Vnworthy thee. If ever henceforth, thou
Theſe rurall Latches, to his entrance open,
Or hope his body more, with thy embraces,
I will deviſe a death, as cruell for thee
As thou art tender to't. Exit.
Perd. Even heere undone:
I was not much a-fear'd: for once, or twice
I was about to ſpeake, and tell him plainely,
The ſelfe-ſame Sun, that ſhines upon his Court,
Hides not his viſage from our Cottage, but
Lookes on alike. Wilt pleaſe you (Sir) be gon?
I told you what would come of this: Beſeech you
Of your owne ſtate take care: This dreame of mine
Being now awake, Ile Queene it no inch farther,
But milke my Ewes, and weepe.
Cam. Why how now Father,
Speake ere thou dyeſt.
Shep. I cannot ſpeake, nor thinke,
Nor dare to know, that which I know: O Sir,
You have undone a man of foureſcore three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet: yea,
To dye upon the bed my father dy'de,
To lye cloſe hy his honeſt bones; but now
Some Hangman muſt put on my ſhrowd, and lay me
Where no Prieſt ſhovels-in duſt. Oh curſed wretch,
That knew'ſt this was the Prince, and wouldſt adventure
To mingle faith with him. Vndone, undone:
If I might dye within this houre, I have liv'd
To dye when I deſire. Exit.
Flo. Why looke you ſo upon me?
I am but ſorry, not affear'd: delaid,
But nothing altred: What I was, I am:
More ſtraining on, for plucking backe; not following
My leaſh unwillingly.
Cam. Gracious my Lord,
You know your Fathers temper: at this time
He will allow no ſpeech: (which I doe gheſſe
You doe not purpoſe to him:) and as hardly
Will he endure your ſight, as yet I feare;
Then till the fury of his Highneſſe ſettle
Come not before him.
Flo. I not purpoſe it:
I thinke Camillo.
Cam. Even he, my Lord.
Per. How often have I told you 'twould be thus?
How often ſaid, my dignity would laſt
But till 'twere knowne?
Flo. It cannot faile, but by
The violation of my faith, and then
Let Nature cruſh the ſides o'th earth together,
And marre the ſeeds within. Lift up thy lookes:
From my ſucceſſion wipe me (Father) I
Am heyre to my affection.
Cam. Be advis'd.
Flo. I am: and by my fancy, if my Reaſon
Will thereto be obedient: I have reaſon:
If not, my ſences better (pleas'd with madneſſe)
Doe bid it welcome.
Cam. This is deſperate (ſir)
Flo. So call it: but it do's fulfill my vow:
I needs muſt thinke it honeſty. Camillo,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pompe that may
Be thereat gleaned: for all that the Sun ſees, or
The cloſe earth wombes, or the profound ſeas hide
In unknowne fadomes, will I breake my oath
To this my faire belov'd: Therefore, I pray you,
As you have euer bin my Fathers friend,
When he ſhall miſſe me, as (in faith I meane not
To ſee him any more) caſt your good counſailes
Vpon his paſſion: Let my ſelfe, and Fortune
Tug for the time to come. This you may know,
And ſo deliver, I am put to Sea
With her, whom here I cannot hold on ſhore:
And moſt opportune to her need, I have
A Veſſell rides faſt by, but not prepar'd
For this deſigne. What courſe I meane to hold
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concerne me the reporting.
Cam. O my Lord,
I would your ſpirit were eaſier for aduice,
Or ſtronger for your need.
Flo. Hearke Perdita,
Ile heare you by and by.
Cam. He's irremoveable,
Roſolv'd for flight: Now were I happy, if
His going, I could frame to ſerve my turne.
Save him from danger, doe him love and honour,
Purchaſe the ſight againe of deere Sicilia,
And that unhappy King, my Maſter, whom
I ſo much thirſt to ſee.
Flo. Now good Camillo,
I am ſo fraught with curious buſineſſe, that
I leave out ceremony.
Cam. Sir, I thinke
You have heard of my poore ſervices, i'th love
That I have borne your Father?
Flo. Very nobly
Have you deſerv'd: It is my Fathers Muſicke
To ſpeake your deeds: not little of his care
To have them recompenc'd, as thought on.
Cam. Well (my Lord)
If you may pleaſe to thinke I love the King,
And through him, what's neereſt to him, which is
Your gracious ſelfe; embrace but my direction,
If your more ponderous and ſetled project
May ſuffer alteration: On mine honor,
Ile point you where you ſhall have ſuch receiving
As ſhall become your Highneſſe, where you may
Enjoy your Miſtris; from the whom, I ſee
There's no diſiunction to be made, but by
(As heavens forefend) your ruine: Marry her,
And with my beſt endevours, in youe abſence,
Your diſcontenting Father, ſtrive to quallifie
And bring him up to liking.
Flo. How Camillo
May this (almoſt a miracle) be done?
That I may call thee ſomething more than man,
And after that truſt to thee.
Cam. Have you thought on
A place whereto you'll goe?
Flo. Not any yet:
But as th'unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly doe, ſo we profeſſe
Our ſelves to be the ſlaves of chance, and flyes
Of every winde that blowes.
Cam. Then liſt to me:
This followes, if you will not change your purpoſe
But undergoe this flight; make for Sicilia,
And there preſent your ſelfe, and your faire Princeſſe,
(For ſo I ſee ſhe muſt be) 'fore Leontes;

She ſhall be habited, as it becomes
The partner of your Bed. Me thinkes I ſee
Leontes opening his free Armes, and weeping
His Welcomes forth: asks thee there Sonne forgiveneſſe,
As 'twere i'th' Fathers perſon: kiſſes the hands
Of your freſh Princeſſe; ore and ore divides him,
'Twixt his unkindneſſe, and his kindneſſe: th'one
He chides to Hell, and bids the other grow
Faſter then Thought, or Time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my Viſitation, ſhall I
Hold up before him?

Cam. Sent by the King your father
To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you (as from your Father) ſhall deliver,
Things knowne betwixt us three, Ile write you downe,
The which ſhall point you forth at every ſitting
What you muſt ſay, that he ſhall not perceive,
But that you have your fathers Boſome there,
And ſpeake his very Heart.

Flo. I am bound to you:
There is ſome ſappe in this.

Cam. A Courſe more promiſing,
Then a wild dedication of your ſelves
To unpath'd Waters, undream'd Shores; moſt certaine,
To Miſeries enough: no hope to helpe you,
But as you ſhake off one, to take another:
Nothing ſo certaine, as your Anchors, who
Doe their beſt office, if they can but ſtay you,
Where you'l be loth to be: beſides you know,
Proſperitie's the very bond of Love,
Whoſe freſh complexion, and whoſe heart together,
Affliction alters.

Per. One of theſe is true:
I thinke Affliction may ſubdue the Cheeke,
But not take-in the Mind,

Cam. Yea? ſay you ſo?
There ſhall not, at your fathers houſe, theſe ſeven yeeres
Be borne another ſuch,

Flo. My good Camillo,
She's as forward, of her Breeding, as
She is i'th' reare 'our Birth.

Cam. I cannot ſay, 'tis pitty
She lackes inſtructions, for ſhe ſeemes a Miſtreſſe
To moſt that teach.

Per. Your pardon Sir, for this.
Ile bluſh you Thankes.

Flo. My prettieſt Perdita.
But O, the Thornes we ſtand upon: (Camillo)
Preſerver of my Father, now of me,
The Medicine of our Houſe: how ſhall we doe?
We are not furniſh'd like Bohemia's Sonne,
Nor ſhall appeare in Sicily.

Cam. My Lord,
Feare none of this: I thinke you know my fortunes
Doe all lye there: it ſhall be ſo my care,
To have you royally appointed, as if
The Scæne yov play, were mine. For inſtance Sir,
That you may know you ſhall not want: one word.

Enter Autolicus.

Aut. Ha ha, what a foole Honeſty is? and Truſt (his ſworne brother) a very ſimple Gentleman. I have ſold all my Trompery: not a counterfeit Stone, not a Ribbon, Glaſſe, Pomander, Browch, Table-booke, Ballad, Knife, Tape, Glove, Shooe-tye, Bracelet, Horne-Ring, to keepe my Packe from faſtning: they throng who ſhould buy firſt, as if my Trinkets had beene hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer: by which meanes, I ſaw whoſe Purſe was beſt in Picture; and what I ſaw, to my good uſe, I remembred. My Clowne (who wants but ſomething to be a reaſonable man) grew ſo in love with the Wenches Song, that he would not ſtirre his Pettytoes till he had both Tune and Words, which ſo drew the reſt of the Heard to me, that all their other Sences ſtucke in Eares: you might have pinch'd a Placket, it was ſencelesse, 'twas nothing to gueld a Cod-peece of a Purſe: I would have fill'd Keyes of that hung in Chaynes: no hearing, no feeling, but my Sirs Song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that in this time of Lethargy, I pick'd and cut moſt of their Feſtivall Purſes: And had not the old-man come in with a Whoo-bub againſt his Daughter, and the Kings Sonne, and ſcar'd my Chowghes from the Chaffe, I had not left a Purſe alive in the whole Army.

Cam. Nay, but my Letters by this meanes being there
So ſoone as you arrive, ſhall cleare that doubt.

Flo. And thoſe that you'll procure from King Leontes?

Cam. Shall ſatisfie your Father.

Perd. Happy be you:
All that you ſpeake, ſhewes faire.

Cam. Who have we here?
We'll make an Inſtrument of this: omit
Nothing may give us ayde.

Aut. If they have over-heard me now: why hanging.

Cam. How now (good Fellow)
Why ſhak'ſt thou ſo? Feare not (man)
Here's no harme intended to thee,

Aut. I am a poore fellow, Sir.

Cam. Why, be ſo ſtill: here's no body will ſteale that from thee: yet for the out-ſide of thy poverty, we muſt make an exchange; therefore diſ-caſe thee inſtantly (thou muſt thinke there's a neceſſity in't) and change garments with this Gentleman: Though the penny-worth (on his ſide) be the worſt, yet hold thee, there's ſome boot.

Aut. I am a poore Fellow, Sir: (I know ye well eenough.)

Cam. Nay prethee diſpatch: the Gentleman is halfe fled already.

Aut. Are you in earneſt, Sir? (I ſmell the tricke on't.)

Flo. Diſpatch, I prethee.

Aut. Indeed I have had earneſt, but I cannot with conſcience take it.

Cam. Vnbuckle, unbuckle.
Fortunate Miſtreſſe (let my prophecy
Come home to ye:) you muſt retire your ſelfe
Into ſome Covert; take your ſweet-hearts Hat
And plucke it ore your Browes, muffle your face,
Diſmantle you, and (as you can) diſliken
The truth of your owne ſeeming, that you may
(For I doe feare eyes over) to Ship-boord
Get undeſcry'd.

Per. I ſee the Play ſo lyes,
That I muſt beare a part.

Cam. No remedy:
Have you done there?

Flo. Should I now meet my Father,
He would not call me Sonne.

Cam. Nay, you ſhall have no Hat:
Come Lady, come: Farewell (my friend.)

Aut. Adieu, Sir.

Flo. O Perdita: what have we twaine forgot?

Pray you a word.
Cam. What I doe next, ſhall be to tell the King
Of this eſcape, and whither they are bound;
Wherein, my hope is, I ſhall ſo prevaile,
To force him after: in whoſe company
I ſhall re-view Sicilia; for whoſe ſight,
I have a Womans Longing.

Flo. Fortune ſpeed us:
Thus we ſet on (Camillo) to th'Sea-ſide.

Cam. The ſwifter ſpeed, the better. Exit.

Aut. I underſtand the buſineſſe, I heare it: to have an open eare, a quicke eye; and a nimble hand, is neceſſary for a Cut-purſe; a good Noſe is requiſite alſo, to ſmell out worke for th'other Sences. I ſee this is the time that the unjuſt man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been, without boot? What a boot is here, with this exchange; Sure the gods doe this yeere connive at us, and we may doe any thing extempore. The Prince himſelfe is about a peece of iniquity (ſtealing away from his Father, with his Clog at his heeles:) if I thought it were a peece of honeſty to acquaint the King withall, I would not do't: I hold it the more knavery to conceale it; and therein am I conſtant to my Profeſſion.

Enter Clowne, and Shepherd.

Aſide, aſide, here is more matter for a hot braine: Every Lanes end, every Shop, Church, Seſſion, Hanging, yeelds a carefull man worke.

Clow. See, ſee: what a man you are now? there is no other way, but to tell the King ſhe's a Changeling, and none of your fleſh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but heare me.

Clow. Nay; but heare me.

Shep. Goe to then.

Clow. She being none of your fleſh and blood, your fleſh and blood ha's not offended the King, and ſo your fleſh and blood is not to be puniſh'd by him. Shew thoſe things you found about her (thoſe ſecret things, all but what ſhe ha's with her:) This being done, let the Law goe whiſtle: I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the King all, every word, yea, and his Sonnes prancks too; who, I may ſay, is no honeſt man, neither to his Father, nor to me, to goe about to make me the Kings Brother in Law.

Clow. Indeed Brother in Law was the fartheſt off you could have beene to him, and then your Blood had beene the deerer, by I know how much an ounce.

Aut. Very wiſely (Puppies.)

Shep. Wel: let us to the King: there is that in this Farthell, will make him ſcratch his Beard.

Aut. I know not what impediment this Complaint may be to the flight of my Maſter.

Clo. 'Pray heartily he be at Pallace.

Aut. Though I am not naturally honeſt, I am ſo ſometimes by chance: Let me pocket up my Pedlers excrement. How now (Ruſtiques) whither are you bound?

Shep. To th'Pallace (and it like your Worſhip.)

Aut. Your Affaires there? what? with whom? the Condition of that Farthell? the place of your dwelling? your names? your ages? of what having? breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be knowne, diſcover?

Clo. We are but plaine fellowes, Sir.

Aut. A Lye: you are rough, and hayrie: Let me have no lying; it becomes none but Tradeſ-men, and they often give us (Souldiers) the Lye, but we pay them for it with ſtamped Coyne, not ſtabbing Steele, therefore they doe not give us the Lye.

Clo. Your Worſhip had like to have given us one, if you had not taken your ſelfe with the manner.

Shep. Are you a Courtier, and't like you Sir?

Aut. Whether it like me, or no, I am a Courtier. Seeſt thou not the ayre of the Court, in theſe enfoldings? Hath not my gate in it, the meaſure of the Court? Receivs not thy Noſe Court-Odour from me? Reflect I not on thy Baſeneſſe, Court-Contempt? Think'ſt thou, for that I inſinuate, or toaze from thee thy Buſineſſe, I am therefore no Courtier? I am Courtier Cap-a-pe; and one that will either puſh-on, or pluck-backe, thy Buſineſſe there: whereupon I command thee to open thy Affaire.

Shep. My buſineſſe, Sir, is to the King.

Aut. What Aduocate ha'ſt thou to him?

Shep. I know not (and't like you.)

Clo. Aduocate's the Court-word for a Pheazant: ſay you have none.

Shep. None, Sir: I have no Pheazant Cocke, nor Hen.

Aut. How bleſſed are we, that are not ſimple men?
Yet Nature might have made me as theſe are,
Therefore I will not diſdaine.

Clo. This cannot be but a great Courtier.

Shep. His Garments are rich, but he weares them not handſomely.

Clo. He ſeemes to be the more Noble, in being fantaſticall: a great man, Ile warrant; I know by the picking on's Teeth.

Aut. The Farthell there? What's i'th' Farthell? Wherefore that Box?

Shep. Sir, there lyes ſuch ſecrets in this Farthell and Box, which none muſt know but the King, and which he ſhall know within this houre, if I may come to th'ſpeech of him.

Aut. Age, thou haſt loſt thy labour.

Shep. Why Sir?

Aut. The King is not at the Pallace, he is gone aboord a new Ship, to purge Melancholy, and ayre himſelfe: for if thou bee'ſt capable of things ſerious, thou muſt know the King is full of griefe.

Shep. So'tis ſaid (Sir:) about his Sonne, that ſhould have marryed a Shepheards Daughter.

Aut. If that Shepheard be not in hand-faſt, let him flye; the Curſes he ſhall have, the Tortures he ſhall feele, will breake the backe of Man, the heart of Monſter.

Clo. Thinke you ſo, Sir?

Aut. Not he alone ſhall ſuffer what Wit can make heavy, and Vengeance bitter; but thoſe that are Iermaine to him (though remov'd fifty times) ſhall all come under the Hang-man: which, though it be great pitty, yet it is neceſſary. An old Sheepe-whiſtling Rogue, a Ram-tender, to offer to have his Daughter come into grace? Some ſay he ſhall be ſton'd: but that death is too ſoft for him (ſay I:) Draw our Throne into a Sheep-Coat? all deaths are too few, the ſharpeſt too eaſie.

Clo. Ha's the old-man ere a Sonne Sir (doe you heare) and't like you, Sir?

Aut. He ha's a Sonne: who ſhall be flayd alive, then 'noynted over with Honey, ſet on the head of a Waſpes Neſt, then ſtand till he be three quarters and a dram dead; then recover'd againe with Aquavitæ, or ſome other hot Infuſion: then, raw as he is (and in the hoteſt day Prognoſtication proclaymes) ſhall he be ſet againſt a Brick-wall (the Sunne looking with a South-ward eye upon him; where he is to behold him, with Flyes blowne to death.) But what talke we of theſe Traitorly-Raſcals, whoſe miſeries are to be ſmil'd at, their offences being ſo capitall?

Tell me (for you ſeeme to be honeſt plaine men) what you have to the King: being ſomething gently conſider'd, Ile bring you where he is aboord, tender your perſons to his preſence, whiſper him in your behalfes; and if it be in man, beſides the King, to effect your Suites, here is man ſhall doe it.

Clo. He ſeemes to be of great authority: cloſe with him, give him Gold: and though Authority be a ſtubborne Beare, yet he is oft led by the Noſe with Gold: ſhew the in-ſide of your Purſe to the out-ſide of his hand, and no more adoe. Remember ſton'd, and flay'd alive.

Shep. And't pleaſe you (Sir) to undertake the Buſineſſe for us, here is that Gold I have: Ile make it as much more, and leave this young man in pawne, till I bring it you.

Aut. After I have done what I promiſed?

Shep. I ſir.

Aut. Well, give me the Moity: Are you a party in this Buſineſſe?

Clo. In ſome ſort, Sir: but though my caſe be a pittifull one, I hope I ſhall not be flayd out of it.

Aut. Oh, that's the caſe of the Shepheards Sonne: hang him, he'le be made an example.

Clo. Comfort, good comfort: We muſt to the King, and ſhew our ſtrange ſights: he muſt know 'tis none of your Daughter, nor my Siſter: we are gone elſe. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man do's, when the Buſineſſe is performed, and remaine (as he ſayes) your pawne till it be brought you.

Aut. I will truſt you. Walke before toward the Sea-ſide, goe on the right hand, I will but looke upon the Hedge, and follow you.

Clo. We are bleſſ'd, in this man: as I may ſay, even bleſſ'd.

Shep. Let's before, as he bids us: he was provided to doe us good. Exeunt.

Aut. If I had a mind to be honeſt, I ſee Fortune would not ſuffer me: ſhe drops Booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occaſion: (gold, and a means to doe the Prince my Maſter good; which, who knowes how that may turne backe to my aduancement?) I will bring theſe two Moales, theſe blind-ones, aboord him, if he thinke it fit to ſhoare them againe, and that the Complaint they have to the King, concernes him nothing, let him call me Rogue, for being ſo farre officious, for I am proofe againſt that Title, and what ſhame elſe belongs to't: To him will I preſent them, there may be matter in it. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Leontes, Cleomines, Dion, Paulina, Servants
Florizel, Perdita.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have perform'd
A Saint-like Sorrow: No fault could you make,
Which you have not redeem'd; indeed pay'd downe
More penitence, then done treſpas: At the laſt
Doe, as the Heavens have done; forget your evill,
With them, forgive your ſelfe.

Leo. Whileſt I remember
Her and her Vertues, I cannot forget
My blemiſhes in them, and ſo ſtill thinke of
The wrong I did my ſelfe: which was ſo much,
That Heire-leſſe it hath made my Kingdome, and
Deſtroy'd the ſweet'ſt companion, that ere man
Bred his hopes out of, true.

Paul. Too true (my Lord:)
If one by one, you wedded all the World,
Or from the All that are, tooke ſomething good,
To make a perfect Woman; ſhe you kill'd,
Would be unparallell'd.

Leo. I thinke ſo. Kill'd?
She I kill'd? I did ſo: but thou ſtrik'ſt me
Sorely, to ſay I did: it is as bitter
Vpon thy Tongue, as in my Thought. Now, good now,
Say ſo but ſeldome.

Cleo. Not at all, good Lady:
You might have ſpoken a thouſand things, that would
Have done the time more benefit, and grac'd
Your kindneſſe better.

Paul. You are one of thoſe
Would have him wed againe.

Dio. If you would not ſo,
You pitty not the State, nor the Remembrance
Of his moſt Soveraigne Name: Conſider little,
What Dangers, by his Highneſſe faile of Iſſue,
May drop upon his Kingdome, and devoure
Incertaine lookers on. What were more holy,
Then to rejoyce the former Queene is well?
What holyer, then for Royalties repaire,
For preſent comfort, and for future good,
To bleſſe the Bed of Majeſty againe
With a ſweet fellow to't?

Paul. There is none worthy,
(Reſpecting her that's gone:) beſides the Gods
Will have fulfill'n their ſecret purpoſes:
For ha's not the Divine Apollo ſaid?
Is't not the tenor of his Oracle,
That King Leontes ſhall not have an Heire,
Till his loſt Child be found? Which, that it ſhall,
Is all as monſtrous to our humane reaſon,
As my Antigonus to breake his Grave,
And come againe to me: who, on my life,
Did periſh with the Infant. 'Tis your councell,
My Lord ſhould to the Heavens be contray,
Oppoſe againſt their wills. Care not for iſſue,
The Crowne will find an Heire. Great Alexander
Left his to th'Worthieſt: ſo his Succeſſor
Was like to be the beſt.

Leo. Good Paulina,
Who haſt the memory of Hermione
I know in honor: O, that ever I
Had ſquar'd me to thy councell: then, even now,
I might have look'd upon my Queenes full eyes,
Have taken Treaſure from her Lippes.

Paul. And left them
More rich, for what they yeelded.

Leo. Thou ſpeak'ſt truth:
No more ſuch Wives, therefore no Wife: one worſe,
And better us'd, would make her Sainted Spirit
Againe poſſeſſe her Corps, and on this Stage
(Where we offendors now appeare) Soule-vext,
And begin, why to me;

Paul. Had ſhe ſuch power,
She had juſt ſuch cauſe.

Leo. She had, and would incenſe me
To murther her I marryed.

Paul. I ſhould ſo:
Were I the Ghoſt that walk'd, Il'd bid you marke
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in't
You choſe her: then Il'd ſhrieke, that even your eares
Should riſt to heare me, and the words that follow'd,
Should be, Remember mine.
Leo. Starres, Starres,
And all eyes elſe, dead coales: feare thou no Wife;
Ile have no Wife, Paulina.
Paul. Will you ſweare
Never to marry, but by my free leave?
Leo. Never (Paulina) ſo be bleſs'd my Spirit.
Paul. Then good my Lords, beare witneſſe to his Oath.
Cleo. You tempt him over-much.
Paul. Vnleſſe another,
As like Hermione, as is her Picture,
Affront his eye.
Cleo. Good Madam, I have done.
Paul. Yet if my Lord will marry: if you will, Sir;
No remedy but you will: Give me the office
To chuſe you a Queene: ſhe ſhall not be ſo young
As was your former, but ſhe ſhall be ſuch
As (walk'd your firſt Queenes Ghoſt) it ſhould take joy
To ſee her in your armes.
Leo. My true Paulina,
We ſhall not marry, till thou bidſt us.
Paul. That
Shall be when your firſt Queene's againe in breath:
Never till then.
Enter a Servant.
Ser. One that gives out himſelfe Prince Florizell,
Sonne of Polixenes, with his princeſſe (ſhe
The faireſt I have yet beheld) deſires acceſſe
To your high preſence.
Leo. What with him? he comes not
Like to his Fathers Greatneſſe: his approach
(So out of circumſtance, and ſuddaine) tells us,
'Tis not a Viſitation fram'd, but forc'd
By need, and accident. What Trayne?
Ser. But few,
And thoſe but meane.
Leo. His Princeſſe (ſay you) with him?
Ser. I: the moſt peereleſſe peece of Earth, I thinke,
That ere the Sunne ſhone bright on.
Paul. Oh Hermione,
As every preſent Time doth boaſt it ſelfe
Above a better, gone; ſo muſt thy Grave
Give way to what's ſeene now. Sir, you your ſelfe
Have ſaid, and writ ſo; but your writing now
Is colder then that Theame: ſhe had not beene,
Nor was not to be equall'd, thus your Verſe
Flow'd with her Beauty once, 'tis ſhrewdly ebb'd,
To ſay you have ſeene a better.
Ser. Pardon, Madam:
The one, I have almoſt forgot (your pardon:)
The other, when ſhe ha's obtain'd your Eye,
Will have your Tongue too. This is a Creature,
Would ſhe begin a Sect, might quench the zeale
Of all Profeſſors elſe; make Proſelytes
Of who ſhe but bid follow.
Paul. How? not women?
Ser. Women will love her, that ſhe is a Woman
More worth then any Man: Men, that ſhe is
The rareſt of all Women.
Leo. Goe Cleomines,
Your ſelfe (aſſiſted with your honor'd friends)
Bring them to our embracement. Still 'tis ſtrange,
He thus ſhould ſteale upon us. Exit.
Paul. Had our Prince
(Iewell of Children) ſeene this houre, he had payr'd
Well with this Lord; there was not full a moneth
Betweene their births.
Leo. 'Prethee no more; ceaſe: thou know'ſt
He dyes to me againe, when talk'd-of: ſure
When I ſhall ſee this Gentleman, thy ſpeeches
Will bring me to conſider that, which may Vnfurniſh me of Reaſon. They are come.
Enter Florizell, Perdita, Cleomines, and others.
Your Mother was moſt true to Wedlocke, Prince,
For ſhe did print your Royall Father off,
Conceiving you. Were I but twenty one,
Your Fathers Image is ſo hit in you,
(His very ayre) that I ſhould call you Brother,
As I did him, and ſpeake of ſomething wildly
By us perform'd before. Moſt dearely welcome,
And your faire Princeſſe (Goddeſſe) oh: alas,
I loſt a couple, that 'twixt Heaven and Earth
Might thus have ſtood, begetting wonder, as
You (gracious Couple) doe: and then I loſt
(All mine owne Folly) the Society,
Amity too of your brave Father, whom
(Though bearing Miſery) I deſire my life
Once more to looke on him.
Flo. By his command
Have I here touch'd Sicilia, and from him
Give you all greetings, that a King (as friend)
Can ſend his Brother: and but infirmity
(Which waits upon worne times) hath ſomething ſeiz'd
His wiſh'd Ability, he had himſelfe
The Lands and Waters, 'twixt your Throne and his
Meaſur'd, to looke upon you; whom he loves
(He bad me ſay ſo) more then all the Scepters,
And thoſe that beare them, living.
Leo. Oh my brother,
(Good Gentleman) the wrongs I have done thee, ſtirre
A freſh within me: and theſe thy offices
(So rarely kind) are as Interpreters
Of my behind-hand ſlackeneſſe. Welcome hither,
As is the Spring to th'Earth. And hath he too
Expos'd this Paragon to th'fearefull uſage
(At leaſt ungentle) of the dreadfull Neptune,
To greet a man, not worth her paines; much leſſe,
Th'adventure of her perſon?
Flo. Good my Lord,
She came from Libia.
Leo. Where the Warlike Smalus,
That Noble honor'd Lord, is fear'd, and lov'd?
Flo. Moſt Royall Sir,
From thence: from him, whoſe Daughter
His Teares proclaim'd his parting with her: thence
(A proſperous South-wind friendly) we have croſs'd,
To execute the Charge my Father gave me,
For viſiting your Highneſſe: My beſt Traine
I have from your Sicilian Shores diſmiſs'd;
Who for Bohemia bend, to ſignifie
Not onely my ſucceſſe in Libia (ſir)
But my arrivall, and my Wifes, in ſafety
Here, where we are.
Leo. The bleſſed gods
Purge all infection from our Ayre, whileſt you
Doe Clymate here: you have a holy Father,
A gracefull Gentleman, againſt whoſe perſon

(So ſacred as it is) I have done ſinne,
For which the Heavens (taking angry note)
Have left me Iſſue-leſſe: and your Father's bleſs'd
(As he from Heaven merits it) with you,
Worthy his goodneſſe. What might I have beene,
Might I a Sonne and Daughter now have look'd on,
Such goodly things as you?

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Moſt Noble Sir,
That which I ſhall report, will beare no credit,
Were not the proofe ſo nigh. Pleaſe you (great Sir)
Bohemia greets you from himſelfe, by me:
Deſires you to attach his ſonne, who ha's
(His Dignity, and Duty both caſt off)
Fled from his Father, from his Hopes, and with A Shepheards Daughter.

Leo. Where's Bohemia? ſpeake:

Lor. Heere, in your Citty: I now came from him.
I ſpeake amazedly, and it becomes
My mervaile, and my Meſſage. To your Court
Whiles he was haſtning (in the Chaſe, it ſeemes,
Of this faire Couple) meets he on the way
The Father of this ſeeming Lady, and
Her Brother, having both their Country quitted,
With this young Prince.

Flo. Camillo ha's betray'd me;
Whoſe honor, and whoſe honeſty till now,
Endur'd all Weathers.

Lord. Lay't ſo to his charge:
He's with the King your Father.

Leo. Who? Camillo?

Lord. Camillo (Sir:) I ſpake with him: who now
Ha's theſe poore men in queſtion. Never ſaw I
Wretches ſo quake: they kneele, they kiſſe the Earth;
Forſweare themſelves as often as they ſpeake:
Bohemia ſtops his eares, and threatens them
With divers deaths, in death.

Per. Oh my poore Father:
The Heaven ſets Spyes upon us, will not have
Our Contract celebrated.

Leo. You are marryed?

Flo. We are not (Sir) nor are we like to be:
The Starres (I ſee) will kiſſe the Valleyes firſt:
The oddes for high and low's alike.

Leo. My Lord,
Is this the Daughter of a King?

Flo. She is,
When once ſhe is my Wife.

Leo. That once (I ſee) by your good Fathers ſpeed,
Will come-on very ſlowly. I am ſory
(Moſt ſorry) you have broken from his liking,
Where you were ty'd in duty: and as ſorry,
Your Choyſe is not ſo rich in Worth, as Beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Deare looke up:
Though Fortune, viſible an Enemy,
Should chaſe us, with my Father: powre no jot
Hath ſhe to change our Loves. Beſeech you (Sir)
Remember, ſince you ow'd no more to Time
Then I doe now: with thought of ſuch Affections,
Step forth mine Aduocate: at your requeſt,
My Father will grant precious things, as Trifles.

Leo. Would he doe ſo, I'ld beg your precious Miſtris
Which he counts but a Trifle.

Paul. Sir (my Liege)
Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a moneth
'Fore your Queene dy'd, ſhe was more worth ſuch gaze,
Then what you looke on now.

Leo. I thought of her,
Even in theſe Lookes I made. But your Petition
Is yet un-anſwer'd: I will to your Father:
Your Honor not o're-throwne by your deſires,
I am friend to them, and you: upon which Errand
I now goe toward him: therefore follow me,
And marke what way I make: Come good my Lord.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Autolicus, and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beſeech you (Sir) were you preſent at this Relation?

Gent. 1. I was by at the opening of the Farthell, heard the old Shepheard deliver the manner how he found it: whereupon (after a little amazedneſſe) we were all commanded out of the Chamber: onely this (me thought) I heard the Shepheard ſay, he found the Child.

Aut. I would moſt gladly know the iſſue of it.

Gen. 1. I make a broken delivery of the Buſineſſe; but the changes I perceived in the King, and Camillo, were very Notes of admiration: they ſeem'd almoſt, with ſtaring on one another, to teare the Caſes of their Eyes. There was ſpeech in their dumbneſſe, Language in their very geſture: they look'd as they had heard of a World ranſom'd, or one deſtroyed: a notable paſſion of Wonder appeared in them: but the wiſeſt beholder, that knew no more but ſeeing, could not ſay, if th'importance were Ioy, or Sorrow; but in the extremity of the one, it muſt needs be. Enter another Gentleman.
Here comes a Gentleman, that happily knowes more:
The Newes, Rogero.

Gen. 2. Nothing but Bonfires: the Oracle is fulfill'd: the Kings Daughter is found: ſuch a deale of wonder is broken out within this houre, that Ballad-makers cannot be able to expreſſe it. Enter another Gentleman.
Here comes the Lady Paulina's Steward, he can deliver you more. How goes it now (Sir.) This Newes (which is call'd true) is ſo like an old Tale, that the verity of it is in ſtrong ſuſpition: Ha's the King found his Heire?

Gen. 3. Moſt true, if ever Truth were pregnant by Circumſtance: That which you heare, you'l ſweare you ſee, there is ſuch unity in the proofes. The Mantle of Queene Hermiones: her Iewell about the Necke of it: the Letters of Antigonus found with it, which they know to be his Charracter; the Majeſty of the Creature, in reſemblance of the Mother: the Affection of Nobleneſſe, which Nature ſhewes above her Breeding, and many other Evidences, proclaime her, with all certainty, to be the Kings Daughter. Did you ſee the meeting of the two Kings?

Gent. 2. No.

Gent. 3. Then have you loſt a Sight which was to bee ſeene, cannot be ſpoken of. There might you have beheld one Ioy crowne another, ſo and in ſuch manner, that it ſeem'd Sorrow wept to take leave of them: for their Ioy waded in teares. There was caſting up of Eyes, holding up of hands, with Countenance of ſuch diſtraction, that they were to be knowne by Garment, not by Favor.

Our King being ready to leape out of himſelfe, for joy of his found Daughter; as if that joy were now become a Loſſe, cryes, Oh, thy Mother, thy Mother: then askes Bohemia forgiveneſſe, then embraces his Sonne-in Law: then againe worryes he his Daughter, with clipping her. Now he thanks the old Shepheard (which ſtands by, like a Weather-bitten Conduit, of many Kings Reignes.) I never heard of ſuch another Encounter; which lames Report to follow it, and undo's deſcription to doe it.

Gen. 2. What, 'pray you, became of Antigonus, that carryed hence the Child?

Gent. 3. Like an old Tale ſtill, which will have matter to rehearſe, though Credit be aſleepe, and not an eare open; he was torne to pieces with a Beare: This avouches the Shepheards Sonne, who ha's not onely his Innocence (which ſeemes much) to juſtifie him, but a hand-kerchiefe and Rings of his, that Paulina knowes.

Gent. 1. What became of his Barke, and his Followers?

Gent. 3. Wrackt the ſame inſtant of their Maſters death, and in the view of the Shepheard: ſo that all the Inſtruments which ayded to expoſe the Child, were even then loſt, when it was found. But oh the Noble Combat, that 'twixt Ioy and Sorrow was fought in Paulina. She had one Eye declin'd for the loſſe of her Husband, another elevated, that the Oracle was fulfill'd: She lifted the Princeſſe from the Earth, and ſo lockes her in embracing as if ſhe would pin her to her heart, that ſhe might no more be in danger of loſing.

Gent. 1. The Dignity of this Act was worth the audience of Kings and Princes, for by ſuch was it acted.

Gent. 3. One of the prettyeſt touches of all, and that which angl'd for mine Eyes (caught the Water, though not the Fiſh) was, when at the Relation of the Queenes death (with the manner how ſhe came to't, bravely confeſs'd, and lamented by the King) how attentiveneſſe wounded his Daughter, till (from one ſigne of dolour to another) ſhe did (with an Alas) I would faine ſay, bleed Teares; for I am ſure, my heart wept blood. Who was moſt Marble, there changed colour: ſome ſwownded, all ſorrowed: if all the World could have ſeen't, the Woe had beene univerſall.

Gent. 1. Are they returned to the Court?

Gent. 3. No: The Princeſſe hearing of her Mothers Statue (which is in the keeping of Paulina) a Peece many yeeres in doing, and now newly perform'd, by that rare Italian Maſter, Iulio Romano, who (had he himſelfe eternity, and could put Breath into his Worke) would beguile Nature of her Cuſtome, ſo perfectly he is her Ape: He ſo neere to Hermione, hath done Hermione, that they ſay one would ſpeake to her, and ſtand in hope of anſwer. Thither (with all greedineſſe of affection) are they gone, and there they intend to Sup.

Gent. 2. I thought ſhe had ſome great matter there in hand, for ſhe hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever ſince the death of Hermione, viſited that removed houſe. Shall we thither, and with our company peece the rejoycing?

Gent. 1. Who would be thence, that ha's the benefit of Acceſſe? every winke of an Eye, ſome new Grace will be borne: our Abſence makes us unthrifty to our Knowledge. Let's along. Exit.

Aut. Now (had I not the daſh of my former life in me) would Preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his Sonne aboord the the Prince; told him, I heard them talke of a Farthell, and I know not what: but he at that time over-fond of the Shepheards daughter (ſo he then tooke her to be) who began to be much Sea-ſick, and himſelfe little better, extremity of Weather continuing, this Myſtery remained undiſcover'd. But 'tis all one to me: for had I beene the finder-out of this ſecret, it would not have relliſh'd among my other diſcredits.

Enter Shepheard, and Clowne.

Here come thoſe I have done good to againſt my will, and already appearing in the bloſſomes of their Fortune.

Shep. Come boy, I am paſt more Children: but thy Sonnes and Daughters will be all Gentlemen borne.

Clown. You are well met (Sir;) you deny'd to fight with me this other day, becauſe I was no Gentleman borne. See you theſe Clothes? ſay you ſee them not, and thinke me ſtill no Gentleman borne: You were beſt ſay theſe Robes are not Gentlemen borne. Give me the Lye: doe: and try whether I am not now a Gentleman borne.

Aut. I know you are now (Sir) a Gentleman borne.

Clow. I, and have beene ſo any time theſe foure houres.

Shep. And ſo have I, Boy.

Clow. So you have: but I was a Gentleman borne before my Father: for the Kings Sonne tooke me by the hand, and call'd me brother; and then the two Kings call'd my Father brother: and then the Prince (my brother) and the Princeſſe (my Siſter) call'd my father, father; and ſo we wept: and there was the firſt Gentleman-like teares that ever we ſhed.

Shep. We may live (Sonne) to ſhed many more.

Clo. I: or elſe 'twere hard lucke, being in ſo prepoſterous eſtate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beſeech you (Sir) to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your Worſhip, and to give me your good report to the Prince my Maſter.

Shep. 'Prethee Sonne doe: for we muſt be gentle, now we are Gentlemen.

Clow. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. I, and it like your good Worſhip.

Clow. Give me thy hand: I will ſweare to the Prince, thou art as honeſt a true Fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may ſay it, but not ſweare it.

Clow. Not ſweare it, now I am a Gentleman? Let Boores and Francklins ſay it, Ile ſweare it.

Shep. How if it be falſe (Sonne?)

Clow. If it be ne're ſo falſe, a true Gentleman may ſweare it, in the behalfe of his friend: And Ile ſweare to the Prince, thou art a tall Fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunke: but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunke: but Ile ſweare it, and I would thou would'ſt be a tall Fellow of thy hands.

Aut. I will prove ſo (Sir) to my power.

Clo. I, by any meanes prove a tall Fellow: if I doe not wonder, how thou dar'ſt venture to be drunke, not being a tall Fellow, truſt me not. Harke, the Kings and the Princes (our Kindred) are going to ſee the Queenes Picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good Maſter. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizell, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina: Hermione (like a Statue:) Lords, &c.

Leo. O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort
That I have had of thee?

Paul. What (Soveragine Sir)
I did not well, I meant well : all my Services
You have pay'd home. But that you have vouchſaf'd
(With your Crown'd Brother, and theſe your contracted Heires of your kingdomes) my poore Houſe to viſit;
It is a ſurplus of your Grace, which never
My life may laſt to anſwer.
Ler. O Paulina,
We honor you with trouble : but we came
To ſee the Statue of our Queene. Your Gallery
Have we paſs'd through, not without much content
In many ſingularities; but we ſaw not
That which my Daughter came to looke upon,
The Statue of her Mother.
Paul. As ſhe liv'd peereleſſe,
So her dead likeneſſe I doo well beleeve
Excells what ever yet you look'd upon,
Or hand of Man hath done : therefore I keepe it
Lovely, apart. But here it is: prepare
To ſee the Life as lively mock'd, as ever
Still Sleepe mock'd death : behold, and ſay 'tis well.
I like your ſilence, it the more ſhewes off
Your wonder : but yet ſpeake, firſt you (my Liege)
Comes it not ſomething neere?
Leo. Her naturall Poſture.
Chide me (deare Stone) that I may ſay indeed
Thou art Hermione; or rather, thou art ſhe,
In thy not chiding : for ſhe was as tender
As infancy, and Grace. But yet (Paulina)
Hermione was not ſo much wrinckled, nothing
So aged as this ſeemes.
Pol. Oh, not by much.
Paul. So much the more our Carvers excellence.
Which lets goe-by ſome ſixteene yeeres, and makes her
As ſhe liv'd now.
Leo. As now ſhe might have done,
So much to my good comfort, as it is
Now piercing to my Soule. Oh, thus ſhe ſtood,
Even with ſuch Life of Majeſty (warme Life,
As now it coldly ſtands) when firſt I woo'd her.
I am aſham'd : Do's not the Stone rebuke me,
For being more Stone then it? Oh Royall Peece:
There's Magicke in thy Majeſty, which ha's
My evils conjur'd to remembrance ;and
From thy admiring Daughter tooke the Spirits,
Standing like Stone with thee,
Perd. And give me leave,
And doe not ſay 'tis Superſtition, that
I kneele, and then implore her Bleſſing. Lady,
Deere Queene, that ended when I but began,
Give me that hand of yours, to kiſſe.
Paul. O, patience :
The Statue is but newly fix'd ; the Colour's
Not dry.
Cam. My Lord, your Sorrow was too ſore lay'd-on,
Which ſixteene Winters cannot blow away,
So many Summers dry : ſcarce any Ioy
Did ever ſo long live ; no Sorrow,
But kill'd it ſelfe much ſooner.
Pol. Deere my Brother,
Let him, that was the cauſe of this, have powre
To take off ſo much griefe from you, as he
Will peece up in himſelfe.
Paul. Indeed my Lord,
If I had thought the ſight of my poore Image
Would thus have wrought you (for the Stone is mine)
Il'd not have ſhew'd it.
Leo. Doe not draw the Curtaine.
Paul. No longer ſhall you gaze on't, leaſt your Fancy
May thinke anon, it moves.
Leo. Let be, let be.
Would I were dead, but that me thinkes already.
(What was he that did make it?) See (my Lord)
Would you not deeme it breath'd? and that thoſe veines
Did verily beare blood?
Pol. Maſterly done.
The very Life ſeemes warme upon her Lippe.
Leo. The fixure of her Eye ha's motion in't,
As we are mock'd with Art.
Paul. Ile draw the Curtaine :
My Lord's almoſt ſo farre tranſported, that
Hee'll thinke anon it lives.
Leo. Oh ſweet Paulina,
Make me to thinke ſo twenty yeeres together :
No ſetled Sences of the World can match
The pleaſure of that madneſſe. Let't alone.
Paul. I am ſorry (Sir) I have thus farre ſtir'd you: but
I could afflict you farther.
Leo. Doe Paulina :
For this Affliction ha's a taſte as ſweet
As any Cordiall comfort. Still me thinkes
There is an ayre comes from her. What fine Chizzell
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mocke me,
For I will kiſſe her,
Paul. Good me Lord forbeare;
The ruddineſſe upon her Lippe, is wet :
You'll marre it, if you kiſſe it ; ſtaine your owne
With Oyly Painting : ſhall I draw the Curtaine?
Leo. No : not theſe twenty yeeres.
Perd. So long could I
Stand by, a looker-on.
Paul. Either forbeare,
Quit preſently the Chappell, or reſolve you
For more amazement : if you can behold it,
Ile make the Statue move indeed ; deſcend,
And take you by the hand : but then you'll thinke
(Which I proteſt againſt) I am aſſiſted
By wicked Powers.
Leo. What you can make her doe,
I am content to looke on : what to ſpeake,
I am content to heare : for 'tis as eaſie
To make her ſpeake, as move.
Paul. It is requir'd
You doe awake your Faith : then, all ſtand ſtill :
On : thoſe that thinke it is unlawfull Buſinſſe
I am about, let them depart.
Leo. Proceed :
No foot ſhall ſtirre.
Paul. Muſicke ; awake her : Strike :
'Tis time : deſcend : be Stone no more : approach :
Strike all that looke upon with mervaile : Come :
Ile fill your Grave up : ſtirre : nay, come away :
Bequeath to Death your numneſſe : (for from him,
Deare Life redeemes you) you perceive ſhe ſtirres :
Start not : her Actions ſhall be holy, as
You heare my ſpell is lawfull : doe not ſhun her,
Vntill you ſee her dye againe ; for then
You kill her double : Nay, preſent your hand :
When ſhe was young, you woo'd her : now, in age,
Is ſhe become the Suitor?
Leo. Oh ſhe's warme :
If this be Magicke, let it be an Art

Lawfull as Eating.
Pol. She embraces him.
Cam. She hangs about his necke,
If ſhe pertaine to life, let her ſpeake too.
Pol. I, and make it manifeſt where ſhe ha's liv'd,
Or how ſtolne from the dead?
Paul. That ſhe is living,
Were it but told you, ſhould be hooted at
Like an old Tale: but it appeares ſhe lives,
Though yet ſhe ſpeake not. Marke a little while:
Pleaſe you to interpoſe (faire Madam) kneele,
And pray your Mothers bleſſing; turne good Lady,
Our Perdita is found.
Her. You gods looke downe,
And from your ſacred Viols poure your graces
Vpon my daughters head: Tell me (mine owne)
Where haſt thou bin preſerv'd? Where liv'd? How found
Thy Fathers Court? For thou ſhalt heare that I
Knowing by Paulina, that the Oracle
Gave hope thou waſt in being, have preſerv'd
My ſelfe, to ſee the iſſue.
Paul. There's time enough for that;
Leaſt they deſire (upon this puſh) to trouble
Your joyes, with like Relation. Goe together
You precious winners all: your exultation
Partake to every one: I (an old Turtle)
Will wing me to ſome wither'd bough, and there
My Mate (that's never to be found againe)
Lament, till I am loſt.
Leo. O peace Paulina:
Thou ſhouldſt a husband take by my conſent,
As I by thine a Wife. This is a Match,
And made betweene's by Vowes. Thou haſt found mine,
But how, is to be queſtion'd: for I ſaw her
(As I thought) dead: and have (in vaine) ſaid many
A prayer upon her grave. Ile not ſeeke farre
(For him, I partly know his minde) to find thee
An honourable husband. Come Camillo,
And take her by the hand: whoſe worth, and honeſty
Is richly noted: and heere juſtified
By Vs, a paire of Kings. Let's from this place.
What? looke upon my Brother: both your pardons,
That ere I put betweene your holy lookes
My ill ſuſpition: This your Son-in-law,
And Sonne unto the King, whom heavens directing
Is troth-plight to your daughter. Good Paulina,
Leade us from hence, where we may leyſurely
Each one demand, and anſwer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of Time, ſince firſt
We were diſſever'd. Haſtily leade away. Exeunt.

FINIS.

Lawfull as Eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his necke,
If she pertaine to life, let her speake too.

Pol. I, and make it manifest where she ha's liu'd,
Or how stolne from the dead?

Paul. That she is liuing,
Were it but told you, should be hooted at
Like an old Tale: but it appeares she liues,
Though yet she speake not. Marke a little while:
Please you to interpose (faire Madam) kneele,
And pray your Mothers blessing: turne good Lady,
Our Perdita is found.

Her. You Gods looke downe,
And from your sacred Viols poure your graces
Vpon my daughters head: Tell me (mine owne)
Where hast thou bin preseru'd? Where liu'd? How found
Thy Fathers Court? For thou shalt heare that I
Knowing by Paulina, that the Oracle
Gaue hope thou wast in being, haue preseru'd
My selfe, to see the yssue.

Paul. There's time enough for that,
Least they desire (vpon this push) to trouble
Your ioyes, with like Relation. Go together
You precious winners all: your exultation
Partake to euery one: I (an old Turtle)
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My Mate (that's neuer to be found againe)
Lament, till I am lost.

Leo. O peace Paulina:
Thou shouldst a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine a Wife. This is a Match,
And made betweene's by Vowes. Thou hast found mine,
But how, is to be question'd: for I saw her
(As I thought) dead: and haue (in vaine) said many
A prayer vpon her graue. Ile not seeke farre

FINIS.

The life and death of King Iohn.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Enter King Iohn, Queene Elinor, Pembroke, Eſſex, and Saliſbury, with the Chattylion of France.

King Iohn.
NOw ſay Chattillion, what would France with us?
Chat. Thus (after greeting) ſpeakes the King of France.
In my behaviour to the Majeſty,
The borrowed Majeſty of England heere.
Elea. A ſtrange beginning: borrowed Majeſty?
King Ioh. Silence (good mother) heare the Embaſſie.
Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalfe
Of thy deceaſed brother, Geffreyes ſonne,
Arthur Plantaginet, layes moſt lawfull claime
To this faire Iland, and the Territories:
To Ireland, Poyctiers, Anjowe, Lorayne, Maine,
Deſiring thee to lay aſide the ſword
Which ſwayes vſurpingly theſe ſeverall titles,
And put the ſame into yong Arthurs hand,
Thy Nephew, and right royall Soveraigne.
King Ioh. What followes if we diſallow of this?
Chap. The proud controle of fierce and bloudy warre,
To inforce theſe rights, ſo forcibly withheld.
K. Ioh. Here have we war for war, & bloud for bloud,
Controlement for controlement: ſo anſwer France.
Chat. Then take my Kings defiance from my mouth,
The fartheſt limit of my Embaſſie.
King Iohn. Beare mine to him, and ſo depart in peace,
Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;
For ere thou canſt report, I will be there:
The thunder of my Cannon ſhall be heard.
So hence: be thou the trum[illegible] our wrath,
And ſullen preſage of your owne decay:
An honorable conduct let him have,
Pembroke looke too't: farewell Chattillion.
Exet Chat. and Pem.
Ele. What now my ſonne, have I not ever ſaid
How that ambitious Conſtance would not ceaſe
Till ſhe had kindled France and all the world,
Vpon the right and party of her ſonne?
This might have beene prevented, and made whole
With very eaſie arguments of love,
Which now the mannage of two kingdomes muſt
With fearefull bloudy iſſue arbitrate.
K. Iohn. Our ſtrong poſſeſſion, and our right for us.
Eli. Your ſtrong poſſeſſion much more than your right
Or elſe it muſt goe wrong with you and me,
So much my conſcience whiſpers in your eare,
Which none but heaven, and you, and I, ſhall heare:
Enter a Sheriffe.
Eſſex. My Leige, here is the ſtrangeſt controverſie
Come from the Country to be judg'd by you
That ere I heard: ſhall I produce the men?
K. Iohn. Let them approach:
Our Abbies and our Priories ſhall pay
This expeditions charge. What men are you?
Enter Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip.
Philip. Your faithfull ſubject, I a Gentleman,
Borne in Northamptonſhire, and eldeſt ſonne
As I ſuppoſe, to Faulconbridge,
A Souldier by the Honor-giving-hand
Of Cordelion, Knighted in the field.
K. Iohn. What art thou?
Robert. The ſon and heire to that ſame Faulconbridge.
K. Iohn. Is that the elder, and art thou the heyre?
You came not of one mother then it ſeemes.
Philip. Moſt certaine of one mother, mighty King,
That is well knowne, and as I thinke one father:
But for the certaine knowledge of that truth,
I put you o're to heaven, and to my mother;
Of that I doubt, as all mens children may.
Eli. Out on thee rude man, thou doſt ſhame thy mother,
And wound her honor with this diffidence.
Phil. I Madame? No, I have no reaſon for it,
That is my brothers plea, and none of mine,
The which if he can prove, a pops me out,
At leaſt from faire five hundred pound a yeere:
Heaven guard my mothers honor, and my Land.
K. Iohn. A good blunt fellow: why being yonger borne
Doth he lay claime to thine inheritance?
Phil. I know not why, except to get the land;
But once he ſlandered me with baſtardy:
But where I be as true begot or no,
That ſtill I lay upon my mothers head,
But that I am as well begot my Leige
(Faire fall the bones that tooke the paines for me)
Compare our faces, and be judge your ſelfe
If old Sir Robert did beget us both,
And were our father, and this ſonne like him:
O old Sir Robert father, on my knee
I give heaven thankes I was not like to thee.
K. Iohn. Why what a mad-cap hath heaven lent us here?
Elen. He hath a tricke of Cordelions face,
The accent of his tongue affecteth him:
Do you not reade ſome tokens of my ſonne
In the large compoſition of this man?

K.Iohn. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard: ſirra ſpeake,
What doth move you to claime your brothers land?
Philip. Becauſe he hath a halfe face like my father,
With halfe that face would he have all my Land,
A halfe-fac'd groat, five hundred pound a yeare?
Rob. My gracious Leige, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did imploy my father much.
Phil. Well ſir, by this you cannot get my land,
Your tale muſt be how he imploi'd my mother.
Rob. And once diſpatch'd him in an Embaſſie
To Germany, there with the Emperor
To treat of high affaires touching that time:
Th'advantage of his abſence tooke the King,
And in the meane time ſojourn'd at my fathers;
Where how he did prevaile, I ſhame to ſpeake:
But truth is truth, large lengths of ſeas and ſhores
Betweene my father, and my mother lay,
As I have heard my father ſpeake himſelfe
When this ſame luſty Gentleman was got:
Vpon his death bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me, and tooke it on his death
That this my mothers ſonne was none of his;
And if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteene weekes before the courſe of time:
Then good my Liedge let me have what is mine,
My fathers land, as was my fathers will.
K. Iohn. Sirra, your brother is Legittimate,
Your fathers wife did after wedlocke beare him:
And if ſhe did play falſe, the fault was hers,
Which fault lyes on the hazzards of all husbands
That marry wives: tell me, how if my brother
Who as you ſay, tooke paines to get this ſonne,
Had of your father claim'd this ſonne for his,
Inſooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This Calfe, bred from his Cow from all the world:
Inſooth he might: then if he were my brothers,
My brother might not claime him, nor your father
Being none of his, refuſe him: this concludes,
My mothers ſonne did get your fathers heire,
Your fathers heire muſt have your fathers land.
Rob. Shall then my fathers Will be of no force,
To diſpoſſeſſe that child which is not his?
Phil. Of no more force to diſpoſſeſſe me Sir,
Then was his will to get me, as I thinke.
Eli. Whether hadſt thou rather be a Faulconbridge,
And like thy brother to injoy thy land:
Or the reputed ſonne of Cordelion,
Lord of thy preſence, and no land beſide.
Baſt. Madam, and if my brother had my ſhape
And I had his, Sir Roberts his like him,
And if my legs were two ſuch riding rods,
My armes, ſuch eele-skins ſtuft, my face ſo thin,
That in mine eare I durſt not ſticke a roſe,
Leſt men ſhould ſay, looke where three farthings goes,
And to his ſhape were heire to all this land,
Would I might never ſtirre from off this place,
I would give it every foot to have this face:
I would not be ſir nobbe in any caſe.
Eli. I like thee well: wilt thou forſake thy fortunne,
Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a ſouldier, and now bound to France.
Baſt. Brother, take you my land, Ile take my chance;
Your face hath got five hundred pound a yeere,
Yet ſell your face for five pence and 'tis deere.
Madame, Ile follow you unto the death.
Eli. Nay, I would have you goe before me thither.
Baſt. Our Country manners giue our betters way.
K. Iohn. What is thy name?
Baſt. Philip my Liege, ſo is my name begun,
Philip, good old Sir Roberts wives eldeſt ſonne.
K. Iohn. From henceforth beare his name
Whoſe forme thou beareſt:
Kneele thou downe Philip, but riſe more great,
Ariſe Sir Richard, and Plantagenet.
Baſt. Brother by th'mothers ſide, give me your hand,
My father gave me honor, yours gave land,
Now bleſſed be the houre by night or day
When I was got, Sir Robert was away.
Ele. The very ſpirit of Plantaginet:
I am thy grandame Richard, call me ſo.
Baſt. Madam by chance, but not by truth, what tho;
Something about a little from the right,
In at the window, or elſe ore the hatch:
Who dares not ſtirre by day, muſt walke by night,
And have is have, how ever men doe catch:
Neere or farre off, well wonne is ſtill well ſhot,
And I am I, how ere I was begot.
K. Iohn. Goe Faulconbridge, now haſt thou thy deſire,
A landleſſe Knight, makes thee a landed Squire:
Come Madam, and come Richard, we muſt ſpeed
For France, for France, for it is more then need.
Baſt. Brother adieu, good fortune come to thee,
For thou waſt got i'th way of honeſty.

Exeunt all but baſtard.

Baſt. A foot of honor better then I was,
But many a many foot of Land the worſe.
Well, now can I make any Ioane a Lady;
Good denne Sir Richard, Godamercy fellow,
And if his name be George, Ile call him Peter;
For new made honor doth forget mens names:
'Tis too reſpective, and too ſociable
For your converſion, now your traveller,
He and his tooth-picke at my worſhips meſſe,
And when my knightly ſtomacke is ſuffis'd,
Why then I ſucke my teeth, and catechize
My picked man of Countries: my deare ſir,
Thus leaning on mine elbow I begin,
I ſhall beſeech you; that is queſtion now,
And then comes anſwer like an Abſey booke:
O ſir, ſayes anſwer, at your beſt command,
At your employment, at your ſervice ſir:
No ſir, ſayes queſtion, I ſweet ſir at yours,
And ſo ere anſwer knowes what queſtion would,
Saving in Dialogue of Complement,
And talking of the Alpes and Appenines,
The Pyrennean and the river Poe,
It drawes toward ſupper in concluſion ſo.
But this is worſhipfull ſociety,
And fits the mounting ſpirit like my ſelfe;
For he is but a baſtard to the time
That doth not ſmoake of obſervation,
And ſo am I whether I ſmacke or no:
And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior forme, outward accoutrement;
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, ſweet, ſweet poyſon for the ages tooth,
Which though I will not practice to deceive,
Yet to avoyd deceit I meane to learne;
For it ſhall ſtrew the footſteps of my riſing:
But who comes in ſuch haſte in riding robes?

What woman poſt is this? hath ſhe no husband
That will take paines to blow a horne before her?
O me, 'tis my mother: how now good Lady,
What brings you here to Court ſo haſtily?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge, and Iames Gurney.

Lady. Where is that ſlave thy brother? where is he?
That holds in chaſe mine honor up and downe.
Baſt. My brother Robert, old Sir Roberts ſonne:
Colbrand the Gyant, that ſame mighty man,
Is it Sir Rroberts ſonne that you ſeeke ſo?
Lady. Sir Roberts ſonne, I thou unreverend boy,
Sir Roberts ſonne? why ſcorn'ſt thou at Sir Robert?
He is Sir Roberts ſonne, and ſo art thou.
Baſt. Iames Gourney, wilt thou give us leave a while?
Gour. Good leave good Philip.
Baſt. Philip, ſparrow, Iames,
There's toyes abroad, anon ile tell thee more.
Exit Iames.
Madame, I was not old Sir Roberts ſonne,
Sir Robert might have eate his part in me
Vpon good Friday, and neere broke his faſt:
Sir Robert could doe well, marry to confeſſe
Could get me, Sir Robert could not doe it;
We know his handy-worke, therefore good mother
To whom am I beholding for theſe limmes?
Sir Robert never holpe to make this legge.
Lady. Haſt thou conſpired with thy brother too,
That for thine owne gaine ſhouldſt defend mine honor?
What meanes this ſcorne, thou moſt untoward knave?
Baſt. Knight, knight good mother, Baſiliſco-like:
What, I am dub'd, I have it on my ſhoulder:
But mother, I am not Sir Roberts ſonne,
I have diſclaim'd Sir Robert and my land,
Legitimation, name, and all is gone;
Then good my mother, let me know my father,
Some proper man I hope, who was it mother?
Lady. Haſt thou denied thy ſelfe a Faulconbridge?
Baſt. As faithfully as I deny the devill.
Lady. King Richard Cordelion was thy father,
By long and vehement ſuit I was ſeduc'd
To make roome for him in my husbands bed:
Heaven lay not my trangreſſion to my charge,
That art the iſſue of my deere offence
Which was ſo ſtrongly urg'd paſt my defence.
Baſt. Now by this light were I to get againe,
Madame I would not wiſh a better father:
Some ſinnes doe beare their priviledge on earth,
And ſo doth yours: your fault, was not you folly,
Needs muſt you lay your heart at his diſpoſe,
Subjected tribute to commanding love,
Againſt whoſe fury and unmatched force,
The awleſſe Lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keepe his Princely heart from Richards hand:
He that perforce robs Lions of their hearts,
May eaſily winne a womans: aye my mother,
With all my heart I thanke thee for my father:
Who lives and dares but ſay, thou didſt not well
When I was got, ile ſend his ſoule to hell.
Come Lady I will ſhew thee to my kinne,
And they ſhall ſay, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadſt ſaid him nay, it had beene ſinne;
Who ſayes it was, he lyes, I ſay twas not.
Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter before Angiers, Philip King of France, Lewis, Daulphin, Auſtria, Conſtance, Arthur.

Lewis. Before Angiers well met brave Auſtria,
Arthur that great forerunner of thy bloud,
Richard that rob'd the Lion of his heart,
And fought the holy Warres in Paleſtine,
By this brave Duke came early to his grave:
And for amends to his poſterity,
At our importance hither is he come,
To ſpread his colours boy, in thy behalfe,
And to rebuke the uſurpation
Of thy unnaturall Vncle, Engliſh Iohn,
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.
Arth. God ſhall forgive you Cordelions death
The rather, that you give his off-ſpring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of warre:
I give you welcome with a powerleſſe hand,
But with a heart full of unſtained love,
Welcome before the gates of Angiers Duke.
Lewis. A noble boy, who would not doe thee right?
Auſt. Vpon thy cheeke lay I this zealous kiſſe,
As ſeale to this indenture of my love:
That to my home I will no more returne
Till Angiers, and the right thou haſt in France,
Together with that pale, that white-fac'd ſhore,
Whoſe foot ſpurnes backe the Oceans roaring tides,
And coopes from other lands her Ilanders,
Even till that England hedg'd in with the maine,
That Water-walled Bulwarke, ſtill ſecure
And confident from forraine purpoſes,
Even till that utmoſt corner of the Weſt
Salute thee for her King, till then faire boy
Will I not thinke of home, but follow Armes.
Conſt. O take his mothers thankes, a widdows thankes,
Till your ſtrong hand ſhall helpe to give him ſtrength,
To make a more requitall to your love.
Auſt. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their ſwords
In ſuch a juſt and charitable warre.
King. Well, then to worke our Cannon ſhall be bent
Againſt the browes of this reſiſting towne,
Call for our cheefeſt men of diſcipline,
To cull the plots of beſt advantages:
Wee'll lay before this towne our Royall bones,
Wade to the market-place in French-mens bloud,
But we will make it ſubject to this boy.
Conſt. Stay for an anſwer to your Embaſſie,
Leſt unaduiſ'd you ſtaine your ſwords with bloud:
My lord Chattilion may from England bring
That right in peace which heere we urge in warre,
And then we ſhall repent each drop of bloud,
That hot raſh haſte ſo indirectly ſhed.
Enter Chattilion.
King. A wonder Lady; lo upon thy wiſh
Our Meſſenger Chattillion is arriu'd;
What England ſayes, ſay breifely gentle lord,
We coldly pauſe for thee, Chattillion ſpeake.
Chat. Then turne your forces from this paltry ſiege,
And ſtirre them up againſt a mightier taske:
England impatient of your juſt demands,
Hath put himſelfe in Armes, the adverſe windes

Whoſe leiſure I have ſtaid, have given him time
To land his Legions all as ſoone as I:
His marches are expedient to this towne,
His forces ſtrong, his ſouldiers confident:
With him along is come the Mother Queene,
An Ace ſtirring him to bloud and ſtrife,
With her her Neece, the Lady Blanch of Spaine,
With them a Baſtard of the King deceaſt,
And all th'unſetled humors of the Land,
Raſh, inconſiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With Ladies faces, and fierce Dragons ſpleenes,
Have ſold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birth-rights proudly on their backes,
To make a hazzard of new fortunes here:
In briefe, a braver choiſe of dauntleſſe ſpirits
Then now the Engliſh bottomes have waſt o're,
Did never flote upon the ſwelling tide,
To doe offence and ſcathe in Chriſtendome:
The interruption of their churliſh drummes
Cuts off more circumſtance, they are at hand:

Drummes beates.

To parly or to fight, therefore prepare.

King. How much unlook'd for, is this expedition.

Auſt. By how much unexpected, by ſo much
We muſt awake indevour for defence,
For courage mounteth with occaſion,
Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.

Enter King of England, Baſtard, Queene, Blanch, Pembroke, and others.

K. Iohn. Peace be to France: if France in peace permit
Our juſt and lineall entrance to our owne;
If not, bleed France, and peace aſcend to heaven.
Whiles we Gods wrathfull agent doe correct
Their proud contempt that beates his peace to heaven.

Fran. Peace be to England, if that warre returne
From France to England, there to live in peace:
England we love, and for that Englands ſake,
With burden of our armor here we ſweat:
This toyle of ours ſhould be a worke of thine,
But thou from loving England art ſo farre,
That thou haſt under-wrought his lawfull King,
Cut off the ſequence of poſterity,
Out-faced Infant State, and done a rape
Vpon the maiden vertue of the Crowne:
Looke heere upon thy brother Geffreyes face,
Theſe eyes, theſe browes, were moulded out of his;
This little abſtract doth containe that large,
Which died in Geffrey: and the hand of time,
Shall draw this breife into as huge a volume:
That Geffrey was thy elder brother borne,
And this his ſonne, England was Geffreyes right,
And this is Geffreyes in the Name of God:
How comes it then that thou art call'd a King,
When living blood doth in theſe temples beat
Which owe the crowne, that thou ore-maſtereſt?

K. Iohn. From whom haſt thou this great commiſſion
To draw my anſwer from thy Articles? (France,

Fra. From that ſupernal judge that ſtirs good thoughts
In any breaſt of ſtrong authority,
To looke into the blots and ſtaines of right,
That judge hath made me guardian to this boy,
Vnder whoſe warrant I impeach thy wrong,
And by whoſe helpe I meane to chaſtiſe it.

King Ioh. Alacke thou doſt uſurpe authority.

Fran. Excuſe it is to beat uſurping downe,

Queen. Who is it thou doſt call uſurper France?

Conſt. Let me make anſwer: thy uſurping ſonne,

Queen. Out inſolent, thy baſtard ſhall be King,
That thou maiſt be a Queene, and checke the world.

Conſt. My bed was ever to thy ſonne as true
As thine was to thy husband, and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geffrey
Then thou and Iohn, in manners being as like,
As raine to water, or devill to his damme.
My boy a baſtard? by my ſoule I thinke
His father never was ſo true begot,
It cannot be, and if thou wert his mother.

Qu. Theres a good mother boy, that blots thy father.

Conſt. There's a good grandame boy
That would blot thee.

Auſt. Peace.

Baſt. Heare the Cryer.

Auſt. What the devill art thou?

Baſt. One that will play the devill ſir with you,
And a may catch your hide and you alone:
You are the Hare of whom the Proverbe goes
Whoſe valour pluckes dead Lyons by the beard;
Ile ſmoake your skin-coat and I catch you right,
Sirra looke too't, yfaith I will, yfaith.

Blan. O well did he become that Lyons robe,
That did diſrobe the Lyon of that robe.

Baſt. It lyes as ſightly on the backe of him
As great Alcides ſhooes upon an Aſſe:
But Aſſe, Ile take that burthen from your backe,
Or lay on that ſhall make your ſhoulders cracke.

Auſt. What cracker is this ſame that deafes our eares
With this abundance of ſuperfluous breath?
King Lewis, determine what we ſhall doe ſtrait.

Lew. Women and fooles, breake off your conference.
King Iohn, this is the very ſumme of all:
England and Ireland, Angiers, Toraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur doe I claime of thee:
Wilt thou reſigne them, and lay downe thy Armes?

Iohn. My life as ſoone: I doe defie thee France.
Arthur of Britaine, yeeld thee to my hand,
And out of my deere love Ile give thee more,
Then ere the coward hand of France can winne;
Submit thee boy.

Queen. Come to thy grandame child.

Conſt. Doe child, goe to it grandame child,
Give grandame kingdome, and it grandame will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a figge,
There's a good grandame.

Arthur, Good my mother peace,
I would that I were low laid in my grave,
I am not worth this coyle that's made for me. (weepe

Qu. Mo. His mother ſhames him ſo, poore boy he

Conſt. Now ſhame upon you where ſhe does or no.
His grandames wrongs, and not his mothers ſhames
Draws thoſe heaven-moving pearles from his poor eie
Which heaven ſhall take in nature of a fee:
I, with theſe Criſtall beads heaven ſhall be brib'd
To doe him Iuſtice, and revenge on you.

Qu. Thou monſtrous ſlanderer of heaven, and earth.

Conſt. Thou monſtrous Injurer of heaven and earth,
Call not me ſlanderer, thou and thine uſurpe
The Domination, Royalties, and rights
Of this oppreſſed boy; this is thy eldeſt ſonnes ſonne,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee;

Thy ſinnes are viſited in this poore child,
The Canon of the Law is laid on him,
Being but the ſecond generation
Removed from thy ſinne-conceiving wombe.
Iohn. Bedlam have done.
Conſt. I have but this to ſay,
That he is not onely plagued for her ſinne,
But God hath made her ſinne and her, the plague
On this removed iſſue, plagued for her,
And with her plague her ſinne: his injury
Her injury the Beadle to her ſinne,
All puniſh'd in the perſon of this child,
And all for her, a plague upon her.
Que. Thou unadviſed ſcold, I can produce
A Will, that barres the title of thy ſonne.
Conſt. I who doubts that, a Will: a wicked will,
A womans will, a cankred Grandames will.
Fran. Peace Lady, pauſe, or be more temperate,
It ill beſeemes this preſence to cry ay me
To theſe ill tuned repetitions:
Some Trumpet ſummon hither to the walles
Theſe men of Angiers, let us heare them ſpeake,
Whoſe title they admit, Arthurs or Iohns.

Trumpet ſounds.
Enter a Citizen upon the walles.

Citti. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walles?
Fran. 'Tis France, for England.
Iohn. England for it ſelfe:
You men of Angiers, and my loving ſubjects.
Fran. You loving men of Angiers, Arthurs ſubjects,
Our Trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.
Iohn. For our advantage, therefore heare us firſt:
Theſe flagges of France that are advanced here
Before the eye and proſpect of your Towne,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement.
The Canons have their bowels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they to ſpit forth
Their Iron indignation 'gainſt your walles;
All preparation for a bloody ſiedge
And merciles proceeding, by theſe French.
Comfort yours Cities eyes, your winking gates:
And but for our approch, thoſe ſleeping ſtones,
That as a waſte doth girdle you about
By the compulſion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had beene diſhabited, and wide havocke made
For bloody power to ruſh upon your peace.
But on the ſight of us your lawfull King,
Who painefully with much expedient march
Have brought a counter-checke before your gates,
To ſave unſcratch'd your Cities threatened cheekes:
Behold the French amaz'd vouchſafe a parle,
And now inſteed of bullets wrapt in fire
To make a ſhaking fever in your walles,
They ſhoote but calme words, folded up in ſmoake,
To make a faithleſſe error in your eares,
Which truſt accordingly kind Citizens,
And let us in. Your King, whoſe labour'd ſpirits
Fore-wearied in this action of ſwift ſpeede,
Craves harbourage within your City walles.
Fran. When I have ſaid, make anſwer to us both.
Loe in this right hand, whoſe protection
Is moſt divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, ſtands yong Plantagenet,
Sonne to the elder brother of this man,
And King ore him, and all that he enjoyes:
For this downe-troden equity, we tread
In warlike march, theſe greenes before your Towne,
Being no further enemy to you
Then the conſtraint of hoſpitable zeale,
In the releife of this oppreſſed child,
Religiouſly provokes. Be pleaſed then
To pay that duty which you truely owe,
To him that owes it, namely, this yong Prince,
And then our Armes, like to a muzled Beare,
Save in aſpect, hath all offence ſeal'd up:
Our Cannons malice vainely ſhall be ſpent
Againſt th'invulnerable clouds of heaven,
And with a bleſſed and un-vext retire,
With unhack'd ſwords, and Helmets all unbruis'd,
We will beare home that luſty bloud againe,
Which heere we came to ſpout againſt your Towne,
And leave your children, wives, and you in peace.
But if you fondly paſſe our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the rounder of your old fac'd walles,
Can hide you from our meſſengers of Warre,
Though all theſe Engliſh, and their diſcipline
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference;
Then tell us, Shall your City call us Lord,
In that behalfe which we have challeng'd it?
Or ſhall we give the ſignall to our rage,
And ſtalke in bloud to our poſſeſſion?
Citi. In breife, we are the King of Englands ſubjects,
For him, and in his right, we hold this Towne.
Iohn. Acknowledge then the King, and let me in.
Citi. That can we not: but he that proves the King
To him will we prove loyall, till that time
Have we ramm'd up our gates againſt the world.
Iohn. Doth not the Crowne of England, prove the King?
And if not that, I bring you Witneſſes
Twice fifteene thouſand hearts of Englands breed.
Baſt. Baſtards and elſe.
Iohn. To verifie our title with their lives.
Fran. As many and as well borne bloods as thoſe.
Baſt. Some baſtards too.
Fran. Stand in his face to contradict his claime.
Citi. Till you compound whoſe right is worthieſt,
We for the worthieſt hold the right from both.
Iohn. Then God forgive the ſinne of all thoſe ſoules,
That to their everlaſting reſidence,
Before the dew of evening fall ſhall fleete
In dreadfull triall of our Kingdomes King.
Fran. Amen, Amen, mount Chevaliers to Armes.
Baſt. Saint George that ſwindg'd the Dragon,
And e're ſince ſit's on's horſebacke at mine Hoſteſſe dore,
Teach us ſome fence. Sirrah, were I at home
At your den ſirrah, with your Lyonneſſe,
I would ſet an Oxe-head to your Lyons hide;
And make a monſter of you.
Auſt. Peace no more.
Baſt. O tremble: for you heare the Lyon rore.
Iohn. Vp higher to the plaine, where we'l ſet forth
In beſt appointment all our Regiments.
Baſt. Speed then to take advantage of the field.
Fran. It ſhall be ſo, and at the other hill
Command the reſt to ſtand. God and our right. Exeunt.

Heere after excurſions, Enter the Herald of France with Trumpets to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers open wide your gates,
And let yong Arthur Duke of Britaine in,

Who by the hand of France, this day hath made
Much worke for teares in many an Engliſh mother,
Whoſe ſonnes lye ſcattered on the bleeding ground:
Many a widdowes husband groveling lyes,
Coldly embracing the diſcoloured earth,
And victory with little loſſe doth play
Vpon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are at hand triumphantly diſplayed
To enter Conquerors, and to proclaime
Arthur of Britaine, Englands King, and yours.

Enter Engliſh Herald with Trumpet.

E. Har. Rejoyce you men of Angiers, ring your bels,
King Iohn, your King and Englands, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day,
Their Armours that march'd hence ſo ſilver bright,
Hither returne all gilt with Frenchmens blood:
There ſtucke no plume in any Engliſh Creſt,
That is removed by a ſtaffe of France.
Our colours doe returne in thoſe ſame hands
That did diſplay them when we firſt marcht forth:
And like a jolly troope of Huntſmen come
Our luſty Engliſh, all with purpled hands,
Dide in the dying ſlaughter of their foes.
Open your gates, and give the Victors way.

Hub. Heralds, from off our towres we might behold
From firſt to laſt, the on-ſet and retyre,
Of both your Armies, whoſe equality
By our beſt eyes cannot be cenſured: (blowes:
Blood hath bought blood, and blowes have anſwered
Strength matcht with ſtrength, and power confronted power.
Both are alike, and both alike we like:
One muſt prove greateſt. While they weigh ſo even,
We hold our Towne for neither: yet for both.

Enter the two Kings with their powers,
at ſeverall doores.

Iohn. France, haſt thou yet more bloud to caſt away?
Say, ſhall the currant of our right runne on,
Whoſe paſſage vext with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channell, and ore ſwell
With courſe diſturb'd even thy confining ſhores,
Vnleſſe thou let his ſilver Water, keepe
A peacefull progreſſe to the Ocean.

Fran. England thou haſt not ſav'd one drop of blood
In this hot triall more than we of France,
Rather loſt more. And by this hand I ſweare
That ſwayes the earth this Climate over-lookes,
Before we will lay downe our juſt borne Armes,
Wee'l put thee downe, 'gainſt whom theſe Armes we
Or adde a royall number to the dead: (beare,
Gracing the ſcroule that tels of this warres loſſe,
With ſlaughter coupled to the name of Kings.

Baſt. Ha Majeſty: how high thy glory towres,
When the rich blood of Kings is ſet on fire:
Oh now doth death line his dead chaps with ſteele,
The ſwords of ſouldiers are his teeth, his phangs,
And now he feaſts, mouſing the fleſh of men
In undetermin'd differences of Kings.
Why ſtand theſe royall fronts amazed thus:
Cry havocke kings, backe to the ſtained field
You equall Potents, fiery kindled ſpirits,
Then let confuſion of one part confirme
The others peace: till then, blowes, blood, and death.

Iohn. Whoſe party doe the Towneſmen yet admit?

Fran. Speake Citizens for England, who's your King.

Hub. The King of England, when we know the King.

Fran. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

Iohn. In us, that are our owne great Deputy,
And beare poſſeſſion of our Perſon here,
Lord of our preſence Angiers, and if you.

Fran. A greater powre than We denies all this,
And till it be undoubted, we doe locke
Our former ſcruple in our ſtrong barr'd gates:
Kings of our feare, untill our feares reſolv'd
Be by ſome certaine King, purg'd and depoſ'd.

Baſt. By heaven, theſe ſcroyles of Angiers flout you
And ſtand ſecurely on their battelments, (kings,
As in a Theater, whence they gape and point
At your induſtrious Scenes and acts of death.
Your Royall preſences be rul'd by me,
Doe like the Mutines of Ieruſalem,
Be friends a-while, and both conjoyntly bend
Your ſharpeſt Deeds of malice on this Towne.
By Eaſt and Weſt let France and England mount
Their battering Canon charged to the mouthes,
Till their ſoule-fearing clamours have braul'd downe
The flinty ribbes of this contemptuous City,
I'de play inceſſantly upon theſe Iades,
Even till unfenced deſolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar ayre:
That done, diſſever your united ſtrengths,
And part your mingled colours once againe,
Turne face to face, and bloody point to point:
Then in a moment Fortune ſhall cull forth
Out of one ſide her happy Minion,
To whom in favour ſhe ſhall give the day,
And kiſſe him with a glorious victory:
How like you this wilde counſel mighty States,
Smackes it not ſomething of the policy?

Iohn. Now by the ſky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well. France, ſhall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground,
Then after fight who ſhall be king of it?

Baſt. And if thou haſt the mettle of a King,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peeviſh Towne:
Turne thou the mouth of thy Artillery,
As we will ours, againſt theſe ſawcy walles,
And when that we have daſh'd them to the ground,
Why then defie each other, and pell-mell,
Make worke upon our ſelves, for heaven or hell.

Fran. Let it be ſo: ſay, where will you aſſault?

Iohn. We from the Weſt will ſend deſtruction
Into this Cities boſome.

Auſt. I from the North.

Fran. Our thunder from the South,
Shall raine their drift of bullets on this Towne.

Baſt. O prudent diſcipline! From North to South:
Auſtria and France ſhoot in each others mouth,
Ile ſtirre them to it: come, away, away.

Hub. Heare us great Kings, vouchſafe awhile to ſtay
And I ſhall ſhew you peace, and faire-fac'd league;
Win you this City without ſtroke, or wound,
Reſcue thoſe breathing lives to dye in beds,
That heere come ſacrifices for the field.
Perſever not, but heare me mighty Kings.

Iohn. Speake on with favour, we are bent to heare.

Hub. That daughter there of Spaine, the Lady Blanch
Is neere to England, looke upon the yeeres
Of Lewis the Dolphin, and that lovely mayd.
If luſty love ſhould goe in queſt of beauty,

Where ſhould he find it fairer, than in Blanch:
If zealous Love goe in ſearch of vertue,
Where ſhould he find it purer than in Blanch?
If Love ambitious, ſought a match of birth,
Whoſe veines bound richer bloud then Lady Blanch?
Such as ſhe is, in beauty, vertue, birth,
Is the yong Dolphin every way compleat,
If not compleat of, ſay he is not ſhe,
And ſhe againe wants nothing, to name want,
If want it be not, that ſhe is not he:
He is the halfe part of a bleſſed man,
Left to be finiſhed by ſuch as ſhe,
And ſhe a faire divided excellence,
Whoſe fulneſſe of perfection lyes in him.
O two ſuch ſilver Currents when they joyne,
Doe glorifie the bankes that bound them in:
And two ſuch ſhores, to two ſuch ſtreames made one,
Two ſuch controlling bounds ſhall you be, Kings,
To theſe two Princes, if you marry them:
This vnion ſhall doe more than battery can,
To our faſt cloſed gates: for at this match,
With ſwifter ſpleene than powder can enforce,
The mouth of paſſage ſhall we fling wide ope,
And give you entrance: but without this match,
The Sea enraged is not halfe ſo deafe,
Lyons more confident, Mountaines and Rocks,
More free from motion, no not death himſelfe
In mortall fury halfe ſo peremptory,
As we to keepe this Citie.
Baſt. Heere's a ſtay,
That ſhakes the rotten carkaſſe of old death
Out of his ragges. Here's a large mouth indeed,
That ſpits forth death, and mountaines, rocks, and ſeas,
Talkes as familiarly of roaring Lyons,
As Maids of thirteene doe of Puppi-dogs.
What Cannoneere begot this luſty bloud,
He ſpeakes plaine Cannon fire, and ſmoake, and bounce,
He gives the Baſtinado with his tongue:
Our eares are cudgel'd, not a word of his
But buffets better than a fiſt of France:
Zounds, I was never ſo bethumpt with words,
Since I firſt call'd my brothers father Dad.
Old Qu. Son, liſt to this conjunction, make this match,
Give with our Neece a dowry large enough,
For by this knot, thou ſhalt ſo ſurely tye,
Thy now unſur'd aſſurance to the Crowne,
That yon greene Boy ſhall have no Sunne to ripe,
The bloome that promiſeth a mighty fruit,
I ſee a yeelding in the lookes of France:
Marke how they whiſper, urge them while their ſoules
Are capeable of this ambition,
Leaſt zeale now melted by the windy breath
Of ſoft petitions, pitty and remorſe,
Coole and congeale againe to what it was.
Hub. Why anſwer not the double Majeſties,
This friendly Treaty of our threatned towne?
Fra. Speake England firſt, that hath been forward firſt,
To ſpeake unto this Citie: what ſay you?
Iohn. If that the Dolphin there thy Princely ſonne,
Can in this booke of beauty reade, I love:
Her Dowry ſhall weigh equall with a Queene,
For Angiers, and faire Toraine, Maine, Poyctiers,
And all that we upon this ſide the Sea,
(Except this Citie now by us beſieg'd)
Find liable to our Crowne and dignity,
Shall gild her bridall bed and make her rich
In titles, honours, and promotions,
As ſhe in beauty, education, bloud,
Holds hands with any Princeſſe of the world.
Fra. What ſay'ſt thou Boy? looke in the Ladies face.
Dol. I doe my Lord, and in her eye I find,
A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
The ſhadow of my ſelfe form'd in her eye,
Which being but the ſhadow of your ſonne,
Becomes a ſonne, and makes your ſonne a ſhaddow:
I doe proteſt I never lov'd my ſelfe
Till now, infixed I beheld my ſelfe,
Drawne in the flattering table of her eye.
Whiſpers with Blanch.
Baſt. Drawne in the flattering table of her eye,
Hang'd in the frowning wrincle of her brow,
And quarter'd in her heart, he doth eſpie
Himſelfe Loves traitor, this is pitty now;
That hang'd and drawne, and quarter'd there ſhould be
In ſuch a love, ſo vile a Lout as he.
Blan. My Vncles will in this reſpect is mine,
If he ſee ought in you that makes him like,
That any thing he ſee's which moves his liking,
I can with eaſe tranſlate it to my will:
Or if you will, to ſpeake more properly,
I will enforce it eaſlie to my love.
Further I will not flatter you, my Lord,
That all I ſee in you is worthy love,
Than this, that nothing doe I ſee in you,
Though churliſh thoughts themſelves ſhould be your Iudge,
That I can find, ſhould merit any hate.
Iohn. What ſay theſe yong-ones? What ſay you my Neece?
Blan. That ſhe is bound in honour ſtill to doe
What you in wiſedome ſtill vouchſafe to ſay.
Iohn. Speake then Prince Dolphin, can you love this Lady?
Dol. Nay aske me if I can refraine from love,
For I doe love her moſt unfainedly.
Iohn. Then doe I give Volqueſſen, Toraine, Maine,
Poyctiers, and Anjow, theſe five Provinces
With her to thee, and this addition more,
Full thirty thouſand Markes of Engliſh coyne;
Philip of France, if thou be pleaſ'd withall,
Command thy ſonne and daughter to joyne hands.
Fran. It likes us well young Princes: cloſe your hands.
Auſt. And your lippes too, for I am well aſſur'd,
That I did ſo when I was firſt aſſur'd.
Fran. Now Citizens of Angiers ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made,
For at Saints Maries Chappell preſently,
The rights of marriage ſhall be ſolemniz'd.
Is not the Lady Conſtance in this troope?
I know ſhe is not for this match made up,
Her preſence would have interrupted much,
Where is ſhe and her ſonne, tell me, who knowes?
Dol. She is ſad and paſſionate at your Highneſſe Tent.
Fran. And by my faith, this league that we have made,
Will give her ſadneſſe very little cure:
Brother of England, how may we content
This widdow Lady? In her right we came,
Which we God knowes, have turned another way,
To our owne vantage:
Iohn. We will heale up all,
For wee'l create yong Arthur Duke of Britaine
And Earle of Richmond, and this rich faire Towne

We make him Lord of. Call the Lady Conſtance,
Some ſpeedy Meſſenger bid her repaire
To our ſolemnity : I truſt we ſhall,
(If not fill up the meaſure of her will)
Yet in ſome meaſure ſatisfie her ſo,
That we ſhall ſtop her exclamation.
Goe we as well as haſt will ſuffer us,
To this unlook'd for unprepared pompe. Exeunt.

Baſt. Mad world, mad kings, mad compoſition :
Iohn to ſtop Arthurs Title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part,
And France, whoſe armour Conſcience buckled on,
Whom zeale and charity brought to the field,
As Gods owne ſouldier, rounded in the eare,
With that ſame purpoſe-changer, that ſlye divel,
That broker, that ſtill breakes the pate of faith,
That dayly breake-vow, he that winnes of all,
Of kings, of beggers, old men, yong men, maids,
Who having no externall thing to loſe,
But the word Maid, cheats the poore Maide of that.
That ſmooth-fac'd Gentleman, tickling commodity,
Commodity, the byas of the world,
The world, who of it ſelfe is peyſed well,
Made to run even, upon even ground :
Till this advantage, this vile drawing byas,
This ſway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpoſe, courſe, intent.
And this ſame byas, this commodity,
This Bawd, this Broker, that all-changing-world,
Clap'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawne him from his owne determin'd ayd,
From a reſolv'd and honorable warre,
To a moſt baſe and vile concluded peace.
And why raile I on this commodity ?
But for becauſe he hath not wooed me yet :
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his faire Angels would ſalute my palme,
But for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poore begger, raileth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a begger, I will raile,
And ſay there is no ſinne but to be rich,
And being rich, my vertue then ſhall be,
To ſay there is no vice, but beggery :
Since Kings breake faith upon commodity,
Gaine be my lord, for I will worſhip thee. Exit.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Conſtance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Conſt. Gone to be married ? Gone to ſweare a peace ?
Falſe blood to falſe blood joyn'd. Gone to be friends ?
Shall Lewis have Blaunch, and Blaunch thoſe provinces ?
It is not ſo, thou haſt miſpoke, miſheard,
Be well adviſ'd, tell ore thy tale againe.
It cannot be, thou do'ſt but ſay 'tis ſo.
I truſt I may not truſt thee, for thy word
Is but the vaine breath of a common man :
Beleeve me, I doe not beleeve thee man,
I have a Kings oath to the contrary.
Thou ſhalt be puniſh'd for thus frighting me,
For I am ſicke, and capeable of feares.
Oppreſt with wrongs, and therefore full of feares,
A widdow, husbandles, ſubject to feares,
A woman naturally borne to feares ;
And though thou now confeſſe thou didſt but jeſt
With my vext ſpirits, I cannot take a Truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What doſt thou meane by ſhaking of thy head ?
Why doſt thou looke ſo ſadly on my ſonne ?
What meanes that hand upon that breaſt of thine ?
Why holdes thine eye that lamentable rhewme,
Like a proud river peering ore his bounds ?
Be theſe ſad ſignes confirmers of thy words ?
Then ſpeake againe, not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true as I beleeve you thinke them falſe,
That give you cauſe to prove my ſaying true.

Conſt. Oh if thou teach me to beleeve this ſorrow,
Teach thou this ſorrow, how to make me dye,
And let beleefe, and life encounter ſo,
As doth the fury of two deſperate men,
Which in the very meeting fall, and dye.
Lewis marry Blaunch ? O boy, then where art thou ?
France friend with England, what becomes of me ?
Fellow be gone : I cannot brooke thy ſight,
This newes hath made thee a moſt ugly man.

Sal. What other harme have I good Lady done,
But ſpoke the harme, that is by others done ?

Conſt. Which harme within it ſelfe ſo heynous is,
As it makes harmefull all that ſpeake of it.

Arthur. I doe beſeech you Madame be content.

Conſt. If thou that bidſt me be content, wert grim
Vgly, and ſlandrous to thy Mothers wombe,
Full of unpleaſing blots, and ſightleſſe ſtaines,
Lame, fooliſh, crooked, ſwart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foule Moles, and eye-offending markes,
I would not care, I then would be content,
For then I ſhould not love thee : no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deſerve a Crowne.
But thou art faire, and at thy birth (deere boy)
Nature and Fortune joyn'd to make thee great.
Of Natures gifts, thou mayſt with Lillies boaſt,
And with the halfe blowne Roſe. But Fortune, oh,
She is corrupted, chang'd, and wonne from thee,
Sh'adulterates hourely with thine Vnckle Iohn,
And with her golden hand hath pluckt on France
To tread downe faire reſpect of Soveraignty,
And made his Majeſty the bawd to theirs.
France is a Bawd to Fortune, and king Iohn,
That ſtrumpet Fortune, that uſurping Iohn :
Tell me thou fellow, is not France forſworne ?
Envenom him with words, or get thee gone,
And leave thoſe woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to under-beare.

Sal. Pardon me Madam,
I may not goe without you to the kings.

Conſt. Thou mayſt, thou ſhalt, I will not goe with thee,
I will inſtruct my ſorrowes to be proud,
For greif is proud, and makes his owner ſtoope;
To me and to the ſtate of my great greife,
Let kings aſſemble : for my greife's ſo great,
That no ſupporter but the huge firme earth
Can hold it up : here I and ſorrowes ſit,
Here is my Throne, bid kings come bow to it.

Actus

Actus Tertius, Scæna prima.

Enter King Iohn, France, Dolphin, Blanch, Elianor, Philip, Auſtria, Conſtance.

Fran. 'Tis true (faire daughter) and this bleſſed day,
Ever in France ſhall be kept feſtiuall:
To ſolemnize this day the glorious ſunne
Stayes in his courſe, and playes the Alchymiſt,
Turning with ſplendor of his precious eye
The meager cloddy earth to glittering gold:
The yearely courſe that brings this day about,
Shall never ſee it, but a holy day.

Conſt. A wicked day, and not a holy day.
What hath this day deſeru'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letters ſhould be ſet
Among the high tides in the Kalender?
Nay, rather turne this day out of the weeke,
This day of ſhame, oppreſſion, perjury.
Or if it muſt ſtand ſtill, let wives with child
Pray that their burthens may not fall this day,
Leſt that their hopes prodigiouſly be croſt:
But (on this day) let Sea-men feare no wracke,
No bargaines breake that are not this day made;
This day all things begun, come to ill end,
Yea, faith it ſelfe to hollow falſhood change.

Fran. By heaven Lady, you ſhall have no cauſe
To curſe the faire proceedings of this day:
Have I not pawn'd to you my Majeſty?

Conſt. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit
Reſembling Majeſty, which being touch'd and tride,
Proves valueleſſe: you are forſworne, forſworne,
You came in Armes to ſpill mine enemies bloud,
But now in Armes, you ſtrengthen it with yours.
The grapling vigor, and rough frowne of Warre
Is cold in amity, and painted peace,
And our oppreſſion had made up this league:
Arme, arme, you heavens, againſt theſe perjur'd Kings,
A widdow cries, be husband to me (heavens)
Let not the houres of this ungodly day
Weare out the dayes in peace: but ere Sun-ſet,
Set armed diſcord 'twixt theſe perjur'd Kings,
Heare me, Oh, heare me.

Auſt. Lady Conſtance, peace.

Conſt. Warre, warre, no peace, peace is to me a warre:
O Lymoges, O Auſtria, thou doſt ſhame
That bloudy ſpoile: thou ſlave, thou wretch, thou coward,
Thou little valiant, great in villany,
Thou ever ſtrong vpon the ſtronger ſide;
Thou Fortunes Champion, that do'ſt never fight
But when her humourous Ladiſhip is by
To teach thee ſafety: thou art perjur'd too,
And ſooth'ſt up greatneſſe. What a foole art thou,
A ramping foole, to brag, and ſtamp, and ſweare,
Vpon my party: thou cold blouded ſlave,
Haſt thou not ſpoke like thunder on my ſide?
Beene ſworne my ſouldier, bidding me depend
Vpon thy ſtarres, thy fortune, and thy ſtrength,
And doſt thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou weare a Lyons hide? doff it for ſhame,
And hang a Calves skin on thoſe recreant limbes.

Auſt. O that a man ſhould ſpeake thoſe words to me.

Phil. And hang a Calves skin on thoſe recreant limbes.

Auſt. Thou dar'ſt not ſay ſo villaine for thy life.

Phil. And hang a Calves skin on thoſe recreant limbs.

Iohn. We like not this, thou doſt forget thy ſelfe.

Enter Pandulph.

Fran. Heere comes the holy Legat of the Pope.

Pan. Haile you annointed deputies of heaven;
To thee King Iohn my holy errand is:
I Pandulph, of faire Millane Cardinall,
And from Pope Innocent the Legate heere,
Doe in his name religiouſly demand
Why thou againſt the Church, our holy Mother,
So wilfully doſt ſpurne; and force perforce
Keepe Stephen Langton choſen Arſhbiſhop
Of Canterbury from that holy Sea:
This in our foreſaid holy Fathers name
Pope Innocent, I doe demand of thee.

Iohn. What earthy name to interrogatories
Can taſt the free breath of a ſacred King?
Thou canſt not (Cardinall) deviſe a name
So ſlight, unworthy, and ridiculous
To charge me to an anſwer, as the Pope:
Tell him this tale, and from the mouth of England,
Adde thus much more, that no Italian Prieſt
Shall tythe or toll in our dominions:
But as we, under heaven, are ſupreame head,
So under him that great ſupremacy
Where we doe reigne, we will alone uphold
Without th'aſſiſtance of a mortall hand:
So tell the Pope, all reverence ſet apart
To him and his uſurp'd authority.

Fran. Brother of England, you blaſpheme in this.

Iohn. Though you, and all the Kings of Chriſtendome
Are led ſo groſſely by this medling Prieſt,
Dreading the curſe that money may buy out,
And by the merit of vilde gold, droſſe, duſt,
Purchaſe corrupted pardon of a man,
Who in that ſale ſels pardon from himſelfe:
Though you, and all the reſt ſo groſſely led,
This jugling witch-craft with revenue cheriſh,
Yet I alone, alone doe me oppoſe
Againſt the Pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then by the lawfull power that I have,
Thou ſhalt ſtand curſt, and excommunicate,
And bleſſed ſhall he be that doth revolt
From his Allegeance to an heretique,
And meritorious ſhall that hand be call'd,
Canonized and worſhipp'd as a Saint,
That takes away by any ſecret courſe
Thy hatefull life.

Conſt. O lawfull let it be
That I have roome with Rome to curſe a while,
Good Father Cardinall, cry thou Amen
To my keene curſes; for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curſe him right.

Pan. There's law and warrant (Lady) for my curſe.

Conſt. And for mine too, when law can doe no right.
Let it be lawfull, that Law barre no wrong:
Law cannot give my child his kingdome heere;
For he that holds his kingdome, holds the law:
Therefore ſince Law it ſelfe is perfect wrong,
How can the Law forbid my tongue to curſe?

Pand. Philip of France, on perill of a curſe,
Let goe the hand of that Arch-heretique,
And raiſe the power of France upon his head,
Vnleſſe he doe ſubmit himſelfe to Rome.

Elea Look'ſt thou pale France? do not let go thy hand.

Conſt. Looke to that devill, leſt that France repent,

And by diſioyning hands hell loſe a ſoule.
Auſt. King Philip, liſten to the Cardinall.
Baſt. And hang a Calves-skin on his recreant limbes.
Auſt. Well ruffian, I muſt pocket up theſe wrongs,
Becauſe,
Baſt. Your breeches beſt may carry them.
Iohn. Philip, what ſaiſt thou to the Cardinall?
Con. What ſhould he ſay, but as the Cardinall?
Dolph. Bethinke you father, for the difference
Is purchaſe of a heavy curſe from Rome,
Or the light loſſe of England, for a friend:
Forgoe the eaſier.
Bla. That is the curſe of Rome.
Con. O Lewis, ſtand faſt, the devill tempts thee heere
In likeneſſe of a new untrimmed Bride.
Bla. The Lady Conſtance ſpeakes not from her faith,
But from her need.
Conſt. Oh, if thou grant my need,
Which onely lives but by the death of faith,
That need, muſt needs inferre this principle,
That faith would live againe by death of need:
O then tread downe my need, and faith mounts up,
Keepe my need up, and faith is trodden downe.
Iohn. The kind is moved, and anſwers not to this.
Conſt. O be remov'd from him, and anſwer well:
Auſt. Doe ſo king Philip, hang no more in doubt.
Baſt. Hang nothing but a Calves-skin moſt ſweet lout.
Fran. I am perplext, and know not what to ſay.
Pan. What canſt thou ſay, but will perplex thee more?
If thou ſtand excommunicate, and curſt?
Fran. Good reverend father, make my perſon yours,
And tell me how you would beſtow your ſelfe?
This royall hand, and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward ſoules
Married in league, coupled, and link'd together
With all religious ſtrength of ſacred vowes:
The lateſt breath that gave the ſound of words
Was deepe-ſworne faith, peace, amity, true love
Betweene our kingdomes and our royall ſelves,
And even before this truce, but new before,
No longer than we well could waſh our hands,
To clap this royall bargaine up of peace,
Heaven knowes they were beſmear'd and over-ſtaind
With ſlaughters pencill; where revenge did paint
The fearefull difference of incenſed kings:
And ſhall theſe hands ſo lately purg'd of bloud?
So newly joyn'd in love? ſo ſtrong in both,
Vnyoke this ſeyſure, and this kind regreet?
Play faſt and looſe with faith? ſo jeſt with heaven,
Make ſuch unconſtant children of our ſelves
As now againe to ſnatch our palme from palme:
Vn-ſweare faith ſworne, and on the marriage bed
Of ſmiling peace to march a bloody hoaſt,
And make a ryot on the gentle brow
Of true ſincerity? O holy ſir
My reverend father, let it not be ſo;
Out of your grace, deviſe, ordaine, impoſe
Some gentle order, and then we ſhall be bleſt
To doe your pleaſure, and continue friends.
Pand. All forme is formeleſſe, Order orderleſſe,
Save what is oppoſite to Englands love.
Therefore to Armes, be Champion of our Church,
Or let the Church our mother breathe her curſe,
A mothers curſe, on her revolting ſonne.
France, thou maiſt hold a ſerpent by the tongue,
A caſed Lion by the mortall paw,
A faſting Tyger ſafer by the tooth,
Than keepe in peace that hand which thou doſt hold.
Fran. I may diſioyne my hand, but not my faith,
Pand. So mak'ſt thou faith an enemy to faith,
And like a civill warre ſetſt oath to oath,
Thy tongue againſt thy tongue. O let thy vow
Firſt made to heaven, firſt be to heaven perform'd,
That is, to be the Champion of our Church,
What ſince thou ſwor'ſt, is ſworne againſt thy ſelfe,
And may not be performed by thy ſelfe,
For that which thou haſt ſworne to doe amiſſe,
Is not amiſſe when it is truely done:
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then moſt done not doing it:
The better Act of purpoſes miſtooke,
Is to miſtake againe, though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby growes direct,
And falſehood, falſehood cures, as fire cooles fire
Within the ſcorched veines of one new burn'd.
It is religion that doth make vowes kept,
But thou haſt ſworne againſt religion:
By what thou ſwear'ſt againſt the thing thou ſwear'ſt,
And mak'ſt an oath the ſurety for thy truth,
Againſt an oath the truth, thou art unſure
To ſweare, ſweares onely not to be forſworne,
Elſe what a mockery ſhould it be to ſweare?
But thou doſt ſweare, onely to be forſworne,
And moſt forſworne, to keepe what thou doſt ſweare,
Therefore thy later vowes, againſt thy firſt,
Is in thy ſelfe rebellion to thy ſelfe:
And better conqueſt never canſt thou make,
Than arme thy conſtant and thy nobler parts
Againſt theſe giddy looſe ſuggeſtions:
Vpon which better part, our prairs come in
If thou vouchſafe them. But if not, then know
The perill of our curſes light on thee
So heavy, as thou ſhalt not ſhake them off
But in deſpaire, dye under their blacke weight.
Auſt. Rebellion, flat rebellion.
Baſt. Wil't not be?
Will not a Calves-skin ſtop that mouth of thine?
Daul. Father, to Armes.
Blanch. Vpon thy wedding day?
Againſt the blood that thou haſt married?
What, ſhall our feaſt be kept with ſlaughtered men?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud churliſh drums
Clamors of hell, be meaſures to our pompe?
O husband heare me: aye, alacke, how new
Is husband in my mouth? even for that name
Which till this time my tongue did neere pronounce;
Vpon my knee I beg, goe not to Armes
Againſt mine Vncle.
Conſt. O, upon my knee made hard with kneeling,
I doe pray to thee, thou vertuous Daulphin,
Alter not the doome fore-thought by heaven.
Blan. Now ſhall I ſee thy love, what motive may
Be ſtronger with thee, than the name of wife?
Conſt. That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honor, Oh thine honor, Lewis thine honor.
Dolph. I muſe your Majeſty doth ſeeme ſo cold,
When ſuch profound reſpects doe pull you on?
Pand. I will denounce a curſe upon his head.
Fra. Thou ſhalt not need. England, I will fall from thee.
Conſt. O faire returne of baniſh'd Majeſty.
Elea. O foule revolt of French inconſtancy.
Eng. France, thou ſhalt rue this houre within this houre.

Baſt. Old Time the clocke ſetter, that bald ſexton Time:
Is it as he will? well then, France ſhall rue.
Bla. The Sun's orecaſt with bloud: faire day adieu,
Which is the ſide that I muſt goe withall?
I am with both, each Army hath a hand,
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whurle a-ſunder, and diſmember me.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou maiſt winne:
Vncle, I needs muſt pray that thou maiſt loſe:
Father, I may not wiſh the fortune thine:
Grandam, I will not wiſh thy wiſhes thrive:
Who ever winnes, on that ſide ſhall I loſe:
Aſſured loſſe, before the match be plaid.
Dolph. Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.
Bla. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.
Iohn. Coſen, goe draw our puiſance together,
France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath,
A rage, whoſe heat hath this condition;
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood and deereſt valued bloud of France.
Fran. Thy rage ſhall burne thee up, and thou ſhalt turne
To aſhes, ere our blood ſhall quench that fire:
Looke to thy ſelfe, thou art in jeopardy.
Iohn. No more then he that threats. To Arms le'ts hie.
Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Allarums, Excurſions: Enter Baſtard with Auſtria's head.

Baſt. Now by my life, this day grows wondrous hot,
Some ayery devil hovers in the skie,
And pour's downe miſchiefe. Auſtrias head ly there,
Enter Iohn, Arthur, Hubert.
While Philip breathes.
Iohn. Hubert, keepe this boy: Philip make up,
My Mother is aſſailed in our Tent,
And tane I feare.
Baſt. My Lord I reſcued her.
Her Highneſſe is in ſafety, feare you not:
But on my Leige, for very little paines
Will bring this labour to an happy end. Exit.

Alarums, excurſions, Retreat. Enter Iohn, Eleanor, Arthur, Baſtard, Hubert, Lords,

Iohn. So ſhall it be: your grace ſhall ſtay behind
So ſtrongly guarded: Coſen, looke not ſad,
Thy Grandame loves thee, and thy Vnkle will
As deere be to thee, as thy father was.
Arth. O this will make my mother die with griefe.
Iohn. Coſen away for England, haſte before,
And ere our comming ſee thou ſhake the bags
Of hoording Abbots, impriſoned angels
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Muſt by the hungry now be fed upon:
Vſe our commiſſion in his utmoſt force.
Baſt. Bell, Booke, and Candle, ſhall not drive me backe,
When gold and ſilver becks me to come on.
I leave your highneſſe: Grandame, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy)
For your faire ſafety: ſo I kiſſe your hand.
Ele. Farewell gentle Coſen.
Iohn. Coz, farewell.
Ele. Come hether little kinſman, harke, a word,
Iohn. Come hether Hubert. O my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much: within this wall of fleſh
There is a ſoule counts thee her Creditor,
And with advantage meanes to pay thy love:
And my good friend, thy voluntary oath
Lives in this boſome, deerely cheriſhed.
Give me thy hand, I had a thing to ſay,
But I will fit it with ſome better tune.
By heaven Hubert, I am almoſt aſham'd
To ſay what good reſpect I have of thee.
Hub. I am much bounden to your Majeſty.
Iohn. Good friend, thou haſt no cauſe to ſay ſo yet,
But thou ſhalt have: and creepe time neere ſo ſlow,
Yet it ſhall come, for me to doe thee good.
I had a thing to ſay, but let it goe:
The Sunne is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleaſures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gawdes.
To give me audience; if the midnight bell
Did with his iron tongue, and brazen mouth
Sound on into the drowzy race of night:
If this ſame were a Church-yard where we ſtand,
And thou poſſeſſed with a thouſand wrongs:
Or if that ſurly ſpirit melancholy
Had bak'd thy bloud, and made it heavy, thicke,
Which elſe runnes tickling up and downe the veines,
Making that idiot laughter keepe mens eyes,
And ſtraine their cheekes to idle merriment,
A paſſion hatefull to my purpoſes:
Or if that thou couldſt ſee me without eyes,
Heare me without thine eares, and make reply
Without a tongue, uſing conceit alone,
Without eyes, eares, and harmefull ſound of words:
Then, in deſpight of brooded watchfull day,
I would into thy boſome poure my thoughts:
But (ah) I will not, yet I love thee well,
And by my troth I thinke thou lov'ſt me well.
Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my Act,
By heaven I would doe it.
Iohn. Doe not I know thou wouldſt?
Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On yon young boy: Ile tell thee what my friend,
He is a very ſerpent in my way,
And whereſoere this foot of mine doth tread,
He lyes before me: doſt thou underſtand me?
Thou art his keeper.
Hub. And ile keepe him ſo,
That he ſhall not offend your Majeſty.
Iohn. Death.
Hub. My Lord.
Iohn. A Grave.
Hub. He ſhall not live.
Iohn. Enough.
I could be merry now, Hubert, I love thee.
Well, Ile not ſay what I intend for thee:
Remember: Madam, fare you well.
Ile ſend thoſe powers o're to your Majeſty.
Ele. My bleſſing goe with thee.
Iohn. For England Coſen, goe.
Hubert ſhall be your man, attend on you
With all true duety: on toward Callice, hoa.
Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter France, Dolphin, Pandulpho, Attendants.

Fra. So by a roaring Tempeſt on the flood,
A whole Armado of convicted ſaile
Is ſcattered and diſioyned from fellowſhip.
Pand. Courage and comfort, all ſhall yet goe well.
Fran. What can goe well, when we have runne ſo ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers loſt?
Arthur tane priſoner? divers deere friends ſlaine?
And bloudy England into England gone,
Ore-bearing interruption ſpight of France?
Dol. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a ſpeed, with ſuch advice diſpoſ'd,
Such temperate order in ſo fierce a cauſe,
Doth want example: who hath read, or heard
Of any kindred-action like to this?
Fran. Well could I beare that England had this praiſe,
So we could finde ſome patterne of our ſhame.
Enter Conſtance.
Looke who comes here? a grave unto a ſoule,
Holding th'eternall ſpirit againſt her will,
In the vilde priſon of afflicted breath:
I prethee Lady goe away with me.
Conſt. Lo, now: now ſee the iſſue of your peace.
Fran. Patience good Lady, comfort gentle Conſtance.
Conſt. No, I defie all counſell, all redreſſe,
But that which ends all counſell, true redreſſe:
Death, death, O amiable, lovely death,
Thou odoriferous ſtench: ſound rottenneſſe,
Ariſe forth from the couch of laſting night,
Thou hate and terror to proſperity,
And I will kiſſe thy deteſtable bones,
And put my eyeballs in thy vaulty browes,
And ring theſe fingers with thy houſhold wormes,
And ſtop this gap of breath with fulſome duſt,
And be a Carrion Monſter like thy ſelfe;
Come, grin on me, and I will thinke thou ſmil'ſt,
And buſſe thee as thy wife: Miſeries love,
O come to me.
Fran. O faire affliction, peace.
Conſt. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:
O that my tongue were in the thunders mouth,
Then with a paſſion I would ſhake the world,
And rowze from ſleepe that fell Anatomy
Which cannot heare a Ladies feeble voyce,
Which ſcornes a moderne invocation.
Pand. Lady, you utter madneſſe, and not ſorrow.
Conſt. Thou art holy to belye me ſo,
I am not mad: this haire I teare is mine,
My name is Conſtance, I was Geffreyes wife,
Yong Arthur is my ſonne, and he is loſt:
I am not mad, I would to heaven I were,
For then 'tis like I ſhould forget my ſelfe:
O, if I could, what griefe ſhould I forget?
Preach ſome Philoſophy to make me mad,
And thou ſhalt be Canoniz'd (Cardinall)
For, being not mad, but ſenſible of greefe,
My reaſonable part produces reaſon
How I may be deliver'd of theſe woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang my ſelfe:
If I were mad, I ſhould forget my ſonne,
Or madly thinke a babe of clowts were he;
I am not mad: too well, too well I feele
The different plague of each calamity.
Fran. Bind up thoſe treſſes: O what love I note
In the faire multitude of thoſe her haires;
Where but by chance a ſilver drop hath falne,
Even to that drop ten thouſand wiery fiends
Doe glew themſelves in ſociable griefe,
Like true, inſeparable, faithfull loves,
Sticking together in calamity.
Conſt. To England, if you will.
Fran. Bind up your haires.
Conſt. Yes that I will: and wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds, and cride aloud,
O, that theſe hands could ſo redeeme my ſonne,
As they have given theſe hayres their liberty:
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will againe commit them to their bonds,
Becauſe my poore child is a priſoner.
And father Cardinall, I have heard you ſay
That we ſhall ſee and know our friends in heaven:
If that be true, I ſhall ſee my boy againe:
For ſince the birth of Caine, the firſt male-child
To him that did but yeſterday ſuſpire,
There was not ſuch a gracious creature borne:
But now will Canker-ſorrow eate my bud,
And chaſe the native beauty from his cheeke,
And he will looke as hollow as a Ghoſt,
As dim and meager as an Agues fit,
And ſo hee'll dye: and riſing ſo againe,
When I ſhall meet him in the Court of heaven
I ſhall not know him: therefore never, never Muſt I behold my pretty Arthur more.
Pand. You hold too heynous a reſpect of greefe.
Conſt. He talkes to me, that never had a ſonne.
Fran. You are as fond of greefe, as of your child.
Conſt. Greefe fils the roome up of my abſent child:
Lyes in his bed, walkes up and downe with me,
Puts on his pretty lookes, repeates his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffes out his vacant garments with his forme;
Then, have I reaſon to be fond of griefe?
Fare you well: had you ſuch a loſſe as I,
I could give better comfort than you doe.
I will not keepe this forme upon my head,
When there is ſuch diſorder in my wit:
O Lord, my boy, my Arthur, my faire ſonne,
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world:
My widow-comfort, and my ſorrowes cure. Exit.
Fran. I feare ſome outrage, and ile follow her. Exit.
Dol. There's nothing in this world can make me joy.
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull eare of a drowſie man;
And bitter ſhame hath ſpoyl'd the ſweet words taſte,
That it yeelds nought but ſhame and bitterneſſe.
Pand. Before the curing of a ſtrong diſeaſe,
Even in the inſtant of repaire and health,
The fit is ſtrongeſt: evils that take leave
On their departure, moſt of all ſhew evill:
What have you loſt by loſing of this day?
Dol. All dayes of glory, joy, and happineſſe.
Pand. If you had won it, certainely you had.
No, no: when Fortune meanes to men moſt good,
Shee lookes upon them with a threatning eye:
'Tis ſtrange to thinke how much King Iohn hath loſt
In this which he accounts ſo clearely wonne:

Are not you griev'd that Arthur is his priſoner?
Dol. As heartily as he is glad he hath him.
Pand. Your mind is all as youthfull as your blood.
Now heare me ſpeake with a propheticke ſpirit:
For even the breath of what I meane to ſpeake,
Shall blow each duſt, each ſtraw, each little rub
Out of the path which ſhall directly leade
Thy foote to Englands Throne. And therefore marke:
Iohn hath ſeiz'd Arthur, and it cannot be,
That whiles warme life playes in that infants veines,
The miſ-plac'd-Iohn ſhould entertaine an houre,
One minute, nay one quiet breath of reſt.
A Scepter ſnatch'd with an unruly hand,
Muſt be as boyſterouſly maintain'd as gain'd.
And he that ſtands upon a ſlipp'ry place,
Makes nice of no vilde hold to ſtay him up:
That Iohn may ſtand, then Arthur needs muſt fall,
So be it, for it cannot be but ſo.
Dol. But what ſhall I gaine by yong Arthurs fall?
Pand. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claime that Arthur did.
Dol. And loſe it, life and all, as Arthur did.
Pand. How greene you are, and freſh in this old world?
Iohn layes you plots: the times conſpire with you,
For he that ſteepes his ſafety in true blood,
Shall find but bloody ſafety, and untrue.
This Act ſo evilly borne ſhall coole the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeale,
That none ſo ſmall advantage ſhall ſtep forth
To checke his reigne, but they will cheriſh it.
No naturall exhalation in the skie,
No ſcope of Nature, no diſtemper'd day,
No common wind, no cuſtomed event,
But they will plucke away his naturall cauſe,
And call them Meteors, prodigies, and ſignes,
Abbortives, preſages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainely denouncing vengeance upon Iohn.
Dol. May be he will not touch yong Arthurs life,
But hold himſelfe ſafe in his priſonment.
Pand. O Sir, when he ſhall heare of your approach,
If that yong Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that newes he dies: and then the hearts
Of all his people ſhall revolt from him,
And kiſſe the lippes of unacquainted change,
And picke ſtrong matter of revolt, and wrath
Out of the bloody fingers ends of Iohn.
Me thinkes I ſee this hurley all on foot;
And O, what better matter breeds for you,
Than I have nam'd. The baſtard Falconbridge
Is now in England ranſacking the Church,
Offending Charity: If but a dozen French
Were there in Armes, they would be as a Call
To traine ten thouſand Engliſh to their ſide;
Or, as a little ſnow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a Mountaine. O noble Dolphine,
Go with me to the King, 'tis wonderfull,
What may be wrought out of their diſcontent,
Now that their ſoules are topfull of offence,
For England go; I will whet on the King.
Dol. Strong reaſons makes ſtrong actions: let us go,
If you ſay I, the King will not ſay no. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Hubert and Executioners.

Hub. Heate me theſe Irons hot, and looke thou ſtand
Within the Arras: when I ſtrike my foot
Vpon the boſome of the ground, ruſh forth
And binde the boy, which you ſhall finde with me
Faſt to the chaire: be heedfull: hence and watch.
Exec. I hope your warrant will beare out the deed.
Hub. Vncleanly ſcruples feare not you: looke too't.
Yong Lad come forth; I have to ſay with you.

Enter Arthur.

Ar Good morrow Hubert.
Hub. Good morrow little Prince.
Ar. As little Prince, having ſo great a Title
To be more Prince, as may be: you are ſad.
Hub. Indeed I have beene merrier.
Art. 'Mercie on me:
Me thinkes no body ſhould be ſad but I:
Yet I remember, when I was in Fance,
Yong Gentlemen would be as ſad as night
Onely for wantonneſſe: by my Chriſtendome,
So I were out of priſon, and kept Sheepe
I ſhould be as as merrie as the day is long:
And ſo I would be heere, but that I doubt
My Vnckle practiſes more harme to me:
He is affraid of me, and I of him:
Is it my fault, that I was Geffreyes ſonne?
No indeed it's not: and I would to heaven
I were your ſonne, ſo you would love me, Hubert:
Hub. If I talke to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercie, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be ſodaine, and diſpatch.
Ar. Are you ſicke Hubert? you looke pale to day,
Inſooth I would you were a little ſicke.
That I might ſit all night, and watch with you.
I warrant I love you more than you do me.
Hub. His words do take poſſeſſion of my boſome.
Reade here yong Arthur. How now fooliſh rheume?
Turning diſpitious torture out of doore?
I muſt be breefe, leaſt reſolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womaniſh teares.
Can you not reade it? Is it not faire writ?
Ar. Too fairely Hubert, for ſo foule effect,
Muſt you with hot Irons, burne out both mine eyes?
Hub. Yong Boy, I muſt.
Art. And will you?
Hub. And I will.
Art. Have you the heart? When your head did but ake,
I knit my hand-kercher about your browes
(The beſt I had, a Princeſſe wrought it me)
And I did never aske it you againe:
And with my hand, at midnight held your head;
And like the watchfull minutes, to the houre,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;
Saying, what lacke you? and where lies your greefe?
Or what good love may I performe for you?
Many a poore mans ſonne would haue lyen ſtill,
And ne're have ſpoke a loving word to you:
But you, at your ſicke ſervice had a Prince:
Nay, you may thinke my love was craftie love,
And call it cunning. Do, and if you will,

If heaven be pleaſ'd that you muſt uſe me ill,
Why then you muſt. Will you put out mine eyes?
Theſe eyes, that never did, nor never ſhall
So much as frowne on you.
Hub. I have ſworne to doe it:
And with hot Irons muſt I burne them out.
Ar. Ah, none but in this Iron Age, would doe it:
The Iron of it ſelfe, though heate red hot,
Approaching neere theſe eyes, would drinke my teares,
And quench this fiery indignation,
Even in the matter of mine innocence:
Nay, after that, conſume away in ruſt,
But for containing fire to harme mine eye:
Are you more ſtubborne hard, than hammer'd Iron?
And if an Angell ſhould have come to me,
And told me Hubert ſhould put out mine eyes,
I would not have beleev'd him: no tongue but Huberts.
Hub. Come forth: Doe as I bid you doe.
Ar. O ſave me Hubert, ſave me: my eyes are out
Even with the fierce lookes of theſe bloody men.
Hub. Give me the Iron I ſay, and bind him heere.
Art. Alas, what need you be ſo boiſtrous rough?
I will not ſtruggle, I will ſtand ſtone ſtill:
For heaven ſake Hubert let me not be bound:
Nay heare me Hubert, drive theſe men away,
And I will ſit as quiet as a Lamb.
I will not ſtirre, nor wince, nor ſpeake a word,
Nor looke upon the Iron angerly:
Thruſt but theſe men away, and Ile forgive you,
What ever torment you doe put me too.
Hub. Goe ſtand within: let me alone with him.
Exec. I am beſt pleaſ'd to be from ſuch a deed.
Art. Alas, I then have chid away my friend,
He hath a ſterne looke, but a gentle heart:
Let him come backe, that his compaſſion may
Give life to yours.
Hub. Come (Boy) prepare your ſelfe.
Art. Is there no remedy?
Hub. None, but to loſe your eyes.
Art. O heaven: that there were but a moth in yours,
A graine, a duſt, a gnat, a wandering haire,
Any annoyance in that precious ſenſe:
Then feeling what ſmall things are boyſterous there
Your vilde intent muſt needs ſeeme horrible.
Hub. Is this your promiſe? Go too, hold your tongue.
Art. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues,
Muſt needs want pleading for a paire of eyes:
Let me not hold my tongue: let me not Hubert,
Or Hubert, if you will cut out my tongue,
So I may keepe mine eyes. O ſpare mine eyes,
Though to no uſe, but ſtill to looke on you.
Loe, by my troth, the inſtrument is cold,
And would not harme me.
Hub. I can heate it, boy.
Art. No, in good ſooth: the fire is dead with griefe,
Being create for comfort, to be uſ'd
In undeſerved extreames: See elſe your ſelfe,
There is no malice in this burning cole,
The breath of heaven, hath blowne his ſpirit out,
And ſtrew'd repentant aſhes on his head.
Hub. But with my breath I can reviue it Boy.
Art. And if you doe, you will but make it bluſh,
And glow with ſhame of your proceedings, Hubert:
Nay, it perchance will ſparkle in your eyes:
And, like a dogge that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his Maſter that doth tarre him on.
All things that you ſhould uſe to doe me wrong
Deny their office: onely you doe lacke
That mercy, which fierce fire, and Iron extends,
Creatures of note for mercy, lacking uſes.
Hub. Well, ſee to live: I will not touch thine eye,
For all the Treaſure that thine Vnckle owes,
Yet am I ſworne, and I did purpoſe, Boy,
With this ſame very Iron, to burne them out.
Art. O now you looke like Hubert. All this while
You were diſguiſ'd.
Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu,
Your Vnckle muſt not know but you are dead.
Ile fill theſe dogged Spies with falſe reports:
And, pretty child, ſleepe doubtleſſe, and ſecure,
That Hubert for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.
Art. O heaven! I thanke you Hubert.
Hub. Silence, no more: goe cloſely in with me.
Much danger doe I undergoe for thee. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Iohn, Pembroke, Saliſbury, and other lords.
Iohn. Heere once againe we ſit: once againſt crown'd
And look'd upon, I hope, with chearefull eyes.
Pem. This once againe (but that your highneſſe pleaſ'd)
Was once ſuperfluous: you were Crown'd before,
And that high Royalty was ne're pluck'd off:
The faiths of men, ne're ſtained with revolt:
Freſh expectation troubled not the Land
With any long'd-for-change, or better State.
Sal. Therefore, to be poſſeſt with double pompe,
To guard a Title, that was rich before;
To gild refined gold, to paint the Lilly;
To throw a perfume on the Violet,
To ſmooth the yce, or adde another hew
Vnto the Raine-bow; or with Taper-light
To ſeeke the beauteous eye of heaven to garniſh,
Is waſtefull, and ridiculous exceſſe.
Pem. But that your Royall pleaſure muſt be done,
This acte is as an ancient tale new told,
And, in the laſt repeating, troubleſome,
Being urged at a time unſeaſonable.
Sal. In this the Anticke, and well noted face
Of plaine old forme, is much diſfigured,
And like a ſhifted winde unto a ſaile,
It makes the courſe of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles, and frights conſideration:
Makes ſound opinion ſicke, and truth ſuſpected,
For putting on ſo new a faſhion'd robe.
Pem. When workemen ſtrive to doe better than wel,
They doe confound their ſkill in covetouſneſſe,
And oftentimes excuſing gf a fault,
Doth make the fault the worſe by th'excuſe:
As patches ſet upon a little breach,
Diſcredite more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was ſo patch'd,
Sal. To this effect, before you were new crown'd
We breath'd our Councell: but it pleaſ'd your highneſſe
To over-beare it, and we are all well pleaſ'd,
Since all, and every part of what we would
Doth make a ſtand, at what your highneſſe will.

Ioh. Some reaſons of this double Coronation
I have poſſeſt you with, and thinke them ſtrong.
And more, more ſtrong, then leſſe is my feare
I ſhall indue you with: Meane time, but aske
What you would have reform'd, that is not well,
And well ſhall you perceive, how willingly
I will both heare, and grant you your requeſts.
Pem. Then I, as one that am the tongue of theſe
To ſound the purpoſes of all their hearts,
Both for my ſelfe, and them: but chiefe of all
Your ſafety: for the which, my ſelfe and them
Bend their beſt ſtudies, heartily requeſt
Th'infranchiſement of Arthur, whoſe reſtraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of diſcontent
To breake into this dangerous argument.
If what in reſt you have, in right you hold,
Why then your feares, which (as they ſay) attend
The ſteppes of wrong, ſhould move you to mew up
Your tender kinſman, and to choake his dayes
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exerciſe,
That the times enemies may not have this
To grace occaſions: let it be our ſuite,
That you have bid us aske his liberty,
Which for our goods, we doe no further aske,
Than, whereupon our weale on you depending,
Counts it your weale: he have his liberty.
Enter Hubert.
Iohn. Let it be ſo: I doe commit his youth
To your direction: Hubert, what newes with you?
Pem. This is the man ſhould doe the bloody deed:
He ſhew'd his warrant to a friend of mine,
The image of a wicked heynous fault
Lives in his eye: that cloſe aſpect of his,
Doe ſhew the mood of a much troubled breaſt,
And I doe fearefully beleeve 'tis done,
What we ſo fear'd he had a charge to doe.
Sal. The colour of the King doth come, and goe,
Betweene his purpoſe and his conſcience,
Like Heralds 'twixt two dreadfull battailes ſet:
His paſſion is ſo ripe, it needs muſt breake.
Pem. And when it breakes, I feare will iſſue thence
The foule corruption of a ſweet childs death.
Iohn. We cannot hold mortalities ſtrong hand.
Good lords, although my will to give, is living,
The ſuite which you demand is gone, and dead.
He tels us Arthur is deceaſ'd to night.
Sal. Indeed we fear'd his ſickneſſe was paſt cure.
Pem. Indeed we heard how neere his death he was,
Before the child himſelfe felt he was ſicke;
This muſt be anſwer'd either heere, or hence.
Iohn. Why doe you bend ſuch ſolemne browes on me?
Thinke you I beare the Sheeres of deſtiny?
Have I commandement on the pulſe of life?
Sal. It is apparant foule-play, and 'tis ſhame
That greatneſſe ſhould ſo groſſely offer it;
So thrive it in your game, and ſo farewell.
Pem. Stay yet (lord Salisbury) Ile goe with thee,
And find th'inheritance of this poore child,
His little kingdome of a forced grave.
That blood which ow'd the bredth of all this Ile,
Three foot of it doth hold; bad world the while:
This muſt not be thus borne, this will breake out
To all our ſorrowes, and ere long I doubt. Exeunt.
Iohn. They burne in indignation: I repent: Enter Meſ.
There is no ſure foundation ſet on blood:
No certaine life atchiev'd by others death:
A fearefull eye thou haſt. Where is that blood,
That I have ſeene inhabite in thoſe cheekes?
So foule a skie, cleeres not without a ſtorme,
Poure downe thy weather: how goes all in France?
Meſ. From France to England, never ſuch a powre
For any forraigne preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land.
The Copy of your ſpeed is learn'd by them:
For when you ſhould be told they doe prepare,
The tydings comes, that they are all arriv'd.
Ioh. Oh where hath our intelligence beene drunke?
Where hath it ſlept? Where is my Mothers care?
That ſuch an Army could be drawen in France,
And ſhe not heare of it?
Meſ. My Leige, her eare
Is ſtopt with duſt: the firſt of Apill di'de
Your noble mother; and as I heare, my lord,
The Lady Conſtance in a frenize di'de
Three dayes before: but this from Rumors tongue
I idely heard: if true, or falſe I know not.
Iohn. Withhold thy ſpeed, dreadfull occaſion:
O make a league with me, 'till I have pleaſ'd
My diſcontented Peeres. What? Mother dead?
How wildely then walkes my Eſtate in France?
Vnder whoſe conduct came thoſe powers of France,
That thou for truth giv'ſt out are landed heere?
Meſ. Vnder the Dolphin.
Enter Baſtard, and Peter of Pomfret.
Iohn. Thou haſt made me giddy
With theſe ill tydings: Now? What ſayes the world
To your proceedings? Doe not ſeeke to ſtuffe
My head with more ill newes: for it is full.
Baſt. But if you be afeard to heare the worſt,
Then let the worſt unheard, fall on your head.
Iohn. Beare with me Coſen, for I was amaz'd
Vnder the tide; but now I breath againe
Aloft the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue; ſpeake it of what it will.
Baſt. How I have ſped among the Clergy men,
The ſummes I have collected ſhall expreſſe:
But as I travail'd hither through the land,
I find the people ſtrangely fantaſied,
Poſſeſt with rumors, full of idle dreames,
Not knowing what they feare, but full of feare.
And here's a Prophet that I brought with me
From forth the ſtreets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heeles:
To whom he ſung in rude harſh ſounding rimes,
That ere the next Aſcenſion day at noone,
Your highneſſe ſhould deliver up your Crowne.
Ioh. Thou idle Dreamer, wherefore didſt thou ſo?
Pet. Fore-knowing that the truth will fall out ſo.
Ioh. Hubert, away with him: impriſon him,
And on that day at noone, whereon he ſayes
I ſhall yeeld up my Crowne, let him be hang'd.
Deliver him to ſafety, and returne,
For I muſt uſe thee. O my gentle Coſen,
Hear'ſt thou the newes abroad, who are arriv'd?
Baſt. The French (my lord) mens mouths are ful of it:
Beſides I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury
With eyes as red as new enkindled fire,
And others more, going to ſeeke the grave
Of Arthur, whom they ſay is kill'd to night, on your (ſuggeſtion.
Iohn. Gentle kinſman, goe
And thruſt thy ſelfe into their Companies,

I have a way to winne their loves againe:
Bring them before me.
Baſt. I will ſeeke them out.
Iohn. Nay, but make haſte: the better foot before.
O, let me have no ſubjects enemies,
When adverſe Forreyners affright my Townes
With dreadfull pompe of ſtout invaſion.
Be Mercury, ſet feathers to thy heeles,
And flye (like thought) from them, to me againe.
Baſt. The ſpirit of the time ſhall teach me ſpeed. Exit.
Iohn. Spoke like a ſprightfull Noble Gentleman.
Goe after him: for he perhaps ſhall need
Some Meſſenger betwixt me, and the Peeres,
And be thou he.
Meſ. With all my heart, my Liege.
Iohn. My mother dead?

Enter Hubert.

Hub. My lord, they ſay five Moones were ſeene to (night:
Foure fixed, and the fift did whirle about
The other foure, in wondrous motion.
Iohn. Five Moones?
Hub. Old men, and Beldames, in the ſtreets
Doe propheſie upon it dangerouſly:
Yong Arthurs death is common in their mouths,
And when they talke of him, they ſhake their heads,
And whiſper one another in the eare.
And he that ſpeakes, doth gripe the hearers wriſt,
Whilſt he that heares, makes fearefull action
With wrinkled browes, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I ſaw a Smith ſtand with his hammer (thus)
The whilſt his Iron did on the Anvile coole,
With open mouth ſwallowing a Taylors newes,
Who with his Sheeres, and Meaſure in his hand,
Standing on ſlippers, which his nimble haſte
Had falſely thruſt upon contrary feete,
Told of a many thouſand warlike French,
That were embattailed, and rank'd in Kent.
Another leane, unwaſh'd Artificer,
Cuts off his tale, and talkes of Arthurs death.
Ioh. Why ſeek'ſt thou to poſſeſſe me with theſe feares?
Why urgeſt thou ſo oft yong Arthurs death?
Thy hand hath murdred him: I had a mighty cauſe
To wiſh him dead, but thou hadſt none to kill him.
H. No had (my lord?) why, did you not provoke me?
Iohn. It is the curſe of Kings, to be attended
By ſlaves, that take their humors for a warrant,
To breake the bloody houſe of life,
And on the winking of Authority
To underſtand a Law; to know the meaning
Of dangerous Majeſty, when perchance it frownes
More upon humor, than adviſ'd reſpect.
Hub. Heere is your hand and Seale for what I did.
Ioh. Oh, when the laſt accompt twixt heaven and earth
Is to be made, then ſhall this hand and Seale
Witneſſe againſt us to damnation.
How oft the ſight of meanes to doe ill deeds,
Make deeds ill done? Had'ſt not thou beene by,
A fellow by the hand of Nature mark'd,
Quoted, and ſign'd to doe a deed of ſhame,
This murther had not come into my mind.
But taking note of thy abhorr'd Aſpect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villany:
Apt, liable to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthurs death:
And thou, to be endeered to a King,
Made it no conſcience to deſtroy a Prince.
Hub. My lord.
Ioh. Had'ſt thou but ſhooke thy head, or made a pauſe
When I ſpake darkely, what I purpoſed:
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face;
As bid me tell my tale in expreſſe words:
Deepe ſhame had ſtruck me dumbe, made me breake off,
And thoſe thy feares, might have wrought feares in me.
But, thou didſt underſtand me by my ſignes,
And didſt in ſignes againe parley with ſinne,
Yea, without ſtop, didſt let thy heart conſent,
And conſequently, thy rude hand to acte
The deed, which both our tongues held vild to name
Out of my ſight, and never ſee me more:
My Nobles leave me, and my State is braved,
Even at my gates, with rankes of forraigne powres;
Nay, in the body of this fleſhly Land,
This kingdome, this Confine of blood, and breathe
Hoſtility, and civill tumult reignes
Betweene my conſcience, and my Coſins death.
Hub. Arme you againſt your other enemies:
Ile make a peace betweene your ſoule, and you.
Yong Arthur is alive: This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden, and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the Crimſon ſpots of blood:
Within this boſome, never entred yet
The dreadfull motion of a murderous thought,
And you have ſlander'd Nature in my forme,
Which howſoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fayrer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child.
Iohn. Doth Arthur live? O haſt thee to the Peeres,
Throw this report on their incenſed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience.
Forgive the Comment that my paſſion made
Vpon thy feature, for my rage was blind,
And foule immaginary eyes of blood
Preſented thee more hideous than thou art.
Oh, anſwer not; but to my Cloſſet bring
The angry Lords, with all expedient haſt,
I conjure thee but ſlowly: run more faſt. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Arthur on the walles.

Art. The wall is high, and yet will I leape downe.
Good ground be pitifull, and hurt me not:
There's few or none doe know me, if they did,
This Ship-boyes ſemblance hath diſguiſ'd me quite.
I am afraide, and yet Ile venture it.
If I get downe, and doe not breake my limbes,
Ile find a thouſand ſhifts to get away;
As good to dye, and goe; as dye, and ſtay.
Oh me, my Vnckles ſpirit is in theſe ſtones,
Heaven take my ſoule, and England keepe my bones. Dies

Enter Pembrooke, and Saliſbury, and Bigot.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmondsbury,
It is our ſafety, and we muſt embrace
This gentle offer of the perillous time.
Pem. Who brought that Letter from the Cardinall?
Sal. The Count Melloone, a Noble lord of France,
Whoſe private with me of the Dolphines love,
Is much more generall, than theſe lines import.

Big. To morrow morning let us meete him then.
Sal. Or rather then ſet forward, for'twill be
Two long dayes journey (lords) or ere we meete.
Enter Baſtard.
Baſt. Once more to day well met, diſtemper'd lords,
The King by me requeſts your preſence ſtraight.
Sal. The King hath diſpoſſeſt himſelfe of us,
We will n ot lyne his thin-beſtained clake
With our pure Honors: nor attend the foote
That leaves the print of blood where ere it walkes.
Returne, and tell him ſo: we know the worſt. (beſt.
Baſt. What ere you thinke, good words I thinke were
Sal. Our greifes, and not our manners reaſon now.
Baſt. But there is little reaſon in your griefe.
Therfore 'twere reaſon you had manners now.
Pem. Sir, ſir, impatience hath his priviledge.
Baſt. 'Tis true, to hurt his maſter, no man elſe.
Sal. This is the priſon: What is he lyes heere?
P. Oh death made proud with pure and princely beuty,
The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.
Sal. Murther, as hating what himſelfe hath done,
Doth lay it open to urge on revenge.
Big. Or when he doom'd this beauty to a grave,
Found it too precious Princely, for a grave.
Sal. Sir Richard, what thinke you? you have beheld,
Or have you read, or heard, or could you thinke?
Or doe you almoſt thinke, although you ſee,
That you doe ſee? could thought, without this object
Forme ſuch another? this is the very top,
The heighth, the Creſt: or Creſt unto the Creſt
Of murthers Armes: this is the bloodieſt ſhame,
The wildeſt Savagery, the vildeſt ſtroke
That ever wall-ey'd wrath, or ſtaring rage
Preſented to the teares of ſoft remorſe.
Pem. All murthers paſt, doe ſtand excuſ'd in this:
And this ſo ſole, and ſo unmatcheable,
Shall give a holineſſe, a purity,
To the yet unbegotten ſinne of times;
And prove a deadly blood-ſhed, but a jeſt,
Exampled by this heynous ſpectacle.
Baſt. It is a damned, and a bloody worke,
The graceleſſe action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the worke of any hand.
Sal. If that it be the worke of any hand?
We had a kind of light, what would enſue:
It is the ſhamefull worke of Huberts hand,
The practice, and the purpoſe of the King:
From whoſe obedience I forbid my ſoule,
Kneeling before this ruine of ſweet life,
And breathing to his breathleſſe excellence
The incenſe of a Vow, a holy Vow:
Never to taſte the pleaſures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight,
Nor converſant with Eaſe, and idleneſſe,
Till I have ſet a glory to this hand,
By giving it the worſhip of Revenge.
Pem.Big. Our ſoules religiouſly confirme thy words.
Enter Hubert
Hub. Lords, I am hot with haſte, in ſeeking you,
Arthur doth live, the King hath ſent for you.
Sal. Oh he is bold, and bluſhes not at death:
Avant thou hatefull villaine, get thee gone.
Hub. I am no villaine.
Sal. Muſt I rob the Law.
Baſt. Your ſword is bright ſir, put it up againe.
Sal. Not till I ſheath it in a murtherers skin.
Hub. Stand backe lord Salſbury, ſtand backe I ſay
By heaven, I thinke my ſword's as ſharpe as yours.
I would not have you (lord) forget your ſelfe,
Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;
Leaſt I by marking of your rage, forget
Your Worth, your Greatneſſe, and Nobility.
Big. Out dunghill: dar'ſt thou brave a Nobleman?
Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life againſt an Emperor.
Sal. Thou art a Murtherer.
Hub. Doe not prove me ſo:
Yet I am none. Whoſe tongue ſo ere ſpeakes falſe,
Not truly ſpeakes: who ſpeakes not truly, Lies.
Pem. Cut him to peeces.
Baſt. Keepe the peace, I ſay.
Sal. Stand by, or I ſhall gaul you Faulconbridge.
Baſt. Thou wer't better gaul the divel, Salsbury.
If thou but frowne on me, or ſtirre thy foote,
Or teach thy haſty ſpleene to doe me ſhame,
Ile ſtrike thee dead. Put up thy ſword betime,
Or Ile ſo maule you, and your toſting-Iron,
That you ſhall thinke the divel is come from hell.
Big. What wilt thou doe, renowned Faulconbridge?
Second a Villaine, and a Murtherer?
Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.
Big. Who kill'd this Prince?
Hub. 'Tis not an houre ſince I left him well:
I honour'd him, I lov'd him, and will weepe
My date of life out, for his ſweet lives loſſe.
Sal. Truſt not thoſe cunning waters of his eyes,
For villanie is not without ſuch rheume,
And he, long traded in it, makes it ſeeme
Like Rivers of remorſe and innocency.
Away with me, all you whoſe ſoules abhorre
Th'uncleanely ſavour of a ſlaughter-houſe,
For I am ſtifled with this ſmell of ſinne.
Big. Away, toward Bury, to the Dolphin there.
P. There tell the King, he may inquire us out. Ex. Lords.
Ba. Here's a good world: knew you of this faire worke?
Beyond the infinite and boundleſſe reach of mercy,
(If thou didſt this deed of death) art thou damn'd Hubert.
Hub. Doe but heare me ſir.
Baſt. Ha? Ile tell thee what,
Thou'rt damn'd as blacke, nay nothing is ſo blacke,
Thou art more deepe damn'd than Prince Lucifer.
There is not yet ſo ugly a fiend of hell
As thou ſhalt be, if thou didſt kill this child.
Hub. Vpon my ſoule.
Baſt. If thou didſt but conſent
To this moſt cruell Act: doe but deſpaire,
And if thou want'ſt a Cord, the ſmalleſt thred
That ever Spider twiſted from her wombe
Will ſerve to ſtrangle thee: A ruſh will be a beame
To hang thee on. Or wouldſt thou drowne thy ſelfe,
Put but a little water in a ſpoone,
And it ſhall be as all the Ocean,
Enough to ſtifle ſuch a villaine up.
I doe ſuſpect thee very greivouſly.
Hub. If I in act, conſent, or ſinne of thought,
Be guilty of the ſtealing that ſweet breath
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay,
Let hell want paines enough to torture me:
I left him well.
Baſt. Goe, beare him in thine armes:
I am amaz'd me thinkes, and looſe my way
Among the thornes, and dangers of this world.

How eaſie doſt thou take all England up,
From forth this morcell of dead Royalty?
The life, the right, and truth of all this Realme
Is fled to heaven: and England now is left
To tug and ſcamble, and to part by th'teeth
The unowed intereſt of proud ſwelling State:
Now for the bare-pickt bone of Majeſty,
Doth dogged warre briſtle his angry creſt,
And ſnarleth in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now Powers from home, and diſcontents at home
Meet in one line: and vaſt confuſion waites
As doth a Raven on a ſicke-falne beaſt,
The imminent decay of wreſted pompe.
Now happy he, whoſe cloake and center can
Hold out this tempeſt. Beare away that child,
And follow me with ſpeed; Ile to the King:
A thouſand buſineſſes are briefe in hand,
And heaven it ſelfe doth frowne upon the Land. Exit.

Actus Quartus, Scæna Prima.

Enter King Iohn, and Pandulph, attendants.

K. Iohn. Thus have I yeelded up into your hand
The Circle of my glory.
Pand. Take againe
From this my hand, as holding of the Pope
Your Soveraigne greatneſſe and authority.
Iohn. Now keepe your holy word, goe meet the French,
And from his holineſſe uſe all your power
To ſtop their marches 'fore we are enflam'd:
Our diſcontented Counties doe revolt:
Our people quarrell with obedience,
Swearing Allegiance, and the love of ſoule
To ſtranger-bloud, to forren Royalty;
This inundation of miſtempred humor,
Reſts by you onely to be qualified.
Then pauſe not; for the preſent time's ſo ſicke,
That preſent medcine muſt be miniſtred,
Or overthrow incureable enſues.
Pand. It was my breath that blew this Tempeſt up,
Vpon your ſtubborne uſage of the Pope:
But ſince you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue ſhall huſh againe this ſtorme of warre,
And make faire weather in your bluſtring land:
On this Aſcention day, remember well,
Vpon your oath of ſervice to the Pope,
Goe I to make the French lay downe their Armes. Exit.
Iohn. Is this Aſcenſion day? did not the Prophet
Say, that before Aſcenſion day at noone,
My Crowne I ſhould give off? even ſo I have:
I did ſuppoſe it ſhould be on conſtraint,
But (heav'n be thank'd) it is but voluntary.

Enter Baſtard.

Baſt. All Kent hath yeelded: nothing there holds out
But Dover Caſtle: London hath receiv'd
Like a kind Hoſt, the Dolphin and his powers.
Your Nobles will not heare you, but are gone
To offer ſervice to your enemy:
And wilde amazement hurries up and downe
The little number of doubtfull friends.
Iohn. Would not my lords returne to me againe
After they heard yong Arthur was alive?
Baſt. They found him dead, and caſt into the ſtreets,
An empty Casket, where the Iewell of life
By ſome damn'd hand was rob'd, and tane away.
Iohn. That villaine Hubert told me he did live.
Baſt. So on my ſoule he did, for ought he knew:
But wherefore doe you droope? why looke you ſad?
Be great in act, as you have beene in thought:
Let not the world ſee feare and ſad diſtruſt
Governe the motion of a kinglye eye:
Be ſtirring as the time, be fire with fire,
Threaten the threatner, and out-face the brow
Of bragging horror: So ſhall inferior eyes
That borrow their behaviours from the great,
Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntleſſe ſpirit of reſolution.
Away, and gliſter like the god of warre
When he intendeth to become the field:
Shew boldneſſe and aſpiring confidence:
What, ſhall they ſeeke the Lyon in his denne,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
Oh let it not be ſaid: forrage, and runne
To meet diſpleaſure farther from the doores,
And grapple with him ere he come ſo nye.
Iohn. The Legat of the Pope hath beene with mee,
And I have made a happy peace with him,
And he hath promiſ'd to diſmiſſe the Powers
Led by the Dolphin.
Baſt. Oh inglorious league:
Shall we upon the footing of our land,
Send faire-play-orders, and make comprimiſe,
Inſinuation, parley, and baſe truce
To Armes Invaſive? Shall a beardleſſe boy,
A cockred-ſilken wanton brave our fields,
And fleſh his ſpirit in a warre-like ſoyle,
Mocking the ayre with colours idlely ſpred,
And find no checke? Let us my Leige to Armes:
Perchance the Cardinall cannot make your peace;
Or if he doe, let it at leaſt be ſaid
They ſaw we had a purpoſe of defence.
Iohn. Have thou the ordering of this preſent time.
Baſt. Away then with good courage: yet I know
Our Party may well meet a prowder foe. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter (in Armes) Dolphin, Salisbury, Mel'oone, Pembroke, Bigot, Souldiers.

Dol. My lord Melloone, let this be coppied out,
And keepe it ſafe for our remembrance:
Returne the preſident to theſe lords againe,
That having our faire order written downe,
Both they and we, peruſing ore theſe notes
May know wherefore we tooke the Sacrament,
And keep our faithes firme and inviolable.
Sal. Vpon our ſides it never ſhall be broken.
And Noble Dolphin, albeit we ſweare
A voluntary zeale, and an un-urg'd faith
To your proceedings: yet beleeve me Prince,
I am not glad that ſuch a ſore of time
Should ſeeke a plaſter by contemn'd revolt,
And heale the inveterate Canker of one wound,

By making many: Oh it grieves my ſoule,
That I muſt draw this mettle from my ſide
To be a widdow-maker: oh, and there
Where honourable reſcue, and defence
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury.
But ſuch is the infection of the time,
That for the health and Phyſicke of our right,
We cannot deale but with the very hand
Of ſterne injuſtice, and confuſed wrong:
And is't not pitty, (oh my grieved friends)
That we, the ſonnes and children of this Iſle,
Were borne to ſee ſo ſad an houre as this,
Wherein we ſtep after a ſtranger, march
Vpon her gentle boſome, and fill up
Her enemies rankes? I muſt withdraw, and weepe
Vpon the ſpot of this inforced cauſe,
To grace the Gentry of a Land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours heere:
What heere? O Nation that thou couldſt remove,
That Neptunes Armes who clippeth thee about,
Would beare thee from the knowledge of thy ſelfe,
And cripple thee unto a Pagan ſhore,
Where theſe two Chriſtian Armies might combine
The bloud of malice, in a veine of league,
And not to ſpend it ſo un-neighbourly.
Dolph. A noble temper doſt thou ſhew in this,
And great affections wraſtling in thy boſome
Doth make an earth-quake of Nobility:
Oh, what a noble combate haſt fought
Betweene compulſion, and a brave reſpect:
Let me wipe off this honourable dewe,
That ſilverly doth progreſſe on thy cheekes:
My heart hath melted at a Ladies teares,
Being an ordinary Inundation:
But this effuſion of ſuch manly drops,
This ſhowre, blowne up by tempeſt of the ſoule,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I ſeene the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite ore with burning Meteors.
Lift up thy brow (renowned Salisbury)
And with a great heart heave away this ſtorme:
Commend theſe warres to thoſe baby-eyes
That never ſaw the giant-world enrag'd,
Nor met with Fortune, other than at feaſts,
Full warme of blood, of mirth, of goſſipping:
Come, come; for thou ſhalt thruſt thy hand as deepe
Into the purſe of rich proſperity
As Lewis himſelfe: ſo (Nobles) ſhall you all,
That knit your ſinewes to the ſtrength of mine.

Enter Pandulpho.

And even there, methinkes an Angel ſpake,
Looke where the holy Legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heaven,
And on our actions ſet the name of right
With holy breath.
Pand. Haile noble Prince of France:
The next is this: King Iohn hath reconcil'd
Himſelfe to Rome, his ſpirit is come in,
That ſo ſtood out againſt the holy Church,
The great Metropolis and Sea of Rome:
Therefore thy threatning colours now wind up,
And tame the ſavage ſpirit of wilde warre,
That like a Lyon foſtered up at hand,
It may lye gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmefull than in ſhew.
Dolph. Your grace ſhall pardon me, I will not backe:
I am too high-borne to be propertied
To be a ſecnodary at controull,
Or uſefull ſerving-man, and inſtrument
To any Soveraigne State throughout the world.
Your breath firſt kindled the dead coale of warres,
Betweene this chaſtiz'd kingdome and my ſelfe,
And brought in matter that ſhould feed this fire;
And now 'tis farre too huge to be blowne out
With that ſame weake wind, which enkindled it:
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with intereſt to this land,
Yea, thruſt this enterprize into my heart,
And come ye now to tell me Iohn hath made
His peace with Rome? what is that peace to me?
I (by the honor of my marriage bed)
After yong Arthur, claime this land for mine,
And now it is halfe conquer'd, muſt I backe,
Becauſe that Iohn hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Romes ſlave? what penny hath Rome borne?
What men provided? what munition ſent
To under-prop this Action? Is't not I
That under-goe this charge? who elſe but I,
And ſuch as to my claime are liable,
Sweat in this buſineſſe, and maintaine this warre?
Have I not heard theſe Iſlanders ſhout out
Vive le Roy, as I have bank'd their Townes?
Have I not heere the beſt Cards for the game
To winne this eaſie match, plaid for a Crowne?
And ſhall I now give ore the yeelded Set?
No, no, on my ſoule it never ſhall be ſaid.
Pand. You looke but on the out-ſide of this worke.
Dolph. Out-ſide or in-ſide, I will not returne
Till my attempt ſo much be glorified,
As to my ample hope was promiſed,
Before I drew this gallant head of warre,
And cull'd theſe fiery ſpirits from the world
To out-looke Conqueſt, and to winne renowne
Even in the jawes of danger, and of death:
What luſty Trumpet thus doth ſummon us?

Enter Baſtard.

Baſt. According to the faire-play of the world,
Let me have audience: I am ſent to ſpeake:
My holy lord of Millane, from the King
I come to learne how you have dealt for him:
And, as you anſwer, I doe know the ſcope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.
Pand. The Dolphin is too wilfull oppoſite
And will not temporize with my intreaties:
He flately ſayes, hee'll not lay downe his Armes.
Baſt. By all the bloud that ever fury breath'd,
The youth ſayes well. Now heare our Engliſh King,
For thus his Royalty doth ſpeake in me:
He is prepar'd, and reaſon too he ſhould,
This apiſh and unmannerly approach,
This harneſſ'd Maske, and unadviſed Revell,
This unheard ſawcineſſe and boyiſh Troopes,
The King doth ſmile at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfiſh warre, this Pigmy Armes
From ont the circle of his Territories.
That hand which had the ſtrength, even at your dore,
To cudgell you, and make you take the hatch,
To dive like Buckets in concealed Wells,
To crowch in litter of your ſtable plankes,
To lye like pawnes, lock'd up in cheſts and truncks,
To hug with ſwine, to ſeeke ſweet ſafety out
In vaults and priſons, and to thrill and ſhake,

Even at the crying of your Nations crow,
Thinking this voyce an armed Engliſh man.
Shall that victorious hand be feebled heere,
That in your Chambers gave you chaſticement?
No: know the gallant Monarch is in Armes,
And like an Eagle, o're his ayery towres,
To ſowſſe annoyance that comes neere his Neſt;
And you degenerate, you ingrate Revolts,
You bloudy Nero's, ripping up the wombe
Of your deere Mother-England: bluſh for ſhame:
For your owne Ladies, and pale-viſag'd Maides,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drummes:
Their thimbles into armed Gantlets change,
Their Needl's to Lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloudy inclination.
Dol. There end thy brave, and turne thy face in peace,
We grant thou canſt out-ſcold us: fare thee well,
We hold our time too precious to be ſpent
With ſuch a brabler.
Pan. Give me leave to ſpeake.
Baſt. No, I will ſpeake.
Dol. We will attend to neither:
Strike up the drummes, and let the tongue of warre
Pleade for our intereſt, and our being heere.
Baſt. Indeed your drummes being beaten, wil cry out;
And ſo ſhall you, being beaten: doe but ſtart
An eccho with the clamor of thy drumme,
And even at hand, a drumme is ready brac'd,
That ſhall reverberate all, as lowd as thine.
Sound but another, and another ſhall
(As lowd as thine) rattle the Welkins eare,
And mocke the deepe mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not truſting to this halting Legate heere,
Whom he hath uſ'd rather for ſport, than need)
Is warlike Iohn: and in his forehead ſits
A bare-rib'd death, whoſe office is this day
To feaſt upon whole thouſands of the French.
Dol. Strike up our drummes, to find this danger out.
Baſt. And thou ſhalt find it (Dolphin) doe not doubt
Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Alarums. Enter Iohn, and Hubert.

Iohn. How goes the day with us? oh tell me Hubert.
Hub. Badly I feare; how fares your Majeſty?
Iohn. This Feaver that hath troubled me ſo long,
Lyes heavy on me: oh, my heart is ſicke.
Enter a Meſſenger.
Meſ. My lord: your valiant kinſman Faulconbridge,
Deſires your Majeſty to leave the field,
And ſend him word by me, which way you goe.
Iohn. Tell him toward Swinſted, to the Abbey there.
Meſ. Be of good comfort: for the great ſupply,
That was expected by the Dolphin heere,
Are wrack'd three nights agoe on Goodwin ſands.
This newes was brought to Richard but even now,
The French fight coldly, and retire themſelves.
Iohn. Aye me, this tyraot Feaver burnes me up,
And will not let me welcome this good newes.
Set on toward Swinſted: to my Litter ſtraight,
Weakeneſſe poſſeſſeth me, and I am faint. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, and Bigot.

Sal. I did not thinke the King ſo ſtor'd with friends.
Pem. Vp once againe: put ſpirit in the French,
If they miſcarry: we miſcarry too.
Sal. That miſbegotten divell Faulconbridge,
In ſpight of ſpight, alone upholds the day.
Pem. They ſay King Iohn ſore ſicke, hath left the field.
Enter Meloon wounded.
Mel. Lead me to the Revolts of England heere.
Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.
Pem. It is the Count Meloone.
Sal. Wounded to death.
Mel. Flye Noble Engliſh, you are bought and ſold,
Vnthred the rude eye of Rebellion,
And welcome home againe diſcarded faith,
Seeke out King Iohn, and fall before his feet:
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He meanes to recompence the paines you take,
By cutting off your heads: Thus hath he ſworne,
And I with him, and many moe with me,
Vpon the Altar at Saint Edmondsbury,
Even on that Altar, where we ſwore to you
Deere Amity, and everlaſting love.
Sal. May this be poſſible? May this be true?
Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a forme of waxe
Reſolveth from his figure 'gainſt the fire?
What in the world ſhould make me now deceive,
Since I muſt loſe the uſe of all deceite?
Why ſhould I then be falſe, ſince it is true
That I muſt dye heere, and live hence, by truth?
I ſay againe, if Lewis doe winne the day,
He is forſworne, if ere thoſe eyes of yours
Behold another day breake in the Eaſt:
But even this night, whoſe blacke contagious breath
Already ſmoakes about the burning Creſt
Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied Sunne,
Even this ill night, your breathing ſhall expire,
Paying the fine of rated Treachery,
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives:
If Lewis, by your aſſiſtance win the day.
Commend me to one Hubert, with your King;
The love of him, and this reſpect beſides
(For that my Grandſire was an Engliſhman)
A wakes my conſcience to confeſſe all this.
In lieu whereof, I pray you beare me hence
From forth the noiſe and rumour of the field;
Where I may thinke the remnant of my thoughts
In peace: and part this body and my ſoule
With contemplation, and devout deſires.
Sal. We doe beleeve thee, and beſhrew my ſoule,
But I doe love the favour, and the forme
Of this moſt faire occaſion, by the which
We will untread the ſteps of damned flight,
And like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankeneſſe and irregular courſe,
Stoope low within thoſe bounds we have ore-look'd,
And calmely run on in obedience,
Even to our Ocean, to our great King Iohn.
My arme ſhall give thee helpe to beare thee hence,

For I doe ſee the cruell pangs of death
Right in thine eye. Away, my friends, new flight,
And happy newneſſe that intends old right. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Dolphin, and his Traine.

Dol. The Sun of heaven (me thought) was loath to ſet;
But ſtaid, and made the Weſterne Welkin bluſh,
When Engliſh meaſure backward their owne ground
In faint retyre: Oh bravely came we off,
When with a Volley of our needleſſe ſhot,
After ſuch bloody toyle, we bid good night,
And woun'd our tott'ring colours clearely up,
Laſt in the field, and almoſt Lords of it.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Where is my Prince the Dolphin?
Dol. Heere, what newes?
Meſ. The Count Meloone is ſlaine: The Engliſh Lords
By his perſwaſion are at length falne off,
And your ſupply which you have wiſh'd ſo long,
Are caſt away, and ſunke on Goodwin Sands.
Dol. Ah foule ſhrew'd newes. Beſhrew thy very heart:
I did not thinke to be ſo ſad to night
As this hath made me. Who was he that ſaid
King Iohn did fly an houre or two before
The ſtumbling night did part our weary powres?
Meſ. Who ever ſpoke it, it is true my Lord,
Dol. Well: keep good quarter, and good care to night,
The day ſhall not be up ſo ſoone as I,
To try the faire adventure of to morrow. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Baſtard and Hubert ſeverally.

Hub. Whoſe there? Speake hoa, ſpeake quickly, or I ſhoot.
Baſt. A Friend. What art thou?
Hub. Of the part of England.
Baſt. Whither doſt thou goe?
Hub. What's that to thee?
Why may not I demand of thine affaires,
As well as thou of mine?
Baſt. Hubert, I thinke.
Hub. Thou haſt a perfect thought:
I will upon all hazzards well beleeve
Thou art my friend, that know'ſt my tongue ſo well:
Who art thou?
Baſt. Who thou wilt: and if thou pleaſe
Thou maiſt be-friend me ſo much, as to thinke
I come one way of the Plantagenets.
Hub. Vnkinde remembrance: thou, and endleſſe night,
Have done me ſhame: Brave Souldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue,
Should ſcape the true acquaintance of mine eare.
Baſt. Come, come: ſans complement, What newes abroad?
Hub. Why here walke I, in the blacke brow of night,
To finde you out.
Baſt. Briefe then: and what's the newes?
Hub. O my ſweet Sir, newes fitting to the night,
Blacke, fearefull, comfortleſſe, and horrible.
Baſt. Shew me the very wound of this ill newes,
I am no woman, Ile not ſwound at it.
Hub. The King I feare is poyſon'd by a Monke,
I left him almoſt ſpeechleſſe, and broke out
To acquaint you with this evill, that you might
The better arme you to the ſodaine time,
Than if you had at leiſure knowne of this.
Baſt. How did he take it? Who did taſte to him?
Hub. A Monke I tell you, a reſolved Villaine
Whoſe bowels ſuddenly burſt out: The King
Yet ſpeakes, and peradventure may recover.
Baſt. Who didſt thou leave to tend his Majeſty?
Hub. Why know you not? The Lords are all come backe,
And brought Prince Henry in their company,
At whoſe requeſt the King hath pardon'd them,
And they are all about his Majeſtie.
Baſt. With-hold thine indignation, mighty heaven,
And tempt us not to beare above our power.
Ile tell thee Hubert, halfe my power this night
Paſſing theſe Flats, are taken by the Tide,
Theſe Lincolne-waſhes have devoured them,
My ſelfe, well mounted, have eſcap'd.
Away before: Conduct me to the King,
I doubt he will be dead, or ere I come. Exeunt.

Scæna Septima.

Enter Prince Henry, Saliſbury, and Bigot.

Hen. It is too late, the life of all his bloud
Is touch'd, corruptibly: and his pure braine
(Which ſome ſuppoſe the ſoules fraile dwelling houſe)
Doth by the idle Comments that it makes,
Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His Highneſſe yet doth ſpeake, and holds beleefe,
That being brought into the open ayre,
It would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poyſon which aſſayleth him.
Hen. Let him be brought into the Orchard heere:
Doth he ſtill rage?
Pem. He is more patient
Than when you left him; even now he ſung.
Hen. Oh vanity of ſickneſſe: fierce extreames
In their continuance, will not feele themſelves.
Death having prei'd upon the outward parts
Leaves them inviſible, and hir ſiege is now
Againſt the wind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of ſtrange fantaſies,
Which in their throng and preſſe to that laſt hold,
Confound themſelves. Tis ſtrange that death ſhould ſing:
I am the Symet to this pale faint Swan,
Who chaunts a dolefull hymne to his owne death,
And from the organ-pipe of frailty ſings
His ſoule and body their laſting reſt.
Sal. Be of good comfort (Prince) for you are borne
To ſet a forme upon that indigeſt
Which he hath left ſo ſhapeleſſe, and ſo rude.

Iohn brought in.

Iohn. I marry, now my ſoule hath elbow-roome,

It would not out at windowes,nor at doores,
There is ſo hot a Summer in my boſome,
That all my bowels crumble up to duſt :
I am a ſcribled forme drawne with a pen,
Vpon a Parchment ,and againſt this fire
Doe I ſhrinke up.

Hen. How fares your Majeſtie?

Ioh. Poyſon'd,ill fare : dead,forſooke,caſt off,
And none of you will bid the Winter come
To thruſt his ycie fingers in my maw;
Nor let my Kingdomes Rivers take their courſe
Through my burn'd boſome : nor intreat the North
To make his bleake windes kiſſe my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold.I doe not aske you much,
I beg cold comfort : and you are ſo ſtraight
And ſo ingratefull, you deny me that.

Hen. Oh that there were ſome vertue in my teares,
That might relieve you.

Iohn. The ſalt of them is hot.
Within me is a hell,and there the poyſon
Is,as a fiend,confin'd to tyrannize,
On unrepreeveable condemned blood.

Enter Baſtard.

Baſt. Oh, I am ſcalded with my violent motion
And ſpleene of ſpeed,to ſee your Majeſtie.

Iohn. Oh Cozen, thou art come to ſet mine eye :
The tackle of my heart,is crack'd and burnt,
And all the ſhrowds wherewith my life ſhould ſaile,
Are turned to one thred, one little haire :
My heart hath one poore ſtring to ſtay it by,
Which holds but till thy newes be uttered,
And then all this thou ſeeſt, is but a clod,
And module of confounded Royalty.

Baſt. The Dolphin is preparing hither-ward,
Where heaven he knowes how we ſhall anſwer him.
For in a night the beſt part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the Waſhes all unwarily,
Devoured by the unexpected flood.

Sal. You breathe theſe dead newes in as dead an eare
My Liege,my Lord : but now a King,now thus.

Hen. Even ſo muſt I runne on,and even ſo ſtop.
What ſurety of the world,what hope,what ſtay,
When this was now a King,and now is Clay?

Baſt. Art thou gone ſo? I doe but ſtay behinde
To doe the office for thee,of revenge,
And then my ſoule ſhall waite on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy ſervant ſtill.
Now,now you Stars,that move in your right Spheres,
Where be your powers? Shew now your mended faiths,
And inſtantly returne with me againe,
To puſh deſtruction and perpetuall ſhame
Out of the weake doore of our fainting Land :
Straight let us ſeeke,or ſtraight we ſhall be ſought,
The Dolphin rages at our very heeles.

Sal. It ſeemes you know not then ſo much as we,
The Cardinall Pandulph is within at reſt,
Who halfe an houre ſince came from the Dolphin,
And brings from him ſuch offers of our peace,
As we with honour and reſpect may take,
With purpoſe preſently to leave this warre.

Baſt. He will the rather doe it,when he ſees
Our ſelves well ſinew'd to our defence.

Sal. Nay,'tis in a manner done already,
For many carriages he hath diſpatch'd
To the Sea-ſide,and put his cauſe and quarrell
To the diſpoſing of the Cardinall,
With whom your ſelfe,my ſelfe,and other Lords,
If you thinke meete,this afternoone will poſt
To conſummate this buſineſſe happily.

Baſt. Let it be ſo,and you my Noble Prince,
With other Princes that may beſt be ſpar'd,
Shall waite upon your Fathers funerall.

Hen. At Worſter muſt his body be interr'd,
For ſo he will'd it.

Baſt. Thither ſhall it then,
And happily may your ſweet ſelfe put on
The lineall ſtate,and glory of the Land,
To whom with all ſnbmiſſion on my knee,
I doe bequeath my faithfull ſervices
And true ſubjection everlaſtingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make
To reſt without a ſpot for evermore.

Hen. I have a kinde ſoule that would give thankes,
And knowes not how to doe it,but with teares.

Baſt. Oh let us pay the time : but needfull woe,
Since it hath beene beforehand with our griefes.
This England never did,nor never ſhall
Lye at the prond foote of a Conquerer,
But when it firſt did helpe to wound it ſelfe.
Now,theſe her Princes are come home againe,
Come the three corners of the world in Armes,
And we ſhall ſhocke them : Nought ſhall make us rue,
If England to it ſelfe,doe reſt but true. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Life and Death of King Richard the Second.

Actus Primus, Scæna Prima.

Enter King Richard, Iohn of Gaunt, with other Nobles and Attendants.

King Richard.

OLd Iohn of Gaunt, time-honoured Lancaſter,
Haſt thou according to thy oath and band,
Brought hither Henry Herford thy bold ſon:
Here to make good the boyſterous late appeale,
Which then our leaſure would not let us heare,
Againſt the Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Mowbray?
Gaunt. I have my Liege.
King. Tell me moreover, haſt thou ſounded him,
If he appeale the Duke on ancient malice,
Or worthily as a good ſubject ſhould,
On ſome knowne ground of treachery in him.
Gaunt. As neere as I could ſift him on that argument,
On ſome apparant danger ſeene in him,
Aym'd at your highneſſe, no inveterate malice.
King. Then call them to our preſence face to face,
And frowning brow to brow, our ſelves will heare
Th'accuſer, and the accuſed, freely ſpeake;
High ſtomack'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage, deafe as the ſea; haſty as fire.

Enter Bullingbrooke and Mowbray.

Bull. Many yeares of happy dayes befall
My gracious Soveraigne, my moſt loving Liege.
Mow. Each day ſtill better others happineſſe,
Vntill the heavens envying earths good hap,
Adde an immortall title to your Crowne.
King. We thanke you both, yet one but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cauſe you come,
Namely to appeale each other of high treaſon.
Couſin of Hereford what doſt thou object
Againſt the Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Mowbray?
Bull. Firſt, heaven be the record to my ſpeech,
In the devotion of a ſubjects love,
Tendring the precious ſafety of my Prince,
And free from other miſ-begotten hate,
Come I appealant to this Princely preſence.
Now Thomas Mowbray doe I turne to thee,
And marke my greeting well: for what I ſpeake,
My body ſhall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine ſoule anſwer it in heaven.
Thou art a Traitor and a miſcreant;
Too good to be ſo, and too bad to live,
Since the more faire and Criſtall is the skie,
The uglier ſeeme the cloudes that in it flye:
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foule traitors name ſtuffe I thy throat,
And wiſh (ſo pleaſe my Soveraigne) ere I move,
What my tongue ſpeaks, my right drawne ſword may prove.
Mow. Let not my coole words here accuſe my zeale:
Tis not the tryall of a womans warre,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cauſe betwixt us twaine:
The bloud is hot that muſt be cool'd for this.
Yet can I not of ſuch tame patience boaſt,
As to be huſht, and nought at all to ſay.
Firſt the faire reverence of your highneſſe curbes mee,
From giving reines and ſpurres to my free ſpeech,
Which elſe would poſt, untill it had return'd
Theſe tearmes of treaſon, doubly downe his throat.
Setting aſide his high blouds royalty,
And let him be no kinſman to my Liege,
I doe defie him, and I ſpit at him,
Call him a ſlanderous Coward, and a Villaine:
Which to maintaine, I would allow him oddes,
And meet him, were I tide to run afoot,
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alpes,
Or any other ground inhabitable,
Where ever Engliſhman durſt ſet his foot.
Meane time, let this defend my loyalty,
By all my hopes moſt falſely doth he lye.
Bul. Pale trembling Coward, there I throw my gage,
Diſclaiming here the kindred of a King,
And lay aſide my high bloods Royalty,
Which feare, not reverence makes thee to except,
If guilty dread hath left thee ſo much ſtrength,
As to take up mine honours pawne, then ſtoope.
By that, and all the rights of Knighthood elſe,
Will I make good againſt thee arme to arme,
What I have ſpoken, or thou canſt deviſe.
Mow. I take it up, and by that ſword I ſweare,
Which gently laid my Knight-hood on my ſhoulder,
Ile anſwer thee in any faire degree,
Or Chivalrous deſigne of knightly tryall:
And when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjuſtly fight.
King. What doth our Couſin lay to Mowbrayes charge?
It muſt be great that can inherite us,
So much as of a thought of ill in him.
Bul. Looke what I ſaid, my life ſhall prove it true,
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thouſand Nobles,

In name of lendings for your Highneſſe Souldiers,
The which he hath detain'd for lewd imployments,
Like a falſe traitor, and injurious Villaine.
Beſides I ſay, and will in battaile prove,
Or heere, or elſewhere to the furtheſt Verge
That ever was ſurvey'd by Engliſh eye,
That all the treaſons for theſe eighteene yeares
Complotted and contrived in this Land,
Fetcht from falſe Mowbray their firſt head and ſpring.
Further I ſay, and further will maintaine
Vpon hi sbad life, to make all this good,
That he did plot the Duke of Glouſters death,
Suggeſt his ſoone beleeving adverſaries,
And conſequently like a traitor Coward,
Sluc'd out his innocent ſoule through ſtreames of blood:
Which bloud, like ſacrificing Abels cryes,
(Even from the tongueleſſe cavernes of the earth)
To me for Iuſtice, and rough chaſtiſement:
And by the glorious worth of my deſcent,
This arme ſhall doe it, or this life be ſpent.
King. How high a pitch his reſolution ſoares:
Thomas of Norfolke, why ſayſt thou to this?
Mow. Oh let my Soveraigne turne away his face,
And bid his eares a little while be deafe,
Till I have told this ſlander of his bloud,
How God and good men hate ſo fowle a lyer.
King. Mowbray, impartiall are our eyes and eares,
Were he my brother, nay, our Kingdomes heire,
As he is but my fathers brothers ſonne;
Now by my Scepters awe, I make a vow,
Such neighbour-neereneſſe to our ſacred blood,
Should nothing priviledge him, nor partialize
The unſtooping firmeneſſe of my upright ſoule.
He is our ſubject (Mowbray) ſo art thou,
Free ſpeech and feareleſſe, I to thee allow.
Mow. Then Bullingbrooke as low as to thy heart,
Through the falſe paſſage of thy throat; thou lyeſt:
Three parts of that receipt I had for Callice,
Diſburſt I to his Highneſſe ſouldiers;
The other part reſerv'd I by conſent,
For that my Soveraigne Liege was in my debt,
Vpon remainder of a deere account,
Since laſt I went to France to fetch his Queene:
Now ſwallow downe that lye. For Glouſters death,
I ſlew him not; but (to mine owne diſgrace)
Neglected my ſworne duty in that caſe:
For you my noble Lord of Lancaſter,
The honourable Father to my Foe,
Once I did lay an ambuſh for your life,
A treſpaſſe that doth vex my grieved ſoule:
But ere I laſt receiv'd the Sacrament,
I did confeſſe it, and exactly begg'd
Your Graces pardon, and I hope I had it.
This is my fault: as for the reſt appeal'd,
It iſſues from the rancour of a Villaine,
A recreant and moſt degenerate traitor,
Which in my ſelfe I boldly will defend,
And interchangeably hurle downe my gage,
Vpon this overweening traitors foot,
To prove my ſelfe a loyall Gentleman,
Even in the beſt bloud chamber'd in his boſome.
In haſte whereof moſt heartily I pray
Your Highneſſe to aſſigne our tryall day.
King. Wrath kindled Gentlemen be rul'd by me:
Let's purge this choller without letting blood:
This we preſcribe, though no Phyſition.
Deepe malice makes too deepe inciſion.
Forget, forgive, conclude, and be agreed,
Our Doctors ſay, this is no time to bleed.
Good Vncle, let this end where it begun,
Wee'l calme the Duke of Norfolke, you your ſon.
Gaunt. To be a make-peace ſhall become my age,
Throw downe (my ſonne) the Duke of Norfolkes gage.
King. And Norfolke throw downe his.
Gaunt. When Harry when? Obedience bids,
Obedience bids, I ſhould not bid agen.
King. Norfolke, throw downe, we bid; there is no boote.
Mow. My ſelfe I throw (dread Soveraigne) at thy foot.
My life thou ſhalt command, but not my ſhame,
The one my duty owes, but my faire name
Deſpight of death that lives upon my grave
To darke diſhonours uſe, thou ſhalt not have.
I am diſgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffel'd here,
Pierc'd to the ſoule with ſlanders venom'd ſpeare:
The which no blame can cure, but his heart blood
Which breath'd this poyſon.
King. Rage muſt be withſtood:
Give me his gage: Lyons make Leopards tame.
Mow. Yea, but not change his ſpots: take but my ſhame,
And I reſigne my gage. My deere, deere Lord,
The pureſt treaſure mortall times afford,
Is ſpotleſſe reputation: that away,
Men are but gilded loame, or painted clay.
A Iewell in a ten-times barr'd up Cheſt,
Is a bold ſpirit in a loyall breſt.
Mine honour is my life; both grow in one:
Take honour from me, and my life is done.
Then (deere my Liege) mine honour let me try,
In that I live; and for that will I die.
King. Cooſin, throw downe your gage,
Doe you begin.
Bul. Oh heaven defend my ſoule from ſuch foule ſin.
Shall I ſeeme Creſt-falne in my fathers ſight,
Or with pale beggar-feare impeach my hight
Before this out-dar'd daſtard? Ere my toong,
Shall wound mine honor with ſuch feeble wrong;
Or ſound ſo baſe a parle: my teeth ſhall teare
The ſlaviſh motive of recanting feare,
And ſpit it bleeding in his high diſgrace,
Where ſhame doth harbour, even in Mowbrayes face.
Exit Gaunt.
King. We were not borne to ſue, but to command,
Which ſince we cannot doe to make you friends,
Be ready, (as your lives ſhall anſwer it)
At Coventree, upon Saint Lamberts day:
There ſhall your ſwords and Lances arbitrate
The ſwelling difference of your ſetled hate:
Since we cannot attone you, you ſhall ſee
Iuſtice deſigne the Victors Chivalry.
Lord Marſhall, command our Officers at Armes,
Be ready to direct theſe home Alarmes. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Gaunt, and Dutcheſſe of Glouceſter.

Gaunt. Alas, the part I had in Glouſters blood,
Doth more ſolicite me than your exclaimes,
To ſtirre againſt the Butchers of his life.

But ſince correction lyeth in thoſe hands
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrell to the will of heaven,
Who when they ſee the houres ripe on earth,
Will raine hot vengeance on offenders heads.
Dut. Findes brotherhood in thee no ſharper ſpurre?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edwards ſeven ſonnes (whereof thy ſelfe art one)
Were as ſeven vialles of his Sacred blood.
Or ſeven faire branches ſpringing from one roote:
Some of thoſe ſeven are dride by natures courſe,
Some of thoſe branches by the deſtinies cut:
But Thomas, my deere Lord, my life, my Gloſter,
One Viall full of Edwards Sacred blood,
One flouriſhing branch of his moſt Royall roote
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor ſpilt;
Is hackt downe, and his ſummer leaves all vaded
By Envies hand, and Murders bloody Axe.
Ah Gaunt? His blood was thine, that bed, that wombe,
That mettle, that ſelfe-mould that faſhion'd thee,
Made him a man: and though thou liv'ſt, and breath'ſt;
Yet art thou ſlaine in him: thou doeſt conſent
In ſome large meaſure to thy Fathers death,
In that thou ſeeſt thy wretched brother dye,
Who was the modell of thy Fathers life.
Call it not patience (Gaunt) it is deſpaire,
In ſuffering thus thy brother to be ſlaughter'd,
Thou ſhew'ſt the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching ſterne murther how to butcher thee:
That which in meane men we intitle patience
Is pale cold cowardiſe in noble breſts:
What ſhall I ſay, to ſafegard thine owne life,
The beſt way is to venge my Gloſters death.
Gaunt. Heavens is the quarrell: for heavens ſubſtitute
His Deputy annoynted in his ſight,
Hath caus'd his death, the which if wrongfully
Let heaven revenge: for I may never lift
An angry arme againſt his Miniſter.
Dut. Where then (alas) may I complaine my ſelfe?
Gau. To heaven, the widdowes Champion to defence.
Dut. Why then I will: farewell old Gaunt.
Thou go'ſt to Coventry, there to behold
Our Coſine Hereford, and fell Mowbray fight:
O ſit my husbands wrongs on Herefords ſpeare,
That it may enter butcher Mowbrayes breſt:
Or if misfortune miſſe the firſt carreere,
Be Mowbrayes ſinnes ſo heavy in his boſome,
That they may breake his foaming Courſers backe,
And throw the Rider headlong in the Liſts,
A Caytiffe recreant to my Coſine Hereford.
Farewell old Gaunt, thy ſometimes brothers wife
With her companion Greefe, muſt end her life.
Gau. Siſter fare well: I muſt to Couentrie,
As much good ſtay with thee, as go with me.
Dut. Yet one word more: Greefe boundeth where it (falls,
Not with the emptie hollowneſſe, but weight:
I take my leave, before I have begun,
For ſorrow ends not: when it ſeemeth done.
Commend me to my brother Edward Yorke.
Loe, this is all: nay yet depart not ſo,
Though this be all, do not ſo quickly goe,
I ſhall remember more. Bid him, Oh, what?
With all good ſpeed at Plaſhie viſit me.
Alacke, and what ſhall good old Yorke there ſee
But empty lodgings, and unfurniſh'd walles,
Vn-peopel'd Offices, untroden ſtones?
And what heare there for welcome, but my grones?
Therefore commend me, let him not come there,
To ſeeke out ſorrow, that dwels every where:
Deſolate, deſolate will I hence, and dye,
The laſt leave of thee, takes my weeping eye. Exeunt

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Marſhall, and Aumerle.
Mar. My L. Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?
Aum. Yea, at all poynts, and longs to enter in.
Mar. The Duke of Norfolke, ſprightfull and bold,
Stayes but the ſummons of the Appealants Trumpet.
Au. Why then the Champions, are prepar'd, and ſtay
For nothing but his Majeſties approach. Flouriſh.
Enter King, Gaunt, Buſhy, Bagot, Greene, & others: Then Mowbray in Armor, and Harrold.
Rich. Marſhall, demand of yonder Champion
The cauſe of his arrivall heere in Armes,
Aske him his name, and orderly proceed
To ſweare him in the juſtice of his cauſe.
Mar. In Gods Name, and the Kings, ſay who thou art,
And why thou com'ſt, thus knightly clad in Armes?
Againſt what man thou com'ſt, and what's thy quarrell,
Speake truely on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
As ſo defend thee heaven, and thy valour.
Mow. My name is Tho. Mowbray, Duke of Norfolke,
Who hither come engaged by my oath
(Which heaven defend a knight ſhould violate)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my King, and his ſuceeding iſſue,
Againe the Duke of Hereford, that appeales me:
And by the grace of God and this mine arme,
To prove him (in defending of my ſelfe)
A Traitor to my God, my King, and me,
And as I truly fight, defend me heaven.
Tucket. Enter Hereford, and Harold.
Rich. Marſhall: Aske yonder Knight in Armes,
Both who hee is, and why he commeth hither,
Thus placed in habiliments of warre:
And formally according to our Law
Depoſe him in the juſtice of his cauſe.
Mar. What is thy name? & wherfore com'ſt thou hither
Before King Richard in his Royall Liſts?
Againſt whom com'ſt thou? and what's thy quarrell?
Speake like a true Knight, ſo defend thee heaven.
Bull. Harry of Hereford, Lancaſter, and Derbie,
Am I: who ready here do ſtand in Armes,
To prove by heavens grace, and my bodyes valour,
In Liſts, on Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolke,
That he's a Traitor foule and dangerous,
To God of heaven, King Richard, and to me,
And as I truely fight, defend me heaven.
Mar. On paine of death, no perſon be ſo bold,
Or daring hardie as to touch the Liſtes,
Except the Marſhall, and ſuch officers
Appointed to direct theſe faire deſignes.
Bull. Lord Marſhall, let me kiſſe my Soveraigns hand,
And bow my knee before his Majeſtie:
For Mowbray and my ſelfe are like two men,
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage,

Then let us take a ceremonious leave
And loving farewell of our ſeverall friends.
Mar. The Appealant in all duty greets your Highnes,
And craves to kiſſe your hand, and take his leave.
Rich. We will deſcend, and fold him in our armes.
Coſin of Hereford as thy cauſe is juſt,
So be thy fortune in this Royall fight:
Farewell, my blood, which if to day thou ſhead,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.
Bull. Oh let no noble eye prophane a teare
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbrayes ſpeare:
As confident, as is the Falcons flight
Againſt a bird, doe I with Mowbray fight.
My loving Lord, I take my leave of you,
Of you (my Noble Coſin) Lord Aumerle;
Not ſicke, although I have to doe with death,
But luſtie, yong, and cheerely drawing breath.
Loe, as at Engliſh Feaſts, ſo I regreet
The daintieſt laſt, to make the end moſt ſweet.
Oh thou the earthy author of my blood,
Whoſe youthfull ſpirit in me regenerate,
Doth with a two-fold vigor lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,
Adde proofe unto mine Armour with thy prayers,
And with thy bleſſings ſteele my Lances point,
That it may enter Mowbrayes waxen Coate,
And furniſh new the name of Iohn a Gaunt,
Even in the luſty haviour of his ſonne.
Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cauſe make thee proſp'rous,
Be ſwift like lightning in the execution,
And let thy blowes doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the Caske
Of thy amaz'd pernicious enemy.
Rouze up thy youthfull blood, be valiant, and live.
Bull. Mine innocence, and S. George to thrive.
Mow. How ever heaven or fortune caſt my lot,
There lives, or dies, true to King Richards Throne,
A loyall, juſt, and upright Gentleman:
Never did Captaine with a freer heart,
Caſt off his chaines of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchiſement,
More than my dancing ſoule doth celebrate
This Feaſt of Battell, with mine adverſarie.
Moſt mighty Liege, and my companion Peeres,
Take from my mouth, the wiſh of happy yeeres,
As gentle, and as iocond, as to jeſt,
Go I to fight: Truth, hath a quiet breſt.
Rich. Farewell, my Lord, ſecurely I eſpy
Vertue with Valour, couched in thine eye:
Order the triall Marſhall, and begin.
Mar. Harrie of Hereford, Lancaſter, and Derby,
Receive thy Launce, and heaven defend thy right.
Bull. Strong as a towre in hope, I cry Amen.
Mar. Go beare this Lance to Thomas D. of Norfolke.
1.Harry of Hereford, Lancaſter, and Derby,
Stands heere for God, his Soveraigne, and himſelfe,
On paine to be found falſe, and recreant,
To prove the Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Mowbray,
A Traitor to his God, his King, and him,
And dares him to ſet forwards to the fight.
2.Har. Here ſtandeth Tho. Mowbray Duke of Norfolk
on paine to be found falſe and recreant,
Both to defend himſelfe, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaſter, and Derby,
To God, his Soveraigne, and to him diſloyall:
Couragiouſly, and with a free deſire,
Attending but the ſignall to begin. A charge ſounded
Mar. Sound trumpets, and ſet forward Conbatants:
Stay, the King hath throwne his Warder downe.
Rich. Let them lay by their Helmets & their Speares,
And both returne backe to their Chaires againe:
Withdraw with us, and let the Trumpets ſound,
While we returne theſe Dukes what we decree.
A long Flouriſh.
Draw neere and liſt
What with our Councell we have done.
For that our kingdomes earth ſhould not be ſoyld
With that deere blood which it hath foſtered,
And for our eyes do hate the dire aſpect
Of civill wounds plowgh'd up with neighbors ſwords,
Which ſo rouz'd up with boyſtrous untun'd drummes,
With harſh reſounding Trumpets dreadfull bray,
And grating ſhocke of wrathfull yron Armes,
Might from our quiet Confines fright faire Peace,
And make us wade even in our kindreds blood:
Therefore, we baniſh you our Territories.
You Coſin Hereford, upon paine of death,
Till twice five Summers have enrich'd our fields,
Shall nor regreet our faire dominions,
But treade the ſtranger pathes of baniſhment.
Bull. Your will be done: This muſt my comfort be,
That Sun that warmes you heere, ſhall ſhine on me:
Aud thoſe his golden beames to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my baniſhment.
Rich. Norfolke: for thee remaines a heavier doome,
Which I with ſome unwillingneſſe pronounce,
The ſlye ſlow houres ſhall not determinate
The dateleſſe limit of thy deere exile:
The hopeleſſe word, of never to returne,
Breathe I againſt thee, upon paine of life.
Mow. A heavy ſentence, my moſt Soveraigne Liege,
And all unlook'd for from your Highneſſe mouth:
A deerer merit, not ſo deepe a maime,
As to be caſt forth in the common ayre
Have I deſerved at your Highneſſe hands.
The Language I have learn'd theſe forty yeares
(My native Engliſh) now I muſt forgo,
And now my tongues uſe is to me no more,
Than an unſtringed Vyoll, or a Harpe,
Or like a cunning Inſtrument cas'd up,
Or being open, put into his hands
That knowes no touch to tune the harmony.
Within my mouth you have engaol'd my tongue,
Doubly perculliſt with my teeth and lippes,
And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance,
Is made my Gaoler to attend on me:
I am too old to fawne upon a Nurſe,
Too farre in yeeres to be a pupill now:
What is thy ſentence then, but ſpeechleſſe death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?
Rich. It boots thee not to be compaſſionate,
After our ſentence, plaining comes to late.
Mow. Then thus I turne me from my countries light
To dwell in ſolemne ſhades of endleſſe night.
Rich. Returne againe, and take an oath with thee,
Lay on our Royall ſword, your baniſht hands;
Sweare by the duty that you owe to heaven
(Our part therein we baniſh with your ſelves)
To keepe the Oath that we adminiſter:
You never ſhall (ſo helpe you Truth, and Heaven)
Embrace each others love in baniſhment,
Nor ever looke upon each others face,

Nor ever write,regreete,or reconcile
This lowring tempeſt of your home-bred hate,
Nor ever by adviſed purpoſe meete,
To plot,contrive,or complot any ill,
'Gainſt Vs,our State,our ſubjects,or our Land.
Bul. I ſweare.
Mow. And I,to keepe all this.
Bull. Norfolke,ſo farre,as to mine enemie,
By this time(had the King permitted us)
One of our ſoules had wandred in the ayre,
Baniſh'd this fraile ſepulcher of our fleſh,
As now our fleſh is baniſh'd from this Land.
Confeſſe thy Treaſons,ere thou flye this Realme,
Since thou haſt farre to go,beare not along
The clogging burthen of a guilty ſoule.
Mow. No Bullingbrooke: If ever I were Traitor,
My name be blotted from the booke of Life,
And I from heaven baniſh'd,as from hence :
But what thou art,heaven,thou, and I do know,
And all too ſoone(I feare) the King ſhall rue.
Farewell (my Liege) now no way can I ſtray,
Save backe to England,all the worlds my way.
Rich. Vncle,even in the glaſſes of thine eyes
I ſee thy greeved heart : thy ſad aſpect,
Hath from the number of his baniſh'd yeares
Pluck'd foure away : Six frozen Winters ſpent,
Returne with welcome home,from baniſhment.
Bull. How long a time lies in one little word :
Foure lagging Winters,and foure wanton Springs
End in a word,ſuch is the breath of Kings.
Gaunt. I thanke my Liege,that in regard of me
He ſhortens foure yeares of my ſonnes exile :
But little vantage ſhall I reape thereby.
For ere the ſixe yeares that he hath to ſpend
Can change the Moones,and bring their times about,
My oyle-dride Lampe,and time-bewaſted light
Shall be extinct with age,and endleſſe night :
My inch of Taper,will be burnt,and done,
And blindfold death,not let me ſee my ſonne.
Rich. Why Vncle,thou haſt many yeeres to live.
Gaunt. But not a minute (King) that thou canſt give ;
Shorten my dayes thou canſt with ſudden ſorrow,
And plucke nights from me,but not lend a morrow :
Thou canſt helpe time to furrow me with age,
But ſtop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage :
Thy word is currant with him, for my death,
But dead,thy kingdome cannot buy my breath.
Rich. Thy ſonne is baniſh'd upon good advice,
Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gave,
Why at our Iuſtice ſeem'ſt thou then to lowre?
Gau. Things ſweet to taſt,prove in digeſtion ſowre :
You urg'd me as a Iudge,but I had rather
You would have bid me argue like a Father.
Alas,I look'd when ſome of you ſhould ſay,
I was too ſtrict to make mine owne away :
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
Againſt my will,to do my ſelfe this wrong.
Rich. Coſine farewell : and Vncle bid him ſo :
Six yeares we baniſh him,and he ſhall go. Exit.
Flouriſh.
Au. Coſine farewell : what preſence muſt not know
From where you do remaine,let paper ſhow.
Mar. My Lord,no leave take I,for I will ride
As farre as land will let me,by your ſide.
Gaunt. Oh to what purpoſe doſt thou hord thy words,
That thou return'ſt no greeting to thy friends ?
Bull. I have too few to take my leave of you,
when the tongues office ſhould be prodigall,
To breath th'abundant dolour of the heart.
Gau. Thy greefe is but thy abſence for a time.
Bull. Ioy abſent,greefe is preſent for that time.
Gau. What is ſixe Winters, they are quickely gone ?
Bull. To men in joy, but greefe makes one houre ten.
Gau. Call it a travell that thou tak'ſt for pleaſure.
Bull. My heart will ſigh,when I miſcall it ſo,
Which findes it an inforced Pilgrimage.
Gau. The ſullen paſſage of thy weary ſteppes
Eſteeme a ſoyle,wherein thou art to ſet
The precious Iewell of thy home returne.
Bull. Oh who can hold a fire in his hand
By thinking on the froſtie Caucaſus ?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a Feaſt ?
Or Wallow naked in December ſnow
By thinking on fantaſticke Summers heate ?
Oh no,the apprehenſion of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worſe :
Fell ſorrowes tooth,doth ever ranckle more
Then when it bites,but lanceth not the ſore.
Gau. Come,come (my ſon) Ile bring thee on thy way
Had I thy youth,and cauſe,I would not ſtay.
Bull. Then Englands ground farewell : ſweet ſoil adieu
My Mother and my Nurſe,which beares me yet :
Where ere I wander,boaſt of this I can,
Though baniſh'd,yet a true-borne Engliſhman.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter King, Aumerle, Greene, and Bagot.

Rich. We did obſerve. Coſine Aumerle,
How farre brought you high Hereford on his way?
Aum. I brought high Hereford (if you call him ſo)
But to the next high way,and there I left him.
Rich. And ſay,what ſtore of parting teares were ſhed?
Aum. Faith none by me : except the Northeaſt wind
Which then grew bitterly againſt our face,
Awak'd the ſleepie rhewme,and ſo by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a teare.
Rich. What ſaid our Coſin when you parted with him?
Au. Farewell : and for my hart diſdained ỳ my tongue
Should ſo prophane the word,that taught me craft
To counterfeit oppreſſion of ſuch greefe,
That word ſeemde buried in my ſorrowes grave.
Marry,would the word Farewell,had lengthen'd houres,
And added yeeres to his ſhort baniſhment,
He ſhould have had a volume of Farewels,
But ſince it would not,he had none of me.
Rich. He is our Coſin(Coſin) but 'tis doubt,
When time ſhall call him home from baniſhment,
Whether our kinſman come to ſee his friends,
Our ſelfe,and Buſhy : heere Bagot and Greene
Obſervde his Courtſhip to the common people :
How he did ſeeme to dive into their hearts,
With humble, and familiar courteſie,
What reverence he did throw away on ſlaves ;
wooing poore Craftes-men, with the craft of ſoules,
And patient under-bearing of his Fortune,
As 'twere to baniſh their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an Oyſter-wench,

A brace of Dray-men bid God ſpeed him well,
And had the tribute of his ſupple knee,
With thankes my Countrimen, my loving friends,
As were our England in reverſion his,
And he our ſubjects next degree in hope.
Gr. Well, he is gone, & with him goe theſe thoughts:
Now for the Rebels, which ſtand out in Ireland,
Expedient mannage muſt be made my Liege
Ere further leyſure, yeeld the futher meanes
For their aduantage, and your highneſſe loſſe.
Rich. We will our ſelfe in perſon to this warre,
And for our Coffers, with too great a Court,
And liberall Largeſſe, are growne ſomewhat light,
We are inforc'd to farme our royall Realme,
The revennew whereof ſhall furniſh us
For our affayres in hand: if they come ſhort
Our ſubſtitutes at home ſhall have Blanke-charters:
Whereto, when they ſhall know what men are rich,
They ſhall ſubſcribe them for large ſummes of Gold,
And ſend them after to ſupply our wants:
For we will make for Ireland preſently.

Enter Buſhy.

Buſhy, what newes?
Bu. Old Iohn of Gaunt is verie ſicke my Lord,
Sodainly taken, and hath ſent poſt haſte
To entreat your Majeſty to viſit him.
Ric. Where lyes he?
Bu. At Ely houſe.
Ric. Now put it (heaven) in his Phyſitians minde,
To helpe him to his grave immediately:
The lining of his coffers ſhall make Coates
To decke our ſouldiers for theſe Iriſh warres.
Come Gentlemen, let's all go viſit him:
Pray heaven we may make haſt, and come too late, Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Gaunt, ſicke with Yorke.

Gau. Will the King come, that I may breathe my laſt
In wholſome counſell to his unſtaid youth?
Yor. Vex not your ſelfe, nor ſtrive not with your breth,
For all in vaine comes counſell to his eare.
Gau. Oh but (they ſay) the tongues of dying men
Inforce attention like deepe harmony;
Where words are ſcarſe, they are ſeldome ſpent in vaine,
For they breath truth, that breath their words in paine.
He that no more muſt ſay, is liſten'd more,
Then they whom youth and eaſe have taught to gloſe,
More are mens ends markt, then their lives before,
The ſetting Sun, and muſicke is the cloſe
As the laſt taſte of ſweetes, is ſweeteſt laſt,
Writ in remembrance, more then things long paſt;
Though Richard my lives counſell would not heare,
My deaths ſad tale, may yet undeafe his eare.
Yor. No, it is ſtopt with other flatt'ring ſounds
As prayſes of his ſtate: then there are found
Laſcivious Meeters, to whoſe venom ſound
The open eares of youth doth alwayes liſten.
Report of faſhions in proud Italy,
Whoſe manners ſtill our tardie apiſh Nation
Limpes after in baſe imitation.
Where doth the world thruſt forth a vanity,
So it be new, there's no reſpect how vile,
That is not quickly buz'd into their eares?
That all too late comes counſell to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wits regard:
Direct not him, whoſe way himſelfe will chooſe;
Tis breath thou lackſt, and that breath wilt thou looſe.
Gaunt. Me thinkes I am a Prophet new inſpir'd,
And thus expiring do foretell of him,
His raſh fierce blaze of Ryot cannot laſt,
For violent fires ſoone burne out themſelves;
Small ſhowres laſt long, but ſodaine ſtormes are ſhort,
He tyres betimes, that ſpurs too faſt betimes;
With eager feeding, food doth choake the feeder:
Light vanity, inſatiate cormorant,
Conſuming meanes ſoone preyes upon it ſelfe.
This royall Throne of Kings, this ſceptred Iſle,
This earth of Majeſty, this ſeate of Mars,
This other Eden, demy paradiſe,
This Fortres built by nature for her ſelfe,
Againſt infection, and the hand of warre:
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This pecious ſtone ſet in the ſilver Sea,
Which ſerves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a Moate defenſiue to a houſe,
Againſt the enuy of leſſe happier Lands,
This bleſſed plot, this Earth, this Realme, this England,
This Nurſe, this teeming wombe of Royall Kings,
Fear'd by their breed, and famous for their birth,
Renowned for their deeds, as farre from home,
For Chriſtian ſervice, and true Chivalrie,
As is the ſepulcher in ſtubborne Iury
Of the worlds ranſome, bleſſed Maries Sonne.
This Land of ſuch deere ſoules, this deere-deere Land,
Deere for her reputation through the world,
Is now Leas'd out (I dye pronouncing it)
Like to a Tenement or pelting Farme.
England bound in with the triumphant Sea,
Whoſe rocky ſhore beates backe the envious ſiedge
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with ſhame,
With Inky blottes, and rotten Parchment bonds.
That England that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a ſhamefull conqueſt of it ſelfe.
Ah? would the ſcandall vaniſh with my life,
How happy then were my enſuing death?

Enter King, Queene, Aumerle, Buſhy, Greene, Bagot, Ros, and Willoughby.

Yor. The King is come, deale mildly with his youth,
For young hot Coalts, being rag'd, do rage the more.
Qu. How fares our noble Vncle Lancaſter?
Ri. What comfort man? How iſt with aged Gaunt?
Ga. Oh how that name befits my compoſition:
Old Gaunt indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me greefe hath kept a tedious faſt,
And who abſtaines from meate, that is not gaunt?
For ſleeping England long time have I watcht,
Watching breeds leanneſſe, leanneſſe is all gaunt:
The pleaſure that ſome Fathers feed upon,
Is my ſtrict faſt, I meane my Childrens lookes,
And therein faſting, haſt thou made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whoſe hollow wombe inherits nought but bones.
Ric. Can ſicke men play ſo nicely with their names?
Gau. No, miſery makes ſport to mocke it ſelfe:
Since thou doſt ſeeke to kill my name in mee,

I mocke my name (great King) to flatter thee.
Ric. Should dying men flatter thoſe that live?
Gau. No,no men living flatter thoſe that dye.
Rich. Thou now a dying,ſayſt thou flatter'ſt me.
Gau. Oh no,thou dyeſt,though I the ſicker be.
Rich. I am in health,I breathe,I ſee thee ill.
Gau. Now he that made me,knowes I ſee thee ill:
Ill in my ſelfe to ſee,and in thee,ſeeing ill,
Thy death-bed is no leſſer then the Land,
Wherein thou lyeſt in reputation ſicke,
And thou too care-leſſe patient as thou art,
Commit'ſt thy anointed body to the cure
Of thoſe Phyſitions,that firſt wounded thee:
A thouſand flatterers ſit within thy Crowne,
Whoſe compaſſe is no bigger then thy hand,
And yet incaged in ſo ſmall a Verge,
The waſte is no whit leſſer then thy Land.
Oh had thy Grandſire with a Prophets eye,
Seene how his ſonnes ſonne, ſhould deſtroy his ſonnes,
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy ſhame,
Depoſing thee before thou wert poſſeſt,
Which art poſſeſt now to depoſe thy ſelfe.
Why (Coſine) were thou Regent of the world,
It were a ſhame to let his Land by leaſe:
But for thy world enjoying but this Land,
Is it not more then ſhame,to ſhame it ſo?
Landlord of England art thou, and not King:
Thy ſtate of Law,is bondſlave to the law,
And ———
Rich. And thou,a lunaticke leane-witted foole,
Preſuming on an Agues priviledge,
Dar'ſt with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheeke, chaſing the Royall blood
With fury,from his native reſidence?
Now by my Seates right Royall Majeſtie,
Wer't thou not Brother to great Edwards ſonne,
This tongue that runs ſo roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy unreverent ſhoulders.
Gau. Oh ſpare me not,my brothers Edwards ſonne,
For that I was his Father Edwards ſonne:
That blood already (like the Pellican)
Thou haſt tapt out,and drunkenly carows'd.
My brother Glouceſter,plaine well meaning ſoule
(Whom faire befall in heaven 'mongſt happy ſoules)
May be a preſident,and witneſſe good,
That thou reſpect'ſt not ſpilling Edwards blood:
Ioyne with the preſent ſickeneſſe that I have,
And thy unkindneſſe be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long wither'd flowre.
Live in thy ſhame,but dye not ſhame with thee,
Theſe words hereafter,thy tormentors be.
Convey me to my bed,then to my grave.
Love they to live,that love and honor have. Exit
Rich. And let them dye,that age and ſullens have,
For both haſt thou, and both become the grave.
Yor. I doe beſeech your Majeſtie impute his words
To wayward ſickelineſſe,and age in him:
He loves you on my life,and holds you deere
As Harry Duke of Hereford, were he heere.
Rich. Right,you ſay true: as Herefords love;ſo his;
As theirs,ſo mine: and all be as it is.

Enter Northumberland.

Nor. My Liege, old Gaunt commends him to your Majeſtie.
Rich. What ſayes he?
Nor. Nay nothing, all is ſaid.
His tongue is now a ſtringleſſe inſtrument,
Words,life,and all,old Lancaſter hath ſpent.
Yor. Be Yorke the next, that muſt be bankrupt ſo,
Though death be poore,it ends a mortall wo.
Rich. The ripeſt fruit firſt fals,and ſo doth he,
His time is ſpent,our pilgrimage muſt be:
So much for that. Now for our Iriſh warres,
We muſt ſupplant thoſe rough rug-headed Kernes,
Which live like venom,where no venom elſe
But onely they,have priviledge to live.
And for theſe great affayres do aske ſome charge
Towards our aſſiſtance,we do ſeize to us
The plate,coyne,and revennewes,and moveables,
Whereof our Vncle Gaunt did ſtand poſſeſt.
Yor. How long ſhall I be patient? Oh how long
Shall tender dutie make me ſuffer wrong?
Not Glouſters death,nor Herefords baniſhment,
Nor Gauntes rebukes,nor Englands private wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poore Bullingbrooke,
About his marriage,nor my owne diſgrace
Have ever made me ſowre my patient cheeke,
Or bend one wrinkle on my Soveraignes face:
I am the laſt of noble Edwards ſonnes,
Of whom thy father Prince of Wales was firſt;
In warres was never Lyon rag'd more fierce:
In peace, was never gentle Lambe more milde,
Then was that yong and Princely Gentleman:
His face thou haſt,for even ſo look'd he
Accompliſh'd with the number of thy howers:
But when he frown'd, it was againſt the French,
And not againſt his friends: his noble hand
Did win what he did ſpend: and ſpent not that
Which his triumphant fathers hand had won:
His hands were guiltie of no kindreds blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kinne:
Oh Richard,Yorke is too farre gone with greefe,
Or elſe he never would compare betweene.
Rich. Why Vncle,
What's the matter?
Yor. Oh my Liege,pardon me if you pleaſe,if not
I pleas'd not to be pardon'd,am content with all:
Seeke you to ſeize,and gripe into your hands
The Royalties and Rights of baniſh'd Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt juſt? and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deſerve to have an heyre?
Is not his heyre a well-deſerving ſonne?
Take Herefords rights away,and take from time
His Charters,and his cuſtomarie rights:
Let not to morrow then inſue to day,
Be not thy ſelfe. For how art thou a King
But by faire ſequence and ſucceſſion?
Now afore God,God forbid I ſay true,
If you doe wrongfully ſeize Herefords right,
Call in his Letters Patents that he hath
By his Atturneyes generall,to ſue
His Liverie,and denie his offer'd homage,
You plucke a thouſand dangers on your head,
You looſe a thouſand well-diſpoſed hearts,
And pricke my tender patience to thoſe thoughts
Which honor and allegeance cannot thinke.
Ric. Thinke what you will: we ſeiſe into our hands,
His plate,his goods,his money,and his lands.
Yor. Ile not be by the while: My Leige farewell,

What will enſue hereof, there's none can tell,
But by bad courſes may be underſtood,
That their events can never fall out good. Exit.
Rich. Go Buſhie to the Earle of Wiltſhire ſtreight,
Bid him repaire to us to Ely houſe,
To ſee this buſineſſe: to morrow next
We will for Ireland, and 'tis time, I trow:
And we create in abſence of our ſelfe
Our Vnckle Yorke, Lord Governor of England:
For he is juſt, and alwayes lov'd us well.
Come on our Queene, to morrow muſt we part,
Be merry, for our time of ſtay is ſhort. Flouriſh.

Manet North. Willoughby, and Roſſ.

Nor. Well Lords, the Duke of Lancaſter is dead.
Roſſ. And living too, for now his ſonne is Duke.
Will. Barely in title, not in revennew.
Nor. Richly in both, if juſtice had her right.
Roſſ. My heart is great: but it muſt break with ſilence
Er't be diſburthen'd with a liberall tongue.
Nor. Nay ſpeake thy mind: & let him ne'r ſpeake more
That ſpeakes thy words againe to doe thee harme.
Wil. Tends that thou'dſt ſpeake to th'Du. of Hereford?
If it be ſo, out with it boldly man:
Quicke is mine eare to heare of good towards him.
Roſſ. No good at all that I can doe for him,
Vnleſſe you call it good to pitie him,
Bereft and gelded of his patrimonie.
Nor. Now afore heaven, 'its ſhame ſuch wrongs are borne,
In him a royall Prince, and many moe
Of noble blood in this declining Land;
The King is not himſelfe, but baſely led
By flatterers, and what they will informe
Meerely in hate 'gainſt any of us all,
That will the King ſeverely proſecute
'Gainſt us, our lives, our children, and our heires.
Roſſ. The Commons hath he pill'd with greevous taxes
And quite loſt their hearts: the Nobles hath he fin'de
For ancient quarrels, and quite loſt their hearts.
Wil. And daily new exactions are deviſ'd,
As blankes, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what o'Gods name doth become of this?
Nor. Wars hath not waſted it, for war'd he hath not,
But baſely yeelded upon comprimize,
That which his Anceſtors atchiev'd with blowes:
More hath he ſpent in peace, then they in warres.
Roſ. The Earle of Wiltſhire hath the realme in Farme.
Wil. The King's growne bankrupt like a broken man.
Nor. Reproach, and diſſolution hangeth over him.
Roſ. He hath not monie for theſe Iriſh warres:
(His burthenous taxations notwithſtanding)
But by the robbing of the baniſh'd Duke.
Nor. His noble Kinſman, moſt degenerate King:
But Lords, we heare this fearefull tempeſt ſing,
Yet ſeeke no ſhelter to avoyd the ſtorme:
We ſee the winde ſit ſore upon our ſailes,
And yet we ſtrike not, but ſecurely periſh.
Roſ. We ſee the very wracke that we muſt ſuffer,
And unavoyded is the danger now
For ſuffering ſo the cauſes of our wracke.
Nor. Not ſo: even through the hollow eyes of death,
I ſpie life peering: but I dare not ſay
How neere the tidings of our comfort is.
Wil. Nay let us ſhare thy thoughts, as thou doſt ours.
Roſ. Be confident to ſpeake Northumberland,
We three, are but thy ſelfe, and ſpeaking ſo,
Thy words are but as thoughts, therefore be bold.
Nor. Then thus: I have from Port le Blan
A Bay in Britaine, receiv'd intelligence,
That Harry Duke of Hereford, Rainald Lord Cobham,
That late broke from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother Archbiſhop, late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir Iohn Rainſton,
Sir Iohn Norberie, Sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoin
All theſe well furniſh'd by the Duke of Britaine,
With eight tall ſhips, three thouſand men of warre
Are making hither with all due expedience,
And ſhortly meane to touch our Northerne ſhore:
Perhaps they had ere this, but that they ſtay
The firſt departing of the King for Ireland.
If then we ſhall ſhake off our ſlaviſh yoake,
Impe out our drooping Countries broken wing,
Redeeme from broaking pawne the blemiſh'd Crown
Wipe off the duſt that hides our Scepters gilt,
And make high Majeſtie looke like it ſelfe,
Away with me in poſte to Ravenſpurgh,
But if you faint, as fearing to doe ſo,
Stay, and be ſecret, and my ſelfe will go.
Roſ. To horſe, to horſe, urge doubts to them that fear
Wil. Hold out my horſe, and I will firſt be there.
Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Queene, Buſhy, and Bagot.

Buſh. Madam, your Majeſty is too much ſad,
You promis'd when you parted with the King,
To lay aſide ſelfe-harming heavineſſe,
And entertaine a cheerefull diſpoſition.
Qu. To pleaſe the King, I did: to pleaſe my ſelfe
I cannot doe it: yet I know no cauſe
Why I ſhould welcome ſuch a gueſt as greefe,
Save bidding farewell to ſo ſweet a gueſt
As my ſweet Richard; yet againe me thinkes
Some unborne ſorrow, ripe in fortunes wombe
Is comming towards me, and my inward ſoule
With nothing trembles, at ſomething it greeves,
More than with parting from my Lord the King.
Buſh. Each ſubſtance of a greefe hath twenty ſhadows
Which ſhewes like greefe it ſelfe, but is not ſo:
For ſorrowes eye, glazed with blinding teares,
Divides one thing intire, to many objects,
Like perſpectives, which rightly gaz'd upon
Shew nothing but confuſion, ey'd awry,
Diſtinguiſh forme: ſo your ſweet Majeſtie
Looking awry upon your Lords departure,
Finde ſhapes of greefe, more then himſelfe to waile,
Which look'd on as it is, is nought but ſhadowes
Of what it is not: then thrice-gracious Queene,
More then your Lords departure weepe not, more's not (ſeene;
Or if it be, 'tis with falſe ſorrowes eye,
Which for things true, weepe things imaginary.
Qu. It may be ſo: but yet my inward ſoule
Perſwades me it is otherwiſe: how ere it be,
I cannot but be ſad: ſo heavy ſad,
As though on thinking on no thought I thinke,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and ſhrinke.
Buſh. 'Tis nothing but conceit (my gracious Lady.)

Qu. 'Tis nothing leſſe: conceit is ſtill deriu'd
From ſome fore-father greefe, mine is not ſo,
For nothing hath begot my ſomething greefe,
Or ſomething, hath the nothing that I greeve,
'Tis in reverſion that I doe poſſeſſe,
But what it is, that is not yet knowne, what
I cannot name, 'tis nameleſſe woe I wot.

Enter Greene.

Gree. Heaven ſave your Majeſty, and wel met Gentle-
I hope the King is not yet ſhipt for Ireland. (men;
Qu. Why hop'ſt thou ſo? 'Tis better hope he is:
For his deſignes crave haſte, good hope;
Then wherefore doſt thou hope he is not ſhipt?
Gree. That he our hope, might have retyr'd his power,
and driven into deſpaire an enemies hope,
Who ſtrongly hath ſet footing in this Land,
The baniſh'd Bullingbrooke repeales himſelfe,
And with up-lifted Armes is ſafe arriu'd
At Ravenſpurg.
Qu. Now God in heaven forbid.
Gree. O Madam 'tis too true: and that is worſe,
The L. Northumberland, his yong ſonne Henry Percie,
The Lords of Roſſe, Beaumond, and Willoughby,
With all their powerfull friends are fled to him.
Buſh. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland
And the reſt of the revolted faction, Traitors?
Gree. We have: whereupon the Earle of Worceſter
Hath broke his ſtaffe, reſign'd his Stewardſhip,
And al the houſhold ſervants fled with him to Bullenbrook
Qu. So Greene, thou art the midwife of my woe,
And Bullinbrooke my ſorrowes diſmall heyre:
Now hath my ſoule brought forth her prodigie,
And I a gaſping new delivered mother,
Have woe to woe, ſorrow to ſorrow joyn'd.
Buſh. Deſpaire not Madam.
Qu. Who ſhall hinder me?
I will deſpaire, and be at enmitie
With couzening hope; he is a Flatterer,
A Paraſite, a keeper backe of death,
Who gently would diſſolve the bands of life,
Which falſe hopes linger in extremity.

Enter Yorke.

Gree. Heere comes the Duke of Yorke.
Qu. With ſignes of warre about his aged necke,
Oh full of carefull buſineſſe are his lookes:
Vnckle, for heavens ſake ſpeake comfortable words.
Yor. Comfort's in heaven, and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but croſſes, care and greefe:
Your husband he is gone to ſave farre off,
Whilſt others come to make his looſe at home:
Heere am I left to underprop his Land,
Who weake with age, cannot ſupport my ſelfe:
Now comes his ſicke houre that his ſurfet made,
Now ſhall he try his friends that flattered him.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. My Lord, your ſonne was gone before I came.
Yor. He was: why ſo, go all which way it will:
The Nobles they are fled, the Commons they are cold,
And will I feare revolt on Herefords ſide.
Sirra, get thee to Plaſhie to my ſiſter Gloſter,
Bid her ſend me preſently a thouſand pound,
Hold, take my Ring.
Ser. My Lord, I had forgot
To tell your Lordſhip, to day I came by, and call'd there,
But I ſhall greeve you to report the reſt.
Yor. What is't knave?
Ser. An houre before I came, the Dutcheſſe di'de.
Yor. Heav'n for his mercy, what a tide of woes
Come ruſhing on this wofull Land at once?
I know not what to doe: I would to heaven
(So my untruth had not provok'd him to it)
The King had cut off my head with my brothers.
What, are there poſtes diſpatcht for Ireland?
How ſhall we doe for mony for theſe warres?
Come ſiſter (Cozen I would ſay) pray pardon me.
Go follow, get thee home, provide ſome Carts,
And bring away the Armour that is there.
Gentlemen, will you muſter men?
If I know how, or which way to order theſe affaires
Thus diſorderly thruſt into my hands,
Never beleeve me. Both are my kinſmen,
Th'one is my Soveraigne, whom both my oath
And dutie bids defend: th'other againe
Is my kinſman, whom the King hath wrong'd,
Whom conſcience, and my kindred bids to right.
Well, ſomewhat we muſt do: Come Cozen,
Ile diſpoſe of you. Gentlemen, go muſter up your men,
And meet me preſently at Barkley Caſtle:
I ſhould to Plaſhy too: but time will not permit,
All is uneven, & every thing is left at ſix and ſeven. Exit.
Buſh. The wind ſits faire for newes to go to Ireland,
But none returnes: For us to levy power
Proportionable to th'enemy, is all impoſſible.
Gre. Beſides our neereneſſe to the King in love,
Is neere the hate of thoſe love not the King.
Bag. And that's the wavering Commons, for their love
Lies in their purſes, and who ſo empties them,
By ſo much fils their hearts with deadly hate.
Buſh. Wherein the king ſtands generally condemn'd.
Bag. If judgement lye in them, then ſo do we,
Becauſe we have beene ever neere the King.
Gree. Well: I will for refuge ſtreight to Briſtoll Caſtle,
The Earle of Wiltſhire is already there.
Buſh. Thither will I with you, for little office
Will the hatefull Commons performe for us,
Except like Curres, to teare us all in peeces:
Will you goe along with us?
Bag. No, I will to Ireland to his Majeſtie:
Farewell, if hearts preſages be not vaine,
We three here part, that neu'r ſhall meete againe.
Bu. That's as Yorke thrives to beate backe Bullinbrooke
Gr. Alas poore Duke, the taske he undertakes
Is numbring ſands, and drinking Oceans drie,
Where one on his ſide fights, thouſands will flye.
Buſh. Farewell at once, for once, for all, and ever.
Well, we may meete againe.
Bag. I feare me never. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter the Duke of Hereford, and Northumberland.

Bul. How farre is it my Lord to Barkley now?
Nor. Beleeve me noble Lord,
I am a ſtranger heere in Glouſterſhire,
Theſe high wilde hilles, and rough uneeven wayes,
Drawes out our miles, and makes them weariſome:
And yet our faire diſcourſe hath beene as ſugar,

Making the hard way ſweet and delectable:
But I bethinke me, what a wearie way
From Ravenſpurgh to Cottſhold will be found,
In Roſſe and Willoughby, wanting your companie,
Which I proteſt hath very much beguild
The tediouſneſſe, and proceſſe of my travell:
But theirs is ſweetned with the hope to have
The preſent benefit that I poſſeſſe:
And hope to joy, is little leſſe in joy,
Then hope enjoy'd: By this, the wearie Lords
Shall make their way ſeeme ſhort, as mine hath done,
By ſight of what I have, your Noble Companie.
Bull. Of much leſſe value is my Companie,
Then your good words: but who comes here?

Enter H. Percy.

North. it is my Sonne, young Harry Percie,
Sent from my brother Worceſter: Whence ſoever.
Harry, how fares your Vnckle?
Percie. I had thought, my Lord, to have learn'd his health of you.
North. Why, is he not with the Queene?
Percie. No, my good Lord, he hath forſooke the Court,
Broken his Staffe of Office, and diſperſt
The Houſehold of the King.
North. What was his reaſon?
He was not ſo reſolv'd, when we laſt ſpake together.
Percie. Becauſe your Lordſhip was proclaimed Traitor.
But hee, my Lord, is gone to Ravenſpurgh,
To offer ſervice to the Duke of Hereford,
And ſent me over by Barkely, to diſcover
What power the Duke of Yorke had levied there,
Then with direction to repaire to Ravenſpurgh.
North. Have you forgot the Duke of Hereford (Boy.)
Percie. No, my good Lord; for that is not forgot
Which ne're I did remember: to my knowledge,
I never in my life did looke on him.
North. Then learne to know him now: this is the Duke.
Percie. My gracious Lord, I tender you my ſervice,
Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young,
Which elder dayes ſhall ripen, and confirme
To more approved ſervice, and deſert.
Bull. I thanke thee gentle Percie, and be ſure
I count my ſelfe in nothing elſe ſo happy,
As in a Soule remembring my good Friends:
And as my fortune ripens with thy Love,
It ſhall be ſtill thy true Loves recompence,
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus ſeales it.
North. How farre is it to Barkely? and what ſtirre
Keepes good old Yorke there, with his Men of Warre?
Percie. There ſtands the Caſtle, by yond tuft of Trees,
Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard,
And in it are the Lords of Yorke, Barkely, and Seymor,
None elſe of Name, and noble eſtimate.

Enter Roſſe and Willoughby.

North. Here come the Lords of Roſſe and Willoughby,
Bloody with ſpurring, fierie red with haſte.
Bull. Welcome my Lords, I wot your love purſues
A baniſht Traitor; all my Treaſurie
Is yet but unfelt thankes, which more enrich'd,
Shall be your love, and labours recompence.
Roſſe. Your preſence makes us rich, moſt Noble Lord.
Willo. And farre ſurmounts our labour to attaine it.
Bull. Evermore thankes, th'Exchequer of the poore,
Which till my infant-fortune comes to yeeres,
Stands for my Bountie: but who comes here?

Enter Barkely.

North. It is my Lord of Barkely, as I gheſſe.
Bark. My Lord of Hereford, my Meſſage is to you.
Bull. My Lord, my anſwer is to Lancaſter,
And I am come to ſeeke that Name in England,
And I muſt finde that Title in your Towne,
Before I make reply to aught you ſay.
Bark. Miſtake me not, my Lord, 'tis not my meaning
To raze one title of your honour out.
To you, my Lord, I come (what Lord you will)
From the moſt glorious of this Land,
The Duke of Yorke, to know what pricks you on
To take advantage of the abſent time,
And fright our Native Peace with ſelfe-borne Armes.

Enter Yorke.

Bull. I ſhall not need tranſport my words by you,
Here comes his Grace in Perſon. My Noble Vnckle.
Yor. Shew me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
Whoſe dutie is deceivable, and falſe.
Bull. My gracious Vnckle.
Yor. Tut, tut, Grace me no Grace, nor Vnckle me,
I am no Traytors Vnckle; and that word Grace,
In an ungracious mouth, is but prophane.
Why have theſe baniſh'd, and forbidden Legges,
Dar'd once to touch a Duſt of Englands Ground?
But more then why, why have they dar'd to march
So many miles upon her peacefull Boſome,
Frighting her pale-fac'd Villages with Warre,
And oſtentation of deſpiſed Armes?
Com'ſt thou becauſe th'anoynted King is hence?
Why fooliſh Boy, the King is left behind,
And in my loyall Boſome lyes his power.
Were I but now the Lord of ſuch hot youth,
As when brave Gaunt, thy Father, and thy ſelfe
Reſcued the Black Prince, that yong Mars of men,
From forth the Rankes of many thouſand French:
Oh then, how quickly ſhould this Arme of mine,
Now Priſoner to the Palſie, chaſtiſe thee,
And miniſter correction to thy Fault.
Bull. My gracious Vnckle, let me know my Fault,
On what condition ſtands it, and wherein?
Yor. Even in condition of the worſt degree,
In groſſe Rebellion, and deteſted Treaſon:
Thou art a baniſh'd man, and here art come
Before th'expiration of thy time,
In braving Armes againſt thy Soveraigne.
Bull. As I was baniſh'd, I was baniſh'd Hereford,
But as I come, I come for Lancaſter.
And Noble Vnckle, I beſeech your Grace
Looke on my Wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my Father, for me thinkes in you
I ſee old Gaunt alive. Oh then my Father,
Will you permit, that I ſhall ſtand condemn'd
A wandring Vagabond; my Rights and Royalties
Pluckt from my armes perforce, and given away
To upſtart Vnthrifts? Wherefore was I borne?
If that my Couſin King, be King of England,
It muſt be graunted, I am Duke of Lancaſter.
You have a Sonne, Aumerle, my Noble Kinſman,
Had you firſt died, and he beene thus trod downe,
He ſhould have found his Vnckle Gaunt a Father,
To rowze his Wrongs, and chaſe them to the bay.
I am denyde to ſue my Liverie here,
And yet my Letters Patents give me leave:
My Fathers goods are all diſtraynd, and ſold,
And theſe, and all, are all amiſſe imployd.

Wha

What would you have me doe? I am a ſubject,
And challenge Law: Attorneyes are denyde me,
And therefore perſonally I lay my claime
To mine inheritance of free Deſcent.
North. The Noble Duke hath beene too much abuſd.
Roſſ. It ſtands your Grace upon, to doe him right.
Willo. Baſe men by his endowments are made great.
York. My Lords of England, let me tell you this,
I have had feeling of my Coſens Wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to doe him right:
But in this kind, to come in brauing Armes,
Be his owne Carver, and cut out his way,
To find out Right with wrongs, it may not be;
And you that doe abet him in this kind,
Cheriſh Rebellion, and are Rebels all.
North. The Noble Duke hath ſworne his comming is
But for his owne; and for the right of that,
We all have ſtrongly ſworne to give him ayd,
And let him nev'r ſee Ioy, that breakes that Oath.
York. Well, well, I ſee the iſſue of theſe Armes,
I cannot mend it, I muſt needes confeſſe,
Becauſe my power is weake, and all ill left:
But if I could, by him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you ſtoope
Vnto the Soueraigne mercy of the King.
But ſince I cannot, be it knowne to you,
I doe remaine as Neuter. So fare you well,
Vnleſſe you pleaſe to enter in the Caſtle,
And there repoſe you for this Night.
Bull. An offer Vnckle, that we will accept:
But we muſt winne your Grace to goe with us
To Briſtow Caſtle, which they ſay is held
By Buſhie, Bagot, and their Complices,
The Caterpillers of the Commonwealth,
Which I have ſworne to weed, and plucke away.
York. It may be I will go with you: but yet Ile pawſe,
For I am loth to breake our Countries Lawes:
Nor Friends, nor Foes, to me welcome you are,
Things paſt redreſſe, are now with me paſt care. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Salisbury, and a Captaine.

Capt. My Lord of Salisbury, we have ſtayd ten dayes,
And hardly kept your Countrey men together,
And yet we heare no tidings from the King;
Therefore we will diſperſe our ſelves: farewell.
Sal. Stay yet another day, thou truſtie Welchman,
The King repoſeth all his confidence in thee.
Capt. Tis thought the King is dead, we will not ſtay;
The Bay-trees in our Countrey all are wither'd,
And Meteors fright the fixed Starres of Heaven;
The pale-fac'de Moone lookes bloody on the Earth,
And leane-lookt Prophets whiſper fearefull change;
Rich men looke ſad, and Ruffians dance and leape,
The one in feare, to loſe what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by Rage, and Warre:
Theſe ſignes fore-run the death of Kings.
Farewell, our Countreymen are gone and fled,
As well aſſur'd Richard their King is dead. Exit.

Sal. Ah Richard, with eyes of heauie mind,
I ſee thy Glory, like a ſhooting Starre,
Fall to the baſe Earth, from the Firmament:
Thy Sunne ſets weeping in the lowly Weſt.
Witneſſing Stormes to come, Woe, and Vnreſt:
Thy Friends are fled, to wait upon thy Foes,
And croſſely to thy good, all fortune goes. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Bullingbrooke, Yorke, Northumberland,
Roſſe, Percie, Willoughby, with Buſhie
and Greene Priſoners.

Bull. Bring forth theſe men:
Buſhie and Greene, I will not vex your ſoules,
(Since preſently your ſoules muſt part your bodyes)
With too much urging your pernitious lives,
For 'twere no Charitie: yet to waſh your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men,
I will unfold ſome cauſes of your deaths.
You have mis-led a Prince, a Royall King,
A happy Gentleman in Blood, and Lineaments,
By you unhappied, and diſfigur'd cleane:
You have in manner with your ſinfull houres
Made a Divorce betwixt his Queene and him,
Broke the poſſeſſion of a Royall Bed,
And ſtayn'd the beautie of a faire Queenes Cheekes,
With teares drawn frō her eyes, with your foule wrongs.
My ſelfe a Prince, by fortune of my birth,
Neere to the King in blood, and neere in love,
Till you did make him miſ-interprete me,
Have ſtoopt my necke under your injuries,
And ſigh'd my Engliſh breath in forraine Clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of baniſhment;
While you have fed upon my Seignories,
Diſ-park'd my Parkes and fell'd my Forreſt Woods;
From mine owne Windowes torne my Houſehold Coat,
Raz'd out my Impreſſe, leaving me no ſigne,
Save mens opinions, and my living blood,
To ſhew the world I am a Gentleman.
This, and much more, much more then twice all this,
Condemnes you to the death: ſee them delivered over
To execution, and the hand of death.
Buſhie. More welcome is the ſtroke of death to me,
Then Bullingbrooke to England.
Gree. My comfort is, that Heaven will take our ſoules,
And plague Iniuſtice with the paines of Hell.
Bull. My Lord Northumberland, ſee them diſpatch'd:
Vnckle, you ſay the Queene is at your Houſe,
For Heavens ſake fairely let her be entreated,
Tell her I ſend to her my kind commends;
Take ſpeciall care my Greetings be deliver'd.
York. A Gentleman of mine I have diſpatch'd
With Letters of your love, to her at large.
Bull. Thankes gentle Vncle: come Lords away,
To fight with Glendoure, and his Complices;
A while to worke, and after holliday.
Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Drums: Flouriſh, and Colours.

Enter Richard, Aumerle, Carlile, and Souldiers.

Rich. Barkloughly Caſtle call you this at hand?
Au. Yea, my Lord: how brooks your Grace the ayre,
After your late toſſing on the breaking Seas?
Rich. Needes muſt I like it well: I weepe for ioy
To ſtand upon my Kingdome once againe.
Deere Earth, I doe ſalute thee with my hand,
Though Rebels wound thee with their Horſes hoofes:
As a long parted Mother with her Child,
Playes fondly with her teares, and ſmiles in meeting;
So weeping, ſmiling, greet I thee the Earth,
And doe thee fauor with my Royall hands.
Feed not thy Soveraigns Foe, my gentle Earth,
Nor with thy ſweetes, comfort his ravenous ſence:
But let thy Spiders that ſucke up thy Venome,
And heavie-gated Toades lye in their way,
Doing annoyance to the trecherous feete,
Which with uſurping ſteps doe trample thee.
Yeeld ſtinging Nettles to mine Enemies;
And when they from thy Boſome plucke a Flower,
Guard it I prethee with a lurking Adder,
Whoſe double tongue may with a mortall touch
Throw death upon thy Soveraignes Enemies.
Mocke not my ſenceleſſe Conjuration: Lords;
This Earth ſhall have a feeling, and theſe Stones
Prove armed Souldiers, ere her Native King
Shall falter under foule Rebellious Armes.
Car. Feare not my Lord, that Power that made you King
Hath power to keepe you King, in ſpight of all.
Aum. He meanes, my Lord, that we are too remiſſe,
Whileſt Bullingbrooke through their ſecurity,
Growes ſtrong and great, in ſubſtance and in friends.
Rich. Diſcomfortable Couſin, knoweſt thou not,
That when the ſearching Eye of heaven is hid
Behind the Globe, that lights the lower World,
Then Theeues and Robbers raunge abroad unſeene,
In Murthers and in out-rage bloody here:
But when from under this Terreſtriall Ball
He fires the prowd tops of the Eaſterne Pines,
And darts his Lightning through ev'ry guiltie hole,
Then Murthers, Treaſons and deteſted ſinnes
(The Cloake of Night being pluckt from off their backs)
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themſelves.
So when this Theefe, this Traytor Bullingbrooke,
Who all this while hath revell'd in the Night,
Shall ſee us riſing in our Throne, the Eaſt,
His Treaſons will ſit bluſhing in his face,
Not able to endure the ſight of Day;
But ſelfe-affrighted, tremble at his ſinne.
Not all the water in the rough rude Sea
Can waſh the Balme from an anoynted King;
The breath of wordly men cannot depoſe
The Deputie elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bullingbrooke hath preſt,
To lift ſhrewd Steele againſt our Golden Crowne,
Heaven for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
A glorious Angell: then if Angels fight,
Weake men muſt fall, for Heaven ſtill guards the right.

Enter Salisbury.

Welcome my Lord, how farre off lyes your Power?
Saliſb. Nor neere, nor farther off, my gracious Lord,
Then this weake arme; diſcomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me ſpeake of nothing but deſpaire:
One day too late, I feare (my Noble Lord)
Hath clouded all my happie dayes on Earth:
Oh call backe Yeſter day, bid time returne,
And thou ſhalt have twelve thouſand fighting men:
To day, to day, unhappie day too late
Orethrowes thy Ioyes, Friends, Fortune, and thy ſtate.
For all the Welchmen hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bullingbrooke, diſperſt, and fled.
Aum. Comfort my Liege, why lookes your Grace ſo pale?
Rich. But now the blood of twentie thouſaud men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled,
And till ſo much blood thither come againe,
Have I not reaſon to looke pale, and dead?
All ſoules that will be ſafe, flye from my ſide,
For time hath ſet a blot upon my pride.
Aum. Comfort my Liege, remember who you are.
Rich. I had forgot my ſelfe. Am I not King?
Awake thou ſluggard Majeſtie, thou ſleepeſt:
Is not the Kings Name fortie thouſand Names?
Arme, arme my Name: a punie ſubject ſtrikes
At thy great glory. Looke not to the ground,
Ye Favorites of a King: are we not high?
High be our thoughts: I know my Vnckle Yorke
Hath Power enough to ſerve our turne,
But who comes here? Enter Scroope
Scroope. More health and happineſſe betide my Leige,
Then can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him.
Rich. Mine eare is open, and my heart prepar'd:
The worſt is worldly loſſe, thou canſt unfold:
Say, Is my Kingdome loſt? why 'twas my Care:
And what loſſe is it to be rid of Care?
Strives Bullingbrooke to be as great as we?
Greater he ſhall not be: If he ſerve God,
Wee'l ſerve him too, and bee his Fellow ſo.
Revolt our ſubjects? That we cannot mend,
They breake their Faith to God as well as us:
Cry Woe, Deſtruction, Ruine, Loſſe, Decay,
The worſt is Death, and death will have his day.
Scroope. Glad am I, that your Highneſſe is ſo arm'd
To beare the tidings of Calamitie.
Like an unſeaſonable ſtormie day,
Which make the ſilver Rivers drowne their Shores,
As if the World were all diſſolu'd to teares:
So high, above his Limits, ſwells the Rage
Of Bullingbrooke, covering your fearefull Land
With hard bright Steele, and hearts harder then Steele:
White Beares have arm'd their thin & haireleſſe Scalps
Againſt thy Majeſty, and Boyes with Womens Voyces,
Strive to ſpeake bigge, and clap their female joynts
In ſtiffe unwieldie Armes: againſt thy Crowne
Thy very Beadſ-men learne to bend their Bowes
Of double fatall Eugh: againſt thy ſtate
Yea Diſtaffe-Women manage ruſtie Bills:
Againſt thy Seat both young and old rebell,
And all goes worſe then I have power to tell.
Rich. Too well, too well thou tell'ſt a Tale ſo ill.
Where is the Earle of Wiltſhire? where is Bagot?
What is become of Buſhie? where is Greene?

That they have let the dangerous Enemy
Meaſure our Confines with ſuch peacefull ſteps?
If we prevaile, their hands ſhall pay for it.
I warrant they have made peace with Bullingbrooke.
Scroope. Peace have they made with him indeede (my Lord.)
Rich. Oh Villains, Vipers, damn'd without redemption,
Dogges, eaſily won to fawne on any man,
Snakes in my heart blood warm'd, that ſting my heart,
Three Iudaſſes, each one thrice worſe then Iudas,
Would they make peace? terrible Hell make warre
Vpon their ſpotted Soules for this Offence.
Scroope. Sweet Love (I ſee) changing his property,
Turnes to the ſowreſt, and moſt deadly hate:
Againe uncurſe their Soules; their peace is made
With Heads, and not with Hands: thoſe whom you curſe
Have felt the worſt of Deaths deſtroying hand,
And lye full low, grav'd in the hollow ground.
Aum. Is Buſhie, Greene, and the Earle of Wiltſhire dead?
Scroope. Yea, all of them at Briſtow loſt their heads.
Aum. Where is the Duke my Father with his Power?
Rich. No matter where, of comfort no man ſpeake:
Let's talke of Graves, of Wormes, and Epitaphs,
Make Duſt our Paper, and with Rainy eyes
Write Sorrow in the Boſome of the Earth.
Let's chuſe Executors, and talke of Wills:
And yet not ſo; for what can we bequeath,
Save our depoſed bodyes to the ground?
Our Lands, our lives and all are Bullingbrookes,
And nothing can we call our owne, but Death,
And that ſmall Modell of the barren Earth,
Which ſerves as paſte, and Cover to our Bones:
For Heavens ſake let us ſit upon the ground,
And tell ſad ſtories of the death of Kings:
How ſome have beene depos'd, ſome ſlaine in warre,
Some haunted by the Ghoſts they have depos'd,
Some poyſon'd by their Wives ſome ſleeping kill'd,
All murther'd. For within the hollow Crowne
That rounds the mortall Temples of a King,
Keepes Death his Court, and there the Antique ſits
Scoffing his State, and grinning at his pompe,
Allowing him a breath, a little Scene,
To Monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with lookes,
Infuſing him with ſelfe and vaine conceit,
As if this Fleſh, which walls about our Life,
Were Braſſe impregnahle: and humor'd thus,
Comes at the laſt, and with a little Pinne
Boares through his Caſtle Walls, and farewell King.
Cover your heads, and mocke not fleſh and blood
With ſolemne Reverence: throw away Reſpect,
Tradition, Forme, and Ceremonious dutie,
For you have but miſtooke me all this while:
I live with bread like you, feele Want,
Taſte Griefe, need Friends: ſubjected thus,
How can you ſay to me, I am a King?
Carl. My Lord; wiſe men ne're waile their preſent woes,
But preſently prevent the wayes to waile:
To feare the Foe, ſince feare oppreſſeth ſtrength,
Gives in your weakeneſſe, ſtrength unto your Foe;
Feare, and be ſlaine, no worſe can come to fight,
And fight and die, is death deſtroying death.
Where fearing, dying, payes death ſervile breath.
Aum. My Father hath a Power, enquire of him,
And learne to make a Body of a Limbe.
Rich: Thou chid'ſt me well: proud Bullingbrooke I come
To change blowes with thee, for our day of Doome:
This ague fit of feare is over-blowne,
An eaſie taske it is to winne our owne.
Say Scroope, where lyes our Vnckle with his Power?
Speake ſweetely man, although thy lookes be ſowre.
Scroope. Men judge by the complexion of the Skie
The ſtate and inclination of the day;
So may you by my dull and heavie Eye:
My tongue hath but a heavier Tale to ſay:
I play the Torturer, by ſmall and ſmall
To lengthen out the worſt, that muſt be ſpoken.
Your Vnckle Yorke is joyn'd with Bullingbrooke,
And all your Northerne Caſtles yeelded up,
And all your Southerne Gentlemen in Armes
Vpon his Faction.
Rich. Thou haſt ſayd enough.
Beſhrew thee Couſin, which didſt leade me forth
Of that ſweet way I was in, to deſpaire:
What ſay you now? What comfort have we now?
By heaven Ile hate him everlaſtingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more.
Goe to Flint Caſtle, there Ile pine away,
A King, Woes ſlave, ſhall Kingly Woe obey:
That Power I have, diſcharge, and let 'em goe
To eare the Land, that hath ſome hope to grow,
For I have none. Let no man ſpeake againe
To alter this, for counſaile is but vaine.
Aum. My Liege, one word.
Rich. He does me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Diſcharge my followers: let them hence away,
From Richards Night, to Bullingbrooke faire Day.
Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Bullingbrooke,
Yorke, Northumberland, Attendants.

Bull. So that by this intelligence we learne
The Welchmen are diſpers'd, and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the King, who lately landed
With ſome few private friends, upon this Coaſt.
North. The newes is very faire and good, my Lord,
Richard not farre from hence, hath hid his head.
Yor. It would beſeeme the Lord Northumberland,
To ſay King Richard: alacke the heavie day,
When ſuch a ſacred King ſhould hide his head.
North. Your Grace miſtakes: onely to be briefe,
Left I his Title out.
Yor. The time hath beene,
Would you have beene ſo briefe with him, he would
Have beene ſo briefe with you, to ſhorten you,
For taking ſo the head, your whole heads length.
Bull. Miſtake not (Vnckle) farther than you ſhould.
Yor. Take not (good Couſin) farther than you ſhould,
Leaſt you miſtake the heavens are ore your head.
Bull. I know it (Vnckle) and oppoſe not my ſelfe
Againe their will. But who comes here?
EnteTr ercie.
Welcome Harry: what; will not this Caſtle yeeld?
Per. The Caſtle royally is mann'd, my Lord,
Againſt thy entrance.
Bull. Roy-

Bull. Royally? Why,it contaynes no King?
Per. Yes (my good Lord)
It doth containe a King: Kind Richard lyes
Within the limits of yond Lime and Stone,
And with him,the Lord Aumerle,Lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroope,beſides a Clergie man
Of holy reverence; who,I cannot learne.
North. Oh,belike it is the Biſhop of Carlile.
Bul. Noble Lord,
Goe to the rude Ribs of that ancient Caſtle,
Through Brazen Trumpet ſend the breath of Parle
Into his ruin'd Eares,and thus deliver:
Henry Bullingbrooke upon his knees doth kiſſe
King Richards hand,and ſends allegeance
And true faith of heart to his royall Perſon: hither come
Even at his feet, to lay my Armes and power,
Provided,that my Baniſhment repeal'd,
And Lands reſtor'd againe,be freely graunted:
If not,Ile uſe th'advantage of my power,
And lay the ſummers duſt with ſhowers of blood,
Rayn'd from the wounds of ſlaughter'd Engliſhmen;
The which,how farre off from the mind of Bullingbrooke
It is,ſuch Crimſon Tempeſt ſhould bedrench
The freſh greene Lap of faire King Richards Land,
My ſtooping duty tenderly ſhall ſhew.
Goe ſignifie as much,while here we march
Vpon the Graſſie Carpet of this plaine:
Let's march without the noyſe of threatning Drum,
That from this Caſtles tatter'd Battlements
Our faire Appointments may be well perus'd.
Me thinkes King Richard and my ſelfe ſhould meete
With no leſſe terror than the Elements
Of Fire and Water,when their thundring ſmoake
At meeting teares the cloudie Cheekes of Heaven:
Be he the fire,Ile be the yeelding Water;
The Rage be his,while on the Earth I raine
My Waters on the Earth,and not on him.
March on,and marke King Richard how he lookes.

Parle without,and anſwere within: then a Flouriſh.
Enter on the Walls, Richard, Carlile, Aumerle, Scroop, Salisbury.

See,ſee,King Richard doth himſelfe appeare
As doth the bluſhing diſcontented Sunne,
From out the fierie Portall of the Eaſt,
When he perceives the envious Clouds are bent
To dimme his glory,and to ſtaine the tract
Of his bright paſſage to the Occident.
York. Yet lookes he like a King: behold his Eye
(As bright as is the Eagles) lightens forth
Controlling Majeſtie: alack, alack, for woe,
That any harme ſhould ſtaine ſo faire a ſhow.
Rich. We are amaz'd,and thus long have we ſtood
To watch the fearefull bending of thy knee,
Becauſe we thought our ſelfe thy lawfull King:
And if we be, how dare thy joynts forget
To pay the awfull dutie to our preſence?
If we be not, ſhew us the Hand of God,
That hath diſmiſs'd us from our Stewardſhip,
For well we know, no hand of Blood and Bone
Can gripe the ſacred Handle of our Scepter,
Vnleſſe he doe prophane, ſteale or uſurpe.
And though you thinke, that all, as you have done,
Have torne their ſoules, by turning them from us,
And we are barren, and bereft of Friends:
Yet know, my Maſter, God Omnipotent,
Is muſtring in his Clouds, on our behalfe,
Armies of Peſtilence, and they ſhall ſtrike
Your Children yet unborne, and unbegot,
That lift your Vaſſall Hands againſt my Head,
And threat the Glory of my precious Crowne.
Tell Bullingbrooke, for yond me thinkes he is,
That every ſtride he makes upon my Land,
Is dangerous Treaſon: he is come to ope
The purple Teſtament of bleeding Warre;
But ere the Crowne he lookes for, live in peace.
Ten thouſand bloody crownes of Mothers Sonnes
Shall ill become the flower of Englands face,
Change the complexion of her Maid-pale Peace
To Scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her Paſtors Graſſe with faithfull Engliſh Blood.
North. The King of Heaven forbid our Lord the King
Should ſo with civill and uncivill Armes
Be ruſh'd upon: Thy thrice-noble Couſin,
Harry Bullingbrooke, doth humbly kiſſe thy hand,
And by the Honorable Tombe he ſweares,
That ſtands upon your Royall Grandſires Bones,
And by the Royalties of both your bloods
(Currents that ſpring from one moſt gracious Head)
And by the buried Hand of Warlike Gaunt,
And by the Worth and Honour of himſelfe,
Compriſing all that may be ſworne, or ſaid,
His comming hither hath no furthet ſcope,
Than for his Lineall Royalties, and to begge
Infranchiſement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy Royall partie granted once,
His glittering Armes he will commend to Ruſt,
His barbed Steedes to Stables, and his heart
To faithfull ſervice of your Maieſty:
This ſweares he, as he is a Prince, is juſt,
And as I am a Gentleman, I credit him.
Rich. Northumberland, ſay thus: The King returnes,
His Noble Couſin is right welcome hither,
And all the number of his faire demands
Shall be accompliſh'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou haſt,
Speake to his gentle hearing kind commends.
We doe debaſe our ſelfe (Couſin) doe we not,
To looke ſo poorely, and to ſpeake ſo faire?
Shall we call back Northumberland and ſend
Defiance to the Traytor and ſo die?
Aum. No,good my Lord,let's fight with gentle words,
Till time lend friends, & friends their hopefull Swords.
Rich. Oh God, oh God,that ere this tongue of mine,
That layd the Sentence of dread Baniſhment
On yond proud man, ſhould take it off againe
With words of ſooth: Oh that I were as great
As is my Griefe, or leſſer than my Name,
Or that I could forget what I have beene,
Or not remember what I muſt be now:
Swell'ſt thou proud heart? Ile give thee ſcope to beate,
Since foes have ſcope to beate both thee and me.
Aum. Northumberland comes backe from Bullingbrooke.
Rich. What muſt the King doe now? muſt he ſubmit?
The King ſhall doe it: Muſt he be depos'd?
The King ſhall be contented: Muſt he loſe
The Name of King? o' Gods Name let it goe.
Ile give my Iewels for a ſet of beades,
My gorgeous Pallace, for a Hermitage,
My gay Apparrell, for an Almes-mans Gowne,
My figur'd Goblets, for a Diſh of Wood;
My Scepter, for a Palmers walking Staffe,

My Subjects, for a payre of carved Saints,
And my large Kingdome, for a little Grave,
A little little Grave, an obſcure Grave.
Or Ile be buried in the Kings high-way,
Some way of common Trade, where Subjects feete
May howrely trample on their Soveraignes Head:
For on my heart they tread now, whileſt I live;
And buried once, why not upon my Head?
Aumarle, thou weep'ſt (my tender-hearted Couſin)
Wee'le make foule Weather with deſpiſed Teares:
Our ſighes, and they, ſhall lodge the Summer Corne,
And make a Dearth in this revolting Land.
Or ſhall we play the Wantons with our Woes,
And make ſome prettie Match with ſhedding Teares?
As thus: to drop them ſtill upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a payre of Graves,
Within the Earth: and therein lay'd, their lyes
Two Kinſmen digg'd their Graves with weeping Eyes?
Would not this ill, doe well? Well, well, I ſee
I talke but idly, and you mocke at me.
Moſt mightie Prince, my Lord Northumberland,
What ſayes King Bullingbrooke? Will his Majeſtie
Give Richard leave to live, till Richard die?
You make a Legge, and Bullingbrooke ſayes I.
North. My Lord, in the baſe Court he doth attend
To ſpeake with you, may it pleaſe you to come downe.
Rich. Downe, downe I come, like gliſt'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly Iades.
In the baſe Court? baſe Court where Kings grow baſe,
To come at Traytors Calls, and doe them Grace.
In the baſe Court come down: down Court, down King,
For night-Owls ſhrike, where mounting Larks ſhould (ſing.
Bull. What ſayes his Majeſtie?
North. Sorrow, and griefe of heart
Makes him ſpeake fondly, like a franticke man:
Yet he is come.
Bull. Stand all apart,
And ſhew faire dutie to his Majeſtie.
My gracious Lord.
Rich. Faire Couſin.
You debaſe your Princely Knee,
To make the baſe Earth proud with kiſſing it.
Me rather had, my Heart might feele your Love,
Than my unpleas'd Eye ſee your Courteſie.
Vp Couſin, up, your Heart is up, I know,
Thus high at leaſt, although your Knee be low.
Bull. My gracious Lord, I come but for mine owne.
Rich. Your owne is yours, and I am yours, and all.
Bull. So farre be mine, (my moſt redoubted Lord,)
As my true ſervice ſhall deſerue your love.
Rich. Well you deſerv'd:
They well deſerue to have,
That know the ſtrong'ſt, and ſureſt way to get.
Vnckle give me your hand: nay, drie your Eyes,
Teares ſhew their Love, but want their remedies.
Couſin I am to young too be your Father,
Though you are old enough to be my Heire.
What you will have, Ile give, and willing too,
For doe we muſt, what force will have us doe.
Set one towards London:
Couſin, is it ſo?
Bull. Yea, my good Lord.
Rich. Then I muſt not ſay, no.
Flouriſh. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Queene and two Ladies.

Qu. What ſport ſhall we deviſe here in this Garden,
To drive away the heavie thought of Care?
La. Madame, wee'le play at Bowles.
Qu. 'Twill make me thinke the World is full of Rubs,
And that my fortune runnes againſt the Byas.
La. Madame, wee'le Dance.
Qu. My Legges can keepe no meaſure in Delight,
When my poore Heart no meaſure keepes in Griefe.
Therefore no Dancing (Girle) ſome other ſport.
La. Madame, wee'le tell Tales.
Qu. Of Sorrow, or of Griefe?
La. Of eyther, Madame.
Qu. Of neyther, Girle.
For if of Ioy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of Sorrow:
Or if of Griefe, being altogether had,
It addes more Sorrow to my want of Ioy:
For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it bootes not to complaine.
La. Madame, Ile ſing.
Qu. 'Tis well that thou haſt cauſe:
But thou ſhould'ſt pleaſe me better, would'ſt thou weepe.
La. I could weepe, Madame, would it doe you good.
Qu. And I could ſing, would weeping doe me good,
And never borrow any Teare of thee.
Enter a Gardiner, and two Servants.
But ſtay, heere come the Gardiners,
Let's ſtep into the ſhadow of theſe Trees.
My wretchedneſſe, unto a Rowe of Pinnes,
They'le talke of ſtate: for every one doth ſo,
Againſt a Change; Woe is fore-runne with Woe.
Gard. Goe binde thou up yond dangling Apricocks,
Which like unruly Children, make their Syre
Stoupe with oppreſſion of their prodigall weight:
Give ſome ſupportance to the bending twigges.
Goe thou, and like an Executioner
Cut off the heads of too faſt growing ſprayes,
That looke too loftie in our Common-wealth:
All muſt be even, in our Governement.
You thus imploy'd, I will goe root away
The noyſome weedes, that without profit ſucke
The Soyles fertilitie from wholeſome flowers.
Ser. Why ſhould wee, in the compaſſe of a Pale,
Keepe Law and Forme, and due Proportion,
Shewing as in a Modell our firme ſtate?
When our Sea-walled Garden, (the whole Land,)
Is full of Weedes, her faireſt Flowers choakt up,
Her Fruit-trees all unpruin'd, her Hedges ruin'd,
Her Knots diſorder'd, and her wholeſome Hearbes
Swarming with Caterpillers.
Gard. Hold thy peace.
He that hath ſuffer'd this diſorder'd Spring,
Hath now himſelfe met with the Fall of Leafe.
The Weeds that his broad-ſpreading Leaves did ſhelter,
That ſeem'd, in eating him, to hold him up,
Are pull'd up, Root and all, by Bullingbrooke:
I meane, the Earle of Wiltſhire, Buſhie, Greene,

Ser. What are they dead?
Gard. They are,
And Bullingbrooke hath ſeiz'd the waſtefull King.
What pitty is it, that he had not trim'd
And dreſt his Land, as we this Garden, at time of yeare;
And wound the Barke, the skin of our Fruit-trees,
Leaſt being over-proud with Sap and Blood,
With too much riches it confound it ſelfe?
Had he done ſo, to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to beare, and he to taſte
Their fruites of dutie. All ſuperfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughes may live:
Had he done ſo, himſelfe had borne the Crowne,
Which waſte and idle houres, hath quite thrown downe.
Ser. What thinke you the King ſhall be depos'd?
Gor. Depreſt he is already, and depos'd
'Tis doubted he will be. Letters came laſt night
To a deere Friend of the Duke of Yorke,
That tell blacke tydings.
Qu. Oh I am preſt to death through want of ſpeaking:
Thou old Adams likeneſſe, ſet to dreſſe this Garden:
How dares thy harſh tongue ſound this unpleaſing newes?
What Eve? what ſerpent hath ſuggeſted thee,
To make a ſecond fall of curſed man?
Why do'ſt thou ſay King Rechard is depos'd?
Dar'ſt thou (thou little better thing then earth)
Divine his downfall? Say where, when, and how Cam'ſt thou by this ill tydings? Speake thou wretch.
Gard. Pardon me Madam. Little joy have I
To breath theſe newes; yet what I ſay, is true;
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bullingbrooke, their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your Lords Scale, is nothing but himſelfe,
And ſome few Vanities, that make him light:
But in the Ballance of great Bullingbrooke,
Beſides himſelfe, are all the Engliſh Peeres,
And with that oddes he weighes King Richard downe.
Poſte you to London, and you'l finde it ſo,
I ſpeake no more, then every one doth know.
Qu. Nimble miſchance, that art ſo light of foote,
Doth not thy Embaſſage belong to me?
And am I laſt that knowes it? Oh thou think'ſt
To ſerve me laſt, that I may longeſt keepe
Thy ſorrow in my breaſt. Come Ladie goe,
To meet at London, Londons King in woe.
What, was I borne to this! that my ſad looke,
Should grace the Triumph of great Bullingbrooke!
Gard'ner, for telling me this newes of woe,
I would the Plants thou graft'ſt, may never grow. Exit.
G. Poore Queene, ſo that thy ſtate might be no worſe,
I would my skill were ſubject to thy curſe:
Heere did ſhe drop a teare, heere in this place
Ile ſet a Banke of Rew, (ſowre Herbe of Grace:)
Rue, eu'n for ruth, heere ſhortly ſhall be ſeene,
In the remembrance of a Weeping Queene. Exit.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter as to the Parliament, Bullingbrooke, Aumerle, Northumberland, Percie, Fitz-Water, Surrey, Carlile, Abbot of Weſtminſter. Herauld, Officers, and Bagot.

Bullingbrooke, Call forth Bagot.
Now Bagot, freely ſpeake thy minde,
What thou do'ſt know of Noble Glouſters death;
Who wrought it with the King, and who perform'd
The bloody Office of his timeleſſe end.
Bag. Then ſet before my face, the Lord Aumerle.
Bull. Coſin, ſtand forth and looke upon that man.
Bag. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scornes to unſay, what it hath once deliver'd.
In that dead time, when Glouſters death was plotted,
I heard you ſay, Is not my arme of length,
That reacheth from the reſt full Engliſh Court
As farre as Callis, to my Vnckles head.
Amongſt much other talke, that very time,
I heard you ſay, that you had rather refuſe
The offer of an hundred thouſand Crownes,
Then Bullingbrooke returne to England; adding withall,
How bleſt this Land would be, in this your Coſins death.
Aum. Princes and Noble Lords:
What anſwer ſhall I make to this baſe man?
Shall I ſo much diſhonour my faire Starres,
On equall termes to give him chaſticement?
Either I muſt, or have mine honour ſpoyld
With th' Atteindor of his ſland'rous Lippes.
There is my Gage, the manuall Seale of death
That markes thee out for Hell. Thou lyeſt,
And will maintaine what thou haſt ſaid, is falſe,
In thy heart blood, though being all too baſe,
To ſtaine the temper of my Knightly ſword.
Bul. Bagot forbeare, thou ſhalt not take it up.
Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the beſt
In all this preſence, that hath moved me ſo.
Fitz. If that thy valour ſtand on ſympathies:
There is my Gage, Aumerle, in Gage to thine:
By that faire Sunne, that ſhewes me where thou ſtand'ſt,
I heard thee ſay (and vantingly thou ſpak'ſt it)
That thou wer't cauſe of Noble Glouſters death.
If thou denieſt it, twenty times thou lyeſt,
And I will turne thy falſhood to thy heart,
Where it was forged with my Rapiers point.
Aum. Thou dar'ſt not (Coward) live to ſee the day.
Fitz. Now by my Soule, I would it were this houre.
Aum Fitzwater thou art damn'd to hell for this.
Per. Aumerle, thou lye'ſt: his Honor is as true
In this appeale, as thou art all unjuſt:
And that thou art ſo, there I throw my Gage
To prove it on thee, to th'extreameſt point
Of mortall breathing. Seize it, if thou dar'ſt.
Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandiſh more revengefull Steele,
Over the glittering Helmet of my Foe.
Surrey. My Lord Fitz-water:
I do remember well, the very time
Aumerle, and you did talke.
Fitz. My Lord,
'Tis very true: You were in preſence then,
And you can witneſſe with me, this is true.
Surrey. As falſe, by heaven,
As heaven it ſelfe is true.
Fitz. Surry, thou Lyeſt.
Surry. Diſhonourable Boy;
That Lye, ſhall lie ſo heavy on my Sword,
That it ſhall render Vengeance and Revenge,
Till thou the Lye-giver, and that Lye, doe lye
In earth as quiet, as thy Fathers Scull.
In proofe whereof, there is mine Honors pawne,
Engage it to the Triall, if thou dar'ſt.

Fitzw. How fondly do'ſt thou ſpurre a forward Horſe?
If I dare eate, or drinke, or breath, or live,
I dare meete Surry in a Wilderneſſe,
And ſpit upon him, whilſt I ſay he Lyes,
And Lyes, and Lyes: there is my bond of Faith,
To tye thee to my ſtrong Correction.
A I intended to thrive in this new World,
Aumerle is guilty of my true Appeale.
Beſides, I heard the baniſh'd Norfolke ſay,
That thou Aumerle didſt ſend two of thy men,
To execute the Noble Duke at Callis.
Aum. Some honeſt Chriſtian truſt me with a Gage,
That Norfolke lyes: here doe I throw downe this,
If he may be repeald, to try his honour.
Bull. Theſe differences ſhall all reſt under Gage,
Till Norfolke be repeal'd: repeal'd he ſhall be;
(And though mine Enemy) reſtor'd againe
To all his Lands and Seignories: when hee's return'd,
Againſt Aumerle we will inforce his Tryall.
Carl. That honorable day ſhall ne're be ſeene.
Many a time hath baniſh'd Norfolke fought
For Ieſu Chriſt, in glorious Chriſtian field
Streaming the Enſigne of the Chriſtian Croſſe
Againſt blacke Pagans, Turkes, and Saracens:
And toyl'd with workes of Warre, retyr'd himſelfe
To Italy, and there at Venice gave
His Body to that pleaſant Countries Earth,
And his pure Soule unto his Captaine Chriſt,
Vnder whoſe Colours he had fought ſo long.
Bull. Why Biſhop, is Norforke dead?
Carl. As ſure as I live my Lord.
Bull. Sweet peace conduct his ſweet Soule
To the Boſome of good old Abraham.
Lords Appealants, your differẽces ſhal all reſt under gage,
Till we aſſigne you to your dayes of Tryall.

Enter Yorke.

Yorke. Great Duke of Lancaſter, I come to thee
From Plume-pluckt Richard, who with willing Soule
Adopts thee Heire, and his high Scepter yeelds
To the poſſeſſion of thy Royall Hand.
Aſcend his Throne, deſcending now from him,
And long live Henry, of that Name the Fourth.
Bull. In Gods Name, Ile aſcend the Regall throne.
Carl. Mary, Heaven forbid.
Worſt in this Royall Preſence may I ſpeake,
Yet beſt beſeeming me to ſpeake the truth.
Would God, that any in this Noble Preſence
Were enough Noble to be upright Iudge
Of Noble Richard; then true Nobleneſſe would
Learne him forbearance from ſo foule a Wrong.
What Subject can give Sentence on his King?
And who ſits here, that is not Richards Subject?
Theeves are not judg'd, but they are by to heare,
Although apparant guilt be ſeene in them:
And ſhall the figure of Gods Majeſtie,
His Captaine, Steward, Deputie elect,
Anoynted, Crown'd and planted many yeeres,
Be judg'd by ſubject, and inferior breath,
And he himſelfe not preſent? Oh, forbid it, God,
That in a Chriſtian Climate, Soules refinde
Should ſhew ſo heynous, blacke, obſcene a deed.
I ſpeake to Subjects, and a Subject ſpeakes,
Stirr'd up by Heaven, thus boldly for his King.
My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call King,
Is a foule Traytor to prowd Herefords King.
And if you Crowne him, let me prophecie,
The blood of Engliſh ſhall manure the ground,
And future ages groane for his foule Act.
Peace ſhall goe ſleepe with Turkes and Infidels,
And in this Seat of Peace, tumultuous Warres
Shall Kinne with Kinne, and Kinde with Kinde confound.
Diſorder, Horror, Feare, and Mutinie
Shall here inhabite, and this Land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead mens Sculls.
Oh, if you reare this Houſe, againſt this Houſe
It will the wofulleſt Diviſion prove,
That ever fell upon this curſed Earth.
Prevent it, reſiſt it, let it not be ſo,
Leaſt Child, Childs Children cry againſt you, Woe.
North. Well have you argu'd Sir: and for your paines,
Of Capitall Treaſon we arreſt you here.
My Lord of Weſtminſter, be it your charge,
To keepe him ſafely, till his day of Tryall.
May it pleaſe you, Lords, to grant the Commons Suit?
Bull. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may ſurrender: ſo we ſhall proceede
Without ſuſpition.
Yor. I will be his Conduct. Exit.
Bull. Lords, you that here are under our Arreſt,
Procure your Sureties for your Dayes of Anſwer:
Little are we beholding to your Love,
And little look'd for at your helping Hands.

Enter Richard and Yorke.

Rich. Alack, why am I ſent for to a King,
Before I have ſhooke off the Regall thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To inſinuate, flatter, bowe, and bend my Knee.
Give Sorrow leave a while, to returne me
To this ſubmiſſion. Yet I will remember
The favors of theſe men: were they not mine?
Did they not ſometime cry, All hayle to me?
So Iudas did to Chriſt: but he in twelve,
Found truth in all, but one; I, in twelve thouſand, none.
God ſave the King: will no man ſay, Amen?
Am I both Prieſt and Clarke? well then, Amen.
God ſave the King, although I be not he:
And yet Amen, if Heaven doe thinke him me.
To doe what ſervice, am I ſent for hither?
Yor. To doe that office of thine owne good will,
Which tyred Majeſtie did make thee offer:
The Reſignation of thy State and Crowne
To Henry Bullingbrooke.
Rich. Give me the Crown. Here Couſin, ſeize the Crown:
Here Coſin, on this ſide my Hand, on that ſide thine.
Now is this Golden Crowne like a deepe Well,
That owes two Buckets, filling one another,
The emptier ever dancing in the ayre,
The other downe, unſeene, and full of Water:
That Bucket downe, and full of Teares am I,
Drinking my Griefes, whilſt you mount up on high.
Bul. I thought you had beene willing to reſigne.
Rich. My Crowne I am, but ſtill my Griefes are mine:
You may my Glories and my State depoſe,
But not my Griefes; ſtill am I King of thoſe.
Bull. Part of your Cares you give me with your Crown.
Rich. Your Cares ſet up, doe not pluck my Cares down.
My Care, is loſſe of Care, by old Care done,
Your Care, is gaine of Care, by new Care wonne:
The Cares I give, I have, though given away,
They tend the Crowne, yet ſtill with me they ſtay:
Bull. Are you contented to reſigne the Crowne?

Rich. I,no;no,I : for I muſt nothing bee :
Therefore no,no,for I reſigne to thee.
Now,marke me how I will undoe my ſelfe.
I give this heavie Weight from off my Head,
And this unwieldie Scepter from my Hand,
The pride of Kingly ſway from out my Heart,
With mine owne Teares I Waſh away my Blame,
With mine owne Hands I give away my Crowne,
With mine owne Tongue denie my Sacred State,
With mine owne Breath releaſe all dutious Oathes :
All Pompe and Majeſtie I doe forſweare :
My Manors,Rents,Revenues, I forgoe ;
My Acts,Decrees,and Statutes I denie :
God pardon all Oathes that are broke to me,
God keepe all Vowes unbroke are made to thee.
Make me,that nothing have,with nothing griev'd,
And thou with all pleas'd,that haſt all atchiev'd,
Long mayſt thou live in Richards Seat to ſit,
And ſoone lye Richard in an Earthie Pit.
God ſave King Henry,un-King'd Richard ſayes,
And ſend him many yeeres of Sunne-ſhine dayes.
What more remaines ?
North. No more : but that you reade
Theſe Accuſations,and theſe grievous Crymes,
Committed by your Perſon,and your followers,
Againſt the State,and Profit of this Land:
That by confeſſing them,the Soules of men
May deeme,that you are worthily depos'd.
Rich. Muſt I doe ſo ? and muſt I ravell out
My weav'd-up follyes ? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy Offences were upon Record,
Would it not ſhame thee, in ſo faire a troupe,
To reade a Lecture of them ? If thou would'ſt,
There ſhould'ſt thou finde one haynous Article,
Containing the depoſing of a King,
And cracking the ſtrong Warrant of an Oath,
Mark'd with a Blot,damn'd in the Booke of Heaven.
Nay, all of you,that ſtand and looke upon me,
Whil'ſt that my wretchedneſſe doth bait my ſelfe,
Though ſome of you,with Pilate waſh your hands,
Shewing an outward pittie ; yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my ſowre Croſſe,
And Water cannot waſh away your ſinne.
North. My Lord diſpatch,reade o're theſe Articles.
Rich. Mine Eyes are full of Teares,I cannot ſee :
And yet ſalt-Water blindes them not ſo much,
But they can ſee a ſort of Traytors here.
Nay,if I turne mine Eyes upon my ſelfe,
I finde my ſelfe a Traytor with the reſt :
For I have given here my Soules conſent,
T'undeck the pompous Body of a King ;
Made Glory baſe ; a Soveraigne,a Slave;
Prowd Majeſtie,a Subject ; State,a Peſant.
North. My Lord.
Rich. No Lord of thine,thou haught-inſulting man ;
No,nor no mans Lord : I have no Name,no Title;
No,not that Name was given me at the Font,
But 'tis uſurpt : alack the heavie day,
That I have worne ſo many Winters out,
And know not now,what Name to call my ſelfe.
Oh,that I were a Mockerie,King of Snow,
Standing before the Sunne of Bullingbrooke,
To melt my ſelfe away in Water-drops.
Good King,great King,and yet not greatly good,
And if my word be Sterling yet in England,
Let it command a Mirror hither ſtraight,
That it may ſhew me what a Face I have,
Since it is Bankrupt of his Majeſtie.
Bull. Goe ſome of you,and fetch a Looking-Glaſſe.
Nor. Reade o're this Paper,while the Glaſſe doth come.
Rich. Fiend,thou torments me,ere I come to Hell.
Bull. Vrge it no more,my Lord Northumberland.
North. The Commons will not then be ſatisfy'd.
Rich. They ſhall be ſatisfy'd : Ile reade enough,
When I doe ſee the very Booke indeede,
Where all my ſinnes are writ,and that's my ſelfe.

Enter one with a Glaſſe.

Give me that Glaſſe,and therein will I reade.
No deeper wrinckles yet? hath ſorrow ſtrucke
So many Blowes upon this Face of mine,
And made no deeper Wounds ? Oh flatt'ring Glaſſe,
Like to my followers in proſperitie,
Thou do'ſt beguile me. Was this Face,the Face
That every day, under his Houſe-hold Roofe,
Did keepe ten thouſand men ? Was this the Face,
That like the Snnne,did make beholders winke ?
Is this the Face,which fac'd ſo many follyes,
That was at laſt out-fac'd by Bullingbrooke ?
A brittle Glory ſhineth in this Face,
As brittle as the Glory,is the Face,
For there it is,crackt in an hundred ſhivers.
Marke ſilent King,the Morall of this ſport,
How ſoone my Sorrow hath deſtroy'd my Face.
Bul. The ſhadow of your Sorrow hath deſtroy'd
The ſhadow of your Face.
Rich. Say that againe.
The ſhadow of my Sorrow : ha, let's ſee,
'Tis very true, my Griefe lyes all within,
And theſe externall manners of Laments,
Are meerely ſhadowes to the unſeene Griefe,
That ſwells with ſilence in the tortur'd Soule.
There lyes the ſubſtance : and I thanke thee King
For thy great bounty, that not onely giv'ſt
Me cauſe to waile, but teacheſt me the way
How to lament the cauſe. Ile begge one Boone,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtaine it ?
Bul. Name it, faire Couſin.
Rich. Faire Couſin ? I am greater than a King :
For when I was a King, my flatterers
Were then but ſubjects ; being now a ſubject,
I have a King heere to my flatterer:
Being ſo great, I have no neede to begge.
Bul. Yet aske.
Rich. And ſhall I have?
Bul. You ſhall.
Rich. Then give me leave to goe.
Bul. Whither ?
Rich. Whither you will,ſo I were from your ſights.
Bul. Goe ſome of you, convey him to the Tower.
Rich. Oh good : convey : Conveyers are you all,
That riſe thus nimbly by a true Kings fall.
Bul. On Wedneſday next, we ſolemnly ſet downe
Our Coronation : Lords, prepare your ſelves. Exeunt.
Abbot. A wofull Pageant have we here beheld.
Carl. The Woe's to come,the Children yet unborne,
Shall feele this day as ſharpe to them as Thorne.
Aum. You holy Clergie-men, is there no Plot
To rid the Realme of this pernicious Blot?
Abbot. Before I freely ſpeake my minde heerein,
You ſhall not onely take the Sacrament,
To bury mine intents, but alſo to effect

Wh

What ever I ſhall happen to deviſe.
I ſee your Browes are full of Diſcontent,
Your Heart of Sorrow, and your eyes of Teares:
Come home with me to Supper, Ile lay a Plot
Shall ſhew us all a merry day. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Queene, and Ladies.

Qu. This way the King will come: this is the way
To Julius Cæsars ill-erected Tower:
To whoſe flint Boſome, my condemned Lord
Is doom'd a Priſoner, by proud Bullingbrooke.
Here let us reſt, if this Rebellious Earth
Have any reſting for her true Kings Queene.

Enter Richard and Guard.

But ſoft, but ſee, or rather doe not ſee,
My faire Roſe wither: yet looke up; behold,
That you in pittie may diſſolve to dew,
And waſh him freſh againe with true-love Teares.
Ah thou, the Modell where old Troy did ſtand,
Thou Mappe of Honour, thou King Richards Tombe,
And not King Richard: thou moſt beauteous Inne,
Why ſhould hard-favor'd Griefe be lodg'd in thee,
When Triumph is become an Ale-houſe Gueſt?
Rich. Ioyne not with griefe, faire Woman, do not ſo,
To make my end too ſudden: learne good Soule,
To thinke our former State a happy Dreame,
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are,
Shewes us but this. I am ſworne Brother (Sweet)
To grim Neceſſitie; and he and I
Will keepe a League till Death. High thee to France,
And Cloyſter thee in ſome Religious Houſe:
Our holy lives muſt winne a new worlds Crowne,
Which our prophane houres here have ſtricken downe.
Qu. What, is my Richard both in ſhape and minde
Transform'd, and weaken'd? Hath Bullingbrooke
Depos'd thine Intellect? hath he beene in thy Heart?
The Lyon dying thruſteth forth his Paw,
And wounds the Earth, if nothing elſe, with rage
To be o're-powr'd: and wilt thou, Pupill-like,
Take thy Correction mildly, kiſſe the Rodde,
And fawne on rage with baſe humility,
Which art a Lyon and a King of Beaſts?
Rich. A King of beaſts indeed: if aught but Beaſts,
I had beene ſtill a happy King of Men.
Good (ſometime Queene) prepare thee hence for France:
Thinke I am dead, and that even here thou tak'ſt,
As from my Death-bed, my laſt living leave.
In Winters tedious Nights ſit by the fire
With good old folkes, and let them tell thee Tales
Of wofull Ages, long agoe betide:
And ere thou bid good-night, to quit their griefe,
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And ſend the hearers weeping to their Beds:
For why? the ſenceleſſe Brands will ſympathize
The heavie accent of my moving Tongue,
And in compaſſion, weepe the fire out:
And ſome will mourne in Aſhes, ſome coale-blacke,
For the depoſing of a rightfull King.

Enter Northumberland.

North. My Lord, the mind of Bullingbrooke is chang'd.
You muſt to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.
And Madame, there is order ta'ne for you:
With all ſwift ſpeed, you muſt away to France.
Rich. Northumberland, thou Ladder wherewithall
The mounting Bullingbrooke aſcends my Throne,
The time ſhall not be many houres of age,
More than it is, ere foule ſinne, gathering head,
Shall breake into corruption: thou ſhalt thinke,
Though he devide the Realme, and give thee halfe,
It is too little, helping him to all:
He ſhall thinke, that thou which know'ſt the way
To plant unrightfull Kings, wilt know againe,
Being ne're ſo little urg'd, another way,
To plucke him headlong from th' uſurped Throne.
The Love of wicked friends converts to Feare;
That Feare, to Hate; and Hate turnes one, or both,
To worthie Danger, and deſerved Death.
North. My guilt be on my Head, and there an end:
Take leave, and part, for you muſt part forthwith.
Rich. Doubly divorc'd? (bad men) ye violate
A two-fold Marriage; 'twixt my Crowne, and me,
And then betwixt me, and my marryed Wife.
Let me un-kiſſe the Oath 'twixt thee and me;
And yet not ſo, for with a kiſſe 'twas made.
Part us Northumberland: I, towards the North,
Where ſhivering Cold and Sickneſſe pines the Clyme:
My Queene to France: from whence, ſet forth in pompe,
She came adorned hither like ſweet May;
Sent backe like Hollowmas, or ſhort'ſt of day.
Qu. And muſt wee be divided? muſt we part?
Rich. I, hand from hand (my Love) and heart frō heart.
Qu. Baniſh us both, and ſend the King with me.
North. That were ſome Love, but little Pollicy.
Qu. Then whither he goes, thither let me goe.
Rich. So two together weping, make one Woe.
Weepe thou for me in France; I, for thee heere:
Better farre off, than neere, be ne're the neere.
Goe, count thy Way with Sighes; I, mine with Groanes.
Qu. So longeſt Way ſhall have the longeſt Moanes.
Ric. Twice for one ſtep Ile groane, the way being ſhort,
And peece the way out with a heavie heart.
Come, come, in wooing Sorrow let's be briefe,
Since wedding it, there is ſuch length in Griefe:
One Kiſſe ſhall ſtop our mouthes, and dumbely part;
Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart.
Qu. Give me mine owne againe: 'twere no good part,
To take on me to keepe, and kill thy heart.
So, now I have mine owne againe, be gone,
That I may ſtrive to kill it with a groane.
Rich. We make Woe wanton with this fond delay:
Once more adieu; the reſt let Sorrow ſay. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Yorke, and his Ducheſſe.

Duch. My Lord, you told me you would tell the reſt,
When weeping made you breake the ſtory off,
Of our two Couſins comming into London.
Yor. Where did I leave?
Dut. At that ſad ſtoppe, my Lord,
Where rude miſ-govern'd hands, from Windowes tops,
Threw duſt and rubbiſh on King Richards head.

Yo. Then, as I ſayd, the Duke (great Bullingbrooke,)
Mounted upon a hot and fierie Steed,
Which his aſpiring Rider ſeem'd to know,
With ſlow, but ſtately pace, kept on his courſe :
While all tongues cride, God ſave thee Bullingbrooke.
You would have thought the very windowes ſpake,
So many greedy lookes of young and old,
Through Caſements darted their deſiring eyes
Vpon his viſage : and that all the walles
With painted Imagery had ſayd at once,
Ieſu preſerve thee, welcome Bullingbrooke.
Whil'ſt he, from one ſide to the other turning,
Bare-headed, lower then his proud Steeds necke,
Beſpake them thus : I thanke you Countrimen :
And thus ſtill doing, thus he paſt along.
Dutch. Alas poore Richard, where rides he the whilſt?
Yorke. As in a Theater, the eyes of men
After a well grac'd Actor leaves the Stage,
Are idlely bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious :
Even ſo, or with much more contempt, mens eyes
Did ſcowle on Richard ; no man cride, God ſave him :
No joyfull tongue gave him his welcome home,
But duſt was throwne upon his Sacred head,
Which with ſuch gentle ſorrow he ſhooke off,
His face ſtill combating with teares and ſmiles
(The badges of his greefe and patience)
That had not God (for ſome ſtrong purpoſe) ſteel'd
The hearts of men, they muſt perforce have melted,
And Barbariſme it ſelfe have pittied him.
But heaven hath a hand in theſe events,
To whoſe high will we bound our calme contents.
To Bullingbrooke, are we ſworne Subjects now,
Whoſe State, and Honour, I for for aye allow.

Enter Aumerle.

Dut. Heere comes my ſonne Aumerle.
Yor. Aumerle that was,
But that is loſt, for being Richards Friend.
And Madam, you muſt call him Rutland now :
I am in Parliament pledge for his truth,
And laſting fealtie in the new-made King.
Dut. Welcome my ſonne : who are the Violets now,
That ſtrew the greene lap of the new-come Spring ?
Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not,
God knowes, I had as liefe be none, as one.
Yorke. Well, beare you well in this new-ſpring of time,
Leaſt you be cropt before you come to prime.
What newes frō Oxford? Hold thoſe Iuſts & Triumphs?
Aum. For ought I know my Lord, they do.
York. You will be there I know.
Aum. If God prevent not, I pupoſe ſo.
Yor. What Seale is that that hangs without thy boſom?
Yea, look'ſt thou pale ? Let me ſee the Writing.
Aum. My Lord, 'tis nothing.
Yor. No matter then who ſees it,
I will be ſatisfied, let me ſee the Writing.
Aum. I do beſeech your Grace to pardon me,
It is a matter of ſmall conſequence,
Which for ſome reaſons I would not have ſeene.
Yor. Which for ſome reaſons ſir, I meane to ſee :
I feare, I feare.
Dut. What ſhould you feare?
'Tis nothing but ſome bond, that he is enter'd into
For gay apparrell, againſt the Triumph.
Yor. Bound to him ſelfe? What doth he with a Bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a foole.
Boy, let me ſee the Writing.
Aum. I do beſeech you pardon me, I may not ſhew it.
Yor. I will be ſatisfied, let me ſee it I ſay. Snatches it
Treaſon, foule Treaſon, Villaine, Traitor, Slave.
Dut. What's the matter, my Lord ?
Yorke. Hoa, who's within there ? Saddle my horſe.
Heaven for his mercy : what treachery is heere ?
Dut. Why, what is't my Lord ?
Yorke. Give me my boots, I ſay : Saddle my horſe :
Now by my honour, my life, my troth,
I will appeach the Villaine.
Dut. What is the matter ?
Yorke. Peace fooliſh Woman.
Dut. I will not peace. What is the matter Sonne?
Aum. Good Mother be content, it is no more
Then my poore life muſt anſwer.
Dut. Thy life anſwer ?

Enter Servant with Boots.

Yor. Bring my Bootes, I will unto the King.
Dut. Strike him Aumerle. Poore boy, thou art amaz'd,
Hence Villaine, never more come in my ſight.
Yor. Give me my Bootes I ſay.
Dut. Why Yorke what wilt thou do?
Wilt thou not hide the Treſpaſſe of thine owne?
Have we more Sonnes? Or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunke up with time?
And wilt thou plucke my faire Sonne from mine Age,
And rob me of a happie Mothers name ?
Is he not like thee? Is he not thine owne?
Yor. Thou fond mad woman:
Wilt thou conceale this darke Conſpiracy ?
A dozen of them heere have tane the Sacrament,
And interchangeably ſet downe their hands
To kill the King at Oxford.
Dut. He ſhall be none:
Wee'l keepe him here : then what is that to him?
Yor. Away fond woman : where he twenty times my Son, I would appeach him.
Dut. Hadſt thou groan'd for him as I have done,
Thou wouldeſt be more pittifull :
But now I know thy minde; thou do'ſt ſuſpect
That I have beene diſloyall to thy bed,
And that he is a Baſtard, not thy Sonne :
Sweet Yorke, ſweet husband, be not of that minde:
He is as like thee, as a man may be,
Not like to me, nor any of my Kin,
And yet I love him.
Yor. Make way, unruly Woman. Exit
Dut. After Aumerle. Mount thee upon his horſe,
Spurre poſt, and get before him to the King,
And beg thy pardon, ere he do accuſe thee,
Ile not be long behind : though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as faſt as Yorke:
And never will I riſe up from the ground,
Till Bullingbrooke have pardon'd thee: Away, be gone. Ex

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Bullingbrooke, Percie, and other Lords.

Bull. Can no man tell of my unthriftie Sonne ?
'Tis full three monthes ſince I did ſee him laſt.
If any plague hang over us, 'tis he:
I would to heaven (my Lords) he might be found,
Enquire at London, 'mongſt the Tavernes there:

For there (they ſay) he dayly doth frequent,
With unreſtrained looſe Companions,
Even ſuch (they ſay) as ſtand in narrow Lanes,
And rob our Watch, and beate our paſſengers,
Which he (yong wanton, and effeminate Boy)
Takes on the point of Honour, to ſupport
So diſſolute a crew.

Per. My Lord, ſome two dayes ſince I ſaw the Prince,
And told him of theſe Triumphes held at Oxford.

Bull. And what ſayd the Gallant?

Per. His anſwer was: he would unto the Stewes,
And from the common'ſt creature plucke a Glove
And weare it as a favour, and with that
He would unhorſe the luſtieſt Challenger.

Bull. As diſſolute as deſp'rate, yet through both,
I ſee ſome ſparkes of better hope: which elder dayes
May happily bring forth. But who comes here?

Enter Aumerle.

Aum. Where is the King?

Bull. What meanes our Couſin, that he ſtares
And lookes ſo wildely?

Aum. God ſave your Grace. I do beſeech your Majeſty
To have ſome conference with your Grace alone.

Bull. Withdraw your ſelves, and leave us here alone:
What is the matter with our Couſin now?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,
My tongue cleave to my roofe within my mouth,
Vnleſſe a Pardon, ere I riſe or ſpeake.

Bull. Intended or committed was this fault?
If on the firſt, how hainous ere it be,
To win thy after-love I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave, that I may turne the key,
That no man enter till the tale be done.

Bull. Have thy deſire. Yorke within.

Yor. My Liege beware, looke to thy ſelfe,
Thou haſt a Traytor in thy preſence there.

Bull. Villaine, Ile make thee ſafe.

Aum. Stay thy revengefull hand, thou haſt no cauſe to feare.

Yorke. Open the doore, ſecure foole-hardy King:
Shall I for love ſpeake treaſon to thy face?
Open the doore, or I will breake it open.

Enter Yorke.

Bul. What is the matter (Vnkle) ſpeak, recover breath,
Tell us how neere is danger,
That we may arme us to encounter it.

Yor. Peruſe this writing here, and thou ſhalt know
The reaſon that my haſte forbids me ſhow.

Aum. Remember as thou read'ſt, thy promiſe paſt:
I do repent me, reade not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

Yor. It was (villaine) ere thy hand did ſet it downe.
I tore it from the traitors boſome, King.
Feare and not Love, begets his penitence;
Forget to pitty him, leaſt thy pitty prove
A Serpent, that will ſting thee to the heart.

Bull. Oh heinous, ſtrong, and bould Conſpiracie,
O loyall Father of a treacherous Sonne:
Thou ſheere, immaculate, and ſilver fountaine,
From whence this ſtreame, through muddy paſſages
Hath had his current, and defil'd himſelfe.
Thy overflow of good, converts to bad,
And thine abundant goodneſſe ſhall excuſe
This deadly blot, in thy digreſſing ſonne.

Yor. So ſhall my vertue be his vices bawd,
And he ſhall ſpend mine Honour, with his Shame:
As thriftleſſe Sonnes their ſcraping Fathers Gold.
Mine honour lives when his diſhonor dyes,
Or my ſham'd life in his diſhonour lies:
Thou kill'ſt me in his life, giving him breath,
The Traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Dutcheſſe within.

Dut. What hoa (my Liege) for heavens ſake let me in.

Bull. What ſhrill-voic'd Suppliant makes this eager cry?

Dut. A Woman and thine Aunt (great King) 'tis I.
Speake with me, pitty me, open the dore,
A Begger begs, that never begg'd before.

Bul. Our Scene is alter'd from a ſerious thing,
And now chang'd to the Begger, and the King:
My daungerous Coſin, let your Mother in,
I know ſhe's come to pray for your foule ſin.

Yor. If thou do pardon, whoſoever pray,
More ſinnes for this forgiveneſſe, proſper may.
This feſter'd joynt cut off, the reſt reſts ſound,
This let alone, will all the reſt confound.

Enter Dutcheſſe.

Dut. O King, beleeve not this heard-hearted man,
Love, loving not it ſelfe, none other can.

Yor. Thou franticke woman, what doſt thou make here,
Shall thy old dugges once more a Traitor reare?

Dut. Sweet Yorke be patient, heare me gentle Liege.

Bul. Riſe up good Aunt.

Dut. Not yet, I thee beſeech.
For ever will I kneele upon my knees,
And never ſee day that the happy ſees,
Till thou give joy: vntill thou bid me ioy.
By pardoning Rutland, my tranſgreſſing Boy.

Aum. Vnto my Mothers prayers, I bend my knee.

Yorke. Againſt them both, my true joynts bended be.

Dut. Pleades he in earneſt? Looke upon his Face,
His eyes do drop no teares: his prayers are in ieſt:
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breſt.
He prayes but faintly, and would be denide,
We pray with heart, and ſoule, and all beſide:
His wearie joynts would gladly riſe, I know,
Our knees ſhall kneele, till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of falſe hypocriſie,
Ours of true zeale, and deepe integritie:
Our prayers do out-pray his, then let them have
That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.

Bul. Good Aunt ſtand up.

Dut. Nay do not ſay ſtand up.
But Pardon firſt, and afterwards ſtand up.
And if I were thy Nurſe, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon ſhould be the firſt word of thy ſpeech.
I never long'd to heare a word till now:
Say Pardon (King,) let pitty teach thee how.
The word is ſhort: but not ſo ſhort as ſweet,
No word like Pardon, for Kings mouth's ſo meet.

Yor. Speake it in French (King) ſayd Pardon'ne moy.

Dut. Doſt thou teach pardon, Pardon to deſtroy?
Ah my ſowre husband, my hard-hearted Lord,
That ſet'ſt the word it ſelfe, againſt the word.
Speake pardon as 'tis currant in our Land,
The chopping French we doe not underſtand.
Thine eye begins to ſpeake, ſet thy tongue there;
Or in thy pitteous heart, plant thou thine eare,
That hearing how our plaints and prayers do pearce,
Pitty may move thee, Pardon to rehearſe.

Bul. Good Aunt, ſtand up.

Dut. I do not ſue to ſtand,
Pardon is all the ſuit I have in hand.

Bull. I pardon him as heaven ſhall pardon me.
Dut. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee:
Yet am I ſicke for feare: Speake it againe,
Twice ſaying Pardon, doth not pardon twaine,
But makes one pardon ſtrong.
Bull. I pardon him with all my heart.
Dut. A God on earth thou art.
Bul. But for our truſty brother-in-Law, the Abbot,
With all the reſt of that conſorted crew,
Deſtruction ſtraight ſhall dogge them at the heeles:
Good Vnckle helpe to order ſeverall powres
To Oxford, or where ere theſe Traitors are:
They ſhall not live within this world I ſweare,
But I will have them once know where.
Vnckle farewell, and Coſin adieu:
Your mother well hath prayd, and prove you true.
Dut. Come my old ſon, I pray heaven make thee new.
Exit.

Enter Exton and Servant.

Ext. Didſt thou not marke the King what words he ſpake?
Have I no friend will rid me of this living feare:
Was it not ſo?
Ser. Thoſe were his very words.
Ex. Have I no Friend? (quoth he:) he ſpake it twice,
And urg'd it twice together, did he not?
Ser. He did.
Ex. And ſpeaking it, he wiſtly look'd on me,
As who ſhall ſay, I would thou wer't the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart;
Meaning the King at Pomfret: Come, let's goe;
I am the Kings friend, and will rid his Foe. Exit.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Richard.

Rich. I have bin ſtudying, how to compare
This Priſon where I live, unto the World:
And for becauſe the world is populous,
And heere is not a Creature, but my ſelfe,
I cannot doe it: yet Ile hammer't out.
My Braine, Ile prove the Female to my Soule,
My ſoule, the Father: and theſe two beget
A generation of ſtill breeding Thoughts;
And theſe ſame Thoughts, people this Little World
In humors, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better ſort,
As thoughts of things Divine, are intermixt
With ſcruples, and do ſet the Faith it ſelfe
Againſt the Faith: as thus: Come little ones: & then again,
It is as hard to come, as for a Camell
To thred the poſterne of a Needles eye.
Thoughts tending to Ambition, they do plot
Vnlikely wonders; how theſe vaine weake nailes
May teare a paſſage through the Flinty ribbes
Of this hard world, my ragged priſon walles:
And for they cannot, dye in their owne pride.
Thoughts tending to Content, flatter themſelves,
That they are not the firſt of Fortunes ſlaves,
Nor ſhall not be the laſt. Like ſilly Beggars,
Who ſitting in the Stockes, refuge their ſhame
That many have, and others muſt ſit there;
And in this Thought, they finde a kind of eaſe,
Bearing their owne misfortune on the backe
Of ſuch as have before indur'd the like.
Thus play I in one Priſon, many people,
And none contented. Sometimes am I King;
Then Treaſon makes me wiſh my ſelfe a Beggar,
And ſo I am. Then cruſhing penurie,
Perſwades me, I was better when a King:
Then am I king'd againe: and by and by,
Thinke that I am un-king'd by Bullingbrooke,
And ſtraight am nothing. But what ere I am, Muſick
Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing ſhall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being nothing. Muſicke do I heare?
Ha, ha? keepe time: How ſowre ſweet Muſicke is,
When Time is broke, and no Proportion kept?
So is it in the Muſicke of mens lives:
And here have I the daintineſſe of eare,
To heare time broke in a diſorder'd ſtring:
But for the Concord of my State and Time,
Had not an eare to heare my true Time broke.
I waſted Time, and now doth Time waſte me:
For now hath Time made me his numbring clocke;
My Thoughts, are minutes; and with Sighes they iarre,
Their watches to mine eyes, the outward Watch,
Whereto my finger, like a Dialls point,
Is pointing ſtill, in clenſing them from teares.
Now ſir, the ſound that tels what houre it is,
Are clamorous groanes, that ſtrike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: ſo Sighes, and Teares, and Grones,
Shew Minutes, Houres, and Times: O but my Time
Runs poaſting on, in Bullingbrookes proud joy,
While I ſtand fooling heere, his jacke o' th' Clocke.
This Muſicke mads me, let it ſound no more,
For though it have holpe madmen to their wits,
In me it ſeemes, it will make wiſe-men mad:
Yet bleſſing on his heart that gives it me;
For 'tis a ſigne of love, and love to Richard,
Is a ſtrange Brooch, in this all-hating world.

Enter Groome.

Groo. Haile Royall Prince.
Rich. Thankes Noble Peere.
The cheapeſt of us, is ten groates too deere.
What art thou? And how com'ſt thou hither?
Where no man ever comes, but that ſad dogge
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?
Groo. I was a poore Groome of thy Stable (King)
When thou wer't King, who travelling towards Yorke,
With much adoo, at length have gotten leave
To looke upon my (ſometimes Royall) maſters face.
O how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld
In London ſtreetes, that Coronation day,
When Bullingbrooke rode on Roane Barbary,
That horſe, that thou ſo often haſt beſtrid,
That horſe, that I ſo carefully have dreſt.
Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me gentle Friend,
How went he under him?
Groo. So proudly, as if he had diſdaind the ground.
Rich. So proud, that Bullingbrooke was on his backe;
That Iade hath eate bread from my Royall hand.
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not ſtumble? Would he not fall downe
(Since Pride muſt have a fall) and breake the necke
Of that proud man, that did uſurpe his backe?
Forgiveneſſe horſe: Why do I raile on thee,
Since thou created to be aw'd by man
Was't borne to beare? I was not made a horſe,

And yet I beare a burthen like an Aſſe,
Spur-gall'd, and tyr'd by jauncing Bullingbrooke.

Enter Keeper with a Diſh.

Keep. Fellow, give place, heere is no longer ſtay.
Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wer't away.
Groo. What my tongue dares nor, that my heart ſhall ſay. Exit.
Keep. My Lord, wilt pleaſe you to fall too?
Rich. Taſte of it firſt, as thou wer't wont to doo.
Keep. My Lord I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exton,
Who lately came from th' King, commands the contrary.
Rich. The divell take Henrie of Lancaſter, and thee;
Patience is ſtale, and I am weary of it.
Keep. Helpe, helpe, helpe.

Enter Exton and Servants.

Ri. How now? what meanes Death in this rude aſſalt?
Villaine, thine owne hand yeelds thy deaths inſtrument,
Go thou and fill another roome in hell.

Exton ſtrikes him downe.

That hand ſhall burne in never-quenching fire,
That ſtaggers thus my perſon. Exton, thy fierce hand,
Hath with the Kings blood, ſtain'd the Kings own land.
Mount, mount my ſoule, thy ſeate is up on high;
Whil'ſt my groſſe fleſh ſinkes downward, heere to dye.
Exton. As full of Valor as of Royall blood,
Both have I ſpilt: Oh would the deed were good,
For now the divell, that told me I did well,
Sayes, that this deede is chronicled in hell.
This dead King to the living King Ile beare,
Take hence the reſt, and give them buriall heere. Exit.

Scæna Quinta.

Flouriſh. Enter Bullingbrooke, Yorke, with other Lords & attendants.

Bull. Vnkle Yorke, the lateſt newes we heare,
Is that the Rebels have conſum'd with fire
Our Towne of Ciceter in Glouceſterſhire,
But whether they be tane or ſlaine, we heare not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome my Lord: What is the newes?
Nor. Firſt to thy Sacred State, wiſh I all happineſſe:
The next newes is, I have to London ſent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:
The manner of their taking may appeare
At large diſcourſed in this paper heere.
Bull. We thanke thee gentle Percy for thy paines,
And to thy worth will adde right worthy gaines.

Enter Fitz-waters.

Fitz. My Lord, I have from Oxford ſent to London,
The heads of Broccas, and Sir Bennet Seely,
Two of the dangerous conſorted Traitors,
That ſought at Oxford, thy dire overthrow.
Bull. Thy paines Fitzwaters ſhall not be forgot,
Right Noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy and Carlile.

Per. The grand Conſpirator, Abbort of Weſtminſter,
With clog of Conſcience, and ſowre melancholly,
Hath yeelded up his body to the grave:
But heere is Carlile, living to abide
Thy Kingly doome, and ſentence of his pride.
Bull. Carlile, this is your doome:
Chooſe out ſome ſecret place, ſome reverend roome
More than thou haſt, and with it joy thy ſelfe:
So as thou liv'ſt in peace, dye free from ſtrife:
For though mine enemy thou haſt ever beene,
High ſparkes of Honor in thee have I ſeene.

Enter Exton with a Coffin.

Exton. Great King, within this Coffin I preſent
Thy buried feare. Heerein all breathleſſe lies
The mightieſt of thy greateſt enemies
Richard of Burdeaux, by me hither brought.
Bull. Exton, I thanke thee not, for thou haſt wrought
A deede of Slaughter, with thy fatall hand,
Vpon my head, and all this famous Land.
Ex. From your owne mouth my Lord, did I this deed.
Bull. They love not poyſon, that do poyſon neede,
Nor do I thee: though I did wiſh him dead,
I hate the Murtherer, love him murthered.
The guilt of conſcience take thou for thy labour,
But neyther my good word, nor Princely favour.
With Caine go wander through the ſhade of night,
And never ſhew thy head by day, nor light.
Lords, I proteſt my ſoule is full of woe,
That blood ſhould ſprinkle me, and make me grow.
Come mourne with me, for that I do lament,
And put on ſullen Blacke incontinent:
Ile make a voyage to the holy-land,
To waſh this blood off from my guilty hand.
March ſadly after, grace my mourning heere,
In weeping after this untimely Beere. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Firſt Part of Henry the Fourth, with the Life and Death of HENRY Sirnamed HOT-SPVRRE.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the King, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, Earle of Weſtmerland, with others.

King.

SO ſhaken as we are, ſo wan with care,
Find we a time for frighted Peace to pant,
And breath ſhortwinded accents of new broils
To be commenc'd in Stronds a-farre remote:
No more the thirſty entrance of this Soyle,
Shall dambe her lippes with her owne childrens blood:
No more ſhall trenching Warre channell her fields,
Nor bruiſe her Flowrets with the Armed hooſes
Of hoſtile paces. Thoſe oppoſed eyes,
Which like the Meteors of a troubled Heaven,
All of one Nature, of one Subſtance bred,
Did lately meete in the inteſtine ſhocke,
And furious cloze of civill Butchery,
Shall now in mutuall well-beſeeming rankes
March all one way, and be no more oppos'd
Againſt Acquaintance, Kindred, and Allies.
The edge of Warre, like an ill-ſheathed knife,
No more ſhall cut his Maſter. Therefore Friends,
As farre as to the Sepulcher of Chriſt,
Whoſe Souldier now, under whoſe bleſſed Croſſe
We are impreſſed and ingag'd to fight,
Forthwith a power of Engliſh ſhall we levie,
Whoſe armes were moulded in their Mothers wombe,
To chace theſe Pagans in thoſe holy Fields,
Over Whoſe Acres walk'd thoſe bleſſed feete
Which fourteene hundred yeares ago were nail'd
For our advantage on the bitter Croſſe.
But this our purpoſe is a twelvemonth old,
And bootleſſe 'tis to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meete not now. Then let me heare
Of you my gentle Couſin Weſtmerland,
What yeſternight our Councell did decree,
In forwarding this deere expedience.

Weſt. My Liege: This haſte was hot in queſtion,
And many limits of the Charge ſet downe
But yeſternight: when all athwart there came
A Poſt from Wales, loaden with heavy Newes;
Whoſe worſt was, That the Noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordſhire to fight
Againſt the irregular and wilde Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welſhman taken,
And a thouſand of his people butchered:
Vpon whoſe dead corpes there was ſuch miſuſe,
Such beaſtly, ſhameleſſe transformation,
By thoſe Welſhwomen done, as may not be (Without much ſhame) re-told or ſpoken of.

King. It ſeemes then, that the tidings of this broile,
Brake off our buſineſſe for the Holy land.

Weſt. This matcht with other like, my gracious Lord,
Farre more vneven and unwelcome Newes
Came from the North, and thus it did report:
On Holy-roode day, the gallant Hotſpurre there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approoved Scot,
At Holmedon met, where they did ſpend
A ſad and bloody houre:
As by diſcharge of their Artillerie,
And ſhape of likelyhood the newes was told:
For he that brought them, in the very heate
And pride of their contention, did take horſe,
Vncertaine of the iſſue any way.

King. Heere is a deere and true induſtrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his Horſe,
Stain'd with the variation of each ſoyle,
Betwixt tha Holmedon, and this Seat of ours:
And he hath brought us ſmooth and welcome newes.
The Earle of Dowglas is diſcomfited,
Ten thouſand bold Scots, two and twenty Knights
Balk'd in their owne blood did Sir Walter ſee
On Holmedons Plaines. Of Priſoners, Hotſpurre tooke
Mordake Earle of Fife, and eldeſt ſonne
To beaten Dowglas, and the Earle of Atholl,
Of Marry, Angus, and Menteith.
And is not this an honourable ſpoyle?
A gallant prize? Ha Coſin, is it not? In faith it is.

Weſt. A Conqueſt for a Prince to boaſt of.

King. Yea, there thou mak'ſt me ſad, & mak'ſt me ſin,
In envy, that my Lord Northumberland
Should be the father of ſo bleſt a ſonne:
A Sonne, who is the Theame of Honors tongue;
Amongſt a Grove, the very ſtraighteſt Plant,
Who is ſweet Fortunes Minion, and her Pride:
Whil'ſt I by looking on the prayſe of him,
See Ryot and Diſhonor ſtaine the brow
Of my yong Harry. O that it could be prov'd,
That ſome Night-tripping Faiery, had exchang'd
In Cradle clothes, our Children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet:

Then would I have his Harry, and he mine:
But let him from my thoughts. What thinke you Coze
Of this young Percies pride? The Priſoners
Which he in this adventure hath ſupriz'd,
To his owne uſe he keepes, and ſends me word
I ſhall have none but Mordake Eare of Life.

Weſt. This is his Vnckles teaching. This is Worceſter
Malevolent to you in all Aſpects:
Which makes him prune himſelfe, and briſtle up
The creſt of Youth againſt your Dignity.

King. But I have ſent for him to anſwer this:
And for this cauſe a while we muſt neglect
Our holy purpoſe to Ieruſalem.
Coſin, on Wedneſday next, our Councell we will hold
At Windſor, ſo informe the lords:
But come your ſelfe with ſpeed to us againe,
For more is to be ſaid, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.

Weſt. I will my Liege. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Henry Prince of Wales, Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, and Pointz.

Fal. Now Hal, what time of day is it Lad?

Prince. Thou art ſo fat-witted with drinking of old Sacke and unbuttoning thee after Supper, and ſleeping upon benches in the afternoone, that thou haſt forgotten to demand that truely, which thou wouldeſt truly know. What a divell haſt thou to doe with the time of the day? unleſſe houres were cups of Sacke, and minutes Capons, and clockes the tongue of Bawdes, and dialls the ſignes of Leaping-houſes, and the bleſſed Sunne himſelfe a faire hot Wench in Flame?coloured Taffata; I ſee no reaſon, why thou ſhouldeſt bee ſo ſuperfluous, to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed you came neere me now Hal. for we that take Purſes, go by the Moone and ſeven Starres, and not by Phœbus hee, that wand'ring Knight ſo faire. And I pray thee ſweet Wagge, when thou art King, as God ſave thy Grace, Maieſty I ſhould ſay, for grace thou wilt have none.

Prin. What! none?

Fal. No, not ſo much as will ſerve to be Prologue to an Egge and Butter.

Prin. well, how then? Come roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marre then, ſweet Wagge, when thou art King, let not us that are Squires of the Nights body, bee call'd Theeves of the Dayes beautie. Let us be Dianaes Forreſters, Gentlemen of the Shade, Minions of the Moone; and let men ſay, we be men of good Government, being governed as the Sea is, by our noble and chaſt miſtris the Moone, under whoſe countenance we ſteale.

Prin. Thou ſay'ſt well, and it holds well too: for the fortune of us that are the Moones men, doeth ebbe and flow like the Sea, being governed as the Sea is, by the Moone: as for proofe. Now a purſe of Gold moſt reſolutely ſnatch'd on Monday night, and moſt diſſolutely ſpent on Tueſday Morning; got with ſwearing, Layd by: and ſpent with crying, Bring in: now, in as low an ebbe as the foot of the Ladder; and by and by in as high a flow as the ride of the Gallowes.

Fal. Thou ſay'ſt true Lad: and is not my Hoſteſſe of the Taverne a moſt ſweet Wench?

Prin. As is the hony, my old Lad of the Caſtle: and is not a Buffe Ierkin a moſt ſweet robe durance?

Fal. How how? how now mad Wagge? What in thy quips and thy quiddities? What a plague have I to doe with a Buffe-Ierkin?

Prin. Why, what a poxe have I to doe with my Hoſteſſe of the Taverne?

Fal. Well, thou haſt call'd her to a reckning many a time and oft.

Prin. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No, Ile give thee thy due, thou haſt paid all there.

Prin. Yea and elſewhere, ſo farre as my Coyne would ſtretch, and where it would not, I have uſ'd my credit.

Fal. Yea, and ſo us'd it, that were it heere apparant, that thou art Heire apparant. But I pry thee ſweet Wag, ſhall there be Gallowes ſtanding in England when thou art King? and reſolution thus fobb'd as it is, with the ruſty curbe of old Father Anticke the Law? Doe not thou when thou art a King, hang a Theefe.

Prin. No, thou ſhalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! Ile be a brave Iudge.

Prin. Thou judgeſt falſe already. I meane, thou ſhalt have the hanging of the Theeves, and ſo become a rare Hangman.

Fal. Well Hal, well: and in ſome ſort it jumpes with my humour, as well as waiting in the Court, I can tell you.

Prin. For obtaining of ſuites?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of ſuites, whereof the Hangman hath no leane Wardrobe. I am as Melancholly as a Gyb-Cat, or a lugg'd Beare,

Prin. Or an old Lyon, or a Lovers Lute.

Fal. Yea, or the Drone of a Lincolnſhire Bagpipe.

Prin. What ſay'ſt thou to a Hare, or the Melancholly of Moore-Ditch?

Fal. Thou haſt the moſt unſavoury ſimiles, and art indeed the moſt comparative raſcalleſt ſweet yong Prince. But Hal, I pry thee trouble me no more with vanity, I would thou and I knew, where a Commodity of good names were to be bought: an old lord of the Councell rated me the other day in the ſtreet about you ſir; but I mark'd him not, and yet he talk'd very wiſely, but I regarded him not, and yet he talkt wiſely, and in the ſtreet too.

Prin. Thou didſt well: for no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou haſt damnable iteration, and art indeed able to corrupt a Saint. Thou haſt done much harme unto me Hal, God forgive thee for it. Before I knew thee Hal. I knew nothing: and now I am (if a man ſhould ſpeake truly) little better than one of the wicked. I muſt give over this life, and I will give it over: and I do not, I am a Villaine. Ile be damn'd for never a Kings ſonne in Chriſtendome.

Prin. Where ſhall we take a purſe to morrow, Iacke?

Fal. Where thou wilt Lad, Ile make one: and I doe not, call me Villaine, and baffle me.

Prin. I ſee a good amendment of life in thee: From Praying, to Purſe-taking.

Fal. Why, Hal. 'tis my Vocation Hal. 'Tis no ſin for a man to labour in his Vocation.

Pointz. Now ſhall wee know if Gads hill have ſet a Watch. O, if men were to be ſaved by merit, what hole in Hell were hot enough for him? This is the moſt omnipotent Villaine, that ever cryed, Stand, to a true man.

Prin. Good morrow Ned.

Poines. Good morrow ſweet Hal. What ſaies Monſieur Remorſe? What ſayes Sir Iohn Sacke and Sugar. Iacke? How agrees the Divell and thee about thy Soule, that thou ſoldeſt him on Good-friday laſt, for a Cup of Madera, and a cold Capons legge?

Prin. Sir Iohn ſtands to his word, the devill ſhall have his bargaine, for he was never yet a Breaker of Proverbs: He will give the devill his due.

Poin. Then art thou damn'd for keeping thy word with the divell.

Prin. Elſe he had bin damn'd for cozening the divell.

Poy. But my Lads, my Lads, to morrow morning, by foure a clocke early at Gads hill, there are Pilgrimes going to Canterbury with rich Offerings, and Traders riding to London with fat Purſes. I have vizards for you all; you have horſes for your ſelves: Gads-hill lyes to night in Rocheſter, I have beſpoke Supper to morrow in Eaſtcheape; we may doe it as ſecure as ſleepe: if you wll go, I will ſtuffe you Purſes full of Crownes: if you will not, tarry at home and be hang'd.

Fal. Heare ye Yedward, if I tarry at home and go not, Ile hang you for going.

Poy. You will chops.

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Prin. Who, I rob? I a Theefe? Not I.

Fal. There's neither honeſty, manhood, nor good fellowſhip in thee, nor thou cam'ſt not of the blood-royall, if thou dar'ſt not ſtand for ten ſhillings.

Prin. Well then, once in my dayes Ile be a mad-cap.

Fal. Why that's well ſayd.

Prin. Well, come what will, Ile tarry at home.

Fal. Ile be a Traitor then, when thou art King.

Prin. I care not.

Poyn. Sir Iohn, I pray thee leave the Prince & me alone, I will lay him downe ſuch reaſons for this adventure, that he ſhall go.

Fal. Well, maiſt thou have the ſpirit of perſwaſion; and he the eares of profiting, that what thou ſpeakeſt, may move; and what he heares may be beleeved, that the true Prince, may (for recreation ſake) prove a falſe theefe; for the poore abuſes of the time, want countenance. Farewell, you ſhall finde me in Eaſtcheape.

Prin. Farewell the latter Spring. Farewell Alhollown Summer. Exit. Fal.

Poy. Now, my good ſweet Hony Lord, ride with us to morrow. I have a jeſt to execute, that I cannot mannage alone. Falſtaffe, Harvy, Roſſill, and Gads-hill, ſhall robbe thoſe men that we have already way-layde; your ſelfe & I, will not be there: and when they have the booty, if you and I doe not rob them, cut this head from my ſhoulders.

Prid. But how ſhall we part with them in ſetting forth?

Poyn. Why, we will ſet forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleaſure to faile; and then will they adventure upon the exployt themſelves, which they have no ſooner atchieved, but wee'l ſet upon them.

Prin. I but tis like that they will know us by our horſes, by our habits, and by every other appointment to be our ſelves.

Poy. Tut, our horſes they ſhall not ſee, Ile tye them in the Wood; our vizards wee will change after wee leave them: and ſirrah, I have Caſes of Buckram for the nonce, to immaske our noted outward garments.

Prin. But I doubt they will be too hard for us.

Poyn. Well, for two of them, I know them to bee as true bred Cowards as ever turn'd backe: and for the third if he fight longer than he ſees reaſon, Ile forſwear Armes. The vertue of this Ieſt will be, the incomprehenſible lyes that this fat Rogue will tell us, when we meete at Supper: how thirty at leaſt he fought with, what Wardes, what blowes, what extremities he endured; and in the reproofe of this, lyes the jeſt.

Prin. Well, Ile goe with thee, provide us all things neceſſary, and meete mee to morrow night in Eaſtcheape, there Ile ſup. Farewell.

Poyn. Farewell, my Lord. Exit Poinz.

Prin. I know you all, and will a-while uphold
The unyoak'd humor of your idleneſſe:
Yet herein will I imitate the Sunne,
Who doth permit the baſe contagious cloudes
To ſmother up his Beauty from the world;
That when he pleaſe againe to be himſelfe,
Being wanted, he may be more wondred at,
By breaking through the foule and ugly miſts
Of vapours, that did ſeeme to ſtrangle him.
If all the yeare were playing holidayes,
To ſport, would be as tedious as to worke;
But when they ſeldome come, they wiſht-for come,
And nothing pleaſeth but rare accidents.
So when this looſe behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promiſed;
By how much better than my word I am,
By ſo much ſhall I falſifie mens hopes,
And like bright Mettall on a ſullen ground:
My reformation glittering o're my fault,
Shall ſhew more goodly, and attract more eyes;
Than that which hath no ſoyle to ſet it off.
Ile ſo offend, to make offence a skill,
Redeeming time, when men thinke leaſt I will.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter the King, Northumberland, Worceſter, Hotſpurre, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

King. My blood hath beene too cold and temperate,
Vnapt to ſtirre at theſe indignities,
And you have found me; for accordingly,
You tread upon my patience: But be ſure,
I will from henceforth rather be my ſelfe,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition,
Which hath beene ſmooth as Oyle, ſoft as yong Downe,
And therefore loſt the Title of reſpect,
Which the proud ne're payes, but to the proud.

Wor. Our houſe (my Soveraigne Liege) little deſerves
The ſcourge of greatneſſe to be uſed on it,
And that ſame greatneſſe too, which our owne hands
Have holpe to make ſo portly.

Nor. My Lord.

King. Worceſter get thee gone: for I do ſee
Danger and diſobedience in thine eye.
O ſir, your preſence is too bold and peremptory,
And Majeſtie might never yet endure
The moody Frontier of a ſervant brow,
You have good leave to leave us. When we need
Your uſe and counſell, we ſhall ſend for you.
You were about to ſpeake.

North. Yea, my good Lord.

Thoſe Priſoners in your Highneſſe demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon tooke,
Were (as he ſayes) not with ſuch ſtrength denied
As was delivered to your Majeſty:
Who eyther through envy, or miſpriſion,
Was guilty of this fault; and not my Sonne.
Hot. My Liege, I did deny no priſoners.
But, I remember when the fight was done,
When I was dry with Rage, and extreame Toyle,
Breathleſſe, and faint, leaning upon my Sword,
Came there a certaine Lord, neat and trimly dreſt;
Freſh as a Bride-groome, and his Chin new reapt,
Shew'd like a ſtubble Land at harveſt home.
He was perfumed like a Milliner,
And 'twixt his Finger and his Thumbe, he held
A Pouncet-box: which ever and anon
He gave his Noſe, and took't away againe:
Who therewith angry, when it next came there,
Tooke it in Snuffe. And ſtill he ſmil'd and talk'd:
And as the Souldiers bare dead bodies by,
He call'd them untaught Knaves, Vnmannerly,
To bring a ſlovenly unhandſome Coarſe
Betwixt the winde, and his Nobility.
With many holiday and Lady tearmes
He queſtion'd me: Among the reſt, demanded
My Priſoners, in your Majeſties behalfe.
I then, all-ſmarting, with my wounds being cold,
(To be ſo peſtered with a Popingay)
Out of my Greeſe, and my impatience,
Anſwer'd (neglectingly) I know not what,
He ſhould, or ſhould not: For he made me mad,
To ſee him ſhine ſo briske, and ſmell ſo ſweet,
And talke ſo like a Waiting-Gentlewoman,
Of Guns, and Drums, and Wounds: God ſave the marke;
And telling me, the Soveraign'ſt thing on earth
Was Parmacity, for an inward bruiſe:
And that it was great pitty, ſo it was,
That vilanous Salt-peter ſhould be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmeleſſe Earth,
Which many a good Tall Fellow had deſtroy'd
So cowardly. And but for theſe vile Gunnes,
He would himſelfe have beene a Souldier.
This bald, unjoynted Chat of his (my Lord)
Made me to anſwere indirectly (as I ſayd.)
And I beſeech you, let not this report
Come currant for an Accuſation,
Betwixt my love and your high Majeſty.
Blunt. The circumſtance conſidered, good my Lord,
What ever Harry Percie then had ſaid,
To ſuch a perſon, and in ſuch a place,
At ſuch a time, with all the reſt retold,
May reaſonable dye, and never riſe
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he ſaid, ſo he unſay it now.
King. Why yet he doth deny his Priſoners,
But with proviſo and Exception,
That we at our owne charge, ſhall ranſome ſtraight
His Brother-in-Law, the fooliſh Mortimer,
Who (in my ſoule) hath wilfully betrayd
The lives of thoſe, that he did leade to Fight,
Againſt the great Magitian, damn'd Glendower:
Whoſe daughter (as we heare) the Earle of March
Hath lately married. Shall our Coffers then,
Be emptied, to redeeme a Traitor home?
Shall we buy Treaſon? and indent with Feares,
When they have loſt and forfeyted themſelves?
No: on the barren Mountaine let him ſtarve:
For I ſhall never hold that man my Friend,
Whoſe tongue ſhall aske me for one peny coſt
To ranſome home revolted Mortimer,
Hot. Revolted Mortimer?
He never did fall off, my Soveraigne Liege,
But by the chance of Warre: to prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue. For all thoſe Wounds,
Thoſe mouthed Wounds, which valiantly he tooke,
When on the gentle Severnes ſiedgie banke,
In ſingle Oppoſition hand to hand,
He did confound the beſt part of an houre
In changing hardiment with great Glendower:
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drinke
Vpon agreement, of ſwift Severnes flood;
Who then affrighted with their bloody lookes,
Ran fearefully among the trembling Reedes,
And hid his criſped-head in a hollow banke,
Blood ſtained with theſe Valiant Combatants.
Never did baſe and rotten policy
Colour her working with ſuch deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive ſo many, and all willingly:
Then let him not be ſland'red with Revolt.
King. Thou do'ſt bely him Percy, thou doſt bely him;
He never did encounter with Glendower:
I tell thee, he durſt as well have met the divell alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art thou not aſham'd? But Sirrah, henceforth
Let me not heare you ſpeake of Mortimer.
Send me your Priſoners with the ſpeedieſt meanes,
Or you ſhall heare in ſuch a kinde from me
As will diſpleaſe ye. My Lord Northumberland,
We Licenſe your departure with your ſonne,
Send us your Priſoners, or you'l heare of it. Exit King.
Hot. And if the divell come and roare for them,
I will not ſend them. I will after ſtraight
And tell him ſo: for I will eaſe my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head,
Nor. What? drunke with choller? ſtay & pauſe awhile,
Heere comes your Vnckle. Enter Worceſter.
Hot. Speake of Mortimer?
Yes, I will ſpeake of him, and let my ſoule
Want mercy, if I do not joyne with him.
In his behalfe, Ile empty all thoſe Veines,
And ſhed my deere blood drop by drop i'th duſt,
But I will lift the downfall Mortimer
As high i'th Ayre as this unthankefull King,
As this Ingrate and Cankred Bullingbrooke.
Nor. Brother, the King hath made your Nephew mad.
Wor. Who ſtrooke this heate up after I was gone?
Hot. He will (forſooth) have all my priſoners:
And when I urg'd the ranſome once againe
Of my wives Brother, then his cheeke look'd pale,
And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.
Wor. I cannot blame him: was he not proclaim'd
By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?
Nor. He was: I heard the Proclamation,
And then it was, when the unhappy King
(Whoſe wrongs in us God pardon) did ſet forth
Vpon his Iriſh Expedition:
From whence he intercepted, did returne
To be depoſ'd, and ſhortly murthered.
Wor. And for whoſe death, we in the worlds wide mouth
Live ſo ſcandaliz'd, and fouly ſpoken of.

Hot. But ſoft I pray you; did King Richard then
Proclaime my brother Mortimer,
Heyre to the Crowne?
Nor. He did, my ſelfe did heare it.
Hot. Nay then I cannot blame his Couſin King.
That wiſh'd him on the barraine Mountaines ſtarv'd.
But ſhall it be, that you that ſet the Crowne
Vpon the head of this forgetfull man,
And for his ſake, wore the deteſted blot
Of murtherous ſubornations? ſhall it be,
That you a world of curſes undergoe,
Being the Agents, or baſe ſecond meanes,
The Cords, the Ladder, or the Hangman rather?
O pardon, if that I deſcend ſo low,
To ſhew the Line, and the Predicament
Wherein you range under this ſubtill King.
Shall it for ſhame, be ſpoken in theſe dayes,
Or fill up Chronicles in time to come,
That men of your Nobility and Power,
Did gage them both in an unjuſt behalfe
(As both of you, God pardon it, have done)
To put downe Richard, that ſweet lovely Roſe,
And plant this Thorne, this Canker Bullingbrooke?
And ſhall it in more ſhame be further ſpoken,
That you are fool'd, diſcarded, and ſhooke off
By him, for whom theſe ſhames ye underwent?
No: yet time ſerves, wherein you may redeeme
Your baniſh'd Honors, and reſtore your ſelves
Into the good Thoughts of the world againe.
Revenge the geering and diſdain'd contempt
Of this proud King, who ſtudies day and night
To anſwer all the Debt he owes unto you,
Even with the bloody Payments of your deaths:
Therefore I ſay———
Wor. Peace Couſin, ſay no more.
And now I will unclaſpe a Secret booke,
And to your quicke conceyving Diſcontents,
Ile reade you Matter, deepe and dangerous,
As full of perill and adventurous Spirit,
As to o're-walke a Current, roaring loud
On the unſtedfaſt footing of a Speare.
Hot. If he fall in, good night, or ſinke or ſwimme:
Send danger from the Eaſt unto the Weſt,
So Honor croſſe in from the North to South,
And let them grapple: The blood more ſtirres
To rowze a Lyon, then to ſtart a Hare.
Nor. Imagination of ſome great exploit,
Drives him beyond the bounds of Patience.
Hot. By heaven, me thinkes it were an eaſie leap,
To plucke bright Honor from the pale-fac'd Moone,
Or dive into the bottome of the deepe,
Where Fadome-line could never touch the ground,
And plucke up drowned Honor by the Lockes:
So he that doth redeeme her thence, might weare
Without Co-rivall, all her Dignities:
But out upon this halfe-fac'd Fellowſhip.
Wor. He apprehends a world of Figures here,
But not the forme of what he ſhould attend:
Good Couſin give me audience for a-while,
And liſt to me.
Hot. I cry you mercy.
Wor. Thoſe ſame Noble Scottes
That are your Priſoners.
Hot. Ile keepe them all.
By heaven, he ſhall not have a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would ſave his Soule, he ſhall not.
Ile keepe them, by this Hand.
Wor. You ſtart away,
And lend no eare unto my purpoſes.
Thoſe Priſoners you ſhall keepe.
Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat:
He ſaid he would not ranſome Mortimer:
Forbad my tongue to ſpeake of Mortimer.
But I will finde him when he lyes aſleepe,
And in his eare, Ile holla Mortimer.
Nay, Ile have a Starling ſhall be taught to ſpeake
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keepe his anger ſtill in motion.
Wor. Heare you Couſin: a word.
Hot. All ſtudies here I ſolemnly defie,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bullingbrooke,
And that ſame Sword and Buckler prince of Wales.
But that I thinke his Father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with ſome miſchance,
I would have poyſon'd him with a pot of Ale.
Wor. Farewell Kinſman: Ile talke to you
When you are better temper'd to attend.
Nor. Why what a Waſpe-tongu'd and impatient foole
Art thou, to breake into this Womans mood,
Tying thine eare to no tongue but thine owne?
Hot. Why looke you, I am whipt & ſcourg'd with rods,
Netled, and ſtung with Piſmiers, when I heare
Of this vile Politician Bullingbrooke.
In Richards time: What de'ye call the place?
A plague upon't, it is in Glouſterſhire:
'Twas where the madcap Duke his Vncle kept,
His Vncle Yorke, where I firſt bow'd my knee
Vnto this King of Smiles, this Bullingbrooke:
When you and he came backe from Rauenſpurgh.
Nor. At Barkley Caſtle.
Hot. You ſay true:
Why what a caudie deale of curteſie,
This fauning Gray-hound then did proffer me.
Looke when his infant fortune came to age,
And gentle Harry Percy, and kinde Couſin:
O, the Divell take ſuch Couziners, God forgive me,
Good Vncle tell your tale, for I have done.
Wor. Nay, if you have not, too't againe,
Wee'l ſtay your leyſure.
Hot. I have done inſooth.
Wor. Then once more to your Scottiſh Priſoners.
Deliver them up without their ranſome ſtraight,
And make the Dowglas ſonne your onely meane
For powers in Scotland: which for divers reaſons
Which I ſhall ſend you written, be aſſur'd
Will eaſily be granted you, my Lord.
Your Sonne in Scotland being thus imploy'd,
Shall ſecretly in the boſome creepe
Of that ſame noble Prelate, well belov'd,
The Archbiſhop.
Hot. Of yorke, is't not?
Wor. True, who beares hard
His Brothers death at Briſtow, the Lord Scroope.
I ſpeake not this in eſtimation,
As what I thinke might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted and ſet downe,
And onely ſtayes but to behold the face
Of that occaſion that ſhall bring it on.
Hot. I ſmell it:
Vpon my life, it will do wond'rous well.
Nor. Before the gam's a-foot, thou ſtill let'ſt ſlip.
Hot. Why, it cannot chooſe but be a Noble plot,

And then the power of Scotland, and of Yorke
To joyne with Mortimer, Ha.
Wor. And ſo they ſhall.
Hotſp. Infaith it is exceedingly well aym'd.
Wor. And 'tis no little reaſon bids us ſpeed,
To ſave our heads, by raiſing of a Head:
For, beare our ſelves as even as we can,
The King will alwayes thinke him in our debt;
And thinke, we thinke our ſelves unſatisfied,
Till he he hath found a time to pay us home.
And ſee already, how he doth beginne
To make us ſtrangers to his lookes of love.
Hot. He does, he does; wee'l be reveng'd on him.
Wor. Couſin, farewell. No further go in this,
Then I by Letters ſhall direct your courſe
When time is ripe, which will be ſodainely:
Ile ſteale to Glendower, and loe, Mortimer,
Where you, and Dowglas, and our powers at once,
As I will faſhion it, ſhall happily meete,
To beare our fortunes in our owne ſtrong armes,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.
Nor. Farewell good Brother, we ſhall thrive, I truſt.
Hot. Vncle, adieu: O let houres be ſhort,
Till fields, and blowes, and grones, applaud our ſport. Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter a Carrier with a Lanterne in his hand.

1. Car. Heigh-ho, an't be not foure by the day, Ile bee hang'd. Charles waine is over the new Chimney, and yet our horſe not packt. What Oſtler?

Oſt. Anon, anon.

1. Car. I prethee Tom, beate Cuts Saddle, put a few Flockes in the point: the poore Iade is wrung in the withers, out of all ceſſe.

Enter another Carrier.

2. Car. Peaſe and Beanes are as danke here as a Dog, and this is the next way to give poore Iades the Bottes: This houſe is turned upſide downe ſince Robin the Oſtler dyed.

1. Car. Poore fellow never joy'd ſince the price of oats roſe, it was the death of him.

2. Car. I thinke this is the moſt villanous houſe in all London rode for Fleas: I am ſtung like a Tench.

1. Car. Like a Tench? There is ne're a King in Chriſtendome, could be better bit, then I have beene ſince the firſt Cocke.

2. Car. Why, you will allow us ne're a Iourden, and then we leake in your Chimny: and your Chamber-lye breeds Fleas like a Loach.

1. Car. What Oſtler, come away, and be hang'd: come away.

2. Car. I have a Gammon of Bacon, and two razes of Ginger, to be delivered as farre as Charing-croſſe.

1. Car. The Turkies in my Panniers are quite ſtarved. What Oſtler? A plague on thee, haſt thou never an eye in thy head? Can'ſt not heare? And t'were not as good a deed as drinke, to breake the pate of thee, I am a very Villaine. Come and be hang'd, haſt no faith in thee?

Enter Gads-hill.

Gad. Good-morrow Carriers. What's a clocke?

Car. I thinke it be two a clocke.

Gad. I prethee lend me thy Lanthorne to ſee my Gelding in the ſtable.

1. Car. Nay ſoft I pray ye, I know a tricke worth two of that.

Gad. I prethee lend me thine.

2. Car. I, when, canſt tell? Lend mee thy Lanthorne (quoth-a) marry Ile ſee thee hang'd firſt.

Gad. Sirra Carrier: What time doe you meane to come to London?

2. Car. Time enough to goe to bed with a Candle, I warrant thee. Come neighbour Mugges, wee'll call up the Gentlemen, they will along with company, for they have great charge. Exeunt.

Enter Chamberlaine.

Gad. What ho, Chamberlaine?

Cham. At hand quoth Pick-purſe.

Gad. That's even as faire, as at hand quoth the Chamberlaine: For thou varieſt no more from picking of Purſes, then giving direction, doth from labouring. Thou lay'ſt the plot, how.

Cham. Good morrow Maſter Gads-Hill, it holds currant that I told you yeſternight. There's a Franklin in the wilde of Kent, hath brought three hundred Markes with him in Gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company laſt night at Supper; a kinde of Auditor, one that hath abundance of charge too (God knowes what) they are up already, and call for Egges and Butter. They will away preſently.

Gad. Sirra, if they meete not with S. Nicholas Clarks, Ile give thee this necke.

Cham. No, Ile none of it: I prythee keepe that for the Hangman, for I know thou worſhipſt S. Nicolas as truly as a man of falſhood may.

Gad. What talkeſt thou to me of the Hangman? If I hang, Ile make a fat payre of Gallowes. For, if I hang, old Sir Iohn hangs with mee, and thou know'ſt hee's no Starueling. Tut, there are other Troians that ỳ dream'ſt not of, the which (for ſport ſake) are content to doe the Profeſſion ſome grace; that would (if matters ſhould be look'd into) for their owne Credit ſake, make all Whole. I am joyned with no Foot-land-Rakers, no Long-ſtaffe ſix-penny ſtrikers, none of theſe mad Muſtachio-purple-hu'd-Maltwormes, but with Nobility, and Tranquilitie; Bourgomaſters, and great Oneyers, ſuch as can holde in, ſuch as will ſtrike ſooner then ſpeake; and ſpeake ſooner then drinke, and drinke ſooner then pray: and yet I lye, for they pray continually unto their Saint the Commonwealth; or rather, not to pray to her, but prey on her: for they ride up and downe on her, and make her their Boots.

Cham. What, the Commonwealth their Bootes? Will ſhe hold out water in foule way?

Gad. She will, ſhe will; Iuſtice hath liquor'd her. We ſteale as in a Caſtle, cockſure: we have the receit of Fernſeede, we walke inviſible.

Cham. Nay, I thinke rather, you are more beholding to the Night, then the Fernſeed, for your walking inviſible.

Gad. Give me thy hand.
Thou ſhalt have a ſhare in our purpoſe,
As I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a falſe Theefe.

Gad. Goe too: Homo is a common name to all men. Bid the Oſtler bring the Gelding out of the ſtable. Farewell, ye muddy Knave. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Prince, Poynes, and Peto.

Poines. Come ſhelter, ſhelter, I have removed Falſtafs Horſe, and he frets like a gum'd Velvet.

Prin. Stand cloſe.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Fal. Poynes, Poynes, and be hang'd Poines.

Prin. Peace ye fat-kidney'd Raſcall, what a brawling doſt thou keepe?

Fal. What Poines. Hal?

Prin. He is walk'd up to the top of the hill, Ile go ſeeke him,

Fal. I am accurſt to rob in that Theefes company: that Raſcall hath removed my Horſe, and tied him I know not where. If I travaile but foure foot by the ſquire further a foote, I ſhall breake my winde. Well, I doubt not but to die a faire death for all this, if I ſcape hanging for killing that Rogue. I have forſworne his company hourely any time this two and twenty yeare, and yet I am bewitcht with the Rogues company. If the Raſcall have not given me medicines to make me love him, Ile be hang'd; it could not be elſe: I have drunke Medicines. Poines, Hall, a Plague upon you both. Bardolph, Peto: Ile ſtarve ere I rob a foot further. And 'twere not as good a deede as to drinke, to turne Trueman, and to leave thoſe Rogues, I am the verieſt Varlet that ever chewed with a Tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground, is threeſcore and ten miles afoot with me: and the ſtony-hearted Villaines know it well enough. A plague upon't, when Theeves cannot bee true one to another. They Whiſtle.
Whew: a plague light upon you all. Give my Horſe you Rogues: give me my Horſe and be hang'd.

Prin. Peace ye fat guttes, lye downe, lay thine eare cloſe to the ground, and liſt if thou can heare the tread of Travellers.

Fal. Have you any Leavers to lift me up againe being downe? Ile not beare mine owne fleſh ſo far afoot again, for all the coine in thy Fathers Exchequer. What a plague meane ye to colt me thus?

Prin. Thou ly'ſt, thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I prethee good Prince Hal, helpe me to my horſe, good Kings ſonne.

Prin. Out you Rogue, ſhall I be your Oſtler?

Fal. Go hang thy ſelfe in thine owne heire-apparant-Garters: If I be tane, Ile peach for this: and I have not Ballads made on all, and ſung to filthy tunes, let a Cup of Sacke be my poyſon: when a jeſt is ſo forward, and a foote too, I hate it.

Enter Gads-hill.

Gad. Stand.

Fal. So I do againſt my will.

Poin. O'tis our Setter, I know his voyce:
Bardolfe, what newes?

Bar. Caſe ye, caſe ye; on with your Vizards, there's mony of the Kings comming downe the hill, 'tis going to the Kings Exchequer.

Fal. You lie you rogue, 'tis going to the Kings Taverne.

Gad. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hang'd.

Prin. You foure ſhall front them in the narrow Lane; Ned and I will walke lower; if they ſcape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Peto. But how many be of them?

Gad. Some eight or ten.

Fal. Will they not rob us?

Prin. What, a Coward Sir John Paunch?

Fal. Indeed I am not John of Gaunt your Grandfather: but yet no Coward, Hal.

Prin. Wee'l leave that to the proofe.

Poin. Sirra Iacke thy horſe ſtands behinde the hedge, when thou need'ſt him, there ſhalt thou finde him, Farewell, and ſtand faſt.

Fal. Now cannot I ſtrike him, if I ſhould be hang'd.

Prin. Ned, where are our diſguiſes?

Poin. Heere hard by: Stand cloſe.

Fal. Now my Maſters, happy man be his dole, ſay I: every man to his buſineſſe.

Enter Travellers.

Tra. Come Neighbor: the boy ſhall leade our Horſes downe the hill: Wee'l walke a-foot a while, and eaſe our Legges.

Theeves. Stay.

Tra. Ieſu bleſſe us.

Fal. Strike: downe with them, cut the villains throats; a whorſon Caterpillars: Bacon-fed Knaves, they hate us youth; downe with them, fleece them.

Tra. O, we are undone, both we and ours for ever.

Fal. Hang ye gorbellied knaves, are you undone? No ye Fat Chuffes, I would your ſtore were heere. On Bacons on, what ye knaues? Yong men muſt live, you are Grand Iurers? Wee'l jure ye ifaith.

Heere they rob them, and binde them. Enter the Prince and Poines.

Prin. The Theeues have bound the True-men: Now could thou and I rob the Theeves and go merily to London, it would be argument for a Weeke, Laughter for a Moneth, and a good ieſt for ever.

Poynes. Stand cloſe, I heare them comming.

Enter Theeves againe.

Fal. Come my Maſters, let us ſhare, and then to horſe before day: and the Prince and Poynes bee not two arrand Cowards, there's no equity ſtirring. There's no moe valour in that Poynes, than in a wilde Ducke.

Prin. Your money.

Poin. Villaines.

As they are ſharing, the Prince and Poynes ſet upon them.
They all run away, leaving the booty behind them.

Prince. Got with much eaſe. Now merrily to Horſe: The Theeves are ſcattred, and poſſeſt with fear ſo ſtrongly, that they dare not meet each other: each takes his fellow for an Officer. Away good Ned, Falſtaffe ſweates to death, and Lards the leane earth as he walkes along: wer't not for laughing, I ſhould pitty him.

Poine. How the Rogue roar'd. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Hotſpurre ſolus, reading a Letter.

But for mine owne part, my Lord, I could bee well contented to be there, in reſpect of the love I beare your houſe.

He could be contented: Why is he not then? in reſpect of the love he beares our houſe. He ſhewes in this, he loves his owne Barne better then hee loves our houſe. Let mee ſee ſome more, The purpoſe you undertake is dangerous. Why that's certaine: 'Tis dangerous to take a colde, to ſleepe, to drinke: but I tell you (my Lord foole) out of this Nettle, Danger; we plucke this Flower, Safety. The purpoſe you undertake is dangerous, the Friends you have named uncertaine, the Time it ſelfe unſorted, and your whole Plot too light, for the counterpoize of ſo great an Oppoſition. Say you ſo, ſay you ſo: I ſay unto you againe, you are a ſhallow cowardly Hinde, and you Lye. What a lacke-braine is this? I proteſt, our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid; our Friend true and conſtant: A good Plotte, good Friends, and full of expectation: An excellent plot, very good Friends. What a Froſty-ſpirited rogue is this? Why, my Lord of Yorke commends the plot, and the generall courſe of the action. By this hand, if I were now by this Raſcall, I could braine him with his Ladyes Fan. Is there not my Father, my Vncle, and my Selfe, Lord Edmond Mortimer, my Lord of Yorke, and Owen Glendour? Is there not beſides, the Dowglas? Have I not all their letters, to meete me in Armes by the ninth of the next Moneth? and are there not ſome of them ſet forward already? What a Pagan Raſcall is this? An Infidell. Ha, you ſhall ſee now in very ſincerity of Feare and Cold heart, will he to the King, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could devide my ſelfe, and go to buffets, for moving ſuch a diſh of skim'd Milke with ſo honorable au Action. Hang him, let him tell the King we are prepared. I will ſet forwards to night.

Enter his Lady.

How now Kate, I muſt leave you within theſe two hours.
La. O my good Lord, why are you thus alone?
For what offence have I this fortnight beene
A baniſh'd woman from my Harries bed?
Tell me (ſweet Lord) what is't that takes from thee
Thy ſtomacke, pleaſure, and thy golden ſleepe?
Why doſt thou bend thine eyes upon the earth?
And ſtart ſo often when thou ſitt'ſt alone?
Why haſt thou loſt the freſh blood in thy cheekes?
And given my Treaſures and my rights of thee,
To thick-ey'd muſing, and curſt melancholly?
In thy faint ſlumbers, I by thee have watcht,
And heard thee murmure tales of Iron Warres:
Speake termes of mannage to thy bounding Steed,
Cry courage to the field. And thou haſt talk'd
Of Sallies, and Retires; Trenches, Tents,
Of Palizadoes, Frontiers, Parapets.
Of Baſiliskes, of Canon, Culverin.
Of Priſoners ranſome, and of Souldiers ſlaine,
And all the current of a headdy fight.
Thy ſpirt within thee hath beene ſo at Warre,
And thus hath ſo beſtirr'd thee in thy ſleepe,
That beds of ſweate hath ſtood upon thy Brow,
Like bubbles in a late-diſturbed Streame;
And in thy face ſtrange motions have appear'd,
Such as we ſee when men reſtraine their breath
On ſome great ſodaine haſt. O what portents are theſe?
Some heavie buſineſſe hath my Lord in hand,
And I muſt know it: elſe he loves me not.
Hot. What ho; Is Gilliams with the Packet gone?
Ser. He is my Lord, an houre agone.
Hot. Hath Butler bought thoſe horſes from the Sheriffe?
Ser. One horſe, my Lord, he brought even now.
Hot. What Horſe? A Roane, a crop eare, is it not?
Ser. It is my Lord.
Hot. That Roane ſhall bee my Throne. Well, I will backe him ſtraight. Eſperance, bid Butler leade him forth into the Parke.
La. But heare you, my Lord.
Hot. What ſay'ſt thou my Lady?
La. What is it carries you away?
Hot. Why, my horſe (my Love) my horſe.
La. Out you mad-headed Ape, a Weazell hath not ſuch a deale of Spleene, as you are toſt with. In ſooth Ile know your buſineſſe Harry, that I will. I feare my Brother Mortimer doth ſtirre about his Title, and hath ſent for you to line his interprize. But if you go——
Hot. So farre a foot, I ſhall be wearie, Love.
La. Come, come, you Paraquito, anſwere me directly Vnto this queſtion, that I ſhall aske. Indeede Ile breake thy little finger Harry, if thou wilt not tell me true.
Hot. Away, away, you trifler: Love, I love thee uot,
I care not for thee Kate: this is no world
To play with Mammets, and to tilt with lips.
We muſt have bloody Noſes, and crack'd Crownes,
And paſſe them currant too. Gods me, my horſe.
What ſay'ſt thou Kate? would'ſt thou have with me?
La. Do ye not love me? Do you not indeed?
Well, do not then. For ſince you love me not,
I will not love my ſelfe. Do you not love me?
Nay, tell me if thou ſpeakeſt in jeſt, or no.
Hot. Come, wilt thou ſee me ride?
And when I am a horſebacke, I will ſweare
I love thee infinitely. But harke you Kate,
I muſt not have you henceforth, queſtion me,
Whither I go: nor reaſon whereabout.
Whither I muſt; I muſt: and to conclude,
This Evening muſt I leave thee, gentle Kate.
I know you wiſe, but yet no further wiſe
Then Harry Percies wife. Conſtant you are,
But yet a woman: and for ſecrecie,
No Lady cloſer. For I will beleeve
Thou wilt not utter what thou do'ſt not know,
And ſo farre will I truſt thee, gentle Kate.
La. How ſo farre?
Hot. Not an inch further. But harke you Kate,
Whither I go, thither ſhall you go too:
To day will I ſet forth, to morrow you.
Will this content you Kate?
La. It muſt of force. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Prince and Poynes.

Prin. Ned, prethee come out of that fat roome, & lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poynes. Where haſt beene Hall?

Prin. With three or foure Logger-heads, amongſt 3. or fourescore Hogſheads. I have ſounded the verie baſe ſtring of humilitie. Sirra, I am ſworn brother to a leſh of Drawers, and can call them by their names, as Tom, Dicke, and Francis. They take it alreadie upon their confidence, that though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the King of Curteſie: telling me flatly I am not proud Iack like Falſtaffe, but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, and when I am King of England, I ſhall command all the good Laddes in Eaſt-cheape. They call drinking deepe, dying Scarlet; and when you breake in your watring, then they cry pem, and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am ſo good a proficient in one quarter of an houre, that I can drinke with any Tinker in his owne Language during my life. I tell thee Ned, thou haſt loſt much honor, that thou wer't not with me in this action: but ſweet Ned, to ſweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this peniworth of Sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under Skinker, one that never ſpake other Engliſh in his life, then Eight ſhillings and ſix pence, and, You are welcome: with this ſhrill addition, Anon, Anon ſir, Score a Pint of Baſtard in the Halfe Moone, or ſo. But Ned, to drive away time till Falſtaffe come, I prythee doe thou ſtand in ſome by-roome, while I queſtion my puny Drawer, to what end he gave me the Sugar, and do never leave calling Francis, that his Tale to me may be nothing but, Anon: ſtep aſide, and Ile ſhew thee a Preſident.

Poines. Francis.

Prin. Thou art perfect.

Poin. Francis.

Enter Drawer.

Fran. Anon, anon ſir; looke downe into the Pomgarnet, Ralfe.

Prince. Come hither Francis.

Fran. My Lord.

Prin. How long haſt thou to ſerve, Francis?

Fran. Forſooth five years and as much as to——

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon ſir.

Prin. Five yeares; Berlady a long Leaſe for the clinking of Pewter. But Francis, dareſt thou be ſo valiant, as to play the coward with thy Indenture, and ſhew it a faire paire of heele, and run from it?

Fran. O Lord ſir, Ile be ſworne upon all the Books in England, I could finde in my heart.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon ſir.

Prin. How old art thou, Francis?

Fran. Let me ſee, about Michaelmas next I ſhall be——

Poin. Francis,

Fran. Anon ſir, pray you ſtay a little, my Lord.

Prin. Nay but harke you Francis, for the Sugar thou gaveſt me, 'twas a peny worth, was't not?

Fran. O Lord ſir, I would it had bene two.

Prin. I will giue thee for it a thouſand pound: Aske me when thou wilt, and thou ſhalt have it.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon.

Prin. Anon Francis? No Francis, but to morrow Francis: or Francis, on thurſday: or indeed Francis when thou wilt. But Francis.

Fran. My Lord.

Prin. Wilt thou rob this Leatherne Ierkin, Chriſtall button, Not-pated, Agat ring, Puke ſtocking, Caddice garter, Smooth tongue, Spaniſh pouch.

Fran, O Lord ſir, who do you meane?

Prin. Why then your browne Baſtard is your onely drinke: for looke you Francis, your white Canuas doublet will ſully. In Barbary ſir, it cannot come to ſo much.

Fran. What ſir?

Poin. Francis.

Prin. Away you Rogue, doſt thou heare them call?

Heere they both call him, the Drawer ſtands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What, ſtand'ſt thou ſtill, and hear'ſt ſuch a calling? Looke to the Gueſts within: My Lord, olde Sir Iohn with halfe a dozen more, are at the doore: ſhall I let them in?

Prin. Let them alone awhile, and then open the doore. Poines.

Enter Poines.

Poines, Anon, anon ſir.

Prin. Sirra, Falſtaffe and the reſt of the Theeves, are at the doore, ſhall we be merry?

Poin. As merrie as Crickets my Lad. But harke yee, What cunning match have you made with this jeſt of the Drawer? Come, what's the iſſue?

Prin. I am now of all humors, that have ſhewed themſelves humors, ſince the old dayes of goodman Adam, to the pupill age of this preſent twelue a clock at midnight. What's a clocke Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon ſir.

Prin. That ever this Fellow ſhould have fewer words then a Parret, and yet the ſonne of a Woman. His induſtry is up-ſtaires and down-ſtaires, his eloquence the parcell of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percies mind, the Hotſpurre of the North, he that killes me ſome ſixe or ſeaven dozen of Scots at a Breakfaſt, waſhes his hands and ſayes to his wife; Fie upon this quiet life, I want worke. O my ſweet Harry ſayes ſhe, how many haſt thou kill'd today? Give my Roane horſe a drench (ſayes hee) and anſwers, ſome fourteene, an houre after: a trifle, a trifle. I prethee call in Falſtaffe, Ile play Percie, and that damn'd Brawne ſhall play Dame Mortimer his wife. Rivo, ſayes the drunkard. Call in Ribs, call in Tallow.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Poin. Wecome Iacke, where haſt thou beene?

Fal. A plague of all Cowards I ſay, and a Vengeance too, marry and Amen. Give me a cup of Sacke Boy. Ere I leade this life long, Ile ſowe nether ſtockes, and mend them too. A plague of all cowards. Give mee a Cup of Sacke, Rogue. Is there no Vertue extant?

Prin. Didſt thou never ſee Titan kiſſe a diſh of Butter, pittifull hearted Titan that melted at the ſweete Tale of the Sunne? If thou didſt, then behold that compound.

Fal. You Rogue, heere's Lime in this Sacke too: there is nothing but Roguery to be found in a Villanous man; yet a Coward is worſe then a Cup of Sack with lime. A villanous Coward, go thy wayes old Iacke, die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a ſhotten Herring: there lives not three good men unhang'd in England, and one of them is fat, and growes old, God helpe the while, a bad world I ſay. I would I were a Weaver, I could ſing all manner of ſongs. A plague of all Cowards, I ſay ſtill.

Prin. How now Woolſacke, what mutter you?

Fal. A Kings Sonne? If I do not beate thee out of thy Kingdome with a dagger of Lath, and drive all thy Subjects afore thee like a flocke of Wilde-geeſe, Ile never weare haire on my face more. You Prince of Wales?

Prin. Why you horſon round man? what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? Anſwere me to that, and Poines there?

Prin. Ye fatch paunch, and yee call me Coward, Ile ſtab thee.

Fal. I call thee Coward? Ile ſee thee damn'd ere I call thee Coward: but I would give a thouſand pound I could run as faſt as thou canſt. You are ſtraight enough in the ſhoulders, you care not who ſees your backe: Call you that backing of your friends? a plague upon ſuch backing: give me them that will face me. Give me a Cup of Sack, I am a Rogue if I drunke to day.

Prince. O Villaine, thy Lippes are ſcarce wip'd, ſince thou drunk'ſt laſt.

Falſt. All's one for that. He drinkes.
A plague of all Cowards ſtill, ſay I.

Prin. What's the matter?

Falſt. What's the matter? here bee foure of us, have ta'ne a thouſand pound this Morning.

Prin. Where is it, Iacke? where is it?

Falſt. Where is it? taken from us, it is: a hundred upon poore foure of us.

Prin. What, a hundred, man?

Falſt. I am a Rogue, if I were not at halfe ſword with a dozen of them two houres together. I have ſcaped by miracle. I am eight times thruſt through the Doublet, foure through the Hoſe, my Buckler cut through and through, my Sword hackt like a Hand-ſaw, ecce ſignum. I never dealt better ſince I was a man: all would not doe. A plague of all Cowards: let them ſpeake; if they ſpeake more or leſſe then truth, they are villaines and the ſonnes of darkneſſe.

Prince. Speake ſirs, how was it?

Gad. We foure ſet upon ſome dozen.

Falſt. Sixteene, at leaſt, my Lord.

Gad. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Falſt. You Rogue they were bound, every man of them, or I am a Iew elſe, an Ebrew Iew.

Gad. As we were ſharing, ſome ſixe or ſeaven freſh men ſet upon us.

Falſt. And unbound the reſt, and then come in the other.

Prince. What, fought ye with them all?

Falſt. All? I know not what ye call all: but if I fought not with fiftie of them, I am a bunch of Radiſh: if there were not two or three and fiftie upon poore olde Iacke, then am I no two-legg'd Creature.

Poin. Pray Heaven, you have not murthered ſome of them.

Falſt. Nay, that's paſt praying for. I have pepper'd two of them: Two I am ſure I have payed, two Rogues in Buckrom Sutes. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a Lye, ſpit in my face, call me Horſe: thou knoweſt my olde word: here I lay and thus I bore my point; foure Rogues in Buckrom let drive at me.

Prince. What, foure? thou ſayd'ſt but two, even now.

Falſt. Foure Hal, I told thee foure.

Poin. I, I, he ſayd foure.

Falſt. Theſe foure came all a-front, and mainely thruſt at me; I made no more adoe, but tooke all their ſeaven points in my Targuet, thus.

Prince. Seven? why there were but foure, even now.

Falſt. In Buckrom.

Poin. I, foure, in Buckrom Sutes.

Falſt. Seven, by theſe hilts, or I am a Villaine elſe.

Prin. Prethee let him alone, we ſhall have more anon.

Falſt. Doeſt thou heare me, Hal?

Prin. I, and marke thee too, Iack.

Falſt. Doe ſo, for it is worth the liſtning too: theſe nine in Buckrom, that I told thee of.

Prin. So, two more alreadie.

Falſt. Their Points being broken.

Poin. Downe fell his Hoſe.

Falſt. Began to give me ground: but I followed me cloſe, came in foot and hand; and with a thought, ſeaven of the eleven I pay'd.

Prin. O monſtrous! eleven Buckrom men growne out of two?

Falſt. But as the Devill would have it, three miſ-begotten Knaves, in Kendall Greene, came at my Backe, and let drive at me; for it was ſo darke, Hal, that thou could'ſt not ſee thy Hand.

Prin. Theſe Lyes are like the Father that begets them, groſſe as a Mountaine, open, palpable. Why thou Clay-brayn'd Guts, thou Knotty-pated Foole, thou Horſon obſcene greaſie Tallow Catch.

Falſt. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

Prin. Why, how could'ſt thou know theſe men in Kendall Greene, when it was ſo darke, thou could'ſt not ſee thy Hand? Come, tell us your reaſon: what ſay'ſt thou to this?

Poin. Come, your reaſon Iack, your reaſon.

Falſt. What, upon compulſion? No: were I at the Strappado, or all the Rackes in the World, I would not tell you on compulſion. Give you a reaſon on compulſion? If reaſons were as plenty as Black-berries, I would give no man a reaſon upon compulſion, I.

Prin. Ile be no longer guiltie of this ſinne. This ſanguine Coward, this Bed-preſſer, this Horſ-back-breaker, this huge Hill of Fleſh.

Falſt. Away you Starveling, you Elfe-skin, you dried Neats tongue, Bulles-piſſell, you ſtocke-fiſh: O for breth to vtter. What is like thee? You Tailors yard, you ſheath, you bow-caſe, you vile ſtanding tucke.

Prin. Well, breath a-while, and then to't againe: and when thon haſt tyr'd thy ſelfe in baſe compariſons, heare me ſpeake but thus.

Poin. Marke Iacke.

Prin. We two, ſaw you foure ſet on foure and bound them, and were Maſters of their Wealth: mark now how a plaine Tale ſhall put you downe. Then did we two, ſet on you foure, and with a word, outfac'd you from your prize, and have it: yea, and can ſhew it you in the Houſe. And Falſtaffe, you caried your Guts away as nimbly, with as quicke dexteritie, and roared for mercy, and ſtill ranne and roar'd, as ever I heard Bull-Calfe. What a Slave art thou, to hacke thy ſword as thou haſt done, and then ſay it was in fight. What trick? what device? what ſtarting hole canſt thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparant ſhame?

Poines. Come, let's heare Iacke: What tricke haſt thou now?

Fal. I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why heare ye my Maſters, was it for me to kill the Heire apparant? Should I turne upon the true Prince? Why, thou knoweſt I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware Inſtinct, the Lyon will not touch the true Prince: Inſtinct is a great matter. I was a Coward on Inſtinct: I ſhall thinke the better of my ſelfe, and thee, during my life: I, for a valiant Lyon, and thou for a true Prince. But Lads, I am glad you have the Mony. Hoſteſſe, clap to the doores: watch to Night, pray to morrow. Gallants, Lads, Boyes, Hearts of Gold, all the good Titles of Fellowſhip come to you. What, ſhall we be merry? ſhall we have a Play extempory.

Prin. Content, and the argument ſhall bee, thy running away.

Fal. A, no more of that Hall, and thou loveſt me.

Enter Hoſteſſe.

Hoſt. My Lord, the Prince?

Prin. How now my Lady the Hoſteſſe, what ſay'ſt thou to me?

Hoſteſſe. Marry, my Lord, there is a Noble man of the Court at doore would ſpeake with you: he ſayes, he comes from your Father.

Prin. Give him as much as will make him a Royall man, and ſend him backe againe to my Mother.

Falſt. What manner of man is he?

Hoſteſſe. An old man.

Falſt. What doth Gravitie out of his Bed at Midnight? Shall I give him his anſwere?

Prin. Prethee doe Iacke.

Falſt. 'Faith, and Ile ſend him packing. Exit.

Prince. Now Sirs: you fought faire; ſo did you Peto, ſo did you Bardol: you are Lyons too, you ranne away upon inſtinct: you will not touch the true Prince; no, fie.

Bard. 'Faith, I ranne when I ſaw others runne.

Prin. Tell mee now in earneſt, how came Falſtaffes Sword ſo hackt?

Peto. Why, he hackt it with his Dagger, and ſaid, he would ſweare truth out of England: but he would make you beleeve it was done in fight, and perſwaded us to doe the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our Noſes with Spear-graſſe, to make them bleed, and then beſlubber our garments, with it, and ſweare it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this ſeven yeares before, I bluſht to heare his monſtrous devices.

Prin. O Villaine, thou ſtoleſt a Cup of Sacke eighteene yeeres agoe, and wert taken with the manner, and ever ſince thou haſt bluſht extempore: thou hadſt fire and ſword on thy ſide, and yet thou ranneſt away; what inſtinct hadſt thou for it?

Bard. My Lord, doe you ſee theſe Meteors? doe you behold theſe exhalations?

Prin. I doe.

Bard. What thinke you they portend?

Prin. Hot Livers, and cold Purſes.

Bard. Choler, my Lord, if rightly taken.

Prin. No, if rightly taken, Halter.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Heere comes leane Iacke, heere comes bare-bone. How now my ſweete Creature of Bombaſt, how long is't agoe, Iacke, ſince thou ſaw'ſt thine owne Knee?

Falſt: My owne Knee? When I was about thy yeeres (Hal) I was not an Eagles Talent in the Waſte, I could have crept into any Aldermans Thumbe-Ring: a plague of ſighing and griefe, it blowes a man up like a Bladder. There's villanous Newes abroad: heere was Sir Iohn Braby from your Father; you muſt goe to the Court in the Morning. The ſame mad fellow of the North, Percy; and hee of Wales, that gave Amamon the Baſtinado, and made Lucifer Cuckold, and ſwore the Devill his true Leige-man upon the Croſſe of a Welch-hooke; what a Palgue call you him?

Poin. O, Glendower.

Falſt. Owen, Owen; the ſame, and his Sonne in Law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and the ſprightly Scot of Scots, Dowglas, that runnes a Horſe-backe up a Hill perpendicular.

Prin. Hee that rides at high ſpeede, and with a Piſtoll kills a Sparrow flying.

Falſt. You have hit it.

Prin. So did he never the Sparrow.

Falſt. Well, that Raſcall hath good mettall in him, hee will not runne.

Prin. Why, what a Raſcall art thou then, to prayſe him ſo for running?

Falſt. A Horſe-backe (ye Cuckoe) but a foot he will not budge a foot.

Prin. Yes Iacke, upon inſtinct.

Falſt. I grant ye, upon inſtinct: Well, hee is there too, and one Mordake, and a thouſand blew-Cappes more, Worceſter is ſtolne away by Night; thy Fathers Beard is turn'd white with the Newes; you may buy Land now as cheape as ſtinking Mackrell.

Prin. Then 'tis like, if there come a hot Sunne, and this civill buffetting hold, wee ſhall buy Maiden-heads as they buy hob-nayles, by the hundreds.

Falſt. By the Maſſe Lad, thou ſay'ſt true, it is like wee ſhall have good trading that way. But tell me Hall, are not thou horrible afear'd? thou being Heire apparant, could the World picke thee out three ſuch Enemyes againe, as that Fiend Dowglas, that Spirit Percy, and that Devill Glendower? Art thou not horrible afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it?

Prin. Not a whit: I lacke ſome of thy inſtinct.

Falſt. Well, thou wilt be horrible chidde to morrow, when thou commeſt to thy Father: if thou doe love me, practice an anſwere.

Prin. Doe thou ſtand for my Father, and examine mee upon the particulars of my Life.

Falſt. Shall I? content: This Chayre ſhall bee my State, this Dagger my Scepter, and this Cuſhion my Crowne.

Prin. Thy State is taken for a Ioyn'd-Stoole, thy Golden Scepter for a Leaden Dagger, and thy precious rich Crowne, for a pittifull bald Crowne.

Prin. Well, and the fire of Grace be not quite out of thee now ſhalt thou be moved. Give me a Cup of Sacke to make mine eyes looke redde, that it may bee thought I have wept, for I muſt ſpeake in paſſion, and I will doe it in King Cambyſes veine.

Prin. Well, heere is my Legge.

Falſt. And heere is my ſpeech: ſtand aſide Nobilitie.

Hoſteſſe. This is excellent ſport, yfaith.

Fal. Weepe not, ſweet Queene, for trickling teares are vaine.

Hoſteſſe. O the Father, how hee holdes his countenance?

Fal. For Gods ſake Lords, convey my truſtfull Queen,
For teares doe ſtop the floud-gates of her eyes.

Hoſteſſe. O rare, he doth it as like one of theſe harlotry Players as ever I ſee.

Fal. Peace good Pint-pot, peace good Tickle-braine. Harry, I doe not onely marvell where thou ſpendeſt thy time; but alſo, how thou art accompanied: For though the Camomile, the more it is troden, the faſter it growes; yet Youth, the more it is waſted, the ſooner it weares. Thou art my ſonne: I have partly thy Mothers Word, partly my Opinion; but chiefely, a villanous tricke of thine Eye, and a fooliſh hanging of thy nether Lippe, that doth warrant me. If then thou bee Sonne to mee, heere lyeth the point: why, being Sonne to mee, art thou ſo pointed at? Shall the bleſſed Sonne of heaven prove a Micher, and eate Black-berries? a queſtion not to bee askt. Shall the Sonne of England proove a Theefe, and take Purſes? a queſtion to bee askt. There is a thing, Harry, which thou haſt often heard of, and it is knowne to many in our Land, by the Name of Pitch: this Pitch (as ancient Writers doe report) doth defile; ſo doth the companie thou keepeſt: for Harry, now I doe not ſpeake to thee in Drinke, but in Teares; not in pleaſure, but in Paſſion; not in Words onely, but in Woes alſo: and yet there is a vertuous man, whom I have often noted in thy companie, but I know not his Name.

Prin. What manner of man, and it like your Majeſtie?

Falſt. A goodly portly man yfaith, and a corpulent, of a chearefull Looke, a pleaſing Eye, and a moſt noble Carriage, and as I thinke, his age ſome fiftie, or (byrlady) inclining to threeſcore; and now I remember mee, his Name is Falſtaffe: if that man ſhould be lewdly given, he deceives mee; for Harry, I ſee vertue in his Lookes. If then the Tree may be knowne by the Fruit, as the Fruit by the Tree, then peremptorily I ſpeake it, there is Vertue in that Falſtaffe: him keepe with, the reſt baniſh. And tell me now, thou naughtie Varlet, tell me, where haſt thou beene this moneth?

Prin. Do'ſt thou ſpeake like a King? doe thou ſtand for me, and Ile play my Father.

Falſt. Depoſe me: if thou do'ſt it halfe ſo gravely, ſo majeſtically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heeles for a Rabbet-ſucker, or a Poulters Hare.

Prin. Well, heere I am ſet.

Falſt. And heere I ſtand: judge my Maſters.

Prin. Now Harry, whence come you?

Falſt. My Noble Lord, from Eaſt-cheape.

Prin. The complaints I heare of thee, are grievous.

Falſt. Yfaith, my Lord, they are falſe: Nay, Ile tickle ye for a young Prince.

Prin. Sweareſt thou, ungracious Boy? henceforth ne're looke on me: thou art violently carryed away from Grace: there is a Devill haunts thee, in the likeneſſe of a fat old Man; a Tunne of Man is thy Companion: Why do'ſt thou converſe with that Trunke of Humors, that Boulting-Hutch of Beaſtlineſſe, that ſwolne Parcell of Dropſies, that huge Bombard of Sacke, that ſtuft Cloakebagge of Guts, that roſted Manning-Tree Oxe with the Puddings in his Belly, that Reverend Vice, that grey Iniquitie, that Father Ruffian, that Vanitie in yeares? wherein is he good, but to taſte Sacke and drinke it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carue a Capon, and eate it? wherein Cunning, but in Craft? wherein Craftie, but in Villanie? wherein Villanous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Falſt. I would your Grace would take me with you: whom meanes your Grace?

Prince. That villanous abominable mis-leader of Youth, Falſtaffe, that old white-bearded Sathan.

Falſt. My Lord, the man I know.

Prince. I know thou do'ſt.

Falſt. But to ſay, I know more harme in him then in my ſelfe, were to ſay more then I know. That he is olde (the more the pittie) his white haires doe witneſſe it: but that hee is (ſaving your reverence) a Whore-maſter, that I utterly deny. If Sacke and Sugar be a fault, Heaven helpe the wicked: if to be olde and merry, be a ſinne, then many an olde Hoſte that I know, is damn'd: if to be fat, be to be hated, then Pharaohs leane Kine are to be loved. No, my good Lord, baniſh Peto, baniſh Bardolph, baniſh Poines: but for ſweete Iacke Falſtaffe, kinde Iacke Falſtaffe, true Iacke Falſtaffe, valiant Iacke Falſtaffe, and therefore more valiant, being as he is olde Iacke Falſtaffe, baniſh not him thy Harryes companie, baniſh not him thy Harryes companie; baniſh plumpe Iacke, and baniſh all the World.

Prince. I doe, I will.

Enter Bardolph running.

Bard. O, my Lord, my Lord, the Sherife, with a moſt monſtrous Watch, is at thee doore.

Falſt. Out you Rogue, play out the Play: I have much to ſay in the behalfe of that Falſtaffe.

Enter the Hoſteſſe.

Hoſteſſe. O, my Lord, my Lord.

Falſt. Heigh, heigh, the Divell rides upon a Fiddleſticke: what's the matter?

Hoſteſſe. The Sherife and all the Watch are at the doore: they are come to ſearch the Houſe, ſhall I let them in?

Falſt. Do'ſt thou heare Hal, never call a true peece of Gold a Counterfeit: thou art eſſentially made, without ſeeming ſo.

Prince. And thou a naturall Coward, without inſtinct.

Falſt. I deny your Maior; if you will deny the Sherife, ſo: if not, let him enter. If I become not a Cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up: I hope I ſhall as ſoone be ſtrangled wth a Halter, as another.

Prince. Goe hide thee behinde the Arras, the reſt walke up above. Now my Maſters, for a true Face and good Conſcience.

Falſt. Both which I have had: but their date is out, and therefore Ile hide me. Exit.

Prince. Call in the Sherife.

Enter Sherife and the Carrier.

Prince. Now Maſter Sherife, what is your will with me?

She. Firſt pardon me, my Lord. A Hue and Cry hath followed certaine men unto this houſe.

Prince. What men?

She. One of them is well knowne, my gracious Lord, a groſſe fat man.

Car. As fat as Butter.

Prince. The man, I doe aſſure you, is not heere,
For I my ſelfe at this time have imploy'd him:
And Sherife, I will engage my word to thee,
That I will by to morrow Dinner time,
Send him to anſwere thee, or any man,
For any thing he ſhall be charg'd withall:
And ſo let me entreat you, leave the houſe.

She. I will, my Lord: there are two Gentlemen
Have in this Robbery loſt three hundred Markes.

Prince. It may be ſo: if he have robb'd theſe men,
He ſhall be anſwerable: and ſo farewell.

She. Good Night, my Noble Lord.

Prince. I thinke it is good Morrow, is it not?

She. Indeede, my Lord, I thinke it be two a Clocke.
Exit.

Prince. This oyly Raſcall is knowne as well as Poules: goe call him forth.

Peto. Falſtaffe? faſt a ſleepe behinde the Arras, and ſnorting like a Horſe.

Prince. Harke, how hard he fetches breath: ſearch his Pockets.

He ſearcheth his Pockets and findeth certaine Papers.

Prince. What haſt thou found?

Peto. Nothing but papers, my Lord.

Prince. Let's ſee, what be they? reade them.

Peto. Item, a Capon.	ii.s.ii.d.
Item, Sawce.	iiii.d.
Item, Sacke, two Gallons,	v.s.viii.d.
Item, Anchoves and Sacke after ſupper.	ii.s,vi.d.
Item, Bread.	ob.

Prince. O monſtrous, but one halfe penny-worth of Bread to this intollerable deale of Sacke? What there is elſe, keepe cloſe, weele reade it at more advantage: there let him ſleepe till day. Ile to the Court in the Morning: We muſt all to the Warres, and thy place ſhall be honorable. Ile procure this fat Rogue a Charge of Foot, and I know his death will be a Match of Twelve-ſcore. The Money ſhall be pay'd backe againe with advantage. Be with me betimes in the Morning: and ſo good morrow Peto.

Peto. Good morrow, good my Lord. Exeunt

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Hotſpurre, Worceſter, Lord Mortimer, Owen Glendower.

Mort. Theſe promiſes are faire, the parties ſure,
And our induction full of proſperous hope.

Hotſp. Lord Mortimer, and Couſin Glendower,
Will you ſit downe?
And Vnckle Worceſter; a plague upon it,
I have forgot the Mappe.

Glend. No, here it is:
Sit Couſin Percy, ſit good Couſin Hotſpurre:
For by that Name, as oft as Lancaſter doth ſpeake of you,
His Cheekes looke pale, and with a riſing ſigh,
He wiſheth you in Heaven.

Hotſp. And you in Hell, as oft as he heares Owen Glendower ſpoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: At my Nativitie,
The front of heaven was full of fierie ſhapes,
Of burning Creſſets: and at my Birth,
The frame and foundation of the Earth
Shak'd like a Coward.

Hotſp. Why ſo it would have done at the ſame ſeaſon if your Mothers Cat had but kitten'd, though your ſelfe had never beene borne,

Glend. I ſay the Earth did ſhake when I was borne.

Hot. And I ſay the Earth was not of my minde:
If you ſuppoſe, as fearing you, it ſhooke.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the Earth did tremble.

Hot. Oh, then the Earth ſhooke
To ſee the Heavens on fire,
And not in feare of your Nativitie.
Diſeaſed nature oftentimes breakes forth
In ſtrange eruptions; and the teeming Earth
Is with a kinde of Colicke pincht and vext,
By the impriſoning of unruly Winde
Within her Wombe: which for enlargement ſtriving,
Shakes the old Beldame Earth, and tombles downe
Steeples, and moſſe-growne Towers. At your Birth,
Our Grandam Earth, having this diſtemperature,
In paſſion ſhooke.

Glend. Couſin: of many men
I doe not beare theſe Croſſings: give me leave
To tell you once againe, that at my Birth
The front of Heaven was full of fierie ſhapes,
The Goates ranne from the Mountaines, and the Heards
Were ſtrangely clamorous to the frighted fields:
Theſe ſignes have markt me extraordinarie,
And all the courſes of my Life doe ſhew,
I am not in the Roll of common men.
Where is the Living, clipt in with the Sea,
That chides the Bankes of England, Scotland, and Wales,
Which calls me Pupill, or hath read to me?
And bring him out, that is but womans ſoone,
Can trace me in the tedious wayes of Art,
And hold me pace in deepe experiments.

Hot. I thinke there's no man ſpeakes better Welſh:
Ile to Dinner.

Mort. Peace Couſin Percy, you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call Spirits from the vaſtie Deepe.

Hot. Why ſo can I, or ſo can any man:
But will they come, when you doe call for them?

Glend: Why, I can teach thee, Couſin, to command the Devill.

Hot. And I can teach thee, Couſin, to ſhame the Divell,
By telling truth. Tell truth, and ſhame the Divell.
If thou have power to raiſe him, bring him hither,
And Ile be ſworne, I have power to ſhame him hence.
Oh, while you live, tell truth, and ſhame the Divell.

Mort. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable Chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bullingbrooke made head
Againſt my power: thrice from the Banks of Wye,
And ſandy-bottom'd Severne, have I hent him
Bootleſſe home, and Weather-beaten backe.

Hot. Home without Bootes,
And in foule Weather too,
How ſcapes he Agues in the Divels name?

Glend. Come, heere's the Mappe:
Shall wee devide our Right,
According to our threefold order ta'ne?

Mor. The Arch-Deacon hath devided it
Into three Limits, very equally:
England, from Trent, and Severne hitherto,
By South and Eaſt, is to my part aſſign'd:
All Weſtward, Wales, beyond the Severne ſhore,
And all the fertile Land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower: And deare Couze, to you
The remnant Northward, lying off from Trent.
And our indentures Tripartite are drawne:
Which being ſealed enterchangeably,
(A buſineſſe that this Night may execute)
To morrow, Couſin Percy, you and I,
And my good Lord of Worceſter will ſet forth,
To meet your Father, and the Scottiſh Power,
As is appointed us at Shrewsbury.
My Father Glendower is not readie yet,
Nor ſhall we needs his helpe theſe foureteene dayes:
Within that ſpace, you may have drawne together
Your Tenants, Friends, and neighboring Gentlemen.

Glend. A ſhorter time ſhall ſend me to you, Lords:
And in my conduct ſhall your Ladies come,
From whom you now muſt ſteale, and take no leave
For there will be a World of Water ſhed,

Vpon the parting of your Wives and you:
Hotſp. Me thinkes my moity, North from Burton here,
In quantitie equals not one of yours:
See, how this River coms me cranking in,
And cuts me from the beſt of all my Land,
A huge halfe Moone, a monſtrous Cantle out.
Ile have the Currant in this place damn'd up,
And here the ſmug and Silver Trent ſhall runne,
In a new Chanell, faire and evenly:
It ſhall not winde with ſuch a deepe indent,
To rob me of ſo rich a Bottome here.
Glend. Not winde? it ſhall, it muſt, you ſee it doth.
Mort. Yea, but marke how he beares his courſe,
And runnes me up, with like advantage on the other ſide,
Gelding the oppoſed Continent as much,
As on the other ſide it takes from you.
Worc. Yea, but a litle Charge will trench him here,
And on this North ſide winne this Cape of Land,
And then he runnes ſtraight and even.
Hotſp. Ile have it ſo, a little Charge will doe it.
Gland. Ile not have it alter'd.
Hotſp. Will not you?
Gland. No, nor you ſhall not.
Hatſp. Who ſhall ſay me nay?
Gland. Why, that will I.
Hotſp. Let me not underſtand you then, ſpeake it in Welſh.
Glend. I can ſpeake Engliſh, Lord, as well as you:
For I was train'd up in the Engliſh Court;
Where, being but young, I framed to the Harpe,
Many an Engliſh Dittie, lovely well,
And gave the Tongue a helpefull Ornament;
A Vertue that was never ſeene in you.
Hotſp. Marry, and I am glad of it with all my heart,
I had rather be a Kitten, and cry mew,
Then one of theſe ſame Meeter Ballad-mongers:
I had rather heare a Brazen Candleſticke turn'd,
Or a dry Wheele grate on the Axle-rree,
And that would ſet my teeth on edge,
Nothing ſo much, as mincing Poetrie;
'Tis like the forc't gate of a ſhuffling Nagge.
Gland. Come, you ſhall have Trent turn'd.
Hotſp. I doe not care: Ile give thrice ſo much Land
To any well-deſerving friend;
But in the way of Bargaine, marke ye me,
Ile cavill on the ninth part of a hayre,
Are the Indentures drawne? ſhall we be gone?
Glend. The Moone ſhines faire,
You may away by Night:
Ile haſte the Writer; and withall,
Breake with your Wives, of your departure hence:
I am afraid my Daughter will runne madde.
So much ſhe doteth on her Mortimer. Exit.
Mort. Fie, Couſin Percy, how you croſſe my Father.
Hotſp. I cannot choose: ſometime he angers me,
With telling me of the Moldwarpe and the Ant,
Of the Dreamer Merlin, and his Prophecies;
And of a Dragon, and a finne-leſſe Fiſh,
A clip-wing'd Griffin, and a moulten Raven,
A couching Lyon, a ramping Cat,
And ſuch a deale of skimble-skamble Stuffe,
As puts me from my Faith. I tell you what,
He held me laſt Night, at leaſt, nine howres,
In reckning up the ſeverall Devils Names,
That were his Lacqueyes:
I cry'd hum, and well, goe too,
But mark'd him not a word. O, he is as tedious
As a tyred Horſe, a railing Wife,
Worſe then a ſmoakie houſe. I had rather live
With Cheeſe and Garlike in a Windmill farre,
Then feede on Cates, and have him talke to me,
In any Summer-Houſe in Chriſtendome.
Mort. In faith he was a worthy Gentleman;
Exceeding well read, and profited,
In ſtrange Concealements:
Valiant as a Lyon, and wondrous affable,
And as bountifull, as Mines of India.
Shall I tell you, Couſin,
He holds your temper in a high reſpect,
And curbs himſelfe, even of his naturall ſcope,
When you doe croſſe his humor: 'faith he does.
I warrant you, that man is not alive,
Might ſo have tempted him, as you have done,
Without the taſte of danger, and reproofe:
But doe not uſe it oft, let me entreat you.
Worc. In faith, my Lord, you are too wilfull blame,
And ſince your comming hither, have done enough,
To put him quite beſides his patience:
You muſt needes learne, Lord, to amend this fault;
Though ſometimes it ſhew Greatneſſe, Courage, Blood,
And that's the deareſt grace it renders you;
Yet oftentimes it doth preſent harſh Rage,
Defect of manners, want of governement,
Pride, Haughtineſſe, Opinion, and Diſdaine:
The leaſt of which, haunting a Noble man,
Loſeth mens hearts, and leaves behind a ſtaine
Vpon the beautie of all parts beſides,
Beguiling them of commendation.
Hotſp. Well, I am ſchool'd:
Good-manners be your ſpeede;
Heere come your Wives, and let us take our leave.

Enter Gleudower, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly ſpight that angers me,
My Wife can ſpeake no Engliſh, I no Welſh.
Glend. My Daughter weepes, ſhee'le not part with you,
Shee'le be a Souldier too, ſhee'le to the Warres.
Mort. Good Father tell her, that ſhe and my Aunt Percy
Shall follow in your Conduct ſpeedily.

Glendower ſpeakes to him Welſh, and ſhe anſweres him in the ſame.

Glend. She is deſperate heere:
A peeviſh ſelfe-will'd Harlotry,
One that no perſwaſion can doe good upon,

The Lady ſpeakes in Welſh.

Mort. I underſtand thy Lookes: that prety Welſh
Which thou powr'ſt down from theſe ſwelling Heavens,
I am too perfect in: and but for ſhame,
In ſuch a parley ſhould I anſwere thee.

The Lady againe in Welſh.

Mort. I underſtand thy Kiſſes, and thou mine,
And that's a feeble diſputation:
But I willl never be a Truant, Love,
Till I have learn'd thy Language: for thy tongue

Maks

Makes Welſh as ſweet as Ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a faire Queene in a Summers Bowre,
With raviſhing Diviſion to her Lute.
Glend. Nay, if thou melt, then will ſhe runne madde.

The Lady ſpeakes againe in Welſh.

Mort. O, I am Ignorance it ſelfe in this.
Glend. She bids you,
On the wanton Ruſhes lay you downe,
And reſt your gentle Head upon her Lappe,
And ſhe will ſing the ſong that pleaſeth you,
And on your Eye-lids Crowne the God of Sleepe,
Charming your blood with pleaſing heavineſſe;
Making ſuch difference betwixt Wake and Sleepe,
As is the difference betwixt Day and Night,
The houre before the Heavenly Harneis'd Teeme
Begins his Golden Progreſſe in the Eaſt.
Mort. With all my heart Ile ſit, and heare her ſing:
By that time will our Booke, I thinke, be drawne.
Glend. Doe ſo:
And thoſe Muſitians that ſhall play to you,
Hang in the Ayre a thouſand Leagues from thence;
And ſtraight they ſhall be here: ſit, and attend.
Hotſp. Come Kate, thou art perfect in lying downe:
Come, quicke, quicke, that I may lay my Head in thy Lappe.
Lady. Goe, ye giddy-Gooſe.

The Muſicke playes.

Hotſp. Now I perceive the Devill underſtands Welſh,
And 'tis no marvell he is ſo humorous:
Byrlady he's a good Muſitian.
Lady. Then would you be nothing but Muſicall,
For you are altogether governed by humors:
Lye ſtill ye theefe, and heare the Lady ſing in Welſh.
Hotſp. I had rather heare (Lady) my Brach howle in Iriſh.
Lady. Would'ſt have thy Head broken?
Hotſp. No.
Lady. Then be ſtill.
Hotſp. Neyther, 'tis a Womans fault.
Lady. Now God helpe thee.
Hotſp. To the Welſh Ladies Bed.
Lady. What's that?
Hotſp. Peace ſhe ſings.

Heere the Lady ſings a Welſh Song.

Hotſp. Come, Ile have your Song too.
Lady. Not mine, in good ſooth.
Hotſp. Not yours, in good ſooth?
You ſweare like a Comfit-makers Wife:
Not you, in good ſooth; and, as true as I live;
And, as God ſhall mend me; and as ſure as day:
And giveſt ſuch Sarcenet ſuretie for thy Oathes,
As if thou never walk'ſt further then Finsbury.
Sweare me, Kate, like a Lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling Oath: and leave in ſooth,
And ſuch proteſt of Pepper-Ginger-bread,
To Velvet-Guards, and Sunday-Citizens.
Come, ſing.
Lady. I will not ſing.
Hotſp. 'Tis the next way to turne Taylor, or be Red-breſt teacher: and the Indentures bee drawne, Ile away within theſe two howres: and ſo come in, when ye will. Exit.
Glend. Come, come, Lord Mortimer, you are as ſlow,
As hot Lord Percy is on fire to goe,
By this our Booke is drawne: wee'le but ſeale,
And then to Horſe immediately.
Mort. Wth all my heart. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, and others.

King. Lords, give us leave:
The Prince of Wales, and I,
Muſt have ſome private conference:
But be neere at hand,
For we ſhall preſenly have need of you.
Exeunt Lords.
I know not whether Heaven will have it ſo,
For ſome diſpleaſing ſervice I have done;
That in his ſecret Doome, out of my Blood,
Hee'le breed Revengement, and a Scourge for me:
But thou do'ſt in thy paſſages of Life,
Make me beleeve, that thou art onely mark'd
For the hot vengeance, and the Rod of heaven
To puniſh my Miſtreadings. Tell me elſe,
Could ſuch inordinate and low deſires,
Such poore, ſuch bare, ſuch lewd, ſuch meane attempts,
Such barren pleaſures, rude ſociety,
As thou art matcht withall, and grafted too,
Accompanie the greatneſſe of thy blood,
And hold their levell with thy Princely heart?
Prince. So pleaſe your Majeſty, I would I could
Quit all offences with as cleare excuſe,
As well as I am doubtleſſe I can purge
My ſelfe of many I am charg'd withall:
Yet ſuch extenuation let me begge,
As in reproofe of many Tales deviſ'd,
Which oft the Eare of Greatneſſe needes muſt heare,
By ſmiling Pick-thankes, and baſe Newes-mongers;
I may for ſome things true, wherein my youth
Hath faultie wandred, and irregular,
Finde pardon on my true ſubmiſſion.
King. Heaven pardon thee:
Yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which doe hold a Wing
Quite from the flight of all thy anceſtors.
Thy place in Councell thou haſt rudely loſt,
Which by thy younger brother is ſupply'de;
And art almoſt an alien to the hearts
Of all the Court and Princes of my blood.
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the Soule of every man
Prophetically do fore-thinke thy fall.
Had I ſo laviſh of my preſence beene,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So ſtale and cheape to vulgar Company;
Opinion, that did helpe me to the Crowne,
Had ſtill kept loyall to poſſeſſion,
Aud left me in reputeleſſe baniſhment,
A fellow of no marke, nor likelyhood.
By being ſeldome ſeene, I could not ſtirre,
But like a Comet, I was wondred at,

That men would tell their Children, This is he:
Others would ſay, Where, Which is Bullingbrooke.
And then I ſtole all Courteſie from Heaven,
And dreſt my ſelfe in ſuch Humility,
That I did pluke Allegeance from mens hearts,
Lowd Showts and Salutations from their mouthes,
Even in the preſence of the Crowned King.
Thus I did keepe my Perſon freſh and new,
My preſence like a Robe Pontificall,
Ne're ſeene, but wondred at: and ſo my State,
Seldome but ſumptuous, ſhewed like a Feaſt,
And wonne by rareneſſe ſuch Solemnity.
The skipping King he ambled up and downe,
With ſhallow Ieſters, and raſh Bavin Wits,
Soone kindled, and ſoone burnt, carded his State,
Mingled his Royalty with Carping Fooles,
Had his great Name prophaned with their Scornes,
And gave his Countenance, againſt his Name,
To laugh at gybing Boyes, and ſtand the puſh
Of every Beardleſſe vaine Comparative;
Grew a Companion to the common Streetes,
Enfeoff'd himſelfe to Popularity:
That being dayly ſwallowed by mens Eyes,
They ſurfeted with Honye, and began to loathe
The taſte of Swetneſſe, whereof a little
More then a little, is by much too much.
So when he had occaſion to be ſeene,
He was but as the Cuckow is in Iune,
Heard, not regarded: ſeene but with ſuch Eyes,
As ſicke and blunted with Community,
Afford no extraordinary Gaze,
Such as is bent on Sunne-like Majeſty,
When it ſhines ſeldome in admiring Eyes:
But rather drowz'd, and hung their eye-lids down,
Slept in his Face, and rendred ſuch aſpect
As Cloudy men uſe to do their adverſaries,
Being with his preſence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very Line, Harry, ſtandeſt thou:
For thou haſt loſt thy Princely Priviledge,
With vile participation. Not an Eye
But is aweary of thy common ſight,
Save mine, which hath deſir'd to ſee thee more:
Which now doth that I would not have it doe,
Make blinde it ſelfe with fooliſh tenderneſſe.

Prince. I ſhall hereafter, my thrice gracious Lord,
Be more my ſelfe.

King. For all the World,
As thou art to this houre, was Richard then,
When I from France ſet forth at Ravenſpurgh;
And even as I was then, is Percy now:
Now by my Scepter, and my Soule to boot,
He hath more worthy intereſt to the ſtate
Than thou the ſhaddow of Succeſſion;
For of no Right, nor colour like to Right,
He doth fill fields with Harneis in the Realme,
Turnes head againſt the Lyons armed Iawes;
And being no more in debt to yeeres, then thou,
Leades ancient Lords, and reverent Biſhops on
To bloody Battailes, and to bruſing Armes.
What never-dying honour hath he got,
Againſt renowned Dowglas? whoſe high Deedes,
Whoſe hot Incurſions and great Name in Armes,
Holds from all Souldiers chiefe Majoritie,
And Militarie Title Capitall.
Throughal the Kingdomes that acknowledge Chriſt,
Thrice hath the Hotſpurre Mars, in ſwathing Clothes,
This Infant Warrior, in his Enterpriſes,
Diſcomfited great Dowglas, ta'ne him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of the deepe Defiance up,
And ſhake the peace and ſafety of our Throne.
And what ſay you to this? Percy, Northumberland.
The Arch-biſhops Grace of Yorke, Dowglas, Mortimer,
Capitulate againſt us, and are up.
But wherefore do I tell theſe Newes to thee?
Why, Harry, doe I tell thee of my Foes,
Which art my neer'ſt and deareſt Enemie?
Thou art like enough, through vaſſall Feare,
Baſe Inclination, and the ſtart of Spleene,
To fight againſt me under Percies pay,
To dogge his heeles, and curtſie at his frownes.
To ſhew how much thou art degenerate.

Prince. Doe not thinke ſo, you ſhall not finde it ſo:
And Heaven forgive them, that ſo much have ſway'd
Your Majeſties good thoughts away from me:
I will redeeme all this on Percies head,
And in the cloſing of ſome glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your Sonne,
When I will weare a garment all of blood,
And ſtaine my favours in a bloody Maske:
Which waſht away, ſhall ſcowre my ſhame with it.
And that ſhall be the day, when ere it lights,
That this ſame Child of honour and Renowne,
This gallant Hotſpurre, this all-prayſed Knight,
And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet:
For every Honor ſitting on his Helme,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My ſhames redoubled. For the time will come,
That I ſhall make this Northerne Youth exchange
His glorious Deedes for my Indignities:
Percy is but my Factor, good my Lord,
To engroſſe up glorious deedes on my behalfe:
And I will call him to ſo ſtrict account,
That he ſhall render every Glory up,
Yea, even the ſleighteſt worſhip of his time,
Or I will teare the Reckoning from his Heart.
This, in the Name of Heaven, I promiſe here:
The which, if I promiſe, and doe ſurvive,
I doe beſeech your Majeſtie, may ſalve
The long-growne Wounds of my intemperature:
If not, the end of Life cancells all Bands,
And I will dye a hundred thouſand Deaths,
Ere breake the ſmalleſt parcell of this Vow.

King. A hundred thouſand Rebells dye in this:
Thou ſhalt have Charge, and ſoveraigne truſt herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now good Blunt? thy lookes are full of ſpeed.

Blunt. So hath the Buſineſſe that I come to ſpeake of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath ſent word,
That Dowglas and the Engliſh Rebels met
The eleventh of this moneth, at Shrewsbury:
A mightie and a fearefull Head they are,
(If Promiſes be kept on every hand)
As ever offered foule play in a State.

King. The Earle of Weſtmerland ſet forth to day:
With him my ſonne, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter,
For this advertiſement is five dayes old.
On Wedneſday next, Harry thou ſhalt ſet forward:
On thurſday, we our ſelves will march.
Our meeting is Bridgenorth: and Harry, you ſhall march

Through Gloceſterſhire: by which account,
Our Buſineſſe valued ſome twelue dayes hence,
Our generall Forces at Bridgenorth ſhall meete.
Our hands are full of Buſineſſe: let's away,
Advantage feedes them fat, while men delay. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Falſtaffe and Bardolph.

Falſt. Bardolph, am I not falne away vilely, ſince this laſt action? doe I not bate? doe I not dwindle? Why my skinne hangs about mee like an olde Ladies looſe Gowne: I am withered like an olde Apple Iohn. Well, Ile repent, and that ſuddenly, while I am in ſome liking: I ſhall be out of heart ſhortly, and then I ſhall have no ſtrength to repent. And I have not forgotten what the in-ſide of a Church is made of, I am a Pepper Corne, a Brewers Horſe, the inſide of a Church. Company, villanous Company hath beene the ſpoyle of me.

Bard. Sir Iohn, you are ſo fretfull, yon cannot live long.

Falſt. Why there is it: Come, ſing me a bawdy Song, make me merry: I was as vertuouſly given, as a Gentleman need to be; vertuous enough, ſwore little, dic'd not above ſeaven times a weeke, went to a Bawdy-houſe not above once in a quarter of an houre, payd Mony that I borrowed, three or foure times; lived well, and in good compaſſe: and now I live out of all order, out of compaſſe.

Bard. Why, you are ſo fat, Sir Iohn, that you muſt needes bee out of all compaſſe; out of all reaſonable compaſſe, Sir Iohn.

Falſt. Doe thou amend thy Face, and Ile amend thy Life: Thou art our Admirall, thou beareſt the Lanterne in the Poope, but 'tis in the Noſe of thee; thou art the Knight of the burning Lampe.

Bard. Why, Sir Iohn, my Face does you no harme.

Falſt. No, Ile be ſworne: I make as good uſe of it, as many a man doth of a Deaths-Head, or a Memento Mori. I never ſee thy Face, but I thinke upon Hell fire, and Dives that lived in Purple; for there he is in his Robes burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to vertue, I would ſweare by thy Face; my Oath ſhould bee, By this Fire: But thou art altogether given over; and wert indeede, but for the Light in thy Face, the Sunne of utter Darkeneſſe. When thou ran'ſt up Gads-Head in the Night, to catch my Horſe, if I did not thinke that thou hadſt beene an Ignis fatuus, or a Ball of Wild-fire, there's no Purchaſe in Mony. O, thou art a perpetuall Triumph, an everlaſting Bone-fire-Light: thou haſt ſaved mee a thouſand Markes in Linkes and Torches, walking with thee in the Night betwixt Taverne and Taverne: But the ſacke that thou haſt drunke mee, would have bought mee lights as good cheape, as the deareſt Chandlers in Europe. I have maintain'd that Salamander of yours with fire, any time this two and thirtie yeeres, Heaven reward me for it.

Bard. I would my Face were in your belly.

Falſt. So ſhould I be ſure to be heart-burn'd.

Enter Hotſpurre. Hoſteſs

How now, Dame Partlet the Hen, have you enquir'd yet who pick'd my Pocket?

Hoſteſſe. Why Sir Iohn, what doe you thinke, Sir Iohn? doe you thinke I keepe Theeves in my Houſe? I have ſearch'd, I have enquired, ſo haz my Huſband, Man by Man, Boy by Boy, Servant by Servant: the tight of a hayre was never loſt in my houſe before.

Falſt. Ye lye Hoſteſſe: Bardolph was ſhav'd, and loſt many a hayre; and Ile be ſworne my Pocket was pick'd; goe to, you are a Woman, goe.

Hoſteſſe. Who I? I defie thee: I was never call'd ſo in mine owne houſe before.

Falſt. Goe to, I know you well enough.

Hoſteſſe. No, Sir Iohn, you doe not know mee, Sir Iohn: I know you, Sir Iohn: you owe me Money, Sir Iohn, and now you picke a quarrell, to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of Shirts to your Backe.

Falſt. Doulas, filthy Doulas: I have given them away to Bakers Wives, and they have made Boulters of them.

Hoſteſſe. Now as I am a true Woman, Holland of eight ſhillings an Ell: You owe Mony here beſides, Sir Iohn, for your Dyet, and by-Drinkings, and Mony lent you, foure and twentie pounds.

Falſt. He had his part of it, let him pay.

Hoſteſſe. Hee? alas hee is poore, hee hath nothing.

Falſt. How? Poore? Looke upon his Face: What call you Rich? Let them coyne his Noſe, let them coyne his Cheekes, Ile not pay a Denier. What, will you make a Younker of me? Shall I not take mine eaſe in mine Inne, but I ſhall have my Pocket pick'd? I have loſt a Seale-Ring of my Grand-fathers, worth fortie Marke.

Hoſteſſe. I have heard the Prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that Ring was Copper.

Falſt. How? the Prince is a Iacke, a Sneake-Cuppe: and if he were heere, I would cudgell him like a Dogge, if he would ſay ſo.

Enter the Prince marching, and Falſtaffe meets him, playing on his Truncheion like a Fife.

Falſt. How now Lad? is the Winde in that Doore? Muſt we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate faſhion.

Hoſteſſe. My Lord, I pray you heare me.

Prince. What ſay'ſt thou, Miſtreſſe Quickly? How does thy Husband? I love him well, hee is an honeſt man.

Hoſteſſe. Good, my Lord, heare me.

Falſt. Prethee let her alone, and liſt to me.

Prince. What ſay'ſt thou, Iacke?

Falſt. The other Night I fell aſleepe heere behind the Arras, and had my Pocket pickt: this Houſe is turn'd Bawdy-houſe, they picke Pockets.

Prince. What didſt thou loſe, Iacke?

Falſt. Wilt thou beleeve me, Hal? Three or foure Bonds of fortie pound a peece, and a Seale-Ring of my Grandfathers.

Prince. A Trifle, ſome eight-penny matter.

Hoſt. So I told him, my Lord; and I ſayd, I heard your Grace ſay ſo: and (my Lord) hee ſpeakes moſt vilely of you, like a foule-mouth'd man he is, and ſaid, hee would cudgell you.

Prince. What he did not?

Hoſt. There's neyther Faith, Truth, nor Woman-hood in me elſe.

Falſt. There's no more faith in thee then a ſtu'de Prune; nor no more truth in thee then in a drawne Fox: and for Wooman-hood, Maid-marian may be the Deputies wife of the Ward to thee. Go you nothing: go.

Hoſt. Say, what thing? what thing?

Falſt. What thing? why a thing to thanke heaven on.

Hoſt. I am nothing to thanke heaven on, I would thou ſhouldſt know it; I am an honeſt mans wife: and ſetting thy Knighthood aſide, thou art a knave to call me ſo.

Falſt. Setting thy womanhood aſide, thou art a beaſt to ſay otherwiſe.

Hoſt. Say, what beaſt, thou knave thou?

Fal. What beaſt? Why an Otter.

Prin. An Otter, ſir Iohn? Why an Otter?

Fal. Why? She's neither fiſh nor fleſh; a man knowes not where to have her.

Hoſt. Thou art unjuſt man in ſaying ſo; thou, or any man knowes where to have me, thou knave thou.

Prince. Thou ſay'ſt true Hoſteſſe, and he ſlanders thee moſt groſſely.

Hoſt. So he doth you, my Lord, and ſayde this other day, You ought him a thouſand pound.

Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thouſand pound?

Falſt. A thouſand pound Hal? A Million. Thy love is worth a Million: thou ow'ſt me thy love.

Hoſt. Nay my Lord, hee call'd you Iacke, and ſaid hee would cudgell you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bar. Indeed Sir Iohn, you ſayd ſo.

Fal. Yea, if he ſaid my Ring was Copper.

Prince. I ſay 'tis Copper. Dar'ſt thou bee as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why Hal? thou know'ſt, as thou art but a man, I dare: but, as thou art a Prince, I feare thee, as I feare the roaring of the Lyons Whelpe.

Prince. And why not as the Lyon?

Fal. The King himſelfe is to bee feared as the Lyon: Do'ſt thou thinke Ile feare thee, as I feare thy Father? nay if I do, let my Girdle breake.

Prin. O, if it ſhould, how would thy guttes fall about thy knees. But ſirra: There's no roome for Faith, Truth, nor Honeſty, in this boſome of thine: it is all fill'd uppe with Guttes and Midriffe. Charge an honeſt Woman with picking thy pocket? Why thou horſon impudent imboſt Raſcall, if there were any thing in thy Pocket but Taverne Reckonings, Memorandams of Bawdie-houſes, and one poore penny-worth of Sugar-candie to make thee long-winded: if thy pocket were enrich'd with any other injuries but theſe, I am a Villaine: And yet you will ſtand to it, you will not Pocket up wrong. Art thou not aſham'd?

Fal. Do'ſt thou heare Hal? Thou know'ſt in the ſtate of Innocency, Adam fell: and what would poore Iacke Falſtaffe do, in the dayes of Villany? Thou ſeeſt, I have more fleſh then another man, and therefore more frailty. You confeſſe then you pickt my Pocket?

Prin. It appeares ſo by the Story.

Fal. Hoſteſſe, I forgive thee:
Go make ready Breakfaſt, love thy Husband,
Looke to thy Servants, and cheriſh thy Gueſts:
Thou ſhalt find me tractable to any honeſt reaſon:
Thou ſeeſt, I am pacified ſtill.
Nay, I prethee be gone.

Exit Hoſteſſe.

Now Hal, to the newes at Court for the Robbery, Lad? How is that anſwered?

Prin. O my ſweet Beefe:
I muſt ſtill be good Angell to thee.
The mony is paid backe againe.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying backe, 'tis a double Labour.

Prin. I am good Friends with my Father, and may doe any thing.

Fal. Rob me the Exchequer the firſt thing thou do'ſt, and do it with unwaſh'd hands too.

Bard. Do my Lord.

Prin. I have procured thee Iacke, a Charge of Foot.

Fal. I would it had beene of Horſe. Where ſhal I finde one that can ſteale well? O, for a fine theefe, of two and twentie, or thereabout: I am heynouſly unprouided. Well God be thanked for theſe Rebels, they offend none but the Vertuous. I laud them, I praiſe them.

Prin. Bardolph.

Bar. My Lord.

Prin. Go beare this Letter to Lord Iohn of Lancaſter
To my Brother Iohn. This to my Lord of Weſtmerland,
Go Peto, to horſe: for thou, and I,
Have thirtie miles to ride yet ere dinner time.
Iacke, meet me to morrow in the Temple Hall
At two a clocke in the afternoone,
There ſhalt thou know thy Charge, and there receive
Mony and Order for their Furniture.
The Land is burning, Percie ſtands on hye,
And either they, or we muſt lower lye.

Fal. Rare words? brave world.
Hoſteſſe, my breakfaſt, come:
Oh, I could wiſh this Taverne were my drumme.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Quartus, Scæna Prima.

Enter Harrie Hotſpurre, Worceſter, and Dowglas.

Hot. Well ſaid, my Noble Scot, if ſpeaking truth
In this fine Age, were not thought flatterie,
Such attribution ſhould the Dowglas have,
As not a Souldiour of this ſeaſons ſtampe,
Should go ſo generall currant through the world.
By heaven I cannot flatter: I defie
The Tongues of Soothers. But a Braver place
In my hearts love, hath no man then your Selfe.
Nay, taske me to my word: approve me Lord.

Dow. Thou art the King of Honor:
No man ſo potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will Beard him.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Hot. Do ſo, and 'tis well. What Letters haſt thou there?
I can but thanke you.

Meſſ. Theſe Letters come from your Father.

Hot. Letters from him?
Why comes he not himſelfe?

Meſſ. He cannot come, my Lord,
He is greevous ſicke.

Hot. How? haz he the leyſure to be ſicke now,
In ſuch a juſtling time? Who leades his power?
Vnder whoſe Government come they along?

Meſſ. His Letters beares his minde, not I his minde.
Wor. I prethee tell me, doth he keepe his Bed?
Meſſ. He did, my Lord, foure dayes ere I ſet forth:
And at the time of my departure thence,
He was much fear'd by his Phyſician.
Wor. I would the ſtate of time had firſt beene whole,
Ere he by ſickneſſe had beene viſited;
His health was never better worth then now.
Hotſp. Sicke now? droope now? this ſicknes doth infect
The very Life-blood of our Enterpriſe,
'Tis catching hither, even to our Campe.
He writes me here, that inward ſickneſſe,
And that his friends by deputation
Could not ſo ſoone be drawne: nor did he thinke it meet,
To lay ſo dangerous and deare a truſt
On any Soule remov'd, but on his owne.
Yet doth he give us bold advertiſement,
That with our ſmall conjunction we ſhould on,
To ſee how Fortune is diſpos'd to us,
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
Becauſe the King is certainly poſſeſt
Of all our purpoſes. What ſay you to it?
Wor. Your Fathers ſickneſſe is a mayme to us.
Hotſp. A perillous Gaſh, a very Limme lopt off:
And yet, in faith, it is not his preſent want
Seemes more then we ſhall finde it.
Were it good, to ſet the exact wealth of all our ſtates
All at one Caſt? To ſet ſo rich a mayne
On the nice hazard of one doubtfull houre,
It were not good: for therein ſhould we reade
The very Bottome, and the Soule of hope
The very Liſt, the very utmoſt Bound
Of all our fortunes.
Dowg. Faith and ſo we ſhould,
Where now remaines a ſweet reverſion.
We may boldly ſpend, upon the hope
Of what is to come in:
A comfort of retyrement lives in this.
Hotſp. A Randevous, a Home to flye unto,
If that the Divell and Miſchance looke bigge
Vpon the Maydenhead of our Affaires.
Wor. But yet I would your Father had beene here:
The qualitie and Heire of our Attempt
Brookes no diviſion: It will be thought
By ſome, that know not why he is away,
That wiſedome, loyaltie, and meere diſlike
Of our proceedings, kept the Earle from hence.
And thinke, how ſuch an apprehenſion
May turne the tide of fearefull Faction,
And breede a kinde of queſtion in our cauſe:
For well you know, we of the offring ſide,
Muſt keepe aloofe from ſtrict arbitrement,
And ſtop all ſight-holes, every loope, from whence.
The eye of reaſon may prie in upon us:
This abſence of your Father drawes a Curtaine,
That ſhewes the ignorant a kinde of feare
Before not dreamt of.
Hotſp. You ſtrayne too farre.
I rather of his abſence make this uſe:
It lends a Luſtre, and more great Opinion,
A larger Dare to your great Enterprize,
Then if the Earle were here: for men muſt thinke,
If we without his helpe, can make a Head
To puſh againſt the Kingdome: with his helpe,
We ſhall o're-turne it topſie-turuy downe:
Yet all goes well, yet all our joynts are whole,
Dowg. As heart can thinke:
There is not ſuch a word ſpoke of in Scotland,
At this Dreame of Feare.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hotſp. My Couſin Vernon, welcome by my Soule.
Vern. Pray God my newes be worth a welcome, Lord.
The Earle of Weſtermerland, ſeven thouſand ſtrong,
Is marching hither-wards, with Prince Iohn.
Hotſp. No harme: what more?
Vern. And further, I have learn'd,
The King himſelfe in perſon hath ſet fourth,
Or hither-wards intended ſpeedily,
With ſtrong and mightie preparation.
Hotſp. He ſhall be welcome too,
Where is his Sonne,
The nimble-footed Mad-Cap, Prince of Wales,
And his Cumrades, that daft the World aſide,
And bid it paſſe?
Vern. All furniſht, all in Armes,
All plum'd like Eſtridges, that with the Winde
Bayted like Eagles, having lately bath'd,
Glittering in Golden Coates, like Images,
As full of ſpirit as the Moneth of May,
And gorgeous as the Sunne at Mid-ſummer,
Wanton as youthfull Goates, wilde as young Bulls.
I ſaw young Harry with his Bever on,
His Cuſhes on his thighes, gallantly arm'd,
Riſe from the ground like feathered Mercury,
And vaulted with ſuch eaſe into his Seat,
As if an Angell dropt downe from the Clouds,
To turne and winde a fierie Pegaſus,
And witch the World with Noble Horſemanſhip.
Hotſp. No more, no more,
Worſe then the Sunne in March:
This prayſe doth nouriſh Agues: let them come.
They come like Sacrifices in their trimme,
And to the fire-ey'd Maid of ſmoakie Warre,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them:
The mayled Mars ſhall on his Altar ſit
Vp to the eares in blood. I am on fire,
To heare this rich reprizall is ſo nigh,
And yet not ours. Come, let me take my Horſe,
Who is to beare me like a Thunder-bolt,
Againſt the boſome of the Prince of Wales.
Harry to Harry, ſhall not Horſe to Horſe
Meete, and ne're part, till one drop downe a Coarſe?
Oh, that Glendower were come.
Ver. There is more newes:
I learned in Worceſter, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his Power this fourteene dayes.
Dowg. That's the worſt Tidings that I heare of yet.
Wor. I by my faith, that beares a froſty ſound.
Hotſp. What may the Kings whole Battaile reach unto?
Ver. To thirty thouſand.
Hot. Forty let it be,
My Father and Glendower being both away,
The powres of us, may ſerue ſo great a day.
Come, let us take a muſter ſpeedily.
Doomeſday is neere; dye all, dye merrily.
Dow. Talke not of dying, I am out of feare
Of death, or deaths hand, for this one halfe yeare.
Exeunt omnes.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Falſtaffe and Bardolph.

Falſt. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry, fill me a Bottle of Sack, our Souldiers ſhall march through: we'le to Sutton-cop-hill to Night.

Bard. Will you give me money, Captaine?

Falſt. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This Bottle makes an Angell.

Falſt. And if it doe, take it for thy labour: and if it make twentie, take them all, Ile anſwere the Coynage. Bid my Lieutenant Peto meete me at the Townes end.

Bard. I will Captaine: farewell. Exit.

Falſt. If I bee not aſham'd of my Souldiers, I am a ſowc't-Gurnet: I have miſ-us'd the Kings Preſſe damnably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fiftie Souldiers, three hundred and odde Pounds. I preſſe me none but good houſe-holders, Yeomens Sonnes: enquire me out contracted Batchelers, ſuch as had beene ask'd twice on the Banes: ſuch a Commodity of warme ſlaves, as had as lieve heare the Deuill, as a Drumme; ſuch as feare the report of a Caliver, worſe then a ſtruck-Foole, or a hurt wilde-Ducke. I preſt me none but ſuch Toſtes and Butter, with hearts in their Bellyes no bigger then Pinnes heads, and they have bought out their ſervices: And now, my whole Charge conſiſts of Ancients, Corporals, Lieutenants, Gentlemen of Companies, Slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted Cloth, where the Gluttons Dogges licked his Sores; and ſuch, as indeed were never Souldiers, but diſ-carded unjuſt Servingmen, younger Sonnes to younger Brothers, Revolted Tapſters and Oſtlers, Trade-falne, the Cankers of a calme World, and long Peace, tenne times more diſ-honorable ragged, then an old-fac'd Ancient; and ſuch have I to fill up the roomes of them that have bought out their ſervices: that you would thinke, that I had a hundred and fiftie totter'd Prodigalls, lately come from Swine-keeping, from eating Draffe and Huskes. A mad fellow met mee on the way, and told me, I had unloaded all the Gibbets, and preſt the dead bodyes. No eye hath ſeene ſuch skar-Crowes: Ile not march through Couentry with them, that's flat. Nay, and the Villaines march wide betwixt the Legges, as if they had Gyves on; for indeede, I had the moſt of them out of Priſon. There's not a Shirt and a halfe in all my Company: and the halfe Shirt is two Napkins tackt together, and throwne over the ſhoulders like a Heralds Coat, without ſleeves: and the Shirt, to ſay the truth, ſtolne from my Hoſt of S. Albones; or the Red-Noſe Inne-keeper of Daventry. But that's all one, they'le finde Linnen enough on every Hedge.

Enter the Prince, and the Lord of Weſtmerland.

Prince. How now blowne Iacke? how now Quilt?

Falſt. What Hal? How now mad Wag, what a Divell do'ſt thou in Warwickſhire? My good Lord of Weſtmerland, I cry you mercy, I thought your Honour had already beene at Shrewsbury.

Weſt. 'Faith, Sir Iohn, 'tis more then time that I were there, and you too: but my Powers are there alreadie. The King, I can tell you, lookes for us all: we muſt away all to Night.

Falſt. Tut, never feare me, I am as vigilant as a Cat, to ſteale Creame.

Prince. I thinke to ſteale Creame indeed, for thy theft hath alredie made thee Butter: but tell me Iacke, whoſe fellowes are theſe that come after?

Falſt. Mine, Hal, mine.

Prince. I did never ſee ſuch pittifull Raſcals.

Fal. Tut, tut, good enough to toſſe: foode for Powder, foode for Powder: they'le fill a Pit, as well as better: tuſh man, mortall men, mortall men.

Weſtm. I, but Sir Iohn, me thinkes they are exceeding poore and bare, too beggarly.

Falſt. Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their bareneſſe, I am ſure they never learn'd that of me.

Prince. No, Ile be ſworne, unleſſe you call three fingers on the Ribbes bare. But ſirra make haſte. Percy is already in the field.

Falſt. What, is the King encamp'd?

Weſtm. Hee is, Iohn, I feare wee ſhall ſtay too long.

Falſt. Well, to the latter end of a Fray, and the beginning of a Feaſt, fits a dull fighter, and a keene Gueſt.

Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Hotſpur, Worceſter, Dowglas, and Vernon.

Hotſp. Wee'le fight with him to Night.

Worc. It may not be.

Dowg. You give him then aduantage.

Vern. Not a whit.

Hotſp. Why ſay you ſo? lookes he not for ſupply?

Vern. So doe we.

Hotſp. His is certaine, ours is doubtfull.

Worc. Good Couſin be adviſ'd, ſtirre not to night.

Vern. Doe not, my Lord.

Dowg. You doe not counſaile well:
You ſpeake it out of feare, and cold heart.

Vern. Doe me no ſlander, Dowglas: by my Life,
And I dare well mantaine it with my Life,
If well-reſpected Honor bid me on,
I hold as little counſaile with weake feare,
As you, my Lord, or any Scot that this day lives.
Let it be ſeene to morrow in the Battell,
Which of us feares.

Dowg. Yea, or to night.

Vern. Content.

Hotſp. To night, ſay I.

Vern. Come, come it may not be.
I wonder much, being mē of ſuch great leading as you are
That you fore-ſee not what impediments
Drag backe our expedition: certaine Horſe
Of my Couſin Vernons are not yet come up,
Your Vncle Worceſters Horſe came but to day,
And now their pride and mettall is aſleepe,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,
That not a Horſe is halfe the halfe of himſelfe,

Hotſp. So are the Horſes of the Enemie
In generall, journey bated, and brought low:
The better part of ours are full of reſt.

Worc. The number of the King exceedeth ours:
For Gods ſake, Couſin, ſtay till all come in.

The Trumpet ſounds a Parley. Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the King,
If you vouchſafe me hearing, and reſpect.
Hotſp. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt:
And would to God you were of our determination.
Some of us love you well: and even thoſe ſome
Envie your great deſervings, and good name,
Becauſe you are not of our qualitie,
But ſtand againſt us like an enemie.
Blunt. And Heaven defend, but ſtill I ſhould ſtand ſo,
So long as out of Limit, and true Rule,
You ſtand againſt anoynted Majeſtie.
But to my Charge.
The King hath ſent to know
The nature of your griefes, and whereupon
You conjure from the breſt of Civill Peace,
Such bold Hoſtilitie, teaching his dutious Land
Audacious Crueltie. If that the King
Have any way your good deſarts forgot,
Which he confeſſeth to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefes; and with all ſpeed
You ſhall have your deſires, with intereſt;
And Pardon abſolute for your ſelfe, and theſe,
Herein mis-led, by your ſuggeſtion.
Hotſp. The king is kinde:
And well we know, the King
Knowes at what time to promiſe, when to pay.
My Father, my Vnckle, and my ſelfe,
Did give him that ſame Royaltie he weares:
And when he was not ſixe and twentie ſtrong,
Sicke in the worlds regard, wretched and low,
A poore unminded Out-law, ſneaking home,
My Father gave him welcome to the ſhore:
And when he heard him ſweare, and vow to God,
He came to be but Duke of Lancaſter,
To ſue his Liverie, and begge his Peace,
With teares of Innocencie, and tearmes of Zeale:
My Father, in kinde heart and pitty mov'd,
Swore him aſſiſtance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the Lords and Barons of the Realme
Perceiv'd Northumberland did leane to him,
The more and leſſe came in with Cap and Knee,
Met him in Boroughs, Cities, Villages,
Attended him on Bridges, ſtood in Lanes,
Layd Gifts before him, proffer'd him their Oathes,
Gave him their Heires, as Pages followed him,
Even at the heeles, in golden multitudes.
He preſently, as greatneſſe knowes it ſelfe,
Steps me a little higher then his Vow
Made to my Father, while his blood was poore,
Vpon the naked ſhore at Ravenſpurgh:
And now (forſooth) takes on him to reforme
Some certaine Edicts, and ſome ſtrait Decrees,
That lay to heavie on the Common-wealth;
Cryes out upon abuſes, ſeemes to weepe
Over his Countries Wrongs: and by this Face,
This ſeeming Brow of Iuſtice, did he winne
The hearts of all that he did angle for.
Proceeded further, cut me off the Heads
Of all the Favorites, that the abſent King
In deputation left behinde him heere,
When he was perſonall in the Iriſh Warre.
Blunt. Tut, I came not to heare this.
Hot. Then to the point.
In ſhort time after, he depos'd the King,
Soone after that, depriv'd him of his Life:
And in the neck of that, task't the whole State.
To make that worſe, ſuffer'd his Kinſman March,
Who is, if every Owner were plac'd,
Indeed his King, to be engag'd in Wales,
There, without ranſome, to lye forfeited:
Diſgrac'd me in my happy Victories,
Sought to intrap me by intelligence,
Rated my Vnckle from the Councell-Boord,
In rage diſmiſs'd my Father from the Court,
Broke Oath on Oath, committing Wrong on Wrong,
And in concluſion, drove us to ſeeke out
This head of ſafetie; and withall, to prie
Into his Title: The which we finde
Too indirect, for long continuance.
Blunt. Shall I returne this anſwere to the King?
Hotſp. Not ſo, Sir Walter.
Wee'le with-draw a while:
Goe to the King, and let there be impawn'd
Some ſuretie for a ſafe returne againe,
And in the Morning early ſhall my Vnckle
Bring him our purpoſe: and ſo farewell.
Blunt. I would you would accept of Grace and Love.
Hotſp. And't may be, ſo we ſhall.
Blunt. Pray Heaven you doe. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter the Arch-Biſhop of Yorke, and Sir Michell.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michell, beare this ſealed Briefe
With winged haſte to the Lord Marſhal,
This to my Couſin Scroope, and all the reſt
To whom they are directed.
If you knew how much they doe import,
You would make haſte.
Sir Mich. My good Lord, I gueſſe their tenor.
Arch. Like enough you doe.
To morrow, good Sir Michell, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thouſand men
Muſt bide the touch. For Sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to underſtand,
The King, with mightie and quick-rayſed Power,
Meetes with Lord Harrie: and I feare, Sir Michell,
What with the ſickneſſe of Northumberland,
Whoſe power was in the firſt proportion;
And what with Owen Glendowers abſence thence,
Who with them was rated firmely too,
And comes not in, over-rul'd by Prophecies,
I feare the Power of Percy is too weake,
To wage an inſtant tryall with the King.
Sir Mich. Why my good Lord, you need not feare,
There is Dowglas, and Lord Mortimer.
Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.
Sir Mic. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worceſter,
And a Head of gallant Warriors,
Noble Gentlemen.

Arch. And ſo there is, but yet the King hath drawne
The ſpeciall head of all the Land together:
The Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter,
The Noble Weſtmerland, and warlike Blunt;
And many moe Corriuals, and deere men
Of eſtimation, and command in Armes.
Sir M. Doubt not my Lord, he ſhall be well oppos'd.
Arch. I hope no leſſe; Yet needfull 'tis to feare,
And to prevent the worſt, Sir Michell ſpeed;
For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the King
Diſmiſſe his power, he meanes to viſit us;
For he hath heard our Confederacie,
And, 'tis but Wiſedome to make ſtrong againſt him:
Therefore make haſte, I muſt goe write againe
To other Friends: and ſo farewell, Sir Michell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, Earle of Weſtmerland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falſtaffe.

King. How bloodily the Sunne begins to peere
Above yon busky hill: the day lookes pale
At his diſtemperature.
Prin. The Southerne winde
Doth play the Trumpet to his purpoſes,
And by his hollow whiſtling in the Leaves,
Foretels a Tempeſt: and a bluſt'ring day.
King. Then with the loſers let it ſympathize,
For nothing can ſeeme ſoure to thoſe that win.
The Trumpet ſounds.
Enter Worceſter.

King. How now my Lord of Worſter? 'Tis not well
That you and I ſhould meet upon ſuch tearmes,
As now we meet. You have deceiv'd our truſt,
And made us doffe our eaſie Robes of Peace,
To cruſh our old limbes in ungentle Steele:
This is not well, my Lord, this is not well.
What ſay you to it? Will you againe unknit
This churliſh knot of all-abhorred Warre?
And move in that obedient Orbe againe,
Where you did give a faire and naturall light,
And be no more an exhal'd Meteor,
A prodigie of Feare, and a Portent
Of broached Miſcheefe, to the unborne Times?
Wor. Heare me, my Liege:
For mine owne part, I could be well content
To entertaine the Lagge-end of my life
With quiet houres: For I do proteſt,
I have not ſought the day of this diſlike.
King. You have not ſought it: how comes it then?
Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.
Prin. Peace, Chewet, peace.
Wor. It pleas'd your Majeſty, to turne your lookes
Of Favour, from my Selfe, and all our Houſe;
And yet I muſt remember you my Lord,
We were the firſt, and deareſt of your Friends:
For you, my ſtaffe of Office did I breake
In Richards time, and poaſted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiſſe your hand,
When yet you were in place, and in account
Nothing ſo ſtrong and fortunate, as I;
It was my Selfe, my Brother, and his Sonne,
That brought you home, and boldly did out-dare
The danger of the time. You ſwore to us,
And you did ſweare that Oath at Doncaſter,
That you did nothing of purpoſe 'gainſt the State,
Nor claime no further, then your new-falne right,
The ſeate of Gaunt, Dukedome of Lancaſter.
To this, we ſware our aide; But in ſhort ſpace,
It rain'd downe Fortune ſhowring on your head,
And ſuch a floud of Greatneſſe fell on you,
What with our helpe, what with the abſent King,
What with the injuries of wanton time,
The ſeeming ſufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious Windes that held the King
So long in the unlucky Iriſh Warres,
That all in England did repute him dead:
And from this ſwarme of faire advantages,
You tooke occaſion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the generall ſway into your hand,
Forgot your Oath to us at Doncaſter,
And being fed by us, you us'd us ſo,
As that ungentle gull the Cuckowes Bird,
Vſeth the Sparrow, did oppreſſe our Neſt,
Grew by our Feeding, to ſo great a bulke,
That even our Love durſt not come neere your ſight
For feare of ſwallowing: But with nimble wing
We were inforc'd for ſafetie ſake, to flye
Out of your ſight, and raiſe this preſent Head,
Whereby we ſtand oppoſed by ſuch meanes
As you your ſelfe, have forg'd againſt your ſelfe,
By unkinde uſage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworne to us in yonger enterprize.
King. Theſe things indeede you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at Market Croſſes, read in Churches,
To face the Garment of Rebellion
With ſome fine colour, that may pleaſe the eye
Of fickle Changelings, and poore Diſcontents,
Which gape, and rub the Elbow at the newes
Of hurly burly Innovation:
And never yet did Inſurrection want
Such water-colours, to impaint his cauſe:
Nor moody Beggars, ſtarving for a time
Of pell-mell havocke, and confuſion.
Prin. In both our Armies, there is many a ſoule
Shall pay full dearely for this encounter,
If once they joyne in triall. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth joyne with all the world
In prayſe of Henry Percy: By my Hopes,
This preſent enterprize ſet off his head,
I do not thinke a braver Gentleman,
More active, valiant, or more valiant young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter Age with noble deedes.
For my part, I may ſpeake it to my ſhame,
I have a Truant beene to Chivalry,
And ſo I heare, he doth account me too:
Yet this before my Fathers Majeſty,
I am content that he ſhall take the oddes
Of his great name and eſtimation,
And will, to ſave the blood on either ſide,
Try fortune with him, in a Single Fight.
King. And Prince of Wales, ſo dare we venter thee,
Albeit, conſiderations infinite

Do make againſt it : No good Worſter, no,
We love our people well ; even thoſe we love
That are miſled upon your Couſins part:
And will they take the offer of our Grace;
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my Friend againe, and Ile be his,
So tell your Couſin, and bring me word,
What he will do. But if he will not yeeld,
Rebuke and dread correction waite on us,
And they ſhall do their Office. So be gone,
We will not now be troubled with reply,
We offer faire, take it adviſedly,

Exit Worceſter.

Prin. It will not be accepted, on my Life,
The Dowglas and the Hotſpurre both together,
Are confident againſt the world in Armes.

King. Hence therefore, every Leader to his charge,
For on their anſwere will we ſet on them ;
And God befriend us, as our cauſe is juſt. Exeunt.

Manet Prince and Falſtaffe.

Fal. Hal, if thou ſee me downe in the battell,
And beſtride me, ſo; 'tis a point of friendſhip.

Prin. Nothing but a Coloſſus can do thee that freindſhip:
Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed time Hal, and all well.

Prin. Why, thou ow'ſt heaven a death.

Falſt. 'Tis not due yet : I would be loath to pay him before his day. What neede I bee ſo forward with him that call's not on me ? Well, 'tis no matter, Honor prickes me on. But how if Honour pricke me off when I come on ? How then? Can Honour ſet too a legge? No : or an arme ? No : Or take away the greefe of a wound ? No. Honour hath no skill in Surgerie then? No. What is Honour? A word. What is that word Honour ? Ayre : A trim reckoning. Who hath it ? He that dy'de a Wedneſday. Doth he feele it ? No. Doth he heare it? No. Is it inſenſible then? yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living ? No. Why? Detraction will not ſuffer it, therfore Ile none of it. Honour is a meere Scutcheon, and ſo ends my Catechiſme. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Worceſter, and Sir Richard Vernon.

Wor. O no, my nephew muſt not know, Sir Richard,
The liberall kinde offer of the king.

Ver. 'Twere beſt he did.

Wor. Then we are all undone.
It is not poſſible, it cannot be,
The King would keepe his word in loving us,
He will ſuſpect us ſtill, aud finde a time
To puniſh this offence in others faults :
Suppoſition, all our lives ſhall be ſtucke full of eyes ;
For Treaſon is but truſted like the Foxe,
Who ne're ſo tame, ſo cheriſht, and lock'd up,
Will have a wilde tricke of his Anceſtors :
Looke how he can, or ſad or merrily,
Interpretation will miſquote our lookes,
And we ſhall feede like Oxen at a ſtall,
The better cheriſht, ſtill the nearer death.
My Nephewes treſpaſſe may be well forgot,
It hath the excuſe of youth, and heate of blood,
And an adopted name of Priviledge,
A hare-brain'd Hotſpurre, govern'd by a Spleene :
All his offences live upon my head,
And on his Fathers. We did traine him on,
And his corruption being tane from us,
We as the Spring of all, ſhall pay for all :
Therefore good Couſin, let not Harry know
In any caſe, the offer of the King.

Ver. Deliver what you will, Ile ſay 'tis ſo.
Heere comes your Coſin.

Enter Hotſpurre.

Hot. My Vnkle is return'd,
Deliver up my Lord of Weſtmerland.
Vnkle, what newes?

Wor. The King will bid you battell preſently.

Dow. Defie him by the Lord of Weſtmerland.

Hot. Lord Dowglas : Go you and tell him ſo.

Dow. Marry and ſhall, and verie willingly.

Exit Dowglas.

Wor. There is no ſeeming mercy in the King.

Hot. Did you begge any ? God forbid.

Wor. I told him gently of our greevances,
Of his Oath-breaking : which he mended thus,
By now forſwearing that he is forſworne,
He cals us Rebels, Traitors, and will ſcourge
With haughty armes, this hatefull name in us.

Enter Dowglas.

Dow. Arme Gentlemen, to Armes, for I have throwne
A brave defiance in King Henries teeth :
And Weſtmerland that was ingag'd did beare it,
Which cannot chooſe but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales ſtept forth before the king,
And Nephew, challeng'd you to ſingle fight.

Hot. O, would the quarrell lay upon our heads,
And that no man might draw ſhort breath to day,
But I and Harry Monmouth. Tell me, tell me,
How ſhew'd his Talking ? Seem'd it in contempt ?

Ver. No, by my Soule : I never in my life
Did heare a Challenge urg'd more modeſtly
Vnleſſe a Brother ſhould a Brother dare
To gentle exerciſe, and proofe of Armes.
He gave you all the Duties of a Man,
Trimm'd up your praiſes with a Princely tongue,
Spoke your deſervings like a Chronicle,
Making you ever better then his prayſe,
By ſtill diſprayſing prayſe, valew'd with you :
And which became him like a Prince indeed,
He made a bluſhing citall of himſelfe,
And chid his Trewant youth with a Grace,
As if he maſtred there a double ſpirit
Of teaching, and of learning inſtantly :
There did he pauſe. But let me tell the World,
If he out-live the envie of this day,
England did never owe ſo ſweete a hope,
So much miſconſtrued in his wantonneſſe.

Hot. Couſin, I thinke thou art enamored
On his Follies : never did I heare
Of any Prince ſo wilde at Liberty.
But be he as he will, yet once ere night,
I will imbrace him with a Souldiers arme,
That he ſhall ſhrinke under my curteſie.
Arme, arme with ſpeed. And Fellow's, Soldiers, Friends,
Better conſider what you have to do,
Than I that have not well the gift of Tongue,

Can lift your blood up with perſwaſion.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Lord, heere are letters for you.
Hot. I cannot reade them now.
O Gentlemen, the time of life is ſhort;
To ſpend that ſhortneſſe baſely, were too long.
If life did ride upon a Dials point,
Still ending at the arrivall of an houre,
And if we live, we live to tread on Kings:
If dye; brave death, when Princes dye with us.
Now for our Conſciences, the Armes is faire,
When the intent for bearing them is juſt.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Lord prepare, the King comes on apace,
Hot. I thanke him, that he cuts me from my tale:
For I profeſſe not talking: Onely this,
Let each man do his beſt. And heere I draw a Sword,
Whoſe worthy temper I intend to ſtaine
With the beſt blood that I can meete withall,
In the adventure of this perillous day.
Now Eſperance Percy, and ſet on:
Sound all the lofty Inſtruments of Warre,
And by that Muſicke, let us all imbrace:
For heaven to earth, ſome of us never ſhall,
A ſecond time do ſuch a curteſie.

They embrace, the Trumpets ſound, the King entereth with his power, alarum unto the battell. Then enter Dowgas, and Sir Walter Blunt.

Blu. What is thy name, that in battell thus ỹ croſſeſt me?
What honour doſt thou ſeeke upon my head?
Dow. Know then my name is Dowglas,
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Becauſe ſome tell me, that thou art a King.
Blunt. They tell thee true.
Dow. The Lord of Stafford heere to day hath bought
Thy likeneſſe: for inſteed of thee King Harry,
This ſword hath ended him, ſo ſhall it thee,
Vnleſſe thou yeeld thee as a Priſoner.
Blu. I was not borne to yeeld thou haughtie Scot,
And thou ſhalt finde a King that will revenge
Lord Staffords death.

Fight, Blunt is ſlaine, then enters Hotſpur.

Hot. O Dowglas, hadſt thou fought at Holmedon thus,
I never had triumphed o're a Scot.
Dow. All's done, all's won, here breathles lies the King.
Hot. Where?
Dow. Heere.
Hot. This Dowglas? No, I know this face full well:
A gallant Knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Semblably furniſh'd like the King himſelfe.
Dow. Ah foole: go with thy ſoule whither it goes,
A borrowed title haſt thou bought too deere.
Why didſt thou tell me, that thou wert a King?
Hot. The King hath many marching in his Coates.
Dow. Now by my Sword, I will kill all his Coates,
Ile murther all his Wardrobe peece by peece,
Vntill I meet the King.
Hot. Vp, and away,
Our Souldiers ſtand full fairely for the day. Exeunt.

Alarum, and enter Falſtaffe ſolus.

Fal. Though I could ſcape ſhot-free at London, I feare the ſhot heere: here's no ſcoring, but upon the pate. Soft who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt, there's Honour for you: here's no vanity, I am as hot as molten Lead, and as heany too; heaven keepe Lead out of mee, I neede no more weight then mine owne Bowelles. I have led my rag of Muffins where they are pepper'd: there's not three of my 150, left alive, and they for the Townes end, to beg during life. But who comes heere?

Enter the Prince,

Prin. What, ſtand'ſt thou idle here? Lend me thy ſword,
Many a Nobleman lies ſtarke and ſtiffe
Vnder the hooves of vanting enemies,
Whoſe deaths are unreveng'd. Prethy lend me thy ſword

Fal. O Hal, I prethee give me leave to breath awhile: Turke Gregory never did ſuch deeds in Armes, as I have done this day. I have paid Percie, I have made him ſure.

Prin. He is indeed, and living to kill thee
I prethee lend me thy ſword.

Falſt. Nay Hal, if Percy bee alive, thou getſt not my Sword; but take my Piſtoll if thou wilt.

Prin. Give it me: What, is it in the Caſe?

Fal. I Hal, 'tis hot: There's that will Sacke a City.

The Prince drawes out a Bottle of Sacke.

Frin. What, is it a time to jeſt and dally now? Exit

Throwes it at him.

Fal. If Percy be alive. Ile pierce him: if he do come in my way, ſo: if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of me, I like not ſuch grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Give me life, which if I can ſave, ſo: if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and ther's an end. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Alarum, excurſions, enter the King, the Prince, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, and Earle of Weſtmerland.

King. I prethee Harry withdraw thy ſelfe, thou bleedeſt too much: Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, go you with him.
P. Ioh. Not I, my Lord, unleſſe I did bleed too.
Prin. I beſeech your Majeſty make up,
Leaſt you retirement do amaze your friends.
King. I will do ſo:
My Lord of Weſtmerland leade him to his Tent.
Weſt. Come my Lord. Ile leade you to your Tent
Prin. Leade me my Lord? I do not need your helpe,
And heaven forbid a ſhallow ſcratch ſhould drive,
The Prince of Wales from ſuch a field as this,
Where ſtain'd Nobility lyes troden on,
And Rebels Armes triumph in maſſacres.
Ioh. We breath too long: come couſin Weſtmerland,
Our duty this way lies, for heavens ſake come.
Prin. By heaven thou haſt deceived me Lancaſter,
I did not thinke thee Lord of ſuch a ſpirit:
Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, Iohn;
But now, I do reſpect thee as my Soule.
King. I ſaw him hold Lord Percy at the point,
With luſtier maintenance then I did looke for
Of ſuch an ungrowne Warriour.
Frin. O this Boy, lends mettall to us all. Exit.

Enter Dowglas.

Dow. Another King? They grow like Hydra's heads:
I am the Dowglas fatall to all thoſe
That weare thoſe colours on them. What art thou
That counterfeit'ſt the perſon of a King?
King. The King himſelfe: who Dowglas grieves at hart

So many of his ſhadowes thou haſt met,
And not the very King. I have two Boyes
Seeke Percy and thy ſelfe about the Field:
But ſeeing thou fall'ſt on me ſo luckily,
I will aſſay thee: ſo defend thy ſelfe.

Dow. I feare thou art another countefeit:
And yet infaith thou bear'ſt thee like a King:
But mine I am ſure thou art, who ere thou be,
And thus I win thee. They fight, the K. being in danger,

Enter Prince.

Prin. Hold up thy head vile Scot, or thou art like
Never to hold it up againe: the Spirits
Of valiant Sherly, Stafford Blunt, are in my Armes;
It is the Prince of Wales that threates thee,
Who never promiſeth, but meanes to pay.

They fight, Douglas flyeth.

Cheerely My Lord: how fares your Grace?
Sir Nicholas Gawſey hath for ſuccour ſent,
And ſo hath Clifton: Ile to Clifton ſtraight.

King. Stay, and breath awhile.
Thou haſt redeem'd thy loſt opinion,
And ſhew'd thou mak'ſt ſome tender of my life
In this faire reſcue thou haſt brought to me.

Prin. O heaven, they did me too much injury,
That ever ſayd I hearkned to your death.
If it were ſo, I might have let alone
The inſulting hand of Dowglas over you,
Which would have beene as ſpeedy in your end,
As all the poyſonous Potions in the world,
And ſav'd the Treacherous labour of your Sonne.

K. Make up to Clifton, Ile to Sir Nicholas Gawſey. Exit

Enter Hotſpurre.

Hot. If I miſtake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

Prin. Thou ſpeakeſt as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

Prin. Why then I ſee a very valiant rebell of that name.
I am the Prince of Wales, and thinke not Percy,
To ſhare with me in glory any more:
Two Starres keepe not their motion in one Sphere,
Nor can one England brooke a double reigne,
Of Harry Percie, and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor ſhall it Harry, for the houre is come
To end the one of us; and would to heaven,
Thy name in Armes, were now as great as mine.

Prin. Ile make it greater, ere I part from thee,
And all the budding Honors on thy Creſt,
Ile crop to make a Garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brooke thy Vanities. Fight.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Fal. Well ſaid Hal, to it Hal. Nay you ſhall finde no Boyes play heere, I can tell you.

Enter Dowglas, he fights with Falstaffe, who fals down as if he were dead. The Prince killeth Percie.

Hot. Oh Harry, thou haſt rob'd me of my youth:
I better brooke the loſſe of brittle life,
Then thoſe proud titles thou haſt wonne of me,
They wound my thoughts worſe, then the ſword my fleſh:
But thought's the ſlave of Life, and Life, Times foole;
And Time, that takes ſurvey of all the world,
Muſt have a ſtop. O, I could Propheſie,
But that the Earth, and the cold hand of death,
Lyes on my Tongue: No Percie, thou art duſt
And food for ———

Prin. For Wormes, brave Percy. Farewell great heart:
Ill-weav'd Ambition, how much art thou ſhrunke?
When that this bodie did containe a ſpirit,
A Kingdome for it was too ſmall a bound:
But now two paces of the vileſt Earth
Is roome enough. This Earth that beares the dead,
Beares not alive ſo ſtout a Gentleman.
If thou wer't ſenſible of curteſie,
I ſhould not make ſo great a ſhew of Zeale.
But let my favours hide thy mangled face,
And even in thy behalfe, Ile thanke my ſelfe
For doing theſe fayre Rites of Tenderneſſe.
Adieu, and take thy prayſe with thee to heaven,
Thy ignomy ſleepe with thee in the grave,
But not remembred in thy Epitaph.
What? Old Acquaintance? Could not all this fleſh
Keepe in a little life? Poore Iacke, farewell:
I could have better ſpar'd a better man.
O, I ſhould have a heavy miſſe of thee,
If I were much in love with Vanitie.
Death hath not ſtrucke ſo fat a Deere to day,
Though many dearer in this bloody Fray:
Imbowell'd will I ſee thee by and by,
Till then, in blood, by Noble Percie lye. Exit.

Falſtaffe riſeth up.

Falſt. Imbowell'd? If thou imbowell mee to day, Ile give you leave to powder me, and eat me too to morrow. 'Twas time to counterfet, or that hotte Termagant Scot, had paid me ſcot and lot too. Counterfeit? I am no counterfeit; to dye, is to be a counterfeit, for hee is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: But to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeede. The better part of Valour, is Diſcretion; in the which better part, I have ſaved my life. I am affraide of this Gun-powder Percy though he be dead. How if hee ſhould counterfeit too, and riſe? I am afraid hee would prove the better counterfeit: therefore Ile make him ſure: yea, and Ile ſweare I kill'd him. Why may not he riſe as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and no-bodie ſees me. Therefore ſirra, with a new wound in your thigh come you along me. Takes Hotſpurre on his backe.

Enter Prince and Iohn of Lancaſter.

Prin. Come Brother Iohn, full bravely haſt thou fleſht thy Maiden ſword.

Iohn. But ſoft, who have we heere?
Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

Prin. I did, I ſaw him dead,
Breathleſſe, and bleeding on the ground: Art thou alive?
Or is it fantaſie that playes upon our eye-ſight?
I prethee ſpeake, we will not truſt our eyes
Without our eares. Thou art not what thou ſeem'ſt.

Fal. No, that's certaine: I am not a double man: but if I am not Iacke Falſtaffe, then am I a Iacke: There is Percy, if your Father will do me any Honor, ſo: if not, let him kill the next Percy himſelfe. I looke to be either Earle or Duke, I can aſſure you.

Prin. Why, Percy I kill'd my ſelfe, and ſaw thee dead.

Fal. Did'ſt thou? Lord, Lord, how the world is given to Lying? I graunt you I was downe, and out of Breath, and ſo was he, but we roſe both at an inſtant, and fought a long houre by Shrewsburie clocke. If I may be beleeved, ſo: if not, let them that ſhould reward Valour, beare the ſinne upon their owne heads. Ile take't on my death I gave him this wound in the Thigh: if the man were alive, and would denie it, I would make him eate a peece of my ſword.

Iohn. This is the ſtrangeſt tale that e're I heard.

Prin. This is the ſtrangeſt Fellow, Brother Iohn.

Come bring your luggage Nobly on your backe:
For my part, if a lye may doe thee grace,
Ile gil'd it with the happieſt tearmes I have.
A Retreat is ſounded.
The Trumpets ſound Retreat, the day is ours:
Come Brother, let's to the higheſt of the field,
To ſee what Friends are living, who are dead. Exeunt.

Fal. Ile follow as they ſay, for Reward. Hee that rewards me, heaven reward him. If I do grow great againe, Ile grow leſſe? For Ile purge, and leave Sacke, and live cleanly, as a Noble man ſhould do. Exit.

Scæna Quinta.

The Trumpets ſound.
Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, Earle of Weſtmerland, with Worceſter & Vernon Priſoners.

King. Thus ever did Rebellion finde Rebuke.
Ill-ſpirited Worceſter, did we not ſend Grace,
Pardon, and tearmes of Love to all of you?
And would'ſt thou turne our offers contrary?
Miſuſe the tenor of thy Kinſmans truſt?
Three Knights upon our party ſlaine to day,
A Noble Earle and many a creature elſe,
Had beene alive this houre,
If like a Chriſtian thou had'ſt truely borne
Betwixt our Armies, true Intelligence.
Wor. What I have done, my ſafety urg'd me to,
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided, it falls on me.
King. Beare Worceſter to death, and Vernon too.
Other Offenders we will pauſe upon.
Exit Worceſter and Vernon.
How goes the Field?
Prin. The Noble Scot Lord Dowglas, when he ſaw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy ſlaine, and all his men,
Vpon the foot of feare, fled with the reſt;
And falling from a hill, he was ſo bruiz'd
That the purſuers tooke him. At my Tent
The Dowglas is, and I beſeech your Grace,
I may diſpoſe of him.
King. With all my heart.
Prin. Then Brother Iohn of Lancaſter,
To you this honourable bounty ſhall belong:
Goe to the Dowglas, and deliver him
Vp to his pleaſure, ranſomeleſſe and free:
His Valour ſhewne upon our Creſts to day,
Hath taught us how to cheriſh ſuch high deeds,
Even in the boſome of our Adverſaries.
King. Then this remaines: that we devide our Power.
You Sonne Iohn, and my Couſin Weſtmerland
Towards Yorke ſhall bend you, with your deereſt ſpeed
To meet Northumbrland, and the Prelate Scroope,
Who (as we heare) are buſily in Armes.
My Selfe, and Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March.
Rebellion in this Land ſhall loſe his way,
Meeting the Checke of ſuch another day;
And ſince this Buſineſſe ſo faire is done,
Let us not leave till all our owne be wonne. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Second Part of Henry the Fourth,

Containing his Death: and the Coronation of King Henry the Fift.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

INDVCTION.

Enter Rumor.

OPen your Eares: For which of you will ſtop
The vent of Hearing, when loud Rumor ſpeakes?
I, from the Orient, to the drooping Weſt
(Making the wind my Poſt-horſe) ſtill unfold
The Acts commenced on this Ball of Earth.
Vpon my Tongue, continuall Slanders ride,
The which, in every Language, I pronounce,
Stuffing the eares of them with falſe Reports:
I ſpeake of Peace, while covert Enmitie
(Vnder the ſmile of ſafety) wounds the World:
And who but Rumour, who but onely I
Make fearefull Muſters, and prepar'd Defence,
Whil'ſt the bigge yeare, ſwolne with ſome other griefes,
Is thought with childe, by the ſterne Tyrant Warre;
And no ſuch matter? Rumour, is a Pipe
Blowne by Surmiſe, Ielouſies Conjectures;
And of ſo eaſie, and ſo plaine a ſtop,
That the blunt Monſter, with uncounted heads,
The ſtill diſcordant, wavering Multitude,
Can play upon it. But what neede I thus
My well-knowne Body to Anathomize
Among my houſhold? Why is Rumour heere?
I run before King Harries victory,
Who in a bloodie field by Shrewsburie
Hath beaten downe young Hotſpurre, and his Troopes,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion,
Even with the Rebels blood. But what meane I
To ſpeake of truth at firſt? My Office is
To noyſe abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Vnder the Wrath of Noble Hotſpurres Sword:
And that the King, before the Dowglas Rage
Stoop'd his Annointed head, as low as death.
This have I rumor'd through the peaſant-Townes,
Betweene the Royall Field of Shrewsburie,
And this Worme-eaten-Hole of ragged Stone,
Where Hotſpurres Father, old Northumberland,
Lyes crafty ſicke. The Poſtes come tyring on,
And not a man of them brings other newes
Then they have learn'd of Me. From Rumours Tongues,
They bring ſmooth-Comforts-falſe, worſe then True-wrongs. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Lord Bardolfe, and the Porter.

L.Bar. Who keepes the Gate hoa?
Where is the Earle?
Pro. What ſhall I ſay you are?
Bar. Tell thou the Earle
That the Lord Bardolfe doth attend him heere.
Por. His Lordſhip is walk'd forth into the Orchard,
Pleaſe it your Honor, knocke but at the Gate,
And he himſelfe will anſwer.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bar. Heere comes the Earle.
Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? Ev'ry minute now
Should be the Father of ſome Stratagem;
The Times are wilde: Contention (like a Horſe
Full of high Feeding) madly hath broke looſe,
And beares downe all before him.
L.Bar. Noble Earle,
I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury.
Nor. Good, and heaven will.
L. Bar. As good as heart can wiſh:
The King is almoſt wounded to the death:
And in the Fortune of my Lord your Sonne,
Prince Harrie ſlaine outright: and both the Blunts
Kill'd by the hand of Dowglas. Young Prince Iohn,
And Weſtmerland, and Stafford, fled the Field.
And Harrie Monmouth's Brawne (the Hulke Sir Iohn)
Is priſoner to your Sonne. O, ſuch a Day.
(So fought, ſo follow'd, and ſo fairely wonne)
Came not, till now, to dignifie the Times
Since Cæſars Fortunes.
Nor. How is this deriv'd?
Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury?
L.Bar. I ſpake with one (my L.) that came frõ thence,
A Gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me theſe newes for true.
Nor. Heere comes my Servant Travers, whom I ſent
On Tueſday laſt, to liſten after Newes.

Enter Travers.

L.Bar. My Lord, I over-rode him on the way,
And he is furniſh'd with no certainties,
More then he (haply) may retaile from me.
Nor. Now Travers, what good tidings comes frõ you?

Tra. My Lord, Iohn Umfrevill turn'd me backe
With joyfull tydings;and (being better hors'd)
Out-rod me. After him, came ſpurring hard
A Gentleman(al moſt fore-ſpent with ſpeed)
That ſtopp'd by me,to breath his bloodied horſe.
He ask'd the way to Cheſter : And of him
I did demand what Newes from Shrewsbury:
He told me , that Rebellion had ill lucke,
And that yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold.
With that he gave his able Horſe the head,
And bending forwards ſtrooke his able heeles
Againſt the panting ſides of his poore Iade
Vp to the Rowell head, and ſtarting ſo,
Hee ſeem'd in running,to devoure the way,
Staying no longer queſtion.
North. Ha? Againe:
Said he yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold?
(Of Hot-Spurre,cold-Spurre) that Rebellion,
Had met ill lucke?
L. Bar. My Lord : Ile tell you what,
If my yong Lord your Sonne, have not the day,
Vpon mine Honor, for a ſilken point
Ile give my Barony. Never talke of it.
Nor. Why ſhould the Gentleman that rode by Travers
Give then ſuch inſtances of Loſſe?
L. Bar. Who, he?
He was ſome hielding Fellow,that had ſtolne
The Horſe he rode-on : and upon my life
Spake at adventure. Looke , here comes more Newes.

Enter Morton.

Nor. Yea, this mans brow,like to a Title-leafe,
Fore-tels the Nature of a Tragicke Volume:
So lookes the Strond,when the Imperious Flood
Hath left a witneſt Vſurpation.
Say Morton, did'ſt thou come from Srewsbury?
Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury(my Noble Lord)
Where hatefull death put on his vglieſt Maske
To fright our party.
Nor. How doth my Sonne,and Brother?
Thou trembl'ſt;and the whiteneſſe in thy Cheeke
Is apter then thy Tongue, to tell thy Errand.
Even ſuch a man,ſo faint, ſo ſpiritleſſe,
So dull,ſo dead in looke,ſo woe-be-gone,
Drew Priams Curtaine,in the dead of night,
And would have told him, Halfe his Troy was burn'd.
But Priams found the Fire,ere he his Tongue:
And I,my Percies death,ere thou report'ſt it.
This, thou would'ſt ſay : Your Sonne did thus,and thus:
Your Brother,thus.So fought the Noble Dowglas,
Stopping my greedy eare, with their bold deeds.
But in the end(to ſtop mine Eare indeed)
Thou haſt a Sigh, to blow away this Praiſe,
Ending with Brother,Sonne,and all are dead.
Mor. Dowglas is living, and your Brother, yet:
But for my Lord,your Sonne.
No. Why he is dead.
See what a ready tongue Suſpition hath;
He that but feares the thing,he would not know,
Hath by Inſtinct, knowledge from others Eyes,
That what he feard,is chanc'd. Yet ſpeake(Morton)
Tell thou thy Earle,his Divination Lies,
And I will take it, as a ſweet Diſgrace,
And make thee rich, for doing me ſuch wrong.
Mor. You are too great,to be(by me) gainſaid:
Your Spirit is too true,your Feares too certaine.
Nor. Yet for all this,ſay not that Percies dead.
I ſee a ſtrange Confeſſion in thine Eye:
Thou ſhak'ſt thy head, and hold'ſt it Feare,or Sinne,
To ſpeake a truth. If he be ſlaine,ſay ſo:
The Tongue offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth ſinne that doth belye the dead:
Not he, which ſayes the dead is not alive:
Yet the firſt bringer of unwelcome Newes
Hath but a looſing Office:and his Tongue,
Sounds ever after as a ſullen Bell
Remembred, knolling a departing Friend.
L. Bar. I cannot thinke(my Lord)your ſon is dead.
Mor. I am ſorry, I ſhould force you to beleeve
That, which I would to heaven , I had not ſeene.
But theſe mine eyes,ſaw him in bloody ſtate,
Rend'ring faint quittance(wearied,and out-breath'd)
To Henry Monmouth,whoſe ſwift wrath beate downe
The never-daunted Percie to the earth,
From whence(with life)he never more ſprung up.
In few;his death(whoſe ſpirit lent a fire,
Even to the dulleſt Peazant in his Campe)
Being bruited once,tooke fire and heate away
From the beſt temper'd Courage in his Troopes.
For from his Mettle,was his Party ſteel'd;
Which once in him abated, all the reſt
Turn'd on themſelves, like dull and heavy Lead:
And as the Thing, that's heavy in it ſelfe,
Vpon enforcement,flyes with greateſt ſpeede,
So did our Men,heavy in Hotſpurres loſſe,
Lend to this weight,ſuch lightneſſe with their Feare,
That Arrowes fled not ſwifter toward their ayme,
Then did our Soldiers(ayming at their ſafety)
Fly from the field. Then was that Noble Worceſter
Too ſoone ta'ne priſoner : and that furious Scot,
(The bloody Dowglas)whoſe well-labouring ſword
Had three times ſlaine th'appearance of the King,
Gan vaile his ſtomacke,and did grace the ſhame
Of thoſe that turn'd their backes:and in his flight,
Stumbling in Feare,was tooke. The ſumme of all,
Is, that the King hath wonne:and hath ſent out
A ſpeedy power,to encounter you my Lord,
Vnder the Conduct of yong Lancaſter
And Weſtmerland. This is the Newes at full.
Nor. For this,I ſhall have time enough to mourne.
In Poyſon,there is Phyſicke:and this newes
(Having beene well)that would have made me ſicke,
Being ſicke,have in ſome meaſure,made me well.
And as the Wretch,whoſe Feaver-weakned joynts,
Like ſtrengthleſſe Hindges,buckle under life,
Impatient of his Fit, breakes like a fire
Out of his keepers armes : Even ſo, my Limbes
(Weak'ned with greefe)being now inrag'd with greefe,
Are thrice themſelves. Hence therfore thou nice crutch,
A ſcaly Gauntlet now,with joynts of Steele
Muſt glove this hand. And hence thou ſickly Quoiſe,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which Princes,fleſh'd with Conqueſt,ayme to hit.
Now binde my Browes with Iron,and approach
The ragged'ſt houre, that Time and Spight dare bring
To frowne upon th'enrag'd Northumberland.
Let Heaven kiſſe Earth:now let not Natures hand
Keepe the wilde Flood confin'd:Let Order dye,
And let the world no longer be a ſtage
To feede Contention in a ling'ring Act:
But let one ſpirit of the Firſt-borne Caine

Reigne in all boſomes, that each heart being ſet
On bloody Courſes, the rude Scene may end,
And darkeneſſe be the burier of the dead. (Honor.
L, Bar. Sweet Earle, divorce not wiſedom from your
Mor. The lives of all your loving Complices
Leane-on your health, the which if you give-o're
To ſtormy Paſſion, muſt perforce decay.
You caſt th'event of Warre (my Noble Lord)
And ſumm'd the accompt of Chance, before you ſaid
Let us make head: It was your preſurmize,
That in the dole of blowes, your Son might drop.
You knew he walk'd o're perils, on an edge
More likely to fall in, then to get o're:
You were adviſ'd his fleſh was capeable
Of Wounds, and Scarres; and that his forward Spirit
Would lift him, where moſt trade of danger rang'd,
Yet did you ſay go forth: and none of this
(Though ſtrongly apprehended) could reſtraine
The ſtiffe-borne Action: What hath then befalne?
Or what hath this bold enterprize brought forth,
More then that Being, which was like to be?
L. Bar. We all that are engaged to this loſſe,
Knew that we ventur'd on ſuch dangerous Seas,
That if we wrought out life, was ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd for the gaine propos'd,
Choak'd the reſpect of likely perill fear'd,
And ſince we are o're-ſet, venture againe.
Come, we will all put forth; Body, and Goods.
Mor. 'Tis more then time: And (my moſt Noble Lord)
I heare for certaine, and do ſpeake the truth:
The gentle Arch-biſhop of Yorke is up
With well appointed Powres: he is a man
Who with a double Surety bindes his Followers.
My Lord (your Sonne) had onely but the Corpes
But ſhadowes, and the ſhewes of men to fight.
For that ſame word (Rebellion) did divide
The action of their bodies, from their ſoules,
And they did fight with queaſineſſe, conſtrain'd
As men drinke Potions; that their Weapons only
Seem'd on our ſide: but for their Spirits and Soules,
This word (Rebellion) it had froze them up,
As Fiſh are in a Pond. But now the Biſhop
Turnes Inſurrection to Religion,
Suppos'd ſincere, and holy in his Thoughts:
He's follow'd both with Body, and with Minde:
And doth enlarge his Riſing, with the blood
Of faire King Pichard, ſcrap'd from Pomfret ſtones,
Derives from heaven his Quarrell, and his Cauſe:
Tels them, he doth beſtride a bleeding Land,
Gaſping for life, under great Bullingbrooke,
And more, and leſſe, do flocke to follow him.
North. I knew of this before. But to ſpeake truth,
This preſent greefe had wip'd it from my minde.
Go in with me, and councell every man
The apteſt way for ſafety, and revenge:
Get Poſts, and Letters, and make Friends with ſpeed,
Never ſo few, nor never yet more need. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Falſtaffe, and Page.

Fal. Sirra, you giant, what ſaies the Doct. to my water?

Pag. He ſaid ſir, the water it ſelfe was a good healthy water: but for the party that ow'd it, he might have more diſeaſes then he knew for.

Fal. Men of all ſorts take a pride to gird at mee: the braine of this fooliſh compounded Clay-man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more then I invent, or is invented on me. I am not onely witty in my ſelfe, but the cauſe that wit is in other men. I doe heere walke before thee, like a Sow, that hath o'rewhelm'd all her Litter, but one. If the Prince put thee into my Service for any other reaſon, then to ſet me off, why then I have no judgement. Thou horſon Mandrake, thou art fitter to be worne in my cap, then to wait at my heeles. I was never mann'd with an Agot till now: but I will ſet you neither in Gold, nor Silver, but in vilde apparell, and ſend you backe againe to your Maiſter, for a Iewell. The Iuuenall (the Prince your Maiſter) whoſe Chin is not yet fledg'd, I will ſooner have a beard grow in the Palme of my hand, then he ſhall get one on his cheeke: yet he will not ſticke to ſay, his Face is a Face-Royall. Heaven may finiſh it when he will, it is not a haire amiſſe yet: he may keepe it ſtill as a Face-Royall, for a Barber ſhall never earne ſix pence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever ſince his Father was a Batchellour. He may keepe his owne Grace, but hee is almoſt out of mine, I can aſſure him. What ſaid M. Dombledon, about the Satten for ſhort Cloake, and Slops?
